A

BIBLE DICTIONARY;

BEING A COMPREHENSIVE DIGEST OF THE

HISTORY AND ANTIQUITIES OF THE HEBREWS

AND NEIGHBOURING NATIONS:

THE

NATURAL HISTORY, GEOGRAPHY, AND LITERATURE

OF

THE SACRED WRITINGS.

WITH REFERENCE TO THE LATEST RESEARCHES.

BY THE

REV. JAMES AUSTIN BASTOW.

NEW EDITION.

LONDON:
LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, LONGMANS, AND ROBERTS.
MDCCCLX.

A.D. 73.
ADVERTISEMENT.

Sixteen the Publication of the First Edition of the present work, Biblical Research, in its various departments, has been steadily advancing; monumental treasures, entombed for ages, have been exhumed,—hieroglyphic and cuneiform inscriptions have surrendered to advancing science the story of the past,—and numerous journals of Oriental travel have appeared,—the whole contributing, in the new and unexpected facts enunciated, an array of evidence at once overwhelming in magnitude and variety, in verification and illustration of the Scriptures of Truth.

Hence, in a new edition of the Bible Dictionary, no apology is needed for the changes made and the corrections introduced; as the intelligent reader must be satisfied, that in such a work, embracing such a variety of topics, if the author does not find reason, in a republication, to change and correct some of his first statements, it is merely because he has not continued to investigate the unfolding evidences accumulated by restless enterprise, or failed to discover in them additional credentials of the truth of Divine Revelation.

The present edition has accordingly undergone a careful revision; and, while much new matter has been incorporated, not a few of the articles have been entirely re-written, so as to present the results of increased investigation, and materially to add to the utility of the work, as a Handbook to the Bible, by making it a repository of the latest researches in the several departments of Biblical Science.

The author cordially acknowledges the friendly courtesy of the distinguished archaeologists, to whose liberal aid the present edition, as a repository of the monumental illustration of the Sacred Writings, owes much of its value. To W. S. W. Vaux, M.A., of the Department of Antiquities in the British Museum, the author is indebted for the unrestrained use of his excellent work—with the illustrations, on "Nineveh and Persepolis," and for other valuable communications; to Mr. W. Osburn, for the free use of the illustrations contained in his several valuable works on Ancient Egypt; to Joseph Bonomi, Esq., for the privilege of using several illustrations from his interesting work on "Nineveh and its Palaces," drawn from the Assyrian monuments in the British Museum, and the Louvre at Paris, as well as for other valuable communications; to A. H. Layard, Esq., for the use of some of the remarkable illustrations from his truly noble work on "Nineveh and Babylon." Likewise to the Rev. Thomas Hartwell Horne, D.D.; and to other distinguished scholars, whose generous aid, from time to time, has been kindly afforded, the author tenders his warmest thanks.

The author's thanks are also due to Mr. John Murray, of Albemarle Street, for his kind permission to correct the map, accompanying the present work, from that of the Rev. J. L. Porter's recent personal survey of northern Palestine, attached to that enterprising traveller's invaluable volumes, "Five Years in Damascus."

Durham, February, 1859.
"To God the Father, God the Word, God the Spirit, we pour forth most humble and hearty supplications, that He, remembering the calamities of mankind and the pilgrimage of this our life in which we wear out days few and evil, would please to open to us new refreshments out of the fountains of His goodness for the alleviating of our miseries. This also we humbly and earnestly beg, that human things may not prejudice such as are Divine; neither that from the unlocking of the gates of sense, and the kindling of a greater natural light, any thing of incredulity or intellectual night may arise in our minds towards Divine mysteries. But rather that by our mind thoroughly cleansed and purged from fancy and vanities, and yet subject, and perfectly given up to the Divine Oracles, there may be given up unto faith the things that are faith's. Amen."—LORD BACON.
LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Number</th>
<th>Description</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1.</td>
<td>Map of Palestine</td>
<td>58</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2.</td>
<td>The Rosetta Stone</td>
<td>18</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3.</td>
<td>Cylinder of Sennacherib</td>
<td>19</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4.</td>
<td>Hebrew Manuscript</td>
<td>23</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5.</td>
<td>Alexandrine Manuscript</td>
<td>24</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6.</td>
<td>Vatican Manuscript</td>
<td>24</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7.</td>
<td>Codex Ephraim</td>
<td>25</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8.</td>
<td>Cuneiform name of Ahasuerus</td>
<td>72</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9.</td>
<td>Hieroglyphs of Ahasuerus</td>
<td>72</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10.</td>
<td>Hieroglyphs of Cambyses</td>
<td>72</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.</td>
<td>Heathen Altars</td>
<td>78</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12.</td>
<td>Altar of Burnt Offering</td>
<td>78</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13.</td>
<td>Altar of Incense</td>
<td>79</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14.</td>
<td>Amon, probably Ham</td>
<td>82</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>15.</td>
<td>Assyrian Archers</td>
<td>98</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>16.</td>
<td>Ark of the Covenant</td>
<td>95</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>17.</td>
<td>Cuneiform name of Artaxerxes</td>
<td>98</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>18.</td>
<td>Hieroglyphs of Artaxerxes</td>
<td>98</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>19.</td>
<td>Ashdodeth</td>
<td>100</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20.</td>
<td>Asshur</td>
<td>103</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>22.</td>
<td>Ancient Roll</td>
<td>136</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>23.</td>
<td>Ancient Bottles</td>
<td>136</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24.</td>
<td>Golden Table</td>
<td>140</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>25.</td>
<td>Captive Brickmakers</td>
<td>141</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>26.</td>
<td>Calf Idol</td>
<td>147</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>27.</td>
<td>Hieroglyphs of Canaan</td>
<td>154</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>28.</td>
<td>Ancient Canaanites</td>
<td>156</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>29.</td>
<td>Hieroglyphs of Candace</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>30.</td>
<td>Golden Candlestick</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>31.</td>
<td>Captive Women</td>
<td>159</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>32.</td>
<td>Captive Men</td>
<td>160</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>33.</td>
<td>Ancient Censor</td>
<td>165</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>34.</td>
<td>Assyrian Chariot</td>
<td>167</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>35.</td>
<td>Egyptian Chariot</td>
<td>167</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>36.</td>
<td>Assyrian Winged Bulla</td>
<td>169</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>37.</td>
<td>Kneeling Winged Figure</td>
<td>171</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>38.</td>
<td>Egyptian Winged Figure</td>
<td>171</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>39.</td>
<td>Coat of Mail</td>
<td>180</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>40.</td>
<td>Assyrian Cup-bearer</td>
<td>191</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>41.</td>
<td>Monument of Cyrus</td>
<td>194</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>42.</td>
<td>Assyrian Dagon</td>
<td>196</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>43.</td>
<td>Philistine Dagon</td>
<td>195</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>44.</td>
<td>Darius and the Captives</td>
<td>198</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>45.</td>
<td>Hieroglyphs of Darius</td>
<td>199</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>46.</td>
<td>The Dial of Ahaz</td>
<td>208</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>47.</td>
<td>Diana on a Coin of Ephesus</td>
<td>209</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>48.</td>
<td>Silver Daric</td>
<td>215</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>49.</td>
<td>Assyrian Engine of War</td>
<td>239</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>No.</td>
<td>Illustration</td>
<td>Page</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-----</td>
<td>----------------------------------------------------------</td>
<td>------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>50</td>
<td>Putting Captives' Eyes out</td>
<td>255</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>51</td>
<td>Egyptian Harpers</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>52</td>
<td>Assyrian Helmets</td>
<td>331</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>53</td>
<td>Hieroglyphs of Hophra</td>
<td>313</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>54</td>
<td>Syrian Lady, with Horn</td>
<td>348</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>55</td>
<td>Assyrian Horsemen</td>
<td>544</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>56</td>
<td>The Black Obelisk</td>
<td>556</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>57</td>
<td>Coin of Judea Captive</td>
<td>582</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>58</td>
<td>Egyptian Joseph</td>
<td>402</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>59</td>
<td>Assyrian Lamps</td>
<td>419</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>60</td>
<td>Egyptian Palanquin</td>
<td>437</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>61</td>
<td>Grinding at the Mill</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>62</td>
<td>Assyrian Nebo</td>
<td>490</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>63</td>
<td>Hieroglyphs of Neocho</td>
<td>433</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>64</td>
<td>Assyrian Nimrod</td>
<td>497</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>65</td>
<td>Assyrian Nisroch</td>
<td>502</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>66</td>
<td>Syrian Lady, with Nose-Ring</td>
<td>505</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>67</td>
<td>Obelisk at On</td>
<td>514</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>68</td>
<td>Roman Demarius</td>
<td>553</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>69</td>
<td>Cartouche of Osirtesen</td>
<td>541</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>70</td>
<td>Hieroglyphs of Se and Ra</td>
<td>541</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>71</td>
<td>Hieroglyphs for king</td>
<td>541</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>72</td>
<td>Hieroglyphs of Osirtesen</td>
<td>541</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>73</td>
<td>Pronomen of Osirtesen</td>
<td>541</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>74</td>
<td>Hieroglyphs of Amunmai-Thor</td>
<td>541</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>75</td>
<td>Hieroglyphs of Amosis</td>
<td>542</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>76</td>
<td>Pronomen of Amosis</td>
<td>542</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>77</td>
<td>Hieroglyphs of Amunophis</td>
<td>542</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>78</td>
<td>Ptalates Spearmen</td>
<td>545</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>79</td>
<td>Pul, the Assyrian king</td>
<td>567</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>80</td>
<td>Hieroglyphs of Raameses</td>
<td>571</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>81</td>
<td>Reboam, vassal of Shishak</td>
<td>677</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>82</td>
<td>Hieroglyphs of kingdom of Judah</td>
<td>585</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>83</td>
<td>Egyptian Signet Ring</td>
<td>587</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>84</td>
<td>Roman Soldier</td>
<td>591</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>85</td>
<td>Egyptian Sandal</td>
<td>601</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>86</td>
<td>Sargon, the Assyrian king</td>
<td>602</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>87</td>
<td>Seal of So and Sennacherib</td>
<td>614</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>88</td>
<td>Babylonian Cylinder</td>
<td>615</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>89</td>
<td>Temple cut in the Rock</td>
<td>616</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>90</td>
<td>Sennacherib on his Throne</td>
<td>619</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>91</td>
<td>Jewish Shekel</td>
<td>628</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>92</td>
<td>Hieroglyphs of Shishak</td>
<td>634</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>93</td>
<td>Hieroglyphs of So</td>
<td>645</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>94</td>
<td>Ancient Standards</td>
<td>654</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>95</td>
<td>Assyrian Teraphim</td>
<td>671</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>96</td>
<td>Hieroglyphs of Tirhakah</td>
<td>679</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>97</td>
<td>Egyptian Uriah and Thummim</td>
<td>692</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>98</td>
<td>Philistine Wagon</td>
<td>698</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>99</td>
<td>Egyptian Loom</td>
<td>720</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>100</td>
<td>Egyptian Wheat</td>
<td>704</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>101</td>
<td>India House Stone</td>
<td>717</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>102</td>
<td>Hieroglyphs of Zerah</td>
<td>725</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
ADDITIONS AND CORRECTIONS.

AHASUERUS, page 72.—Xerxes began to reign n.c. 485.

BAALATH. p. 110.—Baalbek, probably the same as “Aven,” Dr. Robinson identifies with Bikath-Aeen, rendered “plain of Aven;” (Am. i. 5, margin;) and regards Baalath as another place in the tribe of Dan.

BABYLON. p. 113.—Col. Rawlinson, during his researches at Birs-Nimrud, in 1854, discovered two cylinders, from which he ascertained that the ruined edifice was a temple, erected by Nebuchadnezzar, on the ruins of a previous building. It was constructed of seven receding stages; each stage was of seven different colours; hence it was called the “Temple of the Seven Spheres.” The upper stages, at the period of their construction, had been exposed to a fire of intense heat, which has converted the whole outside into a kind of slag of great hardness, which rings when struck like metal. To this vitrification may doubtless be attributed the preservation of this pile of masonry through so many ages.

CYRENIUS. p. 193.—Recently A. W. Zumpt has shown, from historical sources, that Cyrenius was twice governor of Syria: the first time before the birth of Christ, about the end of n.c. 4; and the second time in A.D. 6. According to Luke, a census was taken when Cyrenius was governor the first time; hence the meaning of Luke ii. 1—3 will be, “This was the first census when Cyrenius was governor of Syria.”

FLIES. p. 274.—If the poisonous fly, glossina mortisana, called teetee by the natives, which, according to Dr. Livingstone, infests some districts of South Africa, anciently had its habitat in the region referred to by the prophet, the passage in Isa vii. 18 may refer to it. This insect, whose peculiar buzz when once heard by the traveller can never be forgotten, is not much larger than the common house fly, yet its bite is certain death to the ox, horse, and dog. The bite of the teetee does not immediately startle the ox as the gad-fly does; but in a few days emaciation commences, and goes on uninterruptedly, sometimes for months; and, as no cure is known, the poor animal perishes in a state of extreme exhaustion. The bite of this insect is perfectly harmless in man; and the mule, ass, goat, and wild animals, enjoy the same immunity; and even calves, so long as they continue to suck the cows.

HOMER. p. 341.—Equivalent to the “cor” = measure, containing ten baths or ephahs, etc.

HUSKS. p. 350.—Of the pods of this tree the prodigal would gain have eaten. (Luke xv. 16.)

JEWISH. p. 389.—These measures have, however, at length been crowned with partial success, and the, etc.

PHARAOH. p. 541.—Under the hieroglyphs, instead of Ra to ka, read Ra ho ka, probably usually read Ho ka ra; the first character, etc. So also, on p. 542, under the hieroglyphs, instead of Ra neb na t, read Ra ch b t, probably usually read Ch b ra t, also called Chebros, signifying, etc.
CONTENTS OF THE INTRODUCTION.

SECTION I.
The Bible an Eastern Book—A Revelation from Heaven—Designed for all Nations
—The Necessity of Biblical Science ........................................... Pages 9—11

SECTION II.
The Semitic Languages—Egyptian Language—Ancient Persian Language—Indo-European Languages—Greek Language ............................... Pages 11—18

SECTION III.
Biblical Introduction—Criticism of the Text—Various Readings—Hermeneutics—Exegesis—Rabbinic Interpretation ............................................. Pages 13—15

SECTION IV.
Biblical History—Archæology—Hieroglyphic and Cuneiform Inscriptions—Chronology—Geography—Natural History—Proper Names ............... Pages 15—23

SECTION V.
History of Interpretation—Hebrew and Greek Texts—Samaritan Pentateuch—Ancient Versions—Spirituality of Mind ...................................... Pages 23—32

SECTION VI.
Anglo-Saxon Versions—The several Early English Versions ........... Pages 32—42

SECTION VII.
Authorised Version—The Translators—Rendering of Hebraisms—Marginal Readings
—Chapters and Verses .............................................................. Pages 42—52
INTRODUCTION.

SECTION I.

While it ought to be borne in mind that the Bible is strictly an Eastern book, written in Eastern lands, and by Orientals; at the same time, the devout student will receive it as a Revelation from heaven, designed for the education of the spiritual nature of man, of all ages, all varieties of talent and training, in every geographical position. It is therefore a matter of fact that the Scriptures, given in all their parts by Inspiration of God, are so wonderfully composed as to interest all classes; the child feels himself to be spoken to in them, and the philosopher finds materials there for subsequent meditation. Such a book must accordingly embrace within itself a great variety of characteristics, which are adapted to the diverse states of its readers. The same expression that is well fitted for one mind is not so well adapted to a different mind, and thus what is clear to the former is often obscure to the latter. Yet the several apparent obscurities do not arise from anything really dark or mysterious in the inspired volume; but from the modes of life and peculiar circumstances connected with the people of the East, of which we, who inhabit a different region, and are placed in different circumstances, have very imperfect conceptions. Hence, it will ever be the case, that many passages in the sacred volume will remain obscure to the reader who is unacquainted with Biblical Literature.

As the Hebrews were an Oriental people, their character and state may be illustrated in various particulars, by the descriptions of the whole Eastern world. The Bible student can therefore derive profit from reading the books which Oriental travellers have written; particularly from Manandrell, Shaw, Hasselquist, Volney, Niebuhr, Seetzen, Burckhardt, Irby and Mangles, Schubert, Olin, Durbin, the Scottish Mission of Inquiry to the Jews, Bartlett, Wilson, Lynch, De Sauley, Van de Velde, Porter, Stanley, Barclay, Osborne, and the very instructive Journals of Dr. Robinson in Palestine and the adjacent regions, and those of A. H. Layard, Esq., in Nineveh and Babylon and the neighbouring countries. The inhabitants of those countries remain in many respects, in nearly the same situation with that of their progenitors, and the influence of climate and of natural scenery upon them, is altogether unchanged. A man therefore can experience scenes at the present day in the East, which correspond very strikingly with the scenes described in the book of Genesis. The resemblance, however, between the Hebrew life and the life of other Eastern nations is not, in all particulars, complete. The great differences of the Hebrew religion from the religion of other countries, introduced a corresponding diversity in their respective habits. From a want of consideration in this particular, it is not unfrequently happens that travellers, who derive their first notions of the East from the Scriptures, when they come among an Oriental people, are too ready to set down as specifically Hebrew some of the more striking usages which attract their notice; whereas, in fact, they are generically Oriental, and are Hebrew also merely because the Hebrews were an Oriental people, and had Oriental habits and usages.

While it is true that the people of the East are seldom given to change, a moment's reflection will also satisfy us, that there were numerous objects in ancient Palestine which have no existence here. The great objects of nature are indeed the same as ours, or altogether analogous. But the appearance of some these objects in some respects varied from ours. Then as to climate, soil, productions, the arts of life, the pursuits of industry, the modes of living, houses, clothing, utensils, manners and customs, amusements, religious rites, government, state of society, literature, modes of education and philosophizing—these and a thousand other things of the like nature, made ancient Palestine as it were another world, almost entirely different from ours. All their language, as Professor Stuart has well observed, all its nice and delicate and expressive colouring and shades, was formed in the midst of objects exceedingly different from our own. We can scarcely venture, as to the objects of nature and art—a very few only excepted,—to suppose that we can now give a translation wholly adequate to express the idea which an ancient Hebrew entertained, when he made use of terms to designate these objects as they then existed, and as they were viewed by his own mind. One set of terms—the names of objects that never have existed among us, we cannot translate; all we can do is to transfer them, and throw the explanation into comments. It is thus that we have, and must have the Hebrew shekel, ephah, ephod, hin, etc.; so the Greek talent, mna, etc.; and the Roman consul, tribune, aedile, procurator, prefect, etc. We may Anglicize the form of some of these words, when we transfer them, translate them we never can. But why? For the simplest of all reasons; and this, is, that never having had occasion to form words expressive of such objects we have never coined any words for this purpose. Neither could we translate the terms gun-powder, muskets, canoes, steam-boats, air-pumps, into the ancient Hebrew, Greek, or Latin languages, inasmuch as those nations had not these objects, and consequently had not the words to designate them. Every people coins just as many words as necessity or convenience calls for, and no more. Now, if the well trained scholar, whose knowledge of antiquity is minute and extensive, finds difficulties in the way of comprehending many words designating the objects we have just noticed, how must it fare with the simple-hearted believer whose chief delight is in the oracles of God, but who has never had anything like a previous training? Indeed, it is a most obvious truth, that all which critical and philosophical helps of every kind and name that may now be furnished, can achieve, is only to place him who makes use of them in a condition, as it were, of a native Hebrew in the days of the prophets. To the Hebrews all our present critical apparatus, or anything like it, was unnecessary and would have been almost unmeaning.

Moreover, as the Bible is a Divine Revelation, designed for the instruction of all nations, it has to be translated into the several languages spoken by the widespread family of man; and certainly no book was ever written so capable of universal translation as the Inspired Records. Even the difficulties in the way of translating many words form no real hindrance to our understanding the will of God concerning us; but our acquaintance with Biblical science will obviate many of these, and materially contribute to our better understanding of the sacred records. It is obvious that when historians wrote, and psalmists sang, and prophets preached or predicted, they doubtless did so with the design of being understood. They uttered what they themselves understood; and, judging from the laws of language and of the human mind, we may say with confidence, that their hearers and readers could, at least, do the same as well as our public now understand the writers and speakers of the present day. The very fact that Divine Revelation came to the Hebrew writers, in the first instance, in an oral form, though in successive portions, confirms the statement that that which is revealed must have been designed to be intelligible, and what is intelligible must be spoken or written in accordance with the ordinary usage of language; and, undoubtedly, what was intelligible to the first recipients of revelation, is designed to be equally understood by all people, and is equally capable of being transfused into the languages of every kindred, and tribe, and nation.

What, then, is the nature of the wide circle of knowledge which is requisite for the interpreter to stand in the position of a native of Palestine when the Scriptures were written, and at the same time, to enable him to grasp the further advantages resulting from the experience of centuries? The proper answer to this question resolves itself into a variety of particulars, and covers the whole ground embraced by Biblical Science. A general outline of the nature, the extent, and the importance of the studies embraced under the appellation of Biblical Science may properly have a place in this Introduction, and will not be unacceptable to the reader.
INTRODUCTION.

SECTION II.
The Semitic languages—Egyptian language—Ancient Persian language—Indo-European languages—Greek language.

The great requisite, which, indeed, lies at the basis of all accurate study of Biblical Science, is an acquaintance with the original Hebrew and Greek languages, in which the Scriptures have come down to us. The Hebrew language belongs to the Semitic, or, as it is sometimes called, the Syro-Arabian, or Oriental family of languages; and if it be not the most ancient language, it is certainly the oldest form of human speech with which we are acquainted. The old Testament has come down to us in this language, with a few passages of Chaldee interspersed. The square character in which the Hebrew Scriptures are written, was probably a gradual formation from the more ancient—now called the Samaritan—character, modified in course of time by Aramaean influence, but not generally prevalent till after the second or third century of the Christian era. The Hebrew Scriptures are a collection of valuable relics of antiquity; and a considerable portion of them have descended from ages which we have scarcely any other monuments. In this view they present a field of research at once unprecedented in extent, and luxurious in its production. But as the ancient Hebrew has been a dead language for more than 2000 years, it is evident that a great number of words, which once belonged to this language, are utterly lost. Almost its only remains are contained in the Bible; and even these are naturally only fragmentary. Hence the necessity of appealing to the Oriental languages kindred with the Hebrew, in order to supply, though in an imperfect manner, the deficiencies arising from its incompleteness.

The Semitic stock of languages may be divided, in general, into three principal branches:

1. The Aramaean, which may be subdivided into the Chaldaic, or East Aramaean, which was anciently spoken in Assyria, Babylonia, and Mesopotamia, and afterwards received accessions from the Arian, or Medo-Persian; and the Syriac, or West Aramaean, spoken in Syria and Phenicia, to which belonged the Punic spoken at Carthage. The existing relics in the dialect of the Samaritans, Zabians, and of the Parsees, also belong to the Aramaean branch.

2. The Hebrew, retained in the family of Heber, and also spoken by the Canaanites. It would thus appear that the Hebrew language occupies a central point amidst all the branches of this family, as well with reference to the geographical position in which it was spoken, as with reference to the degree of development to which it attained. Here belong also the later Hebrew, or Talmudic and Rabbinic dialect; which, however, is again intermingled with Aramaean.

3. The Arabic language, of which the Ethiopic is an early secondary branch. So also the Himyaritic, the relics of which, found on the Sinaic inscriptions, Professor Tuch supposes to have been the work of heathen Arab tribes, who were, and our Punic, at certain seasons in order to celebrate a festival. From the Arabic we have again the later half-corrupted Moorish and Maltese dialects, and from the Ethiopic we have the Amharic.

Finally, it is proper to mention here those languages out of which, though not indeed kindred with the Hebrew, single words have been adopted, and, with slight changes, naturalised in the Hebrew.

1. The ancient Egyptian language must be investigated; and this is coming more and more to light, partly through the Coptic, its principal daughter, and partly through the deciphering of the hieroglyphic inscriptions on the ancient Egyptian monuments. The similarity of the Egyptian language to the languages of western Asia is striking in many points. Sometimes it agrees with the Hebrew, when that differs from the Aramaean and the Coptic. At other times it agrees with those where they differ from the Hebrew. The words adopted from it into the Hebrew Scriptures relate chiefly to Egyptian objects, and were probably introduced during the sojourn of the Hebrews in Egypt.

2. The ancient Persian language, in the old dialects of the Zend, Pehlevi, Parsi, and the Medo-Persian, from which many proper names and appellatives were adopted into the Hebrew Scriptures, during the Persian dominion. Though these ancient dialects are only imperfectly known, still the progress in the interpretation of the ancient cuneiform inscriptions has shown that illustrations of such words as occur in the Bible may be drawn from these sources. The same is the case with many Assyrian and Babylonian names and appellatives, which belong without doubt to the same stock.
INTRODUCTION.

3. More recently the comparison of a considerable number of Hebrew words with the Indo-Germanic or Indo-European languages, has added new light to the illustration of the Hebrew. By these languages are meant, the Sanskrit, the modern Persian, Greek, Latin, Gothic, German, English, and other languages kindred with these. Several objects in natural history found in eastern Asia are mentioned in the Hebrew Scriptures, the Indian names of which came to the Hebrews along with the things themselves, from which the Hebrews borrowed the Theaurus of the lamented Gesenius, or the last edition of his Manual Hebrew Lexicon, as translated by the celebrated American scholar, Dr. E. Robinson, can hardly fail to have observed that there is not even one of the sources named above, to which access is not occasionally had; and this to good purpose. In the acquisition of the Hebrew language, Dr. Robinson's Hebrew Grammar, translated by the late Professor M. Stuart, will be found an invaluable aid.

As the new Testament has come down to us in Greek, the knowledge of this language is indispensable to the Christian interpreter. And as the Hebrew of the old Testament can only be considered as a fragment of that sacred language; so too, the Greek language of the new Testament is but the fragment of a peculiar dialect in the wide field of Greek philology. True, says Dr. Robinson, in an able article, which we shall freely use, on the "Bible and its Literature," in the "Biblical Repository," pp. 341—357, we have here the aid of all the branches of the classic Greek language and literature, in their poetic youth, their Attic manliness and vigour, and their later decline. We have, too, all the results of ancient and modern research in regard to Greek philology; while the idiom and character of the language are far more accordant than the Hebrew with our own. The Greek too, in an altered form, is to this day a spoken language. Yet all this neither suffices for the illustration of the idiom of the new Testament, nor does it supersede, even here, the necessity of an acquaintance with the Hebrew tongue of the earlier Scriptures, or with the knowledge of the Oriental languages.

The language of the new Testament is the later Greek, as spoken by foreigners of the Hebrew stock, and applied by them to subjects on which it had never been employed by native Greeks. After the disuse of the ancient Hebrew in Palestine, and the irruption of western conquerors, the Jews adopted the Greek language from necessity; partly as a conquered people, and partly from the intercourse of life, of commerce, in colonies, in cities, founded like Alexandria and others, which were peopled with throngs of Jews. It was, therefore, the spoken language of ordinary life, which the Jews learned, and except the classic style of books, which has elsewhere come down to us. But they spoke it as foreigners, whose native tongue was the later Aramaic; and it therefore could not fail to acquire upon their lips a strong Semitic character and colouring. When to this we add, that they spoke in Greek on the things of the true God, and the relations of mankind to Jehovah and to a Saviour—subjects of an Eastern character, as it were, Greek had ever then applied his beautiful language, it will be obvious that an appeal merely to classic Greek and its philology, will not suffice for the interpreter of the new Testament. The Jewish Greek idiom must be studied almost as an independent dialect and its most important illustrations are derived from the idiom of the old Testament, especially as exhibited in the version of the Seventy and the Apocrypha, and from the contemporary writings of Philo and Josephus. Prof. M. Stuart's Grammar of the new Testament Dialect; and Dr. Robinson's Greek Lexicon; are the best books in this department of study.

A knowledge of the Oriental languages is just as necessary for the right understanding of the new Testament as it is for the correct interpretation of the Hebrew Scriptures. The ancient versions in the Syriac and other languages must be consulted. And, as Palestine was under the Roman dominion when the new Testament was written, it will be expected that many Latinisms will occur in that book, so that the ancient Latin versions must not be neglected. It is not indeed, to be desired, nor would it of course be possible, for every student in Biblical science to go over the whole ground hitherto pointed out; but it is incumbent on every student to be sufficiently prepared to understand and profit by the labours of the many and great minds who have trod this course before him, and whose efforts have been directed to make plain the way to those who should come after them.
INTRODUCTION.

SECTION III.

Another branch of Biblical Science, which must be studied, is Biblical Introduction; and the object of it is, as the name imports, to introduce the student to the best methods and means for procuring the knowledge of the Scriptures. It is usually divided into General and Particular.

General Introduction, comprises a description of all the various manuscripts and editions of the Hebrew and Greek Scriptures, and their comparative value. It enumerates the various ancient versions, their authorship, their dates, the circumstances of their composition, and their importance to the Biblical student. It details the efforts which have been made to obtain a correct text both of the old and new Testaments, the sources and character of the various readings, and the general principles on which such researches must be conducted. It touches also, in general terms, upon the character of the language and style; on the history, chronology, geography, and antiquities of the Jewish people. In all these branches it names and characterizes the best books to be consulted. It gives, too, the history of the sacred volume itself; the manner in which it has been reverenced and studied in different ages; and the various external forms and divisions in which it has appeared.

Particular or Special Introduction, on the other hand, takes up, first, the main portions of the Scriptures, as the historical, poetical, prophetic, or doctrinal books, and discusses the characteristics common to each division; and then proceeds to treat of each particular book. It inquires into the time when it was written, its author, its subject and object, its style and manner; and aims, in short, to afford all the information, which may enable the student to read and understand each book and chapter of the Bible, in the best and most perfect manner.

This branch of Biblical Science is particularly adapted to interest the minds both of the learned and unlearned. It has been highly cultivated by our German neighbours.

The Introductions of Michaelis, Semler, Eichhorn, Jahn, Bertholdt, Schmidt, Schott, Hug, De Wette, Hebrat, Feil mossen, Havernick, Guericke, Haenlien, Schumann, Credner, Keil, Hengstenberg, and the Handbooks of Hermeneutics and Exegesis of Seiler, Parez, Ernesti, Fritzsch, Hartmann, Dapke, Cellerie of Geneva, with several others, exhibit in this department, not only the learning and research, but also the remarkable vagaries of Continental Continentalism. In our own country we have little of importance pertaining to this branch of study, excepting translations of some of the above works; and the Prolegomena to the Polyglott, by Brian Walton; the Introduction, by Dr. Dixon, the Romanist professor at Mayn ooth; the several works by Dr. S. Dav idson; and what vastly surpasses every other, and is really indispensable to the Biblical student, the last edition of the noble Introduction by the venerable Dr. Thomas Hartwell Horne.

The Criticism of the Biblical text demands our attention, as by it we are taught to judge of the accuracy and authenticity of the Bible as it has come down to us. This department is divided into the higher and the lower. The lower criticism has respect to the text of the Bible, its various readings, etc. The higher criticism examines the authenticity and the integrity of the several books. It is well known that the text of our printed Hebrew Bibles is substantially what it was when it was settled by the Masoretes, about A. D. 500. So also, the text of the common editions of the new Testament was first settled by Erasmus, afterwards improved by Stephens, and again by Beza, on the authority of the few but excellent Greek manuscripts to which they had access. But in more recent times the collation of numerous other Hebrew and Greek manuscripts, have brought together a mass of various readings, differing from those of the common Hebrew and Greek texts. It is the part of Biblical Criticism to compare and sift these readings, and to determine which of them, by weight of evidence and authority, is entitled to a place in the genuine text.
INTRODUCTION

The time, however, has gone by, when this accumulated mass of various readings, in both the Testaments, was an object of dread or suspicion to the learned or unlearned. The optimism of the external form of the Bible has been laid aside; and it is now known and felt, that in the process of transcription or printing, by uninspired men, the Scriptures are not less liable to the occurrence of slight mistakes than other books. Such are, for the most part, all the various readings, both of the Hebrew and Greek Testaments; and it is a fact, long well established, that not one of these affects a single article of faith or practice, unless in the very slightest degree. The great critical Hebrew Bible of Kennicott, 2 vols. folio, 1776-1780; and the supplementary work of De Rossi in 5 vols. 1781-1808, contain a vast amount of various readings on the old Testament, the result of the collation of twelve hundred and sixty-one manuscripts; and to these may be added several columns of Bunsen and Prenner. The learned Rationalist, Eichhorn, himself acknowledges that the different readings of the Hebrew manuscripts collated by Kennicott, scarcely afforded enough interest to repay the labour bestowed upon them. So also, we have not only the older critical Greek Testaments of Mill, Wetstein, Griesbach, and Matthew; but the splendid edition by Scholz, containing the results of the examination of twelve hundred and seventy-three manuscripts; while the recent editions of Lachmann, Tischendorf, and Tregelles, exhibit the results of the examination of several others. Notwithstanding the vast number of various readings, in the New Testament manuscripts, noticed by these laborious collators, it is remarkable that from the multitude of transcriptions there has not resulted a greater number. The comedies of Terence alone contain thirty thousand variations, and yet they are but six in number, and they have been copied a thousand times less frequently than the New Testament. When, therefore, we consider the great antiquity of the books of the Old and New Testaments, the vast number of copies— incomparably more numerous than those of any ancient author—of versions and editions which have been made of them in the various languages, in languages which have not any analogy one with another, among nations differing so much in their customs and their religious opinions—when we consider these things, it is truly astonishing to find such a marked uniformity in the different copies. Biblical criticism requires us to make ourselves acquainted with the principles by which critical editors have regulated their inquiries and their decisions; and, as we have, in their collections, the same materials which they possessed, we can in some degree put the accuracy of their results to the test.

Another preliminary object of attention is the branch now known as Biblical Hermeneutics, or the Theory and Rules of Interpretation, as applied to the Scriptures. The actual application of these rules is Interpretation itself, now generally called Exegesis. It may at first be difficult, observes Dr. Robinson, for one not versed in Biblical Literature, to perceive the necessity and importance of this branch of study. The principles of Interpretation are as old as the creation; and are instinctively impressed upon our nature, the moment we begin to employ language as the representative of thought. The child comprehends its mother; and the mother finds no difficulty in interpreting the prattle of her child. We all interpret instinctively and involuntarily, when any one addresses us; and the reader is even now in the full practice of every principle of interpretation, while he dwells upon these lines. Why then should it be necessary to draw out these principles into rules, and make a theory and science of what in itself is so practical and instinctive? We might reply, and with propriety, that it is interesting and important to bring out and exhibit in one general scientific view, the principles on which the human mind acts in this, as in so many other cases; that this indeed is one of the most important aspects of the science of mind; inasmuch as it respects all our intercourse with each other as intelligent beings. Still, the formation of rules to be applied to the interpretation of commen discourse or of books on ordinary subjects, would certainly be in great part a matter of supererogation. Yet we find, that this science is of great importance in the legal profession; where the due interpretation of the words of a law often requires the nicest skill and a train of profound reasoning. So it is in the Bible. The Scriptures are the words of God, and reveal His holy law; they are in a language not our own, and which exists only in a fragmentary form. Hence the frequent necessity of applying all the various principles which can be brought to bear, for the elucidation of what might otherwise remain incomplete and obscure.
INTRODUCTION.

But in respect to the Bible, there is another aspect in which the science of Hermeneutics becomes of still more definite application and practical importance. This is presented by the question so often raised: Whether, after all, the language of the Bible is to be interpreted and understood on the same principles, and in the same manner, as that of other books; or, whether there would seem to be no reason why the sacred volume should form an exception to the general rule. God speaks to men in the words of men; and means either to be understood, or not to be understood. If the former, then His language must be received and interpreted according to the innate fundamental principles of all human interpretation. If, on the contrary, He did not mean to be understood, then He has used the ordinary words of human language, and not only different from their ordinary and natural meaning; and has spoken one thing to the ear and eye, which all could understand, and another thing in a more hidden sense, which none could understand. We speak not here, of course, of parables and allegories, which are common to all writings human or Divine; but more particularly of the poetical and prophetic parts of Scripture.

Here, in ancient times, Jewish interpreters were accustomed to suspend mountains of sense upon every word and letter of the Hebrew text; that is to say, the words were held to mean, not only what they would naturally express in their ordinary acceptation; but also everything else which the fancy of the interpreter might choose to attribute to them. This tendency passed over from the Jewish Rabbins to some of the Fathers in the early Christian church; and has been transmitted down in a greater or less degree even to the present day. This is the double or deeper sense, of which we have spoken so much; and which, as it seems to us, rests on an imperfect apprehension of the force and character of Divine truth. Besides, if we admit more than a single sense, except in obvious allegories and parables, how are we to decide upon this second meaning; which, by the very supposition, is hidden! By what rules or instincts are we to interpret plain and intelligible language, so as to bring out this deeper hidden sense? And being thus hidden, how are we to know, whether it is the true meaning? Why may not another just as well bring out a different hidden sense? And how, if there be one hidden meaning, can we determine that there is not a second and a third and a fourth, all equally hidden, and just as much concealed under the plain language, as that which we propose? If all this be so, what barrier can we set up, indeed, against the interpretation of a Cocceius, or the many reveries of a Swedenborg? We know not, or very little. In short, viewing the subject under every aspect, we must hold that any system of interpretation which departs from the plain and obvious meaning of the language of Scripture, rests upon a wrong foundation, and is fraught with danger to the mind earnestly seeking after Divine truth. It converts the word of God into a book of riddles; as such are not uncommon in ancient times; and, more than all, it saps the fundamental principles, which regulate our conduct as beings capable of a mutual interchange of thoughts by means of language. It makes God profess to speak to us in the language of man and yet takes His words out from the application of the rules, by which alone we understand or are understood, when speaking to each other. It is on this ground, especially, that an attention to the principles and rules of Hermeneutics, becomes of high importance to the Biblical student.

SECTION IV.

A knowledge of Biblical History is indispensable to the student in Biblical Science. The Old Testament is itself the chief history of the Hebrew nation: for the early narrative of Josephus is drawn mainly from the Bible, with the addition of various particulars derived from traditional and doubtful authority. The Pentateuch is indeed the foundation of all human history, as well as of the Jewish; and brings down the narrative of that people to the eve of their establishment in the Promised Land. Every subsequent part of the Bible, whether it be history, or poetry, or prophecy, gospel or epistle, refers back both to the Pentateuch and to Hebrew history in later times; and is absolutely unintelligible without an acquaintance with the facts there related. Thus far the Bible is its own best interpreter, the only storehouse where the facts are all laid up. And as Prof. Turner has well observed,—"The oldest Hebrew historian is some centuries more ancient than the earliest traces of writing among the Greeks; and the most modern writer of the old Testament was contemporaneous or nearly so with Herodotus. Besides, the historical and poetical books of the Hebrews are ancient works of mind belonging to Asia, and therefore most valuable documents to assist in developing the primitive history of man, who was originally settled in that part of the world." There are frequent allusions to other nations in the Bible besides the Jews. Egypt and Ethiopia, Assyria and Persia, Babylon and Phenicia, play an important part upon the pages of the Sacred Record; and an acquaintance with the facts of their history not only serves to illustrate the Holy Scriptures but greatly to strengthen their authority. The recent edition of the history of Herodotus, by G. Rawlinson, will give the student important aid in the history of the ancient nations. In this noble edition of the "father of history" the extensive notes furnished by Col. Sir H. Rawlinson, and Sir J. G. Wilkinson, exhibit the active spirit of the present age, in deciphering the sculptured monuments and writings of the ancient Assyrians and Egyptians; and not only furnish an amount of confirmation to the truthfulness of the old historian, but at the same time they bring out from the same sources a mass of the strongest and most incontrovertible evidence, in behalf of the authenticity and claims of Holy Writ.
INTRODUCTION.

Not less in general importance to the interpreter, is the history of the Jewish people and the neighbouring nations, during the interval of time between the old Testament and the new. This whole period had a paramount influence in forming the character of the later Jews, and shaping their opinions on theological and moral subjects; and all these require to be well understood, in order to comprehend many of the allusions and much of the teaching in the new Testament, and to judge of its force and adaptation to times, circumstances, and persons. As connected with foreign nations, the facts respecting the Jews have been collected and arranged in modern times by Prie- deaux, and with still more care, and in a more condensed and attractive form by Jahn, in one of the parts of his great work on Jewish Archaeology. In like manner, an acquaintance with the general history of the time of Christ and of the Apostolic age, is absolutely essential for understanding the sources and foundation of their instruction and doctrines; and the history of the primitive church during the same age, serves to clear up much that must otherwise remain "hard to be understood," in the writings of the great Apostle of the Gentiles. Intimately connected with the history of the Hebrews, is their Archaeology; usually divided into the Ecclesiastical, Political, and Domestic Antiquities. In respect to the Bible, it is perhaps an acquaintance with these, which constitutes the main and most essential qualification of the interpreter. It is this kind of knowledge, which most of all, places him in the position of the Jews themselves; enables him to think as they thought, feel as they felt, judge as they judged, and understand as they understood. Indeed, allusion to these various topics is interwoven in the very texture of every page and almost every paragraph of the Bible. God, w.r.n., in the dedication of his "Moses and Aaron," has well observed, "That many have no better acquaintance with Christ and His Apostles, is because they are such strangers with Moses and Aaron: Were customs antiquated thronowly knowne, many difficulties in Scripture would appear elegancies, and the places which now through obscurity dishearten the reader, would then become sweet invitations to an unwearyed assiduity in perusing the Sacred Oracles."

The Ecclesiastical Antiquities have relation to the whole constitution and ritual of the Hebrew church under the old Testament, to develop and establish which, as well as to sustain and purify them, was the primary object of a great portion of the Hebrew Scriptures. The new Testament indeed abrogates the ancient ceremonial law; but in order to know what is thus abrogated, we must first know what once existed; and be able to mark the distinction between that which, as the spirit, is of permanent obligation, and that which, as the letter, has been done away. We must learn too what came in place of these former institutions; and what was the constitution imposed upon the Christian church, its sanctions and its ordinances.
INTRODUCTION.

In the Political Antiquities of the Hebrews we are to look not only for a perpetual commentary and illustration of the sacred text; but also for the source of much that exists in modern legislation. The very peculiar character of that people is governed by a theocracy—a nation of which God alone was king, needs to be well understood, in order to embrace the full meaning of much of the old Testament. In the new Testament likewise, the situation of this same people, pining under the galling yoke of foreign dominion; and all the complicated particulars of its government and administration under a foreign master; must certainly be taken into account, in order rightly to apprehend the language of the sacred writers.

The Domestic Antiquities of the Hebrews show us their progress in arts and sciences, their household and family arrangements, their manners and customs, their business and actions, their daily life and walk. These serve more than all else to bring us to a close personal acquaintance with that remarkable people; they enable us to be present with them in their houses, at their meals, in their affaires; to see them with their wives, their children, and their servants; in their rising up and lying down; in their going out and coming in; in short, in everything relating to the persons and employments of themselves and families. Without an acquaintance with all these particulars, the interpreter can never be thoroughly furnished for his work. Whatever may be his qualification in other respects, he can never enter fully into the meaning and spirit of very much of the sacred text.

The Mythology of other nations mentioned in Scripture must also be examined. The dissimilitude of the Hebrew theology to that of other nations lies chiefly in this: other nations adopted more or less the worship of nature—the stars, and more especially the planets; the Jews believed in one God, who was holy and lifted up above nature. The theory of some writers, that the mythology of heathen nations exhibits in the fables nothing more than a poetic play of the fancy, is too superficial. In many fables it is easy to detect deep moral truths, which are as the background of a picture. Many of them might be regarded as divinations. In the theogonies of Greece and Rome, in the paranas and Vedas of the East, and the mythologies of Egypt and Assyria, are glow-worm glimmerings of truth; flickerings of light among clouds of error. These sparks, however, were promethean fire, and the light, though faint, was "Light from Heaven."

Prof. Lee appositely observes, that, "though heathenism might not immediately borrow its mythology from the Hebrews, both might be founded on the principles of an anterior Revelation."
The supposition that one traditional narrative, though with various shades of colouring, may have been propagated from the most remote periods of antiquity through successive ages and nations, has been defended with peculiar success by Creuzer in his Symbolik.

The monumental Antiquities of Egypt derive special importance from the light which they cast upon the old Testament records, especially upon the Mosaic history. The description De I'Egypte of the French scholars, the works of Champollion, Rosellini, Lepsius, and Sir J. G. Wilkinson, and the smaller treatises of Taylor, and Hengstenberg, are valuable in this department. Famine compelled the progenitors of the Hebrew nation to take refuge in the dominion of the Memphian kings; and by their long abode there, their subsequent history and their institutions were necessarily much influenced. The history of neighbouring countries was more or less involved with that of ancient Egypt. The Pharaohs carried their conquests south to Ethiopia, and east over a great part of Western Asia. Of several of these conquests we have minute representations in the existing
INTRODUCTION.

Monuments and hieroglyphic inscriptions of this land of wonders. Ptolemy V., who had conferred certain benefits upon them. Still it was the key for unlocking the more ancient inscriptions, found on the monuments on the banks of the Nile.

The monuments are not only abundant, but many of them are richly painted. Indeed, paintings, numerous and beautiful beyond conception, as fresh and perfect as if finished only yesterday, frequently exhibit before our eyes the truth of what the Hebrew lawgiver wrote, almost three thousand four hundred years ago. In deciphering the hieroglyphic inscriptions, all that we find relating to the Hebrews, and all the ancient monuments offer, whether in matters of history or religion, tend fully and satisfactorily to confirm the Bible account; and, says Wilkinson, if it is seldom that these monuments treat of the same historical points as the Scriptures, yet whenever that is the case, we are delighted to find them perfectly in accordance with the sacred volume. These are incidental, undesigned, but most valuable proofs drawn from witnesses that cannot lie, in favour of the trustworthiness of the inspired records. Egyptian history and the manners of the most ancient nations, cannot but be interesting to every one, and so intimately connected are they with the Scriptural accounts of the Hebrews, and the events of succeeding ages relative to Judea, that the name of Egypt need only to be mentioned to recall the early impressions we have received from the study of the Bible.

The Bible, especially the historical and some of the prophetic parts of it, receives various confirmation and illustration from the recent discoveries in Assyrian Antiquities. In the results of the explorations by Mr. Layard and others, on the sites of Nineveh, Babylon, and other ancient cities in those regions, we have very powerful corroborations of the truth of the sacred writings. The sculptures exhumed, and the cuneiform inscriptions deciphered, have furnished those corroborations by exhibiting the names and actions of individuals specially mentioned in the inspired volume. Among the names thus engraved on the monuments, are found Sargon, Sennacherib, Esarhadon, Nebuchadnezzar, Cyrus, Darius, and Ahaseurus. We subjoin a copy of the hexagonal cylinder, now in the British Museum, containing the an-
INTRODUCTION.

In the first six years of Sennacherib’s reign.

Many cuneiform inscriptions have been found at Behistun, Hamadan, Van, Persepolis, and Pasargada. They are mostly monolingual and trilingual, i.e., engraved in three different languages—the Assyrian or Babylonian, the Median or Scythic, and the Persian; and each language having its peculiar alphabet. The alphabets to some extent vary from each other, yet merely in the characters being formed by a different arrangement of the elemental signs or arrow-heads and wedges, but also in their whole phonetic structure and organization. The Persian inscriptions having been made out, it then became possible to use them as the Greek translation on the Rosetta stone was used in the deciphering of the Egyptian hieroglyphics; the Persian texts affording the stepping-stone by which Rawlinson, Huxley, and others have arrived at the understanding of the Assyrian and Median inscriptions. Many of the kings of Assyria, Babylon, and Persia, are spoken of by the inspired writers in connection with the most sublime miracles and prophecies. And even now, the monumental records of these sovereigns have been found in the cities which the sacred writers said they occupied; and, as clearly as can be ascertained at the times, in the order, and under the circumstances which were described to them.

Thus, from the monuments of Egypt and Assyria, we learn that the authenticity of the documents of our faith rests, not on manuscripts alone, but the hardest and most enduring substances in nature have added their unsuspecting testimony in a way that cannot be misunderstood. And, it is perhaps not too much to expect, that the illustrations and confirmations which have thus flashed upon us, from the deciphering of the hieroglyphic and cuneiform writings, are but the precursors of others, to be yet developed from Egyptian and Assyrian sources.

As the sacred narrative is concerned in great part with Palestine, with Jews and other Orientals, the knowledge of the Western Antiquities and history is not so important to students as that of the Eastern. Still Greeks and Romans are often introduced into the Scriptural history. One part of the narrative, that of the Acts of the Apostles, and also that of our Saviour’s passion, is intimately connected with classical scenes. The historical features of Luke’s account of the Apostles are very remarkable, on account of the coincidence of between two or three hundred data which he gives, and the antiquarian, geographical, and historical data given by the classical authors. At the period, moreover, when the new Testament was written, the Jews were under the dominion of the Romans; and the frequent allusions of the writers to this political state, and to the character and customs of their haughty oppressors, render an acquaintance with the contemporary facts of Roman history and antiquities an object of essential importance.

It is not necessary to dwell here on the importance of a knowledge of Biblical Chronology. This is perhaps the branch of Biblical learning which of all others has been most readily acknowledged and most extensively and ably cultivated in the English tongue, as is testified by the distinguished names of Usher, Newton, Jackson, Hales, and Fynes Clinton. It is well known that the chronology of the Hebrews is mainly derived from their genealogical tables; and that the chronology of the Samaritan, and the Septuagint version, differ from the Hebrew text. However, though some of the results as to dates, can be regarded only as conjectural estimates, yet the variations in the chronological systems of the Samaritan and the Septuagint, from the Hebrew, have been recently shown, in a series of able papers in the Biblical Educator, to have been the results of design for unworthy purposes. The Septuagint translators undoubtedly pandered to some Egyptian scheme of chronology; and the Samaritans, from schismatic motives, confirmed their chronology, to some extent, to that of the Septuagint. Even in regard to the times, in which the several books of the new Testament were written, there exists some diversity of opinion and statement. All this does not affect; however, in the slightest degree, the question of their authority; it serves only to show that the Biblical student has before him no light task while he delves in the mists of gray antiquity, in search of some faint traces which may serve as landmarks in the course of times and seasons.
INTRODUCTION.

Nor is a particular acquaintance with both the Civil and Physical Geography of Palestine, and the adjacent territories, a matter of less importance, for the proper understanding and explanation of the Scriptures. The most extended of the older works which we yet have had on Biblical Geography, is Reland’s “Palestina,” 2 vols, quarto, 1714. But, in 1838, Dr. Robinson visited Palestine and the adjacent regions, for Geographical purposes; and with the publication of his Biblical Researches in Palestine, in 1841, a new era may be said to have commenced in this branch of Biblical Science, which fully justifies the enthusiastic language of Prof. Ritter, of Berlin: “Now first begins, since the days of Reland, the second great epoch of our knowledge of the Promised Land.” In 1852, Dr. Robinson again visited Palestine, in order to satisfy his mind on several points which had been mooted since his former visit. The result was, in the re-publication of the Biblical Researches, and an additional volume, containing his Later Researches, was issued, with new maps and plans, the whole comprising three volumes, 1856. The literary preparation which preceded the author’s journeys, his peculiar advantages for prosecuting them, in being acquainted with the enterprise missionaries stationed in Syria, who had themselves occasionally published valuable papers in the American “Bibliotheca Sacra and Biblical Repository,” on different localities visited by them; the free intercourse he enjoyed with the native population, his laborious personal examinations of the country and the principles upon which he acted, and lastly, the abundant historical illustrations with which the work abounds, combine to render the Biblical Researches not only a treasury of information, but the only really reliable work on the Geography of Palestine, and the adjacent regions.

Dr. Robinson, in his Discourse, to which this introduction is so much indebted, observes the singular fact, “That of all the multitude of pilgrims and travellers who have traversed the Holy Land for the last five centuries not one of them has gone thither with any reference to the geography of the Scriptures, or made the slightest preparation to qualify himself for instituting researches, or forming a judgment, on subjects falling within this important department. At least nothing of the kind has appeared before the public. The travellers have often been acute and observing men; but they have nothing inquired, in respect to the Holy Land, what was already known, or what was unknown; what was certain or uncertain; what was forgotten, or yet to be sought out. Hardly one has ever yet travelled with a sufficient knowledge of the Arabic language, to collect information for himself from the people of the land. The consequence has been, that travellers have mostly only listened to and reported the traditions and legends of foreign monks; and no one has ever thought of seeking after that which might yet remain among the common people. These monastic traditions began early to take root and spring up; and as ages rolled on, they flourished more and more luxuriantly. The centuries of the Crusades added to their number and strength; and, then, and in later times, a mass of foreign tradition, which had thus foisted itself upon the Holy Land, spread itself over Christendom, until it has come to be received almost without doubt or question. Yet it frequently contradicts the express testimony of the Scriptures or of Josephus; and is, in fact, in itself, worthless, unless when supported by collateral evidence. In looking down through the long period that has followed the labours of Eusebius and Jerome, in the fourth century, it is interesting, though painful, to perceive, how the light of truth has gradually become dim, and at length often been quenched in darkness. It is certain, that in the long interval between Eusebius and the Crusades, very much was forgotten by the church, which still continued to exist among the common people; and in the subsequent period, the progress of oblivion has perhaps been hardly less rapid. Even within the last two centuries, so far as the convents and travellers in Palestine are concerned, I fear the cause of sacred geography can hardly be said to have greatly advanced. Yet there can be no doubt, and I speak from personal experience, that there does exist among the native population of Palestine, the Arab Fellahs of the villages and hamlets, a species of tradition, which is destined to throw great light upon the ancient topography of the land. I mean the preservation of the ancient names of places among the common people. This is truly a national and native tradition; not derived in any degree from the influence of foreign convents or masters, but drawn in by the peasant with his mother’s milk, and deeply seated in the genius of the Semitic languages. Such names still exist in every part of Palestine; and we ourselves in travelling through regions both visited and unvisited, were enabled to collect many such, of which apparently there has been no written mention since the fourth century. We all recognize the benefit and importance of a knowledge of geography, in reading the current works of the day, and even the newspapers. Of how much higher importance must it then be, for the due understanding of the Scriptures; in which the physical and topographical features of the country are so distinctly and definitely traced out, that we, like other travellers, found the Bible to be the best, and only accurate guide book in the Holy Land."
INTRODUCTION.

Undoubtedly there are several celebrated sites in Palestine, which can never be made out. Who can fix upon the precise spot in Bethlehem where our Saviour was born, or of Calvary where He was crucified? Well has Dr. Robinson observed, "that all ecclesiastical tradition respecting the ancient places in and around Jerusalem, and throughout Palestine, is of no value, except so far as it is supported by circumstances known to us from the Scriptures, or from other contemporary testimony." Our ignorance of certain sacred places need be no drawback to our piety and zeal. They may, for ought we know, be providentially hidden from us for our own advantage, and for the sake of the holy religion we profess. In Deut. xxxiv. 5, 6, it is stated that Moses died in the land of Moab, according to the word of the Lord, "and He buried him in a ravine in the land of Moab before Bethpeor," and the assertion of the inspired penman, that "no man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day," is, says Mr. Stanley, "the first instance on record of the providential obliteration—so remarkably exemplified afterwards in the Gospel history—of the "holy places" of Palestine; the providential safeguard against their elevation to a sanctity which might endanger the real holiness of the history and religion which they served to commemorate."

It is somewhat remarkable, that while the efforts of British science have been extended to various regions of the earth, Syria and Palestine—the regions of the earliest history and deepest interest—have never been surveyed, and cannot be given accurately on any map, on the basis of astronomical observation and scientific measurement. Certainly, in addition to the researches of Dr. Robinson, others have been doing something in the way of surveying the Holy Land, much more extensively, and perhaps more effectually, than could in any case have been done by a single individual. Still, in the geography of the lands of the Bible, much remains unsettled and unexplored. When the British fleet was withdrawn from the coast of Syria, in 1840, a corps of engineers, all picked men, was left behind, in order to make a military survey of the country throughout its whole extent. Three officers, Majors Robe, Scott, and Wilbraham, were constantly occupied in making surveys of all quarters; and in the southern part, Lieut. Symonds carried a series of triangles over the greater portion of Judea and the country around the plain of Edreelon, including lines of altitudes from the Mediterranean to the Dead Sea and the Lake of Tiberias. The corps of engineers was withdrawn near the close of the year 1841. In 1843, Lieut. Lynch, of the United States Expedition to the River Jordan and the Dead sea, carefully surveyed part of southern Palestine. Still it would seem that the exact latitude of Jerusalem is not yet defined. Mr. Finn obtained in Jerusalem, through the Foreign Office, from the Admiralty in London, the following statement of the latitude and longitude of the Holy City:

LAT. N. 31° 10’ 33’’
LONG. E. 35° 1° 30’’ from Greenwich.

This latitude is six minutes less than the mean latitude assumed by Dr. Robinson, and one minute greater than that found by Niebuhr. Another statement gives the longitude at 35° 18' east of Greenwich. Even in northern Palestine and the region of Lebanon, careful bearings have not been generally taken. In all the older maps of any pretensions to accuracy, Baalbek or Aven is represented as about 20' farther west than Damascus. In 1852-3, the Rev. J. L. Porter crossed Antilebanon by three distinct routes from Damascus to Baalbek, and in all kept careful itineraries, and took numerous bearings. He also made numerous observations, to serve as checks in laying down the line of these mountains. Hence, in Mr. Porter's map, Baalbek is represented as 4° east of Damascus, thus giving a difference of 24' between his map and all others in the relative position of these two cities. This great change has altered the whole features of the country, and especially of the mountainous range of Antilebanon.
INTRODUCTION.

Connected with the physical Geography of the land, is also its Natural History; and allusions occur on almost every page of the Bible, to the animal, vegetable, and mineral kingdoms, as they exist in Palestine. Here and there, however, we find the interpreter at fault, for want of full and specific information. Our information concerning the geology and mineralogy of Palestine is somewhat imperfect; for these were matters which the oldest travellers entirely overlooked. The defect in these branches of physical science has been partly supplied by the extensive and valuable geological Report of Dr. H. J. Anderson, appended to Lieut. Lynch's official Report of the United States Expedition to explore the Dead Sea and the River Jordan. The animals of the Holy Land have never been thoroughly investigated; nor its botany explored. Hence the proper application of a large share of the names of plants and animals mentioned in the Scriptures is yet to be determined by an accurate study of the natural history of the East. What learning and research, under circumstances, could do, has been done by Rosenmüller, and Kitt, after Rauwolf, Bochart, Celsius, Hasselquist, Oedman, Forakal, and others, in their accounts of the Mineralogy, Botany, and Zoology of the Bible.

The interpreter must also turn his attention to the Proper Names which occur in the Scriptures. Being all of them originally appellatives, they have an express and literal significance. The earliest portion of Scriptural history being full of significant names, is thus corroborated by manifold memorials, such as no history, to an equal or comparable degree, ever possessed. The names of persons and of places need but to be translated to announce or intimate the facts from which they originated. Very much light yet remains to be thrown on compound Hebrew proper names, by the study of the same class in Arabic. The etymology and meaning of several compound proper names which occur in the Hebrew Scriptures, are very incorrectly given in the old Commentaries of Geer, Miller, and Simonia. Several proper names which occur in the Bible belong to other languages. While the Hebrews were in Egypt, in Babylonia, in Persia, and other regions, they would necessarily acquire a great number of names peculiar to the languages of those nations. From the general ignorance of these facts many writers on Scripture nomenclature have fallen into serious errors. Well might Dr. A. Clarke observe, "The reader will see with what readiness we receive the lists of explanations of the proper names in the old and new Testaments, which he so frequently meets with, and which I can pronounce to be in general false or absurd." At a later period in Hebrew history, when the Greek language prevailed in Palestine, the Jews bestowed great pains in the imposition of Greek names upon their children; hence we have Aristobulus, acceptable counsel; Nicodemus, victorious of the people; Stephen, crown; etc. But those whose early designations were Hebrew or Chaldee, when they grew up, either transformed the old one into a Greek shape, or assumed an entirely new Greek one. To the one class, belongs Simeon, changed into Simon; Saul, into Paul; Matathias, into Matthias, etc. To the other belongs Cephas, exchanged for Peter; Levi, for Matthew; Tabitha, for Dorcas; etc.

We have only further to add here, that the devout student will find illustrations of Divine truth in every department of mental and physical science. Treatises on mental and moral science will not only tend to the invigorating of his own mind, by giving sharpness and clearness to what is sometimes called the "logical faculty," but will show him that the sacred writings are ever in perfect harmony with the inductions of sound philosophy and moral science. He will also find that the Bible can receive illustrations from the most recent researches in astronomy, geology, and ethnology. Everywhere the books of nature and revelation mutually illustrate each other. Even ancient coins and medals show, as well as ancient ruins and facts of natural science, from what unexpected sources we may receive, as it were, accidental illustrations of the truths propounded in the Scriptures. Unexplored treasures of evidence may yet open on the world; gradually, it may be, as seems to be the design of Providence, yet, at length, fully; and it appears to us very remarkable, that the evidence unfolded in proof of the truth and authority of Revelation, in the times in which we now live, is precisely of that description which fully meets the temper and tone of the philosophy and literature of the age; that scepticism and infidelity are met in the spirit of a progressive philosophy, and on the vantage ground of inductive science.
INTRODUCTION.

SECTION V.

History of Interpretation—Hebrew and Greek Texts—Samaritan Pentateuch—Ancient Versions—Spirituality of Mind.

Another important source of information for the interpreter of the Bible, may be termed the History of Interpretation. Under this branch is included the efforts and results of all former interpreters of the Holy Scriptures, a wide and fertile field, in which abundant fruit has been produced, both good and bad. The earliest documents of this kind are to be found in the literature of the Jews themselves; since the version of the Septuagint, the Apocryphal books of the Old Testament, as well as the history and philosophy of the Jews, are all imitations of, or founded upon, their inspired writings. Of the same class is the vast mass of tradition and direct interpretation, collected in the Talmuds, and the labours of the later Rabbins. Then follow the ancient versions in the various tongues, and also the comments of the Fathers and of interpreters in all subsequent ages, to whose numerous tomes we might almost apply the hyperbolical language of John, that "even the world itself cannot contain the books that have been written." Yet amid all this mass of literature, besides the many treasures of commentary, most volumes have some grains of wheat mingled with much chaff; and these it is the duty of the interpreter to seek out, and transplant to a kindlier soil, and cause them to grow and flourish in his Master's field.

The Hebrew Text has been transmitted to us in the form of manuscripts, written mostly on vellum or parchment, either rolled like a map, or in a book form, with the contents written in two or three parallel columns. The Jews to this day use no other copies in their synagogues than the rolled manuscripts, which are transcribed with the utmost care and exactness under regulations superstitiously strict, and often in a chirography of extreme beauty. To mention the particular number of existing Hebrew manuscripts of the old Testament, would be impossible. Several hundreds have been collated; they are all written in the ordinary Hebrew square character, and they all, with a very few exceptions, present the Masoretic text, and therefore agree. The oldest existing Hebrew manuscript is said to have been written in A.D. 589; it was brought from Derbend in Daghestan. Several others were written from about 900 to 1200 A.D. The synagogue roll, found by Dr. Buchanan among the Malabar Jews, in 1896, is made of goatskins dyed red. Some suppose it to be a European roll; while others think that it was made in the East, and is of great antiquity. The following is a fac-simile of this manuscript—Deut. iv. 1:

"Now, therefore, 0 Israel, hearken unto the statutes and unto the judgments, which I teach you, for to do them."
INTRODUCTION.

Of the Greek manuscripts, containing the new Testament, in whole or in part, several hundreds are in existence. The most ancient are written in uncial, or capital letters; and the form of the letters frequently give a clue to the time when they were written. One of the oldest and best manuscripts is the Codex Alexandrinus, generally called Codex A, probably written in the fifth century. It is defective as far as Matt. xxv. 6; and from John vi. 50 to viii. 62; and from 2 Cor. 13, to xii. 6; besides other smaller defects. This precious manuscript, which is deposited in the British Museum, also contains the Septuagint. A fac-simile edition of the new Testament portion was executed by Wolde, in 1786, of which the following is a copy.—Acts xx. 28:

"To feed the church of the Lord, which He hath purchased with His own blood."

Another ancient manuscript is the Codex Vaticanus, generally called Codex B, which also contains the Septuagint, has long been preserved in the Vatican library at Rome. Some critics, though few have been permitted to examine it but cursorily, ascribe its date to the middle of the fourth century; but we think it was not written earlier than the seventh. The new Testament portion of this manuscript is defective from Heb. ix. 14 to the end, the pastoral epistles, and the Revelation; these books being placed last in the earlier copies. This manuscript is written with extreme carelessness; not only is one word frequently substituted for another, but several entire passages are left out, and occasionally one or more words, the omission of which show that the sense is incomplete without them.

This manuscript, which has been esteemed more highly than it deserves, was proficiently edited and printed at Rome by Cardinal Mai, in 1838, but not published until 1857. This magnificent edition not only abounds in errors, but, at the same time, it is not a faithful representation of the Vatican manuscript. It is well known that by far the largest number of variations introduced of late years, by critical editors, into the text of the new Testament, consists of omissions; and chiefly on the authority of this ill-written and imperfect manuscript. The appearance of this edition will probably tend to drive critical editors to a greater reverence for the venerable editions of Erasmus, Stephens, and the Commonly Received Text. The following is a fac-simile of this manuscript—Mark i. 1, 2:

"The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God; as it is written in Esaias the prophet, Behold I send My messenger before Thy face, who."

The Codex Ephraim, usually called Codex C, is perhaps the most ancient manuscript of the new Testament now in existence. This valuable Codex is what is called a palimpsest, or Codex rescriptus, i.e. re-written, or containing older writing under more recent. There are other manuscripts of the same kind in existence, which show the varieties through which the venerable documents have passed. In this manuscript the original writing has been washed off, and a portion of the Greek works of Ephraem the Syrian written instead, on the vellum.
INTRODUCTION.

However, by the application of a chemical preparation to the leaves, the older writing was revived; and found to be a portion of the Septuagint, and nearly two-thirds of the New Testament. This precious manuscript, now in the Imperial Library at Paris, was brought from the East; it was probably written in the fifth century, but yields evidence of having been occasionally corrected by a more recent hand. It was copied by Tischendorf, and printed in 1843. The lines of the manuscript extend across the page, so that the following fac-simile represents two half-lines of a portion of 1 Tim. iii. 16; the black letters represent the later writing, and the faded letters the more ancient:

\[
\text{YOU}\ T\ \text{NN}\ \text{A}\ \text{NH}\ \text{W}\ \text{TO}\ \text{N}
\]
\[
\text{KAIOMOAOIYOEMENUCM}
\]
\[
\text{ECHRINOM}\ \text{OGE}\ \text{NOE}
\]

"And without controversy..." story, God was manifest."

Tischendorf thinks that the Codex Ephraim originally had, in this passage, "who" or "which," instead of God.

Besides the several Uncial Manuscripts, of which copies of some of them have been printed, engraved, or lithographed, there are many written in ordinary or smaller Greek letters, called cursive. Some of the cursive manuscripts, though of comparatively recent date, may be equal to the Uncial, inasmuch as they may be copies of manuscripts of greater antiquity. However, of the several copies, it cannot be ascertained that any one is absolutely perfect; the lapse of time, and the numerous transcriptions through which the sacred writings have passed, would naturally expose them, in some degree, to the invasions of error. Still, on the whole, the integrity of the writings of both Testaments has been remarkably preserved. It is enough to say, that on the revival of learning, copies of the Scriptures were found wherever any books had been preserved; and their wide circulation secured them, not merely from extinction, but from corruption.

The most convenient and accurate edition of the Hebrew Bible for the student, is that of Michaelis, Halle, 1720, 2 vols. 4to, also 8vo; or the second edition of Hahn's text, Lipsiae, 1832, 1 vol. 8vo. The editions of the Greek New Testament, by Lachmann, Tischendorf, Bloomfield, Alford, and Tregelles, may be consulted with advantage; but they are chiefly valuable for the notes and critical apparatus. For manual use we prefer a conservative text, as given in the early editions of Stephens and the Received Text.

As a manual Greek Testament, the beautiful and correct edition revised by the celebrated critic, J. J. Wetstein, and printed by H. Wetstein, at Amsterdam, in 1735, will be found invaluable.

The Samaritan Pentateuch is not written in the later Samaritan dialect, but in the proper Hebrew tongue; like the Pentateuch in our Hebrew Bibles, except that it is written in the more ancient Hebrew character, which the Samaritans have retained, with some slight variations. The Samaritans reject all the sacred books of the Hebrews except the Pentateuch; which undoubtedly owes its origin, in its present form, to the building of the temple on Mount Gerizim, after B.C. 408, when the Samaritans founded an independent sect. As the Samaritan Pentateuch differs in some thousands of places from the Hebrew, many writers have considered it an authentic source of correcting the Hebrew records. But Genesis has shown that all the variations, or nearly all, are evidently the effect of design, or of want of grammatical, exegetical, or critical knowledge; or of studious conformity to the Samaritan dialect; or of effort to remove supposed obscurities, or to restore harmony to passages apparently discrepant. To aggravate their own sanction, the Samaritans altered the term Ebal into Gerizim. (Deut. xxxvii. 4.) The following is a specimen of the Samaritan in its variation from the Hebrew:—Gen. iv. 8:

"And Cain said unto Abel his brother, let us go into the field: and it came to pass, when they were in the field, that Cain rose up against Abel his brother, and slew him."
INTRODUCTION.

The principal Ancient Versions, which illustrate the Scriptures, are those which were made immediately from the Hebrew of the old Testament and from the Greek of the new Testament.

The Chaldee Paraphrases, or Targums, are versions or paraphrases of the old Testament, executed in the East-Aramaean or Chaldee dialect, which had long supplanted the ancient Hebrew. These Targums are termed paraphrases or expositions, because they are rather comments and explanations than literal translations of the original text. The Targums are undoubtedly the most ancient Hebrew books, next to the Scriptures; and being extremely literal, they serve to vindicate the Hebrew text, and often afford important aid in determining the signification of difficult words and phrases. They also reflect considerable light on the Jewish rites, ceremonies, laws, customs, and usages, mentioned or alluded to in both Testaments. There are at present extant ten or eleven of these Targums on different parts of the old Testament; three of which comprise the Pentateuch, and one the historical books and the prophets; these four are by far the most important.

The Targum of Onkelos.—The generally received opinion is, that Onkelos was a proselyte to Judaism, and a disciple of the celebrated Rabbi Hillel, who flourished about fifty years before the Christian era; and, consequently, that he was contemporary with Christ; but some place him in the second century. His Targum, embracing the five books of Moses, is justly preferred to all the others, both on account of the purity of its style, and its general freedom from idle legends. It is rather a paraphrase than a paraphrase, and renders the Hebrew text word for word, and with so much accuracy and exactness, that being set to the same musical notes with the original Hebrew, it could be read or cantillated in the same tone as the latter in the public assemblies of the Jews. The following is a specimen of this Targum—Gen. iii. 10—

"And he said: I heard in the garden the voice of Thy Word, and I was afraid, because I am naked, and I hid myself."

The Targum of the Pseudo-Jonathan.—So called from being ascribed by many to Jonathan Ben Uzzai, who wrote the much esteemed paraphrase on the prophets. But the difference in the style and diction of this Targum, which is very impure, as well as in the method of paraphrasing adopted in it, clearly proves that it could not have been written by Jonathan Ben Uzzai, who indeed sometimes indulges in allegories, and has introduced a few barbarisms; but this Targum on the Law abounds with the most idle Jewish fables that can well be conceived; which, together with the barbarous and foreign words it contains, renders it of very little utility. Learned men are unanimous in the opinion that it could not have been written before the seventh, or even the eighth century. Its general character may be learned from the following specimen—Gen. i. 27—

"And the Lord created man in His own likeness: in the image of the Lord created He him, with two hundred and forty-eight members, and three hundred and sixty-five sinews, and clothed him with skin, and filled him with flesh and blood: male and female in their body created He them."

The Jerusalem Targum.—This Targum which paraphrases the five books of Moses, derives its name from the dialect in which it is composed. It is by no means a connected paraphrase, sometimes omitting whole verses, or even chapters; at other times, explaining only a single word of a verse, of which it sometimes gives a twofold interpretation; and at others, Hebrew words are inserted without any explanation whatever. In many respects it corresponds with the paraphrase of the Pseudo-Jonathan, whose legendary tales and Rabbinical fictions are copiously interspersed throughout, though sometimes abridged and sometimes expanded. It cannot be referred to a date earlier than the seventh or eighth century; nor is anything known of the author. The following may serve as a specimen of this Targum—Gen. iii. 15—

"And it shall be when the sons of the woman shall attend to the law and perform the precepts thereof, they shall prepare to wound thee on thy head and shall kill thee: but when the sons of the woman shall transgress the commandments of the law, and shall not perform the precepts thereof, then shall he in readiness and shall bite them upon their heel, and shall afflict them with sickness. Nevertheless, there shall be a remedy for the sons of the woman; but for thee, O Serpent, there shall not be a remedy: for they shall provide a medicine for one another in the heel, in the end of the heel of days, in the days of King Messiah."

The Targum of Jonathan Ben Uzzai.—This Targum treats on the historical point of view, a good version of the Hebrew; yet in very many cases it departs from the exactness of the original text. In regard to these departures, it may be observed, that in more than a thousand cases, the Septuagint and the Samaritan Pentateuch differ from the Hebrew, and generally agree in their differences. Probably, the agreement of the Septuagint and Samaritan, in their departures from the Hebrew text, may be ascribed to the fact that the Samaritan was freely used in the Septuagint. The variations from the Hebrew, in other books of the Septuagint may be fairly attributed, in some cases, to the incompetence of the translators; in others, to the liberties they have taken, in omitting, abridging, adding, and inserting, rather than their having used a Hebrew text, materially different from the Masoretic. Add to this, that the Samaritan and Septuagint each, in the course of being transcribed for several centuries, would receive more or less changes, that might increase the discrepancies between them. The Septuagint translation of Daniel was so faulty that the version of Theodotion is generally published in its stead. However, by this translation of the Scriptures, Divine Providence not only prepared the way for the preaching of the Gospel, but facilitated the promulgation of it by the instrumentality of the Greek language, which became common to all countries conquered by Alexander; and to this version, many of the heathen philosophers were undoubtedly indebted for their most correct notions of the being and perfections of God, as well as for their best and purest sentiments of morality.
INTRODUCTION.

The two principal Greek manuscripts, which are the bases of the two standard—though, in many respects different—editions of the Septuagint, are the Alexandria and the Vatican codices. Grabe’s beautiful edition of the Septuagint exhibits the text of the codex Alexandrinus where it was perfect; but, where it was defective, as from Psalm xlix. 19 to Psalm lxix. 12, the passages, with other corrections, were supplied partly from the Vatican edition of 1584, and partly from the edition in the Complutensian polyglott. An exact fac simile of the Old Testament portion of the precious Alexandrian manuscript was printed in four vols., folio, 1812—1828, to harmonize with the elegant fac-simile edition of the books and the prophets, or according to the Jewish classification of the sacred writings, on the books of Joshua, Judges, Samuel, and Kings, who are termed the former prophets; and on Isaiah, Jere- miah, Ezekiel, and the twelve minor prophets, who are designated the latter prophets. The general opinion is that Jonathan lived a short time before the birth of Christ; but Jahn considers this Targum to be a compilation from the interpretations of several learned men, made about the close of the third or fourth century. This work is far inferior to that of Onkelos. It exhibits a multitude of arbitrary explanations, interpolations, and later views; especially such as tend to the honour of the Pharisees. Yet it frequently adheres closely to the original text, and gives a verbal rendering of it. The following are specimens from this Targum—Isa. i. 13; Mic. v. 2:—

"Behold my servant, the Messiah, shall prosper."

"Out of thee shall come forth before me the Messiah, who shall exercise sovereign rule over Israel."

The Alexandrian Greek Version, generally called the Septuagint or Seventy, is the most ancient and valuable of the Greek translations of the Old Testament. It is called the Septuagint, either from the Jewish fabulous account of seventy-two persons having been employed to make it, or from its having been ordered, superintended, or sanctioned by the Sanhedrin. Much uncertainty rests upon the real history of this version, though the date of the translation of the Pentateuch may be referred to the time of Ptolemy Philometer, about 290 B.C. It was probably executed at Alexandria. A marked difference of style, and of ability and fidelity in the execution of different parts, indicates the version to have been the work not of one but of several translators, and to have been executed at different times. Hence, it is not improbable that the remaining books were translated, for the use of the Jewish worshippers, after the erection of the temple at On, where Onias was high priest, in the time of Ptolemy Philometer, about 263 B.C. Still there is no question as to the value of this version; and in so much esteem was it held by the Jews and the early Christians, that it was constantly read in the synagogues and churches. The Septuagint version of the Pentateuch is considered, in a general
INTRODUCTION.

new Testament portion, executed by Woide, in 1786.

Of the Vatican manuscript, unwarily called by some “the queen of manuscripts,” no fac-simile edition has ever yet been executed. The Vatican edition, printed at Rome in 1586, sometimes called the Sixtine or Roman Septuagint, was certainly based upon the Vatican manuscript, but is not an exact copy of it. As this manuscript is not only defective in the first forty-six chapters of Genesis, together with some of the Psalms, but, through careless writing, is extremely faulty in many other places, the Sixtine editors completed and amended their edition from other manuscripts.

Now is the recent Roman edition of the Septuagint, edited by the late Cardinal Mai, and said to be “from the most ancient Vatican Codex,” a faithful copy of that manuscript. It is indeed surprising that this long-awaited edition, which is said to have cost the Cardinal thirty years of labour, printed in 1888, in four magnificent quarto volumes—the new Testament forms the fifth—and published at Rome in 1887, should be executed in such a very careless and unsatisfactory manner. Indeed, the printers, instead of printing directly from the original manuscript, or from a correct transcript, appear to have printed from the old Sixtine edition, and then Mai corrected the proof pages from the Vatican manuscript, and from other codices, according to his judgment. Many of the typographical errors in this edition have been corrected, by erasing the superfluous letters, and supplying those that were deficient with a pen and ink, and by lists of errata; but still errors abound, to show in what a slovenly manner the work has been executed. Mai’s edition contains some different readings from the Sixtine edition. In Gen. v. 25, the Sixtine edition reads, "And Methuselah lived one hundred and sixty-seven years, and begat Lamech." But Mai’s edition reads like the Alexandrian codex, and with the Hebrew, "And Methuselah lived an hundred and eighty and seven years, and begat Lamech." The Septuagint was ably translated into English by Mr. Thompson, 1809; also by Sir L. C. Lee Brenton, 1844; and still more recently by the Hon. E. J. Howard, D.D.

The following is a specimen of the Septuagint in its variation from the Hebrew—Deut. xxxii. 43:

"Rejoice ye heavens together with Him; and let all the angels (or sons) of God worship Him. Rejoice ye Gentiles with His people; and let the children of God be strengthened in Him; for He will avenge the blood of His children; He will avenge, and repay judgment to His adversaries; and those who hate Him will He recompense; and the Lord will purge the land of His people."

Besides the Septuagint, there are several other Greek versions of the old Testament, made from the Hebrew, with the design of being more correct and pure in style than the Septuagint. They are, the version of Aquila, the version of Theodotion, the version of Symmachus, the three anonymous versions in Origen’s Hexapla, and the version preserved in St. Mark’s library at Venice. Those versions, with the exception of the last, were executed in the second and third centuries of the Christian era. Concerning the date of the last, nothing certain is known; it has been dated from the sixth to the twelfth century by critics. There appears to have been also a portion of a Greek version, made from the Samaritan Pentateuch; and another made from the Latin translation of Jerome. Only fragments of all these versions are now known; they have been collected and published by Montfaucon, Morin, Scharfenberg, Bahrdt, Aminon, and Villoison; but they are too scanty to be of much critical value.

The Samaritan Version is a translation of the Samaritan Pentateuch into the proper Samaritan dialect. This version is very ancient; having been made at least before the time of Origen, and not improbably in the second or third century. It is, on the whole, very literal, and close to the original; and what is very remarkable, is almost exactly the counterpart of the original Hebrew-Samaritan codex, as it now exists, with all its various readings, though occasionally paraphrasing in the manner of the Targums. It is chiefly valuable as one of the best means of becoming acquainted with the Samaritan dialect, which has so few remains, and has been so long extinct as a spoken language.

Besides this version, there is also one made by Abu Said, in the eleventh century, into the Samaritan Arabic dialect, that is, the Arabic as spoken by the Samaritans. The translator appears to have been a man of talents; and he has often hit, in a very happy manner, upon the best way of expressing the real senti-
INTRODUCTION.

The Syriac Version, usually called the Peshito—simple, literal, or verbal—is the most literal of all the ancient translations of the old Testament. It was probably the work of a Syrian Christian, about the middle of the second century. It was evidently translated from the original Hebrew, with an eclectic use of the Greek, and more seldom of the Chaldaic version. The following is a specimen of the Syriac in its variation from the Hebrew—Gen. xxxvi. 24:

"Azubah that found the waters in the wilderness as he fed the asses of Zibeon his father."

The Syriac Version of the new Testament, also called the Peshito, appears to have been translated about the same time, or not long after, the old Testament. It was translated from the Greek; and on account of the elegance and fidelity with which it has been executed, it is said to be the very best translation of the new Testament among the ancient versions. This justly celebrated version comprises only the four Gospels, the Acts of the Apostles, the Epistles of Paul, including the Epistle to the Hebrews, the first Epistle of John, Peter's first Epistle, and the Epistle of James. The history of the woman taken in adultery; (John viii. 1—11;) and the celebrated passage in 1 John v. 7, are both wanting in this ancient version. However, an ancient Syriac version of the second Epistle of Peter, the second and third of John, that of Jude, the Apocalypse, and the narrative contained in John viii. 1—11, is added to some editions of the Peshito.

The Philoxenian or Syro-Philoxenian Version, derives its name from Philoxenus, Bishop of Hierapolis in Syria, A.D. 488—518. This version, though made immediately from the Greek, is greatly inferior to the Peshito, both in the accuracy with which it is executed, and also in its style. This latter Syriac version was revised in the following century by Thomas of Harkel; hence it is sometimes called the Harcalian recension. In this form it has come down to us. This version, however, is not devoid of value for critical purposes.

Besides these Syriac versions, there are fragments of a recension of the four Gospels differing, in some respects, from any Syriac translation previously known. These venerable remains were brought, with other manuscript treasures, from the Nitrian monasteries in Egypt. They have been carefully edited and translated by Dr. Cureton, and published in 1858. The learned editor believes this version to be more ancient than even the venerable Peshito. However, it not infrequently happens that such coincidences of words and rendering occur in the Nitrian or Curetonian Syriac, as to show, that the translator was not either ignorant of, or wholly independent of, the aid of the venerable Peshito Gospels.

The version called Karkaphesian, i.e. mountainous, is merely a recension of the Peshito Syriac version of the old and new Testaments; probably made in the tenth century, for the use of the Jacobite Christians.

The Arabic Version of R. Saadia Gaon, who died in A.D. 942, covers, so far as it is known, the Pentateuch, Isaiah, and Job. It was made from the Hebrew; and contains, along with the earlier tradition, much also which is the result of independent thought and study, though indeed often subtle and forced. The vulgar Arabic version of the Pentateuch, published by Erpenius, was translated from the Hebrew by an African Jew, in the thirteenth century. Besides those, there are other Arabic versions of several books, as Genesis, Joshua, the Kings, Nehemiah, Daniel, and the Psalms, made immediately from the Hebrew. There are also versions of the Prophets, Psalms, Ezra, the writings of Solomon, and other books, made from the Septuagint; and the books of Job, Chronicles, Samuel, Judges, Ruth, part of Kings, two copies of the Psalms, and two of the Pentateuch, made from the Peshito or old Syriac version, either by Jews, Samaritans, or Christians. There are many Arabic versions of the new Testament, which are supposed to have been made between the tenth and the eleventh centuries, some of which were made from the Greek text, while others have been made from the Peshito Syriac; and others again have been revised by the Memphis, and even by the Latin Vulgate.

The Persic Version of the Pentateuch appears to have been translated from the Hebrew, by Jacob ben Tawus, a Jew, probably in the ninth century. The writings of Solomon were also translated from the Hebrew; while the two translations of the Psalms have been derived.
INTRODUCTION.

from the Latin Vulgate. There are two Persian versions of the four Gospels, one made from the Peshito Syriac, and the other from the Greek.

The Ethiopic, the two Egyptian—Memphitic and Sahidic or Theotic—and the Armenian versions of the old Testament were made from the Septuagint; the latter is said to have been subsequently altered according to the Peshito, and, probably to the Latin. The Ethiopic, the Memphitic, and the Theotic versions of the new Testament are from the Greek. The Armenian was also translated from the Greek, with the occasional introduction of readings from the Peshito Syriac.

The Vulgate Version is the appellation usually given to the common Latin translation of the Scriptures. After Christianity had extended itself in the West, a Latin version of the old Testament was made from the Septuagint, and of the new from the original Greek. This translation was called Vulgatæ — common, popular, and in modern times is often called the Vulgate or Vulg. Several fragments of this ancient version are still extant. As the manuscripts of this old version had become by degrees very much corrupted, a revision was undertaken, in A. D. 883, by Jerome. However, while thus employed in the revision of the ancient Vulgata, Jerome, whose knowledge of the Hebrew was very respectable, ventured to commence also a new version of his own, out of the original Hebrew, which he completed in A. D. 405. While engaged in this work, he enjoyed the oral instruction of learned Jewish Rabbins in Palestine, and availed himself of all the former Greek versions, and of the Hexapla of Origen. He also translated the new Testament from the original Greek. This version, which surpasses all the preceding in usefulness, did not at once meet with the anticipated general reception; nevertheless, it maintained itself along with the ancient one; and at length, in the seventh century, supplanted it almost entirely. The Vulgate was the first book ever printed. This noble book, usually called the Mazarine Bible, was printed at Mentz, by Gutenberg, Schoeffer, and Fust; and appears to have been executed in 1455—6. At the Council of Trent, in 1546, the Latin Vulgate was declared to be the standard version of the Roman Church, and to be of equal authority with the original Scriptures. The great value of this version, which among Protestants has been underrated from the circumstance of its being so highly regarded by the Romanists, arises from its extreme antiquity. Having been made from manuscripts older than most now extant, this translation may fairly be considered as equivalent to a manuscript of the fourth century. The copies of the Vulgate had become exceedingly corrupt; so that even the Trinitarian Council did not fix upon any one edition as the standard. Indeed, the Vulgate, at present, consists of different elements; the Psalms, and most of the Apocryphal books, being from the ancient Itala, and the rest from the latter Vulgata. The popes, however, have taken great pains to obtain as correct a text of the Vulgate as possible; thus, in 1580, under Sixtus V., appeared the Editio Sixtina, which was declared to be the standard for all future editions. But many errors being discovered in it, even before its publication, which they attempted to remedy by erasing, pasting over the faulty words and the like; the popes purchased up and destroyed all the copies, so far as possible. In 1682, a new standard, the Editio Clementina was published, which differed much from the Sixtine edition. And in the following year, 1590, Clement VIII. prepared another edition, which sustained many alterations; and this still retains its authority. The following is a specimen of the Latin Vulgate—Job xxvi. 5, 6:

"Behold the giants, and those who dwell with them, grown from under the waters. Hell is naked before him, and perdition hath no covering.

In addition to the ancient versions, the student will find it occasionally to his advantage to consult the Apocryphal books, as they not only give the peculiar views of the writers, but are frequently useful in the explanation of words and phrases in the languages in which they were written. Most of the Apocryphal books, though by unknown authors, are very ancient; but they were not admitted by the Jews into the canon of the old Testament, either because they had no Hebrew original—being written after the Hebrew canon was completed—or because they were regarded as not Divinely inspired. The most important of the old Testament Apocryphal books stand in the Septuagint and in the Latin Vulgate.
INTRODUCTION.

as canonical; others stand at the close of these versions. No part of the Apocrypha is quoted, or even alluded to, in the New Testament, nor in the works of Philo or Josephus. Besides those, several other ancient books and fragments, which have been deservedly rejected from the sacred canon, were collected and published by Fabriezus, in his "Codex Pseudepigraphus Veteris Testamenti," 2 vols. 8vo., 1741. Mr. Whiston, in his "Collection of Authentic Records," 2 vols., 1727—8, has published several of these ancient fragments. Dr. Laurence published the Ethiopic versions of the books of Enoch, the Ascension of Isaiah, and the first book of Ezra. Those apocryphal productions, ascribed to Christ and his disciples, were written long after the time of the Apostles, and are mostly of a legendary character. A list of them may be seen in Tolaed's "Amun-yot," 1699. Most of these spurious fragments were collected and published by Fabriezus, in his "Codex Apocryphus Novi Testamenti," 3 vols. 8vo., 1719—43. This work, with additions by Thilo and others, was republished by Dr. Giles, London, 1852. English translations of some of these early forgeries will be found in the works of Jones, Lardner, Whiston, Cotton, and Laurence.

It may be proper to name here also the work of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish historian, as his writings have a direct bearing upon the facts of Scripture. He was born at Jerusalem, A.D. 37. His "History of the Jewish War" was written originally in Hebrew, but afterwards translated into Greek. His "Jewish Antiquities" is likewise an excellent work. It contains the history of the Jews from the captivity to the fall of Jerusalem. It is to be read with profit till near the end of the reign of Nero. His two books on the Antiquity of the Jewish People contain valuable extracts from more ancient historians. Oberthür's edition, 3 vols. 8vo., 1781—5, is valuable. The English translation by Whiston is tolerable. But the "History of the Jewish War," translated by the late Dr. Traill, 2 vols., is indispensable. To these may be added the writings of Philo, the learned Jew. He was born some years before Christ, in Alexandria. He was popular in the reign of the Emperor Caligula. He was a man of great learning and industry, and well acquainted with Greek philosophy and literature. Though he was not satisfied with the literal sense of the Mosaic law, and mingled Platonic dogmas with the Scriptures, yet his writings are useful for those who would learn the style of philosophy at that time in Alexandria.

We may also notice here the Talmud—doctrina, a work containing an enormous collection of traditions, illustrative of Jewish laws and usages. It consists of two parts, the Mishna—second law, and the Gemara—completion or doctrina. The Mishna, which consists of six parts, is a collection of the traditions of the Jews, or their oral law, compiled by Rabbi Judah, surnamed the holy, about A. D. 150. Of the Gemara, there are two sorts; the one is called the Jerusalem Talmud, which Rabbi Johanan collected together, about A. D. 290; the other is called the Babylonian Talmud, which was begun by Rabbi Ass. A. D. 387, and finished by Avina, about A. D. 500. The former was written for the use of the Jerusalem Jews; the latter for those in Babylon and other parts, and is most esteemed. The Talmud contains the disputes and decisions of the Jewish doctors upon the Mishna.

We have now passed, in review, the main branches of study, which constitute the department of Biblical Literature, and furnish the sources and materials from, and with which, the interpreter is to illustrate the oracles of God. A due acquaintance with all these may be said to compose his objective qualifications; being such as are drawn from without himself. As to what relates to the inner man, the disposition of the mind, which we may term his subjective preparation, as Dr. Robinson has well observed, "all aids and qualifications will be in vain to the interpreter, without the spirit of prayer, and of humble reliance on the Divine assistance. Without this spirit, the human heart and human mind are of themselves prone to wander from the truth in Divine things, and to set up human judgment and human authority above the revealed will of the Most High. The ancient Jews cling to the letter of their law, which they understood better than we; but they failed to imbibe its spirit. So the interpreter of Scripture, who rests merely on the support of human learning, will abide in the letter, while the spirit must ever remain beyond his comprehension. "The natural man," says Paul, "receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness to him; neither can he know them, seeing they are spiritually discerned: but he that is spiritual, judgeth all things.' The truth here propounded by the Apostle, applies to the interpreter as well as to the hearer of the Scriptures; and unless he can stand the trial, even though he might speak with the tongues of men and of angels; though he might have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; yet without the spirit of love, he would be nothing; and his teaching become only as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. It may be asked, why this spiritual frame of mind should be necessary for the interpretation of the Bible, more than of any other book? We may reply: Because it is the main object of the Bible to describe and to inculcate just this spirit and this spiritual frame; and, therefore, if the interpreter do not possess it; if he do not know it in his own heart and experience, how can he appreciate and explain it, as it lies upon the pages of Scripture? How can he, who has no ear nor soul for music, sit in judgment upon the thrilling productions of the mighty masters of harmony? How can he who has no taste nor talent for mathematical science, soar with Newton and Laplace through the regions of unlimited space, and trace out, with them, the laws that bind together the remotest worlds, as they float in the realms of ether? Just so, the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him. He that would discern and teach the things of God, must himself be taught from on high."
INTRODUCTION.

SECTION VI.

Anglo-Saxon Versions—The several Early English Versions.

By whom Christianity was first introduced to the shores of Britain, historical research has not been able satisfactorily to discover. Whether the knowledge of the "common salvation" was brought to our island-home by an Apostle, or by some other missionary, or, as some think, by Christian merchants from the ports of Asia Minor, or even by Greek soldiers in the Imperial armies, who had embraced the Christian faith in the East, so much, however, is certain, that it was not received from the capital of the empire. The early British churches were all formed after the Eastern type, and not after the Western, whose centre was in the Empire Rome whose yoke the Britons detested. Hence, at an early period, at least portions of the new Testament would be circulated in Latin, the language of the conquerors, and not improbably in Greek, among the troops drafted from the East; and these, judging from the aggressive nature of Christianity, would speedily find their way among the infant churches in the vernacular languages of the British islands. Even Chrysostom affirms, "Though thou visitest the ocean and these British islands, though thou sailest to the Euxine seas, and travellest to the southern regions, thou shalt hear all men, everywhere, reasoning out of the Scriptures, with another voice indeed, but not with another faith, with a different tongue, but with an according mind." And what the venerable Bede says of his own time, respecting Britain, will be true of ages before his time: "That in the language of the nations, it searched out and acknowledged one and the same acquaintance with the highest truth and with real sublimity to wit, of the Angles, the Britons, the Scots, the Picts, and the Latins." Undoubtedly, in the lapse of ages, and from the ravages of war, the most ancient vernacular versions have perished; while the oldest fragments that remain are in the language of their Saxon conquerors. Even under the Danish kings, all laws and edicts were promulgated in Anglo-Saxon; and this language continued to be used till the time of the Norman conquest, when it was superseded by the Anglo-Norman and the old English.

Though our Anglo-Saxon ancestors early possessed translations, chiefly from the Latin, of at least portions of the Scriptures, the first attempts with which we are acquainted is the rude but interesting poem ascribed to Ceddmon, a monk of Whitby, in the seventh century. This work, which contains the leading events of old Testament history, renders several passages with tolerable facility; but the epic and legendary character of the composition preclude it from being ranked among the versions of Holy Writ. This work was succeeded in the following century by the Anglo-Saxon Psalter, said to have been translated by Athelhelm, bishop of Sherborne, who died in 709; the first fifty Psalms are in prose, the others in verse. About the same period, Cædmon, the first Saxon anchorite, is reported to have translated the Psalms. The next labourer in the field was the Venerable Bede, who turned the Apostles’ creed and the Lord’s prayer into Anglo-Saxon. He also translated the Gospel of John, and completed it just as death put an end to his learned labours, in the monastery of Jarrow, on the south bank of the Tyne, A.D. 728. The close of the next century probably produced the celebrated Deorlams Book, containing the four Gospels in Anglo-Saxon, written between the lines of an earlier Latin copy, by Alfred, a priest. The following is the Lord’s prayer from this version—Matt. vi. 9—13:
INTRODUCTION.

"Fader worm thun arth in beothum, sic gehalgred soma this : to cynereth ric thin; sic wille thin swaede inbroe & in oorcho; hit is sume ofer wiclic set me toodig : & forgfe us wiclyde men ne forgesum seyldum usum : and ne fised wath in costumne uh gutguesch from yfes."

The Embworth Gloss, having the Anglo-Saxon word placed over the corresponding Latin, was probably executed about the same period, by Oswy, aided by Fernean, a priest at Harwood. About this time, Alfred the Great set at the head of his men an Anglo-Saxon translation of the Ten Commandments, with each of the Mosaic injunctions from the xxi, xxii, and xxiii. chapters of Exodus as were most to his purpose. He is also said to have entered upon a translation of the Psalms, which he did not live to finish. Next in order come some fragments of an imperfect interlinear version of the Book of Proverbs. Similar glosses were made on the Psalter; also, on the Canticles of the church, the Lord’s prayer, and other portions of Scripture. In the latter part of the tenth century, the monk Alfric translated—omitting some parts and greatly abridging others—the Pentateuch, Joshua, Judges, a portion of the Books of Kings, Esther, Job, Judith, and the Maccabees. He also drew up, in Anglo-Saxon, a brief account of the books of the old and new Testaments; and, by the texts and quotations used in his homilies, he contributed greatly to the knowledge of the Scriptures. A third Anglo-Saxon version of the four Evangelists, of which there are two copies, and a few copies of the Psalms, appear to have been executed at a later period, probably a little before the time of the Norman Conquest. With these, the series of Anglo-Saxon translations of parts of Scripture would seem to end; though it is not improbable that other portions of Scripture were translated which have not come down to us.

Before the middle of the eleventh century the language of Cædmon and Bede had undergone important changes, probably through the influence of Edward the Confessor, and his Norman associates, among whom he had been educated. At the period of the Conquest, a. D. 1066, the Norman began rapidly to revolutionise the old Anglo-Saxon language. Soon after this period, a version of the Gospels appears to have been made, of which there are three copies; and it is difficult to determine whether they are to be assigned to the Anglo-Saxon or Anglo-Norman class of literary remains. Before the year 1200 the Anglo-Normans had translated into their own dialect in prose, the Psalter and Canticles of the church; and towards the middle of the following century appear to have possessed not only a history of the old Testament in verse, as far as the end of the books of Kings, but also, it is supposed, a prose version of a great part of the Bible. Nevertheless, the Anglo-Saxon versions and glosses of the Gospels and other portions of Scripture remained long after in partial use.

The earliest essays of Biblical translation assumed in early English, as in most other languages, a poetical form. The Ormulum, written perhaps at the commencement of the thirteenth century, is a paraphrase in verse of the narrative of the Gospels and Acts of the Apostles. The Biblical poem called "Soulhele" was probably written about the same period. To a later period of the same century belongs the poem reciting the principal events in the books of Genesis and Exodus. Apparently coeval with this is the metrical version, from the Latin, of the whole book of Psalms. In some manuscripts a version is found partly similar, but with amendments and revisions, probably the partial adaptation of the same version to a more modern diction and orthography. The 100th Psalm is here given as a specimen of this ancient English version:

"Mirthes to God al erta that es Serves to louerd in salnes. In go yhe al in his stht, In gladness that is so brite. Whiteths that louerd god is he thus, He as made an our self nobi us."
INTRODUCTION.

His folke and shep of his fold:
In ges his yhaties that are gote;
In schrift his worches belyve,
In ympris to him yhe schrive.
Heresy his name for lourde is hende,
In all his merci do in strende and strende."

The earliest version in English prose of any entire book of Scripture is the book of Psalms, translated by William de Scouram, vicar of Chart Sutton, in Kent. The translation is generally faithful and literal. The following is a specimen of this version—Ps. xxiii. 1—6—

"Our Lord governeth me and nothing shall befall to me; in the midst of the land of my heart. He made me to dwell in the houses of his saints, and his name shall be adored by me. For they show me the path of the Lord, and his goodness shall follow me all the days of my life. Then shall I dwell in the house of the Lord for ever."

Scouram's version of the Psalms could scarcely be more perfect, when another was undertaken by Richard Bollay, channery priest at Hampole, near Doncaster, who died 1349. Of this work of Bollay, to which he subjoined a commentary, there were copies which differed from each other, showing that the original must have been altered to some extent. The following is a specimen of this version—Ps. lxxxix. 1—6—

"God, give men in this heritage; that I may dwell in the highest, in the presence of God, in the strength of Jacob. ... I will scatter their bones among their fathers; their names shall be written for ever. The guardian of the Lord shall be the vineyard of the Lord; he shallcause the fatness of the earth to increase. ... He shall give them an inheritance among the heathen."

All these versions were made from the Latin; and some of the venerable relics still exist in manuscript, in the public libraries of the kingdom. A few of them have been printed as objects of literary curiosity.

Hitherto, notwithstanding the numerous fragmentary portions, no complete copy of the Scriptures, either in Anglo-Saxon or in English, was known to be in existence. The assertion of Sir Thos. More, that "both the old and new Testaments had been translated into English long before the days of Wycliffe," has never yet been proved to be correct. It was not till about the year 1382, that our language was enriched with a complete copy of the Scriptures, by the hands of Wycliffe and his coadjutors, not improbably with the aid of other fragmentary portions then existing. This translation was made from the Latin Vulgate, collated with other old copies. For several centuries, there had occasionally been found, in England, some scholars acquainted with the Hebrew and Greek languages; and, though Wycliffe occasionally introduces Greek words in some of his writings, yet it seems scarcely probable that the knowledge of Greek possessed by him was at all sufficient to enable him to translate from that language. Hence, if the Bible must be translated at all, it must be from the Latin. It belonged to a later and more critical age to use the originals in forming vernacular versions of the Scriptures.

The translation of the new Testament was probably the work of Wycliffe himself. During its progress, the old Testament was taken in hand by one of Wycliffe's coadjutors; and, from a note written in one manuscript, at the end of a portion of the book of Baruch, the translation is assigned to Nicholas de Hereford. Not unlikely the case of this manuscript, and also of another which is probably a copy, suddenly breaking off in the book of Baruch, was the summons which Hereford received to appear before the Synod in 1382. The translation was evidently completed by a different hand, not improbably by Wycliffe himself. However this may be, he was the individual through whose energy the earliest translation of the whole Bible in the English language had been carried on and executed. Many of the peculiarities of this translation are to be attributed to the phraseology of the time in which Wycliffe lived; and it is remarkable that, in his version of the Scriptures, he wrote far more intelligible English than is found in his original works; the dignity of the book which he translated seems to have imparted an excellence of expression to the version itself. No part of the genuine version of Wycliffe was printed, excepting the Song of Solomon, by Dr. A. Clarke, in his Commentary, until 1848, when Mr. L. Wilson published the new
INTRODUCTION.

Testament, in a beautiful Gothic letter quarto volume. More recently, the entire Bible, accompanied with Purvey's revision, has been published. The following is a specimen of Wycliffe's translation—Gen. iii. 7, 8; Luke viii. 31—33:—

And the tree of both being opened, and whanne the knewen hem sylf to be nakid, the sowden to gylde leetes of a figne tree, and maden hem breche. And whanne the herdon the way of the Lord God vogyse in paradis at the shynag after myd dal, Adam hid hym and his weif fro the face of the Lord God in the mydel of the tree of paradis.

And the preden hym, that he schulde not consume hem, that he schuld reserue hem in to hym. And he sufrde hym. Therefore foundis wenten out fro the man, and entred in to boggis; and with bire the foc vente heddling in to the lake of water, and was strangild.

As Wycliffe's translation was completed in a comparatively short space of time, and necessarily possessed blemishes incident to a first edition, it is not surprising that a revised version was contemplated even in the lifetime of Wycliffe himself. Accordingly, about the year 1388, not more than four years after the death of Wycliffe, the revision was accomplished, but with few substantial differences of interpretation, by Purvey, who had been Wycliffe's curate, and after his death, became the leader of the Lollard party. Purvey's revision rendered the version more correct, intelligible, and popular; and caused the earlier translation to fall into disuse. Copies of this revision were rapidly multiplied; even now, more than one hundred and fifty copies of the whole or part of Purvey's Bible are in existence. The following is a specimen of Purvey's version—Gen. iii. 7, 8; Luke viii. 31—33:—

And the tree of bothe were open; and whanne the knewen that the were nakid, the sowden the leenes of a figne tre, and maden breche to hem sylf. And whanne the herdon the way of the Lord God vogyse in paradis at the wynd after myd dal, Adam and his weif hidden hem fro the face of the Lord God in the mydel of the tree of paradis.

And the preden hym, that he schulde not consume hem, that the wenten in to berte. And there was a foc of many swyne leewyse in an hil, and the preden hym, that he schulde sufrde hem to entere into hym. And he sufrde hem. And so the dencelis wenten out fro the man, and entredin in to the swyne; and with a bitre the foc went heeding in to the pool, and was drenchil.
INTRODUCTION.
equally well known by the name of German or Dutch doctrines. In the new title inserted the following year, these terms were left out. Coverdale certainly did not follow the Latin, nor even Luther's version; but he no doubt availed himself of all the different means of assistance within his power. This Bible was reprinted with some amendments at Zurich, in 1587, with a London title-page, and was then allowed by the king to "go abroad among the people," but without any regal imprimatur or license. The following is a specimen of Coverdale's translation—
Ps. xc. (xci.) 4, 6:—
"He shall cover the under his wings, that thou mayest be safe under his feathers: his faithfulness and truth shall be thy shield and buckler. So shall thou not be afraid of any night-hag or arrow that flyeth by day."
In the year 1537, the translations of Tyndale were published in a collected form, under the cognomen of "Thomas Matthew." The editing of this Bible was really the work of the martyr Rogers, an individual intimately connected with the publication and revision of the Bible in English. To this edition was prefixed, An Exhortation to the Study of the Holy Scriptures, in which stand J. K. the initials of his name. In the execution of this work, Rogers had the whole of Tyndale's translations, whether imprinted or manuscript, before him. The old Testament is a reprint of Tyndale's Pentateuch, the remainder as far as the second book of Chronicles, was copied from Tyndale's manuscripts, which were undoubtedly in Rogers' safe keeping. The new Testament was Tyndale's of 1534. This Bible has the character of Tyndale's labours so stamped upon it, as clearly to show that at least two-thirds of the translation was his work: the remainder is the work of Rogers, who was probably aided by Coverdale's sheets. At the end of the old Testament, the letters w. t. are printed in very large text capitals curiously flourished. This Bible was probably printed at Leucon and it is not improbable that it was actually in the press, under the joint labours of Tyndale and Rogers, at the time of Tyndale's arrest and martyrdom. Much credit is due to Rogers—who probably resided at the place of printing—as the careful editor of this Bible: he was evidently a fine scholar, and he seems to have acted both as desiring to give his countrymen a Bible as correct as possible, and likewise to perpetuate the labours of Tyndale, his friend and instructor in the truth of the gospel. This Bible was translated by the first Hebrew, Greek, and English scholars, and thorough Germans known among the several early translators; and is executed most in conformity to the views of the latest and best Biblical critics. This revision, which is frequently but not inaptly called "Tyndale's Bible," appeared with the then much coveted words, "Set forth with the king's most gracious license;" hence it was the first properly authorised edition of the English Bible. This Bible, at least part of it, appears to have been printed at the expense of Richard Grafton and his partner, Edward Whitchurch—who afterwards married the widow of Archbishop Cranmer—who about the same period became printers themselves, as their initials appear at the beginning of the Prophets, where, perhaps, the part of the expense which they defrayed commenced. And "Thomas Matthew" may actually have been the person at whose cost the preceding portion was printed. This Bible was quite the popular translation, and from the various editions, it appears to have been much used for many years. The following is a fine specimen of Tyndale's rendering from the Hebrew—2 Sam. i. 17, 18:—
"And David sang thereby of Saul and Jonathan his son, & had to teach the children of Israel the staves thereof."
In 1538, several editions of Coverdale's new version of the new Testament were published. He also issued several editions of the English new Testament, together with the text of the Latin Vulgate. The printing of this Dougirt Testament was executed with great carelessness, so that Coverdale had it speedily reprinted in Paris. It is probable that Nicholson the printer, hearing that Coverdale's Latin and English Testament was about to be reprinted in Paris, with more attention to accuracy, printed the one bearing the name of "Johan Hollybusche," without delay, in order to anticipate the Paris edition. The following year, besides an edition of the Latin and English Testament, Coverdale published certain "Goostly Psalms and Spiritual Songs," with more of pious zeal than poetic taste. The following is a specimen of Coverdale's Testament—Matt. v. 13:—
INTRODUCTION.

"Ye are the salt of the earth. But if ye salt vide away, whom shall it be salted?
It is thence forth good unto nothing, but yt be cast out, & trode vnder of men."

In the year 1539, was published the English translation known by the name of the "Great Bible." This edition was executed under the superintendence of Grafton, to whom Coverdale lent his aid as corrector. This Bible was printed at Paris, by the permission of Francis I., obtained by Henry VIII. But, notwithstanding the royal license, just as the work was well advanced, the Inquisition interoposet, and issued an order, dated December 17th, 1538, summoning the French printers, their English employers, and Coverdale, the corrector of the work, and inhibited their further proceeding. The impression, consisting of 2,500 copies, was seized, confiscated, and condemned to the flames. Four great dry-fats full, however, of these books escaped the fire, by the aversion of the person appointed to superintend the burning of them; and the English proprietors, who had fled on the first alarm, returned to Paris as soon as it subsided, and not only recovered some of these copies, but brought with them to London the presses, types, and even the workmen, and resuming the work, finished it in the following year.
This Bible, which is a revision of Mathew's version, probably by the hand of Coverdale, has been unhappily confounded with "Cranmer's Bible," issued in 1540.
The preface written by Cranmer for the edition of 1540, has been inserted in some copies of the Great Bible, but subsequently to their completion. The statesman Cromwell, not Cranmer, was the master-spirit, not only in getting up this edition, but in securing the royal injunction, that: "the whole Bible, of the largest volume in English," should be set up in the churches. This continued, with slight alterations, to be the authorised English version of the Bible—exccept, of course, during the revival of popery in Mary's reign—until, in 1568, it was superseded by the Bishops' Bible.
The Psalms in this Bible were the same as those found in the book of Common Prayer, having seventeen interpolations from the Septuagint, or Latin Vulgate, but printed in a smaller type, and between parentheses. These readings were omitted in Coverdale's Bible as not being in the Hebrew text; they are also continued in Cranmer's editions. The following is a specimen, with the interpolation, in smaller type, which includes three verses—Ps. xiv. 3, 4:

"But they are all gone out of the way, they are altogether become abominable: there is none that doth good, no not one, (they) are an open sepulchre: with their tongues they have deserved, the persons of apostles under their lyres. Their mouth is full of cursing and byterees: They are swift to shed blood, destroyer, and unhappies in their ways, and the way of peace have they not known, there is no fear of God before they eye.) Have they no knowledge that they are all such workers of mischief, outcry up my people as it were brede."

In the year 1539, another edition of the Bible appeared, dedicated to the king.
It was a mere recension of Matthew's Bible, executed by Richard Taverner, under the patronage of Lord Cromwell.
The three editions, through which this Bible almost immediately went, proved that its circulation was considerable; though it is to be observed, that they were private readers alone who used it, as it was never, even for a time, publicly made an authorised version. Taverner's new Testament, of which he published two editions, is a different recension from that which accompanied his "Recognition of the Bible."

In the year 1540, "Cranmer's Bible" was issued from Grafton and Whitchurch's press. This was probably the first complete Bible ever printed in England. This edition, of which only five hundred copies were printed, was a mere revision of the Great Bible of 1539, and had a preface by Cranmer. Another edition, "overseen and perused," by the king's command, by Cuthbert Tottall, bishop of Durham, and Nicholas Heath, bishop of Rochester, who also made a few variations in the text, appeared in 1541.
The following is a specimen from Cranmer's new Testament—Matt. vi. 9-12:

"Our father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name, Let thy kingdom come. Thy will be fulfilled, as well in earth, as it is in heven. Give us today our daily brede.
And forgive us our dettes, as we forgive our detters. And lead us not into temptation:
but deliver us from evil. For thine is the kingdom and the power, and the glory for cuer. Amen."

The only impressions of any portions of the Scriptures which were printed during the remainder of the reign of Henry, appear to have been the Epistles and Gospels for the Sundays, in 1542; probably an edition of the Pentateuch in 1544; Jove's book of Daniel, and the books of Solomon, in 1545: and the new Testament according to the text of the
INTRODUCTION.

Great Bible, in 1546. The number of copies of the Scriptures in circulation at this time must, however, have been very considerable. In 1543, the parliament prohibited the use of Tyndale’s version; and in 1546, Coverdale’s translation, as well as Tyndale’s, was prohibited by a stringent proclamation, and all such books were to be delivered up to persons appointed for the purpose, in order that they might be burned. The diligence with which Henry’s proclamation was executed, in the destruction of the earlier editions, accounts for the very few copies which have come down to our time. The destruction appears to have been almost as complete as that of the earlier editions of Tyndale’s new Testament.

Among the early acts of the reign of Edward VI., was the reversing of the restrictions which had been laid on the circulation and the reading of the Scriptures. Yet no new recension or translation was published, except a translation of the paraphrase of Erasmus in 1549-50. Among those who took part in this work was Coverdale; and the Princess Mary—the future persecuting queen—translated a portion of the Gospel of John. Cranmer contemplated a new translation of the Bible; but Fagius and Bucer died, and the work was frustrated. An edition of Coverdale’s Bible, said to have been printed at Zurich, was published in 1550. This edition was probably one of the two revisions which Coverdale mentioned in his sermon at Paul’s Cross, in which he defended his version, and said, “if he might review the book once again, as he had twice before, he doubted not he should amends.” During some part of this reign, Sir John Chiche translated the Gospel of Matthew, and, perhaps, part of Mark; but the translation was not then published. This, if completed, would probably have been published. The following is a specimen of Chiche’s version—Matt. ii. 1:

“When Jesus was born in Bethlem a city at Jurn in king Herod’s time, lo then the Wizzard’s cam fro these parties.”

However, many editions of the Bible were printed; some being reprints of Matthew’s Bible, some of Cranmer’s, and some of Tavener’s Recognition. The total number of impressions of the Bible, in the reign of Edward, was at least thirteen. There were also several editions of the new Testament, some of Tyndale’s translation, some of Coverdale’s version, and some according to Cranmer’s version. The number of these editions of the new Testament amounts to at least twenty-five; so that the whole number of Bibles and Testaments in circulation comprised many thousand copies.

On the accession of Mary, the printing and the circulation of the Scriptures in English was hindered; so that her reign only witnessed the printing of one edition of the new Testament, printed at Geneva in 1557. The translator of the Genevan Testament was William Whittingham, a native of Holmset, six miles from Durham, who was one of the exiles from England. This was a small square volume, printed in Roman letters, with the supplementary words in italics. It was the first English new Testament divided into verses, and broken into small sections or paragraphs. The preface was written by John Calvin, whose sister, Catherine, was married to Whittingham. In the manner of rendering not a few passages, the translator followed the judgment of Beza in his theological views. The following is a specimen of this version—Matt. xiii. 19:

“When seern a man heareth the words of the kyndome, and understandeth it not, then commeneth that eny one, and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart, and this is the corn which was sown by the way syde.”

Whittingham and his companions in exile also executed a translation of the whole Bible at Geneva; and it is not unlikely that Coverdale aided in the work. The translators probably had motives which sufficiently influenced them in executing a new version, instead of giving a mere reprint or revision of any which had preceded. The intention of such a work had been entertained in the reign of Edward VI.; and it is probable that, in this projected revision, from the manner in which the name of Bucer was connected with it, there would have been embodied whatever might be learned from the Biblical knowledge possessed by the Reformers on the Continent. This translation differed from all that had preceded it, not only in its plan, but also in its execution. The other versions had been generally the work, or the revision, of an individual; or, at most, a revision in which certain individuals executed certain particular parts: in this translation we find, on the contrary, many acting unitedly in the formation of a version, and thus, in the plan of operation, there was a principle of completeness which had not been acted on previously. The translators, by the use of supplementary words, often aided the sense, without seeming to insert what was not found in the original. It was also stored with marginal notes. This version of the whole Bible was printed at Geneva, by Rowland Hall, in 1560; so that it was not published until after many of the exiles had returned home. In this translation, which was the first complete English Bible divided by verses, it is to be observed, that the translation of the new Testament differs, in several respects, from that which had been separately printed in 1556. The expense of preparing the Genevan Bible was chiefly borne by John Bodley, the father of Sir Thomas, the founder of the noble library at Oxford. On the return of the exiles, queen Elizabeth granted a patent to Bodley solely, for the term of seven years, to print this edition; yet, on account of the interference of Archbishop Parker, no edition of the Genevan Testament or Bible was published in England till the year 1576. Immediately after Parker’s death, this version was published; it continued to be frequently reprinted in this country, and was, for many years, the popular version in England, having been only gradually displaced by king James’ translation, which appeared fifty-one years afterwards. From the peculiar reading in Gen. iii. 7, the editions of the Genevan version have been commonly known by the name of “Breeches Bibles;” but this reading, as we have already seen, is as old as Wycliffe’s time, and occurs in his translation. To some editions of the Genevan Bible is subjoined Beza’s translation of the new Testament, Englished by L. Thomson. The following is a specimen of the Genevan Bible—Gen. xii. 42, 43; and Matt. xiii. 19:—
INTRODUCTION.

“And Pharaoh took of his ring from his hand, and put upon Joseph’s hand, and arrayed him in garments of fine linen and put a golden chain about his neck. So he set him upon the best chariot that he had, and put hisoman: & they cried before him Abrech, and placed him over all the land of Egypt.”

“Whensoever a man heareth the words of the kingdom, and understandeth it not, the evil one cometh, and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart; & this is he which hath received the seed by the way side.”

The next version of the Bible was superintended by Archbishop Parker, hence sometimes called “Parker’s Bible,” and published in 1568. This version was executed with great care by more than fifteen learned men, the initials of whose names occur at the end of the portions executed by them. From the greater part of those who were engaged in its preparation being bishops, this version is also called the “Bishops’ Bible.” This edition is adorned with one hundred and forty-three engravings, including portraits and maps, which give it quite a pictorial appearance. The passages from the Vulgate, which had been introduced into Cranmer’s Psalms, are omitted in this edition. This continued to be the version authorised to be read in the parish churches for forty-three years; but in private use it never displaced the Geneva version. Though the Bishops’ Bible was the avowed basis of our authorised version, this latter was executed upon wholly different principles, and is very different in its general character from it. To this Bible was prefixed, among other things, the sum of Scriptures, tables of genealogy, and a preface written by Parker. In 1585, under Archbishop Whitgift, the seventeen readings from the Latin Vulgate were re-introduced, so as to harmonize with the Psalms in the Prayer Book. The edition of 1572 contains a double version of the Psalms, that of Cranmer’s and that of the Bishops’. The edition of 1585 has the Psalms according to Cranmer’s Bible. The following is a specimen of this version—Mat. iii. 17:—

“And they shall be to me, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day, wherein I shall do judgment; a flocke: and I will spare them as a man spareth his own sonne which serueth him.”

In the year 1582, was published the Anglo-Rhemish version of the new Testament. The circumstances which led to the execution of this version, are to be found in the history of the expulsion of Romanism from this country, in the reign of Elizabeth. The versions of the new Testament previously executed, from that of Tyndale to the Bishops’ Bible inclusively—the English text of Coverdale’s Dougallt new Testament excepted—had been made from the original Greek; but the Rhemish translators took for their basis the Latin Vulgate. One of the principal objects which the Rhemish translators had in view, was evidently to circulate their doctrinal and controversial notes, together with the Scriptures, translated by them. Though the translators desired anything rather than to give the rendering of the text simply and fairly, few passages show a really dishonest perversion, yet very many passages exhibit a desire of expressing the sense obscurely, or at least in such a way that a common reader may find not a little difficulty in gathering from the words a definite meaning. However, if we take the whole version, we shall find a very large portion well translated, and truly exhibiting the sense of the Latin Vulgate such as they had it. Though the council of Trent had defined the Latin Vulgate to be the "authentic" version, as yet, when the Rheinish version was printed, there had been no decision as to what copy was to be regarded as such. The Rheinish translators, as may be supposed, do not exactly agree with either the Sixtine published in 1590, or the Clementine edition published in 1592. Sometimes they have the reading adopted afterwards by the one, sometimes that which is found in the other. This may be said to be a matter of comparatively small importance, so long as they used the best readings which were within their reach, in the absence of an authentic edition of the Latin Vulgate. The following is a specimen of this version—Heb. xi. 4:—
INTRODUCTION.

"By faith Abel offered a greater host to God than Cain: by which he obtained testimony that he was just, God giving testimonies to his faith, and by it, he being dead yet speaketh."

The Rheinish translation of the Old Testament was published at Douay, in two volumes, in the years 1609 and 1610. The editors of this part of the version speak of it as having been executed many years before, but that the poor estate of the English Romanists, in their banishment, hindered its publication. They say, that they have revised the version according to the Clementine edition of the Vulgate, that thus it might be fully in accordance with "the authentic Latin." The following is a specimen of this version—Gen. xlix. 18:—

"The scepter shall not be taken away from Judah, and a ruler out of his thigh, till he comes that is to be sent, and the same shall be the expectation of the gentiles."

In the modern editions of the Douay Bible and the Rheinish Testament, many changes have been introduced, some of which approximate to the authorised version, while others are not improvements.

It is really marvellous to think how editions of the Scriptures were multiplied after the time of Tyndale, notwithstanding the severity of occasional persecutions. Besides about fourteen editions issued in Tyndale's life-time, eight or nine were issued in the year of his death. From the death of Tyndale to the close of Mary's reign, 1558, no fewer than fifty editions of the New Testament, and twenty-six of the entire Bible were printed, and from 1558 to 1611, there were issued more than fifty editions of the new Testament, and about one hundred and twenty of the Bible, besides separate books. Of this number, twenty-one editions of the new Testament and sixty-four of the Bible were of the Genevan translation. Still the work of Tyndale forms substantially the basis of every revision, not excepting the translation now in common use, though with very numerous amendments.

SECTION VII.

The Authorised Version was undertaken at the command of king James I., in consequence of several objections having been made by the Puritans to the Bishops' translation, at the second day's sitting of the conference held at the palace of Hampton Court, January 16th, 1603-4. The method then proposed by the king for the accomplishment of the new translation was thus:—That the version should be made by some of the most learned men in both the Universities; that it then should be reviewed by certain of the Bishops; that it should then be laid before the Privy Council; and last of all be ratified by Royal authority. Accordingly fifty-four men, pre-eminent ly distinguished for piety and learning, were appointed to execute this great work. However, the list of persons actually employed in the translation contains only forty-seven names. Though several of the persons thus appointed were made bishops before the work was completed, yet as none of them were so at the time of the appointment, it would appear that the number needed to make up the deficiency is to be found in the fact of certain bishops having been especially named as having the work in some manner under their control. This view is not improbable when it is known that Bancroft, archbishop of Canterbury, is said to have made some alterations in the version; and Bilson, bishop of Winchester, was one of those who gave the works its final revision. Some of the translators were appointed by the University of Cambridge, some by that of Oxford, while several who met at Westminster may have been appointed directly by the king. The translators were severally divided into six companies, two of which met at each of these three places. The following instructions were drawn up for their proceedings:

1. "The ordinary Bible read in the church, commonly called the Bishops' Bible, to be followed, and as little altered as the original will permit. 2. The names of the prophets and the holy writers, with the other names in the text, to be retained as near as may be, according as they are vulgarly used. 3. The old ecclesiastical words to be kept, as the word church not to be translated congregation. 4. When any word hath divers significations, that to be kept which hath been most commonly used by the most eminent Fathers, being agreeable to the propriety of the place and the analogy of faith. 5. The division of the chapters to be altered either not at all, or as little as may be, if necessity so require. 6. No marginal notes at all to be affixed, but only for the explanation of the Hebrew or Greek words, which cannot, without some circumlocution, so briefly and fitly be expressed in the text. 7. Such quotations of places to be marginally set down, as shall serve for the full references of one Scripture to another."

The preceding seven rules are the general directions for proceeding in the work; the rest contain the precise directions for its execution:

8. "Every particular man of each company to take the same chapter or chapters; and having translated or amended them severally by himself, where he think good, all to meet together, to confer what they have done, and agree for their part what shall stand. 9. As any one company has despatched any one book in this manner, they shall send it to the rest, to be considered of seriously and judiciously; for his majesty is very careful in this point. 10. If any company, upon the review of the book so sent, shall doubt or differ upon any places, or shall amend them otherwise, or shall send their reasons; to which if they consent not, the difference to be compounded at the general meeting, which is to be of the chief persons of each company, as the end of the work. 11. When any place of special obscurity is doubted of, letters to be directed by authority, to send to any learned in the land for his judgment in such a place. 12. Letters to be sent from every bishop to the rest of his clergy, admonishing them of this translation in hand, and to move and charge as many as, being skillful in the tongues, have taken pains in that kind, to send their particular observations to the company, either at Westminster, Cambridge, or Oxford, according as it was directed before in the king's letter to the archbishop. 13. The directors in each company to be the deans of Westminster and Chester for Westminster, and the king's professors in Hebrew and Greek in the two Universities. 14. Those translations to be used, when they agree better with the text than the Bishops' Bible, viz. Tyndale's, Coverdale's, Matthew's, Whitby, church's, Geneva."

To these the following rule was added:

"Besides the said directors before mentioned, three or four of the most ancient and grave divines in either of the Universities, not employed in translating, to be assigned by the Vice-Chancellor, upon conference with the rest of the heads, to be overseers of the translation, as well Hebrew as Greek, for the better observation of the 4th rule above specified."

According to these regulations, each book passed the scrutiny of all the translators successively. In the first instance, each individual translated every book which was allotted to his division. Secondly, the readings to be adopted were agreed upon by the whole of that company assembled together, at which meeting each translator must have been solely occupied by his own version. The book thus finished, was sent to each of the other companies to be again examined; and at these meetings it probably was, as Selden informs us, that "one read the translation, the rest holding in their hands some Bible, either of the learned tongues, or French, Spanish, Italian, etc.; if they found any fault, they spoke; if not, he read on." In this way every precaution was taken to secure a faithful translation, as the whole Bible underwent at least six different revisions by the most learned men in the kingdom. The translation was commenced in the spring of 1607, and occupied about three years, and the revision of it occupied about three quarters of a year more. It was printed in Gothic letter, and first published in folio in 1611, with the title: "The Holy Bible Conteyning the Old Testament, and the New: Newly translated out of the original Tongues: And with the former translations diligently compared and revised by his Majesties speciall Commandement. Appointed to be read in Churches."

The expense of this translation appears not to have been borne by the king, nor by any Government Commandement; chiefly, if not entirely, by Mr. Parker, citizen and stationer, of London, who
INTRODUCTION.

This translation has subsequently been frequently revised with great care, and many marginal additions made, but no changes attempted in the body of the work, any further than correcting the orthography, and examining and correcting the italics. The Bible printed at Cambridge, by Buck and Daniel, in 1688, is said to have been carefully revised, chiefly in additions to the italics, by royal command, by Dr. Ward, Dr. Good, Mr. Boys, Mr. Mede, and other eminent scholars. In 1656–7, Walton and other learned divines were appointed to examine this translation, with reference to a new revision; but through the political changes of the times the business proved abortive. In 1688, the translation was again corrected, and many references to parallel texts were added by Dr. Scattergood. In 1701, a very fine edition was published under the direction of Dr. Tenison, archbishop of Canterbury, with chronological dates, tables of weights and measures, etc., by Bishop Lloyd. But the most complete revision was made by Dr. Blaney, under the direction of the Vice-Chancellor and delegates of the Clarendon Press, at Oxford. In this edition, which was printed in 1769, the punctuation, italics, proper names, headings, and running titles were corrected; some material errors in the chronology were rectified; and 30,496 new—but not always real—references were inserted in the margin. This is generally considered the standard edition of the Authorised Version. But the latest revision, made in 1851, by the committee of the American Bible Society, is the result of a careful collation of the Oxford, Cambridge, London, and Edinburgh editions; in which the italics, the capitals, the punctuation, and the headings of the chapters are corrected. In some few instances, errors of translation, and even obsolete words, are corrected.

It has often been affirmed that "king James's Bible is in no part a new translation taken directly from the orignals, but that it is merely a revision of the earlier English versions, and compared with various Continental translations." These remarks are not strictly correct. The translators themselves give us a correct view of the nature of their work. In their dedication to King James, they observe:—"For when your Highness had once out of deep judgment apprehended how convenient it was, that out of the Original Sacred Tongues, together with comparing the labours, both in our own, and other foreign languages, of many worthy men who went before us, there should be one more exact translation of the Holy Scriptures into the English tongue." And again, in their noble Preface, drawn up by Dr. Miles Smith, himself one of the translators, they say, "If you ask what they had before them; truly it was the Hebrew text of the Old Testament, the Greek of the new. These are the two golden pipes, or rather conduits, where through the olive branches empty themselves into the gold. . . . If truth be to be tried by these tongues, then whence should a translation be made, but out of them? These tongues therefore (the Scriptures, we say, in those tongues) we set before us to translate, being the tongues wherein God was pleased to speak to His Church by His Prophets and Apostles. . . . Neither, to be short, were we the first that fell in hand with translating the Scriptures into English, and consequently destitute of former helps. . . . Neither did we think much to consult the translators or commentatores, Chaldee, Hebrew, Syrian, Greek, or Latin; no, nor the Spanish, French, Italian, or Dutch; neither did we disdain to revise that which we had done, and to bring back to the anvil that which we had hammered; but having and using as great helps as were needful, and fearing no reproach for slowness, nor coveting praise for expedition, we have at length through the good hand of the Lord upon us, brought the work to that pass that you see." By the unanimous voice of the most competent judges, the authorised English version of the Bible is ranked among the very best translations of this or any other book in the world. In point of fidelity, perspicacity, simplicity, energy, and dignity, it doubtless stands unrivalled. It cannot, indeed, be considered immaculate; yet, notwithstanding our vastly extended critical apparatus, it may be doubted whether, taken as a whole, it could be surpassed by any translation which should now be attempted. Indeed, our persuasion is, that no recent translation of even any one hook of the Scriptures is equal, in all points, to the general correctness and fine heart speaking Saxon.
INTRODUCTION.

Four good old English Bible. One of the most distinguished biblical scholars of our times, the late Rev. Professor M. Stuart, when contrasting the English version with the Latin Vulgate, says—"Ours is, on the whole, a most noble production for the time in which it was made. The divines of that day were very different Hebrew scholars from what most of their successors have been, in England or Scotland." Undoubtedly the translators had embarrassments thrown in their way, by the arbitrary restrictions, growing out of the prejudice, the pedantry, or the caprice of the monarch by whom they were employed. At the same time, they frequently exhibit in their noble work a want of uniformity in the mode of rendering, both in regard to single words and to phrases. This, we admitted, was in some degree to be expected, partly from the multitude of the work itself, and partly from the number of persons employed in it; nor should we, perhaps, distress from what the translators have said in justification of their not trying themselves down to an absolute "identity of phrasing." For, as they remark, it would perhaps "savoir more of curiosity than wisdom, that translators should feel bound in every case to render, for example, the same Hebrew or Greek words, by purpose, never by intent; always by time, never by suppose; always by journeying, never by travelling; always by pass, never by ache; always by joy, never by gladness, etc." Yet it is obvious that a more scrupulous exactness may justly be required in a translation of the Scriptures than in any other translation; for, as Professor Blush has shown, in some of the following instances, our translators have varied the terms unnecessarily, so as to deprive the reader of the signal advantages to be gained from comparing terms and phrases strictly parallel:

1.—HEBREW WORDS.

Rendered

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Hebrew</th>
<th>English</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>ḥešōl</td>
<td>hole, Psalm ix. 17.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ḥhōq</td>
<td>decree, Job xxviii. 35.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ḥālōm</td>
<td>observance, Isa. xxxiv. 8.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ḥērōl</td>
<td>hand, Psalm cxiii. 7.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ḥōrōl</td>
<td>ordinance, Isa. xxxiv. 8.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ḥērōm</td>
<td>hand, Psalm cxiii. 7.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ḥōrōm</td>
<td>ordinance, Isa. xxxiv. 8.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ḥēmōn</td>
<td>habitation, Jer. xxxii. 18.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ḥōmōn</td>
<td>resident, Deut. xxxiii. 27.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ḥōmōn</td>
<td>hemlock, Hosea x. 4.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ḥōrōn</td>
<td>owl, Job xxxii. 19.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

2.—GREEK WORDS.

Rendered

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Greek</th>
<th>English</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>πατρία</td>
<td>family, Eph. iii. 15.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>κοινωνία</td>
<td>fellowship, Luke ii. 4.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>παράκλησις</td>
<td>consolation, 2 Cor. i. 5.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>χαιρέτις</td>
<td>a servant of the feast, John iv. 9.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>συμφωνία</td>
<td>accord, John xiv. 27.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>συμφωνία</td>
<td>accord, John xiv. 27.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Differences, 1 Cor. xiii. 6.
INTRODUCTION.

[Text continues with various words and phrases, likely discussing religious or historical concepts.]
INTRODUCTION.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Matrix</th>
<th>Molech</th>
<th>Nophsheth</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Modified</td>
<td>softened</td>
<td>repshen</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Occurrent</td>
<td>incident</td>
<td>Philistines</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Omnipotent</td>
<td>almighty</td>
<td>Philistim</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Partition</td>
<td>division</td>
<td>Phut</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Predestinate</td>
<td>fore-determined</td>
<td>Ramases</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Propositor</td>
<td>forrester</td>
<td>Rachel</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Proscribe</td>
<td>convert</td>
<td>Rahel</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Quarterion</td>
<td>party of four soldiers</td>
<td>Repham</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Remission</td>
<td>forgiveness</td>
<td>Giants</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Name</td>
<td>writer</td>
<td>Sala</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Synagogue</td>
<td>assembly</td>
<td>Saul</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Territorial</td>
<td>earthly</td>
<td>Shaul</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tetrarch</td>
<td>Roman governor</td>
<td>Seth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vocation</td>
<td>calling</td>
<td>Sheth</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The careful reader of the Scriptures must have remarked, that the name of the same person or place is often unhappily expressed differently in different places. We subjoin from the Peshittu some proper names which are strangely varied in the other books; first, twenty-two names expressed differently in the Hebrew text itself, and seventeen of them in our English translation; and then twenty-eight names expressed uniformly in the Hebrew, yet differently in the English:—

Same Names differing in the Hebrew.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>English</th>
<th>Hebrew</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Alvah</td>
<td>Allah</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alvan</td>
<td>Addar</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ant</td>
<td>Addin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Deuel</td>
<td>Reuel</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dodanim</td>
<td>Rotanim</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ezbon</td>
<td>Omri</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gershom</td>
<td>Gershon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hashib</td>
<td>Joshun</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Happin</td>
<td>Hopham</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hasshim</td>
<td>Shasham</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jachin</td>
<td>Jethro</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jemuel</td>
<td>Jethro</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jethro</td>
<td>Jashub</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Job</td>
<td>Jael</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ohel</td>
<td>Oseba</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oseba</td>
<td>Joshua</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pau</td>
<td>Pai</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Peniel</td>
<td>Penelu</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rehapim</td>
<td>Diphath</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shephi</td>
<td>Shephu</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Zephil</td>
<td>Zephi</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Names same in Hebrew yet different in English.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Ashdoth-Pisgah</th>
<th>Springs of Pisgah</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Asmuh</td>
<td>Asur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bene-Jaakan</td>
<td>Children of Jaakan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Caunim</td>
<td>Canaan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Enosh</td>
<td>Enoch</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gaza</td>
<td>Azaz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gergizite</td>
<td>Girgasite</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jeshar</td>
<td>Jeshur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Josed</td>
<td>Jazer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jebeshana</td>
<td>Joshua</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mahel</td>
<td>Mahli</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mathuselah</td>
<td>Mathusays</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Molech</td>
<td>Molech</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Naphtali</td>
<td>Naphtali</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Philistim</td>
<td>Philistim</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Phut</td>
<td>Put</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ramases</td>
<td>Ramases</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rachel</td>
<td>Rahel</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rephaem</td>
<td>Giants</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shalas</td>
<td>Sala</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saul</td>
<td>Shaul</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Seth</td>
<td>Sheth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Temanit</td>
<td>Temanites</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tzor</td>
<td>Tyre</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Zared</td>
<td>Zered</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Zebulim</td>
<td>Zebulim</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Nothing can be more clear than that these fifty proper names should be expressed with the very same letters, in the places where the original words are properly the same, and places should be distinguished accurately, and defined with exact uniformity. And no true critic, who feels that names of persons and places should be defined with exact uniformity, will think lightly of this advice of Origen, "No person who deserves thoroughly to understand the sacred writings, should undervalue a scrupulous attention to the proper names."

Our translators have also, in many instances, given from the Greek, Hebrew names with Greek forms or terminations; where, for the sake of uniformity, the Hebrew terminations should have been restored; as many readers may be ignorant that some of the persons spoken of by one name in the new Testament are the same with those spoken of by another in the old Testament:—

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Hebrew</th>
<th>Greek</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Agar</td>
<td>Hazar</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Azoth</td>
<td>Charran</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cis</td>
<td>Elias</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eileas</td>
<td>Eileus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Esmas</td>
<td>Esmas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jerem</td>
<td>Jerem</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jerania</td>
<td>Jerem</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jonas</td>
<td>Jonas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Joram</td>
<td>Joram</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Josephat</td>
<td>Josephat</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Judas</td>
<td>Judas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Messilah</td>
<td>Messilah</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Noe</td>
<td>Noe</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cass</td>
<td>Cass</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Phalec</td>
<td>Phalec</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reboaem</td>
<td>Reboaem</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sem</td>
<td>Sem</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Urrah</td>
<td>Urrah</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Zacharias</td>
<td>Zacharias</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Where names end in 'ah, it is peculiarly wrong thus to transform them, because in nearly every case those names are compounded with 'ah, or Jehovah; as are those that end in El with Elohim—God. Upon the same principles of uniformity, the words, Thomas Didymus, Lucas, Marcus, and Timotheus, would tend more to the identifying of the persons, if they were translated Thomas the Twin, Mark, Luke, and Timothy.

Byro-Chaldaic Words.
Abba. Ephphatha.
Aceldama. Gabbatha.
Armageddon. Golgotha.
Bar-abbas. Mammon.
Boozzebub. Maranatha.
Bethesda. Rabbi.
Bonomerqu. Rabboni.
Cephas. Raca.
Coban. Tabitha.
Elia. Eliol, lamis sac-bachtan.

The translators of the authorised version, not being able in several cases to determine which of two meanings bore by a word, or which of two words found in different copies, should be admitted into the text, adopted the measure of receiving both, placing one in the margin and the other in the text, thus leaving the reader at liberty to adopt either, both of which in their apprehension stood nearly on the same authority. On this very account the marginal readings are essential to the integrity of the version itself, and they are of so much importance as to be, in many instances, preferable to the textual readings themselves. On this ground, the authorised English version ought never to be printed without the marginal readings. It has been said that at the time when our present version was made, Mr. Hugh Broughton, a man of singular eminence as a scholar, but not employed in this translation, communicated many interpretations to the translators, of which he afterwards complained, they 'thrust into the margin.' It has thus been supposed that he was the author of a part of the marginal readings; but of this we have no further evidence. The correct account of the marginal readings is found in the fact, that the king enjoined the editors to distinguish, by a different character, those words that were to be added to the text, to make a complete sense. And, when the Hebrew or the Greek had two senses, one of them should be inserted in the text, and the other in the margin. The king recommended also to put in the margin the most difficult Hebrew and Greek idioms.

It has sometimes been objected to our received version that it is encumbered with a load of awkward and useless italics, or supplementary words. Words and phrases printed in this character, it is well known, are introduced for the purpose of making out a complete sense in our language where the expression in the original is elliptical, or where the idioms of the two languages are so different that a literal translation would leave the writer's meaning obscure and unintelligible. In some cases, indeed, the elliptical form of the original would not be attended with any great uncertainty as to the writer's meaning; and yet as different modes of supplying the ellipsis, giving different shades of meaning, may be adopted, it seems desirable, even in such cases, that the words actually supplied should be designated by some mark. In the edition of 1611, the principle of uniformity, in the use of supplementary words, was neglected either by the translators or the publishers. But in 1688, or thereabouts, the translation was subjected to a most rigid collation with the original, with a special view to correct errors of this description, and to carry out, in its minutest details, the plan of the translators. The result was, the italicizing process was introduced in as many as from eight to ten thousand instances over and above those which had originated with the translators; and the form in which the current editions of the English Bible have come down to us is the fruit of this ancient thorough-going revision. Yet, in some few cases, it must, perhaps, be admitted that the equivocal use of supplementary words tends in some degree to obscure the sense. As in Phil. ii. 10:—

"That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth.""

In this passage it will be evident that persons, i.e. intelligent beings are intended; and not things. In 1 John ii. 22, we have no fewer than ten supplementary words.

"[But] he that acknowledgeth the Son hath the Father also."

The translators considered these words to be of doubtful authority, as did some of the earlier editors; but several recent critical editors have rightly restored them to the text without any mark of doubtfullness.

It is well known that in many cases
INTRODUCTION.

the pointing is not the least judicious. Perhaps uniformity and accuracy, in this respect, was scarcely to be expected in so great a work, considering the time and circumstances in which the translation was made. So Pa. cx. 3, would read more intelligibly if it was pointed thus:

"Thy people are willing—in the day of Thy power—in the beauties of holiness; from the womb of the morning Thou hast the dew of Thy youth."

The literal rendering of Ex. xxxii. 32, is,

"And there were also two other malefactors led with him to be put to death.” (Luke xxii. 33.)

Instead of "two other malefactors," the ordinary editions now read, "two other, malefactors;" whereas they ought to read," two others, malefactors," as in the editions authorized in Scotland.

On the whole, however, if we except the several faults adverted to, the abatements to be made from the general excellence of the established version are extremely trivial; and whatever defects may be pointed out, they are chargeable rather upon the age and the circumstances in which it was made than upon the translators themselves. It is, indeed, possible that occasional instances of wrong or inadequate rendering may be specified, that grammatical propriety may be sometimes slightly violated,—that Greek and Hebrew idioms may not always be too happily transfused into English,—that modes of expression lacking in delicacy, or dignity, or perspicuity, may here and there occur, but they are few and far between, and a thousand-fold outweighed by the evident study of rigid fidelity everywhere exhibited. While the changes effected in the lapse of two or three centuries, in our habits of thought and modes of expression, do doubtless render certain emendations intrinsically a desideratum, yet when it comes to the question of actually innovating upon the established text, under whatever plea, we at once plant ourselves on the ground of strict adherence to its every letter. The advantages of retaining incorrupt a standard harmoniously accepted by so large a portion of Christendom are so signal, great, and the evils which would inevitably result from its allowed invasion so manifold and vast, that we trust the day is far, far distant, when the first step shall be taken towards supplanting this time-hallowed version in the estimation of the millions by whom it is now so affectionately cherished. Incomparably better will it be that any little improvements in the way of explication, modernized diction, euphemism, etc., should be suggested in critical or popular commentaries, in biblical introductions, in sermons, in fact, in every way, rather than in the form of direct alterations of a text, as to which our instinctive prayer is, "Let it stand for ever."

The present numeral division of the Scriptures into chapters and verses, is, in some respects, of comparatively recent origin. The Pentateuch was divided by the Jews, at an early period, into fifty-four parashioth—sections; one of which was read in the synagogue every sabbath day. (Acts xiii. 21.) These sections were subdivided, probably by the Masoretes, into 669 sidereos or orders. After the reading of the law, it was also customary, from an early period, to read a passage from the prophets, and with that to dissolve the assembly. Such passages were called haphtaroth—dismissions; and appear to have been selected according to the choice of any reader. (Acts xiii. 15; xxvii. 43; Luke iv. 16.) The divisions or sections found in the Greek and Latin manuscripts are different from those of the Hebrew books; they are of unequal and arbitrary length, and very different from the chapters in our printed Bibles. So also, the books of the new Testament were divided, at an early period, into certain portions, which appear under various names. The division into church lessons, read in the assemblies like the sections of the law and the prophets, was the most ancient. Subsequently the new Testament was divided into two kinds of sections, called titles and chapters. The titles were portions of the Gospels, with summaries placed at the top or bottom of the page. The chapters were divisions, with numerical notations, chiefly adapted to the Gospel harmony of Ammonius. Other sectional divisions are occasionally seen in manuscripts, which appear to have varied at different times, and in different churches, accordingly as festival days were multiplied.
INTRODUCTION.

The numeral division of the old and new Testaments into modern chapters is, by some, ascribed to the schoolmen, who, with Cardinal Hugh of St. Cher, were the authors of the Concordance for the Latin Vulgate, about A.D. 1240. Others ascribe these divisions to Stephen Langton, Archbishop of Canterbury, who died A.D. 1228. Whoever was the author, from about this period, the division of the several books into chapters was gradually adopted in the Latin and other versions; and, finally, in the Hebrew, with a few variations; and also in the Greek text. The several Psalms were not included in this division, inasmuch as we have them as they were originally composed and collected.

The present numeral division of the Scriptures into verses is of still more recent origin than the chapters. In the Bible ascribed to Cardinal Hugh, the subordinate divisions were not indicated by numerals, but by the capital letters A. B. C. etc., placed at certain distances from each other in the margin. The Hebrew manuscripts contain pesukim or versicular divisions, each of which is terminated by the soph pasuk (إسرائيل) = end of the verse. This versicular division was probably made by the Masoretes of Tiberias, about A.D. 500. In the Masora, the number of verses indicated by the siluk and the soph pasuk is carefully given at the end of each book of the Bible; but in the margin only every fifth verse is marked by a Hebrew letter. The Masoretic verses, thus divided by the soph pasuk, are the same as our present verses with but few exceptions, the principal of which is that, in the Hebrew, the titles of the Psalms are marked among the verses. About A.D. 1440, Rabbi Isaac Nathan, in his Concordance, marked the numbers of the chapters according to the Latin version; he also marked the number of each of the Masoretic verses as they exist in the Hebrew Bible. Paginarius, in his translation of the whole Bible from the Hebrew and Greek into Latin, 1528, appears to have been the first who marked each verse in the margin with an Arabic numeral. In the old Testament his verses are the Masoretic, the same, as we have seen, with those now in use. The Greek manuscripts of the new Testament usually contain a division into short sentences, sometimes called stichoi = verses. They are frequently double or treble the length of our ordinary verses; but sometimes they are identical with them. Paginarius, in his new Testament, adopted this ancient versicular division, with some alterations, and numbered the verses as he had done in the old Testament. His verses are frequently three times the length of our present verses. Henry Stephens, in his edition of the Latin Vulgate, 1555, adopted the system of Paginarius for the old Testament. But, in his Greek and Latin new Testament, 1551, and also in the Testament accompanying the Bible of 1555, he introduced a different division, partly from the manuscripts, and partly his own invention. This division, thus breaking up the text into fragments, and frequently without reference to the sense, appears to have been made to adapt the new Testament to his Greek Concordance. He is said to have executed it "while riding on horseback"—undoubtedly in haste. From this period, this division, which is precisely the same as now in use, became general. In 1557, it was adopted in the English new Testament printed at Geneva. As the breaking the sacred text into small fragments interferes, occasionally, with the sense, it would be much better if the number of the verses were printed in the margin.

Improper divisions of chapters.

Gen. ii. 1-3, improperly separate chap. 1.
Josh. vii. 1-6 read from chap. 6.
Rom. v. 1 .......................... chap. 4.
Rom. xiv. 1-13 .......................... chap. 7.
1 Cor. iv. 21 .......................... chap. 6.
1 Cor. vi. 1 .......................... chap. 10.
2 Cor. iv. 1-6 .......................... chap. 3.
2 Cor. vi. 1 .......................... chap. 5.
2 Cor. vii. 1 .......................... chap. 7.
Eph. v. 1-2 .......................... chap. 4.
Col. iii. 1 .......................... chap. 2.
Isaiah iii. 1, etc., ought to begin chapter iii.
Job ii. 38, etc., ought to begin a new section or chapter.
Nahum, i. 16, ought to begin chapter ii.
Job xii. 1-14, ought to come in after chapter xiii. 6.
Micah v. 1, belongs to chapter iv.; ver. 2 properly begins the chapter.
AARON = mosestiswer. The son of Amram and Jochebed, of the tribe of Levi. He was born about B.C. 1674, and was three years older than his brother Moses. (Ex. vi. 20; vii. 7.) Aaron was noted for his eloquence, and was appointed by Jehovah the interpreter for Moses in the court of Pharaoh, the Egyptian king. (Ex. iv. 14—16.) He was the assistant of Moses in conducting the Hebrews out of Egypt, and, in accordance with the instructions contained in the revelations regarding the ecclesiastical establishment, he was consecrated the first high priest of the Hebrew nation. (Ex. vii. 1—10; xxviii. 1—48; Lev. viii. 1—36.) He was a man of great meekness; but, through want of firmness, he sometimes fell into grievous sins. While Moses was absent in the Mount receiving the law, at the instigation of the people, Aaron made the calf-idol, in imitation of the Egyptian Moevis. (Ex. xxxii. 1—35; Ps. cv. 19, 28.) Aaron joined Miriam in sedition against Moses; (Num. xii. 8—12;) and, with Moses, neglected to acknowledge the power of God at Kadesh. For this he was denied the privilege of entering the promised land. (Num. xx. 12—24.) While the Hebrews encamped at Moab, in the fortieth year after leaving Egypt, Aaron ascended Mount Hor and died, at the age of one hundred and twenty-three years. (Num. xx. 25—29; Deut. x. 6.) The “Aaronites” were the descendants of Aaron, who served as priests at the sanctuary; while the other families of the tribe of Levi performed those religious duties which were of an inferior kind. (Num. iv. 15, 16, 24; 1 Chron. x. 24, 27; xxvii. 17.)

AB = fuit. The Chaldee name of the fifth month of the ancient Hebrew year. It commenced with the first new moon of our August, and consisted of thirty days. It is called “the fifth month;” also “the time of the first ripe grapes.” (Numbers xxxiii. 38; xiii. 26.)—See Month.

ABADDON = destruction. The Hebrew name of the Angel of the Abyss, explained by the Greek term Apollyon = destroyer, the destroying angel. (Rev. ix. 11.)

ABAGTHA = given by fortune. An officer in the court of Ahaseurus, the Persian. (Esth. i. 10.)

ABANA = stony. A stream which rises high up in the eastern declivity of Anti-Lebanon, and, after abundantly watering the great plain, passes through Damascus. In 2 Kings v. 12. Naaman, the Syrian, says, “Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel?” In the Hebrew marginal reading, and in the English also, “Abana” is written “Amana;” and this is probably the correct form, as affording a good etymology—the perennial, in contrast with such streams, which in summer are clean dried up. (Isa. xxxiii. 16; compare Jer. xv. 18.) The Amana is now generally identified with the classical Chrysorrhoea = the golden river, the modern Barada = the cold, whose waters are distributed over the beautiful and fertile plain of Damascus. A part of Anti-Lebanon, in contrast with Shemir and Hermon, is also called “Amasa;” (Sol. Song iv. 8,) corresponding to the portion of the mountain near where the Barada has its source, and taking its name apparently from the stream. The estimates the circumference of the South Lake at nearly twenty miles, and the East Lake at about twenty miles. From the fountain to the plain, the stream is upwards of twenty-two miles long, and the arable land watered by it along its banks averages at least half a mile in width. From Sabahiya to the lakes is about twenty miles, and there is an average width of fifteen miles of this watered by the Barada. Thus, according to Mr. Porter's estimate, the arable land watered by this river is about three thousand and eleven square miles, or nearly five times that watered by the Awaj, the ancient Pharpar. See Pharpar.

ABARIM = regio beyadon. The general name of a mountainous tract on the east of the Dead Sea. The mountains Poor, Pisghah, and Nebo were spurs or summits of the Abarim. (Num. xxvii. 12; xxviii. 47; Deut. xxxii. 49.) The name "Abarim," in Jer. xxxii. 20, rendered "passages," ought to have stood untranslated.

ABBA = father. A Syro-Chaldaic word of affection and confidence, much used by the Jews and the early Christians as an invocation in prayer to God. (Mark iv. 36; Rom. viii. 15; Gal. iv. 6.)

ABDA = servant. 1. The father of Adoniram. (1 Kings iv. 6; v. 14.) 2. A Levite; (Neh. xi. 17;) also called "Obadiah." (1 Chron. ix. 16.)

ABDEEL = servant of God. The father of Shelemiah. (Jer. xxxvi. 26.)

ABDI = servant of Jehovah. The name of two Levites. (1 Chron. vi. 44; 2 Chron. xxix. 12.) Also a son of Elam. (Ezra x. 26.)

ABDEEL = servant of God. A chief in Gad. (1 Chron. v. 19.)

ARDON = servitor. 1. A Levitical city in Asher. (Josh. xii. 30; 1 Chron. vi. 74.) Perhaps "Abdon" should be read in Josh. xiv. 28, instead of "Hebron." 2. The twelfth judge, or regent of the Hebrews; he judged them eight years, and died about 1156. (Judg. xii. 13-15.) He is called "Bidan" in 1 Sam. xii. 11. 3. Also two Benjaminites. (1 Chron. viii. 28, 30; ix. 36.)

4. —See ACHRON.
ABEDNEGO = servant, or worshipper of Mercury. The Chaldee name given to Azariah, one of Daniel's companions in the court of Babylon. (Dan. i. 7; ii. 49; iii. 19—30.)—See Nebu.

ABEL, or HEBEL = a breath, or transference. The second son of Adam, probably so called from the shortness of his life. Abel became a shepherd and offered sacrifice from his flock to God; at the same time Cain, his brother, offered of the fruit of the ground. God had respect unto Abel, and to his offering, but unto Cain and to his offering he had not respect; hence Cain, in anger, slew his brother. (Gen. iv. 1—14.) The sacrifice of Abel is the first on record, and was undoubtedly offered in accordance with some divine revelation, as much as it was offered in faith, which necessarily supposes that some declaration by way of promise had been made to the offerer; and it was prefigurative of the great sacrifice in the person of Christ, who was the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world.

In Hebrews xi. 4, the sacrifice of Abel is called "a more excellent sacrifice than Cain’s;" but the early English translations differ from this, and with more literal exactness, render "a more plenteous sacrifice," referring the idea in the text to quantity rather than to quality. So that, while Cain merely offered of the fruit of the ground an offering unto the Lord, by way of thanksgiving and homage, Abel did the same, and "much more;" he also brought the choicest and best of his flock as a sacrifice to God; thereby acknowledging himself a sinner, and recognizing the truth of the principle, "without the shedding of blood there is no remission." (Heb. ix. 22.) God testified of his Girra, and manifested his approbation probably by a visible token of fire from heaven, consuming the sacrifice upon the altar. (Gen. iv 4; Heb. xii. 4, compared with Lev. ix. 24; Judg. vii. 21; 1 Kings xviii. 38; 2 Chron. vii. 1.) By the phrase "the blood of Abel," (Heb. xii. 24.) the blood of Abel's sacrifice seems to be intended, as by it Abel found acceptance with God. But the blood of Christ, as being the one sacrifice for sin, speaketh better things, inasmuch as it is available to all who believe.

ABEL = a grassy place, pasture, meadow. Instead of "the great stone of Abel," in 1 Sam. vi. 18, we ought to read with the Septuagint, Syriac, and Chaldee versions, and some Hebrew manuscripts, "the great stone;" as in the margin and the 14th and 15th verses. Most likely this "great stone" was a boundary mark, or an ancient monument, in Bethshean, on the confines of Judah, Dan, and Philistia.

ABEL-BETH-MAACHAH = meadow of Beth-Maachah. A city in Naphtali, near to Beth-Maacha, and west of Dan and Zeesarea Philippi. (1 Kings xv. 30; 2 Kings xv. 39.) It was also called "Abel" (2 Sam. xx. 14;) and "Abel-Maim" = meadow fountain. (2 Chron. xvi. 4.) Dr. E. Smith describes the modern Abel as a considerable Christian village, lying on a distinctly marked Tell; and so celebrated for its wheat as to be called Abel of Samaria. It is situated on the west side of the valley and stream that descends from Meraj Ayun = meadow of fowls, towards the Huleh, or waters of Merom, and below the opening into the Merj.

ABEL-KERAMIM = meadow of vineyards. A village of the Ammonites. This name occurs in Judges xi. 25, where it is translated "the plain of the vineyards."

ABEL-MEHOLAH = meadow of dancing. A village of Issachar between Scythopolis and Neapolis. (Judg. vii. 22; 1 Kings iv. 12; xix. 16.)

ABEL-MIZRAIM = meadow, or perhaps, abounding of the Egyptians. The name of an area, or threshing-floor, between Jericho and the Jordan, formerly called the "threshing-floor of Aitad." (Gen. l. 10, 11.)

ABEL-SHITTIM = acacia meadows. A place in the plains of Moab, on the borders of Palestine; probably the same place which is elsewhere called "Shittim." (Num. xxxiv. 49; Josh. ii. 1.)
ABEZ — eliphaza, also ti'a. A city in Issachar. (Josh. xix. 30.)

ABI. — See ABIN.

ABIA. — See ABISAI.

ABIAH. — whose father is Jehovah. 1. The second son of Samuel. (1 Sam. viii. 2-5.) 2. A son of Sebeth. (1 Chron. vii. 8.) 3. The name of the wife of Hezron. (1 Chron. ii. 24.)

ABIAH, BON = father of strength — strong. One of David's distinguished officers. (2 Sam. xxiii. 31.) In 1 Chron. xi. 32, he is called "Abiel."

ABIASAPH = father of gathering. A Levite; (Ex. vi. 24;) in 1 Chron. vi. 37; ix. 19, he is called "Ebihasaph."

ABIAZAR = father of abundance. The son of Abimelech, the tenth high priest of the Hebrews, and the fourth in descent from Eli. When Dooq, at the command of king Saul, fell upon the priests of the Lord at Nob, and slew them, Abimelech was among the slain. His son, Abiaazar, escaped from the carnage, and taking with him some part of the priest's garments, and the sacred lot, fled to David, at Kadesh, in the wilderness, and told him what Saul had done. David received Abiaazar under his protection, and afterwards constituted him high-priest, in the room of his father. Saul, in the meantime, transferred the office of the high-priesthood unto Zadok, of the family of Elasar. Thus there were two high-priests among the Hebrews at the same time: — Abiaazar, of the house of Ithamar, in the party of David; and Zadok, of the house of Eleasar, in the party of Saul; and they appear to have been both continued in that office by David, after the death of Saul. (1 Sam. xxii. 20; 2 Sam. xv. 29.)

This double priesthood continued until the reign of Solomon, when Abiaazar attached himself to the party of Adonijah. Solomon, on becoming king, spared his life, but thrust him out of the priesthood, and conferred the office exclusively upon Zadok. (1 Kings ii. 27.) The race of Zadok alone exercised this ministry ever after, utterly excluding the family of Ithamar; and thus was fulfilled the prediction made to Eli, by the man of God, and by Samuel, the prophet. (1 Sam. ii. 31; iii. 11.) In 2 Sam. viii. 17, "Ahimelech, the son of Abiaazar," is evidently an error of the scribes, for "Abiathar, the son of Ahimelech." The error is ancient, as it occurs also in 1 Chron. xvii. 16; xxiv. 2, 31. Also, in 1 Sam. xxi. 6, we read that "Ahimelech, the high-priest," gave unto David the shewbread; while in Mark ii. 26, this is said to have been done in the days of "Abiathar, the high-priest." Abiathar was probably his father's deputy at the time of the occurrence; hence he is popularly called "the high-priest."

ABIB = one ear of grain, a young ear. The name of the first month in the ancient Hebrew year. (Ex. xii. 2; xiii. 4; xxi. 15; xxiv. 18.) It began with the first new moon in April, and consisted of thirty days. The name is derived from the corn and barley being in the ear, and ripe in Egypt, and Canaan, in this month. After the exil it was called Nisan = new-day. (Est. iii. 7; Neh. ii. 1.)

ABIDAH = father of knowledge. The son of Midian. (Gen. xxxvi. 4.)

ABIDAN = father of the judge. The son of Gideon. (Num. i. 11; ii. 22.)

1. ABIEL = father of strength — strong. The grandfather of king Saul. (1 Sam. ix. 1; xiv. 51.) In the genealogical table, in 1 Chron. vii. 35; ix. 39, Ner is said to have been the grandfather of Saul; but according to 1 Sam. xiv. 50, b1, he was his uncle. The true descent was as follows: —

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>ABEIL</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>KESE</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-----</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>SAUL</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

2. ABEIL. — See ABIAH, BON.

ABIEZER = father of help. 1. A descendant of Manasseh, who gave name to a powerful family, called "Abi-erites," whose residence appears to have been principally at Ephrah. (Josh. xvi. 2; Judg. vi. 11, 24, 34.) In Num. xxxvi. 80, he is called "Jesse," and the family, "Jesseites." Gideon was a descendant of this family, and he was the author of that proverbial expression, which was so admirably adapted to soothe the exasperated Ephraimites, "Is not the gleaning of the grapes of Ephraim, better than the vintage of Abishar?" (Judg. viii. 2); a metaphorical mode of commending the smallest action of one, as superior to the greatest of another; or of saying that the Ephraimites, by intercepting the enemy at the fords of the Jordan, and slaying the two princes of the Midianites, had achieved more in glory and importance than Gideon and his army.

3. One of David's distinguished officers. (2 Sam. xxii. 27; 1 Chron. xi. 26; xvii. 12.)

ABIGAIL.—See ABIGAIL.

ABIGAIL = whose father is exaltation. 1. The wife of Nabal, a rich man, whose possessions were in Carmel, in the mountains of Judah. When David, in his wanderings, in order to escape from the jealousy of Saul, took refuge in the wilderness, and the mountains, in the neighbourhood where Nabal's flocks were fed, he and his men afforded such complete protection to the property of Nabal, "so that nothing was missing, of all that pertained unto him." Hence, when Nabal held his annual sheep-shearing in Carmel, David felt himself entitled to share in the festival; and sent a respectful message, recounting his own services, and requesting a present. The request was not only refused, but an insulting answer was returned to David, treating him as a runaway servant of Saul. Such ingratitude irritated David exceedingly, and in his anger, he vowed that he would destroy Nabal and all his house before morning. From this act of vengeance he was dissuaded by Abigail, who having heard of the insulting message, came herself to bring him the present, and made him an apology. She managed the affair with so much wisdom and prudence, as to pacify David, and obtain his blessing. About ten days after her return, Nabal died; and as soon as the days of her mourning were ended, Abigail became David's wife. The issue of this marriage was a son called "Chiliab," in 2 Sam. iii. 3; but in 1 Chron. iii. 1, he is called "Daniel." (1 Sam. xxv. 2—42.)

2. The name of one of King David's sisters, and the wife of Ithra. (1 Chron. ii. 16.) In the margin of 2 Sam. xvii. 25, she is called "Abigail."

ABIHAIL = father of might, mighty.

1. The son of Huri. (1 Chron. v. 14.)
2. The father of Zuriel. (Num. iii. 35.)
3. The father of queen Esther, and brother of Mordecai. (Esth. ii. 15.)
4. The wife of Rehoboam, king of Judah; she is called "the daughter," properly the descendant, of Eliab, David's elder brother. (3 Chron. xi. 16.)
5. The wife of Abishur. (1 Chron. ii. 29.)

ABIHU = to whom God is father.

One of the sons of Aaron, who, together with his brothers, Nadab, Eleazar, and Ithamar, were set apart by God to the office of the priesthood. Soon after they entered upon their sacred duties, Nadab and Abihu were guilty of a violation of God's commands, respecting the manner of offering incense, and they were instantly consumed by fire from heaven. They used strange, or common fire, instead of the sacred fire which they were required to use from the altar of burnt offering. (Lev. x. 1.—2.) This awful example was intended as a caution to all the servants of God for ever, carefully to observe all the divine commands and ordinances; and, as the prohibition of wine and strong drink, especially when entering into the sanctuary, immediately follows, we may infer that Nadab and Abihu were intoxicated when they fell into this presumptuous sin.

ABIHUD = whose father is Judah.

A son of Bola. (1 Chron. viii. 3.)

ABIJAH = whose father is Jehovah.

1. The second king of Judah. He was the son of Rehoboam, and of Maachah, the daughter of Uriel, grand-daughter of Abaalom. (1 Kings xv. 2; 2 Chron. xi. 21; xiii. 2.) He succeeded his father, 30 years; and reigned only three years. He was not a good king; however, he did not forsake the worship of Jehovah. With true courage, resulting from the principles of the theocracy, he resolved with 400,000 men, to commence a war with Jeroboam, king of Israel, whose forces amounted to double that number. He gained an important victory, and 500,000 of the Israelish army were left dead on the field. (2 Chron. xiii. 3, 17.) In numbers so large, there may be some error of the transcribers, probably a cipher too much in each number. Several copies of the Vulgate state Abijah’s army at 40,000; Jeroboam’s at 80,000; and the slain at 50,000. Under Abijah the kingdom of Judah gained the ascendancy, and made constant progress in power and importance. In 1 Kings, xiv. 31; xv. 1—8, Abijah is written “Abijam;” father of the sea, i.e., seaman. And in 1 Kings, xv. 6, instead of “Rehoboam,” we ought to read Abijam. In Matt. 1:7, he is called “Abia.” 2. The son of Jeroboam, the first king of Israel, who died in childhood. He was the only person of the house of Jeroboam, who, in the midst of all the idolatry and wickedness of the times, had the fear of the Lord in his heart. He appears to have been the hope of the nation, and to have been universally beloved. He was the only one of his father’s house, who came to a peaceful end. (1 Kings xiv. 1—18.) 3. A priest of the posterity of Aaron. He was the principal of the eighth class, or course, in David’s division of the priests. (1 Chron. xxiv. 10.) In Luke i. 5, he is called “Abia.” His descendants returned from the exile. (Neh. x. 7; xii. 4, 17.) 4. The name of the mother of king Hezekiah; she was the wife of Abaz, and the daughter of Zachariah. (2 Chron. xxix. 1.) In 2 Kings, xviii. 2, she is called “Abi” = father.

ABIMELECH = father of might. A descendant of Joktan, probably the founder of an Arabian tribe, called Maed or Mask, in the vicinity of the modern Mecca, which Strabo calls Mseuri. (Gen. x. 28; 1 Chron. i. 22.)

ABINAIEL = father of shephaim. A small but fertile district of Syria, which included the eastern declivities of Hermon and Anti-Lebanon, and the successive lower ridges, with the intervening open tracts or terraces which front the eastern plains. It derived its name from its chief city, Abila = a grassy place, secu-present of a thousand pieces of silver, as "a covering of the eyes" for Sarah; that is, as an aching present, and to be a testimony of her innocence in the eyes of all. (Gen. xx. 1-18.) 2. Another king of Gerar, probably son of the former, who rebuked Isaac for his dissimulation, in calling his wife his sister, and afterwards made a league with him at Beersheba. (Gen. xxvi. 5-8.) 3. The same given in the title of Ps. xxxiv. to Achish, king of Gath. 4. A son of Gideon, by his concubine, who after the death of his father, persuaded the men of Shechem to make him king. He slew his father's seventy sons on one stone, leaving only Jotham, the youngest alive, who hid himself. Three years afterwards, the men of Shechem rose against Abimelech, led as a chief, named Gaal, the son of Ebed; he defeated them, and destroyed their city, and sowed it with salt. While attacking Thebes, he was mortally wounded by a piece of a millstone thrown upon his head by a woman from the top of the tower. That it might not be said, "a woman slew him," he called to his armour-bearer to thrust him through with his sword, and thus he died. Abimelech reigned over part of the tribes of Israel three years, and in chronology, he ranks as the sixth judge, or regent of the Hebrews; he died about the year B.C. 1232. (Judg. iv. 5, 6.) 5. The name of "Abimelech" is thus written in 1 Chron. xviii. 10.

ABINADAB = father of nobleness, or noble father. 1. One of the sons of Jesse. (1 Sam. xvi. 8; xvii. 12.) 2. A Levite of Kirjath-jearim. (1 Sam. vii. 1; 1 Chron. xiii.) 3. One of king Saul's sons, who fell at the battle of Gilboa. (1 Sam. xxxi. 2.) 4. One of Solomon's officers. (1 Kings iv. 11.) His name, correctly, is "Benjaminabb" = son of Abinadab, as in the margin.

ABINER. — See AAZAR.

ABINOAM = father of pleasantness. The father of Barak. (Judg. iv. 6.)

ABIRAM = father of altitudes. 1. The eldest son of Hiel, the Bethelite, who is remarkable as having died prematurely, in consequence of his father attempting to rebuild Jericho. When that city was destroyed by the Hebrews, Joshua said, "cursed be the man before the Lord, that riseth up and buildeth this city, Jericho: he shall lay the foundation thereof in his first-born, and in his youngest son shall he set up the gates of it." (Josh. vi. 26.) 2. Hiel, who lived in the days of Ahab, 534 years after, and who was either ignorant or regardless of the curse, attempted to rebuild the city; but in so doing, he lost his eldest son, Abiram, when laying the foundation, and Segub, his youngest, when setting up the gates. (1 Kings xvi. 34.) 2. A son of Eliab, of the tribe of Reuben, who was destroyed by the opening of the earth, in consequence of the part he took in the conspiracy of Korah and Dathan. (Num. xvi. 1-35; xxvi. 9-11.)

ABISAG = father of error. The Shunammite was a young woman who was selected by the physicians of David, to minister to him in his old age, and to cherish him. After David's death, and the accession of Solomon to the throne, Adonijah, most improperly, sought her in marriage for himself; but Solomon, perceiving his policy, in a design upon the crown also, caused him to be put to death. (1 Kings i. 3; ii. 25.)

ABISHAI = father of a gift. The son of Zeruiah, David's sister. He was one of David's distinguished officers, and was full of daring exploits. He accompanied David to the camp of Saul, while the guards were asleep around. Abishai, with Joab, his brother, attacked and defeated the Syrians, and the children of Ammon. (2 Sam. x. 3.) He rescued David from the giant Philistine, Ishbi-benob, whom he smote and killed. (2 Sam. xx. 15, 17.) The victory over the Edomites, in the valley of Salt, which is ascribed to David, (2 Sam. viii. 13,) is also ascribed to Abishai. (1 Chron. xviii. 12.) Probably Abishai actually obtained the victory, but as he was an officer under David, it might also with propriety be spoken of as David's achievement. He also lif-ed, up his spear against three hundred men and slew them. (2 Sam. xxi. 17; xxiii. 18; 1 Chron. xi. 20.)

ABISHALOM.—See ABSALOM.

ABISHUA = father of Caleb. 1. The son of Phimeas. He was the fourth high priest of the Hebrews. (1 Chron. vi. 4, 5, 50; Ezra vii. 5.) 2. The son of Bela. (1 Chron. vin. 4.)

ABISHUB = father of the walls. The son of Shammas. (1 Chron. ii. 28, 29.)

ABITAL = whose father is the dew. One of the wives of David, and mother of Shephatiah. (2 Sam. iii. 4; 2 Chron. iii. 8.)

ABITUB = father of goodness. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 11.)

ABIOU = whose father is a judge. A name found in the genealogical table of Matt. i. 13, as one of the reputed ancestors of Christ, but omitted in 1 Chron. iii. 19.

ABNER = father of a light. The son of Ner, and cousin of king Saul. (1 Sam. xiv. 60, 51.) He was the faithful and distinguished commander-in-chief of Saul's army. After the death of Saul, at the disastrous battle in the plain of Jerreel, Abner, his general, drew off the remains of the army to the other side of the Jordan, and caused Ish-bosheth, the youngest son of Saul, to be proclaimed king at Mahanaim. (2 Sam. ii. 8, 9.) In the mean time, the rulers of the tribe of Judah, awarded the sceptre to David, in Hebron, while the other eleven tribes did homage to Ish-bosheth the son of Saul. Abner being commander-in-chief to Ish-bosheth, came to Gibeon with an army, to force the tribe of Judah to obedience; a fierce battle ensued, in which Abner and his troops were routed. Abner never again took the field, and the war was suffered to die away in silence, without an express treaty. (2 Sam. ii. 4, 17, 28.) After Ish-bosheth had reigned about two years over Israel, he quarreled with Abner, who had raised him to the throne, and who was still his sole support; the indignant general, then, made arrangements for bringing the eleven tribes to submit to David, and had an interview with him for that purpose. Before the execution of his design, he was treacherously assassinated by Joab, about the year B.C. 1050. This event, and the murder of Ish-bosheth, retarded the union of the tribes, under David, about two years longer.

The estimation in which Abner was held by David and the people, appears from the funeral, and the ode composed upon the occasion by the king. (2 Sam. ii. 10; iii. 7-27.) Abner is called "Abner," in 1 Sam. xiv. 50, in the margin.—See ABIN.

ABOMINATION. The usual application of this word, is, to whatever was senseless, in the Mosaic sense, and especially to impure idol worship. (Ex. xxxiv. 13; Jer. xlv. 4; 2 Kings, xxii. 13.) The sacred animals of Egypt are called an "abomination;" (Ex. viii. 26;) and the Hebrew shepherds were held in "abomination" by the Egyptians, because they sacrificed and ate without scruple, those animals which were considered sacred by them. (Gen. xliii. 32; xlv. 34.) Some suppose that a tribe of wandering shepherds had previously invaded Egypt; and that the remembrance of their cruel depredations had made the very name of shepherd hateful to them. But the correctness of this view is now doubted.

ABOMINATION OF DESOLATION, literally the abomination of the desolator. This was Daniel's prediction of the pollution of the temple at Jerusalem, by Antiochus Epiphanes, who set up in it the altar and the statue of Jupiter Olympus; the daily sacrifices was taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate drove all the true worshippers of God from the temple. (Dan. xi. 31; xii. 11.) But by the "Abomination of desolation," in Dan. ix. 27, referred to by our Lord in Matt. xxiv. 15; Mark xiii. 14, and foretold as about to be seen at Jerusalem, during the last siege of that city, by the Romans, under Titus, is meant the Roman army, whose eagles, ensigns, and other image-crowned standards, were worshipped by the soldiers; and when the temple and city were taken, they were lodged in the holyplace, and sacrifices were offered before them. Josephus distinctly refers to the accomplishment of both these predictions. (Jos. Ant. xii. 5; vii. 6; Wars, vi. 5, 1.)—See STANDARD.

ABRAHAM.—See ABRAHAM.

ABRAHAM = father of multitude, or, as the context explains it, father of many nations. He was the son of Terah, brother of Nahor and Haran, and uncle of Lot, and was the great progenitor of the Hebrew nation. He was born about B.C. 1996, at Ur, a city of Chaldea, where he resided, surrounded by an idolatrous people, until he was about seventy years old; when God called him to leave the land of his fathers, and go into a country that he would show him. From a careful comparison of Acts vii. 2—4 with Gen. xii. 1, and Neh. ix. 7, Abraham appears to have been called twice, once while he was in Ur, in Chaldea, “before he dwelt in Charran”; (Haran;) and again after he left Ur, while he dwelt in Haran, when he was seventy-five years old. The call of Abraham was in these words, “Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father’s house, unto a land that I will shew thee; and I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing; and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: and in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed.” Here, in addition to other promises, was a clear intimation that the Messiah should proceed from him, and of the universal extent of the blessings which he would convey to mankind. Obedient to the heavenly call, Abraham took his family, his flocks and herds, and migrated as a wanderer, or wandering shepherd, into Palestine, where he continued to dwell, removing from place to place, according to the convenience of water and pasture; journeying, sometimes for the same reasons, as far as Egypt. His prosperity and confidence in God were so conspicuous, that God prospered him greatly, and promised him a “seed like the sand on the sea shore,” and “as the stars of heaven for multitude,” which should inhabit the land of Canaan; hence, this was called “the Land of Promise.”

While in an excursion to Egypt, Abraham, through fear, proposed to Sarah, his wife, that she should pass for his sister; (Gen. xii. 10—20;) and while in Gerar, he also made a similar attempt: there was evident deceit in this affair, and he was certainly risking the honour of his wife for the preservation of himself; while at the same time he showed a want of confidence in his God. (Gen. xx. 2.) In an invasion of the cities of the plain, by several of the petty kings of the adjoining provinces, Sodom was taken, and Lot and his family carried captive. When Abraham received intelligence of it, he armed his trained servants, born in his house, (three hundred and eighteen in number,) pursued the kings, and defeated them, and brought Lot and his family, and their substance back to Sodom, restoring liberty to the captives, who had been taken with all their property. On his return, he was met by Melchizedek, king of Salem, and priest of the most high God, to whom he gave a tenth of all, and from whom he received a blessing. (Gen. xiv. 14—24.)

Abraham was favoured with several revelations from God; one vision was singular, wherein was revealed to him some of the most important events in his future history, and in that of his posterity; which were all accomplished in due time, and with wonderful exactness. (Gen. xv. 12—18.) This revelation related, 1st. To the severe and protracted sufferings of the Hebrews in Canaan and in Egypt; (Gen. xvii. 8; Ex iii. 9; Ps. cv. 9—12;) 2nd. To the judgments which should fall upon their Egyptian oppressors, and the triumphant exodus of the chosen people; (Ex. vii. 11; Ps. lxxviii. 48—51;) 3rd. To Abraham’s death and burial in a good old age; 4th. To the return of his posterity to the promised Land, and the punishment of the Canaanish nations. The commencement of the four hundred years of servitude and affliction referred to in this vision, is the time of Ishmael’s mocking Isaac, (Gen. xxi.
8, 10, compared with Gal. iv. 29, 30,) which occurred thirty years after the promise recorded in Gen. xii. 1—3.
This promise was given four hundred and thirty years before the giving of the Law; (Gal. iii. 17;) and from Ex.
xii. 40, 41, it appears that their deliverance from bondage was also four hundred and thirty years after that promise. Of this period of four hundred and thirty years, two hundred and fifteen years were passed in sojourning in Canaan, and two hundred and fifteen years in Egypt: they were not in actual service and affliction anything like that time, but they were strangers in a land that was not theirs, during the whole of that period.
Again, when Abraham was ninety years old, the Lord appeared to him, and established his covenant with him and his seed for ever; and instituted the rite of circumcision as a visible sign and seal of the covenant. (Gen. xvii. 1—27.) At this time he changed the name of the patriarch from ABRAM —father of multitude, to ABRAHAM—fa-ter of multitudes; and the name of his wife was also changed from Sarai, to Sarah. The Lord also declared that Sarah should bring him a son in his old age; and Abraham said, “Shall a child be born unto him that is an hundred years old? and shall Sarah, that is ninety years old, bear!” Nevertheless, against hope he believed in hope, and staggered not at the promise of God.
At the appointed time, Isaac, the child of promise, was born. Sometime afterwards, God put the faith and piety of his servant, Abraham, to the test, so that he might be exhibited to the world in all following time as an illustrious example of the power of faith. He was commanded to take his son, his only son, Isaac, whom he loved, and in whom all the promises of God were to be accomplished,—and offer him for a burnt offering upon one of the mountains which God would shew him. Abraham hesitated not to obey; every preparation was made, and the knife was in his hand to slay his son, when his purpose was arrested by a voice from heaven, requiring him to spare the lad; inasmuch as the proof of the father’s faith was full.
It has been well observed, that Abraham was, in many respects, the most distinguished of all the ancient servants of God; he was the father of the faithful, (Rom. iv. 11—13; Gal. iii. 7,) and the friend of God. (James ii. 23; Isa. xiii. 8.) In him the covenant of grace was sealed, and the Gospel in effect was preached. (Gal. iii. 8, 9.) We know not the extent to which the great mystery of godliness was unfolded to him; but it is certain he was favoured with considerable discoveries of the future Messiah, and of the truth “as it is in Jesus;” to this our Lord himself bears testimony:—“Your father, Abraham, rejoiced to see my day: and he saw it, and was glad.” (John viii.
56.) He is quoted by Paul, as an example of justification by faith; and by James, as an example of justification by works.—“They which be of faith, are blessed with faithful Abraham.” The patriarch lived an hundred and ninety-five years, and was then gathered to his people; his sons buried him in the family sepulchre, in the cave of Machpelah.

ABRAHAM’S BOSEOM.—See BO-SOM.
ABSAOLUM—father of peace. A son of king David, by Maacah, daughter of Talmai, king of Geshur. (2 Sam. iii.
5.) He was remarkable for his beauty, and for the luxuriance of his hair, which is said to have weighed, when cut from time to time, two hundred shekels of the royal standard. But the term shekel here probably refers to the sole rather than the weight; so that the passage simply means, “he exceeded the hair of his head at two hundred shekels of the royal standard.” (2 Sam. xiv. 26.) Such a mode of describing the value of the hair occurs in Kosegarten’s Chrest.
Arab., p. 65. Describing the execution of a young man near Damascus,— “He was the most beautiful of youths, and most fair of countenance, and had the longest hair, the value of which was some thousands of dollars." Absalom, having murdered his half-brother Amnon, for an injury to his sister, fled to the court of his grandfather at Geshur. After some time he was restored to the favour of his father, through the mediation of Joab. His father’s throne now became the object of his ambition; he stood in the public places and played the demagogue, “stole the hearts of the men of Israel,” and got himself proclaimed king in Hebron. David retired from Jerusalem; Absalom followed him, and the two parties met in the wood of Ephraim; the battle was severe and bloody. Absalom’s troops were defeated, and as he rode upon a mule under the thick branches of an oak, was caught by the hair of his head,—the hair of which he had been so proud,—the mule passed from under him, and left him suspended in the tree. Here he was found and slain by Joab, and his body cast into a pit in the wood, and covered with a great heap of stones. David was much affected by his death, and uttered bitter lamentations over him. (2 Sam. xviii. 6—17.) He is called “Abishalom,” in 1 Kings xv. 2—10. The style of architecture and embellishment of the monument called “Absalom’s Pillar,” (2 Sam. xvii. 18,) near the Kidron, in the valley of Jehoshaphat, seem to indicate a much later period than the time of Absalom.

ABSTINENCE. The keeping from the use of particular food, or drink, was a part of religion from very early ages; it was the first test of obedience required of Adam, in Eden. Some have supposed that the Antediluvians abstained from flesh, because herbs and fruits only were assigned to Adam, at the creation, but this is not conclusive. Noah was required to abstain from blood. (Gen. ix. 4.) The law of Moses required abstinence from various kinds of animals which were declared to be unclean, and from the blood of all on pain of death. The Hebrews also abstained from the snow, which is upon the hollow of the thigh; (Gen. xxxvii. 33;) and the priests were required to abstain from wine or strong drink during their ministration; and the same was required of the Nazarites. Several of the early Christians abstained from certain sorts of food, prohibited by the law of Moses; others used their liberty; (1 Cor. viii. 7—10; Rom. xiv. 1—3;) this difference was a source of trouble, which required the interference of the apostles, who, when assembled at Jerusalem, decreed that the Christians should abstain “from pollutions of idols, and from fornication, and from things strangled, and from blood.” (Acts xvi. 20.)

AOCAD = fort-ress, castle. One of the four cities founded by Nimrod in the land of Shinar, the southern part of Mesopotamia. (Gen. x. 10.) The site of Aocad—or Aocar, as it is sometimes written—is assigned to the Sittac of the Greeks, the Akkeruf of the present day. It is also called “Akari Nimrud” = the Castle or Palace of Nimrod. It is distant about fifty-five miles north of Babylon, and not far from Baghdad. A primitive monument found here is still called by the Arabs “Tell Nimrud” = the Hill of Nimrod. It consists of a mound, surmounted by a mass of building, which looks like a tower, or an irregular pyramid, according to the point from which it is viewed: it is about four hundred feet in circumference at the bottom, and rises to the height of a hundred and twenty-five feet above the elevation on which it stands. The mound, which seems to form the foundation of the pile, is a mass of rubbish, accumulated from the decay of the superincumbent structure. Col. Rawlinson found the name of Nebuchadnessar stamped on the bricks of this ancient ruin.

ACCESS. The privilege of approaching a superior with freedom. The term is used to designate the free intercourse all the faithful have with God in the exercise of prayer. They have not only admission, but access to God through Jesus Christ; he is the Way, the Truth, and the Life. Under the law, the high-priest alone had access into the holiest of all; but when the veil of the temple was rent in twain, at the death of Christ, it was declared that a new and living way of access was laid open through the veil, that is to say, his flesh, for all people. By his death, also, the middle wall of partition was broken down, and Jew and Gentile had both free access to God; whereas, before, the Gentiles had no nearer access in the temple-worship than to the gate of the court of Israel. Thus, the saving grace and lofty privileges of the gospel, are equally bestowed upon true believers of all nations. (Rom. v. 2; Eph. ii. 18; iii. 12.)

ACCHO = Acre. A maritime city in Asher, and one of the cities from which that tribe was unable to expel the Canaanites. (Judg. i. 31.) In the New Testament it is called Ptolemis; a name which was probably introduced about the time of the Romans. (Acts xxii. 7.) The Crusaders gave it the name of Acre, or St. John's of Acre; but it is still called Akko by the inhabitants. The city is situated in the district of Akka, on the coast of the Mediterranean sea, on the north angle of a bay to which it gives its name, and which extends in a semicircle of three leagues, as far as the point of Mount Carmel. The remains of this ancient city are very numerous. Recent travellers have found several fragments of buildings, which no doubt were constructed in the earliest ages, especially thresholds of doors, and pillars for galleries, piazzas, and slabs of fine marble, which were used for the pavement of courts. These ruins are now used in the erection of new buildings, and all the appearances of ancient grandeur are fast fading away. Acre was the last place wrested from the Christians by the Turks, and in recent times was considered one of the strongest places of Palestine. Acre has been noted in modern times for the successful resistance it made, under Sir Sidney Smith, to the French army in 1799; when, after a siege of sixty days, Napoleon commenced his retreat, and was finally driven out of Syria into Egypt.

1882, this place endured a long siege by the Egyptian army; it then fell under the dominion of Muhammad Ali. Again, in 1840, Akka was bombarded for several hours by the combined English, Austrian, and Turkish fleet, under Admiral Stopford, when the explosion of a magazine destroyed the garrison, and laid the town in ruins.

ACCUSED. The Hebrew word ἀκούαμαι, like the Greek ακούω, translated accused, is sometimes used to denote any sacred gift which was decreed to God irrevocably. (Lev. xxvii. 28.) The term is also used to designate anything "devoted to destruction." (Josh. vi. 17, 18, compared with vii. 21—26.) Every one who died on a tree was reckoned accursed. (Deut. xx. 19.) To be separated from the Church was to be accursed. (Gal. i. 8, 9.) In Rom. ix. 3, the apostle says "For I wished that myself were accursed from Christ." The words do not express a present wish, but a fact in the apostle's past experience, unquestionably before his conversion to Christianity, the remembrance of which excited his compassion for his poor, infatuated kinsmen. He felt for them as one who had formerly participated in their enmity to Christ and his Gospel. See ANATHEMA.

ACCUSSER OF THE BRETHREN. A title given to Satan, in Rev. xii. 10. In the Rabbinical writings, the same title is frequently given to our spiritual adversary.

ACELDAMA = field of blood. This Syro-Chaldaic word is used in Acts i. 19, as the name of a field for the burial of strangers, which the chief priests purchased with the thirty pieces of silver, returned by Judas as the price of the Saviour's blood. It was formerly "the potter's field"; (Matt. xxvii. 7, 10, compared with Zech. xi. 12, 13;) perhaps the same as the "fuller's field." In Isa. vii. 3. This field was situated near Jerusalem, south of the valley of Hinnom. Recent travellers state that it is not now marked by any boundary to distinguish it from the rest of the hill-side; and the former charnel-houses, now a ruin, is all that remains to point set the site. This plot of ground was long used to bury strangers in, but at present it has the appearance of having been a long time abandoned.
ACH

ACHAIA. In an extended sense, Achaia comprehended the whole of Greece. Augustus divided the whole country into two proconsular provinces, Macedonia and Achaia. The province of Macedonia included Macedonia proper, Illyricum, Epirus, and Thessaly. The province of Achaia lying in the northern part of the Peloponnesus, or Morea, included Corinth and its isthmus, and all which lay southward of the former province; Corinth was its capital, and the residence of the provincial or deputy. This is the region referred to in the New Testament. (Acts xviii. 27; xix. 21; 2 Cor. xi. 10.)

ACHAIUS—pertaining to Achaia. A Christian referred to by Paul (1 Cor. xv. 17.)

ACHAN—troubler. The son of Carmi, who by his covetousness brought defeat and trouble upon the Hebrews: the trouble was detected by the sacred lot, he was condemned, and was taken to the valley of Achor, where all Israel stoned him to death in the presence of his sons and his daughters; and his property was consumed with fire. (Josh. vii. 1—26; Deut. xxiv. 16.) In 1 Chron. ii. 7, he is called “Achar.”

ACHAZ—See Ahaz.

ACHBOR = mezzor. 1. An Edomite chiefman. (Gen. xxxvi. 38, 39; 1 Chron. i. 49.) 2. An officer in the court of king Josiah. (2 Kings xxi. 12, 14; Jer. xxvi. 21; xxxvi. 12.) In 2 Chron. xxxiv. 20, 21, he is called “Abdon.”

ACHIM = brethren. One of the reputed ancestors of Christ. (Matt. i. 14.)

ACHISH = a sower. A king of the Philistines in Gath. (1 Sam. xxi. 10; xxvii. 1—12.) In the title of Ps. xxxiv. he is called “Abimelech.”

ACHIMETHA = treasure-fortress, or fire-temple. A city of Media, called “Ecbatana” in the margin of Ezra vi. 2. There appears to have been two Median capitals called Ecbatana. The latter one was built and fortified, according to Herodotus, by Darius, as the capital of Media Atropatene. This city had seven circular walls; and each circle of battlements had its own colour. Col. Rawlinson has identified the ruins of Takht-i-Suleiman, in Azerbaijan, with this celebrated and beautiful city. But the “Ecbatana” mentioned by Ezra, was above a century older. Ctesias tells us that Arbaces, after the destruction of Nineveh, conveyed the treasures of Assyria to Ecbatana, the royal city of Greater Media. And his description evidently refers to the modern Hamadan, situated at the foot of the picturesque Elwend. Broken shafts and bases of columns, together with cuneiform inscriptions, mark the antiquity of the site, and designate it as that of Ecbatana, the capital of Greater Media. It boasts the sepulchres of Esther and Mordecai.

ACHOR = troubler. A valley near Jericho, where Achan was stoned. (Josh. xvi. 25.) As this valley was a place of great trouble to the Hebrews on their entrance into Canaan, so on their return from the captivity, it was to be a place of hope and joy. (Isa. lv. 10; Hos. ii. 17.)

ACHSAH = wife of Caleb. The daughter of Caleb, promised in marriage to him who should take the city of Kirjath-sepher from the Canaanites. Othniel took the city and married Acsah. (Josh. xv. 16, 17; Judg. i. 12.)

ACHSAPH = incantation, fascination. A city of Asher. (Josh. xii. 20; xix. 25.)

ACHZIB = false, deceitful. 1. A maritime city in Asher. Its Greek name was Ecdippa, it is now called ash-Zib. (Josh. xix. 22; Judg. i. 31.) 2. A fortified city in Judah, probably the same with “Chesib;” (Gen. xxxviii. 5;) and with “Chozeba.” (1 Chron. iv. 22; Josh. iv. 14; Mic. i. 14.)

ACRE. The Hebrew word seemed, translated “acre” in 1 Sam. xiv. 14; Isa. v. 10, as a measure of land, ought to be rendered “yoke,” that is as much as a yoke of oxen can plough in one day.

ACT

of his Gospel; and is dedicated to the same distinguished person. It contains a considerable part of the history of Peter and Paul, together with the early history of Christianity, during the period of about thirty-three years after the ascension of Christ. It was evidently written after the Gospel; and apparently after the death of Paul. The evangelist appears to have left Rome before the Apostle's death, as the Acts close abruptly with the second year of Paul's imprisonment. (Col. iv. 14; Philem. 24; 2 Tim. iv. 11; Acts xxviii. 30, 31.) On what ground Luke left Rome, and why he has not mentioned Paul's subsequent fate, we know not. The book was probably written in Palestine about A.D. 67 or 68.

It is certain that Luke was an eye-witness to many events which he relates in the Acts, and it would seem that he also used in the composition of his work some notices of events and addresses. However, any minute attempt to ascertain other sources than the written ones and Paul's oral communications, must be largely conjectural. The various addresses of Stephen, Paul, James, and others, instead of being all conformed to the exact model of Luke's own style, preserve respectively all the discrepancies and distinctions of style and manner which we could have expected originally from their authors; and thus they show that they have been preserved and related with great care and fidelity. The peculiarities of Luke's style, when compared with his gospel, appear almost everywhere in the book of the Acts when the narration is his own. While the authorship of Luke has been more or less impugned, the integrity of the book has not been seriously called in question either in ancient or modern times. It is alluded to and quoted by Tatian, Justin Martyr, Ireneus, Clement of Alexandria, and by all the ancient writers quoted by Eusebius. In order to read the Acts of the Apostles with intelligence and profit, it is necessary to have a sufficient acquaintance with geography, with the manners of the times and people referred to, and with the leading historical events. The power of the Romans, with the public officers they established, and the distinctions among them must be understood, as well as the disposition and political opinions of the unconverted Jewish nation, which obtained too strongly among the Christianized Hebrews.

ADA

ADADAH = Festive. A town in the south of Judah. (Josh. xvi. 29.)

ADAH = Ornement, beauty. 1. One of the wives of Lamech. (Gen. iv. 19, 23.) 2. One of the wives of Esau. (Gen. xxvi. 2.) In Gen. xxvi. 54, she is called "Bearahamah."

ADAI = Whom Jehovah adorns. 1. The grandfather of king Josiah. (2 Kings xxiv. 1.) 2. A servant of the temple. (1 Chron. ix. 19.) 3. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 21.) 4. A son of Bani. (Ezr. x. 29.) 5. The father of Manasseh. (3 Chron. xxiii. 1; Ezra x. 39; Neh. xi. 5.)

ADALIA = water-baskets. One of the ten sons of Haman. (Est. ix. 8.)

ADAM = to be red. The proper name of the ancestor of the human family. It is sometimes used to designate the human race. With archaic simplicity the most ancient record states, that on the sixth and last day of creation, man was formed by the hand of God, of the dust of the ground—the general soil composed of mingled sand, clay, and lime. And the Lord breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and he became a living soul, person. Thus the ancestor of our race was created—not in feeble, helpless infancy, but upright, and in the maturity of his physical and intellectual nature; not a sinful, miserable creature, but in the image and after the likeness of his perfectly holy Creator. He was placed in the garden in Eden, which was committed to his care, "to dress it and to keep it;" and of every tree but one he was allowed to eat. God then brought before him the beasts of the field and the fowls of the air, and Adam gave them their names. He was also invested with complete dominion over the lower creation.
(Gen. i. 26. 30; ii. 7, 17.) His Creator formed for him a companion, bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh,—a help meet for him,—that is, a friend and associate every way fitted to aid and comfort him.

But in Eden the first human pair were in a state of trial; and consequently exposed to evil from the temptations of Satan. How long they retained their integrity we know not; but we know they lost it, and thus forfeited their happiness by disobeying the simple and reasonable command of their Maker. The first indication of guilt, was a consciousness of shame,—"they knew that they were naked," stripped of the image of God; and without delay, each of the parties to the fatal transgression received a dreadful doom. The man and his wife were expelled from their happy home in Eden, never to return; and they began at once, respectively, to feel the woes in which their transgression had involved them. The history of Adam closes abruptly. The whole term of his life was 930 years; and he died. The Scriptures nowhere hint that the bodies, either of animals or of man, in the state before the fall, were not subject to dissolution, just as much as at present. Indeed, the whole physical structure goes to indicate directly the contrary. The life of man and of other animals, as at present constituted, is a constant succession of decay and renovation; and, so far as physiology can draw any conclusion, this has ever been the case. Adam was "of the earth, earthy," but had he been faithful during the term of his probation, he would have retained his right to the Tree of Life, which would have prevented the tendency to dissolution, and he would never have tasted the bitterness of physical death. It does not appear that the Most High ever intended to keep Adam perpetually an inhabitant of the earth; and as flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, his outer man would have undergone an important change to qualify him for the higher state of existence in the regions of light and immortality. We may therefore suppose, that the death denounced upon man was rather moral and spiritual death: in that very day he should lose the image of his Maker, enter into a state of condemnation, be considered dead in the eye of the divine law, and thus be exposed to the misery of final punishment from the presence of the Lord. And this condemnation has justly fallen upon all his race. Such is also the view of the apostle Paul; who everywhere contrasts the death introduced into the world through Adam, with the life which is procured for our race through Jesus Christ. (Rom. v. 12—21.) But this life is only spiritual; the death, then, in its highest sense, is also spiritual. So far, too, as the penalty is temporal and physical, no specific remedy is provided; no man is or can be exempt from it, in some mode or other; and it depends not upon his own choice. But to remove the spiritual death, Christ, the second Adam, "the Lord from heaven," has died; so that he who will, by faith, may avoid the threatened death, receive the image of God, and enter into life eternal. (1 Cor. xv. 45—47.) 2. A city east of the Jordan, not far from Succoth. (Josh. iii. 16.)

ADAMAH—earth. A city in Naphthal. (Josh. xix. 36.)

ADAMANT. A name Anciently used for the diamond, the hardest and most costly of all precious stones. It was used for cutting other hard stones and crystals. The Hebrew word אֲדָם אָבָן, rendered "adamant," signifies a sharp point, and does not occur in the Scriptures where precious stones are under consideration. Some scholars think that אֲדָם אָבָן—adamah, a calcined iron mixed with silicious earth, is intended. Probably the "diamond," as the term is rendered, in Jer. xvii. 1, is designated. The term is chiefly employed figuratively to express the obduracy of the wicked. (Jer. xvii. 1; Ezek. iii. 9; Zechar. vii. 12.)

ADAM—Ammon. A city in Naphthal. (Josh. xix. 38.)

ADAR = ample, splendid. 1. The twelfth month of the ancient Hebrew year. It began with the first new moon in March, and consisted of twenty-nine days. This month was the season of flowers, and new foliage, clothing the earth with beauty and splendour. (Est. iii. 7, 13; vii. 12; ix. 1, 15, 17, 19, 21.) 2. A town in Judah, formerly called Hamar-sadder = village of Adar. (Num. xxxiv. 4; Josh. xv. 5.)

ADBEEL = miracle of God. The third son of Ishmael. (Gen. xxv. 15.)

ADDAN = low, humble, inferior. A man who returned from exile. (Ezra ii. 59.) In Neh. vii. 61, he is called "Addon."

ADDAR = great, ample. A son of Bola. (1 Chron. viii. 3.)

ADDEK. — See SERPENT.

ADDI = prey, spoil, or ornament. One of the ancestors of the Messiah. (Luke iii. 28.)

ADOON. — See ADDAN.

ADER = Jock. A chief of the tribe of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 15.)

ADIN = delicate, effeminate, voluptuous. One who was carried into the exiles. (Ezra ii. 15; Neh. vii. 20.)

ADINA = slender, plaint. One of David's distinguished officers. (1 Chron. xi. 42.)

ADINO. — See JABBOKAM.

ADITHAIM = double ornament. A city in Judah. (Josh. xv. 36.)

ADJURE. Solemnly to require a declaration of the truth at the peril of God's displeasure. "I adjure thee by the living God" seems also to have been a form of putting a person to his oath. (1 Sam. xiv. 24; 1 Kings xxii. 18; Josh. vi. 26; Matt. xxvi. 63.)

ADLAI = justice of God. The father of Shaphat. (1 Chron. xxvii. 29.)

ADMAH = earth. The most easterly of the five cities which, together with the plain or vale of Siddim, were destroyed by fire and swallowed up in the Dead Sea. (Gen. x. 19; xiv. 2, 8; Deut. xxxi. 28; Hose xi. 8.) De Saulcy, when travelling through a ravine on the western shore of the Dead Sea, was shown a place called Suk el-Thbareh, which he imagined was the site of the doomed city, Admah. The traveller was undoubtedly imposed upon by his guides, who had informed him, that on this spot the market-place of a city had been destroyed by fire from heaven; and that there were ruins on the neighbouring hills.

ADMATHA = the earth. One of the seven princes of Persia and Media, at the court of Artaxerxes. (Est. i. 14.)

ADNA = pleasant. One who returned from Babylon. (Ezra x. 50.)

ADWAH = pleasant. 1. A chief in Manasseh. (1 Chron. xii. 36.) 2. The commander-in-chief of King Jehoshaphat's forces. (2 Chron. xvii. 14.)

ADONI-BEZEK = lord of Besak. The cruel king of the Canaanite city Besek (Judg. i. 7.)

ADONIAH = my Lord is Jehoshah. 1. The son of king David, by Haggith. He attempted to usurp the succession, and afterwards desired Abishag, the Shunammite, to wife; this request was rejected, and he was ordered to be put to death as one guilty of treason. (1 Kings i. 5, 8; 2 Sam. iii. 4.) 2. One of the Levites. (2 Chron. xvii. 8.) 3. A Levite. (Neh. x. 16.) In Ezra ii. 13; viii. 13; Neh. vii. 18; he is called "Adamikam" = lord of the enemy.

ADONIKAM. — See ADONIAH.

ADONIRAM = lord of altitude. The receiver-general of the tribute-money under David, Solomon, and Rehoboam. He was stoned to death by the infuriated populace, at the time of the revolt of the ten tribes from the house of David. (1 Kings iv. 6; v. 14.) The same person is called "Adoram," by contradiction in 2 Sam. xx. 24; 1 Kings xii. 18; and also "Hadoram," in 2 Chron. x. 18.

ADONI-ZEDEK = lord of justice. The Canaanite king of Jerusalem, captured by Joshua. (Josh. x. 1—27.)

ADOPTION. An act by which a person places as a son in relation to himself, one who is not such by birth, thereby entitling him to the peculiar privileges of such a connection, as fully and completely as a child by birth. So Jacob adopted his grandsons, Ephraim and Manasseh. (Gen. xlviii. 5.) The daughter of Pharaoh adopted Moses, "and he became her son." (Ex. ii. 10.) Mordecai adopted Esther, his niece, "for his own daughter." (Est. ii. 7.) So also Machir, the son of Manasseh, gave his daughter to Hezon, the son of Judah; but the descendants of this union, instead of being reckoned to the family of Judah, by their paternal descent from Hezon, are reckoned by their maternal descent as the posterity of Machir, of the family of Manasseh. Hence Jair, the descendant of Judah, is called a descendant of Manasseh. (I Chron. ii. 21, 22; Josh. xiii. 30; Num. xxxii. 41.) Another kind of adoption consisted in the obligation of a surviving brother to marry the widow of his brother, who had died without children; (Deut. xxxv. 5; Ruth iv. 5; Matt. xxi. 24;) so that the children of this marriage were considered as belonging to the deceased brother, and went by his name; but this manner of adopting was not practised among the Greeks and Romans; neither was that kind of adoption intended by Sarah, Leah, and Rachel, when they gave their handmaids to their husbands. (Gen. xxi. 2; xxx. 3.) In the new Testament, the term "adoption" denotes that act of God's free grace by which, on our being justified by faith, we are made the children—the "sons" and "heirs of God," and are henceforward entitled to every blessing and privilege of the new and better covenant. Our adoption is inseparably connected with our justification, so that the one always implies the other. Some divines consider them to be the same; adoption being the act of God viewed as a Father, justification the act of God viewed as a Judge. The apostles, in using the term "adoption," appear to have had before them the simple view, that our sins had deprived us of our sonship, the favour of God, and the right to the inheritance of eternal life; but that, upon our return to God, and reconciliation with Him, our forfeited privileges are not only restored, but greatly heightened through the paternal kindness of God. To this state belong freedom from a servile spirit, for we are not servants but sons; the special love and care of our heavenly Father; a filial confidence in Him; free access to Him at all times; a title to the heavenly inheritance; and the witness of the Holy Spirit to the sonship of believers, whence flow a comfortable persuasion or conviction of our justification, and present acceptance with God, and the hope of our future and eternal glory. From this, it will be observed, that the knowledge of our adoption is not left to conjecture, assumption, or inductive reasoning; but it is directly attested unto us in the only way in which it can possibly be done, by the inward and immediate influence of the Spirit of God. (Ezek. xxxvii. 27; Rom. viii. 15, 16; xii. 14; 2 Cor. vi. 17, 18; Gal. iii. 2, 27; iv. 4—6.)—See Assurance.

ADORAIM = two mounds or tumuli. A city in Judah, west of Hebron, now called Dura. (2 Chron. xi. 9.)

ADORAM.—See ADONIRAM.

ADRAMMELECH = splendour of the king. 1. One of the idols adored by the Sephardim, who were settled in Samaria. They made their children pass through the fire in honour of this deity, and of another called Anammelech = image of the king. These names probably represented the idols known to the Hebrews as "Moloch" and "Chimun." (2 Kings xvii. 31.) 2. A son of Sennacherib who aidcd in slaying his father. (2 Kings xix. 37; Is. xxxvii. 38.)

ADRAMYTIUM = up the Deep, or Gulf. A maritime town of Myrina, in Asia Minor, opposite the island of Lesbos. It is now called Adrumyt. (Acts xxvii. 2.)

ADRIGA = Deep, or Gulf. By this is meant, in Acts xxvii. 27, not what is now called the Adriatic Gulf or Gulf of Venice, but the Adriatic Sea, which, according to Ptolemy and Strabo, included the whole Ionian Sea, lying between Sicily and Greece.
ADR

ADRIEL = flock of God. The son of Barzillai, married to Merab, the daughter of Saul, who had been promised to David. Adriel had five sons by her, who suffered a violent death at the hands of the Gibeonites. (1 Sam. xiv. 49; xviii. 17–27.) In 2 Sam. xxi. 8, they are called "the five sons of Michal, the daughter of Saul, whom she brought up for Adriel;" and the probability is, unless "Michal" be an error of the scribes for "Merab," that Michal adopted her sister's children, their mother being dead.

ADULLAM = justice of the people. A city in the plain of Judah, and anciently a royal city of the Canaanites. (Josh. xii. 15; xv. 35; Mic. i. 15.) Recent travellers describe a capacious cave in this neighbourhood, supposed to be "the cave of Adullam," but Eusebius and Jerome place it in a different part of the country. (1 Sam. xxii. 1; 2 Sam. xxiii. 18.)

ADULTERY. A crime expressly prohibited by the seventh commandment, and always liable to severe penalties, both by divine and human laws. In the Mosaic laws adultery was principally the infidelity of a wife; and such is the view of this sin in all countries where polygamy and concubinage are tolerated. Intercourse between a married man and an unmarried woman, as between unmarried persons, was considered fornication. This distinction between the crimes of adultery and fornication, seems to have arisen from the view taken of the enormous wrong of a married man having imposed upon him a spurious offspring, as the succession to landed property was entirely by birth, and could not be alienated. A woman suspected of this crime, might, in order to clear herself, drink "the water of jealousy." (Gen. xxxviii. 24; Lev. xx. 10; Matt. v. 28; Heb. xiii. 4.) The account of the woman taken in adultery, (John viii. 1–11,) is conjectured by many critics to be spurious. It is certainly wanting in many ancient manuscripts; but on the other hand, it is contained in many others. 1. Juda expunges it from the text. But the authorities against its authenticity, though of considerable weight, are certainly not decisive. From this account, compared with Deut. xxii. 20–27, it seems that stoning was the mode of punishment enjoined by the Mosaic law for adultery. The unfaithfulness and idolatry of the people of God, are often compared to fornication and adultery. (Jer. iii. 9; Ezek. xxiii. 37; Hose. ii. 2.)

ADUMMIM = bloody. The name of a difficult and narrow pass on the rising ground at the entrance of the wilderness of Jericho. This sombre dell is said to be much infested by robbers, and the scene of many sanguinary murders. It is supposed that the scene of the parable of the good Samaritan was laid here. (Josh. xv. 7; xviii. 17; Luke x. 30–36.)—See JERICHO.

ADVERSARY.—See SATAN.

ADVOCATE. One who pleads the cause of another. It is a title applied to Christ as our Intercessor and exclusive Mediator. (1 John ii. 1; Rom. viii. 34; Heb. vii. 25.) Of advocates, such as ours in civil courts, there is no mention in any part of the old Testament. Every one pleaded his own cause. (1 Kings iii. 16–28.)—See COMFORTER.

AENEAS = praised. A man whom Peter healed of the palsy. (Acts ix. 33, 34.)

AENON = fountains. A place of fountains or streams, near Salim, on the borders of Judea and Samaria, where John baptized. (John iii. 23.) The reason given, "for there were many waters there," determines, that this place was not chosen merely for the baptismal rite, but rather for supplying the wants of the multitude who attended the preaching of John.

AFFINITY.—See MARRIAGE.

AGARUS = locust. A prophet of the primitive church. He foretold a great famine, which the historians, Josephus and Suetonius, notice as having happened in the reign of Claudius, A.D. 44. (Acts xi. 28; xxii. 10.)

AGAG = slayer. 1. The name or title of a powerful king of the Amale-kites, who was contemporary with Moses. (Num. xxi. 7.) 2. An Amalekite king, who was conquered by Saul, and put to death by Samuel for his cruelty. (1 Sam. xv. 8—33.) The term "Agagite" signifies an Amalekite. (Est. iii. 1, 10; viii. 3, 5.)
AGA

AGAR.—See Hagar.

AGATE. A precious stone, chiefly consisting of alternate layers of chalcedony and hornstone, presenting a variety of delineations of colour, and different degrees of transparency. The Hebrew word שֵׁבֶט, is rightly rendered "agate," in Ex. xxvii. 19; xxxix. 12; but the word בַּקָּדִים, also rendered "agate," in Isa. liv. 12; Ezeck. xxvii. 6, probably designates the ruby. (Ex. xxvii. 19; xxxix. 12.)

AGEE, = pajiste. The father of Shamshah. (2 Sam. xxiii. 11.)

AGONY. The Evangelist, describing the fearful agony of the Saviour in the garden of Gethsemane, says, "And his sweat was as drops of blood falling upon the ground." (Luke xxii. 44.) In this statement we see no physiological impossibility. The agony of Jesus, on that night in the cold open air, was such as to force from his body a copious and viscous perspiration which fell down in heavy drops, like blood, to the earth; an occurrence perfectly within the pale of common physiology. Even if this sweat was discoloured, and of a sanguineous appearance, there is nothing impossible in it; though the statement does not oblige us to suppose this. In the midst of this awful agony an angel appeared, not to deliver him from the dreadful struggle in which he was contending, but to strengthen him in the conflict, until he obtained the victory over the last temptation, in perfect resignation to the Divine will. (Matt. xxvi. 41, 42; Mark xiv. 32—41; Luke xxii. 39—46.)

AGBIPPAS = wild horse. — See HEBOD.

AGUE. A kind of fever in which a cold shivering fit is succeeded by a hot or inflammatory one. The Hebrew word קַדְדָּקיָת, signifies a burning fever. (Lev. xxvi. 16; Deut. xxviii. 22.)

AGUR = an assember. A wise man, the son of Jakeh, to whom the thirteenth chapter of Proverbs is ascribed. If the name be symbolical, it may denote one of the assembly of wise men. (Prov. xxx. 1.)

AHAB = father's brother. 1. The sixth king of Israel; he was the weakest, and perhaps the most impious of all the Israelish monarchs; he reigned twenty-one years, from B.C. 918, to 897. He was entirely under the influence of his idolatrous wife, Jezebel. He died of the wounds which he received in a battle with the Syrians, according to the prediction of Micaiah. (1 Kings xvi. 29; xxii. 40.) 2. A false prophet, who, with Zedekiah, another false prophet, prophesied falsely to the Jewish captives. Jeremiah warned them that they should be delivered into the hands of the king of Babylon, who would slay them: and so dreadful would be their end, that thereafter it should be a form of cursing:—"The Lord make thee like Zedekiah, and like Ahab, whom the king of Babylon roasted in the fire." (Jer. xxix. 21—23; Dan. iii. 6; Amos ii. 1.)

AHAD = one. This word occurs in the original of Isa. lxvi. 17, and has been supposed to designate an idol of the Syrians. But the common signification ought to be retained, with the ancient versions:—"those who sanctify and purify themselves in or for idol groves after one," that is, following and imitating the one priest who directed the sacred ceremonies.

AHARAH = after the brother. A son of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 1.)

AHARHEL = behind the breastwork.) A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 8.)

AHASA = whom Jehovah holds. The son of Meshillemoth. In 1 Chron. ix. 12, he is called "Jahzanaah." (Neh. xi. 13.)

AHASAI = I take refuge with Jehovah. The father of Eliphelet. (2 Sam. xxiii. 34.) He is also called "Ur." (1 Chron. xi. 35.)
AHASUERUS = lion-king, or warrior. The name Ἀχασουρέας seems to be the Hebrew form of the Greek Xerxes; and occurs in the Scriptures as the name, or rather the title, of one Median and two Persian kings. The true orthography, and consequently the true meaning of this name has been brought to light, from the cuneiform inscriptions of Persepolis, and confirmed from the Egyptian hieroglyphics. The following is the form of the name Xerxes, as now existing on the Persian and Egyptian monuments.

Consensus.

Ka ša r a ša, Hieroglyphic.

1. The Ahaserus mentioned in Dan. ix. 1, probably stands for Astyages, the father of Darius the Mede, whose kingdom was forcibly seized by Cyrus, about B.C. 559. 2. The son and successor of Cyrus, usually called Cambyses, is called “Ahaserus,” in Ezra iv. 6; vi. 14. He ascended the Persian throne B.C. 529; conquered Egypt B.C. 525; and died after a reign of seven years and five months. His name in hieroglyphics, as now existing on the monuments of Egypt, is written K a s b o h.

3. The son and successor of Darius Hystaspes, usually called Xerxes, is called “Ahaserus” throughout the book of Esther. The name of this Persian king as now standing on the monuments of Persia and Egypt, is given above. Xerxes began to reign B.C. 525. He advanced Esther to be queen; and according to the prediction of Daniel, (xi. 2,) he invaded Greece with a vast army. He is represented by all the ancients to have been a luxurious, weak, and cruel king; and by his conduct, to have drawn down upon himself universal contempt. He was murdered in the twenty-first year of his reign, B.C. 464, by Artabanus, the commander of his life-guards. (Est. i. 1.)

AHAVA = water. A river probably in Babylonia, near where Ezra collected the returning exiles. (Ezr. viii. 21, 23.) From the meaning of the name, and the words, “the river that runneth to Ahava,” (Ezr. viii. 15,) it would seem that the Ahava was a canal or river which emptied itself into the Euphrates.

AHAZ = possessing, possessor. 1. The twelfth king of Judah, he was contemporary with Isaiah, Hosea, and Micah. He reigned sixteen years. He was distinguished for his idolatry and contempt of the true God; and against him many of the prophecies of Isaiah are directed. He died B.C. 726; and such was his impiety, that he was not allowed burial in the sepulchre of the kings. (2 Kings xvi. 1, 2, 20; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 1—27; Isa. vii. 1, 25.) 2. A descendant of Jonathan. (1 Chron. viii. 35; ix. 42.)

AHAZIAH = whose Jehovah holds. 1. The seventh king of Israel; he was the son, and successor of Ahab. He reigned two years, alone and with his father, who associated him in the kingdom the year before his death. In the second year of his reign, he fell through the lattice of an upper apartment of his palace, and died soon after, as Elijah had foretold, B.C. 895. Ahabiah imitated the impiety of his father and mother in the worship of Baal and Ashtaroth. (1 Kings xxii. 40—51; 2 Kings i. 1—18.) 2. The sixth king of Judah; he succeeded his father, and reigned only one year. (2 Kings vii. 26.) He suffered himself to be governed in every thing by the counsels of his idolatrous mother, Athaliah. He received his mortal wound by the command of Jehu, and died at Megiddo, B.C. 883. (2 Kings ix. 27.)

In 2 Chron. xxii. 9, the circumstances of the death of Ahabiah, appear to be stated differently; the account in the book of Kings is correct, but short; while the account in the book of Chronicles is more full, and follows the order of events. Ahaziah is also called “Jehoahaz,” in 2 Chron. xxi. 17; xvi. 23; and “Anaziah,” in 2 Chron. xxiii. 6. In 2 Chron. xxii. 2, he is said to have been forty-two years old when he began to reign, which would make him two years older than his own father! This is certainly an error of the scribes. (2 Kings viii. 16–26.)
AHB

AHIBAN = brother of the wise. The son of Abishur. (1 Chron. ii. 29.)

AHIM = after, hinder.—See AHIRAM.

AHJ = brother. 1. The son of Abdiel. (1 Chron. v. 16.) 2. One of the sons of Shamer. (1 Chron. vii. 34.)

AHJAH = brother or friend of Jehoshaphat. 1. One of Solomon’s secretaries. (1 Kings iv. 3.) 2. See AHIMELECH, and ABOAH.

AHJAM = father’s brother, uncle. One of David’s distinguished officers. (2 Sam. xxiii. 33; 1 Chron. xi. 35.)

AHJAN = brotherly. A son of Sheviadah. (1 Chron. vii. 19.)

AHJERZER = brother of help. 1. A phylearch of the tribe of Dan. (Num. i. 12; ii. 25; vii. 66.) 2. One of David’s friends. (1 Chron. xii. 3.)

AHIJUD = brother or friend of the Jews. One of the surveyors of the land of Canaan. (Num. xxxiv. 27.)

AHIJUD = brother or friend of union. A descendant of Benjamin. This name is spelt with a slight variation in Hebrew from the preceding. (1 Chron. viii. 7.)

AHIJAH = brother or friend of Jehovah. 1. A prophet who dwelt in Shiloh, and is the reign of the first Jeroboam. He is thought to be the person who spoke twice to Solomon from God. (1 Kings xi. 11; xii. 11; 2 Chron. ix. 29.) 2. The father of Basah. (1 Kings xv. 27, 33.) 3. One of the sons of Jerahmeel. (1 Chron. ii. 25.) 4. One of David’s distinguished officers. (1 Chron. xi. 36.) 5. One of the Levites. (1 Chron. xxvi. 20.) 6. One who sealed the covenant. (Neh. x. 26.)

AHKAM = brother of the enemy.

AHJ

A person who preserved Jeremiah, when it was proposed to give him into the hands of the people, to be put to death. (2 Kings xxii. 12–14; xxv. 22; Jer. xxvi. 24; xxxix. 14.)

AHILUD = brother of one born. The father of Jehoahaphat. (2 Sam. viii. 16; xx. 24; 1 Kings iv. 2.)

AHIMAAZ = brother of anger. 1. The son and successor of Zadok the high priest. (2 Sam. xv. 27; xvii. 17; xviii. 19; 1 Chron. vi. 9.) The same person seems to be intended in 1 Kings iv. 16; 2. The father of Ahinoam. (1 Sam. iv. 50.)

AHIMAN = brother of a gift. 1. One of the Anakim. (Num. xiii. 22; Josh. xiv. 14.) 2. One of the porters. (1 Chron. ix. 17.)

AHIMELECH = brother of the king. The ninth high priest of the Hebrews. He dwelt at Nob, and was the intimate friend of David; on this account he was put to death by Saul, together with all the priests that were with him, except his son Abiathar, who fled to David. By an error of the scribes he is called “Abimelech.” (1 Chron. xviii. 16; also “Ahishah.” (1 Sam. xiv. 3;) and he is sometimes confounded with Abiathar. (1 Sam. xxi. 1, 2; xxii. 9;—See ABIATR.

AHIMOTH = brother of death. One of the Levites. (1 Chron. vi. 26.) In 1 Chron. vi. 35, he is called “Mahath.”

AHINADAB = liberal or noble brother. One of Solomon’s officers. (1 Kings iv. 14.)

AHINOAM = brother of pleasantness. 1. The wife of Saul. (1 Sam. xiv. 50.) 2. One of David’s wives. (1 Sam. xxv. 43; xxx. 5, 18; 2 Sam. ii. 2; iii. 2.)

AHIRA = brother of evil. A phylearch of the tribe of Naphtali. (Num. i. 15; ii. 29; vii. 78, 83.)

AHIRAM = brother of the high. The chief of the “Ahiramites,” a family of Benjamin. (Num. xxvi. 38.) He is AHI

AHISAMACH = brother of support or help. A Danite, the father of Aholibah. (Ex. xxxii. 6; xxxv. 34.)

AHISHAHAH = brother of the dawn. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. v. 10.)

AHISHAR = brother of the upright. The high steward of Solomon’s household. (1 Kings iv. 6.)

AHITHOPHEL = brother of folly. An eminent counsellor in the reign of David, who joined the conspiracy of the rebel Absalom; but finding his counsel disregarded, and dreading a traitor’s death, he retired to his house at Giloh, and hanged himself. c.c. 1028. Ahithophel was the father of Elijah, the father of Bathsheba; and it is not improbable that his motive for joining the conspiracy was a wish to revenge his grand-daughter, and the murder of Uriah, her husband; particularly when we consider the infamous advice which he gave, his eagerness for pursuing David, and the desire he expressed to smite the king himself. (2 Sam. xi. 3; xvi. 21; xvii. 1, 2; xxxii. 34; 1 Chron. iii. 5.)

AHITUB = brother or friend of goodness. 1. The son of Phinehas, and the father of Ahimelech. He succeeded his grandfather, Eli, in the priesthood. (1 Sam. iv. 1; iv. 3; xii. 9—12.)

2. The father of Zadok the high priest. (2 Sam. vii. 17; 1 Chron. vi. 8.)

3. The father of Meraioth. (1 Chron. ix. 11; Neh. xi. 11.)

AHILAB = beauty, fertility. A city in Asher. (Judg. i. 31.)

AHILAI = daughter of Sheshan. (1 Chron. ii. 31; xxxiv. 35.)

2. The father of Zabad. (1 Chron. xi. 41.)

AHOHAI = brotherhood. A descendant of Benjamin. He is called "Ahiah" in 1 Chron. viii. 7. The family seems to have been called "Ahibites." (1 Chron. viii. 4; 2 Sam. xxiii. 9.)

AHOLAH = she has her tent, her tabernacle, temple. The name of a tent, used by Ezekiel as the symbol of Jerusalem, the metropolis of the Roman kingdom of Israel. Aholah and Aholibah are represented as sisters, of Egyptian extraction, who were noted for their lewdness. (Ezek. xxiii. 4.)

AHILO = tent of his father. A son of Ahisamach. (Ex. xxxi. 6; xxxv. 34.)

AHILOB = my tabernacle is in her. The name of a harlot, used by Ezekiel as the symbol of Jerusalem, the metropolis of the idolatrous kingdom of Judah. (Ezek. xxii. 4.)

AHILOMAH = tent of the height. 1. One of the wives of Esau. (Gen. xxxvi. 2, 14.)

2. A duke of Edom. (Gen. xxxvi. 41; 1 Chron. i. 52.)

AHIKUM = brother of water, i.e. dwelling near it. The son of Jahath. (1 Chron. iv. 2.)

AHIWAZ = their possession. The son of Ashur. (1 Chron. iv. 6.)

AHIWZATH = possession. A friend of Abimelech, king of Gerar. (Gen. xxvi. 26.)

AI = heap of ruins. A royal city of the Canaanites, situated in the northern part of Benjamin. AI is supposed to have stood upon the site with ruins twelve miles north-west from Jericho, ten north-east from Jerusalem, and three south-east from Bethel. (Gen. xii. 8; xiii. 3; Josh. vii. 29; Neh. vii. 29.)

AI is called "Aiath," (Isaiah x. 28;) and "Aia," (Neh. xi. 31.) In Jer. lix. 3, instead of "for Ai is spoiled," we ought to read, "for the desolate ruins." AIAH = cry, damner. The father of Rishah. (2 Sam. iii. 7; xxi. 8.)

AIAH = See At.

AIJAL = See JAL.

AIJALON = See AJALON.

AIJELETH-SHAHAR = the hind of the dawn, i.e. the rising sun. The title of the twenty-second Psalm. The term probably denotes a kind of poem or song, to the measure of which this Psalm was sung or chanted.

AIN = eye or fountain. A Levitical city in Simeon. (Josh. xv. 32; xix. 7; xx. 16; 1 Chron. iv. 22.)

2. A place in the north-east of Palestine. (Num. xxxiv. 11.)—See ANIM.

AIR. That transparent, colourless, invisible, light, and attenuated fluid which surrounds our globe, extending to the height of more than fifty miles above its surface. It is a substance possessing all the principal attributes of matter; and its particles are operated on like those of other bodies, by chemical action. This atmospheric ocean is the great laboratory in which most of the actions of life go on, and on the composition of which they depend. In the Scriptures, the term air is often denoted by the word "aesma; so "the fowl that fly in the midst of heaven"—in the air. God raised fire and brimstone "out of heaven"—from the air. (Rev. xix. 17; Gen. xix. 24; 2 Kings i. 10.) To "beat the air," and to "speak into the air," signify to speak or act without judgment, or to no purpose. (1 Cor. ix. 26; xiv. 9.) The "power of the air," designates that dominion which is exercised by evil spirits, whose movements are invisible and subtle as the air. (Eph. ii. 2.)

AJAH = cry, clamour. A son of Zibeon. (Gen. xxxvi. 24.)

AJALON = Deer-feld. 1. A Levitical city in the territory of Dan, situated upon the skirts of the fine plain or valley so renowned for the miracle in the history of Joshua. (Josh. x. 12; xiv. 42; 2 Chron. xxviii. 18.) It is also called "Ajielon." (Josh. xxxi. 24; Judg. i. 35; 2 Chron. xi. 10.) It is now a small village called Yalo. 2. A city in Zebulun. (Judg. xvii. 12.)

AKAN = to twist, to wrest. A descendant of Seir. (Gen. xxxvi. 27.) Also called "Jakan." (1 Chron. i. 42.)

AKKUB = wisdium. 1. A descendant of David. (1 Chron. iii. 24.) 2. One of the porters. (1 Chron. ix. 17; Ezek. ii. 42; Neh. vii. 45.) 3. One of the Nethinim. (Ezra. ii. 45.)

AKRABBIM = scorpions. A range of hills on the southern border of Judah towards the Dead Sea. (Num. xxxiv. 4; Judg. i. 36.) Instead of "the ascent of Akrabbim," we have the Hebrew "Maaleh-Ascrobim," in Josh. xv. 3.

ALABASTER. What is usually called alabaster is a kind of soft gypsum, properly sulphate of lime. But the alabaster of which jars and vases were usually made was a harder stone, opaque, and white with a shade of red or brown; hence sometimes called onyx marble, which is properly a carbonate of lime. Layard found an alabaster vase at Nimrud, with the name of Sargon on it. Several have been found in Egypt, one of which had ointment in it, which had retained its odour for several centuries. In Mark xiv. 3, the phrase "she brake the box," merely refers to the breaking of the seal which closed the vase, and kept the perfume from evaporation. (Matt. xxvii. 7; Luke vii. 37.)

ALAMETH = covering. A son of Becher. (1 Chron. vii. 8.)

ALAMMELECH = king's oak. A city of Asher. (Josh. xix. 26.)

ALAMOTH. A musical term found in the title of Psalm xlv. and 1 Chron. xv. 20; it answers to our treble, soprano, the sound of the female voice, as opposed to the deeper voice of men.

ALEMETH = covering. 1. A son of Jehoshah. (1 Chron. viii. 36; ix. 42.) 2. See Almon.

ALEXANDRIA. A celebrated city of Egypt, situated on the southern coast of the Mediterranean sea. It was founded by Alexander the Great about B.C. 338, and peopled by colonies of Greeks and Jews. Alexandria rose rapidly to a state of prosperity, becoming the centre of commercial intercourse between the East and the West, and in process of time was, both in point of magnitude and wealth, second only to Rome itself. Its circumference, according to Pliny, was about fifteen miles. It was peopled by 300,000 free citizens and as many slaves. Upon the death of Alexander, whose body was deposited in this new city, Alexandria became the regal capital of Egypt, under the Ptolemies, and rose to its highest splendour. The most celebrated philosophers from the East, as well as from Greece and Rome, resorted thither for instruction; and eminent men in every department of knowledge, were found within its walls. Ptolemy Soter, the first of that line of kings, founded the museum, the library in the temple called Serapeum, and several other magnificent works. The library, under his successors, was augmented until it contained 700,000 volumes. The Greek or Alexandrine version of the Old Testament was made here, about B.C. 282, it is said, by learned Jews, seventy-two in number; hence it is called the Septuagint, or the version of the Seventy. At the death of Cleopatra, B.C. 26, Alexandria passed into the hands of the Romans; and, after enjoying the highest fame for nearly a thousand years, it submitted to the arms of the Caliph Omar, A.D. 646. The volumes of the library were distributed as fuel to the baths in the city; and such was their number, that six months were hardly sufficient for their consumption. Under the Romans, Alexandria became an extensive market for grain; and many Jews resided there. (Acts ii. 10; vi. 9; xviii. 24; xxvii. 6.) The only surviving remains of the ancient city are a few cisterns still in use; the catacombs on the shore west of the city; the red granite or Sycnite obelisk of Thothmes III., with its fallen fellow brought thither from Heliopolis, and usually called Cleopatra’s Needle; and the column of Diocletian, more commonly known as Pompey’s Pillar. In 1854, while preparations were going on for the erection of new buildings, the workmen came upon ancient massive foundations, which are supposed to have been the remains of the building of the celebrated Alexandrian Library. The population of the modern city may be reckoned at 50,000.
ALG

ALGUM. —See ALUG.

ALIAH = lofty. One of the dukes of Edom. (1 Chron. i. 51.) He is called “Aliah” in Gen. xxxvi. 40.

ALIAN = high. A son of Shobal. (1 Chron. i. 40.) He is called “Alvan” in Gen. xxxvi. 23.

76

ALL

ALIEN. A foreigner or person born in another country, and not having the usual rights and privileges of the citizens of the country in which he lives. Among the Hebrews there were two classes of strangers:—Those who were strangers generally, and who possessed no landed property, though they might have purchased houses:—And those who were strangers, dwelling in another country without being naturalized. (Lev. xxiii. 10; Ps. lxxix. 12.) Both these classes were to be treated with kindness, and were to enjoy the same rights with other citizens. (Lev. xix. 33, 34.) Strangers might be naturalized, by submitting to circumcision and renouncing idolatry. (Deut. xxiii. 1-8.) The Edomites and Egyptians were capable of becoming citizens of Israel, after the third generation; but the Ammonites and Moabites were absolutely excluded from the right of citizenship. The term “alien,” is used figuratively in Eph. ii. 12, to denote those persons who were without Christ.

ALLEGORY. A figurative mode of discourse, which employs terms literally belonging to one thing, in order to represent another. In an allegory there are two representations, the immediate and the ultimate: but the former is only important as it leads to the latter. It is the application of the allegory, enforcing or illustrating a given truth, which constitutes its value. The parable is a kind of allegory. In the parable of the sower, we have the statement of a few simple and intelligible facts: this is the immediate representation. The narrative being finished, Christ furnished the explanation, or the ultimate representation. The “seed is the word of God,” &c. (Luke vii. 8-15.) The allegory, which is strictly a continued metaphor, is common in the Scriptures, and among all oriental nations. Among the finest occurring in the Scriptures, the following may be noted, in which the resemblance between the immediate and the ultimate representation is sufficiently apparent. (Psa. lxxx. 1-16; Eccl. xii. 2-5; Isa.
ALL

xxvii. 23—29; John x. 1—16; iv. 1—8; Gal. iv. 24—31.

ALLELUIA. See Hallelujah.

ALLON = an oak. The son of Jedediah. (1 Chron. iv. 37.)

ALLON—BAOUTH = oak of sawing. The spot where Deborah, Rebecah's nurse, was buried. (Gen. xxxv. 8.)

ALMIGHTY. See God.

ALMODAD = the master, or perhaps Almorad = the dearest. A son of Joekan. (Gen. x. 29; 1 Chron. i. 20.)

ALMON = consecrated. A sacred city of Benjamin. (Josh. xxii. 18.)

It is called "Alemeth," in 1 Chron. vi. 60.

ALMON—DIBLATHAIM = consecration of the two cakes. A place in the desert of Sinai. (Num. xxxiii. 46.)

ALMOND-TREE. A well-known fruit tree, of the same family as the peach tree, but of a more vigorous growth. The leaves are oblong and indented like a saw. The blossoms which are rose-colored, and double, grow into a fruit, the only succulent part of which is the kernel. There are two Hebrew words translated "almond-tree," "saw and shoked;" the former word probably designates the wild, and the latter the cultivated almond-tree. From the circumstance of its blossoming the earliest of any of the trees, and before it is in leaf, while the branches are yet bare, it has the name "shaked = the naked." Hence the allusion in Jer. i. 11, 12, is to the haste with which God would send his judgments, or the vigilance with which he searched over his word to fulfill it. So the tribes had almond rods, emblematical of the vigilance which became them as the leaders of God's chosen people. (Num. xxvi. 6—9.)

Aaron's rod which "brought forth buds, and bloomed blossoms, and yielded almonds," may symbolize the life, and beauty, and fruitfulness, which ought to characterize the labors of the servants of the Lord, whose suppliants "enter the holiest by the blood of Jesus." (Gen. xiii. 11; Ex. xxv. 33, 34; Num. xvii. 8; Isai. xii. 8; Heb. x. 19.)

77

ALP

ALMS. See Poor.

ALMUG-TREE. A kind of precious wood, brought along with gold and precious stones in the time of Solomon from Ophir, and employed for the ornaments of the temple and palace, and also for making musical instruments. According to 2 Chron. ii. 8, it grows in Lebanon. But "algum," in this passage is supposed to be an error of the scribes. Some modern interpreters understand the red sandal-wood to be designated, a firm, hard wood, but very red inside; while others are in favour of the common or white sandal-wood. The latter is best known and most highly esteemed in India. The wood is white, fine grained, and agreeably fragrant, and much used in cabinet work. It is a native of the mountainous parts of Malabar; and forms an important article of trade throughout the East. (1 Kings x. 11, 12.) It is called "algum," by transposition. (2 Chron. ii. 8; ix. 10, 11.)

ALOES. The name given to an odoriferous tree, of which there are two or three kinds growing in India. The name not only appears to have been given to the wood, but also to the fragrant resin or ointment derived from it, which was much used in perfumery. (Ps. lxxv. 9; Prov. vii. 17; Sol. Songs iv. 14.) Also called "lignum aloes" = aloes wood. (Num. xxiv. 8.) This odoriferous substance must not be confounded with the bitter gum of the aloe-plant used in medicine. The "mixture of myrrh and aloes," brought by Nicodemus,—not to embalm the body of Jesus, but for the purpose of being wound up with it in the linen, thus imparting an agreeable fragrance,—is said to have been "about an hundred pound weight." It might originally have been two pounds weight, the difference in the Greek text is but in one letter. (John xix. 39, 40.)

ALOTH = melch-zoph. Probably a place in Asher. (1 Kings iv. 16.)

ALPHA = the first. The first letter of the Greek alphabet, corresponding to the Hebrew Aleph. Both the Hebrews and the Greeks employed their letters as numerals; hence Aleph or Alpha = A, denoted one or the first; and Omega, the last letter of the Greek alphabet, denoted the last. Christ appropriates the appellation “Alpha and Omega” to himself, as designating his eternal and supreme divinity. (Rev. i. 8, 11; ii. 8; xxi. 6; xxii. 18; Isa. xliv. 6; xlviii. 12; Heb. xiii. 8.) The Greek letters Alpha and Omega, were used at an early period as the symbol of Christianity. They are found engraved upon the tombs in the catacombs; and also upon several Roman coins from A.D. 333 to 384.
ALP

ALPHAeus = exchange. 1. The father of James the Less, and husband of Mary, the sister of our Lord’s mother. Alphaeus is also called “Cleophas” or “Cleopse,” which is merely a different mode of pronouncing the Hebrew name; and James his son is called our Lord’s brother. (Matt. x. 3; Mark iii. 18; Luke xxiv. 10; John xix. 25.) 2. The father of Matthew or Levi. (Mark ii. 14.)

ALT

Jacob at Bethel was “the stone” which had served him for a pillow during the night. (Gen. xxviii. 18.) The altar which Moses was commanded to build, was to be made of earth. If made of stone, it was expressly required to be rough, and not hewn,—iron was forbidden to be used in its construction; it was also to be without steps. (Ex. xx. 22—26; Deut. xxvii. 5—7.) Among the heathen nations, in later times, altars were often of elegant construction, as will be seen in the wood-cut, which presents 1, an Egyptian, 2, an Assyrian, 3, a Greek, 4, a Roman, and 4, a Persian fire altar. Altars were deemed places of sanctuary, where sometimes the vilest criminals found refuge from justice. The Hebrew altars were two:—one for burnt offering, the other for incense.

ALTAR. A structure appropriated exclusively to offerings to the Deity. Though sacrifices of different kinds were offered before the flood, an altar is not mentioned until the time of Noah’s departure from the ark. (Gen. viii. 20.) The earliest altars were of various forms, and very rude in their construction, being nothing more than a square heap of stones, or mound of earth, and they were generally erected in the open air. The altar raised by

1. THE ALTAR OF BURNT OFFERING was a kind of coffer made of shittim wood, and overlaid with plates of brass, i.e. copper. It was five cubits = eight feet and nine inches square; and three cubits = five feet and three inches high. At the four corners were four horns or elevations, not for the purpose of confining the victims, but rather as the symbols of protection, they were the recognised points of sanctuary to the unfortunate who fled to the altar. It was portable, and had rings and staves for bearing it; and was furnished with all the requisite utensils. It was placed in the court before the tabernacle, towards the East. The fire used on this altar was kindled miraculously, and was perpetually maintained with the most devoted care. It was also a place of constant sacrifice, and the smoke ascended without interruption. (Ex. xxvii. 1—8; Ps. cxviii. 27; 1 Kings i. 51; ii. 28.) The altar in the temple was made of copper, and occupied the same relative position as that in front of the tabernacle. It was, however, much larger, being thirty-five feet square, and seventeen feet six inches high, or more than four times the size of the former one. (2 Chron. iv. 1.)

2. THE ALTAR OF INCENSE, sometimes called "the golden altar," was made of shittim wood, and was one cubit = twenty-one inches square, and two cubits = three feet six inches high, or only about one-fifth the size of the altar of burnt offering. The top, as well as the sides and horns, was overlaid with pure gold, and it was finished around the upper surface with a border or crown of gold. Just below this border, four golden rings were attached to each side of the altar, one near each corner. The staves for bearing the altar passed through these rings, and were made of shittim wood, also overlaid with pure gold. This altar stood within the Holy Place, near to the innermost veil, between the golden candlestick and the table of show bread. Upon it incense was burned every morning and every evening. Neither burnt sacrifice, nor meat offering, nor drink offering were permitted upon it; nor was it ever stained with blood, except once annually, on the great day of atonement. (Ex. xxx. 1—10; Lev. xvi. 18, 19.) The altar of incense in the temple was similar, but made of cedar, and overlaid with gold. (1 Kings vi. 20, 22; vii. 48; 1 Chron. xxviii. 18; Luke i. 9—11; Rev. ix. 13.)

ALTAR AT ATHENS. From Paul's assertion, and from the testimony of Pausanias and Philostratus, we learn that altars were sometimes dedicated "To Unknown Gods." Had there not been one at Athens with the inscription "To the Unknown God," Paul would not have ventured to make such a statement, which every bearer could easily have contradicted. Some suppose that the altar in question was dedicated to Jehovah, the one true God, the Creator and Lord of all things, whom the Athenians ignorantly worshipped. (Acts xvii. 22—31.)

AL-TASCHITH = destroy not. The title of the lvii., lviii., lix., and lxxv. Psalms. These words seem to have been the commencement or name of a kind of poem or song, to the melody of which these Psalms were to be sung or chanted.

ALUSH = a tongue of land, a bay, or confusion of men. A place in the wilderness of Sin. (Num. xxxiii. 13; Josh. xv. 2, 5.)

ALVAH. — See ALIAH.

ALVAN. — See ALIAN.

AMAD = people of duration. A town in Asher. (Josh. xix. 26.)

AMAL = to labour. A descendant of Asher. (1 Chron. vii. 35.)

AMALEK = people of prey, booty. The son of Eliphez, and grandson of Esau. (Gen. xxxvi. 16; 1 Chron. i. 36.) He was probably the father of the Amalekites, an ancient and powerful people, (Gen. xiv. 7; Num. xxiv. 20,) who inhabited the regions on the south of Palestine, between Idumea and Egypt, and also to the eastward of the Dead Sea and Mount Seir. They lived generally in migrating parties, in caves or in tents. They appear likewise, to have settled down here and there in Palestine, hence the Mount of the Amalekites in the territory of Ephraim, (Judg. v. 14; xii. 15,) and a city. (1 Sam. xv. 5.) The Hebrews had scarcely passed the Red Sea, when the Amalekites attacked them. (Ex. xvii. 8.) Joshua defeated them; and after four hundred years, Saul attacked and destroyed them as a nation. (1 Sam. xv. 2—33.) David utterly routed them; (1 Sam. xxx. 17;) nevertheless, a small remnant seems to have escaped and subsisted afterwards, till at last the word of the Lord was fulfilled to the very letter, (Num. xxiv.
20) and their name was blotted from the earth, in their utter destruction. (1 Chron. iv. 43.) The "Agagite," in Est. iii. 1, 10; viii. 5, 8, was most likely an Amalekite, whose ancestor had escaped from the general carnage.

AMAM = to join together. A city in the southern part of Judah. (Josh. xvi. 26.)

AMANA = fixed, permanent. A mountain ridge of Anti-Lebanon. (Sol. Songs iv. 8.)—See AMANA.

AMARIAH = whom Jehovah said, or promised. 1. The grand-father of Zadok. (1 Chron. vi. 7.) 2. The son of Amariah. (1 Chron. vi. 11; Ezra vii. 3.) 3. One who sealed the covenant. (Neh. x. 3; xii. 2.) 4. One who returned from exile. (Ezra x. 42.) 5. A descendant of Youah. (Neh. xi. 4.) 6. The great-grandfather of Zephaniah. (Zeph. i. 1.) 7. A priest in the time of king Jehoshaphat. (2 Chron. xiii. 11.) 8. A descendant of Moses. (1 Chron. xxiii. 19; xxiv. 23.) 9. A Levite. (C Chron. xxxii. 15.)

AMASAI = swords. 1. A kinsman of David, and chief captain in Absalom's army. After Absalom's death, David pardoned Amasa, and made him captain of the host in the room of Joab, by whom he was assassinated. (2 Sam. xvii. 25; xix. 14; xx. 9; 1 Chron. ii. 17.) 2. A descendant of Ephraim. (2 Chron. xxviii. 12.)

AMASA = burdensome. One of the priests. (Neh. xi. 13.)

AMASIAH = whom Jehovah bears. A mighty man of valour. (2 Chron. xvii. 16.)

AMAZIAH = whom Jehovah strengthens. 1. The son and successor of Joash, king of Judah. He gained a decisive victory over his enemies in the Valley of Salt, as the prophet had foretold. But when he afterwards worshipped rods which he had taken from the ten, setting them up at Jerusalem, and refusing to listen to the warnings of a prophet, the success of his arms ceased. He engaged in war with Jehoshaph, king of Israel, by whom he was defeated and taken prisoner, at Beth-shemesh. Jehoshaph restored the captive monarch to his throne. Amaziah was finally assassinated at Lachish, after a reign of twenty-nine years, B.C. 808. (2 Kings xiv. 1—20; 2 Chron. xxv. 1—28.)

A priest of the golden calf at Bethel. (Amos vii. 16—17.) 3. A descendant of Simeon. (1 Chron. iv. 34.) 4. The name of a Levite. (1 Chron. vi. 45.)

AMBASSADOR. In the Scriptures this term designates a person appointed to some special and urgent business in a foreign country. His duty was generally limited to the delivering a message and receiving the answer. (Isa. xxxvii. 7; Lk. xiv. 33.) The term is also used for Interpreter; (2 Chron. xxxiii. 31.) also for Messenger. (Isa. xviii. 2.) In 2 Cor. v. 18—20, the term designates those divinely commissioned to propose the terms of reconciliation.

AMBER. A beautiful bituminous substance, found in Prussia, and near the shores of the Baltic Sea. It is susceptible of a fine polish, yellow and orange being its prevailing colours. But the Hebrew word balsam denotes balsam brass or copper. The Septuagint and Vulgate render it eleusine, which denotes not only amber, but also a shining metal composed of gold and silver, susceptible of a high degree of lustre, and which was held in high esteem by the ancients. Some think platina is intended. (Ezek. i. 27; iii. 2; compared with Rev. i. 15.)

AMEN. A Hebrew word signifying sure, certain; and metaphorically, true, faithful. It occurs usually at the end of a sentence, where it serves to confirm the words which precede, and invoke the fulfilment of them, so be it. (Num. v. 23; Deut. xxxii. 15—26; 1 Kings i. 86.) It sometimes occurs at the beginning of a sentence, for the sake of emphasis, assuredly, in truth, truly, and is sometimes trans-laced "i.e.," "verily." (Jer. xxviii. 6; Josh. vii. 20; Job xix. 5; Matt. xxv. 40; John iii. 3, 5, 11; v. 19; viii. 51; Rev. i. 7.) It also occurs after ascensions of praise, hymns, prayers; Amem, so be it. (Ps. xli. 13; cvi. 48; 1 Chron. xiv. 16; xvi. 38; Matt. vi. 13; Rom. i. 25; ix. 5; Rev. i. 6; v. 14; xix. 4; Neh. viii. 6; Heb. xiii. 26; 1 Cor. xiv. 16; xvi. 24.) The promises are "yes and amen" = most true and faithful. (2 Cor. i. 20.) It is one of the titles of our Lord: "The Amen, the faithful and true witness." (Rev. iii. 14; i. 5; Isa. lxv. 16.)
AMES

AMETHYST. A precious stone. It is a kind of fine blue transparent quartz, passing over into blauw-blue, greyish-blue, also into purple-red. The ancient Greeks believed that the amethyst afforded a protection against drunkenness, and dispelled it in those who wore or touched it; from this circumstance it has received its name. So also the Rabbinics derive its Hebrew name from its supposed power to procure dreams to the wearer; because the root helem signifies to dream. It was one of the stones in the high-priest's breast-plate. (Ex. xxviii. 19; xxxix. 12; Rev. xvi. 20.)

AM — an architect, builder. One whose posterity returned from the exile. (Ezra ii. 57.) He is called "Amon," in Neh. vii. 59.

AMINADAB — See AMMINADAB.

AMINON. — See AMNON.

AMMITA — true, veracious. The father of Jonathan. (2 Kings xiv. 25; Jon. i. 1.)

AMMAH — foundation. A hill opposite Gibeah. (2 Sam. ii. 24.)

AMMI — my kindred or people. A symbohcal name given to the house of Judah. (Hos. ii. 1) — See LO-AMMI.

AMMIEL — kindred of God, i.e. servants or worshippers of God. 1. The son of Gemasiai. (Num. xiii. 12.) 2. The father of Machir. (2 Sam. ix. 4, 5; xvii. 27.) 3. A son of Obed-edom. (1 Chron. xxvi. 5.) 4. The father of Bathshabea. (1 Chron. iii. 5.) He is called "Elam," in 2 Sam. xi. 3.

AMMHHUD — kindred of Judah. 1. The father of Talmai. (2 Sam. xiii. 37.) He is also called "Ammihur," in the margin. 2. A descendant of Ephraim. (Num. i. 10; ii. 18; 1 Chron. vi. 26.) 3. A descendant of Simeon. (Num. xxxiv. 20.) 4. A descendant of Naphtali. (Num. xxxiv. 28.) 5. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. ix. 4.)

AMMIHUR = kindred of nobles. — See AMMHHUD.

AMMINADIB — kindred of the priests. 1. A son of Aram, of the tribe of Judah. (Ex. vi. 23; Num. i. 7; Ruth iv. 19; Matt. i. 4.) 2. A Levite. (1 Chron. xv. 10, 11.) 3. A Levite. (1 Chron. vi. 22.)

AMMINADIB. This is not a proper name in the Hebrew; the words ought to be rendered "the attendant of the prince:" alluding to the extremely light and swift chariots of the princey retinue. (Sol. Songs vi. 12.)

AMMISHADDAI = kindred, or servant of the Almighty. The father of Ahiezer. (Num. i. 12; ii. 25; x. 25.)

AMMIZABAD = kindred of the givers. An officer in David's army. (1 Chron. xxvii. 6.)

AMMON. — See BEK-AMMI.

AMMONITES. The descendants of Ammon, or Ben-Ammi, the son of Lot, by his youngest daughter. They destroyed an ancient race of giants called Zem-Zammim, and seized their country, which lay beyond the Jordan, between the Jabbok and the Ammon, (Deut. ii. 19—21), extending a considerable distance into Arabia. Their metropolis was Rabbah, — Rabbath Ammon, afterwards called "Philadelphia," which stood on the Jabbok. They were gross idolators; their chief idol being Moloch. The Ammonites were spared when the Hebrews passed on their way from Egypt. (Deut. ii. 19; 2 Chron. xx. 10.) The Ammonites often invaded the land of Israel. (Judges x. 7; Jer. xlix. 1—6.) Jotham, the king of Judah, subdued them, and exacted from them an annual tribute. The most dreadful judgments were threatened against them and their chief city, because they insolutely triumphed over the Hebrews in the days of their captivity: (Ezek. xxv. 2—10.) and every throat was executed to the utmost, in due time, as profane history abundantly attests. Their chief city "is a stable for camels, and a couching place for flocks." (Ezek. xxi. 28—29; Zeph. ii. 8—11.)

AMNON = faithful. 1. The eldest son of David: (1 Chron. iii. 1; 2 Sam. iii. 2; xiii. 1—39.) He is called "Ammon," in the margin of 2 Sam. xiii. 20.
2. A son of Shimon. (1 Chron. iv. 20.)
AMOK = deep. A priest who returned from the exile. (Neh. xii. 7, 20.)
1. AMON = glory or concealed splendor. The supreme god of the ancient Egyptians, worshipped with great pomp at No-Ammon=Thebes, and compared by the Greeks to Jupiter. In hieroglyphics the name is written Amm, and Amon-Ra = Ammon-Sun. The sun was added to his name to designate the divinity. The inferior gods were the descendants of Amon. As several of the gods of the ancient heathen were the ancestors or founders of the nations, or mighty heroes, it is not improbable that Amon was Ham, the son of Noah, deified by his descendants. He is ordinarily represented upon the monuments at Thebes in the human form, wearing on his head the tef-kr or red cap, emblem of dominion of the lower world, surmounted by two tall feathered plumes, in front of which are the disc of the sun and un-eyes of eternity. A kind of bandlet depends from this crown to the ground; round his neck is a collar; on his arms are armlets and bracelets; round his body a gathered linen tunic, fastened by a belt; and on his left leg anklelets. In his hand he holds the gum or sceptre, and, the symbol of life, denoting life and power. His flesh was coloured azure blue, alluding to his celestial functions. The ram was the living emblem of Amon, hence a secondary form of this idol is ram-headed, indicative of courage and power. Among the shrines which were carried in procession, the shrine or image of Amon was also carried about. The name Amon is rendered "multitude;" (Jer. xlvi. 25; Ezek. xxx. 15; "populous;" (Nab. iii. 8; but in the margin of the first and last passages we have properly "Amon."—See No-Ammon.)

2. AMON = an architect, builder. The son and successor of Manasseh, king of Judah. He appears to have derived little benefit from the instructive example of his father, since he forsook Jehovah, and restored idolatry. He was assassinated in his own house in the second year of his reign, a.d. 640. (2 Kings xxv. 19—26; 2 Chron. xxxiii. 21—25; Matt. i. 10.)
2. A governor of Samaria. (1 Kings xxvii. 26.)

—See AMI.

AMORITES = mountain-dweller. A Canaanitish people, apparently the largest and most powerful of all, and whose name is sometimes taken in a wide sense so as to include all the other Canaanitish tribes. (Gen. xiv. 16; xlviii. 22; Am. ii. 9, 10; Deut. i. 20.) A part of them dwelt in the mountainous tracts, which afterwards belonged to the tribe of Judah, and were subject to five kings. (Gen. xiv. 7, 18; Num. xiii. 29.) Another part had possession of the country beyond the Jordan, northward of the Arnon as far as to the Jabbok, and even beyond this stream; (Num. xxi. 13—35; xxii. 39;) these were subject to two kings.—of Heshbon and Bashan. (Deut. iv. 47; Josh. ii. 10.) The Amorites attempted to oppose the Hebrews, in their journey to Canaan, but were defeated, and their territory taken and divided between the tribes of Judah, Benban, and Gad.
AMO

AMOS = harden. 1. The third of the minor prophets, was a shepherd of Tekoa, a small town of Judah. He prophesied concerning Israel, in the days of Uzziah, king of Judah, and Jeroboam the second, king of Israel, about B.C. 790. The Book of Amos takes a high rank among the writings of the prophets. The writer must have been a man of some education, as is evident from his observations relating to geography, history, and astronomy. He is full of fancy and imagery, concise, and yet simple and perspicuous. (Am. i. 1, 7, 10—17.) 2. A son of Naum. (Luke iii. 25.)

AMOZ = strong. The father of the prophet Isaiah. (Isa. i. 1 ; ii. 1.)

AMPHIPOLIS = around the city. The metropolis of the southern region of Macedonia, situated near the mouth of the river Strymon, which, indeed, nearly flowed around it, and gave occasion for its name. The ruins are still to be seen near the village Yambolia. (Acts xxiv. 1.)

AMPLIAS = more ample. A Christian at Rome. (Rom. xvi. 8.)

AMRAM = kindred of the high. 1. The father of Aaron, Miriam, and Moses. (Ex. vi. 20 ; Lev. xviii. 12.) His descendants were called “ Amramites.” (Num. iii. 27.) 2. One who returned from the exile. (Ex. x. 34.) 3. See HERNAN.

AMRAPHEL = keeper of the gods. A king of Shinar. (Gen. xiv. 1, 9.)

AMZI = strong. 1. One of the Levites. (I Chron. vi. 46.) 2. One of the priests. (Neh. xi. 12.)

ANAB = place of clusters. A town in the mountains of Judah. (Josh. xi. 21 ; xv. 50.) It is now a small village not far from Carmel.

ANAH = answer of prayer. 1. A son of Seir. (Gen. xxxvi. 20, 29) 2. A son of Zibeon, and grandson of Seir. (Gen. xxxvi. 24.) In Gen. xxxvi. 2, 14, Anah is called “the daughter of Zibeon,” but obviously it should be read son.—See MULZ.

83

ANA

ANAARATH = groaning, mourning. A city in Issachar. (Josh. xix. 19.)

ANAIAH = whom Jehovah answers. One who stood by Ezra. (Neh. viii. 4 ; x. 22.)

ANAKIM = long-necked, i.e. men of tall stature. Anak, the son of Arba, had three sons, who were giants, and were founders of a Canaanite tribe, famous for their stature and fierceness. The seat of the tribe before the invasion of the Hebrews, was in the vicinity of Hebron. They were nearly exterminated by the Hebrews, so that only a few remained afterwards in the cities of the Philistines. (Num. xiii. 22, 33 ; Deut. ix. 2 ; Josh. xi. 21, 22 ; xiv. 15 ; Jer. xlvii. 5.)

ANAM = fountain of water. An Egyptian tribe. (Gen. x. 13.)

ANAMARLECH = image of the king. One of the idols adored by the inhabitants of Sepharvaim. It probably represented the moon. (2 Kings xvii. 31.)

ANAN = a cloud. One who sealed the covenant. (Neh. x. 26.)

ANANI = clouds. A son of Eloason. (I Chron. iii. 24.)

ANANIAH = whom Jehovah covers or protects. 1. The father of Maaseiah. (Neh. iii. 23.) 2. A town in Benjamin. (Neh. xi. 32.)

ANANIAS = whom Jehovah hath given. 1. A high priest of the Jews, about A.D. 47. In consequence of some misunderstanding between the Jews and Samaritans, Ananias was deposed, and sent as a prisoner to Rome by Quirinius, governor of Syria. Jonathan was appointed in his place but being murdered, there was an interval in which this office was vacant. Ananias, being acquitted by Claudius, returned to Jerusalem; and during the interval, without any authority resumed the office of high-priest, as Saggas, (vicar,) until Israel was appointed by Agrippa. During this interval Paul was arraigned before the Sanhedrim; hence the force and propriety of his remark, on his illegal treatment by Ananias: “ I wist not, brethren, that he was the high priest,” (Acts xxi. 1—5; xxiv. 1.) Ananias was subsequently slain in a tumult.
ANA

2. A Jew of Jerusalem, the husband of Sapphira, both professed converts to the Christian faith, whose sudden death was caused by the Deity as a direct punishment for the sin of falsehood. (Acts vi. 1—6.) Such severity in the infancy of the new religion was necessary; as without some such peculiar example the early church would have been speedily overrun with impostors.

ANATH = answer to prayer. The father of Shamgar. (Judg. iii. 31; v. 6.)

ANATHEMA = set apart, separated, devoted. This Greek word generally denoted among the Jews the absolute, irrevocable and entire separation of a person from the communion of the faithful, or from the privileges of society, or from the number of the living; or the devoting of any man, animal, city or thing, to be extinguished, destroyed, consumed, and, as it were, annihilated. (Josh. vi. 17—21; vii. 1—36.) Another kind of anathema, very peculiarly expressed, occurs in I Cor. xvi. 22: "If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema Maranatha." This last word is made up of two Syro-Chaldaic words, signifying "The Lord cometh;" that is, the Lord will surely come, and will execute this curse, by condemning those who love him not.—See Accursed.

ANATHOTH = answers to prayer. 1. A Levitical city in Benjamin, four miles north from Jerusalem, now called Avot. (Josh. xxi. 18; I Sam. xx. 30.) 2. A son of Bocher. (1 Chron. viii. 8.)

ANCHOR. The anchors of ancient ships, do not appear in form to have been much unlike those of the present day. (Acts xxvii. 29.) The term "anchor" is often used metaphorically by ancient heathen writers, but not always in allusion to a sea-storm. It sometimes designates hope, and also protection, or means of safety. "The sacred anchor" denoted the refuge or sanctuary which existed at sacred places, which afforded security to those who fled to them. So in Heb. vi. 18—20, the faithful are represented as having fled for refuge to lay hold upon the object of hope set before them,—which is provided for them, as an anchor or asylum of life, both safe and firm, inasmuch as it is in the very interior of the most holy place where Jesus is.

ANCIENT OF DAYS. A title applied to Jehovah, in reference to his eternal and unchanging essence. (Dan. vii. 9, 13, 22; Misc. v. 2.)

ANDREW = a disciple. One of the twelve; he was a Galilean, born at Bethsaida; and was at first a follower of John the Baptist, but afterwards became a disciple of Jesus, along with his brother Simon Peter. (John i. 35, 41, 45; Matt. x. 2.) Tradition says he was crucified at Patrae, a city of Achaia.

ANDRONICUS = victorious man. A Jewish christian. (Rom. xvi. 7.)

ANEM = two fountains. A Levitical city of Issachar. (1 Chron. vi. 73.) In Josh. xix. 21; xxii. 29, the same place is called "En-Gannim." The pleasant and thriving place called Je-saia, lying on the borders of the great plain of Jesse, is now generally identified with the ancient Anem. It is still noted for a beautiful and copious streamlet of the purest water running through the midst of the place.

ANER = young man. 1. A Canaan- itian chieftain. (Gen. xiv. 13, 24.) 2. —See TAANACH.

ANGEL = a messenger. This term does not indicate either the nature or the grade of the heavenly intelligences called angels, but merely the function they sustain. They are called spirits; (Heb. i. 14;) gods; (Ps. cxvii. 7;) sons of God; (Job i. 6; ii. 1; xiii. 7;) servants; (Job iv. 18;) holy ones or saints; (Job v. 1; xiv. 15; Dan. iv. 13; xvii. 22;) watchers; (Dan. iv. 17;) and hosts or armies. (1 Kings xxii. 19.) They are represented as surrounding the throne of the Deity; and as being employed as his messengers in administering the affairs of the world. It would appear that the angels were created.
before the present arrangement of our earth. (Job xxxvii. 4—7.) They are spiritual beings, though from this, it is not necessary to conclude that they have no body—no material frame at all. To be absolutely immaterial is probably peculiar to the Father of Spirits alone. Angels are represented as occupying a very exalted rank in the scale of being; and as very numerous; also of different gradations. Hence we read of Cherubim, of Seraphim, of an Archangel, or chief angel, and of Thrones, Dominations, Principalities, Powers, Authorities, Living ones, and an innumerable company of Angels. (Ps. lxviii. 17; Dan. vii. 10; Matt. xxv. 31; Luke i. 9—14; 1 Cor. iv. 9; Heb. xii. 22; Jude 9.) Of their strength we may judge from Gen. xix. 15; 2 Kings xix. 36; 2 Sam. xxiv. 16; Ps. ciii. 20; 2 Pet. ii. 11; Rev. v. 2; xvii. 21. Of their superhuman activity from Judg. xiii. 20; Isa. vi. 2—6; Matt. xiii. 49; xxvi. 53; Acts xvii. 23; Rev. xvii. 13. And of their appearance and employment we may form some idea from the following passages: Gen. xvi. 7—11; xix. 1; Heb. xii. 2; Judg. xii. 5; Ezek. x. 1—22; Dan. iii. 28; vi. 22; Matt. iv. 11; xvii. 10; xvii. 2—7; Luke i. 19; xvi. 22; xxii. 43; Acts xii. 9; Heb. ii. 18; 2 Thess. i. 7; Rev. x. 1, 2, 6. Angels are to bear an important part in the great transactions which will conclude the existing dispensation on earth. (Matt. xiii. 39; xxv. 31—33; I Thess. iv. 16.) They will be the future companions of the heirs of salvation. (Heb. xii. 22, 23; Rev. v. 11, 12.) They are not proper objects of adoration. (Col. ii. 18; Rev. xii. 10.) The angels in heaven have never sinned, and are not therefore partakers of the benefits of redemption as men are. Yet it is obvious, that as this wonderful scheme of mercy and grace declares and illustrates the infinite glory of the divine attributes and perfections, so their conceptions of the divine character are enlarged by the contemplation of it, and their happiness greatly increased. (Eph. iii. 10; 1 Pet. i. 12.) From Matt. xxv. 41; Rev. xii. 9; compared with 2 Pet. ii. 4; Jude 6, we learn that some of the angels "sinned," they kept not their first estate. As they were created free agents, God gave unto them a law of perfect obedience; and as every angel would be present when the law was given, they would all know the penalty attached to the breach of that law, to be everlasting punishment. A number of the angels violated the law—they sinned, consequently they were cast into everlasting fire, whence it is impossible for them to be redeemed. (Heb. ii. 15.) These are called "the Devil and his Angels." The term "angel" is also applied to the messengers of the Apocalyptic churches. (Rev. ii. 1, 12; iii. 1, 7, 14; Mal. ii. 7.)

ANGEL OF THE LORD. A title given to the Word of God, before His incarnation, in His different appearances to the patriarchs and others. (Gen. xvi. 7; Ex. xxii. 20; Acts vii. 30—38.) In the Septuagint of Isa. ix. 6, He is called "the Angel of the great Counsel." And in Isa. lxiii. 9, He is called "the Angel of His presence." (Mal. iii. 1.)

ANGER. We naturally possess certain mental affections called propensities, which, when properly restrained, serve a good purpose, both individually and socially; but when let loose, or badly regulated by the understanding, lead to the commission of vicious actions, which, in moments of calm reflection, we deeply lament and regret. Irritability of temper, as demonstrated in the passion of anger, is one of the most unhappy of these derangements of our intellect; and in the Scriptures, it is reckoned among chief sins, and as such is severely reprobated. (Prov. xiv. 17, 29; xvi. 32; Eph. iv. 26, 31; Col. iii. 8.) When ascribed to holy beings, it is used figuratively, to denote high displeasure at sin. (Neh. v. 6; 2 Pet. ii. 7, 8.) Anger is frequently attributed to God; not that he is capable of those violent emotions which this passion produces, but because he punishes the wicked with the severity of a superior provoked to anger. (Ps. vii. 11; xvi. 11.)
ANGLE.—See Fish.

ANIAM = sighting of the people. A son of Shemidaah. (1 Chron. vii. 19.)

ANIM = fountains. One of the towns of the mountains of Judah. (Josh. xv. 50.) Dr. Wilson thinks that el-Ghuwein, a place with ruins near Dhabariyah, represents the ancient Anim.

ANISE. An annual, umbelliferous plant, the seeds of which have an aromatic smell, a pleasant warm taste, and a carminative quality. By “anise,” in Matt. xxiii. 23, the “dill” is meant, as in the margin.—See DILL.

ANKLETS. The ornaments for the ankles, made of silver or gold, or iron, are called in Isa. iii. 16, 18, “tinkling ornaments about their feet.” Anklets of solid silver are worn by the wives of some of the richer Arabs, and it is not uncommon for young women to wear a string of beads on their feet. The dancing girls of India wear anklets; and similar anklets are yet seen in the ancient paintings of Egypt.

ANNA = answer to prayer. A prophetess and a widow; who, at the advanced age of eighty-four years, listened to the prophetic blessing which Simon uttered while he held the infant Redeemer in his arms, and joined in it with great fervour. (Luke ii. 36.)

ANNAS = answer, response. A high priest of the Jews, appointed by Cyrenius pro-consul of Syria, about A.D. 8; but deposed eleven years after by Valerius Gratus, procurator of Judea. After several changes, the office was at length given to Joseph or Caiphas, the son-in-law of Annas. A.D. 26. As Caiphas continued high priest until A.D. 36, Annas appears to have acted as his Sagan or vicar. Hence we read, “Annas and Caiphas being the high priests.” (Luke iii. 2.; John xviii. 12, 24; Acts iv. 6.)

ANOINTING. When Jacob poured oil upon the stone which had served him for a pillow, such action designated its consecration to the service of God. (Gen. xxviii. 1, 8; xxxi. 13.) The custom, among the Hebrews, of setting the high priests and kings apart for their dignified offices, by anointing, appears to have not only symbolized the effusion of the requisite gifts and graces, qualifying them for their important offices, but also to have been symbolical of that higher union by which the Messiah was inaugurated as our Prophet, Priest, and King, when he was “anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows.” (Ps. ii. 2.; Isa. lxi. 1.; Dan. ix. 24.; Matt. iii. 16, 17.; Luke iii. 16.; Acts iv. 27.; x. 38.) Among the Hebrews “the oil of holy anointing” was carefully prepared according to the divine prescription. (Ex. xxx. 23—25.) At the inauguration of Aaron the ointment seems to have been expended so profusely that it ran down on his beard, and on to the border or collar of his coat or ephod. (Ps. cxxxiii. 2.; Ex. xxix. 7.) The inauguration of the Hebrew kings by anointing constituted them “the Lord’s anointed;” though Saul, David, Solomon, and Josiah are the only kings mentioned as receiving this sign of investiture with royal authority. It may have been only necessary in those cases where there was danger of the right to the succession being forcibly disputed. (1 Sam. x. 1.; 2 Sam. ii. 4.; v. 1—3.; 1 Kings xix. 15, 16.; 2 Kings xi. 12—20.; 1 Chron. xi. 1—3.; 2 Chron. xxiii. 11.)

The private anointings were prophetic symbols that such persons should eventually reign. (1 Sam. ix. 16.; xvi. 1—13.; 2 Kings ix. 3.) The Hebrews also anointed the sacred vessels of the tabernacle. (Ex. xxx. 29—29.) The custom of anointing with oil or perfume on festival occasions, and at entertainments, was common among the Hebrews, and also among the Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans. (2 Sam. xiv. 2.; Ps. xxvii. 10.; Prov. xxvi. 10.; Esol. ix. 8.; Matt. vi. 17.; Luke vii. 37.; John xii. 8.) The custom still continues in the East, and is often practised as an expression of private hospitality and friendship. The medicinal properties of oil were well known. The apostolic direction respecting the anointing of the sick with oil, shows us that, together with prayer, the appro-praise means of healing should be employed in dependence upon, or in the same of the Lord. (James viii. 34; Mark viii. 13; Luke xix. 34.) The bodies of the dead were often anointed, not with a view to preserve them from corruption, but to impart a fragrance to the linen in which the corpse was wrapped. (Mark xiv. 8; xvi. 1; Luke xxiii. 56; John xix. 40.)

ANT. This little insect is remarkable for industry, economy, and architectural skill. The old accounts of the manner in which they collect grain, and prevent it from germinating, is shown by modern entomologists to be entirely fanciful, as is also the supposition that they lay up food for winter, as they become torpid in that season, and do not require any. That with considerable prudence and foresight, they make use of the proper seasons to collect a quantity of provisions sufficient for their purposes, is rightly inferred from their whole character and habits; and the reproach of the slug-gard is, that he lets the summer pass and the harvest end, while he is indulging in sloth and idleness. (Prov. vi. 6; xxx. 25.) That the ant is "exceedingly wise" is evident from its history and habits, which have been investigated by Reaumur, Huber, Kirby, and Spence, and other naturalists. They dwell together in societies, but have no ruler, one soul seems to inspire the family. They do not feed on grain, but are chiefly carnivorous, occasionally eating a saccharine exudation from a kind of aphides or plant lice. Their papes or eggs, which resemble grains of wheat or rice, are heaped up by hundreds in their lodges. The habitations of some kinds of ants, are constructed with immense labour, of earth, leaves, and fragments of wood, and are formed into regular stories, sometimes to the number of thirty or forty, with galleries and pillars of very perfect proportions; and it is said that they are more than five hundred times the height of the builders; and that if the same proportions were preserved between human dwellings and those who build them, our houses would be four or five times higher than the pyramids of Egypt.

ANTICHRIST = an opposer of Christ. This word is found only in the epistles of John, and is there defined to be, collectively, all who deny that Jesus is the Messiah, and that the Messiah is come in the flesh. What class of persons the apostle had in view is unknown; probably Jewish adversaries. (1 John ii. 18; 22; iv. 3; 2 John 7.) Many of the early Christians seem to have looked forward to some one great power or antichrist, who should precede the second coming of our Lord, and who would oppose, with great virulence and blasphemy, the doctrines and disciples of Christ. The same power is supposed to be meant in 2 Thes. ii. 8—9; 1 Tim. iv. 1; Rev. xvii. 1—18; xviii. 1—24. Hence some have supposed that the Papal power is intended to be represented by the term "antichrist." But who does not know that the principle of Romanism is of far wider range and more extended influence than the Romish community. What church is entirely destitute of it? Nay, what community has not much of it? Its leaven may be seen quietly impregnating the minds of stereotyped professors of Christianity everywhere, in phases and forms innumerable.

ANTIOCH = place that withstands or lasts out. 1. A city of Syria, situated on the river Orontes, and the royal residence and metropolis of all Syria. It was founded by Seleucus Nicanor, and named by him after the name of his father Antiochus. This city was a place of great opulence and commercial enterprise, and it is celebrated by Cicero as being opulent and abounding in men of taste and letters. It was also a place of great resort for the Jews, to whom invitations and encouragements were held out by Seleucus Nicanor. The distinctive name of Christians was here first applied to the followers of Jesus. And it was the centre whence issued the first systematic effort to bring the Gentiles into the enjoyment of Christianity. The calamities which have befallen the city of Antioch are probably without parallel, both in respect to number and severity. It has been besieged and plundered at least fifteen times, and in one instance 117,000 persons were slain or taken prisoners. Three times it has been visited with famine, twice with fire, and once with plague; and four times it was overthrown by earthquakes, by one of which 25,000 persons are supposed to have perished. These visitations of God, connected with the sins and idolatries of the people, have long since reduced the city to desolation. The splendid buildings of ancient times have given place to mean hovels, and a population of 500,000 souls is reduced to 10,000, and those are wretched and miserable in the extreme. In 1822, an earthquake overwhelmed even the ruins of the city; so that it may be said, with the force of literal truth, that every thing relating to Antioch is past. It is now called Antakia; most of the houses are built of mud and straw, and the place exhibits every appearance of misery and wretchedness. There are several ancient coins of Antioch in existence. (Acts xi. 19—27.)
ANT

2. A city of Pisidia, so called because it was attached to that province, and was its capital, although situated in Phrygia. It was founded by a colony from Magnesia, on the Seleucis, under the auspices of Antiochus. Paul and Barnabas preached here; and we have a fuller abstract of one of Paul's sermons at this place, than of any of the apostolic discourses. (Acts xiii. 14.) The ruins of this city are still to be seen on an isolated rock, about one mile and a half from the modern town of Yalobatsh.

ANTIPAS = for all. A "faithful martyr" in the primitive church. (Rev. ii. 13.)

ANTIPATRIS = for the father. A city of Palestine, situated in the midst of a fertile and well-watered plain, between Cesarea and Lydda, on the site of a former city Caphar saba. (Acts xxiii. 81.)

APH

It was founded by Herod the Great, and called "Antipatris," in honour of his father, Antipater. It is now a village of some size called Kefer saba. (1 Chron. viii. 24.)

ANTOTHIJA = answers from Jescoah. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 24.)

ANTOTITE—See ANATHOTH.

ANUB = bound together. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 8.)

APE. This animal was among the articles of merchandise imported from Ophir, in Solomon's ships. (1 Kings x. 22; 2 Chron. ix. 22.) The ape was an object of worship among the Egyptians, and is still such in many parts of India. We have an account of a temple in India, dedicated to the worship of the ape or monkey, supported by seven hundred columns, not inferior to those of the Roman Pantheon.

APELLES = expelling. A Christian mentioned by Paul. (Rom. xvi. 10.)

APHARSACHITES, and APHARSATHCHITES. The names of two Assyrian tribes, otherwise unknown; unless, perhaps, they are to be regarded as one and the same. Not improbably they were the Pasaqemai, between Persia and Media. (Ezra iv. 9; v. 6; compare Herodt. i. 101.)

APHARITES. The name of a tribe from which a colony was sent to Samaria. Hiller understands by them the Parrhasii, a tribe of eastern Media. Gesenius thinks the Persians themselves are meant. (Ezra iv. 9.)

APHIS = strength, a fortress, strong city. 1. A city in the tribe of Asher, called "Aphik" in Judg. i. 31. The site is probably marked by the ruins called Afik, in Lebanon, between Byblus and Baalbek. (Josh. xiii. 4; xix. 30.)

2. A city probably on the coast of Galilee, the site of which is still called Feik. (1 Kings xx. 26.)

3. A city in Issachar, near Jesreel. (1 Sam. iv. 1; xxix. 15; Josh. xiii. 18.)

APHEKEAH = strong place. A city in the mountains of Judah. (Josh. xv. 53.)
APHIAH = rekindled, refreshed. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Sam. ix. 1.)
APHIAK. — See APHEK.
APHRAH. — See OPHRAH.
APHSES = dispersion. The founder of the eighteenth class in David's division of the priests. (1 Chron. xxiv. 15.)
APOLLONIA = region of Apollo. A city of Macedonia, situated between Amphipolis and Thessalonica. It was so called from a splendid temple erected in honour of Apollo; it is now called Ericiu. (Acts xvii. 1.)
APOLLO = destroyer. A Jewish Christian, born at Alexandria, distinguished for his eloquence and success in propagating the Christian religion. (Acts xviii. 24—28; xix. 1; 1 Cor. i. 12.)
APOLLYON. — See ABADDON.
APOSTLE. The Greek word apostolos signifies one sent forth, a messenger, ambassador; and is used in the new Testament as a descriptive appellation of the immediate successors of Jesus Christ. They were eyewitnesses of His power and glory, and were invested with His authority, filled with His spirit, instructed with His doctrines and services, and chosen to organise His church. (Acts i. 21, 22.) Their names were, Simon Peter, also called Cephas, and Barjona; Andrew; James and John, sons of Zebedee; Philip; Bartholomew, also called Nathanael; Thomas, also called Didymus; Matthew, also called Levi; Simon Zeleisure, or the Cessaree; James; and Jude, who is also called Judas Lebæus, and Thaddeus, son of Alpheus; and Judas Iscariot. The name is also given to Matthias, who was chosen in the place of Judas Iscariot; to Paul, the apostle of the Gentiles; to Barnabas, and others. (Acts i. 18—28.) The apostles, in conformity to their commission, travelled about from city to city, and village to village, first within the confines of Judæa, and at no great distance from Jerusalem; but afterwards, in more extensive circuits, from one end of the empire to the other, planting churches in every place; and there is every reason to suppose that the apostles and disciples preached the gospel in every part of the then known world before the destruction of Jerusalem. (Matt. x. 1—42; xxviii. 19, 20; Mark xvi. 15; Col. i. 6.) The term "Apostle" is applied with singular propriety to Jesus Christ, as in the character of Messiah He is emphatically "the Apostle and High Priest of our profession," —the Sent of God to save the world. (Heb. iii. 1.)
APOTHECARY. This word occurs in Ex. xxx. 25; but the original term is correctly rendered in the margin "perfumer." The holy oils, ointments, and perfumes were probably prepared by one of the priests, who had properly qualified himself for the purpose while in Egypt.
APPAIM = the nostrils. A son of Nadab. (1 Chron. ii. 30, 31.)
APPEAL. The ancient Hebrews had the right of appeal to a superior tribunal in cases of importance. (Deut. xvii. 8—13; 2 Chron. xix. 8—11.) By the Sempronian law, every accused Roman citizen had a right to carry his case to the people, and in the later times to the emperor at Rome, by appeal from the judgment of the president or magistrate. Hence Paul availed himself of his rights, when he said, "I appeal unto Caesar." (Acts xxv. 11, 12.)
APPHIAH = rekindled, refreshed. A Christian female. (Philem. 2.)
APPII FORUM. A small city or market town, near the head of the canal which drained the Pontine marshes, about forty miles from Rome. The name is derived from the circumstance that it is on the Appian way; a noted road leading from Rome to Capua, which was made by Appius Claudius; and that it contained a forum or market-place, to which pedlars and petty merchants resorted in great numbers. It was not far from the modern town of Piperno, on the road to Naples. (Acts xxviii. 16.)
APPLE TREE. The apple tree is not common in the East, and its fruit is destitute alike of beauty and fragrance. In both these respects it ill accords with the allusions to it in the Scriptures. The Hebrew word toppat-achah signifies fragrant breath, smell. Many suppose the cissors to be understood. This beautiful and conspicuous tree was known to the Hebrews; and its fruit and branches are mentioned by Josephus. (Antiq. xiii. 5.) Rosemullner thinks the word refers to the sweet-scented guineap apple, which was esteemed by the ancients chiefly on account of its fragrance. The odour of the quince was supposed to possess a re-sorptive power. (Sol. Song ii. 5; vii. 3.) Abulfadil remarks, that the smell of the quince clears the brain, and renews and invigorates the animal spirits. The quince was sacred to Venus; hence, in antique sculptures, she is represented with a quince in her right hand. The quinces-tree is said to grow wild in western Asia; and it was formerly common in Palestine. (Sol. Song ii. 5; vii. 5; Prov. xxvi. 11; Joel 1.12; Josh. xv. 23, 34; xvii. 7.) In Prov. xxv. 11, seasonable advice, wisely and courteously administered, is compared to apples of gold — beautiful ripe fruit, presented in silver baskets, or salvers.

AQUILA = as eagle. A Jew born in Pontus, a tent maker, who, with his wife, Priscilla, joined the Christian church at Rome. When the Jews were banished from that city by Claudius, Aquila and his wife retired to Corinth, where Paul was received and hospitably entertained at their house; they afterwards became the companions of Paul, by whom they are mentioned with much commendation. Aquila and Priscilla, instructed Apollon more particularly in the doctrines of the gospel. (Acts xviii. 2, 18, 26; Rom. xvi. 3; 1 Cor. xvi. 19; 2 Tim. iv. 19.)

ARA = a city. The ancient metropolis of Moab, situated on the southern bank of the Arnon, six or eight miles north of Kerak; also named Ar Moab and Arespolis. It is now a heap of unimportant ruins, extending about half an hour in circuit, exhibiting the remains of a temple and several Corinthian columns. It is now called Rab-ba (Num. xxi. 15, 28; Is. xv. 1.) The name is also used for the country of Moab. (Deut. ii. 9, 13.)

ARA = bimah. A descendant of Asher. (1 Chron. vii. 28.)

ARAB = amaseh. A city in the mountains of Judah. (Josh. xv. 52.)

ARABAH = sterile region, a desert plain, steppe. 1. This word with the article, (the Arabah,) is applied directly as the proper name of the great valley or chasm in its whole extent, lying between the Elanitic Gulf, or the eastern arm of the Red Sea, and the Dead Sea, extending northward, with a partial interruption, or rather contraction, to the foot of Mount Hermon. From the Elanitic Gulf to the Dead Sea this immense chasm extends 100 miles; varying in width from five to ten or fifteen miles. Its surface is almost uninterrupted a frightful desert. It is shut in by mountains which rise to the height of 1,500 and 2,000 feet. Indeed the Elanitic Gulf itself, which extends from the plain to the Red Sea, about 100 miles, is but a continuation of the fissure of the Arabah. This region is now called Wady el-Arabah.

The northern part, extending from an offset or line of cliffs just south of the Dead Sea, up the Jordan valley to the Sea of Galilee, is now called el-Ghor = the valley between two ranges of mountains. The "Arboth" = plains of Jericho and Moab were parts of it. The whole line, including the Elanitic Gulf and the entire Jordan valley, to Mount Hermon, a distance of not less than 340 miles, is, with the little exception at the northern end, one continuous chasm, deep, dreary, desolate, and mysterious. The entire length of this crevasse offers the most evident indications of volcanic agencies, which may, far back in ages past, have kindled into such tremendous activity as to cleave the solid earth asunder, and open this stupendous chasm in its surface. The Scriptures distinctly connect the Arabah with the Red Sea and Elath; the Dead Sea itself is called "the Sea of the Arabah." This Hebrew proper name is translated "plain" in ARABIA — arid, sterile. A large region in western Asia, including the peninsula which is between Syria and Palestine, the Arabian and Persian Gulf, and the Indian Ocean or Sea of Arabia. The name Arabia, among the Hebrews, did not include the whole of this vast peninsula, but only a tract of country on the east and south of Palestine, as far as to the Red Sea. Arabia is generally distinguished into three parts, the name of each being indicative of the face of the soil, and its general character.

1. ARA BABIA DESERTA — desert. This part includes the vast deserts of sand, with here and there a palm tree, and a spring of brackish water. It has the mountains of Gilead west, and the river Euphrates east; it comprehends the country of the Itureans, the Edomites, the Nabathaeans, the people of Kedar, and others, who led a wandering life, having no cities or fixed habitations, but dwelling in tents; such are called Bedouins. Paul visited the northern part of Arabian Desert, which lay adjacent to the territories of Damascus. (Gal. i. 17.)

2. ARA BABIA PETRAEA — rocky. This part lies south of Palestine, and had Petra for its capital, whence the region probably took its name. This region, so remarkable for its mountains and sandy plains, extended to Egypt, and included the peninsula of Mount Sinai. Here dwelt the Edomites, the Amalekites, the Hivites, and a very powerful tribe of Ishmaelites called Nabathaeans, all at present known under the general name of Arabians. The Nabathaeans spread themselves over the whole of desert Arabia, but gradually became more fixed in their habits, and engaged actively in commerce, until they grew up into the powerful kingdoms of Arabia Petrea. In Gal. iv. 24, 25, Arabia Petraea is meant.

3. ARA BABIA FELIX — happy. This part lies still farther south, being bounded east by the Persian Gulf, south by the ocean between Africa and India, and west by the Red Sea. The inhabitants, who claim their descent from Joktan, were unlike the shepherds and robbers who occupied the other districts. They had permanent abodes, supported themselves by agriculture and commerce, and once possessed a high degree of wealth and refinement. This country abounded with riches, especially in the interior, producing various species of odoriferous shrubs and fragrant gums, as frankincense, myrrh, balm, and cassia. It is supposed that most of the articles mentioned in Ex. xxx. 23, 24, 25, were imported from happy Arabia; and even at this day, caravans of merchants, the descendants of the Ishmaelites, and Midianites, are found traversing the same deserts, conveying the same articles of commerce, and in the same manner, as in the days of Joseph. (Gen. xxxvii. 25.) The queen of Sheba probably reigned over some part of Arabia Felix. (1 Kings x. 1.) This region is now called Hedjaz; and is celebrated on account of the Muhammadan cities of Mecca and Medina, being situated in it. The Arabic language has a striking affinity with the Hebrew, and is of great use in illustrating it; it is now the vernacular language of Arabia, Syria, Egypt, Palestine, and of some parts of India. (Judg. vi. 3; 1 Kings iv. 80; 2 Chron. xxii. 16; Is. xiii. 20.)

ARAD = to see, to be wild, untamed. 1. A Canaanitish city in the south of Judah. The site of this ancient city is a barren looking eminence rising above the surrounding country, now called Tel Arad. In Num. xxii. 1, xxxii. 40, “king Arad” is incorrect for “king of Arad.” (Josh. xii. 14; Judg. i. 16.) 2. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 15.)

ARAH = way-faring. 1. A descendant of Asher. (1 Chron. vii. 39.) 2. One whose posterity returned from the exile. (Exx. ii. 5; Neh. vii. 10.)

ARAM = high region, high lands. 1. A son of Shem; (Gen. x. 22, 23;)
who appears to have given his name to the region of Aramea or Syria. (Num. xxiii. 7; Judg. iii. 10, margin.) A part of Aramea or Syria comprehended Mesopotamia, which the Hebrews called "Aram-Naharaim," = Syria of the two rivers, and Padan-Aram. (Judg. iii. 8; Ps. lx. title.) On the western side of the Euphrates lay the small state of Aram-Zobah = Syrian station; (2 Sam. viii. 3-6; x. 8; Ps. lx. title) and other Syrian districts and towns. 2. A grandson of Nahor. (Gen. xxii. 21.) 3. A descendant of Asher. (1 Chron. vii. 34.) 4. —See Ram.

ARA = wild goat. A descendant of Seir. (Gen. xxxvi. 28; 1 Chron. i. 42.)

ARANAH. —See Araunah.

ARARAT = holy land. A region or province near the middle of Armenia, between the Araxes and the lakes Van and Oromiah. It is sometimes taken in a wider sense for Armenia itself. (Jer. ii. 27.) Ararat is translated the "land of Armenia," in 2 Kings xi. 37; Isa. xxxvii. 33. In Gen. viii. 4, it is said, the ark rested "upon the mountains of Ararat." But Ararat, in this passage, is evidently the name of a region, and not strictly of a particular mountain. The range of mountains with which is now called Mount Ararat is connected, and of which it forms the termination towards the S. E., is a branch of the Caucasian chain, and forms a link in the immense chain of the Cilician Taurus. Mount Ararat is situated in 39° 42' of north latitude, and 44° 30' of east longitude, and about 150 miles from Erz Rum. It is a stupendous mountain, rising majestically out of a vast plain, and was considered inaccessible to the summit, until Prof. Parrot, of the university of Dorpat, Russia, on the 9th of October, 1829, after two failures, overcame every impediment. By trigonometrical measurement he ascertained that the larger and principal peak is about 17,340 English feet above the level of the sea. He describes the summit as being a slightly convex, almost circular platform, about 213 feet in diameter, which at the extremity declines pretty steeply on all sides. He subsequently ascended the little Ararat, which is about 13,100 feet above the level of the sea. The two summits are about 56,000 feet apart. The entire upper region of the mountain is covered with perpetual snow and ice: and the magnitude of the great peak is annually increasing in consequence of the continued accession of ice. The eternal snows upon its summit occasionally form vast avalanches, which precipitate themselves down its sides, with a sound not unlike that of an earthquake. From its great height, Mount Ararat is visible at the distance of several days journey, Mr. Layard, from the Alpine heights of Kurdistan, at the distance of about 145 miles, beheld it. He says, "I climbed up a solitary rock to take bearings of the principal peaks around us. A sight as magnificent as unexpected awaited me. Far to the north, and high above the dark mountain ranges, which spread like a troubled sea beneath my feet, rose one solitary cone of unspecked white, sparkling in the rays of the sun. Its form could not be mistaken; it was Mount Ararat." In 1840 the region of Ararat was visited by an earthquake, which in a few moments changed the aspect of the country. Masses of rock, ice, and snow, were thrown at once single bound from the various points of the mountain to the bottom of the valley, where they lay scattered over an extent of several miles. However, we have no evidence that the ark rested on the summit of this particular mountain. The "mountains of Ararat" seem to designate some part of the mountains range with which Ararat is connected, but not so high and precipitous as to preclude an easy descent into the lower and more cultivable grounds.

ARAUNAH = the ark. A Jebusite, on the site of whose threshing-floor Solomon built the temple. (2 Sam. xxiv. 20.) In the margin of verse 18, he is called "Araniah" = a'k of ʿelekā. He is also called "Ornan" = ʿāʿā. (1 Chron. xxi. 18; 2 Chron. iii. 1.)

ARBA = four. A famous giant, the father of Anak. (Gen. xiv. 15; xv. 13; xxi. 11.)

ARCHAN.EL.—See ANGEL.

ARCHELAUS = chief or prince of the people. A son of Herod the Great, by Malthace his Samaritan wife. Herod bequeathed to him his kingdom, but Augustus confirmed him in the possession of only half of it,—Idumaeans, Judeans, and Samarians, with the title of simearchy, or chief of the nation. After about ten years, he was banished, on account of his cruelties to Vienna in Gaul; and his territories were reduced to the form of a Roman province under the procurator Coponius. In Matt. ii. 22, he is said to be king, referring to the interval immediately after the death of Herod, when he assumed the title of king.

ARCHER. Troops armed with the bow and arrows were very numerous among the Egyptians, Assyrians, Babylonians, Persians, and Hebrews. Among the Hebrews, the tribes of Benjamin and Ephraim excelled in archery. They exercised in hunting as well as in war. The Assyrian archers or bowmen, are often represented on the monuments discharging arrows from behind a shield or portable breastwork, which reaches from the ground to considerably above the heads of those protected by it. The wood-cuts is from Mr. Bonomi's beautiful work on "Nineveh and its Palaces." (Gen. xlvi. 22; xli. 23; 1 Chron. viii. 40; 2 Chron. xiv. 8; xvi. 17; Ps. lxxviii. 9; Isa. xiii. 18; Jer. xlix. 35; L. 29.)

ARCHES. It has been generally understood that the arch is a comparatively late invention; however, it is now proved, that vaults and arches have existed from remote antiquity in Egypt, and in Assyria. Sir J. G. Wilkinson discovered several in Thebes and its neighbourhood, made of crude bricks, which were erected as early as the Hebrew exodus. The earliest stone arches in Egypt belong to the 7th century before our era. Mr. Layard discovered several arches of kiln-burnt bricks in the ruins of Nimrud, of remote antiquity. In 1838, Dr. Robinson discovered in a portion of the western wall of the ancient temple area, in Jerusalem, the commencement or foot of an immense arch, which belonged to the Bridge, which crossed the valley from the temple to Zion. It may have been built in the days of Solomon or of Hezakiah. (Ezek. lxi. 16.)

ARCHEVITES. —See EARCH.

ARCHI = length. A city or district of Ephraim. (Josh. xvi. 2.) The inhabitants were called "Archites." (2 Sam. xv. 32; xvi. 18.)

ARCHIPPUS = chief of the horse. A Christian referred to by Paul. (Col. iv. 17; Phil. 2)

ARCTURUS. A fixed star of the first magnitude in the constellation Boötes. But the Hebrew word ʾāsh, rendered "arcturus," signifies the Bearer, and seems to designate the constellation, which we call, after the Greeks and Romans, Ursa Major = the Great Bear. The "sons of ʾāsh" are the three stars in the tail of the bear. (Job ix. 9; xxxvii. 32.)

ARD = to flee. 1. A son of Benjamin. (Gen. xxvi. 21.) 2. A descendant of Benjamin. (Num. xxvi. 40.) He is called "Addar" in 1 Chron. viii. 3. The family is called "Ardites."

ARDON = fugitive. A son of Caleb and Azubah. (1 Chron. ii. 18.)
ARE

ARELI = of heroic birth. A son of Gad. (Gen. xvi. 16; Num. xxvi. 17.) The family is called "Areliites."

AREOPAGUS = Mars Hill. A hill with an open place nearly in the centre of Athens, where sat the court of the Areopagus, the supreme tribunal of justice. Dr. Robinson describes it as "a narrow, naked ridge of limestone rock, rising gradually from the northern end, and terminating abruptly on the south, over against the west end of the Acropolis. On its top are still to be seen the seats of the judges and parties, hewn in the rock; and towards the S. W. is a descent by a flight of steps, also cut in the rock, in the valley below. On the west of the ridge, in the valley between it and the Pnyx, was the ancient market; and on the S. side, the latter or new market. In which of these it was, that Paul 'disputed daily,' it is of course impossible to tell; but from either, it was only a short distance to the foot of 'Mars's Hill,' up which Paul was probably conducted by the flight of steps just mentioned." Standing on this elevated platform, surrounded by the areopagites or judges, and the elite of Athens, the whole city in full view below, the apostle delivered that unrivalled discourse which sets forth the doctrine of the great God our Saviour, in place of the unknown God, whom they ignorantly worshipped. (Acts xxvii. 16—34; xvi. 34.)

ARITA = virtuous. The king of Arabia Petraea, who gave his daughter in marriage to Herod Antipas; but she being repudiated by her husband, Aretas made war upon him, and destroyed his army, A.D. 37. Tiberius being entreated by Herod to give him assistance, directed Vitellius, then proconsul of Syria, to make war upon Aretas, and bring him alive or dead to Rome. But while Vitellius was in the midst of preparations for war, he received intelligence of the death of Tiberius; on which he immediately recalled his troops, and left the province, A.D. 39. Aretas, taking advantage of this supineness, took possession of Damascus; over which he appointed a governor or ethnarch, who, at the instigation of the Jews, attempted to put Paul in prison. (2 Cor. xi. 32; Acts ix. 24, 25.)

ARK

ARGOB = heap of stones. A region beyond the Jordan, in the territory of Manasseh. (Deut. iii. 4, 13; 1 Kings vi. 13.) It is now called Raphidim. The governor of Argob is supposed to be intended, in 2 Kings xv. 25.

ARDAI = strong. One of the sons of Haman. (Est. ix. 8.)

ARIADNE = the strong. One of the sons of Haman. (Est. ix. 8.)

ARIEH = the lion. An officer in the court of Pekahiah. (2 Kings xv. 25.)

ARIEL = lion of God, that is, strong, lion-like. A name given to Jerusalem. (Isa. xxix. 1, 2; Gen. xlix. 9.) 2. One who returned from the exile. (Ezra viii. 16.) 3. A name given to the altar of burnt-offering. (Ezek. xiii. 15, 16.) Here it signifies the heath or altar of God.

ARIMATHEA = the heights. A city of Palestine, whence came Joseph the councillor, mentioned in Luke xxii. 51. It is supposed to be now represented by the village Rentsheh, on the Damascus road, towards Lydda.

ARISAI = lion-like. One of the ten sons of Haman. (Est. ix. 9.)

ARISTARCHUS = the acceptable chief. A native of Thessalonica, and companion of Paul. (Acts xix. 29; xx. 4; xxvii. 2; Col. iv. 10.)

ARISTOBULUS = the acceptable councillor. A Christian spoken of by Paul. (Rom. xvi. 10.)

ARK. The vessel constructed by Noah at God's command, for the preservation of himself and family, and a stock of the various animals, when the waters of the flood inundated the inhabited earth. The ark, or as the Hebrews called it, the chest, was not a regular built ship, but a building in the form of a parallelogram, with a flat bottom, and sloping roof. Its form was not adapted for sailing, but rather to secure slowness of motion when borne up by the waters. This capacious vessel was constructed of gopher — cypress wood, and covered with pitch or bitumen, to exclude the water. It was 300 cubits = 525 feet in length, 50 cubits = 87 feet 6 inches in breadth, 30 cubits = 52 feet 6 inches in height; reckoning the cubit at 21 inches. It had lower, second, and third stories, besides what in common vessels is called "the hold." A door was placed in the side; and it had also a window, probably fixed in the roof. The ark undoubtedly adequate to the purpose for which it was prepared; but it could scarcely have been capacious enough to hold the pairs of some animals, and the septuples of others, of all the species. The number of existing species of animals far exceeds the estimate of several well-meaning calculators. Instead of three or four hundred species, the probable number existing on the globe is not less than half a million. Already there have been described about 1,000 species of mammals, 6,000 species of birds, 120,000 species of insects, 2,000 species of reptiles and amphibious animals, 6,000 species of fishes, besides vast multitudes of conchylia and naked mollusks, all of which must have been provided with space and food. When we consider the very different kinds of receptacles which would be necessary for the different species of animals, collected from the various climates of the earth's surface, the quantity and variety of food necessary for a twelvemonth's subsistence, the necessity of ventilation and cleaning out of the various receptacles, the fact that some fish and shell animals cannot live in salt water, and others not in fresh, we irresistibly come to the conclusion that the deluge was not absolutely universal, and that every species of animals could not possibly—nay, was never intended to—find a home in the ark. The species of animals commonly inhabiting the region where man existed appear to have been preserved in the ark, while that region was merged in the waters of the flood. The ark appears to have been from one hundred to one hundred and twenty years in building; but the place where it was built is unknown. (Gen. vi. 13—22; vii. 1—24; viii. 1—19; 1 Pet. iii. 20.)
ARK

ARK OF THE COVENANT. The small chest or coffer, which stood within the vail, in the most Holy Place in the tabernacle. It was four feet four inches and a half in length, and two feet seven inches and a half in width, and the same in height. It was made of shittim wood, and covered with plates of gold. A border or crown of gold encircled it near the top, and it was surmounted by the mercy-seat, which was of solid gold, and answered the purpose of a cover or lid to the ark. On each end of the mercy-seat was placed a golden cherub, facing inwards, and bending down over the ark. The wings of the cherubim overshadowed the mercy-seat, whence shone forth the shekinah—the awful and mysterious symbol of the divine presence. (Ex. xxv. 10—22; Lev. xvi. 2; Num. vii. 69. Ps. xcviii. 11; lxxx. 1; xcix. 1.) Two rings of gold were attached to each side of the ark, in which were placed the staves by which it was carried from place to place. The ark contained:

1. A golden vessel, in which the manna was preserved. (Ex. xvi. 33.) 2. Aaron's rod, which, budded, blossomed, and yielded fruit. (Num. xvii. 10.) The tables of the ten commandments, written by the finger of God, and constituting the testimony or evidence of the covenant between God and his people. (Ex. xxxiv. 39; xl. 20; Deut. xxxi. 28.) After the passage of the Jordan, the ark continued sometime at Gilgal; whence it was removed to Shiloh. (Josh iii. 1—7; iv. 19; 1 Sam. i. 3.) It was subsequently placed at Nob, and Kirjath-jearim, and in the palace on Zion. It was finally deposited by Solomon in the temple. (2 Sam. vi. 2—13; 2 Chron. v. 2—9.) The ark appears to have been lost at the captivity, and it is not known whether a new one was provided for the second temple. From a comparison of Heb. ix. 3, 4, with 1 Kings viii. 9; 2 Chron. v. 10, it would seem that the contents of the ark were different at the different periods referred to. This is not unlikely, when we consider the wars in which the Hebrews were so frequently engaged. Some of the shrines, borne in procession by the shrine-bearing priests, among the ancient Egyptians, having around them symbolic figures similar in form to the cherubim, seem to have been not unlike the ark of the covenant among the Hebrews.

ARKITE = Arar. An inhabitant of the Phoenician city Arka, the ruins of which are still found to the northward of Tripoli, and are called Arka. (Gen. x. 17.)

ARM. This term is used as the symbol of strength or power; (1 Sam. ii. 31; Ps. x. 15;) the infinite power of God. (Ex. vi. 6; Jer. xxvii. 5; xxxii. 17.) In Is. iii. 10, allusion is made to the ancient custom of making bare the arm by throwing it out of the loose garment or fold, so that its strength and action might be free and unembarrassed. In Is. iii. 1, 2, “the arm of the Lord” is used apppellatively of the Messiah.

ARMAGEDDON = mountain or field of Megiddo. The neighbourhood of the city of Megiddo, in the great plain, at the foot of Mount Carmel. It was the scene of a double slaughter, first of the Canaanites, and again of the Israelites. (Judg. v. 19; 2 Kings xix. 29; 2 Chron. xxxv. 22.) Hence in Rev. xvi. 16, it would seem to be put symbolically for place of great slaughter.

ARMENIA = elevated region. This name is given as the translation of “Ararat.” (2 Kings xix. 37; Is. xxxvii. 38.) Armenia is an inland country at the eastern extremity of Asia Minor, 430 miles east to west, and about 300 from north to south. It included the ancient provinces of Asahkenaz, Ararat, Minni, and Togarmah. (Jas. ii. 27; Ezek. xxvii. 14; xxxviii. 6.) It has the Mediterranean Sea on the south-west, the Black Sea on the north-west, and the Caspian Sea on the east, and its western boundary is about six hundred miles east of Constantinople. The Euphrates, the Tigris, the Araxes and Phasis, and other rivers rise within the boundaries of Armenia; and in this region many place the garden of Eden. From the earliest times, Armenia has been divided into Great and Little Armenia. The central province of Great Armenia is called “Ararat,” whose chief town is Erivan; hence this province is intended by the term Armenia in the Scriptures, and not the whole kingdom. At present Armenia is divided between Turkey, Persia, and Russia; and it appears that Mount Ararat is, so to speak, the central boundary-stone of the three empires. The Armenians have always been remarkable for their industry and enterprise, and at present their merchants are found dispersed through the world.

ARMIES, or Hosts. The armies of the Hebrews embraced the whole male population of the country, according to a general system of enrolment (Num. i. 2, 3; xxxvi. 2.) They had no occasion for a standing army, as, when occasion required, the entire body was readily mustered. (Judg. xx. 1, 14; 1 Sam. xi. 7, 8; xxvii. 10.) This accounts for the prodigious numbers which were often assembled. (2 Chron. xiii. 3; xiv. 9.) The soldiers received no wages, and each man armed and supported himself. Hence their campaigns were short, and generally terminated in a single battle. Horses were not used in their military movements, it is supposed, before Solomon’s time. The manner of declaring war, and the character and occupation of exempted, are minutely stated. (Deut. xx. 1, 14; xxiv. 5.)

ARMONI = imperial. A son of Saul by Ripsah. (2 Sam. xxi. 8, 9.)

ARMOUR. As arms were weapons of offence, consisting of the sword, the spur, the javelin, the dart or lance, the sling, the battle-axe, and the bow and arrow; so also armour consisted of instruments of defence, as the shield, buckler, or target, the breast-plate, coat of mail or habergeon, the helmet, the girdle, and the greaves. (1 Sam. xvii. 5, 6, 7, 54.) The term "armour," and the various offensive and defensive articles comprised in it, are frequently used figuratively, representing the graces of the Christian character as "the armour of God," in which the believer is clothed, by which he is enabled to "endure all things," and "fight the good fight of faith" with a steady and victorious arm. (Eph. vi. 11—18. The "armour-bearer" not only carried the arms of the commander, but communicated his orders somewhat after the manner of adjutants in modern service. (Judg. ix. 44; 1 Sam. xiv. 6; xvi. 21; xxxi. 4.) The "armour" was the place in which armour was deposited in times of peace. (Jer. l. 25; Sol. Song iv. 4.)

ARNAN = active, nimble. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iii. 21.)

ARNON = a rushing, roaring. A torrent with a deep and wide valley of bke name, flowing from the eastward into the Dead Sea, anciently the northern boundary of Moab, and the southern of the Ammonites; now called el Mafjot. (Num. xxi. 13; xxii. 36; Deut. ii. 24; Isa. xvi. 2.) Lieut. Lynch examined this torrent in May, 1848. He describes it as cool and refreshing, and as varying in width. It also varies in depth from 4 to 10 feet. The channel through which it passes is formed of high, perpendicular cliffs of red, brown, and yellow sandstone. Castor beans, tamarisks, and canes are found along the course of the stream.

ABOD = wild-ass. A son of Gad, (Num. xxvi. 17.) In Gen. xlii. 16, he is called "Arodi," perhaps a form of the family name, "Arodites."

AROEK = naked, needy. 1. A city on the northern bank of the Arnon. Its ruins are still called Aror. If Aror be meant by "the city in the midst of the river," (Josh. xiii. 9.) it may have originated in the circumstance that the city stood partly on the bank, and partly extending into the river. (Deut. ii. 36; iii. 12; iv. 48; Josh. xii. 2; xiii. 16; Judg. xi. 26; Jer. lxxvii. 19, 20.) 2. Another city, situated further north, over against Rabba Ammon, on the brook Gad. The site is still called Arva. (Num. xxxii. 34; Josh. xiii. 26; 2 Sam. xxiv. 5; Isa. xvii. 2.) 3. A city of the south of Judah; the inhabitants were called "Arorites." The ruins are still called Aravah. (1 Sam. xxx. 28; 1 Chron. xi. 44.)

ARPAD. — See Arvad.

ARPHAXAD = region near Chaldea. A descendant of Shem, and denoting at the same time a region called after him; not improbable the province Arraphasitis, in northern Assyria, near Armenia. The margin reads "Arphaxad." (Gen. ii. 22, 24; xi. 10, 18; xiii. 22.)

ARROW. Arrows were originally made of reeds, and afterwards of any light wood; they were sometimes surmounted with an iron point, and barbed like a fish hook, or tipped with stones, and generally winged with feathers. (Ps. xxxviii. 2.) Job appears to refer to the use of arrows dipped in poison; (Job vi. 4;) and fire was often conveyed by the use of juniper wood, which kindled upon the combustible baggage or armament of the enemy. The quiver was slung over the shoulder in such a position that the soldier could draw out the arrows when wanted. (Ps. xci. 5; cxx. 4.) Missile weapons are called "artillery." (1 Sam. xx. 40.) Arrows were anciently used in divination. (Ezek. xxi. 21.) The arrow was a symbol of calamities inflicted by God; (Job xxxiv. 6; Ps. lxiii. 2;) and the lightnings are styled "His arrows." (Ps. xviii. 14; cxliv. 6.) Unkind words are called "arrows." (Prov. xxv. 18; Ps. lxiv. 3; Jer. ix. 8.) "Arrows" also designate children. (Ps. cxxvii. 4, 5.)—See Bow, and Quiver.

ARTAXERXES = great king, or mighty warrior. The name or title of several kings of Persia. In the Hebrew it is written "Artaqashda; on the cuneiform inscriptions at Persepolis, Ar t a q a s h d a, =Artaqashda; and in hieroglyphics, on the monuments of Egypt, it is written A r d a q a s h a.
=Ardaqasha. Two kings of this name are mentioned in the Bible. 1. It is supposed to designate the Pseudo Smerdis, the Magian, who usurped the throne after the death of Cambyses, B.C. 522, pretending to be Smerdis, the son of Cyrus. He obstructed the rebuilding of the temple; and was slain after a reign of seven months. (Er. iv.
7—24.) 2. Artaxerxes Longimanus, the son and successor of Xerxes, who reigned 39 years, B.C. 464—425. In the seventh year of his reign, Ezra led out a colony from the exile; (Er. vi. 14; vii. 1—26;) and from the twentieth to the thirty-second year of his reign, Nehemiah was governor of Judas. (Neh. ii.
1; v. 14; xiii. 6.)

ARTEMAS = complete. A Christian friend of Paul's. (Titus iii. 12.)

ARTS. As the Egyptians, in the early ages of the world, excelled all other nations in a knowledge of the arts, it would have been impossible for the Hebrews to have resided in Egypt for so long a time without acquiring an equal knowledge with that people. Hence it would appear that, in the arrangements of divine Providence, they went down into that country to acquire the knowledge of those things, in order to prepare them for being a mighty nation, and to qualify them for the erection of those edifices, for conducting the splendid solemnities of the worship of Jehovah upon the grand scale which He afterwards laid before them. Assyria and Tyre also produced clever artificers. (1 Chron. xxix. 5; 2 Chron. ii. 14.) In Acts xix. 19, the word "arte" refers to the pretended skill in the practice of magic and astrology.

ARUBOTH = net-work, windows. A place in Judah. (1 Kings iv. 10.)

ARUMAH = lofty. A city near Neapolis; (Judg. ix. 41;) also called "Rumah." (2 Kings xxiii. 25.)

ARVAD = a wandering, place of fugitives. A Phoenician city, upon an island of the same name, nearly as large as Tyre, three miles from Tarsus, and about two miles from the coast. (Gen. x. 18; 1 Chron. i. 16; Ezek. xxvii. 8, 11.) It is supposed to be the same as "Arpad" or "Apahad" = supported, fortified, a city often coupled with Hamath, and governed by its own kings. (2 Kings xviii. 34; xix. 13; Isa.
x. 9; xxxvi. 19; xxxvii. 13; Jer. xlix. 23.) It is now called Read, and contains about 2,000 inhabitants. Here are many marble and granite columns, and other monuments of remote antiquity, scattered over the island. Several large castles, in good repair, still protect the isle from invasion and insult. The "Aravitae" are, as in ancient times, nearly all mariners or shipwrights.

ARZA = earth. A steward under Elah, king of Israel. (1 Kings xvi. 9.)

ASA = physician. 1. The third king of Judah; he succeeded his father Abijam B.C. 955, and reigned forty-one years at Jerusalem. He was distinguished for his success in war, and his zeal for the worship of Jehovah. He expelled those who, from sicarios inleigous supernatural, prostituted themselves in honour of their false gods; purified Jerusalem from the infamous practices attending the worship of idols; and deprived his mother of her office and dignity of queen, because she erected an idol to Astarte. In the latter part of his life, he became diseased in his feet; and Scripture reproaches him with having had recourse to the physicians, rather than to the Lord. (1 Kings xv.
8; 2 Chron. xvi. 2.) 2. A Levite. (1 Chron. ix. 16.)

ASAHEL = whom God made, constiuted. 1. A son of Zeruiah, and one of David's distinguished officers. (2 ASA

Sam. ii. 18—23.) 2. A Levite. (2 Chron. xvii. 8; xxxi. 13.) 3. The father of Jonathan. (Ezr. x. 15.)

ASAPH = collector. 1. A Levite and celebrated musician in David's time. His name is also prefixed to twelve Psalms, the fiftieth, and from the seventy-third to the eighty-third. That they were not all written by him is evident from the fact, that allusion is made in some of them to events which took place after his death. Perhaps they were set to music by his descendants. He is also called a "seer" or prophet. (1 Chron. vi. 39; 2 Chron. xxxv. 15; Ezr. ii. 41.) 2. The father of Josh. (2 Kings xviii. 18.) 3. The chief forester to Artaxerxes. (Neh. li. 8.)

ASAREEL = whom God hath bound by a vow. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 16.)

ASARELAH = upright towards God. One of the sons of Asaph. (1 Chron. xiv. 2.) In the 14th verse, he is called "Jesreelah."

ASCENSION. The visible elevation of Christ to heaven. When our Lord had risen from the dead, in the same natural body of flesh and blood which had been taken down from the cross and laid in the sepulchre, and by His manifestations to His disciples and others for the space of forty days, not only fulfilled His mission on earth, but given the most indubitable evidence of the fact that He had risen, He led the apostles out to Bethany, on the eastern slope of the Mount of Olives, a mile or more below the summit or ridge; and while bestowing upon them his parting blessing He was "taken up, and a cloud received Him out of their sight." The Saviour thus appears to have assumed a glorified body in his ascension to heaven, in which he now appears on his mediatorial throne, as the great High Priest of our profession. (Luke xxiv. 50, 51; Acts i. 2—12; Ps. xxiv. 7—10; Heb. iv. 14; ix. 24; 1 Cor. xv. 24—28; Rev. v. 6.)

ASENATH = belongs to, or is devoted to Neith, the Minerva of the Egyptians. The daughter of Potipherah, priest of On, the wife of Joseph; she was the mother of Ephraim and Manasseh. (Gen. xil. 45; xvi. 20.)

ASHAN = smoke. A city of Judah, but afterwards transferred to the Simeonites. (Josh. xv. 42; xix. 7.) It is called "Chor-ashan" in 1 Sam. xxx. 20.

ASHBEA = I adjure. A descendant of Judah, who superintended a cotton manufacture in Egypt, before the exodus. (1 Chron. iv. 21.)—See CORTON.

ASHBEL = sentence of God. A son of Benjamin; his descendants were called "Ashbelites." (Gen. xvi. 21; 1 Chron. viii. 1; Num. xxxv. 38.)

ASHCHENAZ. See ASHKENAZ.

ASHDOD = a strong-hold, castle. One of the five principal cities of the Philistines, although assigned to the tribe of Judah, but never conquered by them. It was the key of Palestine towards Egypt, and was not far from Askelon. It was called by the Greeks "Azotus." Here stood the temple of Dagon; and hither the ark was first brought, after the fatal battle at Bethzur. The city was captured by Uzziah, king of Judah; (2 Chron. xxvi. 8;) and by Sargon, king of Assyria, (Isa. xx. 1,) as mentioned also in the canonic annals of his reign. It sustained a siege of twenty-nine years, by Psmmitichus, king of Egypt, which is the longest siege on record. The inhabitants were called "Ashdodites." The site is now occupied by a small Muslim village, upon a low round eminence, surrounded with fine olive trees, like a wood: it is now called Beitsh. (Josh. xiii. 3; xv. 47; 1 Sam. vi. 1; vi. 17; Acts vii. 40.)

ASHDOTH = outpouring of torrents, a ravine. A district situated along the foot of Mount Pisgah, which was divided between the tribes of Reuben, Gad, and Manasseh, called also "Ashdoth-Pisgah" = the ravines of
ASH

Pisgah; in the margin, "the springs of Pisgah." (Deut. iii. 17; iv. 49; Josh. xii. 3.)

ASHER = happy, blessed. 1. A son of Jacob by Zilpah. He was the founder of the tribe of like name, whose territory lay in the northern part of Palestine. (Josh. xix. 24—31.) His posterity were called "Ashterites." (Gen. xxx. 13; xxxv. 26; xlii. 20; Num. i. 40, 41; Judg. i. 32.) 2. A city eastward from Shechem. (Josh. xvii. 7.)

ASHERAH — See ASHTEROTH.

ASHES. To repent in sackcloth and ashes, or to cover the head with ashes, or to lie down among ashes, was an external sign of self-abhorrence, humiliation, penitence, or of extreme grief under misfortune, among the ancient nations. (Gen. xviii. 27; 2 Sam. xiii. 19; Est. iv. 3; Job ii. 8; Jer. vi. 26; Jon. iii. 6; Matt. xi. 21.) There was a sort of lye made of the ashes of the beifer sacrificed on the great day of expiation, which was used for ceremonial purification. (Num. xix. 17, 18.)

ASHIMA = heaven, or the sun. A deity adored by the people of Haran, who were settled in Samaria. (2 Kings xvii. 30.)

ASHKELON. — See ASHELON.

ASHKENAZ = inapplicable. The son of Gomer, who gave name to a people and region in northern Asia, situated in the vicinity of Armenia; unless it was a province of that country itself. The name may designate the whole country about the Araxes or the Black Sea. (Gen. x. 3.) It is also written "Ashchenaz." (Jer. li. 27.)

ASHNAH = the strong, fortified. Two cities in Judah. (Josh. xvi. 53, 43.)

ASHPENAZ = west of the horse. A chief enarch in the court of Nebuchadnezzar. (Dan. i. 3.)

ASHRIEL. — See ARIEL.

ASHTAROTH = leaders of the stars, the moon. A city of Bashan, afterwards a Levitical city in the tribe of Manasseh, beyond the Jordan; called also "Boooth-terah," (Josh. xxi. 27,) doubtless from a temple of Ashteroth; also "Ashteroth Karnaim" = the moon with horns; (Gen. xiv. 5,) and "Astaroth" in Deut. i. 4. Captain Newbold fixes the site of Ashteroth at the large mound Tav Ashtoret, in the midst of a vast plain, six miles north of Edrei, and twenty-five miles from Boza. "The circumference of the Tav is more than half a mile, and its height from fifty to a hundred feet. Near its base are ancient foundations of massive stones, heaped and unhewn, and in the soil of the surrounding country, numerous fragments of stone and pottery, which show that it is the site of an ancient town. (Josh. x. 10; xii. 4; xiii. 12; 1 Chron. vii. 71; xi. 44.)

ASHTHORETH = leader of the stars, the moon. The name of a goddess much worshipped in Syria and Pheni-Casia; (1 Sam. xxi. 19; 1 Kings xi. 33;) and by the Hebrews as early as the time of the Judges; (Judg. ii. 13; x. 6; 1 Sam. vii. 5, 4;) also by Solomon himself; (1 Kings xi. 5;) and was finally put down by Josiah. (2 Kings xxiii. 13.) As Ashtoreth is frequently mentioned in connection with the sun-god Baal, as the corresponding female deity, "Basilim and Ashteroth," the plural of "Baal and Ashteroth," evidently referring to their images or statues,—it would seem that the moon, or "queen of heaven," was worshipped under this name. This view receives confirmation from the fact, that Baal and Asherah are distinguished from the following words, "all the host of heaven." (1 Kings xxiii. 4, 5; Jer. viii. 2.) Her worship was celebrated by burning incense, offering cakes, and pouring libations. (Jer. vii. 18; xiv. 17.) Ashtoreth was called Astero by the Greeks, and Atar by the Assyrians. She was generally represented as a female harnessed, indicative of the goddess of the moon. The woodcut, from a Babylonian cylinder in the 10th plate of Rich's Babylon and Persia, seems to represent this celebrated idol. The Hebrew word Asherah, erroneously rendered "grove," after the Septuagint and the Vulgate, properly signifies fortune, happiness, and designate, an image or statue of Ashshur. (Judg. iii. 7; vi. 25; 1 Kings xv. 18; 2 Kings xvii. 16; xxi. 3, 7; xxiii. 7, 15; 2 Chron. xxxiii. 3; Mic. v. 18, 4.) The four hundred priests or prophets of Jezreel were employed in the worship of this idol. (1 Kings xviii. 19.) In connection with the worship of Asherah or Asherah, there was much of dissolute licentiousness; and the public prostitutes of both sexes were regarded as consecrated to her. In later times, among the Syro-Arabians, Ashshur or Astaroth, denoted the planet Venus, as Baal denoted Jupiter. —See BAAL.

ASH

ASH-TREE.—See PINE.

ASHUR = blackness, black. The father of Tekoa. (1 Chron. ii. 24.)

ASHURITES.—See ASHURIM.

ASHVATH = forged, wrought. A descendant of Asor. (1 Chron. vii. 33.)

ASIA. The meaning of this name Bochart attempts to derive from a Hebrew or Phoenician word, signifying the middle; Asia was not known to the ancients as one of the grand divisions of the earth. It was originally applied to a small district of Lydia, including, perhaps, Ionia and Æolis. The term was gradually enlarged in its application, until it embraced the whole of Asia Minor, and finally denoted a large portion of the eastern division of the earth. Asia Minor, which is that portion of Asia alluded to in the New Testament, comprised the provinces of Phrygia, Cilicia, Pamphylia, Caria, Lycia, Lydia, Mycia, Phrynia, Phaphagonia, Cappadocia, Galatia, Lycaonia, Pisidia. On the western coast were more anciently the countries of Æolis, Ionia, and Doris, the names of which were retained, although the countries were included in the later provinces of Mycia, Lydia, and Caria. Many Jews were scattered over these regions. (Acts xix. 25, 27; xxi. 27; xxiv. 18; xxvii. 2.)

ASP

Roman or Proconsular Asia was the region of Ionia, of which Ephesus was the capital, and which Strabo also calls "Asia." Cicero mentions Proconsular Asia, as containing the provinces of Phrygia, Mycia, Caria, and Lydia. (Acts ii. 9; vii. 9; xvi. 6; xix. 10, 22; xx. 4, 16, 18; 1 Cor. xvi. 19; 2 Cor. i. 8; 2 Tim. i. 15; 1 Pet. i. 1; Rev. i. 4, 11.) Asia Minor now forms part of Turkey in Asia, and is called Anatolia. It is a fruitful and delightful part of Asia; its principal town and sea-port is Smyrna, with which a considerable traffic is carried on with western Europe. The Anarch translated "chief of Asia," (Acts xiii. 21,) was a title given to the magistrates in Proconsular Asia, who were annually appointed to preside over the worship, and games, in honour of the gods. They were ten in number, the principal or chief always residing at Ephesus.

ASIEL = created of God. A descendant of Simeon. (1 Chron. iv. 35.)

ASKELON = migration. A maritime city of the Philistines, between Ashdod and Gaza. After the death of Joshua, the tribe of Judah took Ashkelon; but it subsequently became one of the five states of the Philistines. (Judg. i. 19; 1 Sam. vi. 17.) After being several times dismantled in the Crusades, its fortifications were destroyed by Sultan Dibars, A.D. 1270; and its port filled up with stones. It is also called "Ashkelon." (Judg. xiv. 19; 2 Sam. i. 20; Jer. xxv. 20; Amos i. 8.) The ruins of this ancient city now called Askewan, form a mournful scene of utter desolation. (Jer. xlvii. 5; Zeph. ii. 4; Zech. ix. 5.)

ASNAH = store-house, or thorn-bush. One whose posterity returned from the exile. (Ezr. ii. 50.)

ASNAPPER = leader of an army. A satrap under Esar-haddon, who brought colonies out of several Assyrian provinces to Samaria. (Ezr. iv. 2, 10.)

ASP.—See SERPENT.

ASPATHA = a horse, or bullock. A son of Haman. (Est. ix. 7.)
ASriel = vow of God. A descendant of Manasseh, and head of the "Arielites." (Num. xxvi. 31; Josh. xvi. 2.) He is called "Aariel," in 1 Chron. vii. 14.

ASS. The oriental asses are far more stately, active, and lively, than those of northern countries. They were highly prized, and preferred for riding, especially the she-asses, on account of their sure footedness. The following Hebrew words are translated "aass:" 1. Hamor = a ass, so called from its reddish colour. This term denotes the ordinary kind employed in labour, carriage, and domestic services. (Gen. xlix. 14; Ex. xiii. 13.) The ass was not to be yoked with the ox, on the ground of inequality of strength. (Deut. xxi. 10; 1 Sam. i. 3.) Nothing could be more disgraceful than for a human body to receive the burial of an ass,—to be thrown into the open field. (Jer. xxii. 19; xxxvi. 30; 2 Kings vi. 25.) 2. Athzon = a she-ass, both domestic and wild, so called from its slow gait. It was particularly valuable for the saddle, and also for her milk, which was extensively used for food, and medicinal purposes. (Gen. xii. 16; xxv. 15; Num. xxii. 23; 1 Sam. ix. 3, 20; 1 Chron. xxi. 30; Job xlix. 12.) 3. Athzonoth Tzehharoth = white she-asses, those of a light reddish brown colour with white spots. Elephants, camels, asses, and mules, approaching to white, have always been highly prized among oriental nations. (Judg. v. 10.) 4. Ayir = a young ass, ass's colt, foal, either wild or domestic. This name is sometimes used of a fully grown ass, as used for bearing burdens, (Isa. xxx. 6,) for ploughing, (Gen. xxii. 3; Isa. xxiv. 15; Jer. ix. 9; Matt. xxi. 5; John xii. 15.) 5. Panan = wild ass, charger, so called from its fleetness. These handsome animals were anciently found in Palestine, Syria, Arabia Deserta, Mesopotamia, Phrygia, and Lycaonia; but they rarely occur in those regions at the present time, and seem to be almost entirely confined to Tartary, some parts of Peru, and India, and Africa. They assemble in troops under the conduct of a leader or sentinel, and are extremely shy and vigilant. The one brought to this country from Astrachan, is described as having a deer-like appearance, standing high on the legs, very active, of a silvery colour, with a dark brown streak along the back. (Gen. xvi. 12; Job vi. 5; xi. 12; xxv. 5; xxxix. 5—8; Ps. civ. 11; Isa. xxxii. 14; Jer. ii. 24; Hose. viii. 9.) 6. Arod = to be, to be wild, untamed, another kind of wild ass, perhaps the zebra. (Job. xxxix. 5; Dan. v. 21.)

ASSHUR = a step. The second son of Shem, who gave name to Assyria. (Gen. x. 22.)—See ASYRIA.

ASSHURIM = steps. An Arabian tribe, perhaps the same called "Ahrurites," in 2 Sam. ii. 9, to be sought in the vicinity of Gilead. (Gen. xxiv. 3.) In Ezek. xxvii. 6, instead of the word "Ahrurites," it ought to read "boxwood."

ASSIR = one bowed, a captive, prisoner. 1. A son of Jeconiah, king of Judah. (1 Chron. iii. 17.) Others suppose that "Assir" is not here a proper name, but is to be considered as an epithet of Jeconiah himself, who was about thirty-six years a captive in Babylon. Hence they translate the passage:—"And the sons of Jeconiah, the prisoner, are Shealtiel his son," etc. 2. A son of Korah. (Ex. vi. 24; 1 Chron. vi. 22.) 3. A Levite. (1 Chron. ii. 37.)

ASSOS = near, close to. A maritime city of Mysia, opposite Lesbos, and about twenty miles south from Trona. It is now a miserable village called Beirum. (Acts xx. 13, 14.)

ASSUR. See Asshur.

ASSURANCE. A firm persuasion of our being in a state of salvation. The "full assurance of faith," relates to present pardon; "the full assurance of hope," to future glory. (Heb. x. 22; vi. 11.) This assurance of faith and hope is not an opinion, not a bare construction of Scripture, but is given immediately by the power of the Holy Ghost; and must be understood as implying the absolute necessity of continuing in the same degree of grace from which this full assurance is delighted. Justifying faith does not constitute assurance that I am now forgiven, through Christ, inasmuch as we must believe before we can be justified: nevertheless, this assurance, like regeneration and adoption, is in-separably connected with justification.
The term assurance seems to imply, though not necessarily, the absence of doubt; however, it does not exclude occasional doubt, nor shut out all those lower degrees of persuasion which may exist in the experience of Christians.
Our faith may not at all times be equally strong, and the testimony of the Spirit may have its degrees of clearness. Nevertheless, "the full assurance of faith" is to be pressed upon every Christian. The phrase in Col ii. 2, refers to the full knowledge de of divine things, founded on the declarations of the Scriptures. (Iam. xxxii.
17; 1 John iii. 19.)—See ADOPTION.

ASSYRIA = region of Assur. A country and empire, which derived its name from Assur, the second son of Shem, or from a tribe designated after him, who settled in this region. (Gen. x. 22.) The Hebrews designated both the people and the country by the term "Assur;"
(Num. xxiv. 22, 24; Ezek. xxvii. 23; xxvii. 23; Hos. iv. 5;) sometimes written "Assur." (Ezr. iv. 2; Ps. viii.
38.) Assur appears to have retired from the plain of Shinar before the all-powerful progress of Nimrod's arms, to seek a country for himself on the upward course of the "Hiddekel" = Tigris, where he fixed himself on the site of Nineveh, which he founded, together with the neighbouring cities, which subsequently became the seat of the ancient Assyrian empire. (Gen. x. 12.) Hence "the land of Nimrod" seems to be distinguished from "Assyria." (Mic. v. 6.) The founders of the ancient nations were generally deified.
Assur was placed by his descendants at the head of the Assyrian Pantheon, with the title, "King of the circle of the great gods." The annexed figure which we have ventured to call the proto-patriarch of the Assyrian nation, is often found on the slabs exhumed at Nimrud. In his left hand he carries a small square basket, his right hand is elevated, holding a fir or cedar cone, perhaps the symbol of the Assyrian nation. (Ezek. xxx. 1-17.) The eagle-headed deity, called "Nisroch," which is also frequently found in the Assyrian sculptures, is evidently a secondary form of Assur; just as among the ancient Egyptians, the ram-headed deity represented the courage and power of Amon = Ham. How long Assur lived, or how far he established his power, the sacred records do not say. It is not unlikely that for many centuries the empire of the plains watered by the Euphrates and the Tigris, was divided between the Assyrians of Nineveh, and the inhabitants of Babylon, and that each city was in its turn dominant or subject according to the value or weakness of its prince.
The name "Assyria" is evidently employed in three different significations by the sacred writers. 1. Ancient Assyria lay east of the Tigris, between Armenia, Susiana, and Media; the region which mostly comprises the modern Kurdistan and the pashalik of Mosul. (Gen. ii. 14; x. 11, 22.) 2. Generally "Assyria" means the kingdom or empire of Assyria, which sometimes comprehended Mesopotamia and Babylonia; (Isa. x. 12; xxxix. 1;) and extended to the Euphrates, which river is put as the emblem of the Assyrian empire. (Isa. vii. 20; viii. 7.)

3. After the overthrow of the Assyrian empire, the name "Assyria" continued to be sometimes applied to those countries over which that empire had formerly extended, and to the new kingdoms which had then taken its place,—so Babylonia; (2 Kings xxiii. 29; Jer. ii. 15; Isa. vii. 7, 8; Lam. v. 6;) and to Persia, (Est. vi. 22,) where Darius is also called "king of Assyria." There also seems to be sufficient grounds for the conjecture that there were several distinct Assyrian dynasties. From the cuneiform inscriptions exhumed from the various Assyrian ruins, the names of more than thirty Assyrian and Babylonian kings have been recovered; the first of which probably reigned in the earliest dynasty, and the last at the time of the final overthrow of the kingdom. Many of the names are scarcely, if at all, known in history. The first dynasty is supposed to have commenced with Nieser, probably a son of Aschur, about b.c. 2182. Amraphel, king of Shinar, and Arioch, king of El-Asar, are supposed to have reigned as viceroyals during one of the early dynasties. (Gen. xiv. 1.) From the time of Moses, when Assyria was rising into a formidable state, (Num. xxiv. 21, 22;) we have no further notice of the Assyrians until the time of Jonah, and Jeroboam II., king of Israel, about b.c. 823. (2 Kings xiv. 25; Jon. i. 12.) Then comes what is usually called the Scriptural dynasty, which began with Sal, and terminated with Sargon, or the king, under whatever name he was known, in whose reign Nineveh was finally destroyed. Nevertheless, from the names of "Jabu," king of Israel, and "Haza-

Astronomy — See Astaroth.

Astrologers. A class of men among the ancient Egyptians, Chaldeans, and neighbouring nations, who, by casting nativities from the place of the stars at one's birth, and by various arts of computing and divining, pretended to foretell the fortunes and destinies of individuals. Astrology was interdicted to the Hebrews. The "wise man" mentioned in Matt. ii. 1, do not appear to have been astrologers. (Lev. xx. 27; Deut. xvii. 10; Isa. xlvi. 9; Jer. xxviii. 9; l. 35; Dan. i. 20; ii. 2, 13, 48.) In the study of astrology, the present race of orientals do not yield to their ancestors, there being scarcely any contingency or circumstance of life concerning which astrologers, or astrological tables are not consulted. The Hebrews appear to have had some acquaintance with astronomy; as the interests of agriculture and navigation, and the regulation of the festivals re-quered some knowledge of that science.
Some of the constellations are mentioned by name. (2 Kings xxiii. 5 ; Isa. xiii. 10 ; Amos v. 8 ; Job ix. 9 ; xxxviii. 31, 32.)

ASUPPIM = collections, stores, or store-houses. The store-houses in Jeruusalem. (1 Chron. xxvi. 15, 17.)

ASYNCRITUS = incomparable. A Christian mentioned by Paul. (Rom.
xvi. 14.)

ATAD = shepherds. A place on the other side of the Jordan, afterwards called "Abel-Mizraim." (Gen. l. 10, 11.)

ATARAH = a crown. One of the wives of Jerahmeel. (1 Chron. ii. 26.)

ATARITES—See Ataroth.

ATAROTH = crowns. 1. A city in Ephraim; (Josh. xvi. 2, 7;) called also "Ataroth-adar," and "Ataroth-adar= crowns of Adar." (Josh. xvi. 5 ; xviii. 13.) It is now a large village called Atara. 2. A city in Gad. (Num. xxxiii. 3, 34.) 3. A city in Judah, rendered in the margin, Atarites, or crowns. (1 Chron. ii. 54.)

ATER = shut up, bound, dumb. 1.
One whose posterity returned from the exile. (Ex. ii. 16; Neh. vii. 21.) 2.
One of the temple porters. (Ex. ii.
42; Neh. vii. 45.)

ATHACH = lodging-place. A place in Judah. (1 Sam. xxx. 30.)

ATHAIH.—See Asaiah.

ATHALIAH = whom Jehovah afflicts. 1. The daughter of Ahab, by his wife Jezebel, and wife of Joram, or Jehoram, king of Judah. After Jehu had slain Ahaziah her son, she took possession of the vacant throne, and murdered all the males of the royal family, with the exception of Josiah, the youngest son of Ahaziah, who was rescued by Jehosheba, a sister of Ahaziah; and was privately brought up by a nurse in an apartment of the temple. The idolatrious Athaliah had reigned more than six years, to B.C. 875; when, by the management of the high-priest, Je-boiada, the young prince was publicly anointed king. Attracted by the crowd of people, who had assembled to witness the ceremony, and unsuspicous of the cause, Athaliah hastened to the temple. When she saw the young king on the throne, and heard the shouts of the people, and found that her usurpation was likely to terminate, she rent her clothes and cried out,
"Treason, Treason!" She was removed from the precincts of the temple, and put to death. (2 Kings xi. 1—20 ; 2 Chron. xxiii. 9—12 ; xxiii. 1—21.) 2.
A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 26.) 3. A man whose son returned from the exile. (Ex. vii. 7.)

ATHARIM = places, regions. A place in the south of Palestine. (Num.
xxx. 1.) This passage is rendered "by the way of the spies," correctly it should be "by the way of Atharim."

ATHENS = Minerva city. The capital of Attica, and the chief city of ancient Greece. It is situated on the east side of Attica, about five miles from the Gulf of Egina, and is built on the west side of an abrupt and rocky eminence rising out of an extensive plain. The city probably received its name from the goddess Minerva, who was called Athene by the Greeks, and was considered the tutelary goddess.
The Athenians are celebrated in the history of Greece for their warlike valour, and also for their general intelligence and the cultivation of all the arts of peace. Their city was the seat of the fine arts, and possessed many magnificent buildings. It was the resort of philosophers, and the birthplace of an unusual number of illustrisous men; and the schools, professors, and philosophers were very famous.
When Paul visited it, about A.D. 52, be found it plunged in idolatry, occupied in inquiring and reporting news, curious to know everything, and divided in opinion concerning religion and happiness.
(Acts xvii. 16—34; xviii. 1; 1 Thess.
iii. 1.) Modern Athens is now the metropolis of the kingdom of Greece, and contains more than 17,000 inhabitants.
A university has been founded in Athens, and the people appear to have an ardent desire for instruction and for free institutions. The plan of the city has recently been so arranged, that many of the principal remains of antiquity will be brought into view in one long street, which is to pass through the centre, and finish at the ancient entrance.—See AEROPAGUS.

ATHLAI = violence. One of the sons of Bebai. (Ecr. x. 28.)

ATONEMENT. This word, as now used by us, commonly designates the reason, sacrifice, or the expiation, offered by the death of Jesus Christ, by means of which reconciliation is effected between God and man. How mercy may be extended to offending creatures, the subjects of the divine government, without encouraging sin, or lowering the righteous and holy character of God, and the authority of His government, in the maintenance of which every intelligent being is interested, must be considered as a problem of very difficult solution. The gospel alone affords a satisfactory answer, by showing how God may be "just," and yet the "justifier" of the ungodly—by declaring "the righteousness of God," at the same time that it proclaims His mercy. It shows that our adorable Redeemer must be frail and mortal, or He cannot die a sacrifice; that He must possess ineffable dignity, or He cannot merit as a substitute. The voluntary sufferings of the Son of God "for us," that is, in our room and stead, not only magnify the justice of God, display His hatred to sin, proclaim the exceeding sinfulness of transgression; but warn the persevering offender of the terribleness, as well as the certainty, of his punishment, and open the gates of salvation to every believer. It is a part of the same divine plan, also, to engage the influence of the Holy Spirit, to awaken penitence in man, and to lead the wanderer back to Himself; to renew our fallen nature in righteousness, at the moment we are justified through faith, and to place us in circumstances in which we may henceforth "walk in newness of life." All the ends of government are here answered—no license is given to offence—the moral law is until they are truly penitent and believe on Him, Jesus, our adorable Redeemer and Saviour, by His death, has become "the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world." (1 John ii. 1, 2.) He arose from the dead, assumed the office of a royal High Priest, ascended into heaven with His own blood, which He had shed in sacrifice, sat down on the throne of intercession, where He ever liveth to atone for penitent sinners as often as they apply to God through Him for pardon. And as soon as our great High Priest atones for a sinner, his sin is covered, and he is forgiven. The appropriate and distinguished official work of the Hebrew high priest was to make atonement by presenting the blood of the victim in the holy place. And why is this symbol applied to Christ with so much particularity, unless He exercises the office of a high priest, within the vail, in the holiest of all, by making atonement? He ever liveth to make intercession for us. His blood is called "the blood of sprinkling," and His intercession before the throne in heaven gives as it were a voice to the blood—the blood of Jesus "speaketh," and the sinner is forgiven.

...

—See PROPITIATION.

ATONEMENT, DAY OF. The principal Hebrew festival was permanently instituted on the tenth day of the seventh month Tisri, answering to the tenth day of the moon in our October, as a day of atonement for sins in general. It commenced at sunset of the previous day, and lasted twenty-four hours; that is, from sunset to sunset. The most remarkable ceremony of the day was the entrance of the high priest into the sanctuary to sprinkle the blood and make atonement. The Hebrew word ἡπάτων, rendered "atonement," not only signifies a reason, price of expiation, but primarily to cover, to draw over, hence reconciliation or atonement and forgiveness, through the sprinkling of the blood in the holy place. The atonement service is minutely described in Lev. xvi. 1—34. From a consideration of the various rites which the high priest had to perform, it is not improbable that he entered the inner sanctuary more than once on that day. (Lev. xvi. 2; xii. 14, 15; Heb. ix. 7.) When the high priest had washed himself in water, put on his white linen hose and coat, adjusted his girdle, and placed the sacerdotal mitre on his head, he conducted to the altar a bullock, destined to be slain for the sins of himself and his family; also two goats for the sins of the people, one of which was selected by lot to be sacrificed to Jehovah; and the other, after the people had confessed their sins, for what is called the "scape-goat." The service consisted in three things—killing the victim—presenting the blood before Jehovah in the most holy place—and burning the fat upon the altar. In the stricter and more accurate sense, the atoning act consisted in presenting the blood of the victim within the vail before Jehovah: for it is said expressly, "It is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul." (Lev. xxii. 11.) The slaying the victim was precedent, as the burning of the sacrifice was subsequent, to the making atonement, and therefore were not parts of the atoning act. (Lev. xvi. 11, 27.) The reason assigned for giving such importance to this part of the high priest's service was, "that the life of the flesh is in the blood," and the presentation of that was as if the entire sacrifice in all its dying agonies were presented. Hence we learn, that the atonement did not consist in the death of the victim, but in the act of the high priest sprinkling or presenting the blood of the sacrifice, before Jehovah, in the place appointed. No atonement could be made for a transgressor until he had confessed his sins. No atonement was ineffectual, it always procured pardon or cleansing. To this the divine versacity stood pledged, —"It shall be forgiven him." (Lev. iv. 20, 26.) The atoning act of the high priest was typical of the work of Christ, our royal High Priest, who, with His own blood shed in death, hath entered into the holy place on high, to appear in the presence of God for us. (Heb. ix. 11, 12.)
ATROTH = crowns. A city in Gad; (Num. xxxii. 35.) properly “Atroth-Shophan” = crowns hidden.

ATTAI = opportunism. 1. A grandson of Sheahan. (1 Chron. ii. 35, 36.) 2. A Gadite who went over to David at Ziklag. (1 Chron. xii. 11.) 3. A son of Rehoboam. (2 Chron. xi. 20.)

ATTALIA = increasing. A maritime city, beautifully situated round a small harbour, in the Gulf of Pammphylia. It is still a city of importance, called Satala. (Acts xiv. 25.)

AUGUSTUS = august, venerable. Caius Octavianus, the nephew and successor of Julius Caesar, first assumed the title Augustus. He was the first peacefully acknowledged emperor of Rome. Caesar Augustus died A.D. 14, aged nearly 76, after a reign of 66 years. Christ was born in the forty-second year of his reign. (Luke ii. 1.)

AVA = overturning, ruin. A city under the Assyrian dominion, whence colonists were brought to Samaria. The inhabitants were called “Avites.” (2 Kings xvii. 24, 31; xviii. 34, margin.) It is called “Ivah,” in 2 Kings xvii. 34; xix. 13; Is. xxxvii. 13.

AVEN = nothingness, vanity, idols. 1. A plain or valley situated between Lebanon and Anti-Lebanon, in which is situated Bealbe = city of Baal, or of the sun; with its celebrated temple. (Am. i. 5.) 2. —See OR.

AVENGER of BLOOD. A very early custom of the Hebrews and of other ancient nations, was that of blood-revenge; by which, in all cases of homicide, the nearest relative—the goel = avenger—of the person slain, was bound to kill the slayer, or be himself regarded infamous; for no commutation whatever was admissible. This custom, which originated before the establishment of legal tribunals of justice, was so deeply seated among the Hebrews, that even Moses did not see fit to prohibit it directly; but chose rather to evade and counteract the evil by the institution of cities of refuge. The same custom is still recognised, more or less, among the independent nomadic tribes, as the wild hordes of Bedawin, who rove over the Arabian deserts, and the inhabitants of the mountainous districts of Kurdistan; where the want or weakness of an established civil government, renders the public administration of criminal justice imperfect or impracticable. The blood-avenger often undergoes incalculable difficulties, and spends an incredible time in hunting down his victim; but a commutation or compensation for homicide is not unfrequently adjusted between the parties. The institution of the Hebrew cities of refuge appears to have accomplished the object of the great legislator, by gradually wearing out this atrocious custom. (Gen. ix. 5; Ex. xxii. 14; Num. xxxv. 9—35; Deut. xix. 1—13; xxi. 1—9; Josh. xx. 1—9; 1 Kings ii. 28—34.):—See REFUG.

AVIM = Avites’-town, or the ruins. A city in Benjamin. (Josh. xviii. 23.)

AVIMS = dwellers among ruins. The ancient inhabitants of the south-western part of Canaan, expelled by the Philistines. They are also called “Avites.” (Deut. ii. 23; Josh. xiii. 3.) The inhabitants of Ava, or Ivah, were also called “Avites.” (2 Kings xvii. 24, 31.)

AVITES.—See AVIM.

AVITH = ruins. A town of the Edomites. (Gen. xxxvi. 36.)

AZAL = the side or root of a mountain. A place near Jerusalem. (Zeoh. xiv. 5.)

AZALIAH = whom Jehovah has reserved. The father of Shaphan. (2 Chron. xxxiv. 8.)

AZANIAH = whom Jehovah hears. One of the Levites. (Neh. x. 9.)

AZAREL.—See AZAREL.

AZAREL = whom God helps. 1. A friend of David’s. (1 Chron. xii. 6.) 2. The chief of the eleventh division of singers. (1 Chron. xxv. 18.) 3. A prince of Dan. (1 Chron. xxvii. 22.) 4. The father of Amasaiah. (Neh. xi. 18.)

In Neh. xii. 38, he is called “Azariael.”

5. A descendant of Bani. (Ezr. x. 41.)

AZARIAH = whom Jehovah helps. 1. A Levite; also called “Uziah.” (1 Chron. vi. 28, 24.) 2. Two high priests of the Hebrews. (1 Chron. vi. 9, 10.) 3. Two chief priests. (2 Chron. xxvi. 108)
AZA

AZAZEL.—See SCAPES-BOAT.

AZAZ.—strong. A descendant of Reuben. (1 Chron. v. 8.)

AZBUK = wholly desolate. The father of Nehemiah. (Neh. iii. 16.)

AZKEAH = field dug over, broken up. A city in the plain of Judah. (Josh. x. 10, 11; xv. 35; 1 Sam. xvii.)

AZEL = noble. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 37.)

AZEM = bone. A city of Simeon. (Josh. xv. 29; xix. 8.)

AZGAD = strong in fortune. One whose posterity went up from the exile. (Ezra ii. 12; Neh. vii. 17; x. 15.)

AZIEL = whom God consoles. A Levite; also called "Jaaziel." (1 Chron. xv. 20, 18.)

AZIZA = strong. One who returned from the exile. (Ezra x. 27.)

AZMAYETH = strong as death. 1. A place in Judah or Benjamin. (Ezra x. 24; Neh. xii. 29.) Dr. Wilson thinks that the modern Assuan on the way from Jerusalem to Tibirja, corresponds to Azmaveth; and that it is not to be confounded with Beth-azmaveth. 2. One of David's distinguished officers. (2 Sam. xxiii. 31.) 3. The son of Adiel. (1 Chron. xxvii. 25.)

AZMON = strong. A city on the southern border of Palestine. (Num. xxxiv. 4, 5; Josh. vii. 4.)

AZNOTH-TABOR = ears or swarms of Tabor. A city of Naphtali. (Josh. xix. 34.)

AZOR = to help. One of the reputed ancestors of Christ. (Matt. i. 13.)

AZOTUS.—See ASHDOD.

AZUBAH = ruins, rubbish. 1. The wife of Caleb. (1 Chron. ii. 18, 19.) 2. The mother of Jehoshaphat. (1 Kings xix. 22.)

AZUR = helper. 1. A prophet in the time of Zedekiah. (Jer. xxvi. 1.) 2. The father of Jaazaniah. (Ezek. xi. 1.)

AZZAH.—See GAZA.

AZZAN = the strong. The father of Paltiel. (Num. xxxiv. 26.)

AZZUR = helper. One who sealed the covenant. (Neh. x. 17.)

BAAL = lord. 1. The idol god of the Phoenicians and Canaanites, whose worship was also celebrated with great pomp by the Hebrews, especially at Samaria, along with that of Ashtoreth.

Baal.
(Judg. ii. 18; iii. 7; 2 Kings x. 18.) Among the Babylonians he was worshipped under the name of "Bel." (Isa. xlv. 1; Jer. l. 1; li. 44.) The general opinion is that Baal is the sun, and Ashtoreth the moon, and that under these names those luminaries received divine honours. It is not unlikely that the founders of the ancient nations, who were deified, were sometimes symbolized by the sun, as the emblem of divine unity. The winged figure in the circle, so often found upon the Assyrian monuments, was probably a symbol of Assur in connection with the sun. The same figure, but less elaborated, frequently occurs on the monuments of Egypt. Such figures appear to have been, as Mr. Bonomi suggests, the "Baalim" or sun-gods of the ancient heathen. (Judg. ii. 11; x. 10; Num. xxv. 3; 1 Sam. vii. 4; 1 Kings xvi. 31.) The temples and altars of Baal were generally on eminences. (Judg. vi. 25.) Manasseh placed in the two courts of the temple at Jerusalem altars to all the host of heaven, and, in particular, to Baal and Ashtoreth. (2 Kings xxi. 3—7.) And human victims were offered to Baal. (Jer. xix. 5; xxxii. 29; 2 Kings xxiii. 12.) In later times among the Syro-Arabians, Baal denoted the planet Jupiter, as Ashtoreth denoted Venus. The term "Baal" is frequently compounded in the proper names of cities and of persons; and sometimes denotes the possessor of a thing; a place which has or contains anything. 2. A descendant of Reuben. (1 Chron. v. 5.) 3. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 50; ix. 56.) 4.—See Baalath-Beer.

BAALAH = cittius, inhabitantis. 1. A city situated in the southern part of Judah; afterwards assigned to Simeon. (Josh. xv. 29.) It is probably the same as "Balah," (Josh. xix. 3;) and "Nilah." (1 Chron. iv. 29.) It may be the same as Baalath-beer. 2. Another name for Kirjath-jearim; it gave name to "Mount Baalah," in the same region, but nearer the sea. (Josh. xv. 9, 11.)

BAALATH = cittius, inhabitantis. A city in the tribe of Dan; (Josh. xix.
BAAL-BERITH = lord, or guardian of covensants. An idol worshipped by the Shechemites, and to whom they built a temple. (Judg. viii. 33; x. 4.)

BAAL. — See KIRJATH-ARIM.

BAAL-GAD = place or lord of forerunner. A city of the Canaanites at the foot of Hermon; perhaps the same as "Baal-Heron." (Josh. xi. 17; xii. 7; xiv. 5.)

BAAL-HAMON = place of multitude, or sacred to Asmodeus. A place near which Solomon had a vineyard. (Sol. Song viii. 11.)

BAAL-HANAN = lord of grace. A king of the Edomites. (Gen. xxxvi. 33; 1 Chron. i. 49.) 2. An overseer of the plantations in the time of David. (1 Chron. xiv. 38.)

BAAL-Hazor = having a village or hamlet. A town or village near the territory of Ephraim; (2 Sam. xili. 24) perhaps the same as "Hazor" in Benjamin. (Neh. xli. 38.)

BAAL-HERMON = place of Hermon. A town and an adjacent mountain near Hermon; perhaps the same as "Baal-Gad." (Judg. iii. 9; 1 Chron. v. 2.)

BAALI = my lord. The same as "Baal." (Hos. ii. 16.)

BAALIM = lords. The plural of Baal. (Hos. ii. 9, 13, 17.) — See BAAL.

BAALIS = son of exaltation. A king of the Ammonites. (Jer. xi. 14.)

BAAL-MEON = place of dwelling. A town assigned to Reuben; but which soon came into the power of the Moabites. (Num. xxxii. 36.) Its ruins are still called Moc. It is also called "Beth-baal-Meon;" (Josh. xiii. 17;) and "Beth-Meon;" (Jer. lxi. 17; xliii. 25;) also "Bezon," written for Moen. (Num. xxxii. 3.)

BAAL-Peor. An idol of the Moabites, at whose shrine the Moabitish women, in order to do him reverence, parted with their virtue. (Num. xxv. 1—9; Ps. cvi. 28.) The name Por (i.e., espousal) seems to be an allusion to the corrupt practices and excesses of abominations which prevailed at the shrine of this deity, who, like Priapus, was the patron of carnal gratification.

BAAL-PERAZIM = place of defects or breaches. A place near the valley of Rephaim. (2 Sam. v. 20; 1 Chron. xiv. 11; compare Isa. xxxviii. 21.)

BAAL-SHALISHA = Baal-tried, or place of three. A place situated in the district of Shalisha. (2 Kings iv. 42; 1 Sam. ix. 4.)

BAAL-TAMAR = place of palm trees. A place near Gibeah. (Judg. xx. 38.)

BAAL-ZEBUB = fly-Baal, fly-destroyer. This idol had a temple in the city of Ekron. (2 Kings i. 2.) He was the tutelary deity that protected the people from the infestation of gnats; a superstition adopted by the Greeks, who worshipped deities to protect them from mice and locusts. Baal-Zebub is not to be confounded with "Beel-Zebul;" (BAAL-ZEPHON = place of Typhon, or sacred to Typhon. A town in Egypt, near the head of the Red Sea. (Ex. xiv. 2, 9; Num. xxxii. 7.) The name accords well with the site of this place in or near the desert tracts between the Nile and the Red Sea, which were held to be the abode of Typhon, the evil genius of the Egyptians; and here probably was a temple erected to the worship of this idol.

BAANA = son of affliction. 1. An officer under Solomon. (1 Kings iv. 12.) 2. The father of Zadok. (Neh. iii. 4.)

BAANAH = son of affliction. 1. An officer under Solomon. (1 Kings iv. 16.) 2. The murderer of Ish-bosheth. (2 Sam. iv. 2—12.) 3. The father of Heleb. (2 Sam. xii. 39; 1 Chron. xi. 30.) 4. One who returned from the exile. (Ezr. ii. 2; Neh. vii. 7; x. 27.)

BAARA = brass. The wife of Shaharaim; (1 Chron. viii. 8;) in verse 9, erroneously written "Hodeah;" (BAASHA = oppressor. The third king of Israel. He was the son of Ahijah, and commander of the armies of Nadab, king of Israel. He treacherously killed his master at the siege of Gibbethon, and usurped the kingdom, which he possessed twenty-four years, from 938—925 B.C. He exterminated the whole race of Jeroboam, as God had commanded; but by his bad conduct and his idolatry, incurred the indignation of the Most High. On this account the prophet Jehu declared to him the determination of God to exterminate his family, which was accordingly accomplished in the days of his son Elah, by Zimri. (1 Kings xiv. 7—10; xvi. 16; xvi. 1—14; 2 Chron. xvi. 1; Jer. xlii. 9.)

BAASEIAH = works of Jehovah. An ancestor of Asaph. (1 Chron. vi. 40.)

ABEL = confusion, or perhaps court or gate of God, i.e. Bel. The name of a lofty tower, begun to be built by the sons of Noah, in the land of Shinar, about a century after the flood. The object of the people was to build a city and a tower, to prevent their dispersion over the earth. As this was an offence, and contrary to the Divine purpose of replenishing the earth, God therefore took measures to scatter them. Before the dispersion, “the whole earth was of one language, and of one speech.” (Gen. xi. 1—9; compare Gen. x. 25.) Perhaps the confusion of language was not an instantaneous effect of the Divine anger upon the Babel builders, but rather their immediate dispersion may have been the punishment of their premature attempt at centralization, and the diversity of languages was probably a result of the dispersion. The tower was apparently left incomplete; but it was probably resumed some few years after the dispersion, by Nimrod, when he founded his kingdom at Babylon. (Gen. x. 10.)

The tower of Babel appears to have been afterwards finished; or perhaps another fabric was erected from its materials, known by the name of the tower of Belsis, and again beautified and consecrated by Nebuchadnezzar as the temple of his god, Bel or Bel. Among the extensive ruins which still exist on the site, and in the neighbourhood of Babylon, it is yet undecided which marks the site of the temple of Belsis. It may have stood on the site of the vast square mound to the east of the river, named by the Arabs Babel. Or the solitary mass of brickwork, rising from the summit of the largest mound, which marks the remains known to the Arabs as the Musuliba = eastern, may designate its site. But the great pile of masonry to the south-west of Hillah, known by the name of the Birsh Nimrud = palace of Nineveh, is generally recognised as the site of the ancient temple. However, the cuneiform characters which are found upon the thousands of large bricks which have been taken from the several ruins, bear the name of Nebuchadnezzar; and they exhibit no records of a date earlier than that of monarch.

BABYLON = confusion, or perhaps the court or gate of God, i.e. Bel. This name is the Greek form of the Hebrew Babel. It is the name of the celebrated metropolis of Babylonia; and was situated on a wide plain on the Euphrates, about 200 miles above the junction of the Tigris, and 300 above the Persian Gulf, and about the same distance south-west from Nineveh. The river divided the city into two nearly equal parts. The original foundation of this city is referred, in the Scriptures, to the impious attempt of the descendants of Noah to build “a city and a tower;” on account of which they were scattered, by the immediate interposition of God. (Gen. xi. 1—9.) It is not improbable that Nimrod, a few years after the dispersion, continued the building of the city, when he founded the kingdom of Babylon. (Gen. x. 9, 10.) Semiramis, the queen, may have greatly extended the ancient city. Nebuchadnezzar rebuilt and enlarged it still further, so that in his reign Babylon reached the summit of its greatness and splendour, and became the capital of the civilized world. (Dan. iv. 30; Isa. xlix. 19; xlvi. 1, 5, 8; Jer. li. 41.) According to the computation of Mr. Bonomi, the area of Babylon was 225 square miles. The walls of the city were made of brick, cemented by bitumen; and are said to have been 67 feet thick, and more than 300 feet high. They were not only turreted, but surrounded by a deep ditch, and pierced by a hundred gates. of nema; hence the city was also called "Naushach"—brass-gated. (Jer. xxv. 8; e. 41.) A bridge passed over the Euphrates, connecting the two parts of the city. Within the walls of the city there was a great amount of pasture and arable land, also parks for the use of the king and his nobles. The most wondrous structures were the temple of Belus, the palace of Nebuchadnezzar, and the magnificent hanging gardens or elevated groves, which rose on terraces one above another to more than 300 feet. The country was intersected by several canals, which served the purpose of irrigation. These were "the rivers of Babylon."

Ps. xiii. 1, 2.) The city of Babylon, however, did not long thus remain the capital of the world; for already under the reign of Nebuchadnezzar's grandson, Belshazzar, it was besieged and taken by Cyrus, in B.C. 538. The accounts of Greek historians harmonize here with the statements of the Scriptures, that Cyrus made his successful assault on a night when the whole city, relying on the strength of the walls, had given themselves up to the riot and debauchery of a grand public festival, and the king and his nobles were reveling at a splendid entertainment. Cyrus had previously caused a canal, which ran west of the city, and carried off the superfluous water of the Euphrates into the lake of Nisibis, to be cleared out, in order to turn the river into it, which, by this means, was rendered so shallow, that his soldiers were able to penetrate along its bed into the city. From this time Babylon ceased to be the chief city of an independent state; and like Nineveh, it sank gradually into decay and utter desolation, and for 2000 years has remained an appalling memorial of Divine vengeance and the truth of those prophecies which foretold its fall. (Isa. xix. 1—22; ziv. 4—27; xxi. 9; xlv. 27, 28; xlv. 1—8; xlvi. 1, 2; xlvii. 1—15; jer. xxi. 3—14; 1. 1—46; li. 1—64.) The ruins of Babylon are very extensive—grand, gloomy and desolate beyond description. In no place under heaven is the contrast between ancient magnificence and present desolation greater than here. The plain for several miles around the town of Hillah, is studded with vast mounds, some of which exhibit venerable and imposing ruins, yet not sufficiently perfect and to indicate the enormous structures to which they belonged. Of the great pile of masonry, about six miles to the south west of Hillah, called Birn Nimrud = palace of Nine- red, which, according to Mr. Rich's measurement, (Memoirs of the Ruins of Babylon, p. 167, 1832,) is 235 feet in perpendicular height, Mr. Layard says, "neither the original form or object of the edifice, of which it is the ruin, have hitherto been determined." Of the great square mound called Babel by the Arabe, situated on the eastern bank of the river, about five miles from Hillah, the same traveller says, "I will not attempt to decide whether Babel be the remains of a great palace of Nebuchadnezzar, of the celebrated hanging gardens, or of a temple." And of the Kasr = palace, called by the Arabs Mujelibe = overthrown, a vast ruin about 700 yards square, situated about one mile to the south of Babel, and the only remains of building not covered by sand and soil on the site of Babylon, the same distinguished traveller again remarks, "The work of destruction has been too complete to allow us to determine whether they belong to the interior or exterior of a palace; I sought in vain for some clue to the general plan of the edifice." Other shapeless heaps of rubbish cover for many an acre the face of the plain. They are immense piles of sundried and kiln-burnt bricks, decomposed to a great depth, furrowed with deep channels by the abrasion of the elements, rent and torn as if by some direful convulsion; and, in some places scattered and vitrified, as though they had been subjected to the most intense heat, the rubbish with which they are covered is mixed with fragments of glass, marble, pottery, and inscribed brick mingled with that peculiar nitrous and blanched soil, which, bred from the remains of ancient habitations, checks or destroys vegetation, and renders the site of Babylon a naked and hideous waste. In the excavation of these mounds, thousands and tens of thousands of bricks are found, stamped on one side with the name of Nebuchadnessar; but revealing no anterior history and no continuous annals. Col. Rawlinson says, "that every ruin from some distance north of Baghdad, as far south as the Birs Nimrud, is of the age of Nebuchadnessar. I have examined the bricks in situ, belonging perhaps to one hundred different towns and cities within this area of about 100 miles in length, and 30 or 40 in breadth, and I never found any other legend than that of Nebuchadnessar, son of Nabopolassar, king of Babylon." Inscriptions may yet be exhumed to reveal to modern research, the history, which for thousands of years has been treasured up in sullen silence, of this mighty city, whose vast halls have crumbled into those confused masses of ruins, and are now the haunts of unclean beasts and birds. Mr. Layard says, "Owls start from the scanty thickets, and the foul jackal skulks through the furrows." (Isa. xxxiii. 10-12; Jer. i. 39.) Nimrod and Babylon, p. 484. Babylon in the time of the apostles, (1 Pet. v. 13,) though fallen from its ancient grandeur, appears to have had a large mixed population. "Babylon the Great" is put symbolically for pagan Rome, the capital of heathenism; and in this respect the successor of Babylon. (Rev. xiv. 8; xvi. 19; xvii. 5; xviii. 2, 10, 21; compare Isa. xxii. 9; Jer. i. 33; li. 7, 8.)—See Shinar.

BACA = weeping, lamentation. A valley in Palestine, probably so called from being gloomy and sterile. In Psa. lxxxiv. 6, we read, "passing through the valley of Baca = of lamentation, they make it fountains," that is, it becomes so to the sacred pilgrims. The psalmist in exile, or at least at a distance from Jerusalem, referring to the happiness of those who are permitted to make the usual pilgrimages to that city, in order to worship Jehovah in the temple: "They love the ways which lead thither; yes, though they must pass through rough and dreary paths, even a vale of tears, yet such are their hope and joy of heart, that all this is to them as a well watered country, a land crowned with the blessings of the early rain." The same Hebrew word, Baca, is the name of a certain tree or shrub, so called from its weeping, that is, distilling; it grows around Mecca, and is not unlike the balsam-tree, distilling white tears of a pungent acid taste. It is supposed by many, that "the valley of Baca" abounded with this shrub. In 2 Sam. v. 23; 1 Chron. xiv. 14, 15, the word baca is rendered, in our version "mulberry trees."—See Mulberry-Trees.

BACHRITES.—See Rechel.

BADGER. A small inoffensive animal, closely allied to the bear genus, which remains torpid all winter. It is an inhabitant of cold countries, and is not found in Arabia. Hence the Hebrew word taksa, rendered "badger's skins," (Ex. xxv. 5; xxxvi. 14; Ezek. xvi. 10,) used for covering the tabernacle and for shoes, could not have been the skins of this animal. Some understand a species of hare, called tehu, which is still found in the Red Sea, the skin of which is an inch thick, and is used by the Arabs of the present day for shoe-leather, or sandals, to be intended. Others think the term designates the seal, which was frequent in the peninsula of Sinai. However, the ancient versions understood the term to designate a colour given to the leather.

BAGS. The workmen of the temple had their money paid in "bags," each of which contained a precise amount, which was probably delivered to them sealed. (2 Kings xii. 10, 11.) At this day, in the East, money passes in bags from hand to hand under the seal of a banker or other public officer, and without counting, as it is paid by one to another. If the seal is genuine and unbroken, the exact value of each bag.
BAH

is known at sight. (Job xiv. 17; Luke xi. 53.) The original word is rendered "perum," in Prov. i. 14, and is used in the same sense in Isa. xli. 6; but in Deut. xxv. 13; Prov. xvi. 11; Mic. vi. 11, it refers to the pouch at the girdle, in which of old, as at the present day, in the East, weights for weighing money were carried by the travelling merchants.—See BALANCES.

BAHURIM = young men's village. A small city near Jerusalem, just east of the Mount of Olives, belonging to Benjamin. (2 Sam. iii. 16; xvi. 5; xvii. 16; xix. 16; 1 Kings ii. 8.) According to 2 Sam. xxiii. 31, the inhabitants were called "Barhamites," but in 1 Chron. xi. 33, they were called "Bahurimites."

BAJITH = houses or temple. This word occurs in Isa. xxv. 2, and is erroneously thought to be the name of a city in Moab. It simply means the "house" or "temple."

BAKBKAR = wasting of the sport. One of the Levites. (1 Chron. ix. 15.)

BAKBUK = a bottle. A man whose posterity returned from the exile. (Ezra ii. 51; Neh. vii. 53.)

BAKBUKIAH = emptying, i.e. wasting of Jerusalem. One of the Levites. (Neh. xi. 17; xii. 9, 25.)

BAKER.—See BREAD.

BALAAM = a foreigner, stranger. The son of Beor or Boshor, and a native of the city Pethor, on the Euphrates. (Num. xxii. 5.) Whether he was a prophet divinely inspired, or only a pretender, does not appear; that he was an unrighteous man is not conclusive evidence that he was not a prophet of God employed for a particular purpose. (1 Sam. x. 19; 1 Kings xiii. 18—20; Matt. vii. 22; John xi. 51.) When the Hebrews were journeying from Egypt to the Promised Land, Balak, king of Moab knew that he could not contend with such a formidable host, and supposing that their God was like the gods of the heathen, ready to bless or to curse according to the caprice or interest of their votaries, sent for Balaam, who had the reputation of a famous diviner, to curse the Hebrew armies. God signified to Balaam that the Hebrews were blessed, and should not be cursed. However, he ultimately accepted the tempting offer, and returned with the messengers to Moab. On his way he was miraculously informed that his course was wicked and perverse, and he was effectually restrained from doing what Balak had sent for him to do. Indeed the restraint of the prophet's tongue was no less remarkable than the freedom of the tongue of the ass. So far from cursing, he was led to pronounce a prophetical blessing on the Hebrews, in language which, for eloquence and force, is not surpassed in the whole scope of Hebrew poetry. Balaam, finding himself thus restrained from cursing the Hebrews, seems to have suggested to Balak a much more certain method of destroying them. This was by causing the young women of Moab to inveigle the Hebrews in the impure and idolatrous worship of Baal-Peor. The stratagem was successful, and 24,000 Hebrews were slain. (Num. xxxi. 16; 2 Pet. ii. 15; Jude 11; Rev. xii. 14.) Balaam himself fell shortly afterwards in an engagement between the Hebrews and the Midianites. (Num. xxx. 8; Josh. xiii. 22.)

BALADAN = Bel is his lord, i.e. worshipper of Bel. The father of Merodach-Baladan, king of Babylon. (2 Kings xx. 12; Isa. xxxix. 1.)

BALAH.—See BAILAH.

BALAK = empty, second. A king of Moab in the time of Moses. (Num. xxii. xxi. xxiv.)—See BAILAM.

BALANCES. In the early periods of the world, gold and silver were paid by weight; so that persons employed in traffic of any kind, usually carried with them scales or balances, and different weights in a bag. The weights of the Egyptians and Assyrians were made of stone, baked clay, or bronze; and were in the form of bulls, lions, and other animals. Fraudulent men would carry two sorts of weights, the lighter to sell with, and the other to buy with. (Mic. vi. 11.) Scales or balances are frequently seen upon the most ancient Egyptian monuments; they bear a general resemblance to those now in use, and most likely they are similar to those used by the Hebrews. (Lev. xix. 36; Prov. xi. 1.) The balance is a symbol of justice, fair dealing, and judgment. (Job xxxi. 6; Ps. lxii. 9; Dan. v. 27; Rev. vi. 1.)

In Prov. xvi. 11, the words “weight and balance,” ought to be “balance and scales.” So in Isa. xi. 12, “weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance,” ought to be “weighed the mountains in a balance, and the hills in scales.” The term rendered “balance” in these two passages, seems to designate an instrument similar to what we call the steelyard.

BALM. The Hebrew word teri, rendered “balm,” designates the oil or balsam which is pressed out of the fruit of the Eleagnus angustifolia, called by the Arabs Zukkbas. This tree is probably the myrobolanum of Pliny, a sort of oleaster, much resembling the plum tree, having many large thorns, and grows in the mountainous district of Gilead; (Gen. xxvii. 25;) and is still found in great abundance in the neighbourhood of Jericho. The oil was an article of merchandise; (Gen. xliii. 11; Ezek. xxvii. 17;) and a remedy for healing wounds. (Jer. viii. 22; xlv. 11; li. 8.) The Arabs press or pound the fruit, put the pulp in water, and collect the oil as it floats. In taste and colour it resembles the oil of sweet almonds. This balsam or oil of Jericho seems to be the ancient “balm of Gilead;” it is highly prized by the Arabs, and, even preferred to the balsam of Moesia, on account of it being efficacious against wounds and bruises. The Hebrew word basam, translated “spice,” and “spices,” (Sol. Song v. 1, 13; vi. 2,) is supposed to designate a kind of balsam shrub, of which there appears to have been several species. One kind, the opobalsamum, is said to have flourished anciently at Jericho; and was transferred by Cleopatra to the gardens of Heliopolis, where it continued to flourish for many centuries.

BAN

(Jos. Ant. iv. 1, 2.) It is no longer known in either country. Burekhardt, however, was informed at Tiberias, that the balsam shrub flourished there in the gardens; but he does not appear to have seen it. The balsam of Moesia is derived from the wounded bark of the Amyris opobalsamum, and perhaps other shrubs which flourish in Arabia.

BAMAH = a high place, height. This word occurs in Ezek. xx. 29, as the proper name of a place, while in other passages it is usually and correctly translated “high place.” (1 Sam. ix. 12—14; 1 Kings iii. 2, 4.)

BAMOTH = heights, high places. A town in Moab, on the Arnon, given to Reuben. (Num xxi. 19, 20.) It is probably the same as “Bamoth-baal” = high places of Baal. (Josh. xiii. 17; Num. xxi. 41.)

BAND. A band of Roman foot-soldiers, was probably a cohort, of which there were ten in every legion, each containing three maniples or six centuries, but varying in the number of men at different times and according to circumstances, from perhaps 300 to 1000 or more. (Matt. xxvii. 27; Mark xv. 16; Acts x. 1; xxi. 31; xxvii. 1.) The word is used also with reference to “a band” from the guards of the temple; (John xviii. 3, 12.) These were Levites, who performed the menial offices of the temple and kept watch by night. (Ps. cxviii. 1; 2 Kings xii. 9; xxv. 18; 1 Chron. ix. 17, 27.) In Matt. xxvi. 55; Luke xxii. 52, some understand a band of Roman soldiers; but these would rather have led Jesus directly to their own officers, and not to the chief priests; and besides, this was not a band of regularly armed troops.

BANI = built. 1. One of David’s distinguished officers. (2 Sam. xxiii. 38.) 2. A descendant of Levi. (1 Chron. vi. 48.) 3. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. ix. 4.) 4. One of the Levites. (Neh. iii. 17; ix. 4, 5; x. 14; xi. 22.) 5. One whose posterity returned from the exile. (Ezr. ii. 10.) He is called “Binnui,” in Neh. vii. 15. 6. A man whose sons put away their strange wives at the return from the exile. (Esr. x. 29, 34, 38; Neh. vii. 7; x. 15.)

BANISHMENT. This was not a punishment enjoined by the Mosaic law; but after the captivity, exile and forfeiture of property were introduced among the Jews. (Esr. vii. 26.) It was common under the Romans. John was exiled to Patmos. (Rev. i. 9.)

BANK.—See MONEY-CHANGERS.

BANNER.—See STANDARD.

BANQUET.—See FEAST.

BAPTISM. At the time of the translation of the Bible, a controversy had arisen concerning the import of the Greek words βαπτίζειν = "baptize," and βαπτισμός = "baptism;" so that, although they were conceived to have an import in the original, yet it was impossible to assign to them in English any meaning, without seeming to take sides in the controversy then pending. Accordingly, the Greek words, when used in reference to the Christian ordinance, were not translated at all, but merely transferred, with a slight alteration of terminus, into our language. (Matt. iii. 6, 13, 16; xix. 19; Mark i. 4, 5, xvi. 16; Luke iii. 7, 12, 21; vii. 29, 30; John i. 25, 26; Acts ii. 41; viii. 12, 13, 38; iv. 18; 1 Cor. i. 15—17.) In this matter our version has been well imitated in the best foreign translations. In some other cases the words are variously translated in accordance with the amplitude of their meaning. The Greek root βάπτιζω, with its various derivations, seems to denote any kind of dipping, washing, setting, total or partial. Hence the original words are used in the Scriptures, not only in reference to the ordinance of baptism, but also with special reference to the ceremonial purifications; and are correctly translated by the general term "wash." (Mark vii. 4, 8; Luke xi. 38; Neh. ix. 10.) The Hebrew word ניקָתָן, used in reference to the same purifications, is also well rendered "wash." (Lev. xiv. 9; xv. 13; xvi. 4; Ezek. xxiii. 17; xi. 31; Isa. iv. 4.) It would thus seem, as far as the literal meaning of the Greek words is concerned, that the Scriptures do not determine any particular mode of baptism as exclusively the right one. So much is certain that the leading idea is to wash or apply water for the purpose of purification. The figurative usage of the words is analogous to the literal. Christ referring to His baptism of suffering, evidently means that He was about to be plunged in, or overwhelmed with deep distress. (Luke xii. 50; Mark x. 38, 39.) So the baptism "with the Holy Ghost and with fire," on the day of Pentecost, is symbolized by "pouring out;" (Matt. iii. 11; Acts ii. 3; 17; 1 Cor. xii. 13;) and the Holy Spirit is said to have "descended" upon Christ. (John i. 32, 33.) From the several examples of the usage of the word baptize, we conclude, that, in reference to the ordinance of baptism, it signifies an application of water in any way, specially by "pouring out," for the purpose of designating or symbolizing purification. Such also seems to be the meaning of the term in 1 Pet. iii. 20, 21, 1 Cor. x. 1, 2; (compare Ps. lixvii. 16, 17.) The usage of the prepositions "in the Jordan," and "out of the water," is not contrary to this view, inasmuch as they signify, respectively, of as well as in, and from as well as out of. (Matt. iii. 6, 16; Mark i. 9, 10.) The passage in Rom. vi. 4, is not an allusion to the ordinance of baptism.

The ordinance of baptism is a symbolical representation of the truth of the doctrine of Christ, adumbrating that purification of heart by the Holy Spirit, which we are to endeavour to obtain, and which is our only requisite for the kingdom of heaven. The rite itself possesses no special efficacy; neither is there any special virtue in the person administering it. As this ordinance is merely a symbolical rite, it cannot be, as some have said, "a sacrament which cleanses from original sin—makes us Christians—children of God—and heirs of the kingdom of heaven." This were to ascribe to the rite that which can alone be accomplished by the immediate operation of the Holy Spirit. Neither can we regard the ordinance of bapttism as either directly or indirectly imparting, or even attesting, the grace of regeneration. As an ordinance it possesses no mystical power; as a symbolical rite it can exercise no saving influence. Hence baptism cannot constitute individuals members of the church of God. The ancient rite of circumcision had not that power. (Rom. ii. 28, 29.) The subjects of the rite of circumcision became partakers of the advantages of the Hebrew nationality. They were surrounded with peculiar privileges, whence they could derive the blessings of instruction in the fear of the Lord; and an obligation rested upon the parents to point their children to that purification of heart symbolised by the external rite. (Gen. xvii. 7-14; xviii. 18; Ex. xii. 26, 27; xiii. 8, 14; Ps. lxxviii. 6; Rom. ii. 25-29.) So in Christian baptism, the subjects of the rite are introduced to a peculiar relation to the church of Christ. Not only does an obligation rest upon the parents to train their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, but a corresponding obligation rests upon the church to discipline them for the kingdom of Christ. Just as among the various advantages possessed by the Jew, in consequence of circumcision, the chief was the possession of the oracles of God; so the subjects of baptism possess various and special advantages, but the chief is instruction in the holy oracles. (Rom. iii. 1, 2.) It thus appears that the subjects of the Christian rite, are not only recognized as placed, by the kind providence of God, where the privileges and responsibilities of Christian discipline will be in some measure possessed, but where they can be constantly reminded of that purity of heart adumbrated by the baptismal symbol,—a purity of heart without which no one can see the Lord.

As to the subjects of baptism, it is agreed that adults who have not been baptised, and are desirous of Christian discipline, are certainly proper subjects of the rite; but then we think, also, that infants ought not to be excluded. Were not the children

—"the little ones"—baptised with the fathers in passing through the sea? (1 Cor. x. 1-11; Ex. x. 9, 10, 11, 24.) So in the baptism of John, which was essentially the same as that instituted by Christ, it is not improbable that multitudes of infants were baptised with their parents, just as, in the same age, the proselytes to the Jewish faith, with their wives and children, were baptised. And as whole households were baptised by the apostles, it is also probable that there were children among them. So far from confining baptism to adults, there is not a single instance recorded in the new Testament, in which the descendants of Christian parents were baptised in adult years. Moreover, there is nothing in the nature of the case, and the design of the ordinance, inconsistent with the administration of the rite to infants. The children of the Hebrews, we have seen, were admitted to manifold privileges in consequence of circumcision; and have not the children of Christians corresponding privileges? The general analogy of the ancient dispensation, and the enlargement of privileges under the Gospel, including male and female, requires that their advantages shall be no less. Under the latter dispensation infants are continued exactly in the same relation to God and his church, in which they were originally placed by the former dispensations. The objection that infants are not proper subjects for baptism, because they cannot profess repentance and faith, falls with as much weight upon the institution of circumcision; since infants are as fit subjects for the one as the other. Further, if children are not to be baptised because there is no positive command for it; for the same reason, we might say, that women should not come to the Lord's supper; nor ought we to keep holy the first day of the week. If baptising infants had been merely a human invention, how could such a practice have been so universal in the first 300 years of the church, and yet no records have remained when it was introduced, nor any dispute or controversy about it have taken place! Finally, it is generally acknowledged, that if infants die, and a great part of the human race die in infancy, they are saved. Has not Christ died for them? And will not God by his Spirit prepare them ere he remove them hence! Why then refuse them the ordinance symbolic of that purification they then receive by the Spirit of God? It is thought that the ordinance of baptism ought not to be administered promiscuously, without any regard to the character of those who offer their children in baptism. Such promiscuous baptism has a tendency to diminish a sense of the importance of the ordinance, and to sink it into the notion of a mere ceremony, as is unhappily the obvious and very prevailing state of the fact. The meaning of 1 Cor. xv. 29-31, seems to be—"Why are we baptized into the belief of the resurrection of the dead, if, in fact, the dead rise not? And why expose ourselves to so much danger and suffering in the hope of the resurrection of the body?"

BARABBAS = son of the father. A man who appears to have headed an insurrection in Jerusalem, a short time before Christ was crucified. The two malefactors who were crucified with Christ were not "thieves," in the ordinary sense of the word, but rather fellow-assassins with Barabbas; for it is said that, "he lay bound with them that had made insurrection with him in the city, who had committed murder in the insurrection." (Mark xv. 7.) "These malefactors," as bishop Maltby as well observed, "were not thieves who robbed all for profit, but men who had taken up arms on a principle of resistance to the Roman oppression, and to what they thought an unlawful burden, the tribute money; who made no scruple to rob all the Romans, and when engaged in these unlawful causes, made less difference between Jews and Romans, than they at first meant to do." There was a custom in Jerusalem, at the paschal feast, for the governor to release unto the people a prisoner whom they might particularly desire. The policy of this provision may have been to conciliate the favour of the Jews towards the Roman government. The Jews demanded of Pilate the release of Barabbas in preference to the release of Christ. (Matt. xxvii. 16-26; Luke xxiii. 18; John xviii. 30; Acts iii. 14.)—See THMUDAS.

BARACHEL = whom God hath blessed. The father of Elihu. (Job. xxxii. 2, 6.)

BARACHIAS = whom Jehovah hath blessed. The father of Zacharias. (Matt. xxiii. 35; Luke xi. 51.)—See ZACHARIAS.

BARAK = lightning. The son of Abinoam, who was appointed by Deborah commander of the Hebrew forces. He so completely routed the Canaanitish forces, that they never recovered from the blow. As judge of the Hebrews, he was probably the colleague or successor of Deborah. (Judges iv. 4-24; v. 1-81; Heb. xi. 32.)

BARBARIAN. This word is used in the Scriptures for every stranger or foreigner who does not speak the native language of the writer; and includes no implication whatever of any rudeness, or savageness of nature or manners, in those respecting whom it is used. (Ps. cxiv. 1; Acts xxviii. 24; Rom. i. 14; 1 Cor. xiv. 11.)

BARBER. See BEARD.

BARHUMITES. See BAHURIM.

BARIAH = a fugitive. A son of Shemaiah. (1 Chron. iii. 22.)

BAR-JESUS = son of Jesus. A Jewish magician in Crete; who opposing Paul and Barnabas, and endeavouring to prevent Sergius Paulus embracing Christianity, was struck blind, "not seeing the sun for a season." This affliction is denominated in the Greek acharas, being rather an obscurcation than a total extinction of sight. He is also called "Elymas" = a magician, a sorcerer. (Acts xiii. 6-12; Homer II. v. 690; xvi. 344.)

BAR-JONA. See PETER.

BAREOS = painter. One of the Nethinim. ( Ezra ii. 53; Neh. vii. 55.)

BARLEY. A species of grain used BARNABAS — son of Exhortation, or of prophecy. The surname of Joses, a Levite, and a native of the isle of Cyprus, and an early convert to the Christian faith. Barnabas was one of those who gave up all his worldly substance, and all his strength and influence to the support and spread of the gospel. He was the frequent companion of the apostle Paul, and a large sharer in the labours and sufferings which attended the early propagation of Christianity. (Acts iv. 36, 37; ix. 26, 27.)

BARENESS. Among the Hebrews a numerous offspring was considered an instance of the divine favour. Sons were more generally desired than daughters, because they transmitted the name of the father in genealogies. (1 Sam. i. 6, 7; Ps. cxvii. 3—5; xxxviii. 4; Hos. ix. 14.) The peculiar views attached to sterility by the Hebrews, may perhaps be accounted for by the constant expectation of the Messiah, and the hope that every woman cherished, that she might be the mother of the promised Seed. This constant hope seems to account for many circumstances in the old Testament history which might otherwise appear extraordinary or exceptionable. (Gen. iii. 15; xxii. 6, 7; xxv. 21—23; xxvii. 18; xxviii. 14; xxx. 15—17; xxxvii. 11—18; Deut. xxv. 9; Judg. xi. 37—39.)

BARSABAS — son of Sabba. 1. The surname of Joseph, also surnamed Justus, one of the first disciples of Christ. He was one of the candidates for the vacancy in the apostleship, occasioned by the apostasy of Judas Iscariot. (Acts i. 23.) 2. The surname of Judas, a Christian teacher, and one of the "chief men among the brethren." (Acts xv. 22, 27, 32.)

BARSOOM — See NASAN.

BARTHELOMEEW — See NATHANAEL.

BARTIMAEUS — son of Timaeus. A man who was instantly cured of blindness by our Saviour, in the vicinity of Jericho. (Mark x. 46—52.)

BARUCH — blessed. 1. The friend and secretary of the prophet Jeremiah. When God commanded the prophet to commit to writing the prophecies that had been uttered, he employed Baruch in this service, who wrote the words as Jeremiah dictated them. Baruch was afterwards required to read them to the Jewish princes or chieftains, who were assembled in the temple. He was afterwards employed to carry to Babylon a long letter from Jeremiah, predicting the judgments which should come upon that mighty city. There is some reason to believe that Baruch survived the prophet a few years, but when and where he died is unknown. (Jer. xxxvi. 4; xlili. 3, 7; xlv. 1, 2.) 2. The son of Zabbai or Zeacai. (Neh. iii. 20; x. 8.) 3. The son of Col-hosea. (Neh. xi. 5.)

BARZILAI — iron, of iron. 1. A Gileadite, distinguished for his hospitality and liberality towards David, during the revolt of Absalom. (2 Sam. xvii. 27; xix. 32—39; 1 Kings ii. 7.) 2. The father of Adriel. (1 Sam. xviii. 19; 2 Sam. xx. 3.) 3. One of the priests. (Ezra ii. 61; Neh. vii. 63.)

BASHAN — light sandy soil. A region eastward of the upper Jordan, bounded on the north by Mount Hermon, (1 Chron. v. 23;) hence called "the hill of Bashan;" (Ps. lxviii. 15;) on the south by the mountains of Gilead; and extending on the east as far as to Salchah. (Deut. iii. 10, 13; Josh. xii. 4.) It was taken by the Hebrews from Og, king of Bashan; and given with a part of Gilead to the half tribe of Reuben.
of Manasseh. (Num. xxi. 32, 38.) Bashan was esteemed one of the most fruitful countries in the world; its rich pastures, oaks, and fine cattle are exceedingly commended. (Isa. ii. 13; Esa. xxxix. 18.) And recent travellers speak in the strongest terms of the exuberant fertility of this region, and of its hills crowned with forests. Bashan was called, by the Greek writers, "Bataanae;" its present name is al-Batansch.

BASHAN-HAVOTH-JAIR = Bashan of the cities, or villages of Jair. The general name of three-score cities in the region of Bashan, acquired by Jair. They are sometimes called "Havoth-Jair." (Deut. iii. 14; Num. xxxii. 41; Josh. xii. 30; 1 Kings iv. 13.) — See Jair.

BASHHEMATH = fragrant. One of the wives of Esau. (Gen. xxxvi. 3, 10, 13.) She seems to be also called "Ma- kelath." (Gen. xxviii. 9.) — See Adah.

BASMATH = fragrant. The daughter of Solomon. (1 Kings iv. 15.)

BASTARD. Natural children, among the Hebrews, seem to have received little parental attention. (Heb. xii. 8.) To restrain the licentious desires of the heart, Jehovah, by an express law, fixed a stigma upon the bastard, which was not to be removed till the tenth generation; this precept was on no account to be violated, nor to be allowed to fall into disuse. (Deut. xxiii. 2.) However, it does not appear that this stigma extended to the children of concubines, as between them and bastards there was a difference. (Gen. xxii. 8—21; xxxv. 1—6.) In Zech. ix. 6, the word "bastard" ought to be rendered stranger or foreigner.

BAT. In the Mosaic enumeration of unclean animals, the bat is reckoned among the "fowls that creep"; (Lev. xi. 19, 20, 22;) and modern naturalists include it in the class of mammiferous quadrupeds. The name of cheiropter = hand-winged, is given to this order, which comprises a great number of genera, species and varieties; they are all either purely insectivorous, or insecto-frugivorous; and the whole race is nocturnal. As winter approaches, they seek shelter in caverns, or ruined and deserted buildings, where they cling together in large clusters, and remain in a torpid condition until the returning spring recalls them to active exertions. (Deut. xiv. 18, 19; Isa. ii. 20, 21.)

BATH. A Hebrew measure for liquids, equivalent to the ephah for dry goods; containing about seven gallons, four pints, liquid measure; or three pecks, three pints, dry measure. (1 Kings vii. 36, 38; Isa. v. 10; Ez. xiv. 10—14.) In Luke vii. 6, the Greek word bathos, rendered "measures," should be "baths."

BATHER. According to the Hebrew laws the bath was to be freely used for the purposes of washing, and to secure proper attention to personal cleanliness. This might be done in any river or running stream, or in any suitable vessel at home. (Lev. xiv. 2; xv. 1—8; Num. xix. 7; Isa. lix. 3.) The Greeks and the Romans erected public hot and cold baths, and decorated them with great splendour; and in later times similar baths were erected in Palestine, probably not unlike those which are now so frequently seen in the East.

BATH-RABBIM = daughter of many. A gate in Heshbon. (Sol. Song vii. 4.)

BATHSHEBA = daughter of the oath, or daughter of seven years. The wife of Uriah the Hittite, an officer in David's army. She was "a woman very beautiful to look upon," but, she was guilty of lightness and conjugal infidelity. David saw Bathsheba "washing herself," perhaps while visiting the royal wives at the bath; her beauty proved a snare to him, for he not only committed adultery with her, but, when he found that she had conceived, he sent for Uriah, with the design that he should go and lie with his wife, that the child now conceived should pass for his, the dishonour of Bathsheba be screened, and his own crime concealed. The design failed; David, to save himself and Bathsheba from the vengeance of the law, treacherously procured the death of the injured Uriah. Bathsheba mourned for her husband; and when the mourning was past, David sent for her, and took her to wife. From this aggravated transaction David reaped a long harvest of calamity and woe. In 1 Chron. iii. 5, she is called "Bathsheba," daughter of Saath, as in the margin. (2 Sam. xi. 1-27; xii. 1-25.)

121

BATESHUA.—See BATHSHEBA.

BATTERING RAM.—See ENGINE.

BATTLE.—See WAR.

BATTLE-AXE. A powerful weapon of war, much used among the ancient nations. (Jer. ii. 20.)

BATTLEMENT.—See HOUSE.

BAVA.—fathers. One who aided in rebuilding Jerusalem, after the exile. (Neh. iii. 18.)

BAY TREE. The Hebrew word erelah, properly signifies a native tree, growing in its own soil, not transplanted; well rendered in the margin, "a green tree that grows in its own soil." (Ps. xxxvii. 35.) However, some of the ancient versions give "cedar," and some of the modern ones the "laurel" or "bay." This tree is of the family of the oreganos, and might well be used as an emblem of the undecaying strength and unchanging prosperity which sometimes seems to be the portion of the wicked in this transient world.

BAZEL.—See BAILLUTH.

BAZLUOTH.—a stripping, nakedness. One whose posterity returned from the exile. (Ezra ii. 52.) In Neh. vii. 54, he is called "Bazilith."

BEDDILUM. The Hebrew word bedelathah is supposed to denote an aromatic resinous substance, somewhat resembling myrrh, which distills from a tree growing in Arabia and the Indies. Some understand the term to designate pearls; and others a precious stone. (Gen. ii. 12; Num. xi. 7.)

BEACON.—See STANDARD.

BEALLAH.—whom lord is Jehovah. One of David's mighty men. (1 Chron. xii. 5.)

BEALOTH.—citizens, inhabitants. were esteemed impure, and could neither be offered nor eaten. But this division of animals into clean and unclean, existed, not only before the law of Moses, but even before the flood. (Gen. vii. 2; Lev. xi. 1—47; xx. 25.)

The foundation of this distinction appears to have been sacrificial, adumbrating the only true sacrifice which could take away the sins of the world. Under the ancient dispensation, the beasts were sometimes made to participate externally in the observance of religious ceremonies; (Ex. xx. 10; Jon. iii. 7, 8;) and suffered with men the judgments of God. (Ex. ix. 6; xii. 15; Ps. xxxv. 8; Jer. vii. 20; xxxi. 6; Ezek. xxvi. 18; xlviii. 10; Hos. iv. 3.) Moses, throughout his laws, manifests, even towards animals, a spirit of justice and kindness, and inculcates the avoidance, not only of actual cruelty, but even of its appearance. (Lev. xxi. 27, 28; Ex. xxiii. 4, 5.) The word “beast” is sometimes used figuratively for brutal, savage men. (1 Cor. xv. 52; 2 Pet. ii. 12; Jude 10.) The four beasts in Dan. vii. 3, 17, 23, are the symbols of four kings, or kingdoms. The “four beasts” ought to be read “four living creatures.” (Rev. iv. 6—9; v. 8, 14; vi. 1, 2.)

BEBAI = sheker. One whose posteriority returned from the exile. (Ezra ii. 11; viii. 11; Neh. viii. 18.)

BECHER = a current vessel. 1. A son of Ephraim; also called “Bered.” (1 Chron. vii. 20.) His descendants are called “Bechites.” (Num. xxvi. 35.)

2. A son of Benjamin. (Gen. xlii. 21; 1 Chron. vi. 8, 9.)

BECORATH = first-born, first-born. The great grandfather of Kish. (1 Sam. ix. 1.)

BED. Among the ancient Egyptians, according to the monuments, the bed was a kind of low sofa or divan; it was sometimes ornamented with ivory on the sides and back, and also on the legs, and of such a length as to answer all the purposes of a sofa by day, and of a bed by night. (Ps. xli. 3; cxxvi. 3; Am. vi. 4; 2 Kings xviii. 5; Prov. vii. 16.) The poorer people slept upon thick, coarse mattresses, or skins, which were thrown down at night upon the divan, or upon the floor. Sometimes they had but a simple cloak, or a blanket, which probably also answered to wrap themselves in by day. (Ex. xxii. 26, 27; Deut. xxiv. 12, 13.) Hence it was easy for the persons whom Jesus healed, “to take up their beds and walk.” (Matt. ix. 6; Mark ii. 9; John v. 8.) In the East, most people only throw off the outer garment on retiring to bed.

BEDAD = separation, or part. The father of Hadad. (Gen. xxxvi. 35.)

BEDAN = servant. 1. A son of Uzam. (1 Chron. vii. 17.) 2. See ABDON.

BEDNIK = in the protection of Jokeshar. One who separated from his foreign wife. (Ezra x. 55.)

BEE. The Hebrews appear to have paid attention to the honey bee, which is probably the only species alluded to in the Bible. They must have been very numerous in Canaan, as honey was a common article of food and commerce. (1 Kings xiv. 5, 7; Ps. lix. 16; 1 Sam. xiv. 17.) The disposition of bees to take vengeance on any one who disturbs their hive, is alluded to in Deut. i. 44; Ps. cxviii. 13. The figurative expressions in Isa. vii. 18; Zech. x. 9, are supposed to allude to the practice of calling bees from their hives, to any particular place, by a hissing or tinkling sound. Wild bees frequently laid up their honey in woods, in hollow trees, and in the crevices of rocks. (Deut. xxxii. 18; Ps. lix. 16.)

BEEHIAH = whom the Lord knoweth. A son of David. (1 Chron. xiv. 7.) In 2 Sam. v. 16; 1 Chron. iii. 8, he is called “Eladah = whom God knoweth.”

BEELZEABOUT = lord of demons. A name of contempt applied to Satan, the prince of the evil angels. Beelzebub, in the original, is, in every instance, “Beelzebub,” and so it ought to have been in our version. This name is not to be confounded with “Baalzebub,” the god of Ekron. (Matt. x. 25; xii. 24, 27; Mark iii. 22; Luke xi. 15, 18, 19, 27.)

BEER = a well. 1. A place in the desert on the confines of Moab. (Num. xxii. 12—13.) It is probably the same place which is called "Beer-slim"— well of Asera. (lsa. xv. 8.) 2. The place to which Joshua fled. (Judg. ix. 21.) The inhabitants were called "Be-rites." (2 Sam. xx. 14.) It is probably now called el-Burak, not far from the site of Beth-shemesh.
BEER

BEERA = well, fountain. A descendant of Asher. (1 Chron. vii. 37.) BEERAH = well, fountain. A descendant of Benben. (1 Chron. v. 6.)
BEER-ELIM = See BEER.
BEERI = well, or fountain; i.e., An Hittite. (Gen. xxxiv. 3.) 2. The father of Hosea. (Hosea. iii. 1.)

BEER-LAHAI-ROI = well of life of vision, i.e., of life after a vision of God. A well on the southern borders of Palestine, between Kadesh and Be-rod. (Gen. xiv. 14.) In Gen. xxiv. 69;
ex. 11, it is called in our version the well Lahai-roi.

BEEROOTH = well. A city of the Gibeonites, afterwards belonging to the tribe of Benjamin. (Josh. ix. 17; xviii.
25.) After the exile, it was still in existence and inhabited. (Ezra ii. 25; Neh. vii. 39.) The inhabitants were called "Beerothites." (2 Sam. iv. 2, 3; xvii. 37; 1 Chron. xi. 39.) Dr. Robison considers the modern el-Burak to represent either Beer or Beeroth.

BEEROOTH-BENK-JAANKAN = wells of the sons of Jaakan. A place in the neighbourhood of Seba. It is also called "Bene-Jaakan," (Num. xxxiii.
31, 38,) and "Beeroth of the children of Jaakan." (Deut. x. 6.)

BEERSHEBA = well of the oath, or well of the seven. An ancient town on the southern border of Palestine; whence the phrase, in describing the limits of Palestine: "from Dan even to Beer-sheba," (Judg. xx. 1; 2 Sam. xxiv. 2, 7;) and of the kingdom of Judah: "from Geba to Beer-sheba.xxii. 8; 2 Chron. xix. 4.) It was given by Joshua to the tribe of Judah, afterwards it was transferred to Simeon. (Josh. xv. 28.) Dr. Robison found upon the northern side of Wady es-Seba, close upon the bank, two deep wells, still called Bir es-Seba.
Ascending the low hills north of the wells, he found them covered with the ruins of former habitations, the foundations of which are still distinctly to be traced, although scarcely one stone remains upon another. Here was the ancient Beerseba; wherein Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob often dwelt. (Gen.
xxii. 33; xxv. 19; xxvi. 25; xxviii.
10.)

BEESH-TERAH = See ASHTAborn.

BEETLE = See LOCUST.

BEGGARS = See Poor.

BEHEADING. This mode of capital punishment was practiced in the time of the early Hebrew kings. (2 Sam. iv. 8; xx. 21, 22; 2 Kings v. 6—8.)
And in the later periods of the Jewish history, Herod and his descendants, in a number of instances, ordered death by the sword. (Matt. xiv. 8—10; Acts
xii. 2.)

BEHEMOTH = the great beast, large quadruped. This Hebrew name is evidently the same as the Coptic p-ke-senou = the ox of the water, a term which designates the hippopotamus =
"river horse." So also, the Ethiopic word for the hippopotamus is beka, which is simply the same as the Egyptian p-es = the ox. (Job. xl. 15—24.)
It is now generally understood that the Behemoth is the Hippopotamus amphibius, or river-horse, a genus of the pachydermata, or thick-skinned animals, which are found only in the Nile and other great rivers and lakes of Africa. This powerful and unwieldy animal lives in the water, but cannot remain long without coming to the surface to breathe. He comes often on shore, particularly at night, as he substitutes on roots and vegetables; and does great damage to the cultivated fields, not less by the treading of his broad, heavy feet, than by the extent of his appetite. He sleeps and reposes on shore in reedy places near the water.
The length of a male hippopotamus has been known to be seventeen feet, the height seven feet, and the circumference fifteen; the head three feet and a half and the girt nine feet; the mouth, a width, about two feet. The armament of teeth in its mouth is truly formidable; more particularly the tusk of the lower jaw, which are of a curved form, somewhat cylindrical: these are so strong and hard that they will strike fire with steel, are sometimes more than two feet in length, and weigh from twelve to thirteen pounds each. The Egyptians sometimes capture this animal by throwing a large quantity of dry peas on some place where they expect him to pass; these the hungry animal eagerly devours; this mass of dry food disposes him to drink, and the water, swelling the pea in his stomach, destroys him.
BEK

BEKAH = a part, half. A half-shekel in weight, equal to five pennyweights, troy. In later times, shekel denoted, not only a certain weight, but also a determinate sum of money, a half-shekel in value, equal to one shilling, one penny, and a little over three farthings in our money. (Gen. xxiv. 22; Ex. xxxviii. 26.)

BEL. — See BAAL.

BELA = swallowed, devoured. 1. A king of Edom. (Gen. xxxvi. 32, 33.) 2. A descendant of Reuben. (1 Chron. v. 8.) 3. A son of Benjamin. (1 Chron. vii. 6, 7.) He is called "Belah" in Gen. xliv. 21.) His descendants are called "Belaites." (Num. xxxvi. 35.) 4. — See ZOAR.

BELAH. — See BELA.

BELIAL = unproudest, worthless, something useless, hence badness, wickedness. This word is properly applied by the sacred writers to such lewd, profligate, and vile persons, as seem to regard neither God nor man. (Judg. xiv. 23; 1 Sam. li. 12.) In the new Testament, "Belial," or "Beliar," is used as an appellation of Satan, the power or lord of evil: "What concord hath Christ with Belial," the prince of licentiousness and corruption! (2 Cor. vi. 15.)

BELLS. The lower part of the high-priest's blue robe was scorded with pomegranates and bells, so that he might be heard when he went into, or came out of the sanctuary. (Ex. xxvii. 35—35.) Many of the eastern kings and nobles wear bells in the same manner, not only for ornament, but to give notice of their approach. Bells, or tinkling plates, were hung upon the bridles of war-horses: (Zech. xiv. 20;) hence a horse, not trained to war, was called, by the Greeks, "a horse who had never heard the sound of bells."

BELLOWS. The Egyptian monuments not only represent the blow pipe as being in use for melting metal, as early as the time of Thothmes III., but also a kind of double bellows, for smelting the ore, of the same period, are to be seen at Gournon, the necropolis of Thebes. According to Wilkinson, they consisted of a leather bag, secured and fitted into a frame, from which a long pipe extended, for carrying the wind into the fire. They were worked by the feet, the operator standing upon them, with one under each foot, and pressing them alternately, while he pulled up each exhausted skin with a string which he held in his hand. It is probable that such bellows are alluded to by the prophet. (Jer. vi. 29.)

BELSHAZZAR = prince of Bel. The last of the Chaldean kings; he was the grandson of Nebuchadnezzar, and is called by profane historians, Labynetus and Nabonnedus. The only circumstances of his reign, recorded in Scripture, are the visions of the prophet Daniel, in the first and third years; (Dan. vii. 1—28; viii. 1—27;) and his impious feast and violent death. (Dan. v. 1—30.) During the siege of Babylon by the Medes, under Darus and Cyrus, he gave a sumptuous entertainment to his courtiers, at which they impiously drank out of the sacred vessels which had been carried away from the temple of Jerusalem. In the midst of the festivities, however, a mysterious inscription was seen upon the wall of the banquetting room, full in view of the king, announcing his death, and the overthrow of his kingdom. In that same night, the city was taken by surprise, and Belshazzar himself slain.

BELTESHAZAR. — See DANIEL.
BEN = a son. One of the Levites. (1 Chron. xvi. 18.)

BEN-ABINADAB.—See ABINADAB.

BEN-AMMI = son of my people, or kindred. The son of Lot, by his youngest daughter; he was the father of the Ammonites. (Gen. xix. 38.)

BEN-BERAK = son of Berak, or of lightning. A place in the tribe of Dan; (Josh. xix. 45;) probably the present Berakh.

BENEFACCTOR. The Greek word Βαρεφακτος = Benefactor, was occasionally employed in ancient times as a title of honour to kings and princes. It was frequently applied to the Roman emperors. (Luke xxii. 25.)

BENJAAKAN = sons of Jaakan. A place in the desert. Some suppose that it is not the same as "Beeroth Bene-Jaakan." (Num. xxxiii. 31.)

BEN-HADAD = son of Hadad. 1. A king of Syria of Damascus, in the time of Ahab, king of Israel. (1 Kings xv. 18—20; 2 Chron. xvi. 2—7.) 2. A king of Syria, and a son of the preceding. He twice made war upon Ahab, king of Israel, but was completely defeated. (1 Kings xx. 1—24.) He afterwards declared war against Jehoram; but the prophet Elisha dissuaded his plans so accurately that Jehoram was enabled to defeat them. (2 Kings vii. 8—23.) He afterwards laid siege to Samaria, but his troops being terrified with the fancied approach of an immense army to relieve the city, just at daybreak, fled for their lives, leaving everything behind them. The citizens of Samaria were thus unexpectedly relieved, and supplied with an abundance of food. (2 Kings vi. 24—33; vii. 1—20.) The following year, Benhadad, being sick, sent Hazael, one of his officers, to Elisha, to inquire whether he should recover. Hazael, on his return, slew Benhadad, and became king of Syria. (2 Kings vii. 7—15.) 3. A king of Syria of Damascus; he was the son of Hazael, whom he succeeded. In his wars with Jehoshaphat, king of Israel, he was compelled to relinquish most, if not all, the provinces which his predecessors acquired in conquest. (2 Kings xii. 24, 25; Jer. xlix. 27; Amos i. 4.)

BEN-HAIL = son of strength, warrior. One of the princes of the kingdom of Judah. (2 Chron. xvii. 7.)

BEN-HANAN = son of one precious. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 20.)

BENINU = our son. One who sealed the covenant. (Neh. x. 18.)

BENJAMIN = son of the right hand, that is, of good fortune. 1. The youngest son of Jacob by Rachel. His mother died immediately after his birth, which took place near Bethlehem. With her dying breath she called him "Benoni," = son of my sorrow, but his father gave him the name of "Benjamin." The territory of the tribe of Benjamin included Jerusalem, and lay adjoining Judah. His descendants were called "Benjaminites." (Gen. xxxv. 13; xlix. 27; Deut. xxxiii. 13; Josh. xii. 21—28; 1 Kings xii. 16—24.) 2. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. vii. 10.) 3. One who assisted to rebuild Jerusalem. (Neh. iii. 23; Ezra x. 32.)

BENO = his son. One of the posterity of Levi. (1 Chron. xxv. 26, 27.)

BEN-ONI.—See BENJAMIN.

BEN-ZOHEB = son of Zoheth. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 20.)
BEON. — See BAAL-MON.

BEOR = a torch, or lamp. 1. The father of Beor, king of the Edomites. (Gen. xxxvi. 32; 1 Chron. i. 43.) 2. The father of Basam. (Num. xxii. 5; Deut. xxxiii. 4.) He is also called "Besor." (2 Pet. ii. 15.)

BERA = gift. A king of Sodom. (Gen. xiv. 2.)

BERACHAH = a blessing, benediction. 1. A valley in the direction of Tekoa. It is most likely the present Beraicl. (2 Chron. xx. 26.) 2. A friend of David. (1 Chron. xii. 3.)

BERECHIAH = whom Jehovah has blessed. 1. The father of Asaph. (1 Chron. xvi. 17, 25.) He is also called "Berechiah." (1 Chron. vi. 39.) 2. One of the posterity of Ephraim. (2 Chron. xxviii. 12.) 2. The father of Zechariah. (Zech. i. 1, 7.) 4. A son of Zerubbabel. (1 Chron. iii. 20.) 5. One of the Levites. (1 Chron. ix. 16.) 6. The father of Meshullam. (Neh. iii. 4, 30.)

BERAIAH = whom Jehovah created. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. xxii. 21.)

BEREA = blessed. A city on the borders of Macedonia, on the river Astaurus. The Jewish residents of this city are honourably commended, and their sagacious conduct is held out as an example in subjecting every doctrine to the sole test of the words of God. (Acts xvii. 10-15; xx. 4.) Berea, was afterwards called Thessalonica, and is now called by the Turks Beor.

BERED = seed. 1. A place in the desert of Shur. (Gen. xvi. 14.) 2. — See BEEREH.

BERI = fountain. A descendant of Asher. (1 Chron. v. 35.)

BERIAH = gift, donation, or according to others, evil, calamity. 1. A son of Ephraim. (1 Chron. vii. 22.) 2. A son of Asher. (Gen. xlii. 17; 1 Chron. vii. 30.) His descendants are called "Berites." (Num. xxvi. 44.) 3. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. xii. 12.) 4. A son of Shimeai. (1 Chron. xxiii. 10.)

BERITES. — See BAAR.

BERIRTH = a covenant. The "god Berith" is the same as "Baal-Berith." (Judg. ix. 48.)

BERNICE = weight of victory. The eldest daughter of Herod Agrippa. She was married to her uncle Herod, king of Chalcis; and after his death became the wife of Polemon, king of Galilee. This connexion being soon dissolved, this licentious woman returned to her brother, and afterwards became the mistress of Vespasian, and also of Titus. (Acts xxv. 18; xxvi. 30; Jos. Ant. 19. 5. 1; 20. 7. 2.)

BERODACH-BALADAN. — See MEROODACH-BALADAN.

BEROTHAI = my wells. A city between Damascus and Hamath. (Ezek. xlvii. 16.)

BEROTHAI = my wells. A maritime city of Phoenicia, rich in brass, formerly subject to the kings of Zobah: it was situated at the northern extremity of Palestine, and was conquered by David. (2 Sam. viii. 8, compared with 1 Chron. xviii. 8.) This place is generally supposed to be the Beroritis, of the Greeks and Romans, and the Beyrut or Beirut of the present day. This important and enterprising city, which had been for some time under the government of Muhammad Aly, was in 1840, laid in ruins, by a bombardment from the combined English and Austrian fleet.

BERYL. A precious stone, whose colour is pale green, with a cast of yellow and blue. (Rev. xxi. 20.) The Hebrew word teqariqah, translated "beryl," properly denotes the chrysolite, or the topaz; (Ex. xxvii. 20; xxxix. 13; Dan. x. 6; Sol. Song v. 14; Ezek. i. 16; x. 9; xxxiiii. 13, chrysolite, in the margin;) and the word akham, rendered "onyx," is supposed to designate the beryl. (Gen. ii. 12; Ex. xxvii. 9, 20; xxxv. 9, 27; Job. xxvii. 15; Ezek. xxviiii. 13; 1 Chron. xxii. 2.)

BESA = sword. One whose postiety returned from the exile. (Ezra ii. 49; Neh. vii. 52.)

BESEDELAH = in the intimacy of Jehovah, i.e. confident of Jehovah. One whose son assisted in rebuilding Jerusalem. (Neh. iii. 6.)

BESOR = cool, cold. The name of a torrent emptying itself into the Me-
BET

...near Gaza. (1 Sam. xxx. 9, 10, 21.)

BETAH = security, fortunate. A city of Syria, rich in brass. (2 Sam. viii. 8.) In 1 Chron. xviii. 8, it is written "Tibbeth" = slaughter.

BETEN = valley, or valley. A place in Asher. (Josh. xix. 25.)

BETHABARA = house, or place of the ford. A town on the east bank of the Jordan, where there was a ford across the river. It is probably the same with "Beth-barah." (Judg. vii.
24.) In John i. 28, instead of "Bethabara," the later editions read "Bethany," a different place from Bethany near Jerusalem.

BETH-ANATH = house of response, or of echo. A place in Naphtali.
(Josh. xix. 38; Judg. i. 33.)

BETH-ANOTH = house of response, or of echo. A place in Judah. (Josh.
xxv. 59.) It is now called Be't An'nah.

BETHANY = house of dates. A town or village in a shallow wady, on the eastern slope of the Mount of Olives, about two miles E. S. E. from Jerusalem. It was the residence of Mary, Martha, and Lazarus; and Jesus often went out from Jerusalem to lodge there; it was also the scene of some of the most interesting events of his life. (Matt. xxii. 17; xxvi. 6;
Mark xi. 1, 11, 12; xiv. 3; Luke xix.
29; xxiv. 50; John xi. 1-46; xii.
1-8.) It is now a poor village of about twenty families. In the walls of a few of the houses there are large beeh-stones, some of them befouled, which have obviously belonged to more ancient edifices.

BETH-ARABAH = house of the desert. A city of Benjamin, on the confiness of Judah. (Josh. xv. 6; xlvii. 22.)
Also called "Arabah." (Josh. xviii. 13.)

BETH-ARAM = house of the height, or mountain house. A city in Gud.
(Josh. xii. 27.) Also called "Beth-haran." (Num. xxxii. 36.)

BETH-ARBEL = house of God's ambush. An impregnable fortress in Galilee, situated between Sepphoris and Tiberias. It was afterwards called "Arbel of Galilee." Dr. Robinson identifies Arbea and its fortified caverns with the present Kul at Ibn Mazen, and the ruins known as Ir'ibd, apparently a corruption of Irbd. (Hos.

x. 14.)

BETH-AVEN = house of nothingness, i.e., of idols. A city in Benjamin; with a desert of like name.
(Josh. vii. 2; xviii. 12; 1 Sam. xiii. 5.)
Bethel is sometimes reproachfully called "Beth-aven," on account of its idolattry. (Hosea iv. 15; x. 5.)

BETH-AMAVETH = house or strong unto death. A village of Judah or Benjamin. (Neh. vii. 38.)

BETH-BAAL-MEON.—See Baal-Meon.

BETH-BARAH.—See Bethabara.

BETH-BIRRI = house of my crea-31.) It is probably the same place as "Beth-leboath" = house of lions. (Josh.
xvi. 6;) and "Leboath." (Josh. xv. 32.)

BETH-CAR = house of pasture.
Probably a garrison of the Philistines, in the territory of Judah. (1 Sam. vii.
11.)

BETH-DAGON = temple of Dagon.
A city in the plain of Judah. (Josh.
xxv. 41.) 2 A city in Asher. (Josh.
xix. 27.)

BETH-DIBLATHAIM.—See Dib-Blathaim.

BETH-EDEN = house of pleasantness. A city of Syria, situated on Mount Lebanon, and the residence of a king; it was called by the Greeks,
"Paradise." (Am. i. 5, in the margin; Ptolem. v. 15.)—See Eden.

BETH-EEKED-HABOIM = house of the form, or encampment of shepherds. A place near Samaria, (2 Kings This proper name is translated "the shearing house" in our version, and in the margin, "house of the shepherds binding sheep."

BETH-EL = house of God. An ancient city of the Canaanites, afterwards belonging to the tribe of Benjamin.
Its original name was "Lus" = almond, and sometimes it is called by both names.
(Gen. xvi. 2; xxviii. 19; Josh. xviii.
13.) It lay upon a mountain. (Josh.
BET

vi. 1.) and was for a long time the scene of the sacred tabernacle. (Judg. xiii. 13; 1 Sam. x. 3.) Afterwards one of the calves of Jeroboam was set up there. (1 Kings xii. 29) hence it was called in derision "Beth-sven," on account of its idolatry. (Hos. iv. 15; x. 5) The inhabitants were called "Bethelites." (1 Kings xvi. 34; Ezra ii. 28; Neh. vii. 32.) Its ruins are still to be seen near the high road, about fifteen miles north of Jerusalem, and are now called 'Arhis.

BETH-EMEK = house of the valley, or plain. A place in Asher. (Josh. x. 27.)

BETHEER = section, or cast up. It is not certain that this word is a proper name of any particular place. The word probably denotes a region or tract of uneven country, cast up, or divided by mountains and valleys, rough, craggy, precipitous, the favourite resort of the hart and the roe. The Septuagint correctly renders 'Sol. Song ii. 17," upon the mountains cut up with valleys.

BETHESDA = house of compassion. A pool or fountain, near the Sheep-gate in Jerusalem, with a building round it for the accommodation of the sick. The healing virtue of the water was evidently supernatural; insomuch as when the waters received the unusual motion, only the one who stepped in first was healed; and the healing virtue extended to whatever disease a man might have, however various and even opposite their character. If the agency, by which the healing influence was imparted, was natural, and within the power of man, there seems to be no good reason why it should not have been constantly employed. There is not the slightest evidence that can identify the deep reservoir or trench, now seen on the north side of the area of the great marsh, and called by the natives Betar Israel, with the Bethesda of the new Testament. (John v. 2—9.)

BETH-EZRA = house of Ezra, or ezra, dwelling. A town of Judah, or Samaria. (Mic. i. 11.)

BETH-GADER. — See GEDERAH.

BETH-GAMUL = house of the mastodon. A city of Moab. (Jer. xlviii. 23.)

BETH-GILGAL.—See Gilgal.

BETH-HACOREM = house of the vineyard. A town of Judah, situated on a hill between Jerusalem and Tekoa. (Neh. iii. 14; Jer. vi. 1.)

BETH-HARAN.—See BET-ARAM.

BETH-HOGLAH = partridge house. A place on the confines of Benjamin and Judah; (Josh. xv. 19, 21;) also written "Beth-hogla." (Josh. xv. 5.) The ancient name is still preserved in Aza Holog = fountain of Hoglah, near Jericho.

BETH-HORON = house of the hollow. The name of two cities, belonging to the tribe of Ephraim, called "Upper," and "Lower Beth-horon;" the former of which lay in the northern part of the territory of that tribe; (Josh. xvi. 5; xxi. 22;) while the latter was situated on the confines of Benjamin. (Josh. xvi. 5; xviii. 18.) They are said to have been built by Sherah, the daughter of Ephraim; (1 Chron. vii. 24;) and were afterwards fortified by Solomon. (2 Chron. viii. 5;) Josh. x. 1—11; 1 Kings ix. 17.) The two towns lie on the road between Ramieh and Jerusalem, and still bear their ancient names; that on the mountain being Bet Ur al-Fekhe = Beth-Hor the Upper, and the other in the valley being Bet Ur al-Tukia = Beth-Hor the Lower.

BETH-JESHIMOTH = house of devastations. A town in Reuben, near the Jordan; (Num. xxxiii. 49; Josh. xii. 3; xiii. 20;) afterwards subject to Moab. (Ezek. xxv. 9.) Also called "Beth-jeshimoth." (Num. xxxiii. 49.)

BETH-LEBAOTH. — See Beth-Birrei.

BETH-LEHEM = house of bread.
1. A celebrated city, situated in the limits of the tribe of Judah, about five miles south by west of Jerusalem, which probably received its appellation from the fertility of the circumjacent country. It was formerly called "Ephrath," or "Ephratah," which seems not only to have been the ancient name of the city itself, but also of the surrounding region. (Gen. xxxv. 16—19; xlviii. 7; Mic. v. 2; Ruth iv. 11.) It is also called “Bethlehem Ephratah,” and “Bethlehem Judah,” and “Bethlehem of Judah,” to distinguish it from another town of the same name, in the tribe of Zebulon; (Josh. xix. 15; ) and also “the city of David,” where Christ the Lord was born. (Luke ii. 4; John vii. 42.)
The inhabitants were called “Ephra hites.” (Ruth i. 2; 1 Sam. xvii. 12; also “Bethlehemites.” (1 Sam. xvi. 1, 18; xvii. 53.) Bethlehem is now called Bets vehen = house of flesh. The town stands upon a ridge of considerable elevation; the houses are solidly, though roughly built of the limestone of which this whole region is composed, but a large part of them are in a very desola dated state. The surrounding coun try is beautiful and fertile, but not well cultivated. The inhabitants are said to be a restless race, and prone to tumult and rebellion. 2. A city in Zebulon.
(Josh. xix. 15; Esa. vii. 21; Neh. vii. 26.)
BETH-LEOPHRAH.—See OPH AH.

BETH-MAACHAH = house of Maachah. A place situated at the foot of Mount Hermon, near Abel-Beth Maachah. (2 Sam. xx. 14.)

BETH-MARCOBOTH = house of cherubs. A place belonging to Simeon.
(Josh. xix. 5; 1 Chron. iv. 31.)

BETH-MEAN.—See BAAL-MEON.

BETH-MERAH = house of re monatness. A place near the brook Kid rion. This proper name occurs in 2 Sam. xv. 17, where it is rendered in our version “a place that was far off.”

BETH-MILLO.—See Millo.

BETH-NIRRAH = house of tampid and sweet waters. A city in the tribe of Gad. It is also called “Nirrah,” and the waters in its vicinity are called “the waters of Nimrim.” The ruins of this place, with a fountain, are still called Nirmi. (Num. xxxii. 3, 36; Josh. xiii. 27; Is. xv. 6; Jer. xlviii. 36.)

BETH-PALAT = house of escape.
A place in the south of Judah. (Josh.
xxv. 27.)

BETH-PAZZEZ = house of disper sion. A place in Issachar. (Josh. xix. 21.)

BETH-PER = temple of Per, that is, of Baal Per. A city of Moab, as signed to Reuben, noted for the wor ship of Baal Per. (Dent. iii. 29; iv.
46; xxxiv. 6; Josh. xiii. 20.)

BETH-PHAG = house of figs. A small village, not far from Bethany.
(Matt. xxi. 1; Mark xi. 1; Luke xix.
29.)

BETH-RAPHA = house of the fa
ble. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 12.)

BETH-REHOBE.—See REHOBE.

BETHSAIDA = place of hunting, or fishing. A town or city of Galilee;
it lay very near to Capheraum, upon the western shore of the lake of Gen nessareth. (Matt. xi. 21, 24; Mark vi.
46; Luke x. 13, 15; John i. 45; vi.
17; xii. 21.) 2. A town or city in Gaulonitis, on the east of the Jor dan, just above where it falls into the lake of Gennesareth. It was afterwards called Julias. The Tal with extensive ruins probably marks the site of this ancient town. (Matt. xiv. 13; Mark
vi. 31; vii. 22; Luke iii. 1; ix. 10;
John vi. 1, 2, 5, etc.)

BETH-SHEAN = house of quiet.
A city of Manasseh, long subject to the Canaanites and Philistines. (Josh. xvii.
11, 16.) Also written “Beth-Shan.”
(1 Sam. xxxi. 11, 12; 2 Sam. xxi. 12.)
It was afterwards called Sychopolis.
It was situated in the lower end of the valley of Jezreel, where it opens into the valley of the Jordan. The ruins of this city are very extensive. It is now called Bes jars, and contains seventy or eighty houses. (Josh. xvii. 11, 16; 1 Sam. xxxi. 10, 12; 2 Sam. xxi. 12.)

BETH-SHEMESH = house of the sea. A city of Judah, assigned to the priests. In the pestilence, in the days of Samuel, “fifty thousand and three score and ten men” died. (1 Sam. vi.
19.) The larger number may be an interpolation, and the account of Josephus may be correct, that “seventy men” wereslain. It is called “Ir-abemesh in Josh. xix. 41; and the inhabitants were called “Bethlehemites.” (1 Sam.
vi. 18.) It is now called Ata Shema; and here are still the vestiges of a for mer extensive city. (Josh. xxi. 16; 2
BET

Chran. xxviii. 18; 1 Kings iv. 9; 2 Kings xiv. 11. 2. A city in Naphtali. (Josh. xiii. 38; Judg. i. 53.) 3. A city of Issachar. (Josh. xiv. 32.) —See ON.

BETH-SHITTAH = acacia house.

A place through which the Midianites fled, when defeated by Gideon in the valley of Jezreel. It is probably the present village of Shatta, not far from Mount Tabor. (Judg. vii. 22.)

BETH-TAPPUAH = house of apples, or citroux. A city of Judah, not far from Hebron, now called Tifa. (Josh. xv. 53.)

BETHUEL = abode of God. 1. A place belonging to the tribe of Simeon. (1 Chron. iv. 30.) It is called "Bethul" in Josh. ix. 4. In the same list of cities in Josh. xv. 30, we find "Oseel," instead of Bethuel. 2. The father of Rebekah. (Gen. xxvii. 22; xix. 15.)

BETHUL. —See BETHUEL.

BETH-ZUR = house of the rock. A city in the mountains of Judah. It was fortified by Rehoboam, and again also by the Moabites. The site of this place seems to be the ruined tower and fountain near edh-Dhureh, on the way to Hebron; it is now called Bashan. (Josh. xv. 58; 2 Chron. xii. 7.)

BETONIM = pithostae. A place in Gad. (Josh. xiii. 36.) There is a village in the Belka, south of es-Salt, called Betash, which may have been the ancient Betonim.

BETROTH. —See MARRIAGE.

BEULAH = married. This word is used metaphorically of Juda, as of a land desolated, but Jehovah would again delight in it, and it should be filled with inhabitants. (Isa. lxii. 4.)

BEZAI = sword. One whose posterity returned from the exile. (Ezra ii. 17; Neh. vii. 23; x. 18.)

BEZALEEL = in the shadow of God, i.e., in his protection. 1. A famous artificer, who constructed the tabernacle, and prepared its various furniture. (Ex. xxxi. 2; xxxv. 30.) 2. One who put away his strange wife, after the exile. (Ezra x. 80.)

BEZEK = lightning. A Canaanitish royal city, which fell to the tribe of Judah. (Judg. i. 4—7; 1 Sam. xi. 8.)

BEZER = ore of gold or silver. 1. A Levitical city of refuge in Reuben. (Deut. iv. 43; Josh. xx. 8; xxi. 36.) 2. A descendant of Asher. (1 Chron. vii. 37.)

BIBLE. —See SCRIPTURE.

BISHIRI = youthful. The father of Sheba. (2 Sam. xx. 1.)

BIDHAR = stabber. One of Jehu's captains. (2 Kings ix. 25.)

BIGTHA = gardener. A eunuch in the court of Ahasuerus. (Est. i. 10.)

BIGTHAN = gardener, or perhaps gift of fortunes. A eunuch in the court of Ahasuerus. (Est. ii. 21.) Also called "Bigthana." (Est. vi. 2.)

BIGVAI = husbandman or gardener. 1. One who returned with Zerubbabel from the exile. (Ezra ii. 2.) 2. One whose posterity returned from the exile. (Ezra ii. 14; viii. 14; Neh. vii. 19.)

BILDAD = quarreler. The Shuhite, one of Job's three friends. (Job. ii. 11.)

BILEAM. —See ISRAEL.

BILGAH = cheerfulness. 1. The principal of the fifteenth class or course in the division of the priests. (1 Chron. xxiv. 14.) 2. One of the priests. (Neh. xii. 5, 18.) Also called "Bilgai." (Neh. xii. 8.)

BILHAH = bashfulness. 1. Rachel's handmaid. (Gen. xxx. 3—8.) 2. —See BAALAH.

BILHAN = bashful, modest. 1. A descendant of Seir. (Gen. xlv. 27.) 2. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. vii. 10.)

BILSHAN = son of the tongue, i.e., eloquent. One who returned from the exile. (Ezra ii. 2; Neh. vii. 7.)

BIMHAL = son of circumcision, i.e., circumcised. A descendant of Asher. (1 Chron. viii. 3.)

BIND. To bind, and to loose, are synonymous with to command, and to forbid; they are also taken for condemning and absolving. (Matt. xvi. 19.) Binding and loosing, in the language of the Jews, expressed permitting or forbidding, or judicially declaring anything to be lawful or unlawful. In the admission of their doctors, to interpret the Law and the Prophets, they put a key and a table-book into their hands, with these words: "Receive the power of binding and loosing," to which there seems to be an allusion in Luke xi. 52. So Christ says, "I am not come to destroy,"—to unloose or dissolve,—"the law, but to fulfill it" that is, to confirm and establish it. The apostles declare how much of the ritual of the Jewish dispensation is binding upon us; and what they have not bound is loose to us, that is, we are free from obligation to it. (Matt. xviii. 18; John xx. 23; Acts xv. 25—29.)

BINEA = a pushing forth, fountain. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 37; ix. 43.)

BINNUI = a building. 1. A son of Pahath-moab. (Ezra x. 30.) 2. A son of Bani. (Ezra x. 38.) 3. Two of the Levites. (Ezra viii. 33; Neh. iii. 24; x. 9; xii. 8.) —See BANI.

BIRDS. The general ground of distinction of birds into clean and unclean is, that those which feed on grain or seeds are clean; while those which devour fish or carrion, are unclean. The former might be eaten, and some of them offered in sacrifice, the latter not. (Lev. i. 14—17; vi. 7—10; xi. 13—20; xiv. 4—7; Deut. xiv. 11—20.) There is much difficulty in the identification of the birds mentioned in Scripture. Our English translators were, it may be supposed, very limited in their knowledge on this subject; for the same Hebrew words in Levitical and Deuteronomy are not always rendered by the same term in our tongue; thus, the "vulture" of the former book is in the latter called the "glide," and there are many similar variations in different parts of the old Testament, with regard to other birds and other animals. Moses, to inculcate humanity on the Hebrews, orders, if they find a bird's nest, not to take the dam with the young, but to suffer the old one to fly away, and to take the young only. (Deut. xxii. 6, 7.) It seems that the Babylonians practised a species of hawking; (Dan. iii. 38; Barnab iii. 17;) the Egyptians also hunted birds, as is evident from the paintings on the ancient monuments. (Hos. xi. 11; Prov. vii. 23.)

BIRSHA = son of wickedness. A king of Gomorrah. (Gen. xiv. 2.)

BIRTH. In oriental countries mothers were usually the only assistants of their daughters in child-birth. In cases of more than ordinary difficulty, those midwives, who had acquired some celebrity for their skill on occasions of this nature, were invited in; and in this manner arose that class of women denominated midwives. (Ex. i. 16—19.) The child was no sooner born, than it was washed in a bath, rubbed with salt, and wrapped in swaddling clothes. (Esak. xvi. 6.) The mother after the birth of a son, was unclean for seven days, and during the thirty-three days succeeding the seven of uncleanness, remained at home. After the birth of a daughter, the number of the days of uncleanness and seclusion at home was doubled. At the expiration of this period, she went into the tabernacle or temple, and offered a lamb of a year old; or if she was poor, two turtle doves, or two young pigeons, for a sacrifice of purification. (Lev. xii. 1—8; Luke ii. 22—24.) The birthday of a son, especially, was made a festival; and on each successive year it was celebrated with renewed demonstrations of festivity and joy. (Gen. xl. 20; Job. i. 4; Matt. xiv. 6.)

BIRTHRIGHT.—See FIRST-BORN.

BIRZAVITH = ales, cascade. A descendant of Asher. (1 Chron. vii. 31.)

BISHLAM = sea of peace. A Persian officer in Palestine. (Ezra iv. 7.)

BISHOP. The Greek word episcopos, rendered "bishop," signifies an overseer or superintendant; and is used to designate the pastor of a church. (Acts xx. 28; Phil. i. 1; 1 Tim. iii. 2—7; Tit. i. 5—9.) The word is evidently of the same import as presbyter or "elder," for the terms, as they occur in the new Testament, appear to be synonymous, and are used indifferently. Thus the same persons that are called "bishops," are also called "elders." Hence, when Paul came to Milevis, he sent to Ephesus for the presbyters of the church, and thus addressed them, "Take heed, therefore, unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over which the Holy Ghost has made you bishops, or overseers." (Acts xx. 17; Tit. i. 5; 1 Pet. v. 1.) Christ is called "the shepherd and bishop of our souls." (1 Pet. ii. 25.)

BITHIAH = daughter, i.e., worshipper of Jehovah. The daughter of Pharao, king of Egypt, and wife of Mered, a descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 18.)

BITHRON = region, or, a region cut off. Probably this is not the name of any particular place, but a general term, denoting a range of hills and valleys, a craggy valley, or mountain gorge. (2 Sam. ii. 29.)

BITHYHIA = region of violence. A province of Asia Minor, on the Euxine sea and the Propontus, bounded on the east by Myrsia, S. and E. by Phrygia and Galatia, and E. by Paphlagonia. It now forms one of the districts of Turkish Anatolia, and is the nearest province to Turkey in Europe. When Paul attempted to go into Bithynia with Timothy, "the Spirit suffered them not." (Acts ii. 9; xvi. 7, 8; 1 Pet. i. 1.)

BITTER HERBS. According to the command of Moses, (Ex. xii. 8; Num. ix. 11,) the Hebrews were to eat the lamb of the pasch over with bitter herbs. Among the herbs which were then eaten, as salted with meat, the Septuagint has caduce for the Hebrew word. Jerome gives wild lettuce; the Chaldee translator, Jonathan, has two words which probably denote caduce, or some species of cichorium. The modern Jews of Egypt and Arabia eat the lamb of the pasch over with lettuce. The use of bitter herbs on this occasion, was to call to their remembrance the severe and cruel bondage from which Jehovah delivered them, when they were brought out of Egypt.

BITTERN. This bird is about the size of a heron, and of the same genus; inhabiting swamps and marshes, and has a deep hoarse cry, which is often heard, in the twilight, from its lonely haunts. The language of prophecy, pointing out the solitude and desolation, which should come upon the cities of Babylon, (Isa. xiv. 28,) and Nineveh, (Zeph. ii. 14,) and upon the land of Idumea, (Isa. xxxiv. 11,) says, that they should become a possession for the "bittern," and other wild creatures. Some suppose that the Hebrew word tippul, like the Arabic kawf, designates the hedgehog or the porcupine. But others think that the common white heron, or some species of bittern, not uncommon in the marshes of western Asia, is intended.

BIZOTHIAH = contempt of Jehovah. A place in the south of Judah. (Josh. xv. 28.)

BIZTHA = castrated. A sunch in the court of Xerxes. (Est. i. 10.)

BLAINS. The blains or fistulae which broke out upon the Egyptians, and all their beasts, in the sixth plague, appears to have been a disease attended by feverish cutaneous eruptions, and to have become burning sores, inflamed ulcers, or boils. Some suppose it to have been a species of the black leprosy, endemic in Egypt, and called by physicians elephasitica. (Ex. ix. 9—11; Lev. xiii. 18—20.) It is also called the "botch of Egypt." (Deut. xxviii. 27—35.)

BLASPHEMY. This Greek word in its original use, denotes evil speaking, defamation, slander, or reviling, against whomsoever it be vented. It is frequently employed in reference to men and things; (Matt. xv. 19; Mark vii. 28; Col. iii. 8; Rev. ii. 9;) and is sometimes rendered "evil speaking;" (Eph. iv. 15; "railing;" (Mark xv. 29; 1 Tim. vi. 4; Jude 10;) and "reviling." (Matt. xxvii. 39.) But in the restricted sense in which it is generally used, it denotes impious, irreverent, or insulting language, concerning God or any of his names or attributes. Whoever thinks of the character of God as infinitely holy, just, and good, will not be surprised that this most heinous offence, under the Mosaic law, was punished with death. (Lev. xxiv. 10–15; Mark ii. 7; xiv. 64; John x. 38; Rev. xiii. 5–8.) The "blasphemy against the Holy Ghost" consisted in imputing the miracles wrought by Christ, or His Apostles, in His name, through the power of the Holy Ghost, to the agency of Satan. (Matt. xii. 31, 32; Mark iii. 28–30; Luke xii. 10.) Our Lord had just healed a demoniac, and the Pharisees resisting the strongest means of conviction, wilfully gave this blasphemy turn to the miracle. It would thus seem that no person can now be guilty of the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, in the sense that the Pharisees were; but the sin of utter or complete apostasy seems to bear a very near resemblance to it. (Heb. vii. 4–8; x. 26–31.) The first was a sin in the face of the strongest evidence to the senses; and the second is a sin against the strongest convictions of the moral consciousness. For these sins "there remaineth no more sacrifice." The crime of blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, it is said, shall not be forgiven, "neither in this world, neither in the world to come," that is, it shall not be forgiven, neither in time, nor in eternity. The sin unto death seems to designate such outward sins committed by professors of Christianity as extinguish spiritual life, by which the state of salvation is inevitably lost. (1 John v. 16, 17; comp. 1 John iii. 14.)
BLA

BLASTUS. A man who had charge of Herod Agrippas's bed chamber. (Acts xii. 20.)

BLEMISH. The imperfections or deformities, which were called "blemishes," which unfitted men for the priesthood, and animals for sacrifice, are carefully enumerated. (Lev. xxi. 17–23; xxii. 19–23; Deut. xv. 21.) The perfections required by the law, adumbrated the perfection of Christ's priesthood, and the immaculate purity of his sacrificial offering. (1 Pet. i. 19.)

BLESSING. There are three points of view in which the acts of blessing may be considered: 1. When God is said to bless his people, either by the promise of, or the communication of bodily or spiritual, temporal or eternal good. (Gen. i. 22; xxiv. 35; Job xlii. 12; Ps. xlv. 2; civ. 24; 28; Luke xi. 9–13; James i. 17.) 2. When men are said to bless God, which is an act of thanksgiving to Him for His mercies. (Ps. ciii. 1, 2; cxlv. 1–3.) 3. Men are said to bless their fellow-creatures when they wish them well; or in the spirit of prophecy, they predict blessings to come upon them. Thus, Melchisedec blessed Abraham. (Gen. xiv. 19; Heb. vii. 6, 7.) Jacob blessed his sons; (Gen. xlix. 1–28; Heb. xi. 21;) and Moses blessed the children of Israel. (Deut. xxxiii. 1–29.) The form of blessing prescribed in the Hebrew ritual, (Num. vi. 28–27,) was probably pronounced standing, with a loud voice, and with the hands raised towards heaven. (Num. vi. 28–27; Luke xxiv. 50.) National blessings and curses were sometimes pronounced. (Deut. xxvii. 12–26; xxviii. 1–63.)

BLINDNESS. Most travellers have noticed the frequency of cases of ophthalmia, and of blindness in the East. The floating particles of heated sand can scarcely be considered the principal cause of disease of the eyes, as the wandering Arabs are not attacked by it. The disease is supposed to arise mainly from the filthy habits of the people, and the infection may be communicated by carelessness from one to another, or even by flies, which pass from the sores of beggars in the streets, and settle on the eyes of others. Jesus frequently cured the blind. (Mark viii. 22–25; John ix. 1–83.) Moses extended the protection of special statutes to the blind. (Lev. xix. 14; Deut. xxvii. 18.) The term "blindness" is often used to denote ignorance or a want of discernment in divine things. (Isa. vi. 10; xiii. 18, 19; Matt. xvi. 14.) Blindness was sometimes inflicted as a punishment. (Gen. xix. 11; Acts xiii. 11.) Christ, as a prophet and divine teacher, was blind-folded, in order to expose him to reproach and ridicule. (Luke xxii. 64.) BLOOD. The fluid of life circulating in the veins of the animal body. The correctness of the statement of Moses that "the life of the flesh is in the blood."
(Lev. xvi. 11,) was demonstrated by Dr. Hervey, in 1628. The use of blood, as an article of food, was absolutely prohibited to Noah; (Gen. ix. 4;) and also by the Mosaic law; (Lev. xvi. 10—14;) and the same injunction was renewed to the converts to christianity. (Acts xv. 29.) The true reason of the prohibition of blood for food, was, no doubt, a sacrificial one; "It is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul." (Lev. xii. 11.) The death of the victim sacrificed was not only an acknowledgment of the penal desert of sin on the part of the offerer, but the sprinkling of the blood symbolized the divine acceptance of that blood, in lieu of the life of the offerer; thus exhibiting in type, the sacrificial death of Christ for us, and the redeeming virtue of his blood. (Acts xx. 28; Rom. v. 9; Eph. i. 7; Heb. ii. 9; ix. 7—24; 1 John ii. 2; Rev. i. 5.) The term "blood" is also used for relationship, or consanguinity; (John i. 13; Acts xvi. 26;) for our mortal nature; (Matt. xvi. 17; 1 Cor. xv. 50; Eph. vi. 2;) and as the symbol of slaughter and mortality. (Isa. xxxiv. 3; Ezek. xiv. 19.) And wine is called the "blood of the grape." (Gen. xli. 11; Deut. xxii. 14.)

BLUE. This term probably designates the cerulean, or light blue. It was the sacred colour of the Hebrews and also of the Egyptians. (Ex. xxv. 4.) We know, from the blue stripes at the hem of some of the mummy cloths, that the ancient Egyptians used wood for dyeing blue; and there is every reason to think that the Hebrews borrowed their mode of dyeing the hangings of the tabernacle, the robe of the high-priest's ephod, and fringe of their garments blue, from that nation. (Ex. xvi. 1, 36; Jer. x. 9; Ezek. xxvii. 7, 24.)

BOANERGES = sons of thunder, or of commotion. A surname applied by

BOO

Christ, to James and John, the sons of Zebedee, on account of their fervid and impetuous spirit. (Mark iii. 17; Luke ix. 53, 54.)

BOAR, WILD. This animal is the original of all the varieties of the hog kind. Recent travellers still describe the wild boar as common on the banks of the Jordan, and the plain of Carmel. This ferocious and destructive animal, not satisfied with devouring the fruit, lacerates and breaks with his sharp tusks, the branches of the vine, or with his stout dig it up by the roots, and tramples it under his feet. (Ps. lxxx. 13.)

BOAT. See SHIP.

BOAZ = alacrity, sprightliness. A descendant of Judah, who married Ruth; and through him is traced the regular succession of Hebrew kings. (Judg. ii. 1—23; ii. 2; iii. 2; iv. 21; 1 Chron. ii. 11, 12.) In Matt. i. 5, he is called "Booz." 2. A column set up before the temple of Solomon. (1 Kings vii. 21; 2 Chron. iii. 17.)

BOCHERU = the first-born is he. A son of Azel. (1 Chron. viii. 38; ix. 41.)

BOCHIM = the weeping. A place near Gilgal; so called, because, here the Hebrews lifted up their voices and wept, when charged with disobedience and threatened with punishment. (Judg. ii. 1—5.)

BOHAN = thumcb. A son of Reuben; from whom also comes the name "Ebenbohan = stones of Bohan, a place on the confines of Judah and Benjamin. (Josh. vi. 6; xviii. 17.)

BOILS. See BLAIFS.

BONDAGE. See CAPTIVITY.

BONDMAN. See SERVANT.

BONNET. See MITRE, AND TURBAN.

BOOK. The Hebrews appear to have employed the two words sepher, and megillah, to designate what we term a book, or writing of any kind. Sepher signifies any kind of writing or knowledge; (Dan. i. 17;) a bill of any kind. (Jer. xxxii. 11; Job xxx. 27; Deut. xxiv. 1—8;) an epistle or letter; (2 Sam. xi. 14; 2 Kings x. 1;) also writing or a book. (Gen. v. 1; Ex. xvii. 14; xxiv. 7; Josh. viii. 34; Ps. lxxix. 28;) the sacred books—the Scriptures. (Dan. ix. 2.) Megillah signifies a book which rolls up; hence megillath sepher is the roll of the book or “volume of the book,” (Ps. xli. 7,) as applied to the book of the Law. Though books are referred to as early as the time of Moses, (Gen. v. 1,) and of Job, yet, what we call books were unknown to the ancient Hebrews, at least in their present convenient form. In the most ancient times, documents designed to be transmitted to posterity, were engraved on stone. Jehovah’s laws were written on stone; (Ex. xxxiv. 12; xxxii. 15; xvi. 19; xxxiv. 1; Deut. xxvii. 2, 3; Josh. viii. 32.) The public documents of the Egyptians, the Edomites, the Babylonians, and the Assyrians, were written on the rocks, and on pillars and slabs; (Job xix. 24;) and sometimes on tiles or bricks. (Ezek. iv. 1.) Plates of copper and of lead were used for inscriptions; (Jer. xvii. 1; 1 Mac. viii. 22;) also wooden planks. For temporary writing, tablets of wood were generally employed.

Dr. T. H. Horne thinks it highly probable that several of the prophets wrote upon tablets of wood, or some similar material. (Num. v. 23; Isa. xxx. 8; Hab. ii. 2; Ezek. xxxvii. 16; Luke i. 63.) The fine inner bark (liber) of trees was early used as a substance for writing. Even at this day, books made with the leaves (folium) of different trees, are common among the Indian nations. The Egyptians, in ordinary writing, used papyrus. It was obtained from a bulrush, (Cyperus papyrus,) which grew in the swamps of the Nile, to the height of ten or fifteen feet. The parts used, were the thin concentric layers that surround the triangular stalk, which were glued together with the fibres made to cross; and after being pressed and dried in the sun, the sheet was completed by the surface being polished with a shell, or other hard and smooth substance. A number of these sheets were glued together, to form a roll of the required dimensions. The Gospels and some of the Epistles were probably written on papyrus, (cheth, 2 John, 12,) and it is not unlikely that the Hebrew writers were acquainted with it. (Ex. ii. 3.) Linen was also used anciently, as a substance to write upon. The Hebrew writers seem to have used either papyrus, or linen, or the skins of animals—sometimes, perhaps, the one, and sometimes the other. The making of paper from lace, in its present modern form, was first known in Europe about A.D. 1800. The art of printing was introduced about 150 years later. The skins of animals were in use for writing, long before parchment was invented. The manufacture of parchment, (membrana, 2 Tim. iv. 3,) and the square form of books are said to have been invented at Pergamos, whence the word porcellum, about B.C. 200. Beautiful tablets, and tablet books were sometimes made of ivory. The term “sealed,” when applied to a book or roll, signifies unwrapped, or not understood. (Isa. xxix. 11, 12; Dan. xii. 4; Rev. v. 1.)

An ancient Roll.

The most ancient books, or rolls, were made of the papyrus, prepared skins, or linen; and were of different sizes. (Zeol. v. 2.) A very good idea may be formed of an ancient roll, by supposing a common newspaper to have rods or rollers at the right and left side. The reader takes hold of the rods, and unrolls the sheet until he comes to the desired column, and keeps before him just so much as he would read, as in the woodcut. (Luke iv. 17-20; Isa. xxxiv. 4.) The writing was generally in capital (capital) letters, and without punctuation or division of words; and was usually on one side, but not always. (Ezek. ii. 10.) The pages resembled the following, in their general appearance, though they were of course wider and longer than these:

INTERSEI WARSITETH GMADETHA
KUEWAST MOWINGW TWARMADE
KEGORDAN INSEGOALL ISHEMWA
STEWORDER TISESSEWAR LITEANDTH
WEWSITEG GMADETHA ELIFEWAST
GRANITEH MANDWITHO RILEGHTOF
WOSDIWAS WISEINWAH MENANDTHE
GOVERNANCE OF THEM (John i. 1-4.)

The ancients seldom wrote their compositions with their own hands; but dictated them to their freedmen and slaves. They were then transcribed by the calligraphist, and received from the corrector the extreme perfection they required. Many of the books of the new Testament were probably dictated in conformity with this custom. (Gal. vi. 11; 2 Thes. iii. 17; 1 Cor. xvi. 21; Col. iv. 18; Rom. xvi. 22.) Compositions of every kind could be multiplied only by transcripts. And when the manuscripts had passed in this way to others, they were beyond the control of the author, and were considered as published. Even the price of such transcripts, was not so high as one might have imagined. Martial in his Epigrams, has stated the price of his 13th book, which contains 272 verses, to have been four sextarii; or if this should be thought too much, two sextarii, which would still leave a profit, as he says to the bookseller. The last-named sum amounts to about threepence halfpenny of our money.

The "book of the generation," signifies the genealogical history or records of a family or nation. (Gen. v. 1; Matt. i. 1.) So also they "book of life," is probably an allusion to the public register, in which the titles and privileges of citizens are enrolled; or it may refer to the genealogical tables or registers of the Jews, especially of their priests, in which the names of the legitimately qualified alone were entered. (Ezra ii. 62; Neh. vii. 64; Ps. lxxix. 28; Isa. iv. 8; Mal. iii. 16; Dan. xii. 1; Luke xii. 1; Phil. iv. 3; Rev. iii. 5; xxi. 37.) And the "book of judgment," may be an allusion either to the practice of opening books of account to settle with servants, or to a custom of examining the special services rendered to the king, and the rewards given to those who had performed them. (Est. vi. 1-3; Dan. vii. 10; Rev. xx. 12.)

BOOTH.—See TAVERNARIES, FEAST OF.

BOOTY.—See SPOIL.

BOOZ.—See BOAZ.

BORROW. The proper meaning of the Hebrew word shek, translated "borrow," is to ask, request, demand, or require. “Jehovah gave the Hebrews favour in the sight of the Egyptians,” so that the Egyptians liberally gave them, as they had requested, jewels and precious vases of silver and of gold, and raiment, as an evidence of their good will. (Ex. iii. 20—22; xi. 1-3; xii. 35, 36.)

BOSCATH = STONY REGION, HIGH.
A place in Judah. (2 Kings xxii. 1.) It is also written “Bozikth.” (Josh. xv. 39.)

BOSOM. The females in the east study embrocation to a degree unusual among northern nations. (Sol. Song viii. 10.) When persons are about to carry any thing their hands would not contain, they use for the purpose a fold in the bosom of their robe. (Luke vi. 38.) The “good shepherd” is said to carry the lambs in his bosom. (Isa. xl. 11.) The use of the term in John i. 18, imports the peculiar and perfect unity of the Father and Son. “Abraham’s bosom,” figuratively spoken of as the abode of Lazarus in paradise, (Luke xvi. 22, 23,) is an allusion to the oriental custom of reclining at table. The guests reclined on a couch, resting on the left arm, the head falling almost upon the breast of the nearest person behind. (John xiii. 23; xxi. 30.) The feet, thus stretched out, would be easily accessible for the purpose of washing or anointing them. (Luke vii. 38; John xii. 2, 3.)

BOSOR.—See BEOR.

BOSSES.—See SHIELD.

BOTCH.—See BLAINS.
BOT

BOTTLE. Bottles made of the skins of kids and goats are still as anciently, used by the people of western Asia. The head being cut off, the carcass is extracted without opening the belly, and the neck serves as the mouth of the vessel thus formed, as in Fig. 1. The thighs, which are suffers to remain, serve as its handles, and also to give hold to the straps by which it is fastened to the luggage or saddle of a mounted traveller; or by which, being thrown across the shoulder and breast, it is slung to the back of a pedestrian. When a travelling party is large, and the prospect of a fresh supply of water distant, large skins of the camel or ox, two of which are a good load for a camel, are used.

A kind of bottle of prepared leather, shaped something like a powder-flask, Fig. 2, is very common in the East, for containing water or liquid butter. The term “box,” (2 Kings ix. 1, 8,) and “vial,” (1 Sam. x. 1,) should have been “flask” or “bottle,” perhaps of leather. The propriety of putting new wine into new bottles, which will distend themselves to the swelling of the liquor, and thus preserve the wine to maturity, is obvious; while old bottles which have been previously stretched by the same process, may, without danger, contain old wine, whose fermentation is already past. (Gen. xxi. 15, 19; Josh. ix. 4, 18; Ps. cxxix. 88; Judg. iv. 19; 1 Sam. xvi. 20; Matt. ix. 17; Luke vi. 38; Job xxxii. 19.) The term “bottles,” in Jer. xiii. 12; xix. 1; xlvi. 12; Isa. xxx. 14, margin, properly means earthen vessels, or “bottles.” Bottles or vases of earthenware were early used; (Judg. iv. 19;) the same term is rendered “lordly dish.” (Judg. v. 25.) Earthenware bottles of elegant shape were used in Egypt, Fig. 3. And glass bottles, of various shapes and colours, were manufactured at Thebes, as early as 2,000 B.C.; several of which may be seen in the British Museum.—See GLASS.

BOW

BOTTOMLESS PIT.—See HELL.

BOW. Ancient military bows were generally made of wood; but in some instances they were of copper, rendered in our version “steel.” (Job xx. 24; Ps. xviii. 34.) Those of wood, however, were so strong, that the soldiers sometimes challenged one another to bend their bows. In bending the bow, one end of it was pressed upon the ground by the foot, the other end was borne down by the left hand and the weight of the body, and the string was adjusted by the right. This accounts for the use of the Hebrew word darak = to tread upon, in reference to the bending of the bow. (1 Chron. v. 18; viii. 40; Isa. v. 28; xxi. 15; Jer. xlvi. 9.) The strings for bows were made of thongs of leather, of horse-hair, and of the sinews of oxen. “A deceitful bow,” to which the people of Israel are compared, may allude to a bow which is not true, and consequently shoots the arrow in a wrong direction. (Ps. lxxviii. 57; Hos. vii. 16.) “To break the bow,” signifies to destroy the power of a people. Instead of “the use of the bow,” (2 Sam. i. 18,) it should be THE BOW, which is simply the title of the dirge or lamentation. (Ps. xlv. 9; Jer. xliv. 35; Hos. i. 5.)—See ARCHERS.

BOW.—See RAINBOW.

BOWELS. This term is often used by the Hebrew writers for the inner man, just as we often use the word heart. Hence the bowels are represented as the seat of mercy, tenderness, compassion, etc., and even of wisdom. (1 Kings iii. 26; Isa. lixiii. 15; Jer. xxxi. 20; Col. iii. 12; 1 John iii. 17; Job xxxvii. 36; Ps. li. 8, margin.)

BOWING.—See SALUTATION.

BOWLS. The “bowls of pure gold,” (Ex. xxv. 29,) for the service of the sanctuary were most probably vases of elegant workmanship, similar to those we find depicted on the Egyptian monuments. The favourite form of the Egyptian bowl was the lotus, while that of the Hebrews resembled a lily. (Num. vii. 13; 1 Kings x. 21; Judg. v. 25.)

BOX.—See Bottle.

BOX TREE. The Hebrew word עץ תות (totor) is generally acknowledged to designate the box-tree, which is mentioned as furnishing wood for the future temple, (Isa. xli. 13.) and referred to in connection with the cedar, the cypress, and the acacia, or c opt tree, as one day to be seen springing up and flourishing in dry, barren, and unsheltered wilds. (Isa. xiii. 19.) The Hebrew word עץ אשור (ashurit) is an abbreviated form of עץ תות; so that instead of the "company of the Ashurites have made thy benches of ivory," we ought to read, "thy benches are made of ivoried box-wood, from the isles of Chittim." (Ezek. xxvii. 6.)

BOZERZ = shining, glittering. A rock near Gibeon. (1 Sam. xiv. 4.)

BOZKATH.—See BOSKATH.

BOZRAH = a fortress, stronghold. One of the chief cities of the Edomites, and for a time the capital of the country. This place is recognised in the modern village and castle of Buseira, in Arabia Petraea, thirty miles north of Petra, and twenty south by east from the Dead Sea. It appears to have been one time in the hands of the Moabites. (Isa. xxxiv. 6; liii. 1; Jer. lxxiv. 24; xlix. 18, 22; Am. i. 12; Gen. xxxvi. 33.) Another Bozrah, the capital of a Roman province of Arabia, lay east of Bashan, about sixty miles east of the upper Jordan, the ruins of which are five or six miles in circumference. The ancient prophecies seem to be chiefly, if not exclusively, directed against the former city.

BRACLET. An ornamental chain or clasp, worn on the wrist by both sexes among the Hebrews, Assyrians, and the Egyptians. (1 Sam. i. 10; 135

Gen. xxiv. 22, 30; Ezek. xvi. 11.)

The Assyrian and Egyptian figures are frequently exhibited with bracelets on the wrists, armlets on the arms, and anklets on the feet. They are probably of massive gold, frequently inlaid with precious stones, or enameled, varying in the richness of their design, and many of them might serve even in the present day as models for similar ornaments. The term "bracelet," (Isa. iii. 19; Num. xxxi. 50,) ought to be "anklet."—See Anklets.

BRAMBLE.—See THorns.

BRANCH. As trees in Scripture, frequently denote great men and princes, branches, sprouts, or plants, denote their offspring. Hence our Lord, in respect to His human nature, is styled a "rod from the stem of Jesse," and a "Branch out of his roots," that is, a prince arising from the family of David. (Isa. xi. 1.) He is also called "a tender plant," shooting out from the trunk or root of an old tree—the royal house of David, at that time in a forlorn and contemptible condition. (Isa. lii. 2; Jer. xxiii. 5; xxxiii. 15; Zech. iii. 8; vi. 12.) Christ's disciples are called "branches," with reference to their union with him. (John xv. 5, 6.)

BRASS. This word frequently occurs in the Scriptures, but there is little doubt that copper is intended; brass being a mixed metal of modern invention. (Gen. iv. 22; Deut. viii. 9.) "Copper" was used for a variety of purposes about the temple; (Ezra viii. 27; 2 Chron. ii. 7; iv. 1;) and also for fetters; (Judg. xxi. 21; 2 Kings xxv. 7;) armours; (1 Sam. xvii. 5, 6;) and musical instruments; (1 Chron. xv. 19; 1 Cor. iii. 1.) The brass of antiquity seems to have been a kind of bronze. The various implements found upon the monuments in Egypt, not formed of gold or silver, are painted green, and were undoubtedly of copper or bronze. The skill of the Egyptians in compounding metals is abundantly proved by the vases, mirrors, arms, and implements of bronze, discovered at Thebes and in other parts of Egypt; and the numerous methods they adopted for varying the composition of bronze by a judicious mixture of alloys, are shown in the many qualities of the metal. They could give bronze or copper blades a certain degree of elasticity; and their vases emitted rich and sonorous tones. The Macedonian empire is described as a kingdom of brass. (Dan. ii. 39.)

BRASEN SEA.—See LAVEN.

BRASEN SERPENT. A figure made by Moses in polished copper of one of those fiery serpents which were sent to chastise the murmuring Hebrews in the desert. It was put upon a pole, as a standard or ensign; "and it came to pass, that if a serpent had bitten any man, when he beheld the serpent of brass (or copper) he lived." This brasen serpent was preserved as a monument of the divine mercy; but in process of time it became an instrument of idolatry, and was destroyed by Hezekiah, who contemptuously called it "Nehustan"—a brassen serpent. (2 Kings viii. 4.) The circumstance of the serpent being lifted up was typical of Christ being lifted up; and as the Hebrews who were stung were healed by looking to the ensign, so sinners everywhere are healed and saved, by looking up to—believing in Jesus Christ crucified. (Num. xxxi. 8, 9; John iii. 14, 15.)

BREAD. This word is frequently used in Scripture for food in general. (Gen. iii. 19; xviii. 5; xxvii. 20; Ex. ii. 20.) The Hebrews generally made their bread of wheat, though barley and other grains were sometimes used. The process of kneading, was performed in kneading troughs. (Gen. xviii. 6; Ex. xii. 34; Jer. vii. 8,) or wooden bowls, such as the Arabs use at this day for a like purpose, or perhaps upon a circular piece of leather, such as is now used in Persia. Either of the utensils would be easily transported. Very simple leaven was used in the dough. The bread was sometimes baked on a kind of oven something like a large pitcher, of grey stone, open at the top, in which they made a fire. When it was well heated, they applied the paste to the outside of the oven; it was immediately baked and taken off in thin fine pieces. It was sometimes baked on iron or copper plates over the fire; and sometimes under the ashes, as the Arabs often do at the present day. The Arabs frequently bake their bread in round flat cakes, in the embers of a fire of camel's or cow-dung; and it is found to be, though dry and black, quite as good as the common bread of the country. The ancient Egyptians sometimes employed bakers. (Gen. xi. 2, 5, 16, 17.) They are seen, according to Bossellini's plates, working the dough with their feet, and going through the various operations of bread-making. Loaves of fancy bread subsequently appear in various ornamental shapes, triangles, squares, circles, etc. The hieroglyphics near them intimate that they are made of barley, wheat, millet, etc., like the cakes still preserved in the Egyptian room of the British Museum. Among the Hebrews baking was principally the work of the women; (Gen. xix. 5; Lev. xxvi. 26; 1 Sam. vii. 18; 2 Sam. xiii. 8;) in later times there seems to have been public bakers. (Jer. xxxvii. 21; Hos. vii. 4—5.) The Hebrews offered unleavened bread, and cakes, and wafers or very thin cakes, made of fine flour; anointed sometimes with oil, and sometimes with honey, in the temple. (Ex. xxix. 2, 28; Lev. ii. 4; vii. 12, 18; Num. vi. 13, 19.) Cakes were sometimes offered to "the queen of heaven." (Jer. vii. 18; xlv. 19.) Manna is called "bread from heaven." (Ex. xvi. 4.)

Golden Table.

BREAD, SHEW. The "shewbread," or bread of presence, so called because it was continually set before Jehovah, was unleavened bread, offer-of every sabbath day on the golden table which stood in the holy place, in twelve "cakes" or leaves of a square or oblong shape, according to the number of the tribes of Israel. Salt and frankincense, and probably wine, were presented at the same time. The old leaves were removed from the table as the new ones were brought on; and could be lawfully eaten by none but the priests, and by them only in the court of the sanctuary. (1 Sam. xxi. 4—6; Matt. xii. 1—5; Ex. xxi. 30; Lev. xxiv. 3—9.) It also appears, that there was always near the altar a basket full of unleavened bread, in order to be offered together with the ordinary sacrifice. (Ex. xxix. 33; Num. vi. 15.) The golden table was three feet six inches long, one foot nine inches wide, and two feet seven inches and a half high. It was made of shittim wood, overlaid with pure gold, and had a screen or border of pure gold. It had rings and staves for carrying it; and the dishes, spoons, covers, and bowls were all of gold. (Ex. xxv. 23—30; xxxvii. 10—16; 1 Kings vii. 48; Heb. iv. 2.) The woodcut, from the Arch of Titus, at Rome, represents the golden table, the silver trumpets, and a bowl or vase, or perhaps the golden censer, as they were paraded in triumph after the overthrow of Jerusalem.

BREASTPLATE. 1. A part of the official dress of the Hebrew high priest. It was a piece of very rich embroidered work, about ten and a half inches square, and made double with a front and lining. The front of it was adorned with twelve precious stones, on each of which was engraved the name of one of the tribes. They were placed in four rows, and divided from each other by the little golden squares or partitions in which they were set. The two upper corners of the breastplate were fastened to the ephod, from which it was never to be loosed; (Ex. xxv. 28;) and the two lower corners to the girdle. The rings, chains, and other fastenings were of gold or rich lace. It was called the "memorial," inasmuch as it reminded the priest of his representative character in relation to the twelve tribes; and it was also called the "breastplate of judgment," perhaps, because it had the divine oracle of Urim and Thummim annexed to it. (Ex. xxviii. 15—30.) 2.—See Coat of Mail.

BRETHREN.—See Brother.

BRICKS. Among the Hebrews bricks were usually clay hardened by the heat of the sun; but if intended for splendid buildings, they were burnt by fire. Brick-kilns, or perhaps brick-works, are mentioned in 2 Sam. xii. 31; Nah. iii. 14; Jer. xiii. 9. Inscribed or painted bricks, or "tiles," are mentioned in Ezek. iv. 1. In Egypt, where the Hebrews were subjected to the drudgery of brickmaking, crude sun-dried bricks were in universal use for private and for many public buildings. When made of the Nile mud, or alluvial deposit, they required straw in their composition to prevent their cracking. Sometimes they had the signet of the king, or of some privileged person stamped upon them, (a near approach to the art of printing;) and those made more than 3,000 years ago, whether with or without straw, are even now said to be as firm and as fit for use as when first manufactured. Sir G. Wilkinson has observed that "kiln-burnt bricks were not used in ancient Egypt, and when found they are known to be of Roman time." The woodcut is a copy, from the work of Rossellini, of the celebrated picture, painted on the sculptured limestone rock, in the tomb of the chief architect Bekahare, at Gournon or Qurna, the necropolis of western Thebes, representing foreign bondmen—some have thought Hebrews—digging clay with instruments not unlike hand-ploughs, others making the bricks and carrying them, while the task-masters, armed with goads, were superintending their labours. This picture, which has been recently examined by the learned Egyptologist Dr. Lepsius and Mr. Osburn, is dated in the reign of Thothmes III., but a short time before the exodus of the Hebrews. It confirms with literal correctness the inspired narrative in every point. (Ex. i. 11–14; v. 6–18.) Among the Babylonians, Mr. Layard has remarked, both sun-dried and kiln-burnt bricks were used. "With the tenacious mud of their alluvial plains, mixed with chopped straw, they made bricks, whilst bitumen and other substances collected from the immediate neighbourhood furnished them with an excellent cement. (Gen. xi. 3.) A knowledge of the art of manufacturing glaze, and of compounding colours, enabled them to cover their bricks with a rich enamel, thereby rendering them equally ornamental for the exterior and interior of their edifices." The Babylonian bricks are generally about twelve inches square, by three and a half inches thick, and are usually stamped with the name of Nebuchadnezzar; some have rude figures of animals, or a few lines inscribed on them. In the Assyrian ruins, kiln-burnt bricks, like those of Babylon, with cuneiform inscriptions, are very common. They are of various colours, many of them having a series of figures beautifully painted on them. However, the mass of the walls of Nineveh, and other Assyrian cities, was composed of sun-dried bricks, which have been reduced by age into an earthy state, and now form immense mounds of ruin. The more solid materials, such as limestone and slabs of gypseum, and kiln-burnt bricks, were merely employed as accessories.

BRIDAL. See Marriage.

BRIDLE. See Eye.

BRIER. See Thorn.

BRIGANTINE. See Coat of Mail.

BRIMSTONE. A well-known mineral substance which has no metallic basis, highly inflammable, and, when burning, emitting a peculiar suffocating smell. The cities of the plain were destroyed by showers of burning brimstone. (Gen. xix. 24, 25; Deut. xxix. 23.) The soil of that region abounded with sulphur and bitumen; and the kindling of such a mass of combustible materials, through volcanic action, would cause a conflagration sufficient not only to engulf the cities, but also to destroy the surface of the plain, and the sea rushing in, would convert the plain into a tract of waters. Small lumps of sulphur are still found in many places on the shores of the Dead Sea. The word "brimstone" is often used to denote destruction; (Job. xviii. 15; Isa. xxx. 33; xxxiv. 9; Ezek. xxxviii. 22;) and also the punishment of the wicked. (Ps. xi. 6; Rev. xiv. 10; xix. 20; xx. 10; xxi. 8.)

BRODER. See Embroidery.

BROOK. A stream, or torrent, either as flowing from a perennial fountain, as "the brooks flowing into the Arnon," (Num. xxx. 14,) and "brook of Kidron;" (Jer. xxi. 40;) or as formed by rain and snow-water in the mountains and drying up in summer. (Isa. xv. 7.) Such a torrent is meant in Job vi. 15, "my brethren are treacherous, like the torrent, which deceives the traveller by drying up unexpectedly."—See River.

BROTHER. This term is not only used to designate the nearest consanguinity; (Matt. i. 2; Luke iii. 1, 19; vi. 14, 18; Acts i. 13; Jude 1;) but also to denote,—1. Near relative, kinsman by blood, cousin. (Gen. xiii. 8; xiv. 16; Matt. xii. 49; xiii. 55; John vii. 3; Acts i. 14; Gal. i. 19.) 2. One born in the same country, descended from the same stock. (Ex. ii. 11; iv. 18; Matt. v. 47; Acts iii. 22;
3. One of equal rank and dignity. (Job xxx. 29; Prov. xviii. 19; Matt. xxiii. 8.) 4. Spoken of disciples, followers, etc. (Matt. xxv. 40; Heb. ii. 11, 12.) 5. One of the same faith, a fellow-Christian. (Acts ix. 9; xvi. 17, 30; xi. 29; 1 Cor. v. 11.) 6. An associate, colleague, in office or dignity, etc. ( Ezra iii. 2; 1 Cor. i. 1; 2 Cor. i. 1; ii. 18; Rev. vi. 11; xix. 10; xxii. 8.) 7. One of the same nature, a man. (Matt. v. 22—24; vii. 5; Heb. ii. 17; viii. 11.) 8. By implication, one beloved, as a brother, in a direct address. (Acts ii. 28; vi. 3; ix. 17; 1 Thess. v. 1.)

Booth. Roasted meat is rarely eaten by the Arabs; the common diet being boiled meat with the broth or soup, and rice porridge, and pillaw. (Judg. vi. 19, 20.) In Isa. lv. 4, the Jews are accused of making "broth" of unclean means forbidden by the law.

Bruisk. In some Oriental nations, bruising, or pounding in a mortar, is a punishment still in use. This horrid punishment was not authorised by the laws of Moses, yet it was not unknown in the time of Solomon. (Prov. xxvi. 27.)

Build. Besides its proper and literal signification, this word is used with reference to children and a numerous posterity. (Ex. i. 21; 1 Sam. ii. 35; R. Th. iv. 11.) The prophet Nathan told David that God would build his house, that is, give him children and successors. (2 Sam. vii. 12.) God's church is called a "building," and "the master-builder" is the architect. (1 Cor. iii. 9—17.)

Buck. 1. A prince of the tribe of Dan. (Ex. xxxiv. 22.) 2. The son of Abishua. (1 Chron. v. 5, 51.)

Bukkiah = wailing from Jehovah. A son of Heman. (1 Chron. xxvii. 4, 13.)

Bul. The eighth month of the ancient Hebrew year. It began with the first new moon in November; but if the new moon was somewhat late, it took in part of December. It was called by later Jews, "Marhneasvan." (1 Kings vi. 38.)

Bull. This animal was generally used by the Hebrews in agriculture; and as that people never castrated animals, where "oxen" are said to have been sacrificed, we are to understand bulls. (Lev. xxii. 24.) The following Hebrew words are translated "bull." 1. Abibah = strong ones, mighty ones, used poetically for bullocks, or bulls; strong ones of Bashan. (Ps. xxii. 12; l. 13; xlv. 30; Isa. xxxiv. 7.) 2. Baqrah = a bee, male or female. (Job i. 14; Ex. xxii. 1.) 3. Eglah = a calf in the first year; (Lev. ix. 3; Mic. v. 6.) a bullock, steer, heifer. (Hos. x. 11; Isa. vii. 21; Judg. xiv. 18; Jer. xxxiii. 15; xlvii. 34.) 4. Par = a bull, a bullock, a steer. (Ex. xxix. 1; Judg. vi. 25.)

Shor = ox, bullock. (Hos. xil. 11; Ex. xxix. 1.) 6. Tor = ox or bullock. (Ezra vi. 9, 17; vii. 17; Dan. iv. 25, 32, 33; v. 21.) 7. Teo, a species of gazelle. (Deut. xiv. 5; Isa. li. 20.) Bulls, in the rich pastures of Bashan being well fed, were strong and ferocious; hence they are chosen as symbols of powerful, cruel, and oppressive enemies. (Ps. xxi. 12.)

Bulrush. This marsh plant is called in Hebrew gomeh, from its porous nature as absorbing or drinking in moisture; hence also its Greek and Latin name, biblos and bibs. It is the Cyperus papyrus, the papyrus plant of Egypt. It grew principally in marshy places, or in the stagnant pools remaining after the inundation of the Nile, and its culture was a source of riches for the inhabitants. M. Savary states that it is only to be met with about Damietta and the lake Menzaleh. But Wilkinson, says, "the plant is now unknown in Egypt, and the only streams that produce it are the Ansus in Sicily, and a small one two miles north of Jaffa." Some other species of the numerous family of Cyperus seems to have been used for boats, skiffs, and for cordage, roof-shingles, clothes, mattresses, shoes, baskets, and canvases. (Ex. ii. 3; Isa. xlvii. 2; xxxv. 7; Job viii. 11; Pliny, H.N. vi. 18; xiii. 11; xxxi. 28.)
BUN

BUHNAH = descendent of Hezon. (1 Chron. ii. 25.)

BUNNI = built. A Levite. (Neh. ix. 4; x. 15; xi. 16.)

BURDEN. The Hebrew word massa, rendered "burden," frequently occurs in the prophetic writings, and properly signifies an oracle from God. It was sometimes understood in the sense of a denunciation of evil; (Isa. xiii. 1; Nah. i. 1; yet it did not exclusively imply a grievous and heavy burden, but a message, whether its import were joyous or afflictive. (Zech. ix. 1; xii. 1; Mal. i. 1.)

BURIAL. Among the Hebrews, as soon as the last breath had fled, the nearest relation, or the dearest friend, gave the lifeless body the parting kiss. (Gen. i. 1.) After closing the eyes, and binding up the face, (Gen. xlv. 4;) the company rent their clothes, which was a custom of great antiquity, and the highest expression of grief in the primitive ages. (Gen. xxxvii. 34, 35; Judg. xi. 35; Deut. xiv. 1, 2; 2 Sam. i. 11, 12; iii. 35.) The corpse was then washed with water, and except when buried immediately, was laid out in an upper room, or chamber. This ablution, which was always esteemed an act of great charity and devotion, was performed by women. (2 Kings iv. 21; Acta ix. 37.) They then wrapped the body round with many folds of linen, rendered fragrant by a large quantity of costly spices and aromatic drugs, and bound the head with a napkin. (John xi. 44; xix. 40; xx. 7.) Sometimes large quantities of aromatic substances were burned at the funeral. (2 Chron. xvi. 14; xxi. 19; Jer. xxxiv. 5.) The corpse was then placed on an open couch or bier, in readiness to be borne to the grave. Coffins were not used, except among the Egyptians and Babylonians, and they are not used even now in the East, except when a body is to be conveyed to a distant place. The patriarchs buried their bodies a few days after death; their burial. (Gen. xxiii. 2-4; xlv. 9; xxxv. 28.) It is probable, that Moses in reference to this practice, extended the uncleanness, contracted by means of a corpse, to seven days, in order to make the people hasten the ceremony of interment. In a subsequent age, the Jews imitated the example of the Persians, and buried the body very soon after death. (Acts v. 6; ix. 37.) The mourners, who followed the bier, poured forth lugubrious lamentations; while eulogists and musicians increased the sympathetic feelings, by a rehearsal of the virtues of the departed, and by the accompaniment of melancholy sounds. (Gen. i. 7-11; 2 Sam. iii. 31, 32; Am. v. 16; Matt. xx. 17.) Men who were distinguished for their rank and their good deeds, were honoured by the attendance of multitudes to witness the solemnities of their interment. (Gen. i. 7-14; 1 Sam. xxv. 1; 1 Kings xiv. 19; 2 Chron. xxxii. 33; Acts viii. 2.) The ancient Egyptians embalmed the body; (Gen. i. 3, 8, 36;) but we have no proof that this custom obtained among the Hebrews. The bodies of those who had died of the plague were probably burned, as a sanitary measure. (Am. vi. 11.) The bodies of Saul and his sons were burned, to preserve them from further disgrace; their ashes were afterwards buried. (1 Sam. xxxi. 11-13.—See SEPTUAGINT.

BURNT-OFFERINGS. BURNING. Burning alive is a punishment of ancient date, which was not originated, though retained by Moses. (Gen. xxxviii. 34; Lev. xx. 14; xxii. 9.) It was used by the Babylonians or Chaldeans. (Jer. xxix. 22; Dan. iii. 8.)

BURNT-OFFERINGS.—See OFFERINGS.

BUSH. What particular plant or bush the burning bush was, in which Jehovah manifested himself to Moses, it is difficult to say. (Ex. iii. 2, 3, 4; Deut. xxxiii. 16.) The Septuagint has a thorn-bush. (Matt. xii. 38; Acts vii. 30.) Hawthorns and other shrubs, with great quantities of hyssop and thyme, are common on the mountains of Horeb. Gesenius observes, that the Syriac and Arabic word ʿawād which is the same as the Hebrew, denotes the same plant, ḥūṣaṣ ʿawād. And we know that this plant is an indigene of Arabia. The Hebrew word rendered "bushes" margin, "commendable trees," signifies "pastures." (Isa. vii. 19.)

BUSHEL. The Greek μακρίς, rendered "bushel," was a measure for dry articles, containing near a pint less than a peck English measure. (Matt. v. 15; Mark iv. 21; Luke xi. 33.)

BUTLER.—See CUP-BEARER.

BUTTER. The Hebrew word rendered "butter" denotes the liquid butter still common in the East. (Deut. xxxii. 14; Prov. xxx. 32.) The milk is warmed on the fire, with a little leved or sear milk in it. It is then put into a churn, which consists of a common water skin, that is, the tanned skin of a goat, stripped off whole and the extreme end sewed up. This is partly filled with the milk; and being then suspended in a slight frame, or between two sticks leaning against the tent or house, it is regularly moved to and fro with a jerk until the process is completed. It was sometimes clarified on the fire, and preserved in skins or jars, as at the present day in Asia, and when poured out is of the colour and consistence of lard, sometimes it resembles rich oil. (Job xx. 17.) By this process it acquires a certain rancid taste, disagreeable for the most part to strangers, though not to the natives. All Arab food considered well prepared swims in butter, and large quantities of it are swallowed independently. The term "butter" also designates the sear or curdled milk, a favourite beverage in the East. The leved or curdled milk is often dried; and when mixed with water, forms a refreshing beverage. It was curdled milk which Jael gave to Sisera, from a magnificent bottle. (Judg. iv. 19; v. 25; Gen. xviii. 8; Isa. vii. 22.)

BUZ = contempt. 1. The second son of Nahor. (Gen. xxii. 21.) He probably gave name to the region of "Buz," a district of Arabia Desert. (Jer. xxv. 23.) His descendants were called "Buzites." (Job xxxii. 2.)

2. A descendant of Gad. (1 Chron. v. 14.)

BUSI = a Buzite. The father of the prophet Esaiel. (Ezra i. 3.)

BUZITE.—See BUS.

C

CAB = a hollow, or concave vessel. A Hebrew measure, containing three pints and a third, wine measure, or two pints and five-sixths, corn measure. (2 Kings vi. 25.)

CABBON = robe or cloak, band. A place in Judah; (Josh. xvi. 40;) perhaps the same with "Machbenah." (1 Chron. ii. 49.)

CABUL = limit, border. 1. A district of Galilee comprising twenty cities or towns, given as a present by Solomon to Hiram king of Tyre. (1 Kings ix. 11-13.) Josephus says, (Ant. viii. 5, 3) probably by conjecture from the context, that "Cabil in the Phenician tongue signifies that which does not please." 2. A city in Asher. (Josh. xix. 27.)

CAESAR. Originally the surname of the Julian family at Rome, but applied after Julius Caesar, to his successors of the same family as the usual title of dignity. Hence Cesar came to signify Emperor. In the New Testament the title Cesar is applied to Augustus; (Luke ii. 1;) Tiberius; (Luke iii. 1; xx. 22, 24, 25;) Claudius; (Acts xi. 28;) Nero; (Acts xxv. 8; Phil. iv. 22;) Caligula, who succeeded Tiberius, is not mentioned.

CAESAREA. A city on the coast of the Mediterranean, about fifty-five miles north-west from Jerusalem. Herod the Great rebuilt it with great splendour and strength, created an artificial harbour, and named it Cæsarea, in honour of the emperor Cæsar Augustus. This city was the seat of the Roman procurator, and after the destruction of Jerusalem became the capital of Palestine. It was subject to frequent commotions between the EES, Romans, and Jews, so that, on one occasion, 20,000 persons are said to have fallen in one day. Its ruins are very considerable, and present a desolate appearance; they have long been resorted to as a quarry whenever building materials were required at Acre. (Acts viii. 40; ix. 30; x. 1, 24; xi. 11; xii. 19; xvii. 22; xxi. 8, 16; xxii. 28, 33; xxv. 1, 4, 6, 13.) Napoleon Bonaparte, encamped here after raising the siege of Acre, and speaks of the broken fragments of marble and granite columns which surrounded him.

Cæsarea Philippi. A city of upper Galilee, situated at the easternmost source of the Jordan, at the foot of Mount Hermon. It was also called Panias, from the grotto, from which the Jordan issues, being dedicated to the heathen god Pan. It was made part of the territory of Philistia, tetrarch of Trachonitis, who enlarged and embellished it, and named it Cæsarea Philippi, in distinction from the Cæsarea of the sea coast. The plain toward the north-west, west, and south-west, is covered with columns, capitals, and foundations, bearing indubitable testimony to the size and magnificence of the ancient city. At present, the village Banias occupies the site of its ruins. (Matt. xvi. 13; Mark viii. 27.)

Caïaphas—depression. The high priest of the Jews at the time of our Saviour's trial. He was appointed by Valerius Gratus, the predecessor of Pilate, A.D. 26, and deposed by Vitellius about A.D. 35. Joseph Caïaphas married a daughter of Annas, who is also called high priest. After the resurrection of Lazarus, the chief-priests and the Pharisees summoned a council, when Caïaphas expressed his decided opinion in favour of putting Jesus to death. His language was—"Ye know nothing at all; nor consider that it is expedient for us that one man should die for the people, and that the whole nation perish not." The high priest's language on this occasion was prophetic, though he did not intend it so. He was a wicked man, but the Spirit of God inspired him to declare the divine purposes, and as he was high priest, all his declarations were clothed with authority. After Christ was arrested, he was taken before Annas, who sent him to his son-in-law, Caïaphas; but, as they had no power to inflict the punishment of death, He was taken to Pilate, the Roman governor, that his execution might be duly ordered. (Matt. xxvi. 57; Luke ii. 2; John xi. 47—53; xviii. 12—28; Acts iv. 6.)—See Annas.

Cain—acquired, a possession. 1. The eldest son of Adam and Eve, and the first-born among men. Cain was a tiller of the ground. He was also the first murderer, and the victim of his malice was his own brother Abel. He was instigated to this violence by envy; his brother's offering having been accepted by God, while his own was refused. The dreadful sentence was immediately passed upon him, which doomed him to fruitless toil, and to the life of a fugitive and vagabond. Thus was he exiled "from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of His power"—the visible symbol of Jehovah in connection with the cherubim at the gate of Eden, where man, after the fall, worshipped, under a mediatorial economy. The miserable man exclaimed, "My punishment is greater than I can bear," or as it may be rendered, "My sin is greater than can be forgiven." And he was afraid that when it was known what an abandoned outlaw he was he would be killed by any one that should find him. To prevent this, God not only threatened an extraordinary punishment upon any one who should kill him, but as we may suppose, he distinguished him from all other men by some visible sign or token, so that whoever met him should know at once who he was. Cain retired into the land of Nod = of the wanderer, on the east of Eden, where his family increased, and where he founded a city. Cain exhibited, says Dr. Magee, "the first-fruits of his parents' disobedience in the arrogance and self-sufficiency of reason. rejecting the aids of revelation, because they fell not within his apprehension of right. He takes the first place in the annals of Deism, and displays, in his proud rejection of the ordinance of sacrifice, the same spirit which, in later days, has actuated his enlightened followers, in rejecting the sacrifice of Christ.” (Gen. iv. 17, 24, 25; 2 Thess. i. 9; Heb. xi. 4; 1 John iii. 12; Jude 11.) 2. A town in Judah. (Josh. xv. 57.)

CAINAN = possession. 1. The son of Enoch. (Gen. v. 9–14; Luke iii. 37.) He is called “Kenan,” in 1 Chron. i. 2. 2. A son of Arphaxad, according to the Septuagint of Gen. x. 24; xi. 12. This name is not found in the genealogies preserved in the Hebrew Bible. (Gen. x. 24; xi. 12; 1 Chron. i. 24.) It occurs in the genealogy of Jesus Christ, in Luke iii. 35, 36, where, however, several manuscripts omit it.

CAKES.—See BREAD.

CALAH = aged. A city of Assyria, founded by Ashur. (Gen. x. 11, 12.) Col. Rawlinson reads the name of Calah on the bricks from Nimrud, and consequently identifies the ruins with the ancient Assyrian city. Others, with greater probability, identify the ruins of Kala Shergat, on the right bank of the Tigris, about forty miles to the southward of Nimrud, with Calah. The principal mound of Kala Shergat is one of the largest in Assyria, measuring in circumference 4685 yards, and in some places rising nearly 100 feet above the plain. “That it was,” says Mr. Layard, “one of the most ancient cities of Assyria, the identification of the name of the king, found on its monuments and bricks, with that on the centre bulls of Nimrud, will be sufficient to prove; but whether it be Calah, one of the four primitive cities, or the Ur of Abraham, I will not venture to determine.”

CALAMUS. An aromatic reed or grass, the calamus aromaticus, growing in central India. The stems are remarkable for their agreeable odour; so are the leaves when bruised, also the fragrant oil distilled from them. This fragrant grass-oil was imported by way of Arabia to Egypt and Tyre. (Ezek. xxvii. 19.) It was one of the ingredients in the holy oil of anointment. (Ex. xxx. 23; Sol. Song iv. 14.) The Hebrew meaning is also rendered “sweet cane.” (Isa. xlili. 24; Jer. vi. 30.) The sweet calamus is not mentioned among the ingredients from which the perfume for the Tabernacle was to be prepared. (Ex. xxx. 34.)

CALCOL = sustenance. A son of Zerah, noted for his wisdom. (1 Chron. ii. 6.) In 1 Kings iv. 31, he is called “Chalcol.”

CALEB = rabid. 1. A celebrated Hebrew warrior, of the tribe of Judah, in the time of the exodus; who, when sent together with Joshua and others to explore the land of Canaan, gave a faithful report of the goodness of the land. In reward for this, he was, with Joshua, exempted from the curse denounced upon the existing generation, was permitted to enter the land, and had Hebron given to him for an inheritance. (Josh. xvi. 6–13.) Caleb is thought to have survived Joshua. Caleb’s possessions were called by his name. (Num. xiii. and xiv.; Josh. xiv. and xv.; 1 Sam. xxx. 14.) 2. A son of Hezron. (1 Chron. ii. 18; xix. 42.) In 1 Chron. ii. 9, he is called “Chelubias.” 3. A son of Hur. (1 Chron. ii. 50.)

CALEB EPHRATAH = land or region of Caleb. A place in Judah. (1 Chron. ii. 24.)

The Calf- idol.

CALF. The “fatted calf” was regarded by the Hebrews as the choicest animal food. It was stall-fed, frequently with special reference to a particular festival or extraordinary sacrifice. (1 Sam. xxviii. 24; Am. iv. 4; Luke xv. 23.) The allusion in Jer. xxxiv. 18, 19, is to an ancient custom of ratifying a contract or covenant, in the observance of which an animal was slain and divided, and the parties passed between the parts, signifying their willingness to be so divided themselves, if they failed to perform their covenant. (Gen. xv. 9, 10, 17, 18.) The expression "calves of our lips," in Hos. xiv. 2, is figurative, signifying the fruits of our lips, i.e., the sacrifice of prayer and praise to God as the offering of our lips, instead of the animal sacrifice. (Heb. xii. 15.)

The "molten calf" was an idol set up and worshipped by the Hebrews at the foot of Mount Sinai, in their passage through the wilderness to Canaan. It was prepared by Aaron, at the request of the people, who had become impatient of the absence of Moses, and desired some symbolic image or representation of Jehovah. It was probably made of wood, fashioned with a graving tool, and thickly overlaid with molten gold. The image thus formed was undoubtedly derived from the Egyptian sacred calf or bull Mnevis, nourished and worshipped at Heliopolis, as that named Apis was worshipped at Memphis. As the bull-god Mnevis was kept at Heliopolis = the city of the sun, he was probably sacred to the sun and of a bright colour, hence the original type of the "molten calf" made by the Hebrews. In the same way Apis was probably sacred to the moon, and principally of a dark colour. (Ex. xxxii. 1-24; Deut. ix. 18-21; Ps. civ. 19-24; Acts vii. 40, 41; 1 Cor. x. 7-9.) The woodcut representing the calf-idol, with the disk of the sun between his horns, is from an ancient Egyptian monument in the British Museum. A strong evidence of the skill the Hebrews had acquired in Egypt is derived from the erection of the molten calf, and still more from the manner of its destruction. "Moses took the calf which they had made and burned it in the fire, and beat it (namely, the elements of the calf, externally gold and internally wood) until it was like as powder, and strewed it upon the water, and made the children of Israel drink of it." Those who work in metals are not ignorant, that in general, this operation is very difficult. An able French chemist supposed, that instead of tartaric acid which we use for such a process, Moses used arsenic, which is very common in the East, and particularly near the Nile.

What follows respecting Moses making the Hebrews drink this powder, proves that he knew perfectly well the whole force of its operation. He would aggravate the punishment of their disobedience. One could not invent a way which would render them more sensible of it: for gold made potable by such a process, is of a detestable taste. (M. Goguet's Orig. of Laws, Arts, etc., ii. 154.)—See NITRE.

The "golden calves" of Jeroboam were objects of worship set up by that king in the land of Israel, to prevent the ten tribes from resorting to Jerusalem to worship, and so more effectually to separate them from the house of David. The golden or gilded calves are supposed to have been designed as visible emblems of Jehovah. One of them was undoubtedly like the Mnevis, sacred to sun; and the other like the Apis, sacred to the moon, worshipped by the Egyptians, among whom Jeroboam had long dwelt in exile. One of the idols was in Dan and the other in Bethel, the two extremes of his kingdom. Temples were built, and altars erected for these images; priests were appointed from all the tribes without distinction, and the priestly functions performed even by the monarch himself. The calves continued to be a snare to the people of Israel until the captivity. (1 Kings xi. 40; xii. 26-33; 2 Chron. xi. 15; Hos. viii. 5, 6; x. 5; xiii. 2.)

CALLING. This word represents the gracious invitation of God to the benefits of the great salvation through Christ, either by the gospel, or by the operations of the Holy Spirit. The usage of the term in the Epistles seems to have been derived from the royal marriage feast, (Matt. xxvii. 1—14,) in which "we have," as Watson has well observed, "three descriptions of 'called' or invited persons:—First, the disobedient, who would not come in at the call, but made light of it. Second, the class of persons represented by the man who, when the king came in to see his guests, had not on the wedding garment; and with respect to whom our Lord makes the general remark, "For many are called, but few are chosen;" so that the persons thus represented by this individual culprit, were not only 'called,' but actually came into the company. Third, the approved guests; those who were both called and chosen. As far as the simple calling or invitation is concerned all three classes stood upon equal ground—"all were invited;" and it depended upon their choice and conduct, whether they embraced the invitation, and were admitted as guests. We have nothing here to counteract the notion of what is termed 'effectual calling.' This implies an irresistible influence exerted upon all the approved guests, but withheld from the disobedient, who could not, therefore, be otherwise than disobedient; or at most could only come in without that wedding garment, which it was never put into their power to take out of the king's wardrobe; and the want of which would necessarily exclude them, if not from the church on earth, yet from the church in heaven. The doctrine of Christ's parables is in entire contradiction to this notion of irresistible influence; for they who refused, and they who complied but partially with the calling, are represented, not merely as being left without the benefit of the feast, but as incurring additional guilt and condemnation for refusing the invitation." It is this general offer of salvation by the gospel, this invitation to the feast of spiritual and eternal benefits which explains the various passages in the Epistles, in which the term "calling" occurs. (Acts ii. 39; Rom. i. 5, 6; vii. 30; ix. 24; 1 Cor. i. 24; vii. 13; Eph. iv. 1—4; Gal. i. 6; 1 Thess. ii. 12—14; 1 Tim. i. 15; 2 Tim. i. 9.)

CALNEH = enclosed dwelling, or fortified place. One of the cities of Babylonia, built by Nimrod, (Gen. x. 10; Am. vi. 2,) and supposed to be the same with "Calno," (Isa. x. 9,) "Cannah," (Ezek. xxvii. 23,) and the Ctesiphon of more modern times. It was situated on the eastern bank of the Tigris, about eighteen miles below Baghdad. Some portion of the ruins of this ancient city still remain, consisting of a vast structure of fine brick, which is called, Tusk Karak—the Hall of Chosroes—and is believed to have been the palace of the Persian kings. "This is," says Mr. Ainsworth, "the only remnant, besides mounds of ruins, of the antique Ctesiphon; in jealousy, by the side of Selucia, and, not improbably, at or upon the remains, of the Calneh of earlier nations." Col. Chesney supposes the site of Calneh to have been at the extremity of the plain of Shinar, on the banks of the Chebar, near its confluence with the Euphrates, where are extensive heaps of ruins. But this was the site of Carchemish, a different place from Calneh.

CALNO.—See CALNEH.

CALVARY. This word, from the Latin Calvaria, signifies, like the Hebrew "Golgotha," place of skulls. It was the name of a place without the gate of Jerusalem, yet "nigh to the city," and was probably the place where malefactors were commonly executed. Here also Jesus was crucified. It is generally supposed to have been an eminence; hence the expression "Mount Calvary" has been adopted, almost without question, into every language of Christendom. Yet, in the new Testament, there is no hint that Calvary was in any sense a hillock. (Matt. xxvii. 33; Mark xv. 22; Luke xix. 33; John xix. 17, 20.) Neither Eusebius, nor Cyril, (except as made to say so by the Latin translators,) nor Jerome, nor the historians of the fourth and fifth centuries, speak of it as a Mount. The church, erected under the auspices of Constantine and his mother Helena, over the rock on which the cross was supposed to have stood, and which was held to be Golgotha, is now in the midst of the modern city.

And there can be no question, that the site of this building falls within the ancient city as described by Josephus. So also the intelligent travellers Korte, Dr. Durbin, and Van de Velde, have shown that the church of the Holy Sepulchre does not cover the ground of our Lord's crucifixion and tomb. Prof. Scholz, declares, that the place of the crucifixion cannot have been where it is now pointed out, because this spot must have been within the ancient city. Dr. Robinson, after a lengthened discussion on the site of the church of the Holy Sepulchre, observes, "Thus in every view which I have been able to take of the question, both topographical and historical, whether on the spot or in the close, and in spite of all my previous prepossessions, I am led irresistibly to the conclusion, that the Golgotha and the tomb now shown in the church of the Holy Sepulchre, are not upon the real places of the crucifixion and resurrection of our Lord. The alleged discovery of them by the aged and credulous Helena, like her discovery of the cross, may not improbably have been the work of pious fraud. It would perhaps not be doing injustice to the bishop, Macarius and his clergy, if we regard the whole as a well laid and successful plan, for restoring to Jerusalem its former consideration, and elevating his see to a higher degree of influence and dignity. If it be asked, where then are the true sites of Golgotha and the sepulchre to be sought? I must reply, that probably all search can only be in vain. We know nothing more from the Scriptures, than that they were near each other, without the gate and nigh to the city, in a frequented spot. This would favour the conclusion, that the place was probably upon a great road leading from one of the gates; and such a spot would only be found upon the western or northern sides of the city, on the roads leading towards Joppa or Damascus." After a second visit to the Holy City, and carefully subjecting the entire ground to a fresh examination, and having also weighed the statements and hypotheses of recent writers, Dr. Robinson says he has not found anything to lead him to any important change in the views of the topography of Jerusalem, expressed in his Biblical Researches. (Brit. Researches, ii. 64—80; Biblioth. Sacra 154—202, 1843; x. 120, 1853.)

CAMEL. This animal so common in the East, is placed by Moses among unclean creatures. (Lev. xi. 4; Deut. xiv. 7.) The Arabian camel, or dromedary, and the Bactrian camel are the species mentioned in the Scriptures. The Arabian camel is distinguished by having only one protuberance on the back. Its general height, measured from the top of the dorsal bunch to the ground, is about six feet and a half. Though of a heavy, and apparently unwieldy, form, this animal moves with considerable speed, and with a bale of goods on its back, it will travel at the rate of thirty miles a day. This species, also termed the "dromedary," is remarkable for its uncommon swiftness. (Jer. ii. 23.) The Bactrian camel is distinguished from the Arabian, or dromedary, by having two protuberances on its back; it is not so numerous as the other, and is chiefly confined to some parts of Asia. Camels are admirably adapted to desert regions which are their home. They are the carriers of the East, "the ships of the desert." Their long, slow, rolling, or rocking gait, although not at first very unpleasant, becomes exceedingly fatiguing to a stranger. Their well-known habit of lying down upon the breast to receive their burdens, is an admirable adaptation of their nature to their destiny as carriers. Hardly less wonderful is the adaptation of their broad-cushioned foot to the arid sands and gravelly soil, which it is their lot chiefly to traverse. So few are the wants of their nature, that their power.
of going without food as well as without water, is wonderful. The dew, and the juice of grass and herbs, are sufficient for them in ordinary cases; though when the pastures have become dry, the Arabs water their flocks every two days, and the camels every three.

"The longest trial," says Dr. Robinson, "to which we subjected our camels in respect to water, was, from Cairo to Suez, four days; (they had been fed in Cairo with green clover; and had not drank, it was said, for twelve days before our departure;) yet some of them did not drink even then, although they had only the driest fodder. But at all times the camel eats and drinks little, and secretes little; he is a cold-blooded, heavy, sullen animal, having little feeling and little susceptibility for pain. Thistles and briars and thorns he crops and chews with more avidity than the softest green fodder; nor does he seem to feel pain from blows or pricks, unless they are very violent. I was surprised to find them travelling with so much ease and safety, up and down the most rugged mountain-passes. They do not choose their way with the like eagerness as the mule, or even as the horse; but they tread much more surely and safely, and never either slip or stumble. In all our long journeys with them, I do not recollect a single instance; and yet no roads can be worse than the passes in going and returning between Hepron and Wady Musa.

Camels were formerly among the chief possessions of the wealthy. The flesh and milk are used for food; and the dung is used for fuel. (Gen. xii. 16; xxx. 35; xxxvii. 25; Judg. vi. 5; vii. 12; 1 Sam. xxx. 17; 1 Kings x. 2; 1 Chron. v. 21; 2 Chron. xiv. 15; Job i. 3; xlii. 13; Is. xxi. 7; xxx. 6; ix. 6.) The hair of the camel is short, and softer than that of the ox; the finest and softest part is sometimes wrought into a beautiful fabric, and forms a rich and luxurious article of dress. A coarser kind was used for the covering of tents, and for the upper garments of shepherds and camel drivers.

John the Baptist, and the Hebrew prophets, appear to have worn garments of this material: hence, instead of "haired man," it should be "a man dressed in hair." The ancient "sackcloth" seems to have been the same material. (2 Kings i. 8; Matt. iii. 4; xi. 8; Mark i. 6; Luke vii. 25; Zech. xiii. 4; Is. i. 3; Rev. vi. 12; xi. 3.)

The proverbial expression in Matt. xix. 24, "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God," was used to denote a thing very unusual or impossible. Our Lord employed it, to show how extremely difficult it is for a rich man to forsake all, for his cause, and obtain the blessings of salvation. (Mark x. 24, 25.) Some would read, instead of ἄκολον—camel, Ἰωάτιον—a cable, rope; or take ἄκολον in that sense. (Luke xvi. 30; Prov. xi. 28; 1 Cor. i. 26; 1 Tim. vi. 9, 10.) Another proverbial expression occurs in Matt. xxiii. 24: "Ye blind guides, which strain at a gnat, and swallow a camel." The Greek word ἐκτόνος, translated "strain at," properly means "strain out," and so it is rendered in the early English versions. The word "at" was evidently substituted for "out," by a typographical error in the authorised version of 1611, and has been regularly continued since.

The allusion is to the custom of filtering wines by passing them through a strainer; hence, to make the antithesis as strong as possible, two things are selected, the smallest insect and the largest animal. The expression is applied to those, who are formal and diligent in the observance of lesser duties, but negligent in the discharge of higher ones.

CAMEL'S HAIR.—See CAMEL.

CAMON = full of stalks. A place in Gilead, where Jair was buried. (Judg. xx. 15.)

CAMP, or ENCAMPMENT. These terms are frequently used in reference to the movements of the Hebrews in their journey from Egypt to Canaan, and many passages in the Levitical law relate to things that are to be done within or without the camp. (Num. v.
1—4; Deut. xxiii. 10—14; Heb. xiii. 11—13.) In Egypt, Moses became acquainted with that mode of encamping which Jehovah prescribed to the Hebrews in Num. ii. 1—34. The tabernacle, which was the tent or palace of Jehovah, occupied the centre of the camp. The tents nearest to the tabernacle, were those of the Levites, who were the palace guards. The family of Gershom pitched to the west, that of Kohath to the south, that of Merari to the north. The priests, who were the state officers, occupied a position to the east, opposite to the entrance of the tabernacle. (Num. i. 53; iii. 21—33.) At some distance to the east, were the tribes of Judah, Issachar, and Zebulun; on the south were those of Reuben, Simeon, and Gad; to the west were Ephraim, Manasseh, and Benjamin; to the north, Dan, Asher, and Naphtali. The people were thus divided into four divisions, three tribes to each; every division having its separate standard. Each of the large family associations likewise, of which the different tribes were composed, had a separate standard, distinct from the other; and every Hebrew was obliged to number himself with his particular division, and follow his appropriate standard. There were six hundred thousand men of the Hebrews above twenty years of age, who left Egypt on foot. (Ex. xii. 37, 38.) A year later the number is given at six hundred and three thousand, five hundred and fifty. (Num. i. 2, 3, 45, 46.) There must of course have been as many women above twenty years old; and at least an equal number both of males and females under the same age; besides “the mixed multitude,” and very much cattle. The whole number probably amounted to two and a half millions. There appears to have been, according to Dr. Robinson’s arrangement of the several lists of stations, as enumerated in the Books of Exodus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy, fifty four encampments of the Hebrews, from their departure out of Egypt until their arrival over against Jericho. The Hebrews broke up from their rendezvous at Rameses “on the fifteenth day of the first month, on the morrow after the passover.”

I. From Egypt to Sinai.

From Rameses to I, Succoth; 2, Etham; 3, Pihahiroth; 4, Passage through the Red Sea; and three days march into the desert of Shur, or Etham; 5, Marah; 6, Elim; 7, Encampment by the Red Sea; 8, Desert of Sin; 9, Dophkah; 10, Alush; 11, Rephidim; 12, Desert of Sinai. (Ex. xii. 37; xiii. 20; xiv. 2, 22; xv. 22, 23; 27; xvi. 1; xvii. 1; xix. 1; Num. xxxi. 3—15.) The Hebrews broke up from Sinai on the twentieth day of the second month, corresponding to our May, in the second year of their departure out of Egypt; they came unto the desert of Paran, whence spies were sent up the mountains into Palestine.

II. From Sinai to Kadesh.

From the Desert of Sinai to 13, Taberah; 14, Kibroth-hattaavah; 15, Hazeroth; 16, Kadesh in the desert of Paran. (Num. x. 12; xi. 3, 24, 35; xii. 16; xiii. 28; xxxiii. 16, 17; Deut. ix. 22.) The spies returned in August, after forty days, to the camp at Kadesh; (Num. xiii. 23—26;) and the people murmuring at their report received the sentence from Jehovah, that their carcases should fall in the wilderness, and their children wander in the desert forty years. They were ordered to turn back into the desert “by the way of the Red Sea;” where they wandered thirty-eight years, and then returned to Kadesh. (Num. xiv. 45; Deut. i. 40, 46.)

III. From Kadesh to Kadesh the second time.

From Kadesh to 17, Bethgnah; 18, Rimmon-pares; 19, Libnah; 20, Rizah; 21, Kehelathah; 22, Mount Seiph; 23, Haradah; 24, Makheloth; 25, Tahath; 26, Tarah; 27, Mithkah; 28, Hashmonah; 29, Moseroth; 30, Bene-jaakan; 31, Hor-hagidgd; 32, Jotbathah; 33, Elronah; 34, Ezion-geber; 35, Return to Kadesh. (Num. xx. 1; xxxiii. 18, 36.) The eighteen stations here mentioned as preceding the arrival at Kadesh the second time are apparently to be referred to the thirty-eight years of wandering over the western desert. (Num. xxi. 4—39; xxxiii. 37, 38; Deut. ii. 8; xiii. 14.)

IV. From Kadesh to the Jordan.

From Kadesh to 88, Beeroth Bene-jakan; 37, Mount Hor, or Moses, where Aaron died; 38, Gudgodah; 39, Jothath; 40, Way of the Red Sea, by Edath and Ezion-gaber; 41, Zalmonah; 42, Punon; 43, Oboth; 44, Idbahim, or Himm; 45, The brook Zered; 46, The brook Arnon; 47, Dibongad; 48, Almon-diblahain; 49, Beer (well in the desert); 50, Mathanah; 51, Nahaliel; 52, Bamoth; 53, Pisgah, put for the range of Abarim, of which Pisgah was part; 54, By the way of Bashan to the plains of Moab by the Jordan, near Jericho. (Num. xx. 22; xxi. 4—33; xxxi. 1; xxxii. 8—48; Deut. ii. 8, 13, 14, 24; x. 6, 7.)

The stations enumerated were probably the head quarters where the tabernacle was pitched, and where Moses and the elders and priests encamped; while the main body of the people was scattered over the desert in various directions. "How in these wild deserts," says Dr. Robinson, a traveller who himself paid particular attention to the route of the Hebrews, "this host of more than two millions of souls, having no traffic nor intercourse with the surrounding hordes, could find supplies of food and water sufficient for their support, without a constant miracle, I for one am unable to divine. Yet among them we read only of occasional longings and complaints; while the tribes that now roam over the same regions, although numbering scarcely as many thousands, are exposed to famine and privation of every kind; and at the best obtain only a meagre and precarious subsistence."—See Exodus, and Rand Sela.

CAMPHIRE. This is not the canpfer of the apothecaries, but a plant much esteemed in the East for the delightful fragrance of its flowers. It is called in Hebrew copher, rendered in the margin of our version, "cypresse." (Sol. Song, i. 14; iv. 18.) This beautiful plant is the Lauretanae turmis, and is called al-henna by the Arabs. It grows in many places both in Palestine and in Egypt, and is sometimes six feet in height. Sommni says, "the somewhat dark colour of its bark, the light-green hue of its leaves, the soft mingling of white and yellow with which the flowers, hanging together in long clusters, are coloured, the red dye of the branches which bear them—make a whole of which the effect is very pleasing." The leaves of the al-henna plant when pulverised, make a beautiful orange dye, with which the females of the East dye the palms of their hands, and their finger nails, and occasionally their lips. The original expression rendered, "pare her nails," (Deut. xxi. 12) may rather mean, "adorns her nails." The ancient Egyptians seem to have been in the habit of dyeing their nails, as the nails of the mummies are most commonly of a reddish or orange hue.

CANA = place of reeds. A city in Galilee, in which our Lord performed his first miracle. It is now called Kana el-Jeliel—Cana of Galilee, and is situated on the northern side of the plain el-Buttaraf, about N. ½. from Nazareth, and not far from nine miles distant. The remains are those of a large village with well built houses, but without any special marks of antiquity. It is sometimes called Khierbet Kasa. (John, ii. 1, 11; iv. 46; xx. 2.)

CANAAN = low, depressed, or marshy. The son of Ham and grandson of Noah. The eleven sons of Canaan were the fathers of several tribes dwelling in Palestine and Syria. (Gen. x. 15—19.) Ham having been guilty of criminal conduct towards his father, a prophetic curse was pronounced by Noah on so much of Ham's posterity as should descend from and through Canaan. (Gen. ix. 25—27.) This prediction was fulfilled in the subjugation of the Canaanitish races to the Hebrews, who were the descendants of Shem. Part of the seven nations of the Canaanites were subjected by the Hebrews, when they took possession of their land; and the remainder by David and Solomon. (2 Sam. viii. 11, 12; 2 Chron. viii. 7, 8.)—See Canaanites.

Canaan, Land of. The region peopled by Canaan and his posterity, and afterwards given to the Hebrews, has, at different periods, been called by different names.—1. "The Land of Canaan"—low region, in distinction from the high region of Aram or Syria. (Gen. x. 19; xii. 5; Num. xxxii. 5.) The Phœnicians, dwelling at the foot of Lebanon, called themselves Canaeans on coins; and the Carthaginians, a colony of the Phœnicians, called themselves Chanaani.—Canaanites. This name also occurs in hieroglyphics on the ancient Egyptian monuments:

\[
\text{Kanana}
\]

that is, Canaan: the two last signs signify barbarian country. 2. "The Land of Promise," from the promise given to Abraham, that his posterity should possess it. (Gen. xii. 7; xiii. 15; Heb. xi. 9.) 3. "The Land of the Hebrews," from the Hebrews, the descendants of Abraham. (Gen. xii. 2.) 4. "The Land of Israel," from the Israelites, or posterity of Jacob. (1 Sam. xiii. 19.) 5. "The Land of Jehovah," specially for the kingdom of Judah, after the separation of the ten tribes, and the foundation of the kingdom of Israel. Hence, after the exile, the whole country was called "Judaea." (Jer. xxxix. 10; Matt. ii. 1.) 6. "The Holy Land." (Zech. ii. 12.) 7. "The Lord's Land," or the "Land of Jehovah;" (Hos. ix. 10; and "Immanuel's Land." (Isa. viii. 3.) 8. "Palestine," or Palestine, from the Philistines. (Ex. xv. 14.) By other writers, the Holy Land has been variously termed, "Syrian-Palestine," "Syria," and "Phœnicia."

This comparatively small region, so famous in the history of the world, is situated between 30° 40' and 35° 32' of north latitude, and between 33° 45' of east longitude in the south-west, and 35° 48' in the north-east; but the angle which extended eastward from Hermon to Salcbah, including the districts of Argoeb and Bashan, of Gilead, and the country south-westward to the river Armon, reached to 36° 44' of east longitude. This includes the territory on the east of the Jordan, which was as much in the occupation of the Hebrews as that on the west of the river. According to this view, the Land of Canaan was bounded on the south by the territory of Edom south of Kadesh-barnes, the wilderness of Zin, and the Mediterranean Sea. The western boundary was the Mediterranean Sea. The northern boundary extended from a point south of Sidon to "Mount Hermon," properly the "great Mountain"—Lebanon; and crossing the narrow valley (called "the entering in of Hamath") which leads into a plain enclosed between Lebanon and Anti-Lebanon terminated at Mount Hermon. The eastern boundary extended in an angular direction from Hermon to Salcbah, thence south-westward to the Armon. (Num. xxxiv. 1—15; Deut. iii. 8—16; Josh. xii. 5; xiii. 16—21.) It will thus be seen that the expression "from Dan even to Beersheba," does not denote the exact limits of the land, but rather two well-known points towards its northern and southern extremities. According to this view, the extreme length of the land of Canaan was about 210 English miles, and its average breadth about 75 miles, and excluding the three lakes, embraced an area of about 15,370 square miles. But the real surface was much greater than this estimate would imply; for Canaan being a hilly region, the slopes of the mountains and hills enlarge the actual surface to an extent which does not admit of calculation. But the assurance frequently given was that the Land of Promise should extend from the Mediterranean to the Euphrates. (Gen. xv. 18; Ex. xxiii. 31; Deut. xi. 24.) And in the time of David and Solomon the possessions of the Hebrews were extended by conquest to the Euphrates and the Orontes on the one hand, and to the remotest confines of Edom on the Red Sea, and of Moab on the other, including in all perhaps not less than 30,000 square miles. (1 Kings iv. 21. 1 Chron. v. 9, 14, 19; xiii. 1-7; xix. 1-19; 2 Chron. viii. 2—8.) At the time the Hebrews took possession of Canaan, it was governed by petty kings, of various cities or provinces, which were for the most part, subdued after a succession of severe struggles, and the territory was divided among the tribes and families according to their numbers. (Num. xxxiii. 51—56.) Then Joshua became ruler. After Joshua, for a few years, the government was administered by elders; then came the judges. And then the kings for about five hundred and eight years. The vast resources of the Land of Canaan, and the power of its kings, may be estimated in some measure, not only from the consideration with which it was regarded by Egypt, Tyre, and Assyria, but by the strength and population of the kingdom into which the original country, as it was under David, was subsequently divided. In the reign of Solomon, the land was distributed into twelve provinces; (1 Kings iv. 7—19;) and upon the accession of Rehoboam to the throne, it was divided into the two kingdoms of Israel and Judah. After this period, it fell into the hands of the Babylonians, the Greeks, the Syrians, and the Romans. During the time of our Saviour it was under the dominion of the last-mentioned people, and was divided into five provinces, viz., Galilee, Samaria, Judea, Perea, and Idumea. Perea was again divided into seven cantons, viz., Abilene, Trachonitis, Iturea, Golanitis, Batanitis, Perea, and Decapolis. The surface of the land of Canaan is beautifully diversified with mountains and plains, rivers and valleys. The mountains chiefly consist of a kind of chalk, considerably indurated, and approaching to whitish compact limestone. Some of this so-called white limestone from the neighbourhood of Jerusalem, we have ourselves examined. Besides this indurated chalk, in which layers and masses of flint occur, there are in the neighbourhood of Canaan, rocks having a basaltic appearance. Like all calcareous districts, there are in the rocks numerous caverns. As to the fertility of the country it was indeed "a land flowing with milk and honey." Not only were the valleys and plains exceedingly fertile, and in the season of vegetation overspread with the richest verdure, but the hills, from their bases to their utmost summits, were terraced and covered with soil, and overspread with plantations of figs, vines, olive trees, and gardens, everywhere ministering to the sustenance of human life, and capable of sustaining a large population. But at the present day this beautiful country lies almost desolate; the miserable condition of the inhabitants and the desolations of war have prevented any proper cultivation of the soil, so that large tracts, which require only tillage to become exceedingly fertile, now exhibit only the appearance of sterility. Nevertheless, the soil of this region, even now, after the waste and exhaustion of 4000 years is of surprising fertility, and only waits, with the life pent up in its bosom, till cultivation shall wake it into the luxuriance of old. The recent traveller, Lieut. Van De Velde, was struck by the evident tokens everywhere of long-restrained and dormant fertility. "The land is still a land of milk and honey. Folded into the unseen recesses of Carmel, where there is scarcely an eye to look on it, the soil is lavish of the richest vegetation, matted plants and flowers; and everywhere the same seeming fruitfulness, peeps through the uncultivated waste, which notwithstanding is a barren waste." However, any practical attempt to restore this "pleasant land" to its former prosperity must be based on agriculture. Dr. Olin, after careful enquiry and examination, observes, "There is now really no basis for any extention of commerce, and a colony of tradesmen, such, for instance, as the return of the Jews would give the country, would only increase its poverty and wretchedness. The Duke of Ragusa advised Muhammad Aly to make Palestine and Syria an immense sheep-walk; and this should probably be the first object of a colony here. Every part of the country is adapted to this business, and wool to a vast amount might be raised for exportation, with little expense beyond that of multiplying the race of sheep, and shearing their fleeces. They live well throughout the year upon the natural pastures. Large additional tracts might also be tilled in wheat, with no greater labour of preparation and improvement than that of turning up the soil with the plough. The product of cotton and tobacco, which are already articles of export, might be doubled or trebled at once. Plantations of vines, olive, and fig, and other fruit-bearing trees would require more time and return slower profits; but they would be indispensable to the complete renovation of the country, and the full development of its resources.” That cultivation would cause this “goodly land” to spread forth its riches, all recent travellers agree. Dr. Robinson, in 1852, found the hill-country of Galilee yielding crops which indicated a productivity equal to all that Josephus has said of it. And the industrial settlement of Germans recently established south of Bethlehem, report that they raise two crops in a year. Their grapes almost rival the clusters of Escol, a single vine having 100 bunches of grapes, each three feet long, and each grape three and a half inches in circumference. They have Indian corn eleven feet high, watermelons of twenty, thirty, forty pounds weight, and bean pods thirteen inches long, and six on each stem. Their quince-trees yield 400 quinces each, which are very large; and a single citron-tree yields 510 pounds of fruit. This country which had the harvests of temperate regions, and the rivers and shores of southern latitudes, thus uniting the phenomena of summer and winter; and lying at the point of connection between the eastern and western world, was also fitted to be a centre of moral influence, radiating the light of Divine revelation on every side, in a literature equally adapted to every people and climate. But the grand distinction of Canaan is, that it was the only part of the earth made, by divine institution, a type of heaven. (Gen. xxiii. 4; Heb. iv. 3—11; xi. 8—16.) Information on the various subjects of the names, divisions, mineralogy, mountains, plains and valleys, rivers, lakes, climate and seasons, will be found in various parts of this work.

CANAANITE.—See ZELOTES.

CANAANITES—low-landers, merchants. This name was specially applied to the inhabitants of the lower or depressed parts of the country near the sea, or along the Jordan, in opposition to the inhabitants of the uplands or mountains. (Num. xiii. 20; Josh. xi. 3; Gen. xiii. 7; xv. 20; Ex. iii. 8, 17; xxxiii. 2; xxxiv. 11.) Some of the descendants of Canaan had settled in this region before the time of Abraham, but the most of them were wandering nomades, having no permanent possessions. Even Jacob, 200 years later, ranged with his flocks at large over the land. (Gen. xii. 6; xiii. 7; xxxvii. 14.) Subsequently the Canaanites multiplied extremely, and were distinguished in trade and war. They were, as appears from the ancient monuments, occasionally engaged in war with the Egyptians. The woodcut is a representation of an armed Zidonian and a Zuzim, from the monuments of Egypt. The principal tribes which constituted the seven nations of Canaan, were the Hivites, the Canaanites, the Girgasites, the Jebusites, the Amorites, the Hittites, and the Perizzites. (Gen. x. 15—19; Acts, iii. 19.) Other Canaanitic tribes, as the Arkites, Arvadites, and Hamathites, dwelt in the northern part of the country. During the sojourn of the Hebrews in Egypt several of the Canaanitic tribes had taken possession of the whole of the country destined for the Hebrews, and established several small kingdoms. They had appropriated to their own use the pasture grounds occupied by Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and exploited from their possessions those Hebrews who had occasionally visited Canaan during their residence in Egypt. (1 Chron. vii. 20—22.) These usurpers of the Hebrew lands, wells, and cisterns, were a perfidious race, who paid little regard to treaties; and their descendants were no better. Their morals were corrupt in the extreme; and their shocking idolatry, which was high treasur'd in the land of Jehovah, had taken such deep root that it could not be eradicated. Hence the expulsion of the Canaanites from the land of promise was an act perfectly defensible, and consistent with the strictest principles of justice. They had been long sealed, and repeatedly warned by partial judgments, and reproved by the faithful (Lev. xviii. 24—30.) And lest those nations should corrupt the Hebrews, who were the sole depositaries of the knowledge of the true God, it was enacted by Jehovah that they should not tolerate them as allies or neighbours, nor even as subjects or slaves; but should cut off unmercifully all who fell into their hands, and in this manner warn the others to flee from the land where Jehovah was king. (Ex. xxiii. 32, 33; xxxiv. 12—16; Deut. vii. 1—13; xx. 16—19.) The decree of extermination must be understood as implying that the Canaanites might leave the country in peace if they choose. Many betook themselves to flight, and settled colonies over almost all the islands and coasts of the Mediterranean. They even planted colonies in Africa. Some were celebrated as merchants; hence the Hebrew term Canaan for “merchant.” (Job. xli. 6; Prov. xxxi. 24; Isa. xxii. 6; Ezek. xvii. 4; Hos. xii. 7; Zeph. i. 11.) No city except Gibeah sought peace, and the remaining tribes were mostly subdued by arms. (Josh. xi. 19.) The Hebrews, however, formed alliances with some; (Judg. i. 3—23;) and even David not only permitted the remains of the Canaanites to live, but he promoted them to high stations in his army. (2 Sam. xxiii. 39.)

CANDACE — royal authority! A queen of Ethiopia, whose treasurer was converted by Phillip. (Acts viii. 27.) Candace, or properly Kandake, was a name or title common to the queens of Ethiopia Superior or Merose, like Pharaoh in Egypt, and Cesar at Rome. Dr. Lepsius, in his recent journey, saw on the monuments near Begerauchen, in Ethiopia, the name of this queen, written in hieroglyphics:

The two latter signs are determinative of the gender, and show that it is the name of a queen.

CANDLESTICK. The Hebrew and Greek words rendered "candlestick," properly designate a candelabrum, or lamp-bearer. The candelstick or lamp-bearer, made by Moses for the tabernacle, was wholly of pure gold, and weighed a talent, about 125 pounds troy weight; (Ex. xxxvii. 24;) although as Josephus informs us it was hollow within. This magnificent lamp-bearer, is said by the Jewish Rabbins, to have stood three cubits = five feet three inches from the ground, and the breadth, or the space between the exterior branches, two cubits = three feet six inches. It consisted of a base and stem with seven branches, three on each side, and one in the middle. These branches were all parallel to one another, and were worked out in knob, flowers, and bowls, placed alternately. On the extremities of the branches were seven golden lamps, one on each branch. The lamps were kept burning perpetually, and were supplied morning and evening with pure olive oil. (Ex. xxv. 31—40; xxvii. 20; xxx. 7, 8; Lev. xxiv. 2, 4.) The golden lamp-stand was placed in the first apartment of the tabernacle, on the south side, so as to throw light on the altar of incense and on the table of the shew-bread, occupying the same apartment. This candelstick, with the other sacred utensils, was transferred to the temple, and became a prey to the Chaldeans. A new one was made for the second temple, having doubtless a general resemblance to the former one, which fell to the Romans on the overthrow of Jerusalem. This golden candelstick, the table of shew-bread, the purple veil of the sanctuary, and the copy of the law, with the other spoils of the temple, were paraded in triumph through the city of Rome. After the triumph, the candelstick and the golden table were lodged in Vespasian’s temple of Peace; but the copy of the law and the purple veil were deposited in the imperial palace. (Jos. Ant. vii. 5. 7.) When Genersic sacked Rome, A.D. 455, it is said that he took the sacred trophies to Carthage; afterwards Gelarius, in his conquest of Africa, A.D. 533, recovered them, and transplanted them to Constantinople; and by a strange vicissitude they were again transferred to Jerusalem. How they finally disappeared no one knows; some suspect they were carried to Persia by Chosroes, A.D. 641, but there are doubts whether the ship in which they were embarked ever reached its destination. The most representative of the golden lamp-bearer is that which still exists on the Arch of Titus at Rome; but the base, as there represented, has figures of birds and marine monsters, which we certainly should not expect to find on an utensil consecrated to the service of Jehovah. In the woodcut, which is a copy from the mutilated remains on the Arch of Titus, we have left off the figures on the base; and have given an ancient lamp, which may have been the form of those which stood upon the candelstick. The “seven candelsticks” or lamp-bearers, in Rev. i. 12, are the symbols of the seven Asiatic churches. In Rev. xi. 4, the “the two candelsticks,” symbolise a competent number of divinely commissioned and faithful Christian witnesses,” during the last days of the Jewish commonwealth.

CANE.—See CALAMUS, and REED.
CANKER-WORM.—See LOUST.
CANNABIN.—See CANNABIS.
CAPERNAUM.—Nathaniel’s village, or village of consolation. A town or city which lay on that part of the western shore of the lake of Tiberias, known as the region of Gennesaret. It was for a time the residence of Jesus, and was much frequented by him; hence it is called “his own city.” (Matt. iv. 13; ix. 1; Mark, ii. 4.) Here Jesus delivered some of his most pointed discourses, and wrought some of his most wonderful works. (Mark i. 21, 37; ii. 1—28; John vi. 25—70; Isa. ix. 1, 2.) Notwithstanding it was thus highly favoured with the presence and instructions of the Lord of glory, it was the subject of the most fearful denunciations. (Matt. xi. 20—24.) The site of Capernaum, is supposed by Dr. Robinson, to have been at Khew-Minayk, where there is a mound with rais, and a fountain called Ain et Tin.
CAP

CAPHTOR = a crown, chaplet, crevet. A region on the sea coast, or rather an island. (Jer. xlvii. 4.) Some understand, the island of Cyprus to be designated. As the Philistines are called “Cretans,” it is perhaps better to understand the island of Crete. The Caphtorim are described as a colony of the Egyptians and as ancestors of the Philistines. (Gen. x. 14; Deut. ii. 23; Jer. xlvii. 4; Am. ix. 7.)
CAPHTORIM.—See CAPHTOR.
CAPPADOCIA. A province of Asia Minor, bounded N. by Pontus, W. by Lycaonia, S. by Cilicia, and E. by Syria and Armenia Minor. Ptolemy derives the name from a river, Cappadoc. This region was celebrated for the production of wheat, and for its fine cattle. The Cappadocians were called Leuco-Syri = White Syrians, in opposition to those who lived south of the mountains, and more exposed to the sun. They were notorious for their dulness and vice. Cappadocia was also placed first in the proverb which cautioned against the three K’s—Kappadocia, Thrace, and Crete. Christianity was introduced into this province at an early period. (Acts ii. 9; I Peter i. 1.)
CAPTAIN. An officer in the Hebrew army whose rank or power was designated by the number of men under his command, as captain of fifty, or captain of a thousand; and the commander, or chief of the whole army was called “the captain of the host.” Sometimes distinguished men who were not Hebrews were promoted to high stations in the army. (Deut. i. 15; I Chron. xiii. 1; II Chron. xxv. 5; 2 Sam. xxvii. 39.) “Captain of the temple” is a title applied to the chief-officers of the priests and Levites who kept guard in and around the temple; one of whom perhaps held the chief command. These captains, however, were not military but civil officers; they also acted as protectors and curators of the temple, generally. (Luke xxii. 4, 52; Acts iv. 1; v. 26; 1 Chron. ix. 11; 2 Chron. xxx. 13; xxxv. 8, 9; Jer. xx. 1.)—See BAND.
CAPTIVES. Various indignities and cruelties were inflicted on those who had the misfortune to be taken prisoners in war. The victors trampled upon captured kings and nobles; (Josh. x. 24; Is. ii. 2;) or mutilated their persons by cutting off their thumbs, toes, or ears; (Judg. i. 7; 2 Sam. iv. 12; Ezek. xxiii. 25;) and sometimes, they suspended their unhappy captives by the hand. (I Sam. v. 12.) Sometimes their chiefs were dragged with a hook or bridle put through their lip, and had their eyes thrust out with the point of a spear. (Judg. xvi. 21; 2 Kings xv. 7.) Others, again, were thrown amongst thorns, were sawn asunder, beaten to pieces with threshing instruments, or had imposed upon them the severest and most laborious occupations. (Judg. vii. 7; 2 Sam. xii. 19; 1 Chron. xx. 3.) When the city was taken by assault, all the men were slain; or were, with the women and children, sold into servitude; (Is. xx. 3, 4; xliv. 3; 2 Chron. xviii. 9—15; 1 Par. xiv. 12; Mic. i. 11; Joel iii. 3;) or were transplanted to distant countries. (2 Kings xvii. 24; xxiv. 12—17.) Women and children were also exposed to treatment at which humanity shudders, (Nah. iii. 5, 6; Zech. xiv. 2; Est. iii. 18; 2 Kings viii. 12; Ps. cxxxvii. 9; Isa. xiii. 18, 18; 2 Kings xv. 16; Hosea. xiii. 16; Am. i. 13.) In some instances the victors permitted the conquered kings to retain their authority, only requiring of them the promise of good faith, and the payment of tribute. But if in such a case they rebelled, they were treated with the greatest severity. (Gen. iv. 4—11; 2 Kings xxii. 34; xxiv. 1—4; Isa xxiv. 2; Jer. xx. 5, 6.) The Assyrian monuments frequently exhibit captives, sometimes suffering horrid enormities and indignities. The woodcuts are from two of the monuments from Nimrud, now in the British Museum. —See Triumph.
CAP

Captivity. CAPTIVITY. This term, in the history of the Hebrews, sometimes denotes subjugation or servitude; (Num. xxii. 29;) but usually it designates ex-\text{p}r\text{i}st\text{a}\text{tion}. The captivity or rather the servitude, of the Hebrews in Egypt, from B.C. 1706 to 1492, was evidently a permission of Providence, in order to prepare them by a special training, “in all the wisdom of the Egyptians,” for becoming a distinguished nation, and the conservators of the true religion. On account of their defection from Jehovah their king, the Hebrews, during the period of the judges, were repeatedly subjugated by their enemies; but when they returned to their allegiance they were delivered from foreign oppression. —See Judges.

Captivities of Israel. From the name of “Jehu, the son, i.e. successor, of Khumri,” (Omri,) occurring on the obelisk now in the British Museum, it would appear that the kingdom of Israel had been rendered tributary to the Assyrians, as early as B.C. 880, or perhaps earlier. The Assyrian monuments state that whenever an expedition was undertaken against the Hebrew kings, it was on the ground that they had refused to pay the customary tribute. The same statement is made by the Hebrew historian. (2 Kings xvi. 7; xvii. 4.) About B.C. 770, Pul, the king of Assyria, invaded the kingdom of Israel, in the reign of Menahem, whose name occurs on the monuments as one of the tributaries of the Assyrian king. (2 Kings xv. 19, 20.) About 739 B.C., Tiglath-Pileser, king of Assyria, made an inroad upon the regions around the northern and eastern parts of the Lake of Tiberias, “and took Ijon, and Abel-beth-\text{maa\text{-}}chah, and Ianoah, and Kedesh, and Hazor, and Gilgal and Galilee, all the land of Naphtali, and carried them captive to Assyria.” (2 Kings xv. 29; 1 Chron. v. 26; Isa. ix. 1.) About 721 B.C., Shalmaneser, king of Assyria, took Samaria, and carried the principal part of the population away into Assyria and Media. (2 Kings xvii. 6; xviii. 9—11.) An inscription on one of Assyrian monuments describes 27,280 Israelites as having been carried into captivity from Samaria. Their places were supplied by foreign colonists, chiefly from Babylonia. (2 Kings xvii. 24.) After the overthrow of the kingdom, the large body of the Israelites still inhabiting Galilee, and the other districts, except that of Samaria, to a great extent again gave in their adhesion to the worship of Jehovah at Jerusalem, as the central point and head of the Hebrew commonwealth. This amalgamation of the tribes of Judah and Israel, which had begun in Palestine before the captivity of Jerusalem, was still continued in the countries of their exile. (2 Kings xxi. 19; 2 Chron. xxx. 1—11; xxxi. 1—5; xxxiv. 6, 9; xxxv 18; Zeph. iii. 12, 13.) The condition of the captives in Assyria and Media appears not to have been one of oppression; many of them were prosperous, and they remained, partially at least, their own chiefs and elders. Some have supposed that the ten tribes never returned from the exile, and that they were never incorporated with the heathen around them. Hence the Afghans, the Nestorians, and even the aborigines of North America, have in turn been considered the representatives of the lost ten tribes of Israel. But is it not clear that the numerous prophecies refer, just as much, to the return of Israel, as of Judah, to the land of their fathers? (Jer. xxx. 3—10; xxxi. 1—4; xxiiii. 7; 1. 17—34; Ezek. xxxiv. 13, 14; xxxvii. 37.) The proclamation of Cyrus, B.C. 538, permitting the exiles of Palestine to return, was to all the people, to Israel as well as to Judah. (Ezra i. 1—4.) Many individuals and families repaired to the land of their fathers, under Zerubbabel. (Ezra ii. 2, 69, 64,—70; Neh. vii. 7; 1 Chron. ix. i. 3.) The decree of Artaxerxes Longimanus, about 458 B.C., was also directed to all "the people of Israel." (Ezra viii. 28; viii. 35; ix. 1; Neh. ix. 1, 2.) It does not follow that all the tribes of Israel and Judah returned. Many of the descendants of the ten tribes had now been settled down throughout the East from 739 to 458 B.C. about 281 years; and those of Judah and Benjamin had also been there for about 148 years. These regions, therefore, were their home and country; and although many doubtless afterwards went up to the Promised Land, yet very many, we must suppose, clung to these their paternal abodes, in preference to becoming strangers and sojourners in the land of their ancestors. Misfortune had done away the former distinction and enmity between the two tribes, and the ten tribes, and had drawn them again together as with strong bands; and henceforth, in Palestine, and in the countries of their dispersion, the name of Jews became as comprehensive as was formerly that of Hebrews, and the ten tribes, as such were forgotten. (Hos. xi. 11; Am. ix. 14.; Obad. 19, 20; Isa. xi. 12, 13; Ezek. xxxvii. 16; Jer. lii. 18; xxxi. 7—20; xxxii. 2; Zechar. x. 6; Mic. ii. 12; Luke iii. 36; Acts ii. 5, 9, 10; ix. 2; xxvi. 7; James i. 1; Phil. iii. 5; 1 Pet. i. 1; v. 13.)

CAPTIVITIES OF JUDAH. The ambitious Sennacherib, in prosecution of his plans against Egypt, invaded Judea, B.C. 713. Having taken the fenced cities of Judah, he mulcted Hezekiah in a heavy tribute, and probably taking hostages, then withdrew to Assyria. (2 Kings xviii. 13—18; Isa. xxxvi. 1.) This invasion is distinctly noticed in the inscriptions on the great bulls, exhumed by Mr. Layard, from the ruined palace at Kouyunjik, which bear a general agreement with the statements of the sacred historians. Again in B.C. 710, Sennacherib invaded Judea, when his army was miraculously destroyed in one night at Libnah. (2 Kings xviii. 17; xix. 8, 35; Isa. xxxvi. 2; xxvii. 8, 36.) From the time of Hezekiah to the captivity of Manasseh, Judea seems to have been in the hands of the Egyptians. In the reign of Ahasuerus, about B.C. 676, the Assyrians took Manasseh, king of Judah, captive to Babylon. (2 Chron. xxxiii. 11—13.) After the overthrow of Nineveh, and the transfer of the Assyrian supremacy to Babylon, about 608 B.C., and 115 years after the final captivity of Israel, Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, came out against Jerusalem, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, king of Judah, when the sons of some of the most distinguished families, including Daniel and his three friends, were led away captive to Babylon, probably as hostages for the future submission of the conquered state. This was the first of the several removals to Babylon, and is properly considered the commencement of the seventy years' captivity. (Jer. xxv. 8—12; xxix. 10; 2 Kings xxiv. 1; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 6, 7, 23; Dan. i. 1—5.) Three years after this event, about 603, B.C., Jehoiakim attempted to shake off the Babylonian yoke; and Judea was invaded from the neighbouring Chaldean provinces of Syria, Moab, and Ammon. (2 Kings xxiv. 1, 2.) On the revolt of Jehoiachin, in the first year of his reign, 593 B.C., Nebuchadnezzar compelled him to surrender, and carried him, with 18,000 of the principal men of the land, to Babylon. (2 Kings xxiv. 14—16; Jer. xxvii. 20; lii. 28.) On account of the revolt of the vassal king Zedekiah, another deportation took place about 588 B.C., when Nebuchadnezzar carried away to Babylon 382 persons. (2 Kings xv. 11—26; Jer. lii. 29.) The last deportation took place about 584 B.C., when Nebuzaradan the captain of the guard carried to Babylon 745 persons. (Jer. lii. 30.) It appears that Nebuchadnezzar carried away to Babylon only certain classes of the Jews—"all the princes and all the mighty men of valor, all the craftsmen and smiths: none remained save the poorest sort of the people of the land;" so that, the whole number amounting to scarcely 20,000 persons could have been but a small proportion of the population of Jerusalem and Judah. (2 Kings xxiv. 14; xxv. 12; Jer. xxxix. 10; xl. 7; lii. 15, 16.) As the Hebrews had, for 490 years, sat at nought the Divine command concerning the Sabbath year, in which the land was to lie fallow, and had thus deprived the land of 70 years rest, they went into captivity until the land had enjoyed the rest of which it had been deprived. (Lev. xxvi. 34, 35; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 21.) Seventy years after the first deportation from Jerusalem, and within two years after the capture of Babylon and the overthrow of the Chaldean empire, Cyrus the founder of the Perso-Median kingdom, in the first year of his reign, about 536 B.C., made a proclamation throughout all his kingdom, permitting the exiles of Palestine to return and build up their temple, and reinstate the worship of the true God. (2 Chron. xxxvi. 22, 23; Ezra i. 1—4.) This event was the termination of the seventy years' captivity. (Jos. Ant. xi. 1.) Accordingly, the exiles returned, in companies, and at considerable intervals. The first company, amounting to nearly 50,000 persons, returned under the conduct of Zerubbabel. (Ezra ii. 2.) It is remarkable, that from the destruction of the first temple in 588 B.C., to the edict of Darius Hystaspes, 518 B.C., allowing the Jews to rebuild or complete the temple, was just seventy years. The temple was completed in 516 B.C. (Ezra vi. 1—15.) Another company returned to Judah, under the direction of Ezra, in the seventh year of Artaxerxes Longimanus, about 458 B.C. (Ezra vii. 8.) Thirteen or fourteen years later, Nehemiah repaired as the king's governor to Jerusalem, probably accompanied by a band of returning exiles. (Neh. viii. 17; ix. 1.) However, it is not at all surprising, that when Cyrus gave the Hebrews permission to return to their own country, many, and perhaps even a majority of the nation, chose to remain behind, believing that they were more pleasantly situated where they were, than they would be in Judea. Some of them held important political stations in the court of the king; and it is not improbable that the exiles had magistrates and a prince from their own number. At the same time it cannot be denied that their humiliation was always extremely painful, and frequently drew on them expressions of contempt. (Dan v. 1—4.) In exile they were made to feel the loss of their homes, gardens, and fruitful fields; and the cessation of the highest public solemnities of their religion, by the burning of their capital and temple. (Ps. cxlix. 8.) During the exile many of the heathen were made seriously attentive to the God of Israel. (Dan. ii. 47; iii. 21—50; iv. 31—34; vi. 26—29.) The captivities of the Jews in Assyria, Media, and Babylonia, left the light of divine revelation, and, particularly the hope of Messiah lingering on the shores of the Euphrates and the Tigris. The Magi, who came from the East, to pay homage to the Redeemer, were, no doubt, a remnant descended from those taught by the Hebrew prophets to look for redemption in Israel. (Matt. ii. 1—18.)

In the overthrow of the Jews, by the Romans, which took place A.D. 70, it is said, that the number of captives taken during the whole war was 97,000; but those who perished in the siege and conquest of Jerusalem alone, amounted to one million. And after their last overthrow by Hadrian, A.D. 135, many thousands of them were sold, multitudes were transported into Egypt, where many perished by famine and shipwreck, or were massacred by the inhabitants. Since then, the Jews have been scattered among all nations. These events were distinctly foretold by Moses, by Daniel, and by Christ. (Deut. xxviii. 16–65; Dan. ix. 26, 27; Matt. xxiv. 29–42.)

CARBUNCLE. A precious stone resembling, as the name imports, a glowing coal. In Isa. liv. 12, the Hebrew word אֵבֲדִּיקָה = shining, glowing, is rendered "carbuncle." Perhaps the oriental garnet, a transparent red stone, with a violet shade and vitreous lustre may be designated. The Hebrew word אִיבְּדִּיקָה, perhaps the emerald, is also rendered "carbuncle." (Ex. xxviii. 17; xxxix. 10; Ezek. xxviii. 13.)

CARCHEMISH = fortress of Mish. A city situated on the Habor, at its confluence with the Euphrates. It is the Circusius of the Greeks and Romans, and is now called Karkisa. (Jer. xlvi. 1–12; 2 Chron. xxxv. 20; Lam. x. 9.)

CARSAH = bald head. The father of Johanan. (2 Kings xxv. 23.) He is also called "Karesah." (Jer. xli. 8.)

CARKAS = eagle. A rancho in the court of Xerxes. (Est. i. 10.)

CARMEL = a garden, orchard, park. The highest peak of a celebrated range of hills, running north-west from the plain of Esdrelon, and ending in the promontory, or cape, which forms the bay of Acre. It is about 1,800 feet above the Mediterranean, which washes its northern base. At its north-eastern base, flows the brook Kishon, and a little further north, the river Belus. Josephus makes Carmel a part of Galilee; but it rather belonged to Manasseh, and to the south of Asher. Most of the recent travellers describe Carmel as the most beautiful mountain in Palestine. Lieut. Van De Velde, who ascended this celebrated mountain in the spring of 1852, describes it as a wild flower garden. "The hawthorn, the jasmine, the fir, the oak, the myrtle, the laurel, and many other trees and shrubs are found upon its slopes. There is scarcely a flower found on the plains along the coast, but what is found again on Carmel. But the glory of this natural garden is now dried up, and the utmost fertility is lost for man, useless for man! It is an uncultivated waste—all is wilderness." The same traveller supposes the abrupt rocky height el Mohbrak, which shoots up suddenly on the east, 1685 feet above the sea, and perhaps 1000 feet above the Kishon, to be the scene of Elijah's sacrifice. Here, also, some 250 feet beneath the altar plateau, is to be seen a vaulted and very abundant fountain, built up in the form of a tank. And nowhere else does the Kishon run so close to Mount Carmel as just beneath this rocky height. The summit of Carmel is remarkable for its pure and enlivening atmosphere. This promontory is a place of deep interest in the annals of the Jews; (1 Kings xviii. 19–42; 2 Kings ii. 23; iv. 25.) In our version of Jer. iv. 26, the proper name Carmel is rendered "the fruitful place." (Isa. xxxii. 9; xxxv. 2; Jer. i. 19; Amos i. 2; ix. 3; Josh. xix. 26; Neh. i. 4.) 2. A town in the mountains of Judah. (Josh. xv. 54; 1 Sam. xv. 12; xxv. 2–24.) It is now called Karmel; and the ruins indicate a town of considerable importance. The inhabitants were called "Carmelites." (1 Sam. xxvii. 3; xxx. 5; 2 Sam. xxx. 35.)

CARMEL = vine-dresser. 1. A son of Reuben. (Gen. xlix. 9; Ex. vi. 14.) His descendants were called "Carmelites." (Num. xxvi. 6.) 2. The father of Achan. (Josh. vii. 1.)

CARNAL. The ceremonial parts of the Mosaic dispensation were "carnal" = fleshly; they related immediately to the bodies of men and beasts. (Heb. vii. 16; iv. 10.) The "carnal" or fleshly mind is enmity against God. (Rom. viii. 6, 7; xv. 27.)—See Flesh.

CARPENTER. The Hebrew ἄρτος, and the Greek tektoos, rendered "carpenter," are general terms like our workman, artificer. (2 Sam. v. 11; 1 Chron. xiv. 1; Is. xiv. 18; Matt. xiii. 55.) The Hebrews, while in Egypt, acquired a knowledge of architecture, carpentry, masonry, metallurgy, etc. (Ex. xxxv. 30–35.) Tools of CARE

Various kinds, as axes, hammers, saws, planes, chisels, and Centre bits, are represented on the monuments of Egypt. Among the works of the Egyptian artists are found chairs, couches, tables, bireaus, wardrobes, and coffers, of graceful form; some of which may be seen in the British Museum. They were acquainted with the art of veneering; and many of their articles of furniture are so profusely and elegantly carved, as not to be excelled in our own time.

CASPIUS = fruit, produce. A Christian who dwelt at Troas. (2 Tim. iv. 13.)

CASHISHA = episcopate, or year. A prince in the court of Xerxes. (Est. 1:14.)

CART.—See WAGON.

CARVING.—See CARRIAGE.

CASIPHA = politeness, or silver. A country, perhaps the region round the Caspian sea. (Ezr. viii. 17.)

CASLUHIM = fortified. A people sprung from the Egyptians; perhaps the Colchians, who probably blended themselves with the Caphtorim. (Gen. x. 14; 1 Chron. i. 12.)

CASSIA. The Hebrew word kadad, rendered "cassia," seems to designate a species of aromatic bark resembling cinnamon, but less valuable. (Ex. xxv. 24; Ezek. xxvii. 19.) The Hebrew word ketzudah, also rendered "cassia," was probably a fragrant Indian root, called bosst, perhaps the Anessential costus. (Ps. xliii. 8.)—See CINAMON.

CASTLE. A fortress in Jerusalem, on the N.W. corner of the temple. It was rebuilt by Herod, with great strength and splendour; and called Antonia, in honour of Mark Antony. It was divided into apartments of every kind, with barracks for soldiers. From the stairs of this castle Paul addressed the people collected in the adjacent court. (Acts xxii. 31—40; xxvii. 24.) The "castles," mentioned in Gen. xxv. were probably watch-towers; and in 1 Chron. vi. 54, the houses of the priests are called "castles."

CASTOR AND PULLUX. In heathen mythology, were the twin sons of Jupiter by Leda; who were supposed to preside over the destinies of sailors. This was probably the sign or designation of the ship. (Acts xxviii. 11.)

CATERPILLAR.—See Locust.

CAUL. The lobe over the liver. The margin reads "It seemed by anatomy and the Hebrew doctors to be the mid-riff." (Ex. xxiv. 13; Lev. iii. 4; ix. 19.) The term "caul" in Isa. iii. 18, appears to be a portion of the attire of the head, probably made of net work.

CAVES. The country of Judea, being mountainous and rocky, in many parts abounds in caverns; some were very spacious, and many of them were anciently used as dwellings, or as places of refuge in times of distress and hostile invasion. Some of them are natural caverns, and others are extensive excavations in the limestone rocks. (Gen. xiv. 30; Josh. x. 18; Judg. vi. 2; 1 Sam. xiii. 6; xiv. 11; xxii. 1, 2; xxiiii. 5, 4; xiv. 3; 2 Sam. xxvii. 10; 1 Kings xvii. 4; xix. 9; Isa. ii. 19; Jer. xiv. 2; Hose. x. 13.) Several of these caves have been noticed by modern travellers. Dr. Robinson, observed several clusters of caverns in his journey from Gaza to Hebron. The original inhabitants of Idumea proper were Horites, i.e. Troglodytes—"dwellers in caverns," or underground; who, although dispossessed by the Edomites, continued to live among the latter, and apparently became with them one people. (Gen. xiv. 6; xxxvi. 20, 21; Deut. ii. 22.)

CEDAR. The Hebrew word eres is probably a general name for the pine or fir tribe, and is specially used for the cedar by the ancient translators, and in our own version; an interpretation that is confirmed by the fact of the modern Arabs denoting that tree by the same name. The Pinus cedros, or cedar pine is repeatedly mentioned as peculiar to Lebanon. (1 Kings iv. 33; 2 Kings xix. 23; P. xlii. 12; Sol. Song v. 15; Isa. xxxvii. 24.) "These trees," says Rosenmuller, "are not confined to Lebanon, for similar cedars grow on the ranges of Amanus and Taurus in Asia Minor; but they do not attain the height nor strength of those of CED

Lebanon.” This magnificent tree is a coniferous evergreen, of the larger sort, belonging to the family of pointed leafed trees; and has, in its appearance, considerable resemblance to the pine, and others of that class; but it has a much thicker and stronger stem, so that full grown cedars have at some distance, the look of large wide spreading oaks. Cedars are often mentioned as the highest trees known to the Hebrews. (Ezek. xxxi. 3–5; xvii. 22; Isa. ii. 13; Am. ii. 9; Ps. lxx. 10.) They were from sixty to eighty feet high; and one measured by Dr. Wilson was forty feet in circumference. The cones are of a bright green colour, and near five inches long; the resin which exudes from them has a strong balsamic perfume, hence the “scent or smell of Lebanon.” (Hos. xiv. 6; Sol. Song iv. 11.) The wood is reddish with streaks, and not much harder than white fir, but compact and solid, and of a fine grain; it is durable and is not liable to be worm eaten. The temple of Jerusalem, (1 Kings vi. 9; Ezra iii. 7,) and the royal palace, were built of cedar wood. (2 Sam. v. 11; 1 Kings vii. 2; x. 17.) Mr. Layard found several beams of cedar in the ruins of Nimrud, which, after a lapse of nearly 3000 years had retained their original fragrance; and a great part of the rubbish consisted of charcoal of the same wood. And it would seem that the cedar cone, so frequently occurring on the monuments, was the symbol of Assyria. (Ezek. xxxii. 2.) The celebrated cedar grove of Lebanon is situated about thirty miles above Beirut, at the head of a vast amphitheatre, looking west, surrounded by the loftiest ridges of Lebanon, which rise from two to three thousand feet above them, partly covered with snow. In the midst of this vast temple of nature, the cedars stand as the lonely tenants, with not a tree nor scarcely a green thing besides. The number of the older trees diminish in every succeeding age. Dr. Wilson reckoned those of a younger growth at about 325; but there are but seven of the parent stock which may have stood fast since the ages of Scripture history. There are fine specimens of the cedar of Lebanon growing in this country.

CEDRON.—See Kidron.

CENCHREA = millet, small pulse. One of the sea ports of Corinth, nine miles distant from that city. (Rom. xvi. 1; Acts xviii. 18.) In A.D. 1884, the site of Cenchrea was occupied by a single farm house and several old foundations.

CEP

Egyptian censer.

CENSER. A vessel in which the holy incense was burned. The Hebrew word mikhtereth = censer, incense pan, seems to designate the ordinary censer, made of copper, and common to all the priesthood. (2 Chron. xxv. 19; Ezek. viii. 11.) But the word mafhit = fire pan or coals pan, seems to denote the golden censer, appropriated to the use of the high priest only; (Ex. xxvii. 8; xxxii. 3; Lev. xvi. 12; 1 Kings vii. 50; 2 Chron. iv. 22;) as in the instances where it was used by others, punishment followed. (Lev. x. 1; Num. xvi. 6, 7; 2 Chron. xxvi. 16–19.) A golden censer probably stood permanently in the most holy place; (Heb. ix. 4;) and another censer of the same material, having a handle to it, would seem to have been used to convey fire to that in the holy place on the day of atonement. So among the Egyptians, there were censers to stand permanently, while those for conveying the coals whereon the incense was sprinkled, were a kind of ladles, or cups with long handles. “Golden vials full of odours, were properly censers. (Rev. v. 8; viii. 3–5.) The woodcut represents an ancient Egyptian censer, now in the museum of the Louvre at Paris; the handle is probably of shittim wood.—See Bread, Shew.

CENTURION. A Roman officer commanding a hundred foot soldiers; similar to our captain in modern times. (Mark xv. 39, 44, 45; Matt. viii. 5; Acts x. 1.)

CEPHAS.—See Peter.
CHAIN. Prisoners were sometimes bound with fetters or chains of copper, or iron; (Judg. xvi. 21; 2 Kings xxv. 7;) Paul was fastened with a chain, as a prisoner to the Roman soldier. (Acts xxviii. 20; Eph. vi. 20; 2 Tim. i. 16.) Sometimes, for greater security, a prisoner was bound to two soldiers, with two chains, as was the case with Peter. (Acts xii. 6.) The chain of gold about the neck was one of the symbols of authority in the court of Pharaoh; (Gen. xli. 42;) and also in the court at Babylon. (Dan. v. 29.) Brion received chains of gold as part of their attire; (Sol. Song i. 10; iv. 9;) and they were used as ornaments by both men and women. (Prov. i. 9; Ezek. xi. 11; Num. xxxi. 50.)

CHALCEDONY. A precious stone, deriving its name from Chalcedon, where it is said to have been first discovered. It is a species of quartz, may be got of almost every shade of colour, and is found in most parts of the world. The distinction between it and agate is not well established. It comprises several varieties, one of which is the modern cornelian. (Rev. xvi. 19.)

CHALCOL. See CALCOLO.

CHALDEA. Originally a country of small extent, probably confined to the mountains of Kurdistan, north of Assyria, and the northern part of Mesopotamia. Some suppose that Arphaxad gave name to this region, and that he was the progenitor of the Chaldeans; (Gen. xi. 10;) others, with less probability, consider Cheddar as their ancestor. (Gen. xxii. 22.) The Hebrew word "cadim"—wanderers, or perhaps warriors, rendered "Chaldeans," may be only another form of the term cardi, still preserved in the name of the Kurds. Some of the Chaldean hordes seem to have descended, at an early period, from the mountains of Kurdistan, scattered themselves throughout the adjoining regions, and to have founded Ur, even before the time of Abraham. (Gen. xii. 28, 31; Jer. v. 15.) They occasionally made incursions into Arabia and the adjacent regions. (Jub. i. 17.) This rough and energetic people subsequently came under the Assyrian dominion, where they constituted the most considerable and effective warriors of the empire. (Hab. i. 11.) In process of time, by means of the removal of a part of them to Babylon, the Chaldeans assumed a new character—from a rude horde they became a civilized people. (Isa. xxxii. 13.) They conquered the Babylonians, and gradually amalgamated with them; and were governed by a satrap or viceroy. Occasionally the satraps revolted, as in the case of Merodach Baladan, who became king of Babylon; (Isa. xxxix. 1; 2 Kings xx. 12;) but the region was again reduced to an Assyrian province. In process of time, however, the Chaldeans acquired the upper hand in the Assyrian empire. Nabopolassar, the revolted satrap of Babylon, a Chaldean by nation, concluded an alliance with Cyrus, king of Media, and with his aid conquered Assyria, about B.C. 606. Thenceforth no mention is made of Assyrian, but only of Chaldean kings; and Chaldea, in its extended sense, included Babylon. (Jer. xxiv. 5; xxv. 12; 1. 11; Ezek. i. 5, 11, 24; xii. 13.) Under Nebuchadnezzar, the kingdom of Judah was overthrown; (2 Chron. xxxvi. 17—20;) and the Chalder-Babylonian empire comprised western Asia, as far as the Mediterranean. This empire was overthrown in 638 B.C., by the Medo-Persians under Cyrus, according to the predictions of the Hebrew prophets. The term "Chaldeans" is also applied to the learned caste, perhaps the priesthood, and the courtiers or officers of state in Babylon; as they are distinguished from the "magicians, astrologers, and soothsayers." (Dan. ii. 10; iii. 8; iv. 7; v. 7, 11.)

CHALK-STONES. See LINE.

CHAMELEON. See LIZARD.

CHAMOIS. Some have supposed that the Hebrew word "sazer"—leaper, sprinter, denotes the camelopard, or giraffe; but it evidently designates an animal of the deer or gazelle species. (Deut. xiv. 5.)

CHANAAN. See CANAAN.
CHANCE. The original word rendered "chance," might be better rendered occurrence. (1 Sam. vi. 9.) What men speak of as happening by chance, are those occurrences which take place without any apparent cause, as in Luke x. 31, "It so happened that a priest, etc., that is, he had no design to pass by the wounded man, etc.; though such occurrences are not the less actually the result of Divine providence. (1 Sam. vi. 9; Eccl. ix. 1, 11.) The word "chance," in its atheistical use, is as unphilosophical as it is impious.

CHANT.—See Music.

CHAPEL. Bethel is called "the king's chapel," or sanctuary, because there the idolatrous kings of Israel worshipped one of the golden calves. (Am. vii. 13.)

CHAPTER. The capital or upper part of a column. The Egyptians, the Assyrians, and the Hebrews, richly ornamented the capitals, and sometimes gilded or painted the pillars. (Ex. xxxvi. 33; 1 Kings vii. 19.)

CHARASHIM—craftsmen. A valley of artificial works near Jerusalem. (1 Chron. iv. 14; Neh. xi. 35.)

CHARIOT. The Hebrews, as well as the Egyptians and the Assyrians, appear to have used chariots in very early times. (2 Sam. xv. 1; 2 Kings x. 15.) The Assyrian monuments exhibit chariots richly ornamented. The woodcut is a representation of one on a slab, exhumed by M. Botta at Khorsabad. It represents the king, perhaps Sargon, accompanied by his charioteer, and a beardless parasol-bearer, following the chase. The monuments of Egypt also exhibit chariots of various and elegant forms, and the whole process of constructing them. (Gen. xii. 43.)

From the ancient monuments we learn that war-chariots composed the main military force of the Egyptians. They were small and light; and the "horsemen" or "riders," were properly the chariot-warriors. (Ex. xiv. 6, 7, 9, 25, 28; xv. 1.) The Cannaïtes had war-chariots, heavily armed with iron instruments, which made dreadful havoc among the troops. The warriors fought standing on them, or leaping from them on the enemy. (Josh. xi. 4; Judg. iv. 3, 13.) The Hebrews, Philistines, and Syrians, had war-chariots. (2 Sam. viii. 1—4; Ps. xlvii. 9; 2 Chron. i. 14.) War-chariots and cavalry are frequently exhibited in the Assyrian monuments. (Nah. ii. 8, 13.) The "chariots of the sun," were probably the chariots in which the idolatrous king and his nobles rode, when they went forth to meet the morning sun. (2 Kings xviii. 11.)

CHARITY. In the popular sense this term denotes alms-giving; a duty of practical Christianity which is solemnly enjoined, and to which special promises are annexed. But the Greek word agape, rendered "charity," (1 Cor. xiii. 1, 2, 3, 4, 8, 13,) properly signifies love; and so it is translated in several of the early English versions. It is Christian love, the love of our neighbour, inseparable from our love to God, which the apostle describes with such wonderful copiousness, felicity, and grandeur.

(1 John iv. 11.)

CHARMER.—See Divination.

CHARRAN.—See Haran.

CHEBAB = long river. A river which rises near Ras-al-Ain—head of the spring, in the north of Mesopotamia; and flowing to the west of the Sinjar hill, falls into the Euphrates near the site of the ancient city of Carchemish. To this region the Israelites were carried away captive by the Assyrians. (Ezek. i. 3; ii. 15, 29; x. 15, 20, 22; xi. 24.) It is also called "Habor," or Khabur. (2 Kings xviii. 6; xix. 11; 1 Chron. v. 26.) It is the Chaboras of the Greek and Roman geographers; and is now called Khabur.

Mr. Layard says, "The Khabur flows through the richest pastures and meadows. Its banks are covered with flowers of every hue, and its windings through the green plain were like the coils of a mighty serpent. We rode onwards through a mass of flowers, reaching high above the horses' knees, and such as I had never before seen, even in the most fertile parts of the Mesopotamian wilderness." Another river Khabur rises in the highlands of ancient Assyria proper, and pursues its course southwardly to the Tigris.—See Gosaw.

CHEDORLAOMER = handful of sheaves. A king of the Elamites, who formed an alliance against the kings of the plain of Sodom. (Gen. xiv. 1-17.)

CHEEK. Smirking on the cheek is frequently spoken of in Scripture as a most grievous insult and injury. (Job xvi. 10; Lam. iii. 50; Mic. v. 1; Luke vi. 29.) The Hindoo can bear almost anything without emotion, except slapping; that is, a stroke with the sole of a slipper, or sandal, after a person has taken it off his foot and slipped upon it; this is dreaded above all affronts.

CHEESE. Cheese of the East is very frequently made of camel’s milk; that of cows, as also of sheep and of goats, is generally used. Instead of rennet, the milk is coagulated either with butter milk, or a decoction of the flowers of the great headed thistle, or wild artichoke; and putting the curds into small baskets made with rushes, or with the dwarf-palm, they bind them up close and press them. These cheeses are rarely above two or three pounds in weight; and are about the size of a teasacner. Oriental cheese when new is comparatively soft, but it soon turns hard and dry; and is excessively salt. (1 Sam. xvii. 18; 2 Sam. xvii. 29.) In Job x. 10, the formation of the fetus in the womb is figuratively described.

CHELAL = completeness, wholeness.

A son of Pahath-moab. (Ezra ix. 50.)

CHELUB = archer. 1. The father of Mehir. (1 Chron. iv. 11.) 2. The father of Esri. (1 Chron. xxvii. 26.)

CHELABAI = fruit-baskets.—See Caleb.

CHELLUH = completed, finished.

A son of Baaz. (Ezra x. 35.)

CHEMARIM = idol priests. The "idolatrous priests," or chaplains of Basal. (Zeph. i. 4; 2 Kings xxviii. 5; margin.) The name is also applied to the "priests" of the golden calf at Dedi and Bethel. (Hos. x. 5; margin.)

CHEMOŚ = thunder. Commoner.

The national god of the Moabites and Ammonites; (Judg. xi. 14) perhaps the planet Mars, whose worship was introduced at Jerusalem under Solomon. The "people of Chemosh" are the Moabites. (Num. xxvi. 29; 1 Kings xi. 7; 2 Kings xiii. 13; Jer. xlvi. 7.)

CHENAANAH = low region, or a merchantman. 1. A son of Bilhan. (1 Chron. vii. 10.) 2. The father of Zedokiah. (1 Kings xxii. 11; 2 Chron. xviii. 10.)

CHENANI = protector. The name of a Levite. (Neh. ix. 4.)

CHENANIAH = whom Jehovah de fends. A chief of the Levites in the time of David. (1 Chron. xxviii. 27; xxvi. 29.)

CEPHAR-HAAAMMONAI = village of the Ammonites. A place in the tribe of Benjamin. (Josh. xvii. 24.)
CHEPHIRAH = village. A city of Benjamin. (Josh. ix. 7, 17; xviii. 26; Era. ii. 25; Neh. vii. 29.) It is probably the site with ruins called Kefr.

CHERAN = cithara, harp. A son of Dishon. (Gen. xxxvi. 26.)

CHERETHIM = Cretans. The inhabitants of southern Philistia; (Ezek. xxv. 16;) who sprang from Crete. (Am. ix. 7; Jer. xlvi. 4.) The term is rendered "Cherethites." (1 Sam. xxx. 14; Zeph. ii. 5.)

CHERETHITES = executioners. The "Cherethites and Pelethites," properly executioners and runners, or couriers, (2 Sam. viii. 18; xv. 18; xx. 7, 23;) designated the royal body-guard, whose duty it was to execute punishment and to convey the king's commands as speedily as possible to his officers. (1 Kings ii. 25, 34, 46; 1 Chron. xviii. 17.) These are not to be confounded with the "Cherethites" of the preceding article.

CHERITH = a cutting, separation. A brook towards the Jordan; (1 Kings xvii. 3—7;) probably the Wady Kelt, a mountain torrent, which dries up in summer.

Amryan winged bulls

1. CHERUB = one near to God, His minister; or perhaps a keeper or guard of the sanctuary. The cherubim seem to be sacred and celestial intelligences, standing on the highest grade of created existence, the immediate ministers of Jehovah, and the attendants of the manifestations of His presence; hence they are called "the cherubim of glory." (Heb. ix. 5.) These angelic beings, in the archaic record, are represented, after man's expulsion from Eden, as guarding the approach to the tree of life. (Gen. iii. 24.) Before that mournful event, the sanctuary of the Divine manifestation, where the first human pair worshipped in holiness and happiness, may have been in connection with the tree of life. But when pristine honour was forfeited, it comport not with the dignity of the Supreme to hold immediate communion with the apostate; access to the tree of life was closed, and man was mercifully prevented from completing his own misery by cumbering his earthly body and impure mind with everlasting life. (Gen. iii. 22, 23.) Still the condescending Deity was pleased to grant manifestations of Himself, and to treat with the rebel, but not as heretofore, immediately and directly, but symbolically, and under a mediatorial economy, adapted to man's altered circumstances and situation. These gracious manifestations, in pursuance of the great scheme of redemption, we have reason to believe, were made by the "Wound" to our guilty progenitors, from the place of the cherubim at the east of Eden, which, not unlikely, constituted "the presence of the Lord," where the first sacrifices were offered, (Gen. iv. 3, 4;) and whence Cain was exiled after the murder of Abel. (Gen. iv. 14, 16; 2 Thes. i. 9.) Thus, instead of an indication of wrath, the placing of the cherubim at the east of Eden was rather an exhibition of mercy, as being connected with the manifestation of the symbol of the presence of the Most High, to which guilty man might approach, pleading for forgiveness, confiding in mercy, and obtain salvation through a mediatorial economy.

In the pictorial scenery of the prophetic visions, symbols of the cherubim were sometimes represented, as bearing the throne of God upon their wings through the clouds; (Ezek. i. 26; ix. 3; x. 1—15;) "He rode upon a cherub and did fly;" (2 Sam. xxii. 11; Ps. xviii. 10); "who sitteth upon the cherubim," i.e., upon a throne borne by cherubim. (Ps. cxix. 1; Is. xxxvii. 16; 2 Kings xix. 15.) So also, "the four beasts," properly "living creatures," as in Ezek. i. 5, represented as bearing or surrounding the throne of the Saviour, are the cherubim. (Rev. iv. 6—9; v. 6—14.)

Sculptured symbols of two cherubim, of olive-wood overlaid with gold, with expanded wings, stood, one upon each end of the cover of the ark of the covenant, in the holy of holies, both of the tabernacle and temple. (Ex. xxv. 18—22; 1 Kings vi. 23—28.) Throned upon these was the shekinah—the awful and mysterious symbol of Jehovah's presence. (1 Sam. iv. 4; 2 Sam. vi. 2; Num. vii. 89.) Here Jehovah, the king of the Hebrews, met His high-priest, and by him His people, when atonement was made by sprinkling the blood upon and before the mercy seat, and gave forth His oracles. (Ex. xxix. 42, 43; xxx. 6, 36; Lev. xvi. 2—33.)

Cherubic symbols also adorned the curtains of the tabernacle; (Ex. xxvi. 1, 31; xxxviii. 35;) and the doors and walls of the temple. (1 Kings vi. 29, 32, 35; 2 Chron. iii. 7; Ezek. xli. 18—25.) But these were not properly images or likenesses of the living cherubim—they were not of the "likeness of anything that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth,"—they were merely symbolical representations of the attributes of the angelic beings. As the Divine glory—the symbol of the presence of Jehovah—dwelt in the inner sanctuary of the Hebrew tabernacle and temple, and as the symbolic cherubim, from between which the Divine radiance shone forth, represented the angels who surround the manifestation of the Divine presence in the world above, the inner sanctuary of that tabernacle was rendered, "for the time then present," an appropriate symbol of the court of heaven. (Heb. iv. 14; viii. 1, 2; ix. 1—9, 23, 24; 1 Pet. i. 12.)

As to the form of the symbolical cherubim, represented in the Hebrew sanctuary or seen in prophetic vision, the descriptions seem to differ. Josephus says, "The cherubim are flying creatures, of a form unlike anything seen by mankind." (Ant. iii. 6. 5.) The four cherubim seen in vision, by Ezekiel and John, are compound figures, having wings. Each of them has four faces, that of a man, an ox, a lion, and an eagle; and the whole body full of eyes. Those of Ezekiel are connected with four wheels. (Ezek. i. 6—14; x. 14.) The Mosaic cherub had only one face: "And their faces shall look to one another; towards the mercy seat shall the faces of the cherubim be." (Ex. xxv. 20.) Again they are described with two faces, that of a man and a lion. (Ezek. xii. 18, 19.) But it is not improbable that in all these cases the cherubim are the same four-faced symbols; and the difference in the description merely arises from their being seen at one point of observation. So that if, according to their situation and the art of perspective, only one or two faces appear in front, the other three or two faces are to be considered as existing, but on the reverse side. The design of the symbolic cherubim, which are represented as possessing the attributes of the lion, the ox, and the eagle, added to the human figure, would seem to be emblematical of the strength, constancy, swiftness, and wisdom, with which the holy angels minister in carrying on Jehovah's designs throughout the universe. (Heb. i. 7, 14.) The passage in Rev. v. 8, 9, is not opposed to this view; for if the angels were so interested as "to desire to look into" the mystery of redemption, symbolized by the cherubim looking down upon the mercy seat, (1 Pet. i. 12,) who can say that they are not benefited, in some way unknown to us, by redeeming grace? After all, the passage describing the prophetic scenery, merely represents them as joining in the universal ascription of praise to the Saviour. (Rev. v. 13, 14.)

It is not improbable that the symbolical combinations in the multiform animals, found on the sculptures of Egypt, and of Assyria, are traditional representations of the cherubim which guarded the sanctuary of Eden, or perhaps corrupted versions of that revelation which taught the form of the mystic figures for the Hebrew sanctuary to Moses. In reference to the Egyptian forms, the sphinx may be the oldest figure; it represents a crouching lion with a man’s head, is partly built of stone, and partly hewn out of the rock, is eighty feet long, and is not only the oldest statue remaining to us, but the largest that ever was made. Avenues of sphinxes led up to the ancient Egyptian temples; they were the symbolical guardians of the palaces of the gods. Kneeling figures, with expanded wings, one of which we give, are frequently represented on the ancient monuments. So also winged figures of Isis and Nephthys, and other compound figures, standing or kneeling opposite each other, and overshadowing with their plumes the sacred shrines or arks, are commonly found on the monuments and on the sarcophagi. In the ancient Egyptian Book of the Dead, a triple-headed figure occurs, of a woman with outstretched wings, and two vultures proceeding out of the neck. She wears the crown of upper and lower Egypt, and the vultures the two long feathers. The copy of this remarkable symbolical figure was courteously furnished for this work, by the accomplished Egyptologist, Mr. Bonomi.

The monuments exhumed from the Assyrian ruins frequently exhibit colossal winged human-headed bulls and lions. These symbolical combinations are always found as the guardians of the entrances of the palace-temples of the king, who was also the high-priest. In the palace of Sennacherib at Kouyunjik, no less than twenty-seven portals formed by colossal winged bulls and lion-sphinxes were found. The woodcut, at the head of this article, is a copy of two of these symbolical figures, guarding the portals of the palace at Khorsabad. As the walls and the doors of the Hebrew temple were decorated with figures of cherubim, so also the doors and the walls of the Assyrian palaces were adorned with mystic figures uniting the human head with the body of an ox or a lion, and the wings of an eagle; thus blending in one figure the forms of many, obviously to describe its attributes, or those of the deity whose sanctuary they guarded. In Ezek. xxviii. 13—16, the king of Tyre, guarding his treasures, is compared to the cherub which covered with his wings and protected radiant gems in the holy mount of Eden.

2. CHERUB = one near to, or a keeper, guard. One who returned from the exile. (Ezra ii. 59; Neh. vii. 61.)

CHESALON = confidence, hope. A place on the border of Judah; also called “Mount Jearim” = forests. (Josh. xv. 10.)

CHESED = cut in, or gain. A son of Nahor, the brother of Abraham. (Gen. xxii. 22.)

CHESIL = a fool. A city in the southern part of Judah. (Josh. xv. 30.)

CHESNUT-TREE. The Hebrew word armow, rendered “chesnut-tree,” properly means the Platynusorientalis = oriental plane-tree, which abounds in Syria and Palestine and often attains a stately size. (Gen. xxx. 37; Ezek. xxxi. 8.)
CHE

CHESULLOTH = hophes. A city on the border of Issachar and Zebulun; probably the same with "Chisloth-Tabor" = loith or jesheth of Tabor. (Josh. xix. 12, 18.) It is now a village called Iskai, and contains many excavated sepulchres.

CHEZIB.—See Achzib.

CHIDON = a dart, javelin. A place near Jerusalem, called the "threshing-floor of Chidon," that is, threshing-floor of the dart; (1 Chron. xiii. 9—11;) for which in the parallel passage, (2 Sam. vi. 6—8,) we have "Nachon's threshing-floor," that is, threshing-floor prepared. Here Uzzah was suddenly struck dead for touching the ark. and David changed its name to "Peres-uzzah" = breach of Uzzah.

CHILDREN. Mothers, in the earliest times, suckled their offspring until they were from thirty months to three years of age. The day on which a child was weaned was a festival. (Gen. xxi. 8; Ex. ii. 7, 9; 1 Sam. i. 22—24; 2 Chron. xxxi. 16; Matt. xxi. 16.) Nurses sustained a respectable station in a family. (Gen. xxxv. 8; 2 Kings xi. 2; 2 Chron. xxii. 11.) The sons were taught, not only the arts and duties of life, but were carefully instructed in the Mosaic law. (Deut. vi. 20—25; xi. 19.) The daughters rarely departed from the apartments appropriated to the females, except when they went out to draw water, or occasionally joined in the labours of the field. (Gen. xxiv. 16; xxxix. 9; Ex. ii. 16; 1 Sam. ix. 11; Ruth ii. 2; John iv. 7.) Children cursing their parents were punished by the Mosaic law with death. (Ex. xxi. 15, 17; Matt. xvi. 4.) Children were looked upon as the property of their parents, who could sell them as hired servants along with themselves, for six years, to pay their debts. Their creditors had also the power of compelling them to resort to this measure. (Lev. xxv. 41; 2 Kings iv. 1.) Persons arrived almost at the age of maturity are sometimes called "children." (Gen. xxxvii. 30; xlv. 20; 1 Kings iii. 7.) The remote descendants of a man are sometimes denounced his sons or children; as "the children of Edom," "the children of Moab," the "children of Israel." Such expressions as "the children of light," "the children of darkness," "the children of the kingdom," signify those who follow truth, those who remain in error, and those who belonged to the church. Believers are commonly called "children of God" by virtue of their adoption. (Rom. viii. 14; Gal. iii. 28.)

CHI

CHILEAB = whom the father perfects. A son of David and Abigail. (2 Sam. iii. 3.) In 1 Chron. iii. 1, he is called "Daniel."

CHILION = a pining. A son of Elimelech (Ruth i. 2; iv. 9.)

CHILMAD. A city or region mentioned along with Assyria. (Es. xxvii. 28.)

CHIMHAM = pining, longing. A son of Barmail. (2 Sam. xix. 37—40; 1 Kings ii. 7; Jer. xii. 17.) He is called "Chimhan" in the margin of 2 Sam. xix. 40.

CHINNERETH = horae, lyres. A city in Naphtali, situated on the sea of Galilee, which is thence called "the sea of Chinnereth." (Num. xxxiv. 11; Deut. iii. 17.) It is also called "Chinneroth," (Josh. xii. 2,) and "Cinneroth." (1 Kings xv. 20.)—See Gennesaret.

CHIOS. An island in the Ionian Archipelago, between Lesbos and Samos. It is about thirty miles long and ten broad, inhabited by Greeks. It is now called Scio. The wholesale massacre of its inhabitants, in 1822, by the Turks, was one of the most melancholy incidents of the Greek Revolution. (Acts xx. 1.)

CHISLEU = longuid, sluggish. The name of the ninth month in the ancient Hebrew year. It began with the first new moon in December. This is the first winter month. On the twenty-fifth of this month the feast of Dedication was held, to commemorate the cleansing of the temple by Judas Maccabæus, after its profanation by Antiochus Epiphanes. (Neh. i. 1; Zech. vii 1; John x. 22; Macc. iv. 52—59.)
CHISLON = confidence, hope. The father of Elida. (Num. xxiv. 21.)

CHISLOTH - TABOR.—See CHISLOTH.

CHITTIM = Cyprus, Ciliciae. The descendants of Kittim, who founded the Phoenician or Hittite city Osimen, now Chidie, in the southern part of the island of Cyprus. (Gen. x. 4; Isa. xxiii. 13; Ez. xxvii. 6.) Chittim is also used in a wider acceptation, like the word Levant, and comprehended the islands and coasts of the Mediterranean sea, especially the northern part; and therefore stands for the islands and coasts of Greece, and even Italy; (Num. xxiv. 24; Jer. ii. 10; Dan. xi. 50; Lk. xiv. 29;) in which sense also Persia is called “king of Chittim.” (1 Mac. viii. 5.) And Alexander the Great is said to have come “out of the land of Chittim.”

CHIUN.—See REMPHAN.

CHLOE = pale green. A female Christian at Corinth. (1 Cor. i. 11.)

CHOR-ASHAN = smoking furnace. See ASHAN.

CHORAZIN = forests, or region of Zoa. A place of Galilee mentioned in connexion with Bethsaida and Capernaum, and probably near to them. (Matt. xi. 21; Luke x. 18.) Dr. Robinson supposes the ruins site at Tabighan to be Bethsaida of Galilee; and the ruins called Tel Hum, the ancient Chorazin, on the western shore of the Lake Tiberias.

CHOZEBAH.—See ACHABIAH.

CHRIST. A Greek word, synonymous with the Hebrew Meshia = the Anointed, used preeminently as an official appellation of Jesus, “the Christ,” not merely to distinguish him from others who were called Joshua or Jesus, but in allusion to the regal, sacerdotal, and prophetical offices held by him; since kings, priests, and prophets among the Hebrews, were inaugurated to their respective offices by anointing. (John i. 41; iv. 42; v. 26, 27, 31, 41, 42.) Though originally an appellation, descriptive of office and dignity, it seems that this term, even during our Lord’s earthly career, had passed over into a cognomen; after which it became a proper name. Hence, to render the term “The Anointed,” or even “The Messiah,” in many cases would seem harsh. (Matt. xxvii. 19, 20; Rom. v. 6; 1 Cor. i. 12, 28; iii. 23; 2 Cor. iii. 3; Col. iii. 24; 1 Pet. i. 11.) It is not recorded that Jesus ever received any external official anointing. The union that the prophets and the apostles speak of is the spiritual and internal union of grace and of the Holy Ghost, of which the outward anointing, with which kings, priests, and prophets were annually anointed, was but the symbol. (Ps. xlv. 6, 7; Isa. xi. 2; lix. 1; Luke iv. 18; Acts ii. 36; v. 31.) Nevertheless, when the Spirit visibly descended on Jesus at his baptism, he received a peculiar, solemn, and appropriate inauguration. (John i. 23; iii. 34.)

Our Lord warned his disciples that false Christs should arise. (Matt. xxiv. 23, 24; Mark xiii. 21—23; Luke xxi. 8; Acts v. 36, 37.) Not less than twenty-four different persons of such pretensions have appeared; and the defence of their claims to the Messiahship has cost the Jews a great expense of life and treasure. One of them, Barcocheba = son of a star, put himself at the head of the Jews in Palestine as their Messiah, about A.D. 132, but was defeated by the Romans. The last impostor that gained any considerable number of converts was Mordecai, a Jew of Germany, who lived in 1692. He lied for his life, and his end is not known.

CHRISTIANS. The disciples of Christ “were called Christians first in Antioch,” about A.D. 42, or 43. (Acts xi. 26.) The followers of the Saviour were designated at first among themselves “brethren,” “believers,” “saints,” “disciples,” or “the faithful”; but as the new religion was spreading throughout the provinces of the empire, none of these terms, which had sufficed while the churches covered but little ground, seemed sufficiently definite as a distinctive appellation, to be used by the people at large when speaking of this new sect. It was, indeed, the interest of the disciples to have some name which might not, like the Jewish ones —"Nazarene" or "Galilean"—imply reproach; and what so distinctive as "Christian," formed from "Christ"—The Anointed, the name of their founder! As the followers of Jesus are called "the members of His body;" (Eph. v. 30,) and partakers of "His life;" (Gal. ii. 20; 2 Cor. iv. 10;) they receive the unction of His Spirit, (2 Cor. i. 21, 22; 1 John ii. 27,) and are thus constituted kings and priests to God and to Christ. (Rev. v. 10; 1 Pet. ii. 9.)

The appellation "Christians" was every way appropriate, and was immediately adopted. (1 Pet. iv. 16.) As there is no reason for supposing that the Christians first gave themselves this appellation, some eminent scholars are of opinion that it was given by Divine appointment. The Greek word συνομοστατεσ, translated "called," generally in Greek writers signifies to take or bear a name, to be named, called. (Diod. Sic. i. 44; Plut. M. Anton. 54; Jos. Ant. xiii. 11. 3; Rom. vii. 8.) But, it is also certain, that in the new Testament the term generally implies divine direction, warranted by an oracle. (Matt. ii. 12, 22; Luke ii. 29; Acts x. 22; Rom. xi. 4; Heb. viii. 5; xi. 7; xii. 25.) And when it is considered, that it had been predicted by Isaiah, lxii. 2, that the future Church should be called by a new name, which the mouth of the Lord shall name," they consider that they are justified in rendering the passage thus:—"And the disciples were, by Divine direction, called Christians, first at Antioch." However, the name can scarcely have been given in reproach by the enemies of Christianity; for had Agrippa intended derision, he might have employed the Jewish term "Nazarene," which has continued current in the East, wherever the Arabic language is spoken, to the present day. (Acts xxvi. 23.)

The Romans were unable to distinguish between Jews and Jewish Christians; hence no line of separation was drawn by their laws between Judaism and Christianity. They were led first by the trial of Paul to understand that Christianity was a separate and peculiar religion. (Acts xxviii. 22.)

CHRONICLES. The two historical books of the old Testament, called Chronicles, or more properly Annals, are in the Septuagint called "Paraleipomena" = supplement, or things that remain to be recorded. The Jews ascribe their authorship to Ezra and Nehemiah. And it is evident that they were written after the captivity; and chiefly compiled from ancient memoirs, genealogies, national annals or state papers, and other materials contemporary with the events recorded. Some of the documents which appear to have been the sources of our two books of Chronicles, were the chronicles of the Kings of Israel and Judah; (1 Kings xiv. 19; 2 Chron. xxxii. 32;) the Chronicles of King David; (1 Chron. xxvii. 24;) the books of Nathan and Gad; (1 Chron. xxix. 29;) the prophecy of Ahijah, and visions of Iddo; (2 Chron. ix. 29;) the book of Semeiah; (2 Chron. xii. 15;) and the book of Jehu; (2 Chron. xxv. 44.) Other records are quoted as "ancient things." (1 Chron. iv. 22.) The principal object of the authors of the two books of Chronicles seems to have been, to point out, from the public records and genealogies, the rank, the functions, and the order of the priests and Levites; that after the captivity, they might more easily assume their proper ranks, and re-enter on their ministry; also to show the state of the different families before the captivity, and the distribution of the lands among them; that each tribe might, as far as possible, obtain the ancient inheritance of their fathers at their return. So that this portion of the old Testament may be considered as an epitome of the sacred history, but more especially from the origin of the Jewish nation to their return from captivity. The first book contains a recapitulation of sacred history, by genealogies, from the beginning of the world to the death of David. The second book contains the history of the kings of Judah, without those of Israel, from the beginning of the reign of Solomon only, to the return from the captivity of Babylon. The period of time embraced in these books is about 3468 years. The discrepancies between the Books of Kings and Chronicles, though very numerous, are not of any great moment, and generally admit of an easy solution, being partly caused by various readings arising from repeated transcription, and probably the use of the Hebrew letters as numerals, and partly arising from the nature of the books; which being supplementary to those of Samuel and Kings, omit what is there related more at large, and supply what is there wanting. As the Books of Samuel, Kings, and Chronicles frequently relate portions of the same history, they should each be constantly read and collated together; not only for the purpose of obtaining a more comprehensive view of Jewish history, but also in order to illustrate from one book what is obscure in either of the others.
CHR

CHRYSOLITE = golden stone. A precious stone of the beryl kind, whose prevailing colour is yellowish green, but always with a gold lustre. It is the modern topaz. (Rev. xxi. 20.)

The Hebrew word Tarekh is rendered “beryl.” (Ex. xxviii. 20; xxxix. 13; Sol. Song v. 14; Dan. x. 6; Ezek. i. 16; ii. 9; xxviii. 14.)

The margin of the last passage has properly chrysolite. The Phenicians probably first brought the chrysolite from Tarshish.

CHRYSPORASUS = golden green. A precious stone of the beryl kind, usually of a greenish-golden colour, like a leek. (Rev. xxi. 20.)

CHUB. A country coupled with Egypt and Ethiopia. Some understand Coena, a port of Ethiopia; others think it is an error of the scribes for LUB = Libya; or perhaps NUB = Nubia. (Ezek. xxx. 5.)

CHUN. A Phenician city. The parallel passage, 2 Sam. viii. 8, reads “Berothai.” Perhaps Coena on Lebanon. (1 Chron. xviii. 8)—See BEROOTHAL.

CHURCH. This word is probably derived from the Saxon cirk, the same as the Scotch kirk; and may be a contracted form of the Greek kuriakon = “the Lord’s house.” But the Greek word ekklésia, translated “church,” properly signifies “an assembly” of persons for any purpose, either common or religious. (Acts xix. 33, 41.) The term “church” is used generally of the people of God in all ages, inasmuch as the religion of the Bible is, and ever has been, and ever will be, but one religion, all the faithful worshippers of God are one in Christ Jesus; (Gal. iii. 28;) whether in heaven or earth they form but one family in Him. (Eph. iii. 15.) It also designates the universal church of Christ on earth, the aggregate of the faithful of every nation, kindred, tongue, and people. (Matt. vi. 18; 1 Cor. xii. 28; Gal. i. 13; Col. i. 24; 1 Tim. iii. 15; Heb. xii. 23.)

The term is also applied particularly to any assembly or congregation of Christians, associating in one place, for the solemn worship of God; as the church at Jerusalem, Antioch, Corinth, etc. (Acts ii. 47; viii. 1; xiii. 1; 1 Cor. i. 2; iv. 17; xvi. 19.) As every congregation was a church, it constituted in itself the highest organ of authority; the pastor and the elders were, not its masters, but its superintending members, and the ultimate decision, in all important emergencies, rested with the whole congregation of the faithful. (Acts xiv. 4; xxi. 22, 30; xx. 28.) Of the church or community of the redeemed, the Lord Jesus Christ is “the Head;” and the church is called “His body.” (Eph. i. 22; Col. i. 18, 24.) The various figures employed by the sacred writers, to denote the nature of His relations to the church, and its relations to Him, are of the most significant character. In His Godhead, Jesus is “the rock” = foundation; and in His humanity He is the “foundation stone” or “chief corner stone,” on whom the whole structure is dependent. (Matt. xvi. 18; 1 Cor. iii. 11; Eph. ii. 20; 1 Pet. ii. 6.) The church is called “God’s building,” “His temple,” and “the kingdom of God.”
which “shall stand for ever.” (1 Cor. iii. 9; Eph. ii. 21; 1 Pet. ii. 5; Dan. ii. 44.) As every stone is composed of a countless number of small particles, held together by attraction; so the church of Christ, composed of all true believers, united in holy fellowship, is spoken of as “the stone cut out of the mountain without hands,” overpowering every system of error, and eventually “filling the whole earth.” (Dan. ii. 34, 35, 44, 45; Heb. viii. 11.)

CHURN.—See BUTTER.

CHUSHAN = RISHATHAIM = most wicked Ethiopian. A king of Mesopotamia, who oppressed the Hebrews seven years. He is styled by Ezechiel, king of Tyre and Sidon. (Judg. iii. 8–10.)

CHUZA = earthly. The steward of Herod Antipas. (Luke viii. 3.)

CILICIA = rough or stony region. A province of Asia Minor, bounded north by Cappadocia, Lycaonia, and Isauria; south by the Mediterranean; east by Syria; and west by Pamphylia. Tarsus, one of its chief cities, was the birthplace of Paul; and near to it is the tomb of Julian the Apostate. The synagogue of “them of Cilicia,” (Acts vi. 9), was a place in Jerusalem, appropriated to the use of the Jews who might be at Jerusalem from the province of Cilicia. (Acts vi. 10; xvi. 23, 41; xxi. 39; xxii. 3; xxiii. 34; xxvii. 5; Gal. i. 21.)

CIMAH.—See PLEXADES.

CINNAMON = cane-like. The Hebrew term kinnamos, denotes the inner bark of the Cinnamomum Zeylanicum, a tree which grows chiefly in Ceylon: and being peeled off, and cut into stripes, it is rolled up into the cane-like form in which it is usually seen. The tree is said to be about twenty feet in height, and spreads into numerous branches; the bark is of a dark red colour, of a poignant taste, aromatic, and very agreeable. Cinnamon was one of the ingredients in the holy anointing oil with which the tabernacle and its vessels were anointed. (Ex. xxx. 23; Prov. vii. 17; Sol. Song iv. 14; Rev. xviii. 13.)

The Hebrews received this Indian production through the Arabians, who, at an early period had commercial intercourse with Ceylon and continental India, as they were the first navigators of the Indian Ocean. (Gen. xxxvii. 25.)

CINNEROTH.—See CINNABAR.

CIRCUMCISION. The national ordinance of the Hebrews, in which the prepuce or foreskin was cut away, as a symbol of purity and consecration. The rite was established as the token of Jehovah’s covenant with Abraham, who immediately subjected himself and all the males of his family to its observance. (Gen. xvii. 9–14.) The instrument used for this purpose, was a knife, a razor, or even a sharp stone. (Ex. iv. 25; Josh. v. 3.) We learn from Herodotus, Diodorus Siculus, Strabo, and the prophet Jeremiah, (ix. 25, 26), that in Egypt the priests, and many of the laity, were circumcised; and this fact is confirmed from some of the Egyptian mummies examined by the French Commission. They probably borrowed the rite from the descendants of Abraham. The Hebrews esteemed circumcision a rite of such a high and indispensable nature, that it could not be withheld from a single individual without discredit and disgrace. (Gen. xxxiv. 15; Josh. v. 9; Jer. ix. 24, 25.) They did not neglect it when in Egypt, though it was omitted in their journey through the wilderness, for obvious reasons. (Ex. xii. 44; Lev. xii. 3; John vii. 22, 23.) The son on the eighth day after his birth was circumcised. By the fulfilment of this rite he was consecrated to the service of the true God, and became a partaker of the advantages of the Hebrew nationality. (Gen. xvii. 10; Rom. iv. 11; John vii. 23.) This distinguishing ordinance did not constitute individuals members of the church of God; but like baptism under the Christian dispensation, by which the ancient rite was superseded, it placed them in the midst of peculiar privileges, whence they could derive instruction in the holy oracles, and in the fear of the Lord; and an obligation rested upon the parents to point their children to that purification of heart symbolized by the external rites. (Gen. xviii. 19; Ex. xii. 26, 27; xiii. 8, 14; Rom. ii. 25; iii. 1, 2.) Hence the terms “uncircumcision” and “uncircumcised” are also frequently used to denote impurity or uncleanness generally, and to “circumcise the heart” was to become docile and obedient. (Ex. vi. 12, 30; Lev. xxvi. 41, 42; Deut. x. 16; xxx. 6; Jer. iv. 4; vi. 10; ix. 36; Ezek. xlv. 7; Acts vii. 51; Rom. ii. 25—29; Col. ii. 11.) Circumcision may also have had reference to certain physical and sanitary advantages. The pains, resulting from circumcision, according to the Mahomedans, who still practise the rite, are the severest on the third day. The Jews who renounced Judaism under the Roman government, sometimes essayed to erase the mark of circumcision; probably the term “condemnation” is an allusion to this operation. (1 Cor. vii. 8; Phil. iii. 2, 3.) This ancient rite became equally indifferent and unnecessary on the abrogation of the Mosaic law by the destruction of the temple.

CIS.—See KIS.

CISTERN. As streams and fountains are few in Palestine, as compared with Europe, and the rain falls periodically, at spring and autumn only, the inhabitants are obliged to collect water during the rainy season in tanks and cisterns. There are many ancient cisterns of very large dimensions, at this day, in different parts of Palestine. They are found in cities and in private houses; and were generally, if not universally, private property. (Num. xxxi. 22.) Some were formed by merely excavating the earth; others were covered reservoirs, into which the water was conducted, and others still were lined with wood, or cement, or hewn out of the rock, with great labour, and ornamented with much skill. (2 Kings xvi. 10; 2 Chron. xxv. 10; Prov. v. 15; Isa. xxxvii. 16.) The main dependence of Jerusalem for water at the present day is on its cisterns; and this has probably always been the case. There are immense ancient cisterns existing under the area of the temple, supplied partly from rain water, and partly by the aqueduct. When the cisterns or pits were empty, there was a tenacious mire at the bottom, and they were used as the places of extreme punishments. (Gen. xxxvii. 24; Ps. xl. 2; Jer. xxxviii. 6.) Worldly enjoyments are called “broken cisterns that can hold no water.” (Jer. ii. 13.)

CITIES. Many of the cities mentioned in the Bible are of extreme antiquity. Hebron and Zoar were ancient cities; and Damascus is supposed to be the oldest city in the world. From the existing remains of Thebes, Nineveh, and Babylon, we learn that they were not only very large cities, but were adorned with splendid palaces and temples; and some of them had open squares and large gardens. As early as the time of Abraham numerous towns and cities existed in Palestine; and when the Hebrews took possession of the country, some of them were fortified and populous. (Josh. vii. 10—25; x. 2.) The streets of ancient cities were generally narrow, so that, in some of them, loaded camels could not pass each other; and sometimes mats were stretched over them from house to house for shade, as in Cairo and Alexandria in the present day. Cities were sometimes “walled” or “fenced,” and fortified with watch-towers; (Num. xiii. 28; Deut. iii. 5;) and the gates were covered with plates of iron or copper. (Ps. cvii. 16; Is. xlv. 2; Acts xii. 10.) Around the gates of cities was the principal concourse of people. (Neh. viii. 1; Job. xxix. 7.) The “cities with suburbs” were the forty-eight cities given to the Levites. (Num. xxxv. 1—8; Josh. xxi. 41, 42.) Jerusalem is called “the city of God;” (Ps. xlvi. 4; Deut. xxi. 5;) “the holy city;” (Dan. ix. 24; Neh. xii. 1;) and “the city of David.” (1 Chron. xi. 5.) Bethlehem is also called “the city of David.” (Luke ii. 11.) A city and its inhabitants are frequently described under the similitude of a mother and her children; hence “the children of Zion.” (Joel ii. 23.) Cities are also characterized as “virgins,” “widows,” and “harlots,” according to their different CLAUDA = broken. A small island off the S. W. coast of Crete. It is now called Gozo. (Acts xxvii. 16.)

CLAUDIA = lame, halting, or waverling. A Roman lady converted to the Christian faith by Paul. (2 Tim. iv. 21.)

CLAUDIUS = lame, halting, or waverling. The fifth Roman emperor, and successor of Caligula, more fully called Tiberius Claudius Nero Germanicus. He reigned from A.D. 41–54. (Acts xi. 28; xvii. 2.) In the fourth year of his reign, occurred the famine foretold by Agabus. (Acts xi. 28.) In his ninth year he banished all the Jews from Rome; and it is not unlikely that the Christians were, at that time, conformed with the Jews, and were banished likewise.

CLAUDIUS LYSIAS. A Roman tribune, commanding in Jerusalem. His conduct on two occasions, in reference to Paul, is creditable to his efficiency and humanity. (Acts xxii. 31–40; xxii. 1–30; xxiii. 1–35.)

CLAY. —See BRICK, and POTTER.

CLEAN and UNCLEAN. The division of animals into "clean" and "unclean," existed before the Flood, and was probably founded upon the practice of animal sacrifice. (Gen. vii. 2.) Those animals only, which divide the hoof and chew the cud, were regarded as clean. (Lev. xi. 3, 4; Ex. xxii. 31; xxxix. 15, 28; Deut. xiv. 21.) Judging from those enumerated, it will be found that birds of prey, generally, are accounted unclean; while those which eat vegetables are admitted as clean; so that the same principle is observed in a certain degree, as in distinguishing quadrupeds. What was the design of these distinctions, and how they were abolished, may be learned with sufficient accuracy from a comparison of various passages of Scripture.

COA = tender shoot, sprout, or gentle, tranquil. The name of a Christian at Philippi. (Phil. iv. 3.)

CLEOPAS = renowned of all. One of Christ's disciples. (Luke xxiv. 18.)

CLEOPHAS. —See ALPHAEUS.

CLERK. The Greek word grammateus, rendered "town-clerk," properly signifies a writer or secretary; and was used of the keeper of the archives or records of Ephesus. (Acts xix. 35.)

CLOAK. —See GARMENTS.

CLOTHES. —See GARMENTS.

CLOUD. A collection of vapours suspended in the atmosphere. When the Hebrews left Egypt in their march through the wilderness, a cloud—the symbol of Jehovah's presence—resembling a pillar, passed before the camp. In the day time, it was thick, dark, heavy; and in the night bright and shining, like fire. It also served as a signal for rest or motion. (Ex. xiii. 21; xiv. 19; xvi. 10; Num. xi. 25; xvi. 5.) There are frequent allusions to this symbol of the Divine presence. (Ex. xix. 9; xxxiv. 5; xi. 34, 35; 2 Chron. v. 13; 1 Kings viii. 10; Is. iv. 5.) A "cloud" is also the symbol of multitude and armies. (Isa. ix. 8; Jer. iv. 13; Heb. xii. 1.)

CNOIDUS. A town in Caria, jutting out from the S. W. part of Asia Minor, about 150 miles from Myra. (Acts xxvii. 7.) It is now a heap of ruins.

COAL. From the ligneous texture of coal, and the elaborate foliage so frequently apparent, as well as from its chemical constituents, we know that it consists of fossil vegetables, principally of trees of the coniferous family—pines and firs, together with numerous species of gigantic ferns, and other plants, which flourished in the luxuriant forests.
and swamps of the primeval world. Trees and gigantic plants are now nowhere so abundant on the earth, as are still the remains of those which form the great carboniferous herbaria entombed within it, and treasured up by Infinite Goodness for the use and enjoyment of man. These extensive forests and swamps were submerged in their native seats, or occasionally deposited in the bottom of the ocean, where they were compressed into strata and overlaid by rocks, and in the course of unknown ages were converted into coal. Chemical researches have shown, that where wood and vegetable matter are deposited in the earth, exposed to moisture, and excluded from the air, they decompose slowly, and evolve carbonic acid gas, thus parting with a portion of their original oxygen. By this means they become gradually converted into lignite or wood-coal, which contains a larger proportion of hydrogen than wood does. A continuance of decomposition changes this lignite into common or bituminous coal, chiefly by the discharge of carburized hydrogen, or ordinary illuminating gas. The inflammable gases which are always escaping from mineral coal, and are so often the cause of fatal accidents in mines, contain carbonic acid, carburized hydrogen, nitrogen, and olifant gas. The disengagement of all these gradually transforms ordinary or bituminous coal into anthracite, or, as it is sometimes called culm or splint coal. These carboniferous deposits are widely distributed over the earth; and chiefly belong to the middle palæozoic period. In some cases the upheaving of the earth's crust, dislocating the strata, have rendered the coal measures more accessible to man. Indications of coal are exhibited in various parts of the Lebanon mountains. At Cornale, eight hours east from Beirut, at 2,500 feet above the level of the sea, where the coal-seams are three feet in thickness, Mr. Brettel, an English engineer, was employed by the late Mohammed Aly, in excavating the coal, which proved to be bituminous, of a good quality, and mixed with iron pyrites in large numbers. The coal, it is said, looks well, and burns readily, with a clear yellow flame, The galleries enter the mountain horizontally. The number of workmen was 114, who were paid three piastres each, equal to sevenpence halfpenny per day. In 1837, the quantity of coal extracted was about 4000 tons. The Syrian coal was tried at the Pasha's cotton factories and furnaces in Egypt. Though fossil coal appears to have been known to the ancients, yet we have no evidence that the Hebrews, or other orientals, ever used it for fuel. Indeed, the Hebrew word gahelet signifies "a coal," "a burning coal," of raw wood, or other fuel. (Ezek. i. 13; Prov. vi. 28; xxv. 22; Isa. xlv. 19; Lev. xvi. 12; 2 Sam. xiv. 7; Ps. cxx. 10.) Though some are of opinion that fossil coal is alluded to in Job. xii. 21; 2 Sam. xxii. 9, 13; Ps. xviii. 8. The Hebrew word petham, also signifies "coal," "charcoal;" (Prov. xxvi. 13;) also a "burning coal." (Isa. xiv. 12; iv. 16.) So the Greek word anthrakismos, properly signifies charcoal. (John xviii. 11.) The roots of the rothem, a species of broom plant, translated "juniper," which abounds in the desert, are regarded by the Arabs as yielding the best charcoal. (Job. xxx. 4; Ps. cxx. 5.) As chimneys are but little known in the East, apartments are warmed by means of pans, chafing dishes or braziers of various kinds, which are set in the middle of the room. (Jer. xxxii. 22.) Even where chimneys are found, the fuel is burnt on the hearth, or against the back of the chimney. It is not uncommon to have a fire in a pit sunk in the floor, and covered with a mat or carpet. In all cases where wood is scarce, the orientals use for fuel the withered stalks of herbs and flowers; (Matt. vi. 33, 30;) thorns; (Ps. lviii. 9; Esol. vii. 6;) and animal excrements; cow dung is considered preferable to any other. (Ezek. iv. 12—15; xv. 4, 6; xxi. 32; Isa. ix. 5, 19.) "Coals upon the head," is a proverbial expression for kindness to an enemy, thus overwhelming him with shame and remorse for his enmity.
This watch was called by the Romans galliaesium. They divided the night into four watches of three hours each; that is, from six in the evening to nine; from nine to twelve; from twelve to three; and from three to six. The Romans declared the four watches by the sound of a trumpet; and Drakenborch says, the trumpet, which blew at three in the morning, was sounded three times to imitate the crowing of a cock. The two last watches were both of them called "cock-crowings," because cocks usually crowed in that space of time; hence the opinion that Christ did not refer to the crowing of a cock, but to the sounding of the trumpet by the Roman guard. We have no evidence in support of the Rabbinical opinion that cocks were not permitted to be kept in Jerusalem on account of the holiness of the place, for they were actually kept there as in other places. (Luke xiii. 34.)

COCKATRICE.—See SERPENT.

COCKLE. The Hebrew word beshah, rendered "cockle," signifies weed, or "noisome weeds." (Job. xxxi. 40.) The same word, in its plural form, designates bad grapes, unripe and sour, or "wild grapes." (Isa. v. 2, 4.)

COFFIN.—See BURIAL.

COLD.—See WINTER.

COLHOZEH = every ear. A descendant of Judah. (Neh. xi. 5.)

COLLEGE. The Hebrew word mishneh, rendered "college," simply means "the second part of the city." It has no reference to any kind of collegiate institution. (2 Kings xxii. 14; 2 Chron. xxxiv. 22; compare Neh. xi. 9; Zeph. i. 10.)—See SCHOOLS.

COLONY.—See PHILIPP.

COLOSSE = mutilation, pruning. A city of Phrygia Major, situated on the Lycaon, between Laodicea and Celsene, in the vicinity of the modern village of Chonae. Herodotus calls "Colosse a considerable city of Phrygia, in which the river Lycaon, falling into a chasm of the earth, disappears; then reappearing after a distance of about five stadia, it also discharges itself into the Meander." (vii. 30.) About A.D. 64, this city... was destroyed by an earthquake. The city was most picturesque ly situated under the immense range of Mount Cadmus. Several vestiges of the ancient city still remain, consisting of arches, vaults, squared blocks of stone, and the ruins of the theatre, with sarcophagi cut in the rocky ground. Christianity was early planted in this city. (Col. i. 2; v. 7-8; iv. 12, 13; Acts xvi. 6; xviii. 23.)

COLOSSIANS, EPISTLE TO THE. The Pauline origin of this Epistle is attested by quotations in Irenæus, Clement of Alexandria, Tertullian, and others. It was written while the apostle was a prisoner at Rome, near the close of A.D. 62, or early in 63. The principal occasion of this Epistle seems to have been the rise of certain heretical teachers at Colosse, who maintained doctrines compounded of the oriental emanation philosophy and some of the speculative part of Platonism—a kind of theosophico-aesthetic philosophy. The emanation-philosophy taught the derivation of many orders of beings of different ranks, first from the great Supreme, and then in succession from each other. To become capable of union with these, aesthetic practices and abstraction to all possible extent from every thing material and sensual, was deemed necessary. It would seem also from the Epistles to Titus and Timothy, that some of the professed converts to Christianity still retained much of this philosophy; hence, in this Epistle, the dignity of Christ, and his high exaltation over all these deities are so strenuously inculcated. General precepts of a practical kind, characteristic of the elevating power of Christianity, are also given.

COMFORTER. The Greek word Parádotēs, translated “Comforter,” is a title applied to the Holy Spirit. (John xiv. 16, 26; xv. 26; xvi. 7.) The same title is applied to Christ, and is rendered “Advocate.” (1 John ii. 1.) So also, when Christ says, “I will send you another Comforter,” He applies the title to Himself. (John xiv. 16.) Parádotēs is a term of general and comprehensivenesuse import, descriptive of all that is common to the work of Christ, and the work of the Spirit. As Christ is our Patron, Advocate, Mediator, Intercessor, Spokesman, or Helper before the throne, thereby securing for us the gift of the Spirit, and the highest comfort of access to the Father; (Heb. vii. 25; ix. 24;) so also, the Holy Spirit is not only our Advocate before the throne, but the “Helper of our infirmities,” and the “Witness” of our adoption, thereby securing us the highest comfort in the assurance of our acceptance with God. (Rom. viii. 16, 26, 27; 1 Cor. ii. 11—14.)

COMMANDMENTS.—See LAW.

COMMUNION. The faithful in the church of Christ, even while they struggle with the miseries of this world, have communion or “fellowship” distinctly with God the Father, (John xiv. 23; 2 Pet. i. 4; 1 John i. 8,) with God the Son, (1 Cor. i. 9; 1 John i. 3; Rev. iii. 20,) with God the Holy Ghost; (2 Cor. xiii. 14; Phil. ii. 1;) and with the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit conjointly, as dwelling with them, and making them “an habitation of God through the Spirit.” (John xiv. 23; xvii. 20—23; 1 John i. 3; 1 Cor. xii. 4, 6, 11, 12; Eph. ii. 18—22; 1 John v. 7.) The saints also partake of the care and kindness of the holy angels, who are called “ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation.” (Matt. xvii. 10; Luke xv. 10; Heb. i. 14.) The holy angels formed originally with man in his state of innocence, one unity. The fall which severed the link between man and God, broke also that between man and the holy world of spirits. By being reconciled to God through Christ, we are once more brought under one Head with the heavenly spirits, (Eph. i. 10,) and in the state of perfection enter into their society. (Heb. xii. 22, 23.) The communion of saints consists, not only in the external fellowship which they have in the word and ordinances of religion, (1 Cor. x. 16,) with all the members of the church, but they have also, individually, by the communication of the same Holy Spirit, an intimate spiritual union and conjunction with all the saints on earth as the living members of Christ. (Col. ii. 19; John i. 7.) Nor is this union separated by the death of any; but as Christ, in whom they live, is the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, so have they fellowship with all the saints, (Col. i. 12,) who from the death of Abel, have departed in the true faith and fear of God, and now enjoy the presence of the Father, and follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth: “So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham.” (Gal. iii. 9.)

Angels, and living saints, and dead,
But one communion make;
All join in Christ, their vital Head,
And of His love partake.

COMPANY. A large “travelling company” is now called “a caravan;” and this mode of journeying has always been common throughout the East. (Gen. xxxii. 7, 8.) When persons thus travelled, they provided themselves with every necessary, as there were no inns for the reception of travellers. The wealthy, and the females, generally travelled on camels or asses, which carried not only their merchandise, but also the provisions and a supply of water, and the requisite cooking utensils. Every caravan had a leader, who was acquainted with the route through the desert, and with the situation of the cisterns and fountains. The company composing a caravan sometimes consists of several hundred persons, and as many thousand camels. They generally start early, sometimes before day; and contrive to arrive at the resting place before the close of the day. Most of the internal trade of the East is still conducted by means of caravans. (Gen. xxxvii. 25; Job vi. 19; Isa. xxi. 13.) The Hebrews travelled in caravans, or companies, when they went up to Jerusalem at the three great annual festivals. (Ps. cxxi. 1—4; Luke ii. 42—44.) See Inn.

CONCILIATION.—See RECONCILIATION.

CONCUBINE. A woman who, without being married to a man, lives with him as his wife. But in the old Testament the term designates a lawful wife, but one of the second rank, inferior to the mistress of the house. She differed from a proper wife in that she was not married by solemn stipulation. Her issue was reputed legitimate, though the children of the first wife were preferred, in the distribution of the inheritance. Christianity restores the sacred institution of marriage to its original character, and concubinage is ranked with fornication and adultery. (Gen. xxv. 5, 6; Deut. xx. 10, 14; 2 Sam. xvi. 22; Matt. xix. 5; 1 Cor. vii. 2.)

CONDEMNATION. The state of all mankind, as offenders against God’s law, who are not only adjudged to be guilty, but have passed upon them the sentence of condemnation. The only in which the first human pair violated the Divine law, spiritual life was forfeited, they were “condemned already”—dead in the eye of that law which “is holy, just, and good.” (Gen. ii. 17; iii. 3, 22; Ezek. xviii. 20; John iii. 18, 19; Rom. vii. 12; 1 John iii. 20, 21.) The same condemnation is passed upon all men, insomuch as all by nature are destitute of spiritual life—and all have sinned. (Rom. v. 12—15; vi. 23; Eph. v. 14.) If this condemnation can be cancelled, it must be by a process which no finite mind could anticipate or conceive. This process the gospel makes known, by showing us, that the effect of faith in Christ on the believer himself, is to remove his condemnation, and to place him in a state of justification before God. The term translated “damned” perhaps signifies condemned. (Mark xvi. 16; John v. 24; Rom. v. 1; viii. 1, 33, 34.) See Justification.

CONDUT.—See Pool.

CONEY. An old name for the rabbit. But the Hebrew word šaphôn, rendered “coney,” is descriptive of an animal chewing the cud; (Lev. xi. 5; Deut. xiv. 7;) inhabiting mountains and rocks; (Ps. civ. 18;) and gregarious and sagacious. (Prov. xxx. 26.) This description seems to point to the Myopus Sylvaticus, called by the Arabs edwar. This animal, which is common in Palestine, is of a duskyer colour, and of a stronger build, than a rabbit; having CON

tristles at its mouth, over its head, and down its back; and is entirely destitute of a tail. They do not burrow, but make their holes in the rocks, and their nests, are comfortably lined with moss and feathers.

CONFESSION. The open and penitential acknowledgment which a person makes of his sins. The Hebrew high-priest, on the annual ceremony of expiation, made confession of sins to Je-bovah in the name of the whole people.
When a Hebrew offered a sacrifice for sin, he put his hand on the head of the victim and confessed his faults. (Lev.
iv. 1—32.) Confession also signifies, a public acknowledgement of any thing as our own,—to own and profess the truth concerning Christ; (Matt. x. 82 ;)
so also Christ will confess the faithful in the day of judgment. (Luke xii. 8.)
Also to acknowledge our sins and offences to God, either by private or public confession; or to our neighbour whom we have wronged. (Ps. xxxii. 5; Matt. iii. 6; James v. 16; 1 John i. 9; Josh. vii. 12.)

CONIAH.—See JEHOLACHIN.

CONONIAH = whom Jehovah defends. A Levite in the time of Hezekiah. (2 Chron. xxxi. 12, 13; xxxiv. 9.)

CONSCIENCE. The supreme faculty of our mental constitution, by which,
under the influence of the Spirit of God, we irresistibly feel the difference between right and wrong. The exercise of conscience implies, says Booth, "a double or joint knowledge, namely, one of Divine law or rule, and the other of a man's own action. The peculiar office of conscience is to arbitrate and direct all our other powers, and propensities according to the will of God; and there is a certain feeling of violence and disorder when its dictates in this capacity are not obeyed. Its legitimate business is to prescribe that man shall be as he ought, and do as he ought. And its existence within us is an evidence for the righteousness of God, which keeps its ground amid all the disorders and aberrations to which human nature is liable. For as the existence of a regulator in a disordered watch shows the design of its maker, that its movement should harmonize with time; so conscience shows the design of our Creator that all our movements should harmonize with truth and righteousness."

This universal tribunal is established in the breast of every man. It may be weakened, perverted, stupified, defiled, and hardened, in various ways; and its decisions are more or less clear, just,
and imperative, according to the degree of improvement in the understanding and heart, and especially according to the degree in which its purity and sen-tiveness have been preserved and cultivated. (John vii. 9; Acts xxix. 1; xxiv. 16; Rom. ii. 14, 16; ix. 1; I Tim.
i. 5; Heb. xiii. 18.)

CONSECRATION.—See SANCTIFIcation.

CONVERSION. A change which consists in the renovation of the thoughts, dispositions, and life of a sin-nor, when he is turned, from sin and the power of Satan unto God. It is produced by the influence of the Holy Spirit on the mind, as the result of faith in Christ the only Saviour. Hence conversion, considered as a state of mind, is opposed both to a careless and unawakened state, and to that state of conscious guilt and slavish dread, accompanied with struggles after a moral deliverance not yet attained, which precedes our justification and regeneration; both of which are comprised in conversion. (John v. 24; Acts xv. 8; xxvi. 18; Eph. iv. 23, 24.)

COOS. A small and fertile island of the Egean sea, near the coast of Caria, and about 560 miles from Rhodes. It is now called Stanchio. (Acts xxii. 1.)

COPPER.—See BRASS.

COR.—See HOMER.

CORAL. The Hebrew word pes-sim, rendered "rubies," is supposed to designate red corals. (Prov. iii. 16; viii.
11; xx. 16; xxxi. 10; Job. xxxviii. 18;
Lam. iv. 7.) So also the word reymot, is, according to the Rabbins, properly rendered "corals." (Ezek. xxvii. 16; Job. xxxviii. 18.) Coral is a hard, cretaceous, marine production, arising from the union, and deposition of calcareous matter, of myriads of minute gelatinous animals of the polype kind. The coral animals abound, chiefly, in the Indian and Pacific oceans, and the Red sea. Ehrenberg found no less than 110 different species in the Red sea. These frail petrifying animals erect their house, which is afterwards their tomb, of delicate lamelle of carbonate of lime, formed by a vital function of secretion, which with age acquires a rocky hardness. Untold myriads of these animals, by their combined labours, have piled up their cellular dwellings on the crests of submarine rocks and mountains, either in beautiful tree-like structures, which, in a quiet sea have the appearance of a meadow covered with flowers, or in massive wall-works; until after toiling for thousands of years their edi-ifice reaches the level of the ocean, when the architects perish, and leave a coral island or reef, sometimes extending hundreds of miles, forming wave-resisting wall-works compared with which the more solid works of man are but trifles. Still these story cellular scaffoldings do not either promote the growth of islands or produce new ones, but serve only as borders and covers to the submarine rocks; and thus they delay the destruction of the islands by the waves of the ocean. Geologists state that the whole Jura formation consists of large elevated coral banks of the ancient world. The Red sea abounds with coral masses and reefs; and some of the houses on the southwestern coast of Arabia are built of this substance. Coral is of various colours, black, white, and red; that of the Red sea is chiefly white. The red species, which is chiefly fished up from the rocks in the Mediterranean sea, has always been considered the most valuable for ornaments.

CORBAN — a gift. An oblation made to God, or to His temple. The Jews sometimes swore by corbus, or by gifts offered to God. (Matt. xxviii. 18.) Our Saviour reproaches the Jews with cruelty towards their parents, in making a corbus of what should have been appropriated to their use. (Mark vii.

10—13.) The Pharisees permitted even debtors to defraud their creditors, by consecrating their debt to God; as if the property were their own, and not rather the right of their creditors.

CORE.—See KORAH.

CORIANDER. An umbelliferous plant, generally cultivated in the East. The seeds, which are aromatic, about the size of a peppercorn, are freely used by the orientals as a grateful spice, and as an important ingredient in currie powder. The appearance of the manna which fell in the wilderness is compared to coriander seed. (Ex. xvi. 31; Num. xi. 7.)

CORINTH. A celebrated Grecian city, the capital of Achaia proper, situated on the isthmus between the Aegean and Ionian seas. It was one of the most populous and wealthy cities of Greece, and possessed singular advantages for commerce; as it was a mart for the exchange of Asiatic and European goods. It became celebrated for its wealth and magnificence, as well as for the learning and ingenuity of its inhabtants. The city was famous for the worship of Venus; and in its vicinity were celebrated the Isthmian games. Corinth was destroyed by the Romans during the Achaean war, about 146 B.C. It was restored by Julius Caesar, and became the capital of the Roman province of Achaia and the seat of the proconsul. But while it soon regained its ancient splendour, it also relapsed into all its former dissipation and licentiousness. Here Paul resided for more than eighteen months, and gathered a large church, which was afterwards not wholly exempt from Corinthian vices. (Acts xviii. 1—18; xix. 1; 1 Cor. i. 2; 2 Cor. i. 1, 23; 2 Tim. iv. 20.) In conse-cuence of the late war between the Greeks and Turks, Corinth has been reduced to a miserable heap of ruined hovels, affording very insufficient shelter to some wretched outcasts of the province of Roumelia. The city has been so often sacked and plundered, that not a column of the Corinthian order exists in the place; though seven fluted columns of the more ancient Doric order are still standing.
CORINTHIANS, EPISTLES TO THE

The Pauline origin of the First Epistle is alluded to by Irenaeus, Ignatius, Polycarp, Clement of Alexandria, and others. It was written at Ephesus, in A.D. 57, or about four years after the church at Corinth was organized. During that interval, the church had been divided by several parties, each claiming an apostle as their chief. And it would also seem that some false teacher had appeared among them, and had succeeded in exciting strong prejudices against the apostle. To vindicate his own ministerial character and office from the aspersions and calumnies that were heaped upon him by his opponents, to defend and establish the doctrines which he had preached to them, and to answer some enquiries they had put to him, and to furnish them with rules of conduct adapted to their peculiar circumstances, temptations, and faults, seem to have been the main design of this first Epistle. (1 Cor. i. 10—31; vii. 1.) It contains also the most perfect and triumphant argument for the doctrine of the resurrection. (1 Cor. xv. 3—57.) Dr. Davidson calls this Epistle “the apostle’s masterpiece of practical theology, as the Epistle to the Romans is of doctrinal.” The Pauline origin of the Second Epistle to the Corinthians is attested by Irenaeus, Athenagoras, Clement of Alexandria, Tertullian, and others. It appears to have been written at Philippi, about A.D. 58. It seems to have been the design of the apostle to continue the good influence which the former Epistle had exerted, and to furnish grounds of comfort and confidence to the steadfast believers. He refers to his own labours among them; and exhorts them to contribute for the poor saints in Judea. He also asserts his apostolic power and character in the face of his refractory enemies. Some have supposed, from 1 Cor. v. 9, that the apostle had written another Epistle to the Corinthians, which is no longer extant. However, we see no grounds whatever for supposing that any book of the new Testament is lost.

CORMORANT. A water-bird, about the size of a goose. The Hebrew word שָׁלַח, rendered “cormorant,” designates a water-fowl, a species of pelican which casts itself from high rocks into the water after fish. Dr. Geddes renders it “the sea-gull.” (Lev. xi. 17; Deut. xiv. 17.) The Hebrew word קֶשֶׁה rendered “cormorant,” in Isa. xxxiv. 11; Zeph. ii. 14, seems to denote the pelican.

CORN.—See WHEAT.

CORNELIUS = a corn. A Roman centurion at Caesarea. He was a Gentile by birth, and though the highest character is given of him as a religious man, he was regarded by the Jews as an unclean person. His prayers, being offered in the faith of a promised Messiah, were heard; and God was pleased to send Peter to make known to him the plan of salvation through a crucified and risen Redeemer. Thus the door of faith was opened to the Gentiles; Cornelius and his family became converts to the Christian religion. (Acts x. 1—48.)

CORNER-STONE. The foundation on which the angles of a building rest, in order to unite the different sides. Hence Christ, as the foundation of the Christian church, is called “the Head,” or “Chief Corner Stone, inasmuch as He unites in one compact and regular building, Jews and Gentiles, constituting them “an holy temple in the Lord.” (Eph. ii. 20; Isa. xxviii. 16; Zech. x. 4; Matt. xxvi. 42; 1 Peter ii. 6.) And, as Christ will be the cause of aggravated condemnation to those who reject Him, He is called “a stone of stumbling.” (Isa. viii. 14; Matt. xxi. 44; Rom. x. 9, 33; 1 Cor. i. 23; 1 Pet. ii. 8.)

CORNET. An instrument of music, either made of horn, or shaped like a horn; used by the priests, and giving a loud shrill sound. (1 Chron. xiv. 28.)

CORRUPTION, MOUNT OF.—See OLIVES, MOUNT OF.

COSAM = an oracle, divine sentence. One of Christ’s ancestors. (Luke iii. 28.)

COUCH.—See BED.

COUNCIL. The Sanhedrin or supreme council of the Jewish nation, was composed of seventy members besides the high priest, in imitation of the seventy elders appointed by Moses. (Num. xi. 16—25; Jos. Ant. ix. i. 1.) The members were selected from the former high priests and the chief priests or heads of the twenty-four courses; elders; and scribes or lawyers. The high priest for the time being was ex-officio president; and a vice-president sat at his right hand. The Sanhedrin had cognizance of all important causes, both civil and ecclesiastical, and appear to have met ordinarily in a hall not far from the temple; though on extraordinary occasions they were sometimes convened in the high priest's palace. (Matt. xxvi. 3—57.) It was before this tribunal that Christ was arraigned. (John xix. 6—16; Matt. xi. 4; 22; xxvi. 59; Mark xiv. 55; xv. 1; John xi. 47; Acts v. 21, 27, 84, 41; xiii. 30; xlii. 1, 15, 20, 28; xiv. 20.) The smaller councils or tribunals were subordinate to the Sanhedrin. (Matt. x. 17; Mark xiii. 9.)

COURT.—See Holo. COVENANT. The Hebrew word berith, rendered "covenant," may refer to the cutting together of the contracting parties; or, as others think, to the cutting in pieces of the victims which were sacrificed on concluding a solemn covenant, and between the parts of which the contracting parties were accustomed to pass. (Gen. xv. 9—21; Jer. xxxiv. 18.) Hence, a covenant is properly an agreement between two parties, contracted deliberately, and with solemnity. But where one of the parties is infinitely superior to the other, as in a covenant between God and man, the term cannot signify a mutual compact, but rather an arrangement or promise on the part of God in respect to men, in consequence of which certain blessings are secured to them by His promise, on condition that they comply with the demands which He makes, by obedience to His precepts. (Gen. xii. 12; Ex. xxxiv. 10—12.) So also the Greek term diathke, like the Hebrew berith, embraces both precept and promise; and the words are commonly used to designate the whole Jewish economy or dispensation, with its conditions and promises. (Ex. xix. 5; Deut. iv. 18; ix. 9—11; Num. x. 39; Acts vii. 8; Rom. ix. 4.) The first covenant with the Hebrews was made when the Lord chose Abraham and his posterity for his people, and the seal of it was circumcision; (Gen. xvii. 1—14;) a solemn renewal of this covenant was made at Sinai, comprehending all who faithfully observed the law of Moses. (Ex. xxiv. 7—8; Gal. iii. 17; iv. 24.) Hence this is called "the old testament," (2 Cor. iii. 14,) or "the first covenant." (Heb. viii. 7, 9, 18; xii. 1.) The term "covenant" is also employed in a similar way, in order to designate the new economy or dispensation of Christ, with all its conditions and promised blessings, which God established for the benefit of all nations, through Jesus Christ, the most exalted of all the descendants of Abraham; and which was the development of that scheme which was begun by God with the promise of a son to Abraham. This is called "the new testament." (2 Cor. iii. 6;) "the second covenant," (Heb. viii. 7, 8;) also "the better covenant." (Heb. viii. 6—18;) inasmuch as it affords much greater privileges. (Jer. xxxi. 31—34.) The "new covenant," of which Christ is the Author and Mediator, is the most solemn and perfect of the covenants of God with men. It comprehends all who believe in Him, and are in His church; and, as an "everlasting covenant," must subsist to the end of time. The Son of God is the guarantee of it; it is confirmed or ratified by His blood; the end and object of it is eternal life to every believer; and its constitution and laws are infinitely more exalted than those of the former covenant. (Mark xiv. 24; 1 Cor. xi. 25; Heb. ix. 14—18; xii. 24.) The old covenant, which had no power to remove the spiritual penalty of guilt, embodied a symbolical representation of the great blessings and truths unfolded in the new and better covenant. And, though the new covenant was not ratified befor the death of Christ, yet was it revealed to the saints of the former dispensation, who enjoyed salvation through prospective faith in His sacrificial death. (Heb. ix. 15-20.) A "covenant of salt," perhaps ratified by eating salt, designates a perpetual or an everlasting covenant. (Num. xviii. 19; Lev. ii. 13; 2 Chron. xiii. 5.)

COW.—The Hebrew word paroth, rendered "kine," (Gen. xii. 3, 3, 4,) and "heifer," (Num. xix. 2.) properly signifies heifers or young cows in milk; (1 Sam. vi. 7; Job xxii. 10;) also as bearing the yoke. (Hos. iv. 16.) By the Mosaic law, (Lev. xxii. 28,) a cow and her calf were not to be killed on the same day. Similar precepts are found in Ex. xxiii. 19; Deut. xxii. 6, 7. Whether they were designed to prevent inhumanity, or referred to some heathen custom, is uncertain.

COZ = a horn. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 8.)

COZBI = lyings, fakes. The daughter of a Midianitish prince, whom Phinehas slew, in the Hebrew camp. (Num. xxv. 15, 16.)

CRACKNELS.—See Bread.

CRANE. A large bird of passage, belonging to the heron tribe. But the two Hebrew words ess and agor, rendered "crane" and "swallow," properly signify the "swallow twittering," or "chattering." (Lev. xxxviii. 14.) The term agor, also seems to designate a species of "swallow." (Jer. viii. 7.)

CREATION. In the opening of the archeial documents, incorporated by Moses in Genesis, we have the inspired narrative of the creation; which was probably Divinely revealed to the first human pair. (Gen. i. 1—31; ii. 1—3.) From this primordial record, and equally from scientific deductions, we learn, that at a point in the flow of infinite duration called "the beginning," God created the heaven and the earth. The first act of creation was the origination of the matter of the universe. And it is not improbable that the original state of matter which God created "to make"—brought into existence for the purpose of making into various forms and adaptations—was the goanna, as that is the simplest and most homogeneous of all forms of matter. He then formed the dependent universe in all its extent, as existing at that point which was the first in a series of Divine arrangements. The creation of the material and intellectual universe is expressly ascribed to Christ—the Word. (John i. 3; Col. i. 16.) After the first verse of Genesis, which declares the beginning creation of all things, an immense interval, of which no account is preserved, succeeded, before the scenes described in the second verse. During this vast interval, of perhaps millions of years, the earth passed through the various changes which geology indicates. Under its several conditions there were successive creations and destructions of plants and animals, the remains of which appear embedded in the rocks; showing how, in slow and solemn majesty, as period succeeded period, the several dynasties of fish, reptiles, birds, and mammiferous quadrupeds have, after the lapse of unknown ages, reigned in turn; each in succession ushering in a higher scene of existence. During this interval of undefined periods the volcanic fires had fused and crystallized the granite, electrical shocks had interlaced the earth with veins of metal, ferruginous deposits of primeval waters were turned into iron, fragments of rocks were ground into sand and clay, primeval forests and plants were turned into coal, races of animals were changed into masses of chalk and limestone, and the constant action of the water had worn and washed down the surfaces of rocks into valleys and plains of vegetable soil. The internal fires, raging in their prison-house, frequently burst through the crust which confined them, and mountains and continents were upheaved from their ocean beds where they had been formed, and stratified rocks were tilted from their horizontal position, while the older continents were in their turn gradually washed away and deposited in the bottom of the primeval seas, to be stratified and formed anew. The numerous strata composing the various rocks, and the successive groups of petrified animals, some of which were terrible in size and form, while of others, many thousands are found in a square inch of stone—entombed at the depth of thousands of feet from the surface, show, that during these apparently endless cycles, one series of strata after another was deposited, elevated, and peopled with vegetable and animal life, to be obliterated and give place to another, till the last of the series. Thus was the earth, with its inexhaustible treasures, preparing, by Infinite Wisdom and Benevolence, for the habitation of the human race. From the second verse in Genesis and onwards, we have account of what took place on the portion of the earth destined for the first habitation of man. As in the previous changes through which the earth had passed, during the successive periods of the undefined interval, we have no reason to suppose that any one of them, during the same period, was universal in its extent; so also the narrative of the six days can scarcely refer to the whole earth, but only to that portion in which man was to be first placed. The region of the Adamic creation, Dr. J. Pye Smith supposes, was a part of Asia, lying between the Caucasian ridge, the Caspian sea, and Tartary, on the north; the Persian and Indian basins on the south; and the high mountain ridges which run at considerable distances, on the eastern and the western flank. This section of the earth was first, by atmospheric and geological causes of previous operation—perhaps the subsidence of the region by a movement of the igneous mass below—under the will of the Almighty, brought into the condition of superficial water, or some kind of general disorder, designated by the Hebrew words tow-sabot, rendered "without form and void." This region is described as overflowed with water, and its atmosphere, in consequence of the subsidence, so turbid that extreme gloominess prevailed. The Divine power acted through the laws of gravity and molecular attraction; and, where requisite, in an immediate, extraordinary, or miraculous manner. The atmosphere became so far cleared as to be, in some manner, pervious to light; the watery vapour collected into clouds; elevations of land took place by igneous force; the waters flowed off into the lower parts; the land was clothed with vegetation instantly created; the atmosphere became pellucid by the brightness of the sun; animals were produced by immediate creation in the vigour of their nature; and last of all, God formed man: "In the image of God created He him." Here, in six natural days, took place all that is recorded from the second verse of the inspired narrative. Other centres of pre-Adamite creations were still existing, in different parts of the earth, of animals and vegetables adapted to the several climates; but responsible man, the crowning act of the Creator, the summary of all perfections scattered through the animal kingdom, and a small number of animals peculiarly serviceable to him, are endowed with a capacity of adaptation to nearly all the differences of climate and other circumstances of every region of the earth. With the introduction of the human, heaven-aspiring dynasty, into the scene of existence, the globe and its inhabitants were completed, creation ceased, and God's moral government on earth began. Then came the morning of the Sabbath, or several day of rest, of which no evening is mentioned. (Heb. iv. 10.) Since the beginning of this day, though, by the operation of laws continually in action, certain geological areas, both of land and water, have been formed, no new species of plants or animals have been created. The forces of nature have steadily pursued their wonted paths, maintaining that admirable equilibrium which we now behold, and which is necessary for our existence. With the present dynasty, all movement, all progress has passed into the realm of mankind, which is now, under Infinite Providence, accomplis-
CRE

ing its task of education, for a fuller development in the dynasty of the future. God's Sabbath of rest may be the present epoch of our globe; and the work of redemption—the elevatory process of the present dynasty of probation and trial, may be the work of His Sabbath day, as it is the only possible provision for that final act of recreation to "everlasting life," which shall usher in the terminal dynasty.—See EARTH.

CRESCENS.—growing. A Christian at Rome. (2 Tim. iv. 10.)

CRETE.—land of the refugees or exiles. An island of the Mediterranean sea, also called "Candy;" (Acts xxvii. 7, 12, 13, 21, margin; now called Candi.) It was originally peopled from Egypt, by a branch of the Caphthorim, whence sprung the Philistines; hence, Caphthor designates the island of Crete. It was anciently celebrated for its hundred cities, whence the epithet Hecatompolis. (Hom. ii. ii. 649.) Crete was formerly a rich and powerful kingdom, and is still remarkable for its delightful climate and fertile soil. Oil, corn, fruit trees, and vines are among its principal productions. The Cretans were excellent sailors, and its vessels visited all coasts. The character of this people for lying was thoroughly established in ancient times, which accounts for that detestable character which the apostle has given them, in a quotation from Callim. Hymn. in Jov. 8, "The Cretians are always liars." (Tit. i. 12; Pol. iv. 8, 11; Xen. An. i. 2. 9.) Paul, in his voyage from Corinth to Ephesus, on-route for Syria, appears to have visited Crete, and to have left Titus behind him. (Acts xvii. 18, 19; Tit. i. 5.) Whether the ship in which he embarked purposely made this circuit, or whether the apostle was cast upon the island in one of his "perils by sea," we cannot tell. (2 Cor. xii. 25, 26.)

CRIMSON.—See SCARLET.

CRISPING PINS. The Hebrew word מַגְרָבַים rendered "crisping pins," properly signifies pouches, pockets, purses, of a conical form. (Isa. iii. 22.) It is rendered "bag." (2 Kings v. 23.) They appear to have been richly ornamented purses, which the women wore attached to their girdles.

CRISPUS.—crisped, curled. A ruler of the Jewish synagogue at Corinth. (Acts xv. 8; 1 Cor. i. 14.)

CROSS. Crucifixion was regarded by the Romans as the basest and most ignominious death, deserved only by traitors and rebels; among which last Jesus was reckoned, on the ground of His making Himself king or Messiah. (Luke xxiii. 1—15.) It was called an accursed or infamous death. (Deut. xxxii. 23; Gal. iii. 13; 1 Cor. i. 23; Phil. ii. 8; Heb. xii. 2.) The person subjected to this punishment was deprived of his clothes, excepting something around his loins; and then beaten with rods or whips. Jesus was crowned with thorns and made the subject of mockery: but insults of this kind were not among the ordinary attendants of crucifixion. (Matt. xxvii. 29; Mark xv. 17; John xix. 2, 5.) After the scourging the individual was compelled to bear his own cross to the place of execution. The cross usually consisted of a piece of wood erected perpendicularly, and intersected by another at right angles near the top, so as to resemble the letter Τ. The offence for which the person suffered, was sometimes inscribed over the cross. (John xix. 19, 20.) On the perpendicular beam of the cross, which rarely exceeded ten feet in height, there projected a piece of wood which served as a support to the body. The victim was elevated to the projection, his hands and feet were then nailed to the cross. In order to render the sufferer less sensible to pain, the Jews were in the habit of giving him a medicated drink of wine and myrrh; (Prov. xxxi. 6;) this the Redeemer rejected. But he partook of the refreshing drink of vinegar and water offered to him by the Roman soldier. (Matt. xxvii. 34, 48.) The executioners were allowed the apparel of the sufferer, as the perquisite of their office. (Ps. xcvii. 13; Matt. xxvii. 35.) The crucified person lingered until life became extinct, not so much by loss of blood from the wounds in the hands and feet, as from the exhaustion consequent on the slow process of nervous irritation, accompanied with intense thirst. It was not uncommon for persons to linger two or more days on the cross; hence the surprise of Pilate at the comparative suddenness of Christ’s death. (Mark xv. 44.) In many cases death was mercifully accelerated, by breaking the bones, or piercing the vital organs. According to the Jewish law the body was removed at the approach of sunset, and buried the same day. (Deut. xxxi. 22, 23.) The immediate physical cause of the death of Christ can scarcely be ascribed, as some have supposed, to rupture of the heart, produced by extreme mental agony, under the weight of the sins of the world. The night of agony and restless fatigue which He had endured, and the painful posture of the body upon the cross, would cause an abundant flow of blood to the pulmonary, and other veins and arteries about the heart and chest, which, there accumulating, would rapidly produce exhaustion. After enduring the sufferings of the cross about six hours, He may have been still faintly alive, though to the Roman soldier who pierced His side He was apparently dead, because otherwise, the blood would not have flowed, and because the loud cry which He uttered is a symptom of syncope from to the great congestion of blood about the heart. The spear-wound, whence flowed the blood and watery liquid—lymph or serum—appears to have been in the cavity of the chest, perhaps the pericardium, and must have been necessarily fatal. Thus was the Lamb slain for us. And by the rending of the veil of His flesh, and the shedding of His blood, every hindrance of access to the Father of an Infinite Majesty, was consanctified for every believing soul. (Heb. x. 19, 20.)

CRo

CUB

CRUCIFY.—See Cross.

CRUSE.—See Bottle.

CRYSTAL. A glass-like transparent stone, the most refined kind of quartz, found in rocks, hence called rock-crystal. The Hebrew word סלע, rendered “crystal,” signifies glass. (Job xxviii. 17.) The word γαλάτη, rendered “pearls,” denotes ice, particularly crystal. (Job xxviii. 18.) And the word κρυστάλλος is rendered “ice;” (Job vi. 16;) “frost;” (Gen. xxxi. 49;) and “crystal.” (Ezek. i. 22.) So also the Greek name krustallon, like the Hebrew terms, denotes anything congealed, pul· lucid, hence it was usual to transfer that name to this colourless stone. (Rev. iv. 6; xxii. 1.)

CUBIT. A Hebrew measure of length, equal to the distance from the elbow to the end of the middle finger, and usually reckoned at six hand-breaths or twenty-one inches, which was the same as the Egyptian cubit. A larger cubit of seven hand-breaths, called “the cubit and an hand-breath,” or twenty-four and a half inches, is mentioned in Ezek. xi. 5; xliii. 13, compared with 2 Chron. iii. 3; which appears to have been the Babylonian cubit. It is probable that the cubit varied in different countries, and at different times. (Gen. vi. 15; Ex. xxv. 10; Ezek. xii. 8; Matt. vi. 27; John xxi. 8; Rev. xxi. 17.)

CUCKOW. The Hebrew word shak-hep, may perhaps designate the Egyptian sea-swallow, which has a resemblance to a gull; and seeks its food in the mud left by the Nile. (Lev. xi. 16; Deut. xiv. 15.)

CUCUMBER. A vegetable, very plentiful in the East, especially in Egypt, where they are very large, of fine flavour, and form a great part of the food of the people, especially during the hot months. (Num. xi. 5.) They are sometimes boiled and eaten with vinegar; or filled with flesh and aromatics, and made into a kind of puddings, which eat very well. On the banks of the Nile they grow very rapidly. They were also cultivated by the Hebrews in Palestine. (Isaiah i. 8.)

CUMMIN. An umbelliferous annual plant, closely allied in its structure and properties to the coriander and caraway, and still cultivated in the East, on account of the aromatic seeds which are principally used as a condiment. With the Hebrews it was cultivated in ploughed fields, and when ripe, the seeds were threshed out with a rod. The same method is observed in Malta at this day. (Isa. xxviii. 25—27; Matt. xxiii. 23.)

CUP. The Hebrews had cups and goblets, made of gold, silver, copper, glass, clay, etc., at a very early period. (Gen. xlv. 2.) Some of them were elegant and highly ornamented, (1 Kings vii. 26,) if we may judge from the specimens which have been found in the tombs of Egypt. The cups and bowls of bronze, found by Mr. Layard, in the ruins of Nimrod, are of exquisite workmanship, embossed in several compartments with figures of men and animals. The practice of divination by cups is of great antiquity in the East. (Gen. xlv. 15.) In a figurative sense, the term "cup" denotes afflictions or punishments. (Ps. lxxv. 8; Isa. li. 17; 22; Jer. xxv. 15; xliv. 12; li. 7; Lam. iv. 21; Hab. ii. 16; Ezek. xxiii. 31—33; Rev. xiv. 10; xvi. 19.) Also extreme suffering. (Matt. xx. 22; xxvi. 39; Luke xxii. 42; John xviii. 11; Heb. ii. 9.) The word "cup" is frequently used figuratively for a man's lot or portion. (Ps. xi. 6; xvi. 5; xxiii. 5.) The "cup of devils," was the symbol of idolatry and its rites. (1 Cor. x. 21; Rev. xvii. 4.) The "cup of blessing" was a cup of ceremony, as used at the passover, when the father of a family pronounced blessings to God over the cup. (1 Cor. x. 16.) Our Saviour, in the last supper, pronounced blessings over the cup, and said to his disciples, "Take this, and divide it among yourselves." (Luke xxi. 17.) The "cup of salvation," is the expression of thanksgiving to Jehovah. (Ps. cxvi. 18.)

Asyrian cup-bearer.

CUP-BEARER. An honourable officer in the royal household. The Hebrew word mashek is rendered "butler;" (Gen. xl. 1—23; xli. 9;) and "cup-bearer." (Neh. i. 11.) It was his duty to fill the cup and bear it to the king. (Gen. xl. 11; Neh. ii. 1.) The wood-cut represents a cup-bearer, from the ruins of Nimrud, presenting the cup, perhaps to Pul, or Tiglath-Pileser, and holding in the other hand a fly-flapper.
CURSE. The Divine maledictions are not merely imprecations, nor are they impotent wishes; but they carry their effects with them, and are attended with all the miseries they denounce or foretell. (Gen. iii. 14; iv. 11.) Holy men sometimes cursed particular persons, and these imprecations had their fulfilment. (Gen. ix. 25; xlii. 7; Deut. xxvii. 15, 16; Josh. vi. 26.) These curses were not the effects of passion, impatience, or revenge, and were not condemned like those mentioned in the law. (Ex. xxi. 17; xxii. 28; Lev. xix. 14.) Some suppose that the imprecatory passages in the Psalms should have been rendered as simple affirmations, or as merely declaratory of what will or may take place in regard to the wicked. But this view, as far as the Hebrew language is concerned, is untenable. These imprecations are not the utterances of malicious feelings, but the promptings of the Spirit of inspiration under which the Psalmist wrote. (Ps. lxxix. 24, 25; lv. 9.) Even our Saviour uttered awful anathemas against the hypocritical scribes and pharisees. (Matt. xxviii. 1—39; Mark iii. 5.) So also Paul denounced the conduct of Alexander. (2 Tim. iv. 14.) The indignation excited by cruelty and injustice, and the desire that crime should be punished, are not inconsistent with our duty to render blessing for cursing. (Matt. v. 44,) nor with that love of sinners which Christ has enjoined. These imprecations are justified by a primary and innocent feeling of our nature, a sense of justice; and it is only a morbid benevolence, a mistaken philanthropy, combined with very inadequate views both of the principles of the Divine government, and of the deeper necessities of our own moral nature, in him who denounces them as relics of a barbarous age. When outrageous cruelty or wickedness of any kind, meets with retribution, we feel that it is condign, just, deserved; and instead of this feeling being necessarily sinful, it may be like the feeling which prompted the imprecatory passages, the evidence of the tenderest compassion, a finely educated conscience, and of a character conform to the great standard of perfection. (Ps. lviii. 10; xxxvii. 8, 9.) Even the souls of the martyrs in heaven are represented as calling on God for vengeance. (Rev. vi. 9, 10.)

CURTAIN.—See VEIL.

1. CUSH = burnt, or black. The eldest son of Ham, and the ancestor of the Cushites or Ethiopians; (Gen. x. 6—8;) hence the name of the region of Cush, generally rendered "Ethiopia." (Gen. x. 7, 8.) This country, also called "Cushan," (Hab. iii. 7,) was flowed around by the river Gibon; (Gen. ii. 13; Isa. xviii. 1; Zeph. iii. 10;) and was inhabited by a people of black colour; (Jer. xiii. 23;) was opulent; (Isa. xlix. 8; xlv. 14;) and is very often coupled with Egypt. (Isa. xx. 3—5; xxxvii. 9; 2 Kings xix. 9; 2 Chron. xiv. 15; Ps. cxviii. 21; xxxviii. 4; Jer. xlv. 9; Ezek. xxx. 4—9; Dan. xi. 43; Am. ix. 7; Job xxxviii. 19.) We have no reason to suppose that the Cushites dwelt partly in Arabia, but that they are African nations; for nothing is proved by passages like Num. xiii. 1; 2 Chron. xiv. 9; xxi. 16.—See ETHIOPIA.

2. CUSH. A Benjamite at the court of Saul. (Ps. vii. in the title.)

CUSHI = an Ethiopian. 1. Joab's messenger to David, concerning the death of Absalom. (2 Sam. xviii. 21, 22, 23, 31, 32.) 2. The father of Shelemiah. (Jer. xxxvi. 14.) 3. The father of the prophet Zephaniah. (Zeph. i. 1.)

CUSTOM, RECEIPT OF.—See PUBLICAN.

CUTH or CUTHAH. One of the provinces whence colonists were brought by the king of Assyria, into the desolated kingdom of Israel. The city of Cuthah has been recently discovered by Col. Rawlinson, in Babylonia; and he says the ruins are almost equal to those of Babylon. (2 Kings xxi. 24, 30; Jos. Ant. xi. 14, 3; xi. 8, 6; xii. 5, 5.)

CYMBAL. An ancient musical instrument. (1 Chron. xiii. 8; xvi. 5; Ps. cl. 5.) It has generally been supposed that the symbols of the Hebrews resembled the modern instrument of that name, which was also known to the Greeks and Romans; but Mr. Osborn says no such instrument is anywhere depicted on the Egyptian tombs. The only one which at all approaches to it is the representation of a boy, having in each hand a metal bar, which he is striking together, in company with a harper, piper, and singer. It would thus seem that the small Egyptian cymbals, consisting of two metal plates, which are in the British Museum, belonged to Greek or Roman times. (1 Cor. xiii. 1.)
CYP

CYPRESS. A large tapering evergreen, of the pine genus, constituting along with the cedar, with which it is often joined, the glory of Lebanon. The Hebrew word bezech, is everywhere rendered “far tree;” but it properly designates the cypress — cypress; a tree which is now far more abundant upon Lebanon, than the cedar. (Isa. xvi. 8; xxvii. 24; lv. 13; lx. 13; Hos. xiv. 8; Zech. xi. 1, 2.) The stem yields a soft resin, somewhat like turpentine, with a pungent taste, but pleasant smell. Its wood, like that of the cedar, was employed for the floors and ceilings of the temple; (1 Kings v. 8, 10; vi. 15, 34; 2 Chron. ii. 8; iii. 5;) also for the decks and sheathing of ships; (Ezek. xxvii. 5;) for spears; (Nah. ii. 3;) and for musical instruments. (2 Sam. vi. 5.) The timber is not subject to putrefaction, nor to corrosion by worms; it has been known to suffer no decay by the lapse of eleven hundred years. Many of the coffins or mummy-cases of Egypt are found at this day of the cypress-wood. The “gopher-wood” = pitch wood, is identical with the cypress. (Gen. vi. 14.)

The Hebrew word tsirah, rendered “cypress,” denotes the evergreen oak. (Isa. xiv. 14.)

CYPREUS = faire, or fairness. A large island of the Mediterranean sea; extremely fertile, and abounding in wine, oil, and mineral productions. It is supposed to be the same with the ancient “Chittim.” (Gen. x. 4.) The inhabitants were luxurious and effeminate. The presiding divinity of the island was Venus, who had a celebrated temple at Paphos. Of the Cyprian cities, Salamis and Paphos are mentioned. (Acts iv. 36; xi. 19; xiii. 4; xv. 39; xxi. 8; xxvii. 4.) —See CHITTIM.

CYRENE. A city of Libya Cyrenaica, in northern Africa, situated in a plain about 500 miles west of Alexandria, and only a few miles from the Mediterranean coast. There was anciently a Phoenician colony, called Cyrenaica, or “Libya about Cyrene,” (Acts ii. 10,) though the city of Cyrene seems to have been a Greek colony. Cyrene is now a heap of desolated ruins, and is called Caoura. The Cyrenian Jews had a synagogue at Jerusalem. (Matt. xxvii. 32; Mark xv. 21; Luke xxii. 38; Acts vi. 9; xi. 20; xlii. 1.)

CYRENIUS. A Roman senator of an obscure family, called more fully, Publius Julius Quirinius, but raised to the highest honours by Augustus. (Tacit. Ann. iii. 48.) He was sent as governor, or proconsul, to Syria, in order to take a census of the whole province. There appear to have been two distinct censuses or enrollments in Syria, for the purpose of raising the annual tax. The first was made at the closing part of the reign of Herod, about the time of Christ’s birth, when Saturninus was proconsul of Syria. In reference to this first census, and in order to distinguish it from the second, the Evangelist says, “This census occurred before Cyrenius was governor of Syria.” (Luke ii. 1—3.) It is not improbable that Cyrenius may have aided Saturninus in taking the enrollment. Theudas or Matthias appears to have headed an insurrection in opposition to this census. (Acts v. 36; Jos. Ant. xvii. 6. 2—4.) The second census, which was made about nine years after, was connected with the subjugation of Judea to a Roman province, when Cyrenius was governor of Syria. Judea, the Galilean, raised an insurrection in opposition to this census. (Acts v. 37; Jos. Ant. xvii. 1. 1.) There could not have been an easier or more effective mode of taking the census, among the Jews, than through the connection of the public genealogical registers. Hence, Joseph, in the first census, was necessitated to go to Bethlehem; and even Mary herself may have been obliged to be personally present; at any rate, in the agitation of the period she did not wish to be left alone. In the meanwhile, a higher influence controlled her movements; for it had been foretold that the Messiah should be born in Bethlehem. (Mic. v. 2; Matt. ii. 5, 6.)

CYRIA = mistress, lady. A distinguished female unto whom John directed his second Epistle. She is called "the elec lady" in our version.
(2 John i. 5.)

Persians; but Herodotus intimates no more than that he was an Achemenian, the noblest tribe of the Persians, and the one to which their kings belonged.
Both agree that his mother was Man-dane, a daughter of Astyages = "Ahaemerus," (Dan. ix. 1.) king of Media.
The early history of Cyrus, as related by the Greek and Persian historians, is enveloped with much that is fabulous.
In the Scriptures we read of him only as the destroyer of Babylon and the restores of the Jews to their own country.
About the thirtieth year of his age, Cyrus revolted from Astyages, and freed the Persians from the Median yoke. Thus the Median empire passed from the Medes to the Persians, and was denominated from both people, B.C. 559. Cyrus reduced the affairs of the empire into order, united the Median and Persian dress; and married the only daughter of his uncle Darius, the son of Astyages, called "Darius the Median." Cyrus then turned his arms against Croesus, king of the Lydians, and took Sardis his capital, B.C. 546.
After this, Cyrus subjected Asia Minor, and all the country west of the Euphrates. Having defeated the Chaldean army not far from Babylon, Cyrus marched immediately, and without opposition, to the walls of that great metropolis, into which the retreating hosts had thrown themselves, and by diverting the course of the river which ran through it, he took the city, B.C. 539.
He then made his uncle Darius the Mede, viceroy of the Chaldeans, until he had consolidated his conquests.
Hence the years of Cyrus are not dated from his conquest of Babylon, but from the time when he himself came to reign there in person. Cyrus, in the first year of his reign over the Chaldeans, B.C. 538, caused an edict to be proclaimed throughout the empire, that all the Hebrews, without exception, were free to return to Judea, and rebuild the temple at Jerusalem. He accordingly delivered to the returning exiles, 5,400 sacred vessels of gold and silver, which Nebuchadnezzar had carried from Jerusalem to Babylon, pre-

CYRUS = the sun. A king of the Medo-Persians, and a conqueror of great renown. He was born about B.C. 590.
His father, according to Xenophon, was Cambyses, probably a viceroy of the Cyrus.

scribed the size of the temple, and directed that the expense of its erection should be defrayed from the royal treasury; all which particulars were verified by a written edict found fifteen years after, in the archives at Ecbatana. (Ezra i. 1-11; vi. 2-6.) Thus Divine Providence directed, that the Hebrew temple, which had been destroyed by a foreign king, should also by a foreign king be rebuilt. It is not unlikely that Daniel had shown to Cyrus the prophecies, in which, above one hundred years before he was born, he was mentioned by name. (Isa. lxxiv. 28; xliv. 1; Jer. i. 44.) Herodotus says that Cyrus was slain in a battle against the Massagetes, after a reign of twenty-nine years. But Xenophon asserts that he died peaceably in the seventh year of his reign; and was interred at Pasargade. Among the ruins near that city, in the plain of Murghab, about forty-nine miles from Persepolis, the tomb of Cyrus is still to be seen. Near to it is a square marble pillar, containing a sculpture in bas-relief, of what Mr. Vaux supposes to be a portrait of Cyrus himself; together with a trilingual cuneiform inscription, in Persian, Median, and Babylonian. The inscription reads: "I am Cyrus, the king; the Achæmenian." The woodcut is a copy of this remarkable monument, to which we have added the name of Cyrus from the inscription. The Persian name Kursash, is not unlike the Hebrew Korash = Cyrus.

D

DABBASHETH = heap, or hump. A place in the tribe of Zebulun. (Josh. xix. 11.)

DABERATH = the subduer. A town on the borders of Issachar and Zebulun. (Josh. xix. 12; xxi. 28; 1 Chron. vi. 22.) It is now a small village called Deburiya, lying at the base of Mount Tabor.

Both forms are copied from the Assyrian monuments. By the Chaldeans Dagon was called Oannes, which some suppose to be the same as the Egyptian On; hence they understand Dag-Non to signify Fish-On. Others identify Oannes with Noah. What particular deity is designated by Dagon it is difficult to say; perhaps some maritime deity like the Neptune of the Greeks and Romans. Several temples appear to have been consecrated to Dagon, which gave names to different places. (Josh. xv. 41; xix. 27; 1 Macc. x. 83; xi. 4.)

DALAIAH = whom Jehovah hath delivered. A descendant of king David.
(1 Chron. iii. 24.)

DALMANUTHA. A city or village near Magdala, on the west side of the lake of Gennesaret. (Mark viii. 10; Matt. xv. 39.)—See MAGDALA.

DALMATIA. A province of Europe on the east of the Adriatic sea, forming part of ancient Illyricum, and contiguous to Macedonia. (2 Tim. iv. 10.)

DALPHON = rain, tears. A son of Haman. (Est. ix. 7.)

DAMARIS. A Christian female at Athens. (Acts xvii. 34.)

DAMASCUS = activity, alertness. The metropolis of western Syria, usually called by the natives ash-Shams, by contraction for Dei alah ash-Shams = Damascus the Noble. It is also written Darmonik. (1 Chron. xviii. 5; 2 Chron. xxiv. 28, margin.) It lies out upon the desert, east of the mountains of Lebanon, surrounded by an extensive plain, at an elevation of 2,387 feet above the level of the sea. This venerable city, perhaps the most ancient in the world, is watered by the streams of the Barada, and seems merged in a sea of richest verdure. Indeed, the Plain of Damascus, almost surrounded by the desert, has always been celebrated for its fertility and consequent beauty. (Gen. xv. 2.) In the time of David, Damascus formed an independent state, and sent auxiliaries to the king of Zobah. David, however, defeated the armies of both, and placed a garrison in the city. (2 Sam. viii. 5, 6.) Yet, in the latter years of Solomon's reign, Rezon threw off the Jewish yoke, and restored the kingdom of Damascus. (1 Kings xi. 23-26.) Henceforward we find the kings of Israel in perpetual warfare with the kings of Damascus-Syria. (1 Kings xv. 18-22; 2 Kings xiv. 25-28.) Tiglath-pileser, king of Assyria, conquered and took possession of Damascus-Syria. (2 Kings xvi. 5-9; Am. i. 3-5.) Damascus in turn became a province of the Babylonian, Persian, Macedonian, and Syro-Grecian empires. The city afterwards fell under the Roman dominion; but was held for a time by Artes, king of Arabia, who had in it a viceroy or governor. (2 Cor. xi. 32, 33; Acts ix. 24, 25.) In A.D. 634, it was captured by the Saracens; and after several times changing hands, it was in 1517 taken from the Mameluke sultans of Egypt, by the Turks, and remained in their possession till 1832, when it was captured by the troops of Muhammed Aly. But in 1840, the powers of Europe restored Syria and Palestine to the nominal sway of the sultan. The Turks account Damascus one of the holy cities. It still continues to be one of the finest cities of Syria; the population in 1843 was estimated at about 111,552, of whom 11,772 are Christians, and about 5,000 Jews, who inhabit a separate quarter. Damascus is about seven miles in circumference. Many of the lower portions of the walls of the city, consisting of very large blocks of stone, are considered to be of great antiquity. Damascus is one of the most regular and least filthy of oriental cities. But few of the remains of antiquity go back beyond the Roman period. One of the streets is still called "Straight;" it is a mile in length, broad, well paved, and straight as an arrow. (Acts ix. 10, 11.) The houses are elegantly furnished, and the bazaars well stocked with merchandise. This opulent city is the great emporium for the exchange of the produce of the East and the West; and its commerce, carried on by caravans, is very extensive. The fabric called damask, a kind of cloth or stuff, was anciently manufactured at Damascus. The prophet mentions "the damask-curtained couch." (Am. iii. 12.)—See ABANA.

DAMNATION. — See CONDEMNATION.

DAN = judge. The fifth son of Jacob, born of Bilhah, and head of one of the tribes. In the list of the tribes, (Rev. vii. 5, 6.) that of Dan is found only in a few manuscripts, probably by the transcribers erroneously writing MANASSEH for DUM; as the tribe of Joseph is afterwards mentioned, which included Manasseh and Ephraim. The tribe of Dan had its portion between the possessions of Judah and Ephraim, on one side, and between Benjamin and the sea shore on the other. Their tract was pleasant and fertile, though abounding with winding vales and bluff hills, but it was by far the smallest portion; and hence they captured Laish for the planting of a colony.
(Josh. xix. 43, 47; Judg. i. 34, 35; xviii. 1; 1 Sam. v. 10; 2 Kings i. 2.)
2. A city built by the Danites, on the site of the Sidonian city Laish or Leshan. It lay at the northern extremity of the land of Israel, at the foot of Hermon and Lebanon, and near the western source of the Jordan. It was captured from the Sidonians, and named Dan after the founder of their tribe. It is now called Tel-el-Kady. (Judg. xvii. 7, 26—29; Josh. xix. 47; Joseph. Ant. i. x. 1;
v. 3. 1; viii. 3, 4.) It was a chief seat of Jeroboam’s idolatry, where one of the golden calves was set up. (1 Kings xii.
26, 27; xv. 20.) Dan was the northern limit of the land of Israel; hence the expression, “from Dan to Beersheba,” as denoting the whole extent of the Promised Land. (Judg. xx. 1; 1 Sam.
iii. 20; 2 Sam. xviii. 11.) For the word “Dan,” in Ezek. xxvii. 19, see V z d a n.
DANCING. The dances of the Hebrews were generally expressions of religious joy and gratitude on their national festivals; (Ps. cl. 4;) sometimes they were practised in honour of a conqueror, in triumphal processions; (Ex.
xx. 20, 21; Judg. xi. 34; 1 Sam. xvii.
6, 7;) and sometimes on occasions of domestic joy. (Jer. xxxiv. 4, 13; Luke xv. 25.) In the religious services, the timbre was employed to direct the dance, and it was led by some individual, whom the rest followed with measured step and devotional songs. Thus David is supposed to have led such a band.
(2 Sam. vi. 16—23.) Individuals often expressed feelings of joy in the same way. (Luke vi. 23; Acts iii. 8.) Though dancing was doubtless known from a very early period as an expression of religious joy, and also as a mere worldly amusement; (Job xxii. 11—15; Mark vi. 22;) yet it is worthy of remark, that the mingling of males and females, which is so common in modern dances, was unknown to the Hebrews; unless, a precedent may be found in the scene of idolatrous confusion and madness, when the children of Israel bowed themselves before the image of a calf. (Ex. xxxii. 19.)

DANIEL = judge of God. 1. A celebrated Hebrew wise man and prop-phet, attached to the court of Babylon.
He was of noble, if not of royal extraction; and was carried by Nebuchadnezer to Babylon, when a youth, together with the children of the king and nobles, as hostages, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, b.c. 606. (Dan. i. 1—6; 2 Kings xxiv. 1; 2 Chron. xxxv. 6.) He was taught the language and sciences of the Chaldeans, and then employed in the service of the king. (Dan. i. 1—4.)
At Babylon he was distinguished by the Chaldean name of Belteshazzar = Bel’s prince, i.e., whom Bel favours;
and with his three friends, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah, observed the Mosaic law as far as was practicable in their situation, and lived in the most pious manner, so that in the thirteenth year of the captivity, he is mentioned by Ezekiel, (xiv. 14, 16, 20,) in connection with Noah and Job. After three years of instruction, he stood before the king, that is, he obtained some oflice in the court, and excelled in wisdom, and particularly in sagacity in the interpretation of visions and dreams, and is therefore celebrated by Ezekiel, (xviii. 3;) as the wisest of his contemporaries. In time, most probably after all the expeditions of Nebuchadnezzar, he was raised to the highest dignity in the kingdom, but afterwards was neglected by the successors of that monarch, and was only superintendent of the learned men who were connected with the court. After the conquest of Babylon by Cyrus, and the elevation of Darius
the Mede to the viceroyalty of Chaldea, he was again advanced to be one of the three prime ministers of the kingdom, but through the machinations of the courtiers he was thrown into the den of lions, whence however, he was taken out unhurt, and lived at least until the third year of Cyrus, that is, 534 B.C.
(Dan. x. 1.) He must then have arrived at the age of eighty-five or ninety years, so that his life could not have been protracted much beyond this period. Though Daniel lived throughout the captivity, it does not appear that he ever returned to his own country. It is uncertain where he died, though it is generally supposed that it was in some part of Chaldea, not improbably at Susa on the Tigris, where he had resided.
The title of "savior of knotty questions or difficult problems", given to Daniel by the queen of Babylon, (Dan. v. 12, 16,) is still used in the East as a title of honour for a remarkably clever man. 2. A descendant of Ithamar. ( Ezra viii. 2; Neh. x. 7.) 3.—See Childef.
DANIEL, BOOK OF. This is a mixture of history and prophecy, and contains, especially the last six chapters, the most extraordinary and comprehensive predictions that are to be found in the prophetic writings. So explicit are they respecting the Messiah and his kingdom, that the Jews and early infidels, were unwilling to admit their genuineness; but this cannot be contested. (Matt. xxiv. 16.) Josephus regrards him as the chief of the prophets.
These predictions were uttered during the captivity of the Jews, and both before and after the time of Ezekiel. The character of the book is such as it would have been if written by a man who lived at Babylon in the time of the Chaldean monarchy; and was perfectly accounted with the names of the various offices belonging to the kingdom and the court. A portion of this book is written in the Chaldee dialect, from the fourth verse of the second chapter to the end of the seventh chapter; these chapters relate chiefly to the affairs of Babylon, and it is probable that some passages were taken from the public registers.
This shows remarkable accuracy. Indeed, for the genuineness and authenticity of this book, we have the strongest evidence. In phraseology, the prophesy of Daniel, and the Revelation of John, are remarkably illustrative of each other. Several apocryphal books appear to have been anciently ascribed to Daniel, which were evidently written in Greek by some Hellenistic Jew.
DAN-IAAN = forest of Dan. A place near Dan. This name is evidently a transcriber's error for Dan-Jaar.
(2 Sam. xxvi. 6)
DANNAH = low ground. A city in the mountains of Judah. (Josh. xv.
49.)
DARDA = pearl of wisdom. A de-scentant of Judah, famous for his wis-don, and contemporary with Solomon or a little before him. (1 Kings iv. 31.)
In 1 Chron. ii. 6, he is called "Dara."
DARIUS = cooperator, conservator. The name, or royal title of a Chaldean viceroy, and of two Persian kings, mentioned in the Old Testament. On the cuneiform inscriptions at Persepolis and Babylon it is written Daryahuwak, which is not unlike the Hebrew form Darjavanah.
1. "Darius the Mede," usually considered, but without evidence, a king of Media, and the same as Cyaxearus the second. He was the son of Astyages = "Ahasuerus," a king of the Medes, whose empire was seized by Cyrus, about B.C. 559; and was probably the uncle as well as father-in-law of Cyrus. On the conquest of Babylon by Cyrus, he appointed Darius vicer-roy at Babylon, with the full powers of a king, while he himself was engaged in completing and consolidating his new conquests. Hence it is said that "Darius the Median took the king-2. DARIUS HYASPES, king of Persia, who reigned B.C. 521-486. His name, as still existing on the monuments of Egypt, is written at r c i e a m.

He was the son of Hystaspes, a Persian noble. He strengthened his alliance with the family of Cyrus by marrying a daughter of the genuine Smerdis, and two daughters of Cyrus. Smerdis = Artaxeres, the usurper had prohibited the building of the Jewish temple; but afterwards Darius ordered the work to be expedited with renewed vigour. (Ezra iv. 5, 6, 24; v. 3—17; vi. 1—22.) The remainder of the reign of Darius was spent in unceasing wars, which the prophet represents by the four winds (spirits) of the heavens rising in chariots of war. (Zech. i. 1; vi. 1—8; vii. 7; Hagg. i. 1.) The remarkable monument at Behistan, on the frontiers of Persia, on the high road from Babylonia to the eastward, is an almost perpendicular rock, rising abruptly from the plain to the height of 1,700 feet. The sculptured portion of the rock represents a line of nine captives, united by a cord tied round their necks, and having their hands bound behind their backs, who are approaching the king as he treads on a prostrate rebel. Some have supposed the figures to represent Tiglath-Pileser and the ten captive tribes of Israel. From the cuneiform inscriptions on the monument, Col. Rawlinson has shown that the king is Darius himself, and the captives are nine rebel chiefs whom he had successively overthrown and put to death. On the inscriptions are given the names of the rebels and the provinces of the empire where they had excited insurrection. Darius recites the ad

3. DARIUS NOTHUS, king of Persia, who reigned B.C. 423—404. Nehemiah appears to have returned to Judea, the second time, during the latter part of his reign. This important historical fact, Josephus has placed in the reign of Darius Codomanus, but it properly belongs to the last years of Darius Notthus. From him Sanballat obtained permission to build a temple for the Samaritans on Mount Gerizim. (Neh. xii. 23; xiii. 23—28.)

DARMESEK.—See DAMASCUS.

DARKNESS. It is said of the terrible darkness which constituted one of the plagues of Egypt, that it was so thick as to be, as it were, palpable; so horrible that no one durst stir out of his place; and so lasting, that it endured three days; and evil angels accompanied the horrid darkness. (Ex. x. 21—23; Ps. lxxxviii. 49; cv. 28.) This darkness, which was evidently miraculous in its intensity, appears to have been a violent chasmis, which generally lasts about three days annually in Egypt. Travellers tell us, when the chasmis blows the sun is pale yellow, its light is obscured, and the darkness is in some years so great, that one seems to be in the blackest night even in the middle of the day; high winds, clouds of dust, and lightning gleams frequently accompany this kind of tempest. The darkness that shrouded Judea when our Saviour hung upon the cross was manifestly miraculous; inasmuch as no natural eclipse of the sun could have taken place at the period of the Passover, the moon being then at full. (Luke xxiii. 44, 45.) Darkness is sometimes used symbolically of misery and adversity; (Isa. lix. 9, 10; Jer. xiii. 16; Job iii. 4, 5; Joel ii. 2; Am. iv. 13;) of great political calamities; (Isa. xiii. 10; xvii. 5; Lam. iii. 6; Ezek. xxxii. 7;) of ignorance, idolatry, and sin; (Isa. ix. 2; lx. 2; Ezek. xii. 13; Eph. v. 11; 1 Peter ii. 9;) of the state of the dead; (Job x. 21; xvii. 13;) and of final and eternal punishment. (Matt. viii. 26.)

DARKON = a scatterer. One whose posterity returned from the exile. (Est. ii. 56; Neh. vii. 58.)

DATE.—See PALM.

DATHAN = fountain. One of the conspirators against Moses. (Num. xvi. 1—25; Ps. cvi. 17;)—See ABIRAM.

DAUGHTER. This term is often used as expressive of similitude of kindred: as well as of female offspring; (Gen. vi. 1; xxiv. 23;) and grand-daughter; (Gen. xxiv. 24, 48.) For remote descendants of the same family or tribe: "daughter of Beth," etc., of his posterity. Elizabeth was "of the daughters of Aaron." (Luke i. 5.) Daughter, by personification, of a people or a city, whence "daughter of Jerusalem," or "of Zion," or "of Babylon;" (Isa. xlvii. 1—5; "of Edom;" (Lam. iv. 21;) "of Egypt;" (Jer. xlvii. 13, 14;) "daughter of Tyre." (Ps. xiv. 12.) Christian females are called daughters of Sarah; (1 Pet. iii. 6;) and daughters of God. (2 Cor. vi. 18.)—See CHILDREN.

DAVID = beloved. The second king of the Hebrews and founder of the dynasty of Judah; he reigned b.c. 1055—1015. He was the youngest son of Jesse, of the tribe of Judah. When a youth he was deeply imbued with the spirit of the religion and theocracy of his nation; and, while employed as a shepherd in his father's fields, Jehovah, the invisible Ruler of Israel, sent Samuel to Bethlehem, to anoint David prophetically as king of the Hebrews, in the stead of any of the family of Saul. Hence he is called "a man after God's own heart," that is, the chosen and appointed one of Jehovah, to be the "captain over his people. (1 Sam. xiii. 14; vii. 22.) When Saul fell into a melancholy, in order to divert his thoughts, David was introduced to court as a private musician, which gave him an opportunity of becoming acquainted with the manners of the court, and the business of government. In a war with the Philistines, he appeared as the champion of the Hebrews, against the giant Goliath, whom he slew in single combat. This act of heroism greatly advanced his reputation; but when Saul found that his own fame was likely to be eclipsed, he became jealous of David, and from that time to the end of his own life he pursued him with a most malignant hostility. (1 Sam. xviii. 6—21.) David retired from court in order to provide for his own safety; but still he kept his mind steadily fixed on the protection of Divine Providence. (1 Sam. xxvii. 2; 1 Chron. xi. 1.) In difficult cases he always consulted the sacred oracle and obeyed its responses. Two or three times, Saul was completely at David's mercy, but he refused to open a way to the throne by regicide. On the death of Saul and his sons on Mount Gilboa, b.c. 1055, David, by Divine direction, went from Ziklag to Hebron, where the rulers of the tribe of Judah awarded to him the sceptre, as to one whom Jehovah had already designated as king. The other eleven tribes did homage to Ish-bosheth the son of Saul. At length, when every other claim to the throne had been extinguished, in the eighth year of David's reign, b.c. 1048, the eleven tribes unitedly submitted to him. Soon after he had assumed the government, he reduced the fortress Zion, and thenceforth Jerusalem became the capital of the kingdom, the residence of the royal family, and more than all, the city of God the invisible King. (2 Sam. v. 2; Matt. v. 35.) David brought the affairs of government into order, improved the army, and gave especial attention to the management of public worship, as the most efficacious means of promoting religion and morality; and, consequently, obedience to the invisible Supreme Monarch. He was also engaged in frequent wars with the surrounding nations, but the arms of the Hebrews were victorious in every quarter. Thus were fulfilled those ancient prophecies, that the Hebrews should extend their borders to the Euphrates, subject the Edomites, conquer the Moabites and other eastern people, and become formidable to all their neighbours. (Gen. xv. 18; xxvii. 29, 40; Num. xxiv. 7-20; 2 Sam. v. 17-25; viii. 1-14; x. 1-19.) When David was seventy years of age, he resigned the crown to Solomon, put into his hands the plan and model of the temple, and the treasure he had accumulated for the erection of it; he then “slept with his fathers.” His heinous transaction in the case of Bathsheba and Uriah; and the numbering of the people in order, as it would seem, to push conquests into foreign countries, are the main instances in which David seems to have forgotten himself and his God. He was indeed no ideal model of human perfection; he was not without the blemishes incident to human nature. But on the whole, he was an example worthy of the imitation of his successors, and according as they appear on comparison with him, the sacred writers estimate their characters. The Divine promise, that “the throne of David shall be established for ever,” does not unconditionally imply there should be no suspension of the kingly power in his family. (2 Sam. vii. 12-16; Ps. lxxxix. 20-36.) In accordance with the tenor of the promise, the invisible King, for the iniquity of David’s children, withdrew from them the exercise of the royal prerogative; still He never transferred it to another family, but reserved it for the promised Messiah, who was not only the “offspring” and “Son of David,” but David’s “Root” and “Lord.” (Jer. xxxiii. 17-26; Matt. i. 1; Rev. xxii. 16; Matt. xxi. 42-45.) And, as David was the Divinely appointed king of Israel, and the earthly head of the church embosomed in Israel; so also, Christ, the successor of David, is by Divine appointment, the king of the spiritual Israel, the Head of His Church, over which He reigns in a true and proper sense. Hence in Christ are fulfilled the prophecies: “The Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of His father David. And He shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of His kingdom there shall be no end.” (Luke i. 32, 33; Matt. xx. 7-16.) The name “David” also denotes the Messiah. (Ezek. xxxiv. 23, 24; xxxvii. 24; Hos. iii. 5.)

DAY. The natural day is twenty-four hours, or one revolution of the earth on its axis. (Gen. i. 5.) The Hebrews began their civil day in the evening; (Lev. xxiii. 33;) and we begin ours at midnight. The artificial day is the time of the sun’s continuance above the horizon, which is unequal according to the different seasons, on account of the obliquity of the equator. The longest day in the Holy Land is only fourteen hours and twelve minutes of our time; and the shortest day, nine hours and forty-eight minutes. The sun rises, at the summer solstice, about five of our time, and sets about seven; at the winter solstice, it rises after seven and sets before five. The day was originally divided by the Hebrews into three unequal parts; “evening,” “morning,” and “noon.” (Ps. lv. 17.) The division of the day into twelve unequal hours was probably known in the time of Ahaz. (2 Kings xx. 11; Dan. iii. 6, 15; Acts ii. 15.) The sixth hour is always noon throughout the year; and the twelfth hour is the last hour of the day. But in summer, the twelfth hour, as all the others were, was longer than in winter. The word “day” often denotes an indefinite time. (Gen. ii. 4; Isa. xxii. 5; Heb. iii. 8.) “That day,” frequently refers to the gospel dispensation; (Heb. xiii. 1; xiv. 6;) but the “day of the Lord,” denotes, generally, a time of calamity and distress; (Isa. ii. 12; Joel ii. 11;) also the day of judgment. (Acts ii. 20; xvii. 31; Jude 8, 17.) In Ezek. iv. 4-6, the prophet is directed first to lie upon his left side three hundred and ninety days, and bear the iniquity of the house of Israel; and then to lie on his right side forty days, and bear the iniquity of the house of Judah. “See,” said Jehovah, “I have appointed thee each day for a year." Each day that Ezekiel did this, was designed to represent a year's punishment to be inflicted on them. Erroreously supposing this statement to be a precedent, many interpreters of the prophecies have taken it for granted, that one "day" stands for a year, in the prophetic writings of Daniel and John. To every unprejudiced mind a "day" means just a day, and a "year" a year; but if a "day" designates a year, then, of course, a "year" must mean three hundred and sixty times as much. Even the "seventy weeks," properly "seventy sevens of years," are not symbolic. (Dan. ix. 25—27.) The "days," then, in Dan. vii. 25; viii. 18, 14, 26; xii. 7—12, are to be understood in their usual and literal sense. They have reference to the persecutions and sufferings the Jews should endure under Antiochus Epiphanes, the Syrian, and they were literally fulfilled. So also, the "days" in Rev. vi. 11, have reference to the siege and sacking of Jerusalem by the Romans, the destruction of Judaism, and the establishment of Christianity. All this was literally accomplished also. Indeed, the church of God, from the days of Daniel to those of Wycliffe, has always considered the "days" in the prophetic writings as literal days.

DEACON = a servant. The Greek word, διάκονος, sometimes rendered "minister," that is, servant, (Matt. xx. 26,) as a title of office was first given to "seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom," who were chosen by the congregation, and appointed to make enquiry into the situation and wants of the poor, to take care of the sick, and to administer all necessary and proper relief. (Acts vi. 1—6; Phil. i. 1; 1 Tim. iii. 8—12; iv. 6.) Deacons also served the church in those offices in which the deacons could not with propriety engage; such as keeping the doors of that part of the place of worship where the women were privately instructing their own sex, and visiting them in sickness, or when imprisoned for the faith.

DEAF. The Mosaic statute not only absolutely prohibited the reviling of the deaf, but would seem to imply that kindness and instruction ought to be shown to them. (Lev. xix. 14; Isa. xxix. 18, 35; Matt. xi. 5; Mark vii. 32.)

DEATH. That death was in the world previous to the fall of Adam is evident, not only from the petrified remains of vast multitudes of animals, large and small, chiefly of species now extinct, which have for unknown ages been deeply entombed in the strata of various rocks; but also from the constitution of animated nature, which compels us to admit, that under the various conditions of the earth, the production and growth in all organized beings have their correlates in decay and dissolution. Even the first human pair, in pristine innocence, could scarcely have been ignorant of the existence of death. Indeed, the threatening of death, upon a violation of the test of obedience, seems clearly to imply, that the subjects of this law had a knowledge of what death was, otherwise, they could not have known what the threatening meant. The apostle states, that "by one man, sin entered into the world, and death by sin;" and that thus "by man came death." (Rom. v. 12; 1 Cor. xv. 21.)

But while these passages declare unmistakeably, that in consequence of sin death acquired dominion over the human race, they neither affirm nor imply that the inferior animals were not subject to death before man's transgression. That Adam, while in Eden, was capable of dying, or, in other words, that his body was not physically immortal, is demonstrable, from the distinct elementary principles of which it was composed. He was "of the earth, earthy:" made of the dust, or general soil—the mingled sand, clay and lime. The human body, as that of all other animals, is composed of the same substances as those which constitute large and essential parts of the mineral kingdom: nitrogen, oxygen, carbon, and hydrogen; potash, soda, phosphorus, sulphur, lime, and iron.
DEA

These principles of the body of Adam consisted of particles which had a tendency to dissolve, and seek their pristine account; but notwithstanding that tendency, God promised him a perpetuity of life, while he continued obedient to the law. To counteract the tendency the human body had to decay, God was pleased to employ a natural agent—the tree of life, the fruit of which contained salutary properties. Still, even with this remarkable apparatus of immortality, Adam could not have lived for ever, so as never to have changed his tabernacle; the structure of his physical conformation was not adapted for it. But that he might have enjoyed a life, had he been faithful during the term of his probation, which should not have been terminated by death, but by an ennobling transition into another state of existence, is perfectly credible.

But when transgression took the place of obedience, Justice was roused from its watchful repose, and proceeded to execute the threatening of the law. But in the execution of the penalty threatened, no new agent was introduced into the world; no vindictive stroke was inflicted on the transgressors; a removal from the tree of life alone was necessary; then the operation of natural causes, now no longer counteracted, led onward to mortality, the inevitable consequence. The body of Adam, as the legal result of transgression, must return to the dust whence it was taken; though the time and manner of its return were left to the decision of his injured Sovereign. By transgression, the first human pair not only forfeited the continued enjoyment of natural life, but became liable to death in its most comprehensive sense—to evil of every kind, which stands opposed to life and holy happiness. Hence spiritual life, the life which consisted in union with the Holy Spirit, and comported with the image of God, and was a separate quality from the necessary endowments of human nature, was forfeited; and the inferior animal principles became the rulers of the heart. (Gen. ii. 15, 17; iii. 6—24; Eph. ii. 1; Col. ii. 13; Heb. ix. 27.)

DEB

Though death temporal and spiritual hath fallen upon the posterity of Adam; yet our Divine Redeemer may be regarded as having, in each of these senses, virtually destroyed death, and delivered them who were all their lifetime subject to bondage. (Rom. viii. 21; John v. 24; Heb. ii. 14, 15.) To avail ourselves, however, of His perfect triumph, we must believe, love, and obey Him. (John vi. 33—63; viii. 51.) Death is called a “departure;” (2 Tim. iv. 6;) a “dissolving of the earthly house of this tabernacle;” (2 Cor. v. 1;) a “going the way of all the earth;” (Josh. xxiii. 14;) a “returning to the dust;” (Eccl. xii. 7;) a “sleep;” (John xi. 11;) also the “king of terror.” (Job. xviii. 14.) “The gates of death” signify the grave. (Job. xxxvii. 17; Ps. i. 13; civ. 18.) The “shadow of death” denotes the dominion of death, imminent peril of life. (Ps. xxii. 4; Jer. ii. 5.) The “second death” designates the everlasting perdition of the wicked. (James v. 20; Rev. xx. 14; xxii. 5.)

DEBIR.—See KIRJATH-SHEPHER.

DEBORAH.—s br. 1. A prophetess, the wife of Lapidoth. She was the fourth judge or regent of the Hebrews, and the only woman who ever filled that high office. Jabin, king of the northern Canaanites, who dwelt at Hazor on lake Merom, had greatly oppressed the northern Hebrew tribes for the space of twenty years; and his yoke was undoubtedly more galling than any they had previously borne. In the mean time, Deborah the prophetess, who “judged Israel,” with difficulty roused the Hebrews from their despondency, and induced them to burst the fetters of their bondage. At length she summoned Barak, the son of Abinoam, and made known to him the will of God, that he should undertake an enterprise for the deliverance of his country. But he assented to go only on condition that she would accompany him. Deborah and Barak repaired to Kedesh, and collected in the immediate vicinity of Hazor, ten thousand men, with whom they marched southward, and encamped on Mount Tabor. When Sisera, the general of Jabin, pursued them to the plain of Jezreel, Barak descended from Tabor, attacked and so completely routed the numerous army of the Canaanites, that they never recovered from the blow. This was followed by a peace of forty years. Deborah's triumphal song, belongs indisputably to the first rank of Hebrew poetry. (Judg. iv. 1—24; v. 1—31.) 2. The nurse of Rebekah, who attended her into Canaan. She died in the vicinity of Bethel, where she was buried with much lamentation under an oak. (Gen. xxiv. 59; xxxv. 8.)

DEBT. According to the Mosaic law the creditor might receive a pledge for a debt; but he was obliged to wait before the door till the debtor should deliver up the article with which he could most easily dispense. (Deut. xxiv. 6—12; Job. xxi. 6; xxiv. 3—9; Ex. xxii. 26, 27.) An unpaid debt could not be exacted from a poor man during the seventh or sabbatical year. (Deut. xv. 1—11.) But at other times, the creditor might seize the hereditary land of the debtor, and enjoy its produce until the debt was paid, or at least until the year of jubilee; or his houses, which might be sold in perpetuity, except those belonging to the Levites. (Lev. xxv. 14, 32; Prov. xxii. 27.) Or, in case the property was not sufficient to cancel the debt, or if it so happened that the debtor had none, the person of the debtor might be sold, together with his wife and children. But this selling for debt was simply an engagement of service for so long time as would be sufficient, by the ordinary legal wages, to pay the legal claim; or as an hired servant until the year of jubilee. (Lev. xxv. 39—43; Job. xxiv. 9; 2 Kings iv. 1; Neh. v. 1—13; Matt. xviii. 25.) If a person had become surety for another, he became, in a legal sense, one with the debtor. (Prov. xi. 15; xvii. 18; xxii. 28.) Imprisonment for debt seems to have existed at a later period. (Matt. xviii. 84.)

DECAPOLIS = ten cities. A region embracing ten cities, all, excepting Scythopolis, lying east of the Jordan. Those cities seem to have been Scythopolis, Hippos, Gadara, Dion, Pella, Gerasa, Philadelphia, Canatha, Raphana, and Capatolias. The ruins of Pella are very extensive, and are now called Pahl. This district was principally inhabited by Greeks; some of whom kept herds of swine. (Matt. viii. 30—35; Mark v. 20; vii. 31.)

DEDAN = promissuar. A people, with a region of like name, descended from Dedan the son of Haamah. (Gen. x. 7; 1 Chron. i. 9.) It is thought to be the same as Dades, an island of the Persian Gulf; the inhabitants were noted merchants. (Ezek. xxvii. 15; xxxvii. 13.) 2. A people of northern Arabia, descended from Dedan, a descendant of Abraham and Keturah. (Gen. xxv. 3; 1 Chron. i. 32; Jer. xxix. 8; xxv. 28; Ezek. xxv. 13.) The "Dedanim" appear to have been a people much engaged in traffic. (Isa. xxi. 13.)

DEDICATION, FEAST OF. This festival was instituted by Judas Macabaeus to commemorate the purification of the temple and the renewal of the temple worship, after the three years profanation by Antiochus Epiphanes. (1 Mac. iv. 52—59; John x. 22.) It was held for eight days, commencing on the twenty-fifth day of the month Chisleu, which began with the new moon of our December. Josephus calls it the "festival of lights or lanterns," because the Jews in his time, illuminated their houses in testimony of their joy and gladness on this important occasion.

DEEK, FALLOW. The Hebrew word yaddmmur, designates a species of deer of a reddish colour, with serrated horns, which are cast every year; probably the cervus damus or "fallow-deer." (Deut. xiv. 15; 1 Kings iv. 23.)

DEGREES, SONG OF. A title found in the inscriptions of Psalms cxx—cxxxiv. Some suppose they are so called from a certain number of rhythm obvious in several of them, by which the sense as it were ascends by degrees or steps, the first or last words of a preceding clause being often repeated at the beginning of the succeeding one. Thus, in Ps. cxxi:
DEH

1. I will lift mine eyes unto the hills, Whence cometh my help.
3. He will not suffer thy foot to be moved: Thy keepers will not slumber.
4. Lo., not slumber nor sleep will the keeper of Israel.
5. Jehovah is the keeper, etc.

Others refer the Hebrew title, Shir Hammashaloth = "Song of Degrees" to the argument of the Psalms, and translate songs of ascent, or odes of ascension, supposing them to have been sung by the Hebrews while returning from the exile; (Ezra vii. 9.) or on their annual journeys to Jerusalem to celebrate their festivals; hence they understand sacred marches or pilgrim songs.

DEHAVITES = villagers. A people from which a colony was led out into Samaria; probably the Daos of Herodotus, (i. 125.) and consequently a Persian tribe near the Caspian Sea. (Ezra iv. 9.)

DEKAR = a thrusting through. A man whose son was an officer in king Solomon's household. (1 Kings iv. 9.)

DELAIAH = whom Jehovah hath delivered. 1. The father of Shemaiah. (Neh. vi. 10.) 2. One whose children returned from the exile. (Ezra ii. 60; Neh. vii. 62.) 3. The son of Shemaiah. (Jer. xxxvi. 12, 25.) 4. One of the posterity of Aaron. (1 Chron. xxiv. 18.)

DELLILAH = fickle, pining with desire. A Philistine woman to whom Samson abandoned himself; and who succeeded in betraying him into the hands of his enemies. (Judg. xvi. 4-18.)

DEMAS = popular. A disciple and fellow-labourer of Paul, who afterwards apostatized from the faith. (Col. iv. 14; Phil. 24; 2 Tim. iv. 10.)

DEMETRIUS = a votary of Ceres.

1. A silversmith at Ephesus, who made small silver shrines or models of the temple which contained the statue of the goddess Diana. He excited a tumult in the city against Paul. (Acts xix. 24.) 2. A Christian mentioned with commendation in 3 John, 12.

DERBE = a city. A city of Lycaonia in Asia Minor, situated within the confines of Isauria. Various ruins of this city still exist at a place called the

DES

One Thousand and One Churches, at the eastern base of the Black Mountain. (Acts xiv. 6, 20; xvi. 1; xx. 4.)

DESSERT. The deserts mentioned in the Bible are uncultivated tracts of two kinds. First, plains covered with barren sand, in which springs were scarcely to be found, and when found whose water was seldom fit to drink. They scarcely make their way out of the thirsty earth, and are soon absorbed again. Some of these plains, however, in winter and spring, produced good pasturage, and were appropriated to the feeding of cattle; the "pastures of the wilderness" are mentioned in Ps. lxv. 12, 13; Joel i. 19. Luke xv. 4; and several of these plains still produce a scanty herbage, upon which sheep, goats, and camels, feed. In these deserts there were formerly villages and towns. (Josh. xv. 61, 62; 1 Sam. xxiii. 19.) Secondly, mountain deserts, of a less barren and unproductive character, chiefly named from the places near which they were situated. Indeed, there was scarcely a town without one belonging to it; they were uncultivated places for woods and pastures; like the English commons, common lands. The Great Desert or Desert of Arabia, reaching from the eastern side of the Red Sea to the confines of the Land of Canaan, in which the Hebrews wandered after the exodus, is in the Scriptures particularly called "The Desert." (Deut. xxxii. 10; viii. 15; Hos. xiii. 5; Jer. ii. 6; Ps. cvii. 5.) It is a great and terrible wilderness, fitted to excite terror in the mind of the lonely traveller. (Jer. ii. 6.) The cause of the sterility and uncultivated state of the desert, is principally to be attributed to the want of water. This want of water itself is occasioned by the nature of the country, which being flat and destitute of mountains, the clouds glide over its heated surface, and never rest there but in winter, when the coldness of the atmosphere hinders them from rising and dissolves them into rain. The entire nakedness of this country is also another cause of drought, since the air is for that reason more easily beasted and compels the clouds to rise.

DEU.EL. = Invocation of God. The father of Eliashaph. (Num. i. 14; vii. 42.) In Num. i. 14, he is called “Reuel.”

DEUTERONOMY = the second law.

This book, which contains a second statement of the Hebrew law, together with the history of what passed in the desert from the first day of the eleventh month, to the seventh day of the twelfth month—about six weeks—in the fortieth year after the exodus, was evidently written by Moses near the close of the wanderings of the Hebrews. (Deut. i. 14; ii. 14; Num. xx. 7—13.) The writer is evidently an old man chronicling the outpourings of a heart ready to burst with interest and solicitude for the Hebrew nation—such outpourings as could come from none but Moses. His manner of address is such as might have been expected from one who had, with the intervention of many and great miracles, led the people out of Egypt;—had, at the foot of Sinai, established a theocracy among them;—had furnished them with laws;—had governed them forty years, during their journey through Arabia to the Jordan;—had procured for them many extraordinary benefits;—and had, when necessary, chastised them with signal punishments.

The writer everywhere enters so thoroughly into the circumstances and feelings which must have been peculiar to Moses, and what he utters corresponds so exactly to the peculiar circumstances of the people addressed, that no one but the original writer could ever have had so perfect a regard to these circumstances, or could ever have preserved it so completely as nowhere to betray himself. In the book of Deuteronomy, not only the subjects of Numbers, Leviticus, and Exodus, but also the existence of those books, are taken for granted; for the person who speaks in Deuteronomy, and who, as we have seen, must have written the book, must necessarily have written these three other books, since he frequently refers to their contents;—urges obedience to the laws which are contained in them; and draws from the events which they narrate reasons for obeying those laws:—since, in a word, without them Deuteronomy would have been unintelligible to its readers. In like manner those four books refer to Genesis as a previously written composition. The words of Moses evidently conclude with the thirty-third chapter, and the thirty-fourth was added to complete the history; the first eight verses, probably, immediately after the death of Moses by his successor Joshua; the last four by some later writer, probably Samuel or Ezra.

DEVIL = a calumniator, slanderer, accuser. The Greek word diabolos, in the plural form, is sometimes applied to wicked men or women, and is rendered “slanderers;” (1 Tim. iii. 11;) and “false accusers” (2 Tim. iii. 3; Tit. ii. 3.) But usually the term denotes the one most subtle and malignant of the evil spirits, the great enemy of God and man. In the archaic records he is called “The Serpent,” and is introduced, without any reference to his antecedents, as the ruinous invader of our earth. (Gen. iii. 1.) But who knows what vast districts of the universe he, and his legions may have traversed before this, and have left thereon, also, the imprints of moral ruin? (Rev. xii. 9.) However, it appears from Jude 6; 2 Peter ii. 4, that the evil spirits or angels were once good angels; but “they kept not their first estate,” which must have been probationary, either on this ancient earth or in some other district of the universe; and when “they sinned, God cast them down to hell, or Tartarus.” (Matt. xxv. 41.) “Satan” = adversary, is the appellation given by the Hebrews to the arch foe. (Job i. 6—12; ii. 1—7; 1 Chron. xxii. 1; Zech. iii. 1, 2; Matt. xii. 26; Mark iv. 15; Luke xxii. 3; Acts v. 3; Rom. xvi. 20; Rev. xx. 2.) The appellation “the devil” occurs still more frequently. He is also called “the tempter;” (Matt. i. 11; xiii. 19; Luke xxii. 3, 55; Acts v. 3; 1 Cor. vii. 5;) “Abaddon;” (Rev. ix. 11;) “Beelzeboul” or “Beelzebub;” (Matt. x. 25; xxvii. 12, 24;) and “Belial” or Belial.” (2 Cor. vi.
15. These appellations are not, however, proper names, but are significant either of Satan's malignity, or of the contempt which men entertain for him. The Scriptures speak of but one devil or Satan, and also of many evil or unclean spirits, or angels of Satan. Satan is not omnipresent, neither is he omniscient; so that he cannot superintend such an infinite variety of mischief at one and the same moment. His angels are of a similar character and nature, while he as the chief, is represented as merely the first among equals. (Matt. ix. 34; xii. 26; Acts x. 38; Eph. ii. 2; Rev. xii. 7, 9.) The apostasy of the first human pair was attributed by Christ and his apostles to the influence of Satan. (2 Cor. xi. 3; 1 Tim. ii. 13, 14; John viii. 44; 1 John iii. 8.) In reference to this transaction, and the covert way in which he accomplished it, he is named "the dragon," and "the old serpent." (Rev. xii. 9; xx. 2.) The manner in which Satan assailed the Saviour, his entrance into Judas, his influence over Ananias, (Acts v. 3,) and innumerable other cases, of the like kind, show what evil and pernicious influence, and what power also, Satan has over the hearts of men. The great efforts made by the persecuting heathen against the church, as presented in Rev. xii. xix., seem to originate from, and to be led on by Satan. When the apostle calls Satan the "god of this world," and the Saviour calls him the "prince of this world," it is the world of the wicked which is meant. But let it be remembered, that all the success of Satan is due rather to the weakness and wickedness of man, than to his absolute control over him. The sacred writers ascribe the sins of men mainly to their own evil passions and forbidden lusts, which show that the causative agency of Satan is not necessarily dominant nor compulsory. (Rom. i. 21—32; Gal. v. 19—21; James i. 14.) To represent Satan as not only an implacable and malignant, but also an irresistible, yea, quasi-omnipotent adversary, as is often done, is not only unscriptural but contra-scriptural. Satan derives all his success from our voluntary subjection and yielding to him. Be the power of Satan what it may; be it exercised in one way or another on our minds, either by direct influence or indirect, it matters not; he has no power to take captive willing or not willing: "Give no place to the devil." What ever his power and influence may be, it cannot be such that we are inadequate to meet and repel it: "Resist the devil and he will flee from you." In maintaining that the moral influence of Satan is resistable, the justice of God in punishing man for yielding to him, becomes manifest, and can be as clearly vindicated as when a civil government punishes a culprit for having been persuaded by some of his fellowmen to commit a criminal act. The Scriptures also represent Satan in some cases, as the author of physical as well as moral evil. (Job i. 12; Matt. xii. 26; Luke xii. 16; 1 Cor. v. 5; 1 Tim. i. 20.) Peter speaks of Jesus as having "healed all that were oppressed by the devil." (Acts x. 38.) In the infliction of physical evil he may be one of the agents which Divine justice permits occasionally to be employed. Nevertheless, by the power of the Redeemer, Satan is reduced to a state of impotence in respect to that deadly power which he exercises. (Heb. ii. 14.) "The Son of God was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil," and christians are everywhere spoken of as being delivered from his dominant power. (John xii. 31; 1 John iii. 8; v. 18, 19; Eph. vi. 12.)

DEVI L S. The Greek term demons, in the new Testament, always signifies an evil being, an unclean or evil spirit; and is generally rendered "devil." The appellation demons probably bears the classic or heathen sense, god or idol, in Acts xvii. 18; 1 Cor. x. 20, 21; 1 Tim. iv. 1; Rev. ix. 2, 3. In other cases it is nearly always employed in connection with demoniacal possessions: (Matt. viii. 16-22, 31; ix. 32-34; xii. 22, 24; Mark iii. 22; Luke xi. 18; James ii. 19; Rev. xvi. 14; xvii. 2,) and is equivalent to "unclean spirit." (Matt. x. 1; xii. 43, 45; Luke xi. 24; Acts viii. 7;
"evil spirits"; (Luke vii. 21; Acts xix. 12, 13, 16;) and "wicked spirites." (Eph. vi. 12, margin.) Demons are also called the devil's angels, the messengers or servants of the devil; also "principalities" and "powers." (Matt. xxv. 41; Rev. i. 14; vii. 9; Eph. vi. 12.) As the servants or subordinate agents of Satan, they are malignant and mischievous beings. They are numerous; (Mark v. 9-13; Luke viii. 30;) and are represented in their movements as subtle as the "air;" (Eph. ii. 2; vi. 12;) and as dwelling in the desert; (Matt. xii. 43; Rev. xviii. 2;) and in the "abyss." (Matt. xxi. 41; Luke viii. 31; Jude, 6; 2 Peter ii. 4; Rev. i. 13.) As Satan's coadjutors they roam over the earth, enticing men to moral evil, and smiting them with physical maladies. In the production of physical evil they are represented as principally concerned, as is manifest from the fact, that the demons, or the subjects of demoniacal possession, are nowhere addressed or treated as being morally to blame, because they are possessed by evil spirits. We do not mean that no blame attaches to them for having brought this evil upon themselves; for there are cases of this kind in which a return of the evil is threatened, provided they relapse into sin. But the simple fact that they are possessed by demons, is always looked upon and treated as a calamity, and not as a crime. They are never rebuked because they do not resist this kind of Satanic influence. And in fact, it is regarded and treated as one of the chief miraculous powers of Christ, that he could cast out demons; nor are any demons ever addressed as having any power to resist, or even to modify the influence of their tormentors. This consideration puts all the cases of demoniacs on a ground entirely different from that of those who yield themselves to the moral influence of Satan, and who are always regarded and treated as criminal, and as able to deliver themselves from the power of their seducer. We do not know that demoniacal influence in the infliction of physical evils was peculiar to the time the Saviour made his appearance. The nature of demons is not changed; and they may still have an efficiency like to that of ancient times, although materially modified by the power of the Holy Spirit under the gospel dispensation.

DEW. The condensed vapour, which falls on the earth during the night. In Judea, during the months of April, May, August, and September, before and after the height of summer, and after the early, and before the latter rains, the earth is refreshed with dews, so copious, as in a great measure to supply the place of showers. During the season of drought the grass withers, the flowers fade, every green herb is dried up; and were it not for the copious dews, the parched appearance of the country would be of much longer endurance. (Ps. xxvii. 4; lxxxiii. 14; Isa. i. 13; x. 17, 18; Jer. xxx. 14.) Maunder tells us that their tents when pitched on Tabor and Hermon, were as wet with dew as if it had rained on them all night; and other travellers speak of their cloaks, in which they wrapped themselves while they slept, as being completely wet, as if they had been immersed in the sea. (2 Sam. xvii. 12; Judg. vi. 37-40; Sal. Songs, v. 3.) The refreshing nature of the dew is a beautiful symbol of spiritual blessings, as well as of temporal prosperity. (Gen. xxvii. 28; xxli. 25; Deut. xxxii. 2; xxxiii. 13; Job xxix. 19; Mic. v. 7; Hos. vi. 4; xiv. 5-7; Ps. xxxiii. 3.)

DIadem.—See Crown.

Dial of Ahaz.

DIA

or sincir; (2 Kings xx. 9—11; Isai. xxxviii. 7, 8;) and is so rendered in the Septuagint and Syriac versions, and by Josephus. (Ant. x. 2. 1.) It would thus seem that the sun-dial of Ahaz was a kind of staircase, so disposed, that the sun showed the hours upon it by the shadow cast upon the steps. M. von Gumpach has recently shown that the sun-dial of Ahaz was an accurate and scientific apparatus, forming a series of steps, which indicated the half-hours, by the coincidence of the shadow of the upright poloe or gnomon, with the side of the several "degrees" or steps. In the figure, of which we give a copy, von Gumpach, for the sake of clearness, gives only full hours, instead of half-hours. Mr. Lepsius suggests that the original form of the Babylonian edifice, of which the Birs Nimroud is the remains, was a series of steps or terraces, not unlike this figure of the ancient sun-dial. The retrogression of the shadow ten degrees upon the dial of Ahaz, was probably miraculously effected by some sort of atmospheric phenomena, causing the shadow to recede from the perpendicular height of the staircase; and, of course, to re-ascend the graduated marks or steps by which it had before noon gone down. (2 Chron. xxiv. 31.) Mr. J. W. Bossanquet, in a paper read at a meeting of the Asiatic Society, in 1859, has given another explanation of this miracle. By an ingenious astronomical argument he has shown that upon such steps as appear to have been anciently used for exhibiting the sun's meridional altitude, any very large partial eclipse, almost but not quite total, on the northern limb of the sun, occurring about ten, or a few more days from the winter solstice, near the hour of noon, would produce the phenomenon above described. He then showed that such a solar eclipse did take place on the 11th of January, B.C. 699, fourteen days after the winter solstice of 699 B.C. The time of the central eclipse at Jerusalem was calculated at about half-past eleven o'clock in the forenoon. In his chronological argument, Mr. Bossanquet makes the year 689 B.C., when the solar eclipse occurred, the same as the 13th year of the reign of Hezekiah. But, according to the received chronology, the miracle took place about B.C. 718, and Hezekiah died B.C. 696. However, it is well known, that in the ordinarily received chronology of this period, matters of exactitude are not always looked for.

DIA" DIB

great Diana of the Romans only coincides with the Artemis of the Greeks, in so far as she represented the moon. The Diana of the Ephesians, like the Astartoth of the Syrians, and the Isis of the Egyptians, was but the personification of nature, the principle of fertility and fecundity. She is usually represented as a female figure, with many breasts, and encircled with numerous bands from the head to the feet. Her worship was attended with peculiar splendour and magnificence at Ephesus; and her temple in that city was so vast and beautiful, as to be ranked among the seven wonders of the world; but its great glory was the image, called Dioscetas = Jove-descended, which fell down from heaven. (Acts xix. 24—26.) We give a coin of Ephesus, containing a figure of Diana; and the inscription shows that the Ephesians were "worshippers, properly temple-sweepers, sacrists, to the great goddess Diana."

DIBLAIM = round cakes of dried figs. The father of Hosea's wife. (Hos. i. 3.)

DIBLATH—See RIBLAH.

DIBLATHAIM = twin cakes. A city of Moab; (Num. xxxii. 46;) also called "Beth-Diblatham = house of twin-cakes. (Jer. xlvi. 22.)

DIBON = a pinion, winging. 1. A city in the borders of Moab, on the northern banks of the Arnon. (Num. xxxii. 45, 46.) The city was rebuilt by the Gadites, (Num. xxxii. 34;) and called "Dibon-Gad:" it was afterwards assigned to Reuben; (Josh. xiii. 9, 17;) and at last again occupied by the Moabites. (Ism. xv. 2; Jer. xlvi. 18, 22.) Once by an interchange of the letters m and b this name is written "Dimon." (Ism. xv. 9.) At the present day it is called Dibas. 2. A city in the tribe of Judah; (Neh. xi. 25;) also written "Dimonah." (Josh. xxv. 22.)

DIBRI = dignitary. A man of the tribe of Dan. (Lev. xxiv. 11.)

DIDRACHMA = a double drachma. A silver coin equal to two Attic drachms, and also to the Jewish half shekel. This makes it equivalent to about fifteen pence English, or perhaps a little more. This sum constituted the yearly tribute paid by every Jew to the temple. Hence it is rendered "tribute." (Matt. xvii. 24, margin.)—See DRACHMA.

DIDYMUS—See THOMAS.

DIKE = justice. The heathen goddess of justice, the same as Nemesis or Vengeance. In Acts xxviii. 4, this word is rendered "vengeance," appellation.

DIKLAH = palm tree region. A descendant of Shem, who gave name to a district of Joktanic Arabia, which probably abounded in palm trees. Perhaps the district of the Misa, which was rich in palm trees. (Gen. x. 27.)

DILEAN = grove field. A city in the tribe of Judah. (Josh. xv. 38.)

DILL. The Greek word αἰχμή, rendered "anise" properly designates the διν, as given in the margin. (Matt. xxiii. 23.) The seeds of the anethum graveolens or dill, were like the cummin and the coriander, used for spicing many kinds of meat in order to give them an agreeable flavour.

DIMNAH = damphill. A city in the tribe of Zebulun. (Josh. xxi. 35.)

DIMON.—See DIBON.

DIMONAH.—See DIBON.

DINAH = judged, that is acquitted, vindicated. The only daughter of Jacob and Leah. (Gen. xxv. 21.) When her father dwelt not far from the country occupied by the Hivites, prompted by curiosity, "she went out to see the daughters of the land," probably to a festival, when she was defiled by Shechem, a prince of the Hivites. This outrage was avenged by her brothers, who exterminated the Shechemites. (Gen. xxxiv. 1—31.) It appears from Gen. xvi. 15, that Dinah was then living in the partriarch's family, and accompanied him into Egypt.

DINAITES. An Assyrian people transferred to Samaria. (Ezra iv. 9.)

DIN'HABAH = robber's den. An Edomish royal city. (Gen. xxxvi. 32; 1 Chron. i. 43.)

DINNER.—See MEAL.

DIONYSIUS = touched by Jesus. A member of the tribunal of the Areopagus at Athens, who was converted under the preaching of Paul. (Acts xvii. 34.)

DIOTREPHES—nourished by Jews.
An officer of the church at Corinth, who seems to have exercised a most officious and unwarrantable power. (3 John 2, 10.)

DIPHATH—See RIFPATH.

DISCERNING OF SPIRITS. One of the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghost, by which some of the faithful were enabled to test the spirits of those who professed to be divinely inspired, whether they were of God. It was a most desirable gift in the early period of the Christian church when false prophets and wicked spirits abounded on every side. (1 Cor. xii. 10; 1 John iv. 1.)

DISCIPLES. One who receives instruction from another. We read of "the disciples of Moses," (John ix. 28); "the disciples of John," (Matt. xii. 20; 1 John vi. 66; Luke xiv. 25, 26; xxvii. 33). "Disciple" is often used instead of apostle in the gospels; (Luke x. 1); but subsequently, apostles were distinguished from disciples. (Luke x. 1, 23.)

DISEASES. In the primitive ages of the world, diseases, in consequence of the great simplicity in the mode of living were but few in number. The diseases prevalent in Egypt and other countries of a similar climate, were ophthalmia, leprosy, inflammations of the brain, pains in the joints, the herna, the stone in the kidneys and bladder, the phthisic, hectic, pestilential, and tertian fevers. Of these diseases, ophthalmia, pestilential fevers, and inflammations of the brain are epidemics; the others are of a different character. In many cases diseases are ascribed to the immediate interference of the Deity. (Dent. xxviii. 60; 2 Kings ix. 25; Chron. xxi. 12-15; Ps. xxxix. 9-11; Acts xii. 23.) From an early period we find the agency of evil spirits employed to afflict and trouble men.

(1 Sam. xvi. 14; Job ii. 7; Matt. xvii. 15; Mark v. 11-15; Luke ix. 38-40.) Among the multitudes which resorted to our Saviour to be healed of all manner of diseases, there would be found a fearful list of painful, and, to more human agency, incurable complaints, which he removed with a word.

See PHYSICIAN.

DISHAN = gazelle or antelope. A chief of the Edomites. (Gen. xxxvi. 21, 30; 1 Chron. i. 38, 42.)

DISHON = gazelle or antelope. 1. A chief of the Edomites; also a region bearing his name. (Gen. xxxvi. 21, 39; 1 Chron. i. 38.) 2. A grandson of Seir. (Gen. xxxvi. 25; 1 Chron. i. 41.)

DISPENSATION. This word, in its scriptural use generally denotes a plan or scheme, prescribed and revealed by God, for his own glory and for the advantage and happiness of his creatures. The several dispensations of religion revealed to mankind at different periods, as that of the Patriarchs; that of Moses; and that of Christ, the perfection and ultimate object of every other, were adapted to the conditions of the human race at these several periods; and all in regular succession, were mutually connected and rendered preparatory one to the other; and all were subservient to the design of saving the world, and promoting the perfection and happiness of its rational and moral inhabitants. (Eph. i. 10; iii. 2; Col. i. 25.)

DISPERSION. This term is invariably applied to those Jews and their posterity, who, after the captivities of Assyria and Chaldea, did not return to their own country, but continued in the countries of their exile. (Isa. xi. 12; Jer. xxv. 34; Ezek. xii. 14, 15; xxii. 15; John vii. 36.) Peter and James wrote to the tribes who were scattered abroad, who were called "the dispersion." (1 Peter i. 1; James i. 1.)

DISTAFF—See WEAVER.

DIVINATION. The practice of illusory arts in foretelling future events. In the early ages numerous divinations and jugglery tricks were practised; and the impostors who practised them were held in distinguished honour. (Gen. xlii. 8; Ex. vii. 11—18; 2 Tim. iii. 8.) The impostors who bore the name of soothsayers or enchanters, pretended that they were able, by their incantations, to summon back departed spirits from their abodes. (Deut. xviii. 10, 11.) Some of them were ventriloquists, who for themselves uttered the communications which they pretended to receive from the dead, as the witch of Endor, (1 Sam. xxviii. 12,) and those "that peep and mutter," (Isa. viii. 19; xix. 3; xxix. 4;) also called "soothsayers." (Acts xvi. 16.) Other diviners drew their predictions from the clouds; (Lev. xiv. 26; Deut. xviii. 10, 14; Isa. ii. 6;) from the stars; (Dan. ii. 2;) from the conditions of the internal parts of animals; (Ezek. xxi. 21;) from serpents; (Lev. xix. 26; Deut. xviii. 10; Acts vi. 16;) and by means of arrows of different colours. (Ezek. xxii. 22; Hos. iv. 12.) Oracles were consulted previously to any transaction of great moment; but they always returned ambiguous answers. In Gen. xxxiv. 8, it is said of Joseph's cup that he "divined" by it; but the term simply means that he tested or made trial of his brethren by it. Divination was a prevailing sin among the Hebrews, and in all its forms is reproved with marked severity by the law of Moses; itasmuch as they who practised such arts pretended to a knowledge of future events, which belongs to God alone, and virtually disclaimed His allegiance. (Lev. xx. 6, 27; Deut. xviii. 9, 14; Jer. xiv. 14; Ezek. xiii. 8, 9; 2 Pet. i. 19.) The Hebrews were not without lawful means of enquiring into the future; they had the prophets or seers, and the Urim and Thummim; and God having thus made provision even for the infirmities of his people, all other modes of obtaining a knowledge of future events were forbidden under the severest penalties; to be stoned to death was the punishment denounced against diviners and those who consulted them; and it is to be observed, that none were likely to do so save as who, on account of the unlawful-word didaskolas, rendered "doctor," (Luke ii. 46; v. 17.) and "master," (Matt. x. 24, 25; Luke vi. 40; John iii. 13.) properly designates a teacher of the Jewish law. The same title was applied to Christ; (Matt. viii. 10; xii. 38; xvii. 24;) to John the Baptist; (Luke iii. 12;) to Paul; (1 Tim. ii. 7;) and to other Christian teachers. (1 Cor. xii. 28, 29.)
DIV

The Jewish doctors or teachers seem to be distinguished from the scribes and lawyers, as rather teaching orally, than giving written opinions. They were mostly of the sect of the Pharisees; and taught or disputed in the temple, in synagogues, or wherever they could find an audience. The subjects on which they lectured were commonly intricate, and of no great utility; and any disciple, who chose, might propose questions, upon which it was their duty to remark and give their opinions. They were self-constituted teachers, and had no fixed salary; hence they generally acquired a subsistence by the exercise of some art or handicraft. Occasionally they received a present from their disciples, which was called a "double honour," properly a liberal honorary. (1 Tim. v. 17.) Instruction, knowledge, or learning, is frequently called doctrine. (Deut. xxxii. 2; Matt. xv. 9; Tit. i. 9; Heb. xii. 9.)

DODAI = loving. One of David's captains. (1 Chron. xxvii. 4.)

DODANIM. A Grecian people. (Gen.x.4.) Some suppose the inhabitants of Dodona, a city of Epirus, to be intended. Others think the word should read Dardanii, referring to the Dorians, as expressed by the Samaritan and Septuagint, and by the Hebrew text itself in 1 Chron. i. 7; and in the margin of our version.

DODAVAH = love of Jehovah. The father of Eleazar. (2 Chron. xx. 37.)

DODO = love. The father of Eleazar. (2 Sam. xxiii. 9.)

DOEG = fearful. An Edomite, and the chief of Saul's herdsmen; who, in obedience to the order of Saul, slew the priests, without scruple or reluctance. (1 Sam. xxi. 9; xxii. 19; Ps. lii. in the title.)

DOG. By the Mosaic law, this animal was declared unclean, and regarded by the Hebrews with peculiar contempt. (Ex. xi. 7; xxxii. 31; Deut. xxiii. 18.) But among the ancient Egyptians, dogs as well as cats, were regarded with veneration. The state of dogs among the Hebrews was the same as it now is in the East, where, having no owners, they prowl about the streets in troops, and get their living generally as they can, from the offals which are cast into the gutters, and are often on the point of starvation; and in the night even attack living men. (Ps. lix. 6, 14, 15.) They sometimes preyed upon human flesh, and licked the blood of the slain. (1 Kings xiv. 11; xxi. 19; xxxi. 35; 2 Kings ix. 10, 16.) The only useful purpose to which dogs appear to have been put was to guard the flocks. (Ex. vi. 7; Job xxx. 1; Isai. li. 10, 11.) Among the Hebrews to compare a person to "a dog" was the most degrading expression possible. (1 Sam. xiv. 14; 2 Sam. iii. 8; ix. 8; Isai. lxvi. 8.) The Jews called themselves the "children," and the Gentiles "dogs." (Matt. xv. 26.) Violent and impure men are compared to dogs. (Ps. xxii. 16; lix. 8-16; Deut. xxiii. 18; 2 Pet. ii. 22; Phil. iii. 2.) And those who are shut out of the kingdom of heaven are called "dogs, sorcerers," etc. (Rev. xxii. 15.)

DOMINIONS. — See Angels.

DOOR. Among the ancient Egyptians, and Hebrews, the doors, whether made of stone or wood, were suspended or moved by means of pivots, which projected from the ends of the two folds, both above and below. The upper pivots, which were the longest, were inserted in sockets sufficiently large to receive them in the lintel: the lower ones were secured in a corresponding manner in the threshold. (Prov. xxvi. 14.) Such doors are now not uncommon in the East; and are usually fastened by a lock, or by a bar. (Judg. iii. 25; xvi. 3; Sol. Song v. 6; Job
A "door opened" denotes the free exercise and propagation of the gospel. (1 Cor. xvi. 9 ; 2 Cor. ii. 12 ; Col. iv. 3.) Christ applies the term to Himself, "I am the door." (John x. 9.) The expression in Ps. Ixxxiv. 10, "I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of my God," is correctly read in the margin, "I would choose rather to sit at the threshold," such a position being preferable to the splendid dwellings of the wicked, where the worship of God is unknown.

DOPHKHAH = smocking or propelling. A place in the wilderness of Sin. (Num. xxxiii. 12.) Seetzen supplies a place called El-Tobbah with Dopkhah.

DOR = a dwelling, habitation. A maritime city, about ten miles above Cesarea, sometimes called "Naphot-Dor." — Heights of Dor, situated on a kind of peninsula in the Mediterranean, at the pass where Mount Carmel commences; and was the capital of a kingdom at the time the Hebrews entered Canaan. It was assigned to the half-tribe of Manasseh. (Josh. xii. 2 ; xvii. 11 ; xiii. 28 ; Judg. i. 37 ; 1 Kings iv. 11.) Dor is now called Tortosa; it is a miserable village, with about 500 inhabitants, who are all Muhammadans.

DOBACAS. This Greek name is the same as the Syriac Tabath, and signifies gazelle. It was the name of a charitable and pious Christian widow of Joppa, whom Peter raised from the dead. (Acts ix. 36-41.)

DOTHAN = tree wells. A place in the north of Samaria, where Joseph's brethren sold him; and also where the Syrian troops attempted to seize Elisba. (Gen. xxxix. 17 ; 28 ; 2 Kings vi. 13.) Dr. Robinson describes its site, as a fine green hill, with a fountain at its southern base, about twelve miles north by west from Samaria, in a broad and very fertile plain.

DOVE. This beautiful genus of birds, comprising the pigeons, doves, and turtles, in their wild state build principally in holes in the rocks; but were frequently domesticated. (Gen. viii. 8-12 ; Sol. Song ii. 14 ; Jer. xxliii. 28 ; Isa. ix. 3.) Doves were accounted clean by the Mosaic law, and were used among the Jewish sacrifices. (Lev. xii. 6-8 ; Gen. xv. 9 ; Matt. xvi. 12 ; Mark xi. 15 ; Luke ii. 24 ; John ii. 14.) The dove is mentioned as an emblem of purity and innocence; (Ps. lxiv. 9 ; Sol. Song i. 15 ; iv. 1 ; v. 2, 12 ; vi. 9,) and the symbol of mourning in solitude. (Isa. xxii. 14 ; Ezek. vii. 16 ; Nah. ii. 7 ; Matt. x. 16.) When a child was born, the mother was required, within a certain time, to bring a lamb and a young pigeon, or turtle-dove, for offerings; but if she was too poor to afford a lamb, she might bring two turtles, or two young pigeons. (Lev. xi. 6-8 ; Num. vi. 10.) Thus we may judge of the poverty of Mary, the mother of Jesus, when, upon His presentation, she brought to the temple at Jerusalem, the two birds instead of a lamb. This she could not have done, had she at the time been enriched with the gold and costly gifts of the Magi. (Luke ii. 24.) To supply mothers, who came from a distance, with the means of making the customary offerings, the priests permitted the sale of doves in the courts of the temple. Our Lord drove out those who traded in pigeons, because the house of prayer was not a fit place for merchandise. (Matt. xxi. 12 ; Mark xi. 15 ; John ii. 14-16.) The Holy Spirit descended, as a dove descends, upon our Saviour at his baptism. (Matt. iii. 16 ; Mark i. 10 ; Luke iii. 22 ; John i. 32.)

DOVES' DUNG. In the famine in Samaria, it is said that "an ass's head was sold for fourscore pieces of silver, and the fourth part of a cab of doves' dung for five pieces of silver." (2 Kings vi. 25.) The general opinion is that the doves' dung was a kind of chick-peas, lintil, or tare, of which great quantities are sold in Cairo and Damascus. But Celsius has shown that Bochart was mistaken in affirming that, among the Arabs, doves or sparrows' dung is a common epíthet for chick-peas or vetches fried. The sacred writer does not mean to say that these articles were stakedly sold at such prices; but simply that the famine was so severe, and everything so exorbitantly dear, that instances were known to occur when an ass's head was sold for eighty pieces of silver, and a cab of doves' dung for five. So that the passage may be understood literally; since it is not incredible that persons oppressed by severe famine should devour even the excrements of animals. In the account of the famine and pestilence in Egypt, A. D. 1200, 1201, written in Arabic by the physician Abd-Allatif; we have a remarkable illustration of 2 Kings vi. 24—36. He says, "vast multitudes also sought refuge in the cities of Misir and Cairo; and the poor already pressed by the famine which increased continually, were driven to devour dogs, and the carcasses of animals and men, yea, even the excrements of both." In the famine in England, during the reign of Edward II., A. D. 1316, it is said that pigeon’s dung was eaten by the poor.
DOW

DOWRY. In the East, the bridegroom pays to the father of his bride, a sum of money, or value to his satisfaction, before he can expect to receive his daughter in marriage. The sum which he is required to pay, as a nuptial present or dowry, is in accordance with the rank and station of her family. When Jacob had nothing which he could immediately give for a wife, he purchased her by his services to her father Laban. (Gen. xxii. 18; xxx. 20; xxxiv. 12; 1 Sam. xviii. 25; Ex. xxii. 16, 17; Josh. xv. 18; Hos. iii. 2.)

DRACHMA. An Attic silver coin, equal to seventeenpence halfpenny, or, according to Boeckh, to tenpence in our money; but current among the Romans as equal to the denarius. This term is rendered "piece of silver," but the margin has the Greek term drachma. (Luke xv. 8, 9.)

DRAGON. The Hebrew word tannin rendered "dragon," properly signifies a great fiend, sea monster; (Isa. xxvii. 1;) a crocodile; (Isa. lii. 9; Ps. lxxxiv. 13; Ezek. xxix. 3; xxxii. 2, margin;) a dragon, probably a boa constrictor; (Jer. li. 34;) a "serpent;" (Ps. xci. 13; Ex. xxvii. 9—12; Deut. xxxii. 83;) also a "whale." (Gen. i. 21; Job vii. 13; Ezek. xxxii. 2; Ps. lxxxiv. 18, margin.) The Hebrew word tzar, rendered "dragon," designates the jackal; an animal dwelling in deserts, among solitude and desolation, (Isa. xxxii. 20; xxxiv. 13; Ps. lxxxiv. 19; Jer. ix. 11; x. 22; xlix. 38,) suckling its young, (Lam. iv. 3,) and uttering a wailing cry. (Job xxx. 29; Min. i. 8.) In Lam. iv. 3, this term is rendered "sea monster," in the margin "sea calves." The term "dragon" is used, in the New Testament, symbolically for "that old serpent, called the devil." (Rev. xii. 3—17; xiii. 2, 4, 11; xvi. 13; xx. 2.)

DRAGON-WELL.—See GILON.

Silver Dollar.

DRAM. The Hebrew word dorsher, rendered "dram," (Ezra ii. 69; Neh. vii. 70—72,) and the word adarkon, also rendered "dram," (1 Chron. xxix. 7; Ezra viii. 27,) signify the bow or figure of Darius, and are the names of a Persian coin of pure gold, common also among the Jews while under the Persian domination. The golden daric of Darius Hystaspes, according to the specimens weighed by Dr. Bernard, were fifteen grains heavier than an English guinea, and their intrinsic value may be reckoned at twenty-five shillings. He also coined darics of silver, one of which is in the British Museum, which weighs about 238 grains, about the value of two shillings and sixpence in our money. Through the courtesy of Mr. Vaux, of the Department of Antiquities, in the Museum, we are enabled to give an engraving of the silver daric. Those coins usually bear the image of an archer with a tiara. This ancient coin is probably the earliest coined money which was known to, and used by, the Jews.

DREAM. A dream is perhaps not so much our mental state and involuntary operations during sleep, as, at the moment or turning point, when we drop into sleep or wake from it. Such then, at that point, is the extreme rapidity with which the mental operations are performed, or rather with which the material changes on which the ideas depend, are excited in the hemispherical ganglions, that the relations of time and of space are alike annihilated. So that, it would seem, that what we call a lengthy dream, in which the mind had passed over so much ground, and gazed upon such a variety of scenery, passed ideally through the mind at one instant, and could not have continued over two or three seconds. The Lord frequently made use of dreams to reveal his purposes or requirements to individuals, and enabled persons to explain them. The power of interpreting dreams was of course a supernatural gift, so far as the dreams had reference to future events; for these are necessarily unknown, except to the Supreme Disposer of them. (Gen. xx. 3—6; xxviii. 12—14; xl. 1—28; 1 Sam. xxviii. 6, 7; Judg. vii. 13—16; Joel ii. 28.) Jehovah expressly forbade His people from observing dreams, and from consulting pretended observers of them, under the penalty of death. (Deut. xiii. 1—4.) Since the fuller revelation of God's will has been made to us in the gospel, all confidence in dreams, as indicative of future events, is presumptuous and delusive, and all pretension to the power of interpreting them must be regarded as in the highest degree impious and absurd. —See Vision.

DREGS. —See Wine.

DRESS. —See Garments.

DRINK-OFFERING. —See Offerings.

DRINK, STRONG. —See Wine.

DROMEDARY. —See Camel.

DROPSY. A well-known disease, mentioned only in Luke iv. 2. Our Saviour performed, on the Sabbath-day, the miracle of healing the man who was labouring under it.

DROUGHT. From the middle of May to the middle of August, the land of Judea was dry. It was the "drought of summer." (Gen. xxx. 40; Ps. xxxii. 4.) The grass was sometimes completely withered, and the parched earth broken into chasms. (Ps. 13.) The heavens seemed like brass, and the earth like iron, and all the land and the creatures upon it suffered; (Deut. xxviii. 23;) and nothing but the very slight dew of the night preserved the life of any living thing. (Hag. i. 11; Deut. viii. 15; Isa. xxv. 7.)

DROWNING. A mode of capital punishment in use among the Syrians. The emperor Augustus punished certain persons, who had been guilty of incapacity in the province of Syria or of Lydia, by causing them to be thrown into a river, with a heavy weight about their necks. Christ alludes to this mode of punishment. (Matt. xviii. 8.)

DRUNKENNESS. The first instance of intoxication on record, is that of Noah, (Gen. ix. 21,) who was probably ignorant of the effects of the expressed juice of the grape. The sin of drunkenness was not uncommon among the Jews; (Ps. cvii. 7; Isa. v. 11; xxiv. 20; Prov. xxi. 1; Hab. ii. 15, 16;) and is most expressly condemned in the Scriptures. (Rom. xiii. 13; 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10; Eph. v. 18; 1 Thess. v. 6, 7.) Men are sometimes represented as drunk with sorrow, with afflictions, and with the wine of God's wrath. (Isa. xlix. 6; Jer. lii. 57; Ezek. xxiii. 33.) Persons under the influence of idolatry, are said to be drunk, because they make no use of their natural reason. (Isa. xxviii. 7; Rev. xvii. 2.) Drunkenness sometimes denotes abundance, satiety. (Deut. xix. 19; xxxii. 42; Isa. xlix. 26.)

DRUSILLA = swaddled with dew. The youngest daughter of Herod Agrippa, 1, sister of the younger Agrippa, celebrated for her beauty, and equally infamous with her sister Bernice for her licentiousness. (Act. xxiv. 24.) She was first betrothed to Epiphanes prince of Comagene; but was afterwards married... to Axius, king of Emesa. When Felix came as governor to Judea, he abandoned Axius to become his wife. Paul bore testimony before them, to the truth of the Christian religion, at Caesarea.

DUKE. This word is derived from the Latin dux, and merely signifies a leader or chief. In Gen. xxxvi. 15—43, we find a long list of "dukes of Edom;" but the word chief, or "prince" ought rather to have been preferred.

DULCIMBER. The original word rendered "dulcimer," is the Greek συμφωνίας, that is, symphony, adopted into the Chaldee tongue. (Dan. iii. 15.) Hence, it is doubtful whether it really means a musical instrument, or a musical strain, chorus, or accompaniment of many voices, or instruments, in concert with harmony. (Dan. iii. 5, 10.) The Rabbins describe the συμφωνίας of Daniel as a sort of bagpipe, composed of two pipes connected with a leather strap, and of a harsh, screaming sound. At the present day the same instrument, which is the common pipe, or shalm, is in Italy called συμφωνία, and in Asia Minor, σάμπονια.

DUMAH = silence, land of silence. 1. A tribe and district of the Ishmaelites in Arabia, so called from one of Ishmael's sons. It is probably the same which is still called by the Arabs Stony Duma, and Syrian Duma, situated on the confines of the Syrian desert and Arabia Petraea. (Gen. xxv. 14; Isa. xxi. 11.) 2. A city of the tribe of Judah. (Josh. xv. 52.)

DUMB. One unable to speak by reason of natural infirmity. (Ex. iv. 11.) Christ restored those who were dumb from demoniacal influence. (Matt. ix. 32, 33; xii. 22; Luke xi. 14.) The man who was deaf and had an impediment in his speech, (Mark vii. 32—35,) whom Christ restored, was not dumb, nor probably deaf by nature; but was one who had a natural impediment to utterance.

DURA = a circle, or round enclosure. A plain in Babylonia, where Nebuchadnessar caused the golden image to be erected and worshipped. (Dan. iii. 1.) A plain on the eastern bank of the Tigris still bears the name of Dura, and is described by Mr. Layard as "a wilderness, with here and there a shapeless mound, the remains of some ancient habitation."

DUST. In the vicinity of Palestine there are vast plains, or deserts, of fine sand, which, when agitated by violent winds, make most terrific and devastating storms. Mr. Buckingham describes a terrible sand storm in the desert of Egypt. He says: "But certain it is, that fifty gales of wind at sea appeared to me more easy to be encountered than one amongst those sands. It is impossible to imagine desolation more complete; we could see neither sun, earth, nor sky: the plain at ten paces distance was absolutely imperceptible: our beasts, as well as ourselves, were so covered as to render breathing difficult; they hid their faces in the ground, and we could only uncover our own for a moment, to behold this chaos of midday darkness, and wait impatiently for its abatement. Alexander's journey to the temple of Jupiter Ammon, and the destruction of the Persian armies of Cambyses, in the Libyan desert, rose to my recollection with new impressions, made by the horror of the scene before me. The few hours we remained in this situation were passed in unbroken silence: every one was occupied with his own reflections, as if the reign of terror forbade communication. Its fury spent itself, like the storms of ocean, in sudden lulls and squalls: but it was not until the third or fourth interval that our fears were sufficiently conquered to address each other." The fine and penetrating dust of Egypt was converted into the plague of "gnats." (Ex.xviii.16,17.) And Jehovah threatened the Hebrews, in the event of their disobedience, that he would "make the rain of their land powder and dust." (Deut. xxviii. 24.) The term "dust" is sometimes used to designate a numerous people; (Num. xxiii. 10;) also a low or mean condition. (1 Sam. ii. 8; Nah. iii. 18.) To cast "dust" or "ashes" upon the head, was a sign of mourning; (Josh. vii. 8;) and sitting in the dust, a sign of extreme affliction. (Isa. xlvi. 217)
DYE

1; Lam. iii. 29.) To shake or wipe off the dust of a place from one’s feet, marks the renouncing of all intercourse with it in future. (Matt. x. 14; Acts xiii. 51.) To “lick the dust” signifies the most abject submission. (Ps. lxii. 9.) In almost every part of Asia, those who demand justice against a criminal “throw dust” upon him. (2 Sam. xvi. 15; Acts xxii. 23.) The term “dust” also designates death; (Gen. iii. 19; Ps. xxii. 15;) and the grave. (Job vii. 21.)

DYING. The ancient Egyptians excelled in the brilliancy of their dyed stuffs; and from them the Hebrews, while dwelling among them, learnt the art of dyeing. This is evident from the curtains of the tabernacle and the sacerdotal robes which were manufactured in the desert. (Ex. xxv. 1; xxvii. 5—8.)
The chemical skill of the Egyptian linen manufacturers in employing the metallic oxides and acids or mordants, is placed beyond dispute by ocular proof. The various processes of dyeing and printing, or imparting the pattern, by blocks, the origin of calico printing—are exhibited on the monuments in all their minute details. Even the printing blocks, engraved with phonetic letters, and with the dye upon them, may be now seen in the British Museum. Experimental investigation and chemical analysis show, that in the dyes which they employed to produce certain results, of which the relics are extant, they must have employed acetates of alum and of iron, and vegetable and mineral dyes, both substantive and adhesive, as they are termed by the modern dyers. It appears that the linen-printers and dyers used the cas-tanos moestaee, which grows in Egypt for red; wood for blue; and the resedus, a native of Egypt for yellow.
The system of bleaching now practised in this country—has been used from time immemorial in the East, and doubtless therefore, in ancient Egypt, by immersion in oxygenated mutatis of lime, after subjecting the action or steam of boiling water. The three other colours, blue, red, and yellow, are ADJECTIVE COLOURS, i.e. fugitive without the use of mordants. They could not be fixed, as we find them fixed, without their proper mordants, namely, oxides of tin, arsenic, and iron. Occasionally the muslin, beautifully dyed and patterned, was interwoven with silver and gold thread, some specimens of which can be traced up to the early period of Thothmos I, and even of Osiris. Indeed, the richly painted walls and palaces, as well as the unmatcht gilding, as fresh as when first laid on, show a perfect familiarity among the ancient Egyptians, not with mineral and vegetable colours only, but the perfect use of the metallic oxides in their composition. None of these operations could have been effected without a practical chemical knowledge.

EAGLE

EAGLE. By the Hebrews the eagle was called neizer—the lacertor, and it is probable that this name not only includes the subgenera of Aquila, eagle properly so called, and Aziz, sun-eagles, but also the larger vultures, which are also common in Palestine. Like all birds of prey the eagle was unclean to the Hebrews. (Lev. xi. 13; Deut. xiv. 12.) The peculiar habits of the eagle are often alluded to. (Num. xxiv. 21; Job. ix. 26; xxxix. 27—30; Prov. xxxii. 5; xxx. 17, 18; Jer. xlix. 16; Ezek. xvii. 3; Obad. 4.) Its tenderness towards its young; (Ex. xiv. 4; Deut. xxxii. 11;) the rapidity of its flight; (Deut. xxviii. 49; 2 Sam. i. 23; Jer. iv. 13; xlvi. 40; Lam. iv. 19;) and its destructive power are accurately described. (Isa. xvi. 11; Hos. viii. 1.)
The eagle, like other birds of prey, shreds his feathers in the beginning of spring. He then appears with renewed plumage and vigour, and his old age assumes the appearance of youth. (Ps. clii. 5; Isa. xl. 31.) The Hebrew word raalun, rendered “gier-eagle,” is probably the Egyptian vulture called ra-

218 classi; which devours the dead bodies of asses and camels, before they putrefy, and fill the air with noxious exhalations.
(Lev. xi. 18.) Cyrus, who is alluded to under the figure of an "eagle," (Isa.
xvi. 11,) had, according to Xenophon, a golden eagle with extended wings, for the standard of the Persian army. So also, in the references to the keen sight and scent of the eagle, (Matt. xxiv. 28; Luke xxi. 17,) the Jewish nation is compared to a decaying body, exposed in the open field, and inviting the Roman army, whose standard was an eagle, to come together and devour it. Many of the Roman eagles may be seen in the Museums; they are generally made of brass, and are a little larger than a good sized pigeon.

EAR. Among the Hebrews, the servant, who renounced the privilege of being made free in the sabbatical year, submitted to have his ear bored through with an awl; which was done in the presence of some judge, or magistrate, that it might appear a voluntary act.
This ceremony took place at his master's door, and was the mark of perpetual servitude. (Ex. xx. 2-8; Deut. xv. 17.)
So the Messiah says, "Sacrifice and offering thou didst not desire; mine ears have heard thou bored." This designates His voluntary submission to the Divine will,
His obedience unto death for the world's redemption. (Ps. xxii. 1; Heb. x. 5.)

EARING. An old English agricultural term for ploughing, derived from the Anglo-Saxon erian "to plough." This word occurs in Gen. xiv. 6; Ex.
xxiv. 21; Deut. xii. 4; Is. xxx. 12; Is. xxx. 24; and is radically the same with aarrow. What we call arable land is sometimes written eareable land.
The same Hebrew word which in these passages is rendered "earing" is in Ps.
xxix. 3, translated "ploughed."

EARNEST. Something going before, or given in advance as an assurance of more in reserve: thus earnest, or earnest-money, is a sum paid in advance as a security of full payment at a future time. In the new Testament it denotes the comfort of the Holy Spirit; and this grace is the earnest of future glory in the heavenly inheritance. (2 Cor. i. 22;
v. 5; Eph. i. 13, 14.)

EAR-RINGS. Among the Hebrews, ear-rings were chiefly confined to the woman, but among the Assyrians and many other tribes they were also worn by the men. (Judg. viii. 24.) Some of these ornaments, which have been found in the Egyptian and Assyrian ruins, are made of gold and silver, adorned with gems, and of elegant form and workmanship. There are two Hebrew words denoting rings: 1, אֶּרֶן, a ring, specially an "ear-ring." (Num. xxxi. 50; Ezek.
xvi. 12;) 2, מַעְשָׂר, a ring, specially a nose-ring. (Gen. xxiv. 47; Prov. xi. 22; Isa. iii. 21;) but this term seems to designate "ear-rings" in Judg. viii. 24, 25; Job xii. 11. Ear-rings of certain kinds were probably used as talismans and amulets. (Gen. xxxiv. 4.)

EARTH. The planet we inhabit is an oblate sphere, more than 7925 miles in equatorial, and over 7899 miles in polar diameter. Its mean distance from the sun being 100,000,000 miles.
The length of the path or orbit travelled over by the earth in a year, is estimated to be 587,019,740 miles; hence the earth must move at the rate of seven-sevenths miles in a second of time. Its surface contains about 200,000,000 square miles, of which scarcely a third part is dry land;
and the remaining two-thirds are water.
The time when the whole matter of the earth was in a gaseous state, and afterwards in a state of fusion. Hence the cause of the earth's sphericity is evident, if we consider it as having been originally a yielding mass, capable of assuming any form; then by the force of gravity, and other attractive influences, the particles tending towards the common centre, and the surface gradually cooling from its state of incandescence, the globular form is the necessary consequence. The thickness of the crust or solid envelope of the globe is estimated at less than forty miles; while in some parts it is supposed to be considerably more. It is not improbable that oceans of melted matter exist beneath the crust; and perhaps all the deep-seated interior is in a Earth

state of constant fusion, whose undulations, with other modifying causes, produce elevations, earthquakes, and volcanoes. In the primeval world, when the heat was radiated from the crust of the earth, climatic relations would be wholly at variance with the present. This will account for the wonderful distribution of gigantic animals and exuberant plants, of tropical climates, found embedded in the strata of the earth's crust.

The Hebrew term "adamah," rendered "earth," merely designates a portion of the earth's surface; (Gen. iv. 11; vi. 1; vii. 4); a "land" or country; (Gen. xxviii. 16; Is. xiv. 2; Ps. xlv. 11.) So also the term "earth," generally denotes a land, country, region, a portion of the habitable earth; (Gen. xxii. 8; xxvi. 3; 4; Ex. ii. 8; xiii. 5;) as opposed to the sea. (Gen. i. 28.) It is also used for the inhabitants of the earth. (Gen. iv. 19; xi. 1; xiv. 31.) When conjoined with the "heavens," it denotes the whole universe. (Gen. i. 1; ii. 1, 4.)

The idea which the ancient Hebrews had of the figure of the earth, can only be conjectured from incidental hints occasionally given in the Scriptures. (Is. x. 22; Prov. viii. 27; Job xxvi. 10; Ps. xxiv. 2; xxxix. 8.) From these passages—which, if not up to the mark of modern science, are certainly not opposed to it—we obtain the notion of the earth's disk as circular, rising out of the water, and surrounded by the ocean, the firmament being spread over it as a canopy. Though floating free in the immensity of space, yet through the Creator's might, it remains secure. (I Chron. xxvii. 30; Ps. xciii. 1; civ. 5; cxix. 90.)

Poetically it is spoken of as a splendid palace, resting upon many pillars. (2 Sam. xxii. 8; Ps. lxxv. 3; civ. 5; Prov. viiii. 25-29.) In the narrative of the creation, in Gen. i. 2—31; ii. 5, 6, the term "earth" is not used to express the whole earth, but only that part of its surface which God was adapting for the dwelling of man and the animals peculiarly serviceable to him. Long ere the commencement of the six days work, there had been several separate creations and destructions, in different parts of the earth, at respectively distant epochs. And now the final acts of creation take place on that portion of the earth's surface which had been reduced to a desolate, dreary, hideous waste, "without form and void"—without order or beauty, inhabitant or furniture. As to the several conditions of our globe during the vast periods antecedent to the six days work, the Scriptures are silent; because they belong not to the moral history of our race, and none neither within the letter nor the spirit of revelation. But that silence destroys not the meaning of those physical monuments of His power that God has placed before our eyes, giving us at the same time faculties whereby we may interpret them, and comprehend their meaning. On the mountains and rocks, and the mighty mausoleums of the brutes that perish, eclipsing in their grandeur the gorgeous temple, the monumental bronze, the regal pyramid, God has engraved in characters unmistakable, the history of our planet during those apparently endless cycles, when creations and destructions, with ages of comparative quiet, succeeded each other; and He has registered there the fact, that man and other creatures of his own date have been placed but a few years upon the earth. The incontrovertible evidence of physical phenomena everywhere proclaim the Infinite Wisdom, Power, and Goodness of God; and show, that His various operations were but parts of His one great and glorious plan. Well has Calvin observed: "Forasmuch as all the creatures, from the firmament to the centre of the earth, might be witnesses and messengers of His glory unto all men, to draw them to seek Him, and after having found Him, to welcome Him and do Him homage, according to the dignity of a Lord so good, so powerful, so wise, and eternal; and also did help each one in its place to this quiet." (Epistles prefixed to the French New Testament.)
What awaits the condition of our earth, when the human dynasty has run its race, is probably above the power of reason to determine. If it be the purpose of God that the earth shall be subjected to a total conflagration, preparatory to a glorious future, we perfectly well know that the instruments of such an event lie close at hand, and wait only the Divine volition to burst out in a moment. The inspired declaration, that “the heavens and the earth shall flee away, and no more place be found for them,” is undoubtedly figurative, and denotes the most momentous changes in the scenes of the Divine moral government. (Rev. xx. 11; xxi. 1.) Many expositors understand the passage in 2 Pet. iii. 7, 10, of a literal conflagration of the earth and heavens, to take place immediately after the resurrection and the final judgment; but others consider it as altogether significant of moral changes—a figurative announcement of the overthrow of Judaism, and the establishment of Christianity. On this passage Dr. John Owen remarks: “The apostle treats upon three worlds, or states of the world; the ancient one, which had perished by water; the one then present, which was to be consumed by fire; and a third, the ‘new heavens and earth, the abode of righteousness.’ He is not referring to the visible heaven or earth, considered with respect to its substance. For the destruction of the ancient world by water did not take away the material frame of the heavens and the terrestrial globe. The term ‘world’ is used to signify the human inhabitants of the world. They were extinguished by the flood; and another world of men was to be established, for maintaining true religion and the right worship of God. Of this world He laid the foundations in the family of Noah; and its fabric was completed by the erection of the church of Israel. That was the ‘world’ whose immediately impending dissolution by fire Peter here predicts: but we must observe that he uses the prophetic style of emblematical imagery, corresponding with Isa. ii. 15, 16; lxv. 15, 17, 18; lxvi. 14—16. When Peter wrote, this ‘world,’—the Jewish church, had become apostate, and was hastening to the destruction of fire; just as the ancient world plunged itself into the destruction of the deluge. By the burning of the temple and city of Jerusalem, the frame of that ‘world’ was dissolved. The apostle directs believers to another world, a matter of expectation, to be looked for, because the ‘end of the world,’ or completion of the period, was not yet accomplished; (Matt. xxviii. 20;) and which would be ‘new heavens and a new earth,’ according to the promise of God. In that promise the prophet draws as it were a picture of the coming of the Messiah. (Isa. lxv. 17; lxvi. 22.) Thus the first or ancient world, was that which perished by the deluge; the second was the actually present, which the apostle declares was about to perish by fire; and the third, the ‘world to come,’ is declared to be that which shall endure to the end of time.” Whatever may be thought of the subsequent purification of the earth by the action of fire, let us look to the Lamb of God—the Divine sacrifice, which alone can take away the sin of the world. (John i. 29.)

It must be observed, that “the earth,” properly denotes “the land” of Judah. (Matt. xxii. 35; xxvi. 45; Mark xiv. 43; Luke iv. 25; xxii. 23; Rom. ix. 28; James v. 17.) In Ezra i. 2, “the earth” is used for the Chaldean, Assyrian, and Persian empires. —See Creation.

EARTH AND EARTHQUAKE.

EARTHQUAKE. All our observations go to prove, that volcanic eruptions, earthquakes, and the heating of the ground within, are the effects of the confined gases and vapours, produced by the heat, from the central fiery lakes, upon the earth’s crust. As the regions of Babylonia, Syria, and Palestine, abound in volcanic appearances, we might expect allusions to them in Scripture. (Gen. xi. 2, 3; xiv. 10; xix. 24, 25; Ps. civ. 5; Ex. xix. 16; Judg. v. 5; Isa. xiv. 1—3.) An earthquake is recorded to have happened in the days of Elijah. (1 Kings xix. 11, 12.)
Another occurred in the days of Uzziah, king of Judah. (Jos. Ant. ix. 10. 4; Am. i. 1; Zech. xiv. 5.) And a third at the crucifixion of Christ. (Matt.
xxvii. 50, 51; Luke xxiii. 44, 45; Mark xvi. 33.) These are the only three litereal earthquakes mentioned in Scripture; except we include with some, the giving of the law on Sinai, (Ex. xix. 18,) and the case of Korah, Dathan, and Abi-ram. (Num. xvi. 32.) Syria and Palestine are still occasionally subject to earthquakes. In 1759 there happened one which caused the greatest ravages, destroying upwards of 20,000 persons in the valley of Baalbec. For three months the shocks of it terrified the inhabitats of Lebanon so much, that they abandoned their houses and dwelt under tents. In the autumn of 1822, this region was desolated by another earthquake, or rather by a succession of earthquakes. In 1834, an earthquake shook Jerusalem. And again on January 1st, 1857, this city and its vicinity were visited by severe shocks of earthquakes. Tiberias was laid in ruins, and there probably perished, in this place, about 700 persons, out of a population of 2,500. The loss of life from this earthquakes, in different parts of Palestine and Syria, is estimated at nearly 7,000 persons. The term earthquake is sometimes used symbolically of God’s power, wrath, and vengeance; and of great political commotions and revolutions in states and empires. (Ps. xvii. 7; xlv.
2; oxiv. 4; Is. v. 25; xxiv. 19; Joel ii. 30; iii. 16; Hab. iii. 6; Nah. i. 5; Hag. ii. 6, 7; Heb. xii. 28; Rev. vi.
12; xi. 18.)

EAST. The four cardinal points, east, west, south, and north, were called by the Hebrews the “four corners of the earth”; (Rev. vii. 1; xx. 8;) the “four ends of the earth;” (Isa. xi. 13;)
the “four quarters or ends of heaven;” (Jer. xxxix. 36;) the “four winds of heaven;” (1 Chron. ix. 24; Zech. ii.
6; vi. 5; Matt. xxiv. 31; Mark xiii.
27;) and Job, (xxiii. 8, 9,) describes them by the words “before” and “behind,” “right” and “left.” The oriigin of such phraseology is, that while in the projection of our maps, the spectator is supposed to be looking towards the north, among the Hebrews and other orientals, the foundation of all geographical bearings is the idea of having the face directed towards the rising sea, when we place the east before us, the west behind us, the south on our right hand, and the north on our left. (Ex.
xxvi. 9; 1 Kings vi. 3; Ezek. xlvii. 1.)
Sometimes the four quarters of the heavsens are designated by the two which lie opposite; thus the “east” and the “west;” (Isa. iv. 6; Ps. i. 1; xcv. 7; xiii. 3; Mal. i. 11; Matt. viii. 11;) the “north” and the “south.” (Isa. iv. 8; Ps. lxxxviii. 13; Zech. vii. 7; xii. 6.)
The true easterly direction of a place, is sometimes called “in” or “before the face of” a place. (Gen. xvi. 7; Ex.
xxii. 22; 1 Sam. xv. 7; Num. xxi. 11; Deut. xxxii. 49.) In 1 Kings xi. 7, a hill is mentioned as being “before Jerusalem, which from Zech. xiv. 4, is found to be the Mount of Olives. The “Fore Sea,” or East Sea, is the Dead Sea, which lies to the east of Jerusalem.
(Ezek. xlvii. 8; Joel ii. 20; Zech. xiv. 8.)
The term “East” was also used to denote Syria, the regions beyond the Tigris and Euphrates, the shores of the Indian Ocean and the Arabian Gulf. And the miscellaneous population of theseegions were called the “men,” “children,” or “sons of the East.” (Gen.
xix. 1; Judg. vi. 8; vii. 12; 1 Kings
iv. 30; Job i. 3; Is. ii. 6; xix. 11;
ix. 11; Jer. xxv. 19—35; Ezek. xxv.
4.) The “wise men” beheld the star while they were in the East; and came from that quarter to Jerusalem, and thence to Nazareth, some time after the birth of the Saviour, to worship
Him. (Matt. ii. 1, 2, 9.)

EASTER. This word occurs in Acts
xii. 4, and is improperly put for “passover.” In every other passage of our version, the original word is properly rendered “passover,” and of course EAS

denotes the name season or festival.
EAST SEA.—See Sea.
EAST WIND.—See Wind.
EATING.—See Meals.

1. EBAL = stripped of foliage. A mountain in the northern part of Mount Ephraim, opposite to Mount Gerizim, from which it is separated by a valley of not more than five hundred yards in width, in which stood the old city Shechem, now Nablus. Mounts Gerizim and Ebol rise in steep rocky precipices immediately from the valley on each side, apparently some eight hundred feet in height, though the latter may be less elevated by one hundred feet or more. The sides of both these mountains are mainly desolate, except that a few olive trees are scattered upon them. The side of the northern mountain, Ebol, along the foot, is full of ancient excavated sepulchres. It was on Mount Ebol that God commanded to be reared up an altar, and a pillar, inscribed, with the law; and the tribes were to be assembled, half on Ebol and half on Gerizim, to hear the fearful maldictions pronounced by the Levites upon all who should violate this sacred code. The tribes which responded with simultaneous "Amens" to the "curses," were stationed on Mount Ebol, and those who answered to the "blessings," on Mount Gerizim. (Deut. xxvii. 12; Josh. viii. 33; xxiv. 25).—See Gerizim.

2. EBAL.—See Obal.

EBED = servant. 1. The father of Gsaal. (Judg. ix. 26). 2. One who returned from the exile with Ezra. (Ezra viii. 6.)

EBED-MELECH = servant of the king. An Ethiopian at the court of Zedekiah, king of Judah, who was instrumental in saving the prophet Jeremiah from death by famine. (Jer. xxxvii. 7—13, xxxix. 16—18)

EBEN-BOHAN.—See Bohan.

EBEN-EZEL = stone of departure. An ancient monumental stone, or perhaps a geographical boundary. (1 Sam. xx. 19.)

EBEN-EZER = stone of help. The name given to a monumental stone which Samuel erected between Mizpah and Shem, in commemoration of the Divine assistance obtained against the Philistines. (1 Sam. vii. 12.) This name occurs also in 1 Sam. iv. 1; v. 1, as the name of the place near which the Hebrews received the sore defeat from the Philistines twenty years before Samuel set up the pillar and called it "Ebenzer." Probably this name was inserted in these passages by a later scribe, or even by Samuel himself, to testify that where the Hebrews had been once defeated, they were finally victorious; hence they said, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us."

EBER = region or country beyond the river. The name of the great grandson of Shem, and the ancestor of Abraham. (Gen. x. 24, 25; xi. 14—17; I Chron. i. 18, 19.) He is also called "Heber." (Luke iii. 35.) The terms "children of Eber," (Gen. x. 21), and "Eber," (Num. xxiv. 24), properly signify the "Hebrew." 2. One of the priests. (Neh. xii. 20.) 3. One of the posterity of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 12.) 4.—See Heber.

ERIASAPH.—See Ariasaph.

EBONY. The Hebrew word Habbris signifies stony, whence chbon-wood or ebony, that is, stone-wood, so called from its hardness. Ebony is the heart-wood of a tree,—the Diospyros Ebenus, which grows in Ethiopia and India. This substance was in high esteem among the ancients, for the hardness and firmness of the wood, and its glossy black colour. (Ezek. xxvii. 15.)

EBRONAH = passage of the sea. A place near Esion-gaber on the Ebanitic gulf of the Red Sea. (Num. xxxiii. 34, 35.)

ECBATANA.—See Achmetha.

ECCLESIASTES. The Hebrew word Koheleth, by which this book of the old Testament is designated, properly signifies Ecclesiastes, the Assembler or Preacher, one addressing a public assembly. As the same term has been supposed to designate the author, the book has been ascribed to the pen of Solomon: "The words of Koheleth, the son of David, king of Jerusalem;" "I Koheleth was king over Israel in Jerusalem." (Eccl. i. 1, 12.) However, as the book does not bear the name of Solomon, there is nothing improbable in the opinion of Prof. M. Stuart, that the language might be employed by a later writer, whose plan was to repeat the sayings and detail the experience of Solomon; inasmuch as he is introduced as only occasionally, not constantly, speaking in the book. The apocryphal author of the Wisdom of Solomon imitated Ecclesiastes, and in this way he even introduces Solomon as speaking.

On account of the general condition of things indicating a period very unlike that of Solomon, and the style and diction being so different from his Proverbs, the same distinguished scholar supposed the book to have been written between 435 and 453 B.C., by a practical religious Hebrew, who had resided abroad, where he had formed some acquaintance with the philosophic discussions of the Greeks. The book of Ecclesiastes is of a practical, moral, and religious character, written from the position of an Israelite. Its great theme is the vanity and brevity of human life, and the unsatisfying nature of all earthly good. In respect to these subjects, the book is peculiarly interesting, when presented as derived from the experience and reflections of such a king, who was at the very summit of human greatness. The experience and reflections of Solomon, belong, of course, rather to the plan of the book than to the category of realities. The writer is one who had passed through all the stages of doubt in respect to the chief good, and the end of human life, and the doctrine of an overruling providence, and of redressive justice. He tells us in the most frank and impressive manner, the tenor and drift of his cogitations on these various subjects, while he was in doubt. In so doing, he has disclosed many a sceptical thought which passed through his mind. In all this, he has his eye upon those who are in that doubting state. He sympathizes with them, and lets himself down to their condition, so as to interest them and get their ear. Then he tells them in serious earnest of the vanity of human life, of the impossibility of escaping retribution, and distinctly lets them know, that the sum of all his thoughts and reflections, after passing through all the stages of doubt and perplexity, is, that "the whole duty of man—all in which he has any deep and lasting interest—is to fear God and keep his commandments;" and the ground of this conclusion is, that "all their actions, good or evil, will assuredly be brought into judgment." Well does this book teach, what experience has so often proved to be true, that scepticism never satisfies and quiets the mind; and that deliverance from it is the greatest of all good, as well as the highest duty.

ECLIPSE. An eclipse of the sun is caused by the interposition of the new moon between the earth and the sun, thus intercepting the sun's light from the earth either totally or partially. An eclipse of the moon is caused by the interposition of the earth between the sun and the full moon, thus intercepting the sun's light from the moon, either totally or partially. A total eclipse of the moon may occasion a privation of her light for an hour and a half, during her total immersion in the shadow; whereas a total eclipse of the sun can never last in any particular place above four minutes, when the moon is nearest to the earth, and her shadow thickest. Hence it appears, that the darkness which "overspread the whole land of Judah," at the time of our Lord's crucifixion, was supernatural, "from the sixth until the ninth hour," or from noon till three in the afternoon, in its duration, and also in its time, about full moon, when the moon could not possibly eclipse the sun. (Matt. xxvii. 51-54.) Great political changes are sometimes symbolized by the darkening of the sun or moon. (Ezek. xxxii. 7; Joel ii. 10, 11; iii. 15.)

ED = a witness. This word occurs as the name of the altar erected by the Reubenites and Gadites; (Josh. xxii. 34;) whereas the word ought to have been rendered "a witness," or "testimony," as in the margin, and also in Josh. xxiv. 27.

EDAR = flock. A village near Beth-EDE

by its inhabitants, but cannot well be conceived as existing prior to such periods. Assuming Eden, then, as the ante-diluvian name of the region; and the names of the rivers and other places mentioned as post-diluvian, and these well known in the time of Moses, the situation of Eden is to be determined by determining, as far as possible, the respective positions of the adjacent streams and regions. That Eden was a region of considerable extent, is to be inferred from the face of the narrative; while the "garden" was a smaller tract, situated in the easterly part, but embraced within its limits. We may suppose Eden to have been situated in the fairer part of Asia; not unlikley in some part of the region lying between the Caucasian ridge, the Caspian Sea, and Tartary, on the north; the Persian and Indian seas on the south; and the high mountain ridges which run at considerable distances, on the eastern and the western flank. The "garden," which was situated "eastward in Eden," may have been in Armenia, or probably in Mesopotamia, nearer its eastern than its western limits. The special names Assur = Assyria, Hiddekel = Tigris, and Pherat = Euphrates, seem to determine explicitly this tract of country. But what can be said of the other regions and rivers, which lie so remote from this tract of country, as Erez = Ethiopia, Gihon = Nile, Havilah = India, and Pison = Indus? Did the several rivers originally rise in the higher regions of Eden, or traverse the primitive seat of mankind? From the narrative we learn that the primeval river, which flowed from Eden, was afterwards "parted," literally broken, divided by breaking, "and became four heads" or principal rivers. Did this division take place by some volcanic revolution, at the period of the Flood, or in the days of Peleg, when "the earth was divided? It may, we think, be safely assumed that the "garden eastward in Eden" was swept away by the Flood,—perhaps by the "breaking up of the fountains of the great deep," either by an elevation of the bed of the Persian and Indian seas, or a subsidence of a part of the extensive region; and thus the features of the country may have been materially altered. There is abundant evidence that the southern parts of Arabia, on the Red sea and the Indian ocean, have been the theatre of stupendous volcanic revolutions. And Humboldt has remarked, that part of Egypt was in ancient times overflowed by the sea. If volcanic agency was employed in the Flood, may we not conjecture that its disturbing influence would be felt through an extensive district of the earth's surface? And is it not probable, that at that period, the configuration of the neighbouring regions and seas may have been somewhat disturbed; so that henceforward two of the principal rivers, the Pison and the Gihon, which were broken from the river of Eden, flowed from other sources, or in other directions, the one to the region of gold, pearls, and precious stones, and the other to fertilize Ethiopia and Egypt? A. region in Mesopotamia. (2 Kings xix. 12; Isa. xxxvii. 12; Ezek. xxvii. 23.) For the "House of Eden," see Beth-Eden.

EDER = sokk. 1. A town in the south of Judah. (Josh. xvi. 21.) 2. One of the Levites. (1 Chron. xxiii. 23; xxiv. 30.)

EDOM = red, reddish. The name of a region, so denominated from Esaan, or Edom, the son of Isaac. (Gen. xxxvi. 1.) The country of the Edomites, called Idumea by the Greeks and Romans, was the mountainous tract between the Dead Sea and the Elamitic Gulf of the Red Sea. This mountainous region, called also "Seir," and "Mount Seir," consists of low hills of limestone or argillaceous rock, and lofty masses of porphyry; some of them rising nearly 3,000 feet above the Arabah. Some of them are broken up into irregular ridges and grotesque groups of cliffs, are wholly desert and sterile, while others appear to enjoy a sufficiency of rain, and are covered with tufts of herbs and occasional trees. Some of the Wadys are full of trees and shrubs and flowers; while the eastern and higher parts are extensively cultivated and yield good crops. (Gen. xxvii. 27, 28, 29.) To this region Esau retired from the face of his brother Jacob; and his descendants succeeded the Horites in Mount Seir, "when they had destroyed them and dwelt in their stead." (Gen. xxxvi. 6–8; Deut. ii. 12, 22.) Edom was the first to enjoy the advantages of a settled government; (Gen. xxxvi. 81;) and appears to have made considerable progress in civilization before the kindred race was delivered from the bondage of Egypt. (Num. xx. 17.) Saul made war upon the Edomites; and David subdued the whole country. After various struggles, the Edomites succeeded in making themselves independent of Judah; (2 Kings viii. 20–22;) 2 Chron. xxv. 8–10; for although Amaziah and Uzziah gained temporary conquests, the Edomites regained possession of the country. (2 Chron. xxvii. 17; 2 Kings xvi. 6. All this time their metropolis appears to have been Bozrah. (Isa. xxxiv. 6; lxiii. 1; Jer. xlix. 13, 22; Am. i. 12.) The Edomites, true to their ancient spirit of rivalry, aided the Chaldeans in the overthrow of the Jewish state. (Ps. lxxxvii. 7; Obad. 1; Jer. xlix. 7; Ezek. xxv. 12–14; xxiv. 29; xxxv. 3–15.) During the Jewish exile, the Edomites took possession of the south of Palestine; but were subdued by the Macabeans. Idumea, which name now included also the southern part of Judaea, was henceforth governed by a succession of Jewish prefects. Herod the Great, became king over the Jews, including part of Idumea. The Nabathaens, an Arabian tribe, the descendants of Nahash the eldest son of Ishmael, (Gen. xxv. 18; Isa. lx. 7;) finally supplanted the Edomites, in their ancient possessions. The Nabathaens grew up into the kingdom of Arabia Petraea, occupying very nearly the same territory which was comprised within the limits of ancient Edom. Their sovereigns appear to have been in a measure dependant on the Roman emperors, though not directly subject to the Roman power. Various tribes of Bedawin now hold in possession the ancient territory of Edom. This region, so long forgotten, has been frequently visited of late years by intelligent travellers. Such is the desolation of this region, that intelligent travellers unite in the declaration, that its present state could not be more graphically described than in the words of the ancient prophet. (Isa. xxxiv. 5—17; Jer. xlix. 13—18; Ezek. xxxv. 7; Obad. i.; Mal. i. 3, 4.) The declaration, that "None shall pass through it for ever and ever; I will cut off from Mount Seir him that passeth out, and him that returneth," refers to the utter annihilation of the immense Indian trade which centred at Petra, and the breaking up of the great lines of communication which united that celebrated mart with Jerusalem, Tyre, Gaza, Aila, and Egypt, and through these places, with the whole civilized world.

See Edom.

EDREI = strong, mighty. The name of the former metropolis of Bashan, situated in the territory of Manasseh. (Num. xxii. 32; Deut. i. 4; iii. 1; Josh. xii. 4; xiii. 31.) It is now called Edessa; and its ruins are said to be between three and four miles in circumference. 2. A city of Naphtali. (Josh. xix. 37.)

EGG. The egg, when served up with fish and honey, was a desirable article of food in the East. (Job xxxix. 14; Isa. x. 14; ix. 5.) The passage in Deut. xxii. 6, humanly prohibits the taking away of a brooding bird from a nest, with the eggs or young. The allusion in Luke xi. 12, is to a species of scorpion in Judea, about the size of an egg.

EOLAH = a calf. The sixth wife of David. (2 Sam. iii. 5; 1 Chron. iii. 5.)

EGLAIM = two ponds. A village in the territory of Moab. (Isa. xv. 5.)

EGLON = pertaining to a calf. 1. A king of the Moabites, who defeated the Hebrews in battle, and held them in servitude eighteen years. He was assassinated by Ehud at Jericho. (Judg. iii. 12—15.) 2. A city in the plain of Judea, formerly a royal city of the Canaanites. Its ruined site is now called Ajlun. (Josh. x. 34—36; xii. 12—15; xv. 35—39.)

EGYPT = land of the Egypt or Kopf. An ancient and celebrated kingdom in the north of Africa. It was called by the Hebrews "Misraim," from Misraim the second son of Ham; and is now called by the Arabs Misr. (Gen. x. 6.) It was also called "the land of Ham," from Ham the second son of Noah, from whom was derived the ancient native name of the country, Cheeni. (Ps. lxxviii. 51; cv. 28.) And occasionally it was called "Rehab." (Ps. lxxxvii. 4; Isa. xxx. 7; li. 9.)

Egypt is bounded on the south by Ethiopia or Abyssinia; on the north by the Mediterranean Sea; on the east by Palestine, Idumea, Arabia Petraea, and the Arabian Gulf; but on the west the moving sands of the west Libyan desert obliterate the traces of all political or physical limits. The proper land of Egypt is, for the most part, a great valley, through which the river Nile pours its waters, extending in a line from north to south, and skirted on the east and west by ranges of mountains, which approach and recede from the river more or less in different parts. Towards the north, where this valley terminates, about fifty or sixty miles from the sea coast, the Nile divides, and encloses in its branches a triangular piece of country, called the Delta. This part of the country was called Lower Egypt; the southern part, from Syene to Chemni was called Upper Egypt, and the wider valley between, was known as Middle Egypt. The whole territory of Egypt capable of cultivation, including its lateral valleys, has been estimated at from 11,000 to about 18,000 square miles. The soil consists of the mud of the river, resting upon desert sands; hence this country owes its existence, fertility, and beauty to the Nile, whose annual overflow is indispensable for the purposes of agriculture. The country around Syene and the cataracts is highly picturesque; the other parts of Egypt, and especially the Delta, are
EGY

The land belonged to the kings, priests, and the military caste. It is generally supposed, that a part, if not the whole of Egypt, was for a long time under the dominion of a race of pastoral nomades, commonly known as the Hyksos or Shepherd Kings. And that the revolution by which they were expelled, occurred shortly before the time of Joseph, when “every shepherd was an abomination to the Egyptians.”

It is uncertain who the Hyksos were. Some have thought they were either the Cushites, Arabs, or the Pheni- cians; others, that they were a horde of Scythians, driven forward by the advancing tribes, and the press of population, and so subjugated the land of Egypt. But Josephus considers the whole account of the Hyksos, as given by Manetho, as merely a fabulous transformation of the historical facts which have reference to the entrance of the Hebrews into Egypt, and of their exodus from that country, so as to favour the national vanity of the Egyptians. From the Egyptian monuments the Hyksos fable has not received the least confirmation. No intercourse subsisted between the Hebrews and the Egyptians, from the departure of the former out of Egypt, until the reign of Solomon, who, having married a daughter of a Pharaoh, and established a considerable trade between Egypt and Palestine, the two kingdoms became intimately connected. (1 Kings iii. 1; vii. 8.) Afterwards in the reign of Rehoboam, this intimacy was broken off, Shishak king of Egypt invaded the kingdom of Judea, and despoiled the temple of its treasures. (1 Kings xiv. 25—26; 2 Chron. xii. 2—9.) Toward the end of the kingdoms of Israel and Judah, the sovereigns of those countries, finding themselves too weak to resist the Assyrian and Babylonian monarchs who pressed them closely, had frequent recourse to the kings of Egypt for succour. But these applications were always fatal to them. The Egyptian dynasty was overthrown by Nebuchadnezzar, as announced by the prophet.

EGY

exceedingly uniform and monotonous. From the middle of the spring season, when the harvest is over, one sees nothing but a grey dusty soil, so full of cracks and chasms, that he can hardly pass along. At the time of the autumnal equinox, the whole country presents nothing but an immeasurable surface of water, out of which rise date trees, villages, and narrow dunes, which serve as a means of communication. After the waters have retreated, which usually remain only a short time at this height, you see, till the end of autumn, only a black and slimy mud. But in winter, nature puts on all her splendour, and Egypt is, from one end of the country to the other, a beautiful garden, a verdant meadow, a field sown with flowers, or a waving ocean of grain in the ear. The sky is not less uniform and monotonous than the earth; it is constantly a pure, unclouded arch, of a colour and light more white than azure. The atmosphere has a splendour which the eye can scarcely bear; and a burning sun, whose glow is tempered by no shade, scorching through the whole day those vast and unprotected plains. It is almost a peculiar trait in the Egyptian landscape, that although not without trees, it is almost without shade. The acacia, sycamore, palm tree, and fig-tree, adorn the land, but there is a want of timber. Egypt, accordingly, has a very hot climate; the thermometer, in summer, standing usually at 90 or 90 degrees of Fahrenheit, and in Upper Egypt still higher. The burning wind of the desert is also experienced, usually about the time of the early equinox. The country is also not unfrequently visited by swarms of locusts. The chief agricultural productions of Egypt are wheat, barley, or small maize, Indian corn or maize, rice, barley, beans, cucumbers, watermelons, leeks, or rather fenn-greek, gar- lic, and onions; also flax and cotton. The early history of Egypt is involved in great obscurity. Already, in Abraham’s time, we find the land, not of a, but of the flourishing Egyptian kingdom in Lower Egypt. The whole of the Egypt was afterward conquered by Cambyses, and became a province of the Persian empire about 525 B.C. Thus it continued, excepting a short interval, until conquered by Alexander, 332 B.C., after whose death it formed the kingdom of the Ptolemies. After the battle of Actium, 30 B.C., it became a Roman province. Since that time it has ceased to be an independent state, and its history is incorporated with that of its different conquerors and possessors. In A.D. 610, it was conquered by the Arabs; and since 1517, has been governed as a province of the Turkish empire. Great and rapid changes have taken place in this interesting country within the last fifty years. The campaign of the French army in 1800, undertaken with a view to subdue Egypt, and so secure to the French an important share of the East India trade, though it resulted unsuccessfully, was attended with important consequences to the interests of science and learning. A new era in the history of this country commenced then. Muhammed Aly, the late viceroy, though a perfect despot, did much to elevate his dominions to a rank with civilized nations, in arts, commerce, and industry. The works of internal improvement, which he undertook, the extensive manufactories he established, and the encouragement he gave to literary institutions, have done much to change the political, if not the moral aspect of Egypt. And his successors have carried out his enlightened views, by establishing rail-roads, and opening out canals, which, while they increase the commerce of the country, greatly facilitate our communication with India, by what is called the overland route—by the Mediterranean, Egypt, and the Red sea, to Bombay.

The religion of the ancient Egyptians consisted in the worship of the heavenly bodies and the powers of nature. They even adopted living animals as the symbols of the real objects of worship. And their priests cultivated at the same time astronomy, astrology, and magic. (Ex. vii. 11, 22.) The Egyptians at an early period excelled in literature, and in the cultivation of the several arts. (Acts vii. 22.) But the most extraordinary monuments of Egyptian power and grandeur were the colossal statues, obelisks, splendid temples and palaces, and the pyramids, brought into existence long before our British ancestors left their primeval Asiatic plains, and which still subsist, to excite the wonder and admiration of the world. These stupendous and imperishable edifices of granite and limestone, with their innumerable hieroglyphic inscriptions, and the countless tombs and sarcophagi, with their mouldered human remains, and their unfading paintings, which make the sepulchre into a picture gallery, have perpetuated the whole circle of the daily as well as sacred life, of the ancient dwellers in the valley of the Nile. Many of the ancient monuments and inscriptions which have been copied and translated, have yielded beautiful confirmation in different points of Sacred History. The friends of the Bible have no cause to be alarmed at the results of recent chronological investigations, by Bunsen, Lepsius, and others; because the ancient monuments of Pharaonic times merely signalize events, not dates: they exhibit no era like that of the Olympiads. Thus the Genius of the Nile has at length risen from his long-sealed tomb, to acknowledge the truth of the Inspired Records in the midst of an unbelieving age. The ancient inhabitants of Egypt were divided into several castes. The present inhabitants of the country may be considered as including three divisions. 1. The Copts, who are the descendants of the ancient Egyptians. They are the most important class of Christians; and are generally employed as accountants and bookkeepers in the various departments of the public administration. 2. The Fellahs are the cultivators of the soil; a quiet, contented, submissive race, and are noted for their love to the land of their nativity. 3. The Arabs, or conquerors of the country; including the Turks, who enjoy most offices of the government. The present population of Egypt is estimated at over 3,200,000.
EGY

The ancient prophecies concerning Egypt, are remarkable for their precision and fulness; and their exact fulfilment in every essential point is attested by incontrovertible evidence. (Isa. xix. 1-26; xx. 1-6; Jer. xliii. 8-13; xliv. 30; xlv. 1-26; Ezek. xxiv.-xxvii.) In Rev. xi. 8, "Egypt" is put as a symbolical name of Jerusalem.—See Zion.

EGYPT, RIVER OF. This stream or torrent is generally understood to be the Rhinocorus, now the Wady el-Arish, on the confines of Egypt and Palestine. (Num. xxiv. 5; Josh. xv. 4, 47; 1 Kings viii. 65; 2 Kings xxiv. 7; Isa. xxvii. 12; Ezek. xlvii. 19; xlviii. 27.) In Gen. 15, it designates the Sihor or Nile.

EHI — brother.—See AHIRAM.

EHUD — union. 1. The second judge or regent of the Hebrews, who assassinated Edgon, and delivered them from the oppression which they suffered for eighteen years under the Moabites. (Judg. iii. 12-35; iv. 1.) 2. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. vii. 10; viii. 6.)

EKER — root. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. ii. 27.)

EKRON — eradication. One of the five chief cities of the Philistines, situated in the northern part of their territory. The modern village of Akir occupies the ancient site. (Josh. xii. 3; xv. 11-47; xix. 43; Judg. i. 18; 1 Sam. v. 10; vi. 1-18; Jer. xxxv. 20; Amos i. 8.)

ELADAH — whom God puts on, that is, fills with himself. One of the posterity of Ephraim. (1 Chron. vii. 24.)

ELAH — terebinth. 1. The fourth king of Israel; he was the son and successor of Baasha. After a reign of two years, from B.C. 929-928, as he was revelling at a friend’s house, he was assassinated by Zimri, one of the officers of his army, who succeeded him as king. Thus was fulfilled the prediction of Jehu the prophet. (1 Kings xvi. 6—14.) 2. One of the dukes of Edom. (Gen. xxxvi. 41.) 3. The father of Shimei. (1 Kings iv. 18.)

EL-BEHOLD — God of Bethel. The name given by Jacob to an altar which he built at Bethel, probably where he had formerly seen the prophetic dream of the ladder. (Gen. xxxi. 13; xxxv. 7; xxviii. 10—22.)
ELD

ELDAATH = whom God calls. A son of Midian. (Gen. xxv. 4.)

ELDAD = whom God loveth, Theophanes. One of the seventy elders appointed by Moses to assist him in the government of the people. He received with Medad the gifts of prophesying, while in the camp, at the same time that the rest of the elders received the gift at the door of the tabernacle. (Num. xi. 24—29.)

ELDERS. The “elders of Egypt” were, probably, the various state-officers. (Gen. i. 7.) The “elders” or “nobles” of Israel, before the settlement of the Hebrew commonwealth, were probably either the heads of tribes, or the eldest and most judicious of the people. And though their authority was in its nature paternal, they were regarded as the representatives of the Hebrew nation; and through them Moses issued his communications and commands to the people. (Ex. iii. 16; xvii. 5; xix. 7; xxiv. 1—11; Deut. xxxi. 9.) The “seventy elders” appointed as assistants to Moses, seem to have been taken from the general class of elders. (Num. xi. 16, 17, 24, 25.) The Hebrews had “elders,” or “elders of the gate,” in every city, who appear to have been the administrators of the laws. (Deut. xix. 12; xxx. 3, 6, 10; xxvii. 15; Josh. xx. 24; Judg. ii. 7; viii. 14; xi. 5, 6, Ruth. iv. 2, 4, 9; 1 Sam. xvi. 4; xxx. 26; 1 Chron. xxi. 16; Ezra vi. 14; x. 14.) At a subsequent period we find a tribunal of seventy elders known as the Sanhedrim, which was probably established in the time of the Maccabees. The chief priests, scribes, and elders, sat in the Sanhedrim. (Matt. xxvii. 3, 41; xxvi. 59; Acts xxii. 5.) The Jews had also “elders” or “rulers” of the synagogue, who took cognizance mainly of religious matters; (Luke vi. 3; Matt. x. 17; Acts xii. 15;) and from them the term presbyter = “elder” was introduced into the Christian church, as a title of those ministers who were appointed overseers among the faithful. The term episcopus = “bishop,” derived from Greek sources and usage, had the same signification as presbyter, and originally both terms referred to one and the same office. (Acts xx. 17, 28; Tit. i. 5, 7; 1 Pet. v. 1—5.) The same term is rendered “elders;” (Acts xx. 17;) “overseers;” (Acts xx. 28;) and “bishop.” (Phil. i. 1.) The apostles are called “elders;” (1 Tim. iv. 14; 2 Tim. i. 6; 2 John, 1; 3 John, 1;) and are also distinguished from them; (Acts xv. 6;) whence, it would seem there were lay elders in the early church. (Rom. xii. 4—8; 1 Tim. v. 17.) The lay elders sometimes preached; they confuted gain-sayers, and visited the sick; but they exercised no authority independent of the participation of the whole church. In Heb. xi. 2, the term “elders” is used in the sense of ancients, ancestors; so also in Rev. iv. 4; the “twenty-four elders” may refer to the patriarchs of our race—the first of the human family—who were elevated to the glories of the heavenly world.

ELEAD = whom God applauds. A descendant of Ephraim. (1 Chron. vii. 21.)

ELEALEH = whither God ascends. A town in the tribe of Ruben, near Hebron; (Num. xxxii. 3; 37;) but named in Isa. xv. 4; xvi. 9; Jer. lxi. 34, as a city of the Moabites. It is now a ruin, called el-AI.

ELEASA = whom God made, or created. A descendant of Hezron. (1 Chron. ii. 39, 40.) 2. A descendant of Saul. (1 Chron. viii. 37; ix. 48.)

ELEAZAR = whom God helps. 1. The third son of Aaron, who acted in his father’s time as chief of the tribe of Levi, and at his death succeeded him in the high priesthood. (Ex. vi. 23; 25; Num. iii. 32; xx. 35.) The office continued in Eleazar’s line through fivesuccessions, and then passed into the line of Ithamar, in the person of Eli. Why the sacerdotal succession was transferred from the line of Eleazar to that of Ithamar, we are not informed; but we are told why it reverted to the family of Eleazar. (1 Sam. ii. 27—36; Josh. xxviii. 33.) 2. One of the most EL ELE

ELECTION. Of a Divine election, a choosing and separating from others, we have three kinds mentioned in the Scriptures. The first is the election of individuals to perform some particular and special service. So Cyrus was "elected" to rebuild the temple; (Isa. xiv. 1;) the apostles were "chosen" or elected to their office by Christ; and Paul was a "chosen," or elected "vessel," to be the Apostle of the Gentiles. The second, is the election of nations, or peoples, to eminent religious privileges, in order to accomplish, by their superior illumination, the gracious purposes of God, in benefitting other nations. Thus the Hebrews were "chosen" to receive special revelations of truth: "The Lord hath chosen thee to be a special people unto himself, above all people that are upon the face of the earth." (Deut. vii. 6; x. 15.) Hence the frequent use of the terms "elect," "chosen," and "peculiar," in reference to the Hebrews. But on the abrogation of the church polity of the Hebrews, by the introduction of christianity, there was a new election to religious privileges of a new people of God, to be composed of Jews, not by virtue of their natural descent, but by faith in Christ, and of Gentiles of all nations, also believers, and placed on equal ground with the believing Jews. Hence the frequent use of the same terms, by the apostles in their Epistles, in reference to Christians. (1 Peter i. 2; ii. 9, 10.) There was also a rejection, a "reprobation of the Jews, but not an absolute one; for the election was offered to them first in every place, by offering them the gospel. (Rom. ix. 6, 7, 8, 24, 32; xi. 7, 12, 25, 30.) This election of the Gentiles excited that irritation in the minds of the unbelieving Jews, and in some partially christianized ones, so which so many references are made in the New Testament. (Rom. xi. 11; Gal. iii. 8, 14, 26.) The third kind is personal election of individuals to be the children of God, and the heirs of eternal life. This election is in accordance with the eternal purpose of God, to whom all things are present at once, who "call"eth the things that are not as though they were, "to choose individuals to salvation as the result of their faith in Christ. These are the "elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ." This election, then, is an act of God done in time, and is also subsequent to the administration of the means of salvation. The "calling" goes before the "election," the publication of the doctrine of the Spirit," and the atonement—also called "the sprinkling of the blood of Christ,"—before that "sanctification" through which they become "the elect" of God. (1 Pet. i. 1.) Hence this personal election unto salvation is through personal faith in Christ. All who truly believe in Him are elected; and all to whom the gospel is sent have, through the grace that accompanies it, the power, however they may lack the disposition, to believe, placed within their reach; and all such might, therefore, attain to the grace of personal election.

ELECT LADY.—See CRY.

EL-ELOHE-ISAEL = God, God of Israel. The name given by Jacob to the altar which he erected in the field at Shalem. (Gen. xxxiii. 18—20.)

ELEMENTS. This word primarily signifies the ingredients or principles from which things are made, whence the subsequent parts proceed in order. It is used in a secondary sense in Gal. iv. 3—9, "the elements" or "rudiments" of the world," called "weak and beggarly elements," to designate that primary state of religious knowledge exhibited by the ceremonial ordinances of the law. (Heb. vii. 18, 19; ix. 1; x. 1.) So "the rudiments of the world," in ELE

Col. ii. 3—20, occurs in the same sense; though there may be an allusion to some system of Grecian philosophy, as well as to the dogmas of the Judaizing teachers. The original word is rendered "the first principles," in Heb. v. 12, and refers to the elements or rudiments of Christianity. In 2 Pet. iii. 10, "the elements burning will be dissolved and melted," is an allusion to the approaching dissolution of the Jewish civil and ecclesiastical polity, and the establishment of Christianity. (1 Pet. iv. 7.) See EARTH. ELEPH = an ox or cow. A city in the tribe of Benjamin. (Josh. xviii. 28.) ELEPHANT. The name of this well-known and sagacious animal does not occur in the text of our version of the Bible; but where the word "ivory" occurs, in 1 Kings x. 22; 2 Chron. ix. 21, we have in the margin, "elephants' teeth," and in Job xi. 15, for "beasts," the margin reads, "or, the elephant, as some think." Elephants are mentioned in 1 Macc. vi. 34, 35. The elephant is the largest of all terrestrial animals now existing; sometimes reaching the height of fifteen feet, but their general height is about nine or ten. Of the two species of elephants, the Asiatic and the African, the former is the largest, most readily domesticated, and best known. Few quadrupeds have attracted more attention from mankind than the elephant. Formed as it were for the service of man in warm climates, it possesses every attribute that can render it useful. It is strong, active, and persevering, and so docile and sagacious as to be trained almost to any service. The tusks of the Asiatic species are confined to the males, and seldom exceed seventy pounds in weight; while in the African both sexes are armed with tusks, and in the males they have been known to be more than eight feet in length, and weighing above 150 pounds each. The most singular part of the structure of the elephant is his proboscis or trunk, which is peculiar to this animal. It appears to be an extension of the canals of the nose; it is cartilaginous, and flexible in every direction. It is of such strength as to be capable of breaking off large branches from trees, and is endowed with such exquisite sensibility, that it can grasp the smallest object. This animal is said to live to the age of one hundred years and upwards.—See IVORY.

ELIHANAN = whom God hath bestowed. One of David's distinguished warriors, who, according to the Hebrew text of 2 Sam. xxii. 19, slew Goliath: "Elhanan, son of Jaare-Orgim, a Bethlehemite, slew Goliath of Gath." But according to 1 Chron. xx. 5, "Elhanan, son of Jair, slew Lahmi, the brother of Goliath of Gath." From this last passage our translators have inserted "the brother of" in 2 Sam. xxii. 19. The "Elhanan, the son of Dodo," mentioned in 2 Sam. xxi. 24, does not seem to be a different person.—See JAIR.

ELI = a sop or summit. A high priest of the Hebrews, and the first of the line of Ithamar. What occasioned the remarkable transfer of the pontificate from Eleazar's family to that of Ithamar is not known. It may have been in consequence of the negligence, inacity, or minority of the then representative of Eleazar's family. (1 Chron. xxiv. 3—6; vi. 4—6.) However, it is evident that it was no unauthorized usurpation on the part of Eli. (1 Sam. ii. 27, 28.) Eli was also the fourteenth judge or regent of the Hebrews; and is said to have judged Israel forty years. (1 Sam. iv. 18.) Probably this number not only comprehended the whole period of his administration as high priest and judge, but also included, in the first half, the twenty years in which Samson judged Israel. (Judg. xvi. 51.) Eli was severely reproved by the Lord for his paternal indulgences to his profligate sons, Hophni and Phineas. (1 Sam. iii. 11—14.) He died suddenly at the age of ninety-eight, on hearing of the discomfiture of the Hebrews, the death of his sons, and the capture of the ark of God by the Philistines. (1 Sam. iv. 17, 18.)

ELL, ELI, LAMA, SABACTHANинтерпретация и дословный перевод этих слов: my God! my God! why hast thou forsaken me? The Syro-Chaldaic words used by our Saviour at his crucifixion. (Matt. xxvii. 46.) In Mark xv.
34. they are read a little differently, "Elo"i, Eloi, lama sabachthani?" These words are quoted by our Lord from Ps. xxii. 1, not to show that Deity had now departed from Him, which would have deprived His sacrifice of its infinite merit arising from the dignity of the sufferer, and have left the sin of the world without a valid propitiation; but to show, that Deity had restrained so much of His consolatory support as to leave the human nature fully sensible of all its sufferings in the awful passion on the tree. (Matt. xxvi. 39, 42; Heb. v. 7—9.)

ELIAB = to whom God is father. 1. A chief of Zebulun. (Num. i. 9; ii. 7.) 2. The father of Dishan and Ahiram. (Num. xvi. 11, 12; xxvi. 8, 9.) 3. The eldest son of Jesse, and brother of David. (1 Sam. v. 6; vii. 13, 28.) 4. One of the Levites. (1 Chron. xvi. 5.)

ELIADA = whom God knoweth, or careth for. 1. A Benjamite. (2 Chron. xvii. 17.) 2. See BEZILADA.

ELIADA = whom God knoweth, or careth for. The father of Rezon king of Syria. (1 Kings xi. 23—25.)

ELIAH = my God is Jehovah. 1. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. vii. 27.) 2. One of the sons of Elam. (Ezra x. 26.)

ELIAB = whom God hideth. One of David's distinguished warriors. (2 Sam. xxiii. 32.)

ELIAKIM = whom God hath appointed. 1. A prefect of the palace under king Hezekiah. (2 Kings viii. 18; xix. 2; Isa. xxxvi. 20; xxvi. 3.) 2. One of the priests. (Neh. xiii. 41.) 3. See JEHIOAKIM.

ELIAH = to whom God is father. 1. One of David's distinguished warriors. (2 Sam. xxiii. 34.) 2. See AMMIEL.

ELIAS. —See ELIAH.

ELIASHAF = whom God hath added. 1. A chief of the tribe of Gad. (Num. i. 14; ii. 14.) 2. A son of Lael. (Num. iii. 34.)

ELIASHIR = whom God restoreth. 1. A son of Elioenai. (1 Chron. iii. 24.) 2. The chief over the eleventh course in David's division of the priests. (1 Chron. xxiv. 12; Ezra x. 6.) 3. The high priest of the Jews in the time of Nehemiah. (Neh. iii. 1, 20; xii. 22.)

ELIATHAH = to whom God cometh. One of the sons of Hezron. (1 Chron. xxv. 4.)

ELIDAD = whom God loveth. A phylarch of the tribe of Benjamin. (Num. xxxiv. 21.)

ELIEL = to whom God is strength. 1. The name of two of David's distinguished warriors. (1 Chron. xi. 47; xii. 11.) 2. A phylarch of the tribe of Manasseh. (1 Chron. v. 24.) 3. The name of two phylarchs of the tribe of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 20, 22.) 4. A chief of the Levites. (1 Chron. xiv. 11.) 5. An overseer in the house of the Lord. (2 Chron. xxx. 13.)

ELIENAI = towards Jehovah are mine eyes. A phylarch in the tribe of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 20.)

ELIEZER = God is his help. 1. A man of Damascus and a relation of Abraham, whom, before the birth of Ishmael and Isaac, Abraham had regarded as his heir. The passage in Gen. xv. 2, 3, literally rendered, says, "I go childless and the son of possession of my house he will be Eliezer of Damascus ... Behold, to me thou hast given no seed; and lo, the son of mine house is mine heir." So that Abraham obviously means to say—Behold, to me thou hast given no children; and not the son of my loins, but the son of my house (i. e. of my family, the son whom my house gives me—the heir-at-law) is mine heir." There is no evidence that Eliezer was a house-born servant at all; he was evidently some near relative to Abraham—even a nearer one than his nephew Lot,—whom Abraham regarded as his heir-at-law. Neither does it appear that Eliezer was the "servant" whom Abraham sent into Mesopotamia to seek a wife for Isaac; (Gen. xxiv. 2;) and it is by no means certain that he was present in Abraham's camp at all. 2. The second of the two sons born to Moses in Midian. (Ex. xviii. 4.) 3. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. vii. 8.) 4.
ELI

A chief of the Reubenites. (1 Chron. xxvii. 16.) 6. One of the priests. (1 Chron. xv. 24.) 8. A prophet, who foretold to Jehovah the ill success of the trade-fleet. (2 Chron. xx. 37.) 7. One of the chiefs during the exile. (Ezra viii. 16.) 8. Three persons who had taken strange wives during the exile. (Ezra x. 18, 26, 31.) 9. One of the ancestors of the Messiah. (Luke iii. 29.)

ELIHONAI = towards Jehovah are mine eyes. A descendant of Nahamnath. (Ezra viii. 4.)

ELIHOREPH = God is his recompense. One of king Solomon's scribes. (1 Kings iv. 3.)

ELIHU = whose God is Ha, i.e. Jehovah. 1. The Buzite, a friend of Job, and, perhaps, the arbiter between him and his three acquaintances who had come to sympathize with him in his calamities. The soothing, yet faithful and honest, discourse of Eliphil is finely contrasted with the sharp and severe language of the other three, and especially are his wisdom, piety, and benevolence admirable, when we consider his youth and the character and standing of those whom he addressed. (Job. xxxii.—xxxvii.)

ELIKA = one of David's distinguished warriors. (2 Sam. xxiii. 25.)

ELIM = trees, or palm trees. A station of the Hebrews in the desert. (Ex. xvii. 7; xvi. 1; Num. xxxii. 9.) The valley now called Wady Cherumed, is commonly regarded as the ancient Elim. Here are found a few palm trees, several varieties of shrubs and plants, and the fountains are still one of the chief watering places of the Arabs.

ELIMELECH = God is his king. The husband of Naomi, Ruth's mother-in-law. (Ruth i. 2.)

ELIOENAI = towards Jehovah are mine eyes. 1. One of the sons of Neriah. (1 Chron. iii. 23, 24.) 2. One of the posterity of Simeon. (1 Chron. iv. 36.) 3. One of the sons of Becher. (1 Chron. vii. 8.) 4. One of the sons of Mecheleah. (1 Chron. xxvi. 3.) 5. A son of Basheba. (Ezra x. 22.) 6. A son of Zattu, who had taken a strange wife. (Ezra x. 27.)

ELIPIHAI = See Eliphlet.

ELIPHALET = God is his deliverance. One of the sons of David. (1 Chron. xiv. 7.) In 1 Chron. iii.
ELK
keeper for the ark. (1 Chron. xv. 23.)

ELKOSHITE.—See NaHUM.

ELLASAR.—See Tellassar.

ELM.—See OAK.

ELMODAM. An ancestor of Christ.
(Luke iii. 28.)

ELNAAAM = God is his delight. A man whose sons were among David's distinguished warriors. (1 Chron. xi. 46.)

ELNATHAN = whom God hath given, Theodore. The grandfather of Jehoiasbin; (2 Kings xxiv. 8;) perhaps the same mentioned in Jer. xxvi. 22; xxvi. 12, 25. 2. Three Levites in the time of Ezra. (Ezra viii. 18.)

ELOI.—See Eli.

ELON = as oak. A city in the tribe of Dan. (Josh. xix. 49.) In 1 Kings
iv. 2, it is called "Elon-beth-hanan" = oak of the house of grace. 2. The father-in-law of Ezra. (Gen. xxvi. 34; xxvi.
2) 3. One of the sons of Zebulun.
(Gen. xlv. 14.) His descendants were called "Elnites." (Num. xxvi. 26.) 4.
A judge or regent of the Hebrews. He governed ten years. The whole period of the government of Ibzan, Elon, and Abdon, comprehends twenty-five years, to B.C. 1174. But probably they were a part of this time contemporary, each exercising authority over a few of the tribes.

ELONBETH-HANAN.—See Elon.

ELOTH.—See Elath.

ELPAAL = God is his wages. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii.
11, 12, 13.)

ELPALET.—See ElPhelet.

ELPANAN.—See Paran.

ELTEKH = God is its fear, i. e., object of fear. A Levitical city in the tribe of Dan. (Josh. xix. 44; xx. 28.)

ELTEKON = God is its foundation.
A place in the tribe of Judah. (Josh.
xxv. 59.)

ELTOLAD = God is its race, or posterity. A town in the tribe of Judah; (Josh. xv. 30;) afterwards given to Simeon. (Josh. xix. 4.) Also called "Tolad." (1 Chron. iv. 29.)

ELUL = taught, ens. The sixth month of the ancient Hebrew year.
(Neh. vi. 15.) It commenced with the first new moon in September.

ELUZAI = God is my praises, i. e., the object of my praise. One who went over to David at Ziklag. (1 Chron.
xxi. 5.)

ELYMAIS.—See Elam.

ELYMAS.—See Bar-Jesus.

ELZABAD = whom God hath given, Theodore. 1. A son of Shemaiah. (1 Chron. xxvi. 7.) 2. One who went over to David at Ziklag. (1 Chron. xii. 12.)

ELZAPHAN.—See Elzaphan.

EMBALMING. The art of embalming the bodies of the dead, in order to prevent or retard decay, appears to have originated among the Egyptians, by whom it was practised in the most perfect manner, at a very early period. But we have no evidence that embalming was practised by the Hebrews, except in the cases of Jacob and Joseph, by the Egyptian physicians, and then it was for the purpose of preserving their remains till they could be carried into the Land of Promise. In the process of embalming, an operator, with a very sharp stone, made an incision in the left flank.
The embalmer then drew out the brains through the nostrils with a hooked instrument; extracted the viscera through the incision in the left flank, and washed them in palm wine and other astringent drugs. The body was anointed repeatededly during thirty days, with oil of ces-dar; the viscera were folded up in it in four several portions, and the cavity and the skull filled with myrrh, cinnamon, cocculus, and other drugs and spices, whereby the humours should be imbibeed, and absorbed, and the form preserved from decay. It is not unlikely that the body, in the process of embalming, was kept at a certain temperature, in order to incorporate perfectly the residuous substances with the animal matter.
A quantity of natron was then applied to the body for about forty days. Hence the embalming of Jacob continued, according to the statement of Moses,
"fourty days," the whole mourning "seventy days," in which the thirty days of the embalming are evidently included.
(Gen. 1. 2, 3.) This account agrees with Herodotus. (ii. 86, 87.) The body was then swathed in bandages, glued together with gum, or saturated with asphialtum or bitumen. The body was then returned to the hands of the relations, and inclosed in a sarcophagus or coffin, and placed either in a sepulchral chamber, or in subterraneous vaults in the rock, where they are now found in great numbers, after the lapse of two or three thousand years, in a state of perfect preservation. Diodorus Siculus speaks of three modes of embalming. The first method, he states, cost a talent of silver, which is equivalent to 243l. 1s. 6d. of English money; the second cost twenty mines, or 81l. 5s. 6d. and a third, a much smaller sum, which is not mentioned. Perhaps the common people embalmed with bitumen—a cheap material, and easily managed—with this the corpse and its envelopes were smeared, with more or less care. Tombs have been opened in which thousands of bodies have been deposited in rows, one on another without coffins, preserved in this manner. Many of the mummies, of the Greek-Egyptian era, appear to have been gilded, and otherwise ornamented. Many of the tombs also contain the mummies of the inferior animals which were held sacred by the Egyptians.

EMBROIDERY. The Hebrew women were undoubtedly indebted to their residence in Egypt for that perfection of finish in embroidery which was displayed in the splendid curtains of the tabernacle, and in the preparation of the ephod, gold and silver and fine twined work. (Ex. xxvii. 58; xxviii. 29; xxx. 3.) Many of the Egyptian stuffs presented various patterns embroidered with the needle; and others worked in colours by the loom, and also by the dying or printing process. The Egyptian ladies of rank wore splendid dresses of needlework. (Ps. xlv. 13, 14.) And occasionally the sails of the pleasure boats were embroidered. (Ezek. xxvii. 7.)

EMERALD. The Hebrew word bārenez, rendered "emerald," (Ex. xxviii. 17; xxxix. 11; Ezek. xxvii. 16; xxviii. 13, margin "chrysoprase," may perhaps designate a kind of carbuncle. The oriental emerald has a strong glass lustre, and a beautiful green colour of different shades; in some pale varieties approaching to greenish white and grass green.

EMERODS. The Hebrew word apḥadim, properly signifies "tumours, hemorrhoids;" (Deut. xxviii. 27; ) and is used as the name of a painful disease sent upon the Philistines. (1 Sam. v. 6, 9; vi. 11, 17.) Instead of apḥadim, the Keri or margin reads tehhorim, properly "tumors ani." a. the piles, hemmorhoids, so called as protruding from the fundament, with straining or tenesmus and a flow of blood.

EMMIMS—tumors. An ancient warlike people, of gigantic size, who originally inhabited the land of Moab. (Gen. xiv. 5; Deut. ii. 11.)

EMMANUEL—See IMMANUEL.

EMMAUS—hot baths. A village memorable from our Lord's interview with two of His disciples on the day of His resurrection. It is said to have been "sixty stadia"—seven miles from Jerusalem. (Luke xxiv. 13; Jos. Wars. vi. 6, 6.) But several manuscripts of high authority read, in Luke xxiv. 13, "one hundred and sixty stadia"—eighteen miles; which is probably the correct reading. At this point there was a place called Emmans, afterwards called Nicopolis, which still exists as the village of Amwas, and here Dr. Robinson, in his recent visit, noticed fragments of marble columns and other relics of antiquity.

EMMOR.—See HAMOR.

ENAM = two fountains. A town in the tribe of Judah. (Josh. xv. 34.)

ENAN = having eyes. A descendant of Naphtali. (Num. i. 15; ii. 29.)

ENCAMPMENT.—See CAMP.

ENCHANTMENTS.—See DIVINATION.

ENDOR = fountain of the dwelling. A town assigned to Manasseh, though lying without the borders of that tribe; (Josh. xvii. 11; Ps. lxxxi. 10;) where was an ancient oracle kept by the sorceress, which Saul consulted on the eve of the fatal battle of Gilboa. (1 Sam. xxviii. 7-25.) Edom is now an ordinary village, situated less than four miles south of Mount Tabor.

EN-ELGAIM = fountain of two calves, or two pools. A city on the northern shore of the Dead Sea. (Ezek. xlvi. 10.)

EN-GANNIM = fountain of gardens. 1. A city in the plains of Judah. (Josh. xv. 34.) 2. — See ANEM.

EN-GEDI = fountain of the kid. A city in the desert of Judah, on the western side of the Dead Sea, the Engadda of Pliny, anciently celebrated for its beautiful palm-trees, opobalsam, and vineyards. It is now called Ain Jidy, and has the remains of several buildings apparently ancient; also, a beautiful fountain, limpid and sparkling, with a copious stream of sweet water, but warm. The more ancient Hebrew name was "Hazezon," or "Hazon-Tamar = pruning of the palm. (Gen. xiv. 7; Josh. xv. 62; 2 Chron. xx. 1, 2, 20; Ezek. xlvi. 10; Sol. Song, i. 14.) In this neighbourhood was the "wilderness of Engedi," where David and his men lived among "the rocks of the wild goats." (1 Sam. xxiv. 1-4.) Dr. Robinson says,—"On all sides the country is full of caverns, which might then serve as lurking-places for David and his men, as they do for outlaws at the present day."

EN-HADDAN = fountain of swiftness. A city of Issachar. (Jos. xix. 21.)

EN-HAKKORE = fountain of invocation. A well or fountain in Lehi, where Samson found water to quench his thirst, after slaying the Philistines. (Judg. xv. 19.)

EN-HAZOR = fountain of Hazor. A city of Naphtali. (Jos. xix. 37.)
EN-HAROD.—See Harod.

EN-MISHPAT.—See Kadesh.

ENOCH = initiated, or dedicated. 1. One of the patriarchs, the seventh from Adam. It is said: “Enoch walked with God;” an expression denoting the closest communion with Jehovah, and entire conformity with his will. And concerning his departure from this world, we are told that “he was not, for God took him,”—a phrase which imports a mere change of residence, without suffering the ordinary dissolution of the body. This solemn event took place in the three hundred and sixty-fifth year of his age. (Gen. v. 24—26; Luke iii. 38; Heb. xi. 5.) The name is written “Henoch,” in 1 Chron. i. 3. Each of the three grand dispensations of religion had its instance of translation into heaven: the Patriarchal, in the person of Enoch; the Jewish, in the person of Elijah; and the Christian, in the person of Christ, who was the first fruits of them that slept; the two former entering without dying. In each of these cases is furnished a distinguished pledge of victory over death. In Jude, 14, 15, there is a quotation from the prophecy of Enoch, which, in the apocryphal book of Enoch, reads: “Behold, He comes with ten thousands of His saints, to execute judgment upon them, and destroy the wicked, and reprove all the carnal for everything which the sinful and ungodly have done, and committed against Him.” Probably this ancient fragment existed in writing among the Jews, so that Jude and the author of the book of Enoch quoted from the same source, and not one from the other. 2. The son of Cain, in honour of whom the first city, probably a strengthened rocky fastness, was called Enoch, by his father Cain. (Gen. iv. 17.)

ENOS = a name. The son of Seth and grandson of Adam. (Gen. iv. 26; v. 6—11; Luke iii. 38.) After the birth of Enoch, it is said, “then began men to call upon the name of the Lord;” probably intimating, that Divine worship, which till that time had been confined to private families, now became public. The “sons of God” separated them-selves from the ungodly, and invoked the name of Jehovah, probably on fixed days, and in public assemblies. In 1 Chron. i. 1, Enoch is called “Enoch.”

EN-ROGEL = foot fountain, or fuller’s fountain. A fountain or well near Jerusalem, on the boundary line between the tribes of Judah and Benjamin; (Josh. xv. 7, 8; xviii. 16; 2 Sam. xvi. 11; 1 Kings i. 9;) now called by Frank Christians the “Well of Nehemiah,” but by the native inhabitants, the “Well of Job.” Dr. Robinson says, “The well measures 125 feet in depth; and in the rainy season becomes quite full, and sometimes overflows at the mouth. More usually, however, the water runs off under the surface of the ground, and finds an outlet some forty yards below the well. The water is sweet, but not very cold; and is at the present day drawn up by hand.”

EN-SHEMESH = fountain of the sun. A city with a brook on the confines of Judah and Benjamin. (Josh. xiv. 7.)

ENSIGN.—See STANDARD.

EN-TANNIM.—See Gihon.

EN-TAPPUAH = fountain of Tappuah. A fountain of the city Tappuah. (Josh. xvii. 7, 8.)

EPAPHRAS = covered with foam. A distinguished Christian of Colosee. He was the fellow-prisoner of Paul at Rome. (Col. i. 7, 8; iv. 12; Phil. 2.)

EPAPHRIDITUS = handsome, agreeable. An eminent Christian of Philippi, who was commissioned by the church of that city to visit Paul during his imprisonment at Rome, and carry him supplies. (Phil. ii. 25; iv. 18.)

EPENETUS = applauded. A Christian resident at Rome, who is said, in the received text, to have been “the first fruits of Achaia;” but the best manuscripts and editions have “the first fruits of Asia.” (Rom. xvi. 5.)

1. EPHAH = to surround. A measure of grain, containing three seahs, or ten omer, equal to three pecks and three pints. It was of the same capacity with the bath in liquids. (Ex. xvi. 16; xviii. 26; Lev. v. 8; Judg. vii. 19; Num. v. 15; Ruth ii. 17.)
2. EPHAH = darkness. A region and tribe of the Midianites, so called from Ephah a son of Midian. (Gen. xxv. 4; Isr. ix. 6; 1 Chron. i. 33.) 3. A descendant of Caleb. (1 Chron. ii. 47.)

4. One of Caleb’sconcubines. (1 Chron. ii. 46.)

EPHAI = weary, languid. A Neophathite. (Jer. xli. 8.)

EPHER = calf, young animal. 1. A son of Midian. (Gen. xxvi. 8; 1 Chron. i. 33.) 2. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 17.) 3. A descendant of Manasseh. (1 Chron. v. 24.)

EPHES-DAMMIM = cessation of blood. A place in the tribe of Judah. (1 Sam. xvii. 1.) In 1 Chron. xi. 18, it is written “Pa Damvim” = end of blood.

EPHESIANS. EPISTLE TO THE.

That this Epistle was written by Paul to the church at Ephesus, is unanimously admitted by the early Christian writers. Polycarp, Irenaeus, Clement of Alexandria, and Tertullian, allude to it. In recent times, De Wette and Bauer ventured to impugn the authority of this Epistle; but the best scholars, including Stuart, Ruckert, Hensen, and Neander, have ably defended its Pauline origin. It was written during the earlier part of the apostle’s imprisonment at Rome, near the close of A.D. 62 or early in 63. (Eph. i. 1; vi. 21.) The church at Ephesus was established and built up under Paul’s ministry, about A.D. 54-57. (Acts xviii. 19, 21; xix. 1-41.) The matter and style of this Epistle are considered by the most eminent critics as peculiarly elevated and animated. In the doctrinal part of this Epistle, the apostle points out the excellencies of the gospel dispensation, by declaring the mystery, or hidden purpose of God to be, that the Gentiles as well as the Jews should be partakers of the blessings of the Gospel. (Eph. i. ii. iii.) The latter part of the Epistle is confined to practical exhortations, and the apostle concludes with the general benediction. (Eph. iv. v. vi.) It is supposed by some critics, from Eph. iii. 3, that Paul had written an Epistle to the Ephesians before this, which is no longer extant. Of this, however, we have no evidence.

EPHESUS = temple of the moon! A celebrated city, the capital of Ionia, on the western coast of Asia Minor, between Smyrna and Miletus. Under the Romans, Ephesus was the ornament and metropolis of proconsular Asia. It was chiefly celebrated for a magnificent temple of Diana, which was 425 feet in length, and 220 in width, and adorned with a colonnade of 127 columns of Parian marble. This splendid edifice was burned the same night Alexander the Great was born, Oct. 13-14, B.C. 356, by Herodes, who could think of no means so effectual to acquire a name. The temple was rebuilt with equal magnificence, and became one of the seven wonders of the world. In the days of the apostles, a considerable number of Jews resided in Ephesus. When Paul first visited this city about A.D. 54, he commenced preaching in the Jewish synagogue; and such was the effect of his ministry, that many who practised the superstitious arts of magic, collected together their books on these subjects, amounting to “fifty thousand pieces of silver” in value, and burned them: “So mightily grew the word of the Lord and prevailed.” (Acts xix. 1-20.) In 1856, Mr. Stephens visited the desolated ruins of Ephesus. He describes them “as lying upon a hill side, with swamps and morasses extending around. The whole hill side is covered with ruins, and they are all of a kind that tend to give a high idea of the ancient magnificence of the city. About a mile from Ephesus, there are remains of the Turkish city of Ayazak, a city of comparative modern date, reared into brief magnificence out of the ruins of its fallen neighbour, within which there are a few huts. Verily, in the prophetic language of inspiration, the “candlestick is removed from its place;” (Rev. ii. 1-11;) a curse seems to have fallen upon it; men shun it, not a human being is to be seen among its ruins; and Ephesus, in faded glory, and fallen grandeur, is given up to birds and beasts.
of prey, a monument and a warning to nations."—See DIANA.

EPHIAL = judgment. (A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. ii. 87.)

EPHOD = a girding on, a putting on.
1. A garment of the high-priest, worn over the tunic and robe; (Ex. xxviii. 31; xxix. 5;) without sleeves, and divided below the armpits into two parts, of which one covered the front, and the other the back. These were joined on the shoulders by clasps of gold and precious stones, and were fastened by a girdle around the body. (Ex. xxviii. 6—12.) A kind of ephod was sometimes worn also by other persons. (1 Sam. ii. 18, 28; 2 Sam. vi. 14.) The ephod of Gide-on was probably an image or statue of an idol, overlaid with the golden ornaments taken from the Midianites. (Judg. viii. 27.) 2. A descendant of Manasseh. (Num. xxix. 23.)

EPHRAITHA = beopened. A Syro-Chaldaic word, which our Saviour pronounced, when He cured one deaf and dumb. (Mark vii. 34.)

EPHRAIM = double land, twin-land. 1. The youngest son of Joseph, by Asenath, the daughter of Potipherah, the priest of On. He received precedence over his elder brother, from the blessing of his grandfather Jacob; and the tribe was always more distinguished than that of Manasseh. (Gen. xli. 52; xliii. 1, 19.) Their territory lay almost in the middle of the land; and extended from the Mediterranean on the west, to the Jordan on the east; a portion of Manasseh lay on the north, and parts of Dan and Benjamin on the south. (Josh. xvi. 5; xvii. 7.) There appears to have been a good deal of enmity and rivalry between the tribe of Ephraim and the tribe of Judah; (Josh. xvii. 17; Judg. viii. 1—3; xii. 1;) which after the establishment of the monarchy, fully developed itself in the separation of the ten tribes from the house of David, and the establishment of the kingdom of Israel. The capital of the kingdom of the ten tribes was at Samaria, within the bounds of Ephraim; and, as the tribe of Ephraim was the most important, and also because the family of Jeroboam the first king was of that tribe, it occasioned the whole kingdom to be sometimes called "the kingdom of Ephraim." (1 Kings xi. 26—31; Isa. vii. 1—17; ix. 9; xi. 13; xvii. 3; xxviii. 1—8; Jer. xxxi. 9, 18, 20; Hos. iv. 17; v. 3—14; ix. 3—17.) Ephraim appears to be also called "Ephratah;" (Ps. cxxxii. 6;) and the Ephraimites were sometimes called "Ephrathites." (1 Sam. i. 1; 1 Kings xi. 28.) The Ephraimites were unable to utter the sound sh, to which they gave the sound sh. (Judg. xii. 6.) 2. A city on the border of the tribe of Benjamin, to which Jesus retired after the raising of Lazarus. (John xi. 54.) Dr. Robinson holds this city to be probably identical with "Ephraim" or "Ephron," (2 Chron. xiii. 19,) and "Ophrah;" (Josh. xxiii. 3; 1 Sam. xii. 17;) and apparently represented by the modern Ta'īyāb, situated on a lofty site, about seventeen miles N.E. of Jerusalem, and about five miles N.E. of Bethel, on the borders of the desert, which stretches along on the west of the Dead Sea, and the valley of the Jordan. "Mount Ephraim" was the name of a range of highlands, running through the possessions of Ephraim, in the central parts of the Land of Promise. (Josh. xvii. 15—18; xix. 50; xx. 7; xxi. 21; Judg. ii. 9; iii. 27; vii. 24; xvii. 1; 1 Sam. ix. 4; 1 Kings iv. 8; Jer. l. 19.) "The wood of Ephraim" was a forest on the east of the Jordan; probably so called from the slaughter of the Ephraimites, in the time of Jephthah. (Judg. xii. 1—6; 2 Sam. xvii. 24—29; xviii. 6—8.)

EPHRAIM—See Ephraim.

EPHRATH = land, region. The second wife of Caleb. (1 Chron. ii. 19.) In 1 Chron. ii. 50; iv. 4, this name is written "Ephrathah."—See Bethel, and Ephraim.

EPHRATHA—See Bethel, and Ephraim.

EPHRATHITES—See Bethel, and Ephraim.

EPHRON = pertaining to a calf. A descendant of Heth. (Gen. xxiii. 8—17; xxv. 9.) 2. A mountain on the confines of Judah and Benjamin. (Josh. xv. 9.) 3.—See Ephraim.

EPICUREANS. A sect of Grecian philosophers. They were in high repute at Athens in Paul's days, and with them he held conferences. (Acts xvii. 18.) Epicurus, their founder, was born in Attica, about 342 B.C. The leading tenet of his philosophy was, that the happiness of men consisted in pleasure; not in voluptuosness, but in sensible rational pleasure, properly regulated and governed; for in a happy life, pleasure can never be separated from virtue. He maintained that the world was formed by a fortuitous concourse of atoms, and that it is eternal and immutable, since it is neither liable to increase nor decrease, to production nor decay. He also denied a Divine Providence, the immortality of the soul, and the existence of angels. His followers were numerous, and his doctrines were rapidly disseminated. Though the system of Epicurus was no more indulgent to vice than other systems, yet the time that had elapsed since his death was sufficient to allow of its debasement; and his later disciples, in the time of Paul, had degenerated into mere sensualists, so that the public morals were undermined and corrupted.

EPISTLES. The Epistles contained in the new Testament were written by the five principal apostles, on various occasions, to approve, condemn, or direct the conduct of Christian churches or individuals. It was the most natural course the apostles could pursue, after preaching the gospel in any city or district, and establishing a church, that they should, in their absence, address them by letter, to remind them of the doctrines and injunctions they had received, and to illustrate more fully the duties and obligations of disciples. The Epistles may be regarded as illustrating, applying, and enforcing the truths which are taught in the parables and conversations, but especially in the life and death of the Divine Redeemer; and they present to us a beautiful and harmonious system of Christian precept and doctrine; while, at the same time, they appeal to a great number of extraordinary facts, and allude to principles and opinions as admitted, or as prevailing, or as opposed, among those to whom they are addressed. The churches or individuals unto whom the Epistles were addressed, and those mentioned in them, would carefully procure copies of these inspired writings, would give them all the authority and all the notoriety in their power, would communicate them to other churches, and, in short, would become vouchers for their genuineness and authenticity. (Col. iv. 16; 2 Peter iii. 16.) It is not to be supposed that every note or memorandum written by the hands of the apostles, or by their direction, was Divinely inspired, or proper for preservation to distant ages; those only have been preserved, by the overruling hand of Providence, from which useful directions had been drawn, and might in after ages be drawn, by believers, as from a perpetual directory for faith and practice; always supposing that similar circumstances required similar directions. Some have supposed that several Epistles have been lost, as for instance Paul's first Epistle to the Corinthians; (1 Cor. v. 9;) Paul's first Epistle to the Ephesians; (Eph. iii. 3;) and an Epistle by John; (3 John v. 9;) which were not, by the Head of the Church, designed for perpetuity. But we have no reason to suppose that any inspired Epistle is lost; the canon is entire. In reading an Epistle, we ought to consider the occasion of it, the circumstances of the parties to whom it was addressed, the time when written, the general scope and design of it, as well as the intention of particular arguments and passages. We ought also to observe the style and manner of the writer, his mode of expression, the effect he designed to produce on those to whom he wrote, to whose temper, manners, general principles, and actual situation, he might address his arguments. Being placed in our canon without reference to their chronological order, they are perused under considerable disadvantages; and it would be well to read them occasionally in connexion with what the history in the Acts of the Apostles relates, respecting the several churches to which they are addressed. This would also give us, nearly, their order of time, which should also be considered, together with the situation of the writer; as it may naturally be inferred, that such compositions would partake of the writer's recent, and present feelings; as they frequently contain expressions, and allude to facts, much more familiar to their original readers than to later ages. In the early ages, there were several spurious or apocryphal Epistles, which were ascribed to Christ, to His apostles, and disciples, several of which are still extant.—See Gospels.

ER = watching. 1. A son of Judah, who married Tamar, but who, being wicked, brought himself to an untimely end. (Gen. xxxviii. 3, 6, 7; xlvi. 12.) 2. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 21.)

ERAN = watchfulness. A descendant of Ephraim. His family were called "Eranites." (Num. xxvi. 36.)

ERASTUS = amiable. One of Paul's disciples. He was chamberlain, or rather steward, or treasurer of the city of Corinth. (Acts xix. 22; Rom. xvi. 23; 2 Tim. iv. 20.)

ERECH = length. One of the cities in the plain of Shinar, which was either founded or conquered by Nimrod. (Gen. x. 10.) About 82 miles south of Hillah are the extensive mounds called Irka, Irak, and Waraks, and sometimes Al Asayah = the place of pebbles; which Colonel Taylor identifies with Erech. Several of the mounds of this remarkable ruin are filled with funeral vases, and glazed earthen coffins, which show that this place was one vast repository for the dead, containing the remains of several successive generations. The inhabitants were called "Archevites." (Ezra iv. 9.)

ERI = watching. A son of Gad. (Gen. xlvi. 16.) His family were called "Erites." (Num. xxvi. 16.)

ESAIAS. — See ISAIAH.

ESAR-HADDON = gift of fire. A king of Assyria, the son and successor of Sennacherib. Before his father's death, he had been made viceroy over the province of Babylonia, with regal honours. (2 Kings xix. 37; Isa. xxxvii. 38.) In his reign the Assyrians made an inroad into Judea; (2 Chron. xxxiii. 11;) he also settled certain colonists in Samaria. (Ezra iv. 2.) On the Assyrian monuments he is called Assur-Nadin; and the ruins of his palace have been found at Nimrud. Several monuments of his son Assur-bani-pal = Sardanapalus, have been found at Koyunjik; and it is not improbable, that this king was the same person as Sardanapalus, sometimes called Sarseus, who, being driven into his residence at Nineveh by the revolted Medes and Babylonians, and finding himself reduced to extremity, set fire to the palace and perished in the flames, along with his wives and treasures.

ESAU = hairy, rough. The son of Isaac and twin-brother of Jacob; also called Edom = red, which name however is used more of his posterity than of himself. (Gen. xxv. 19, 25, 30.) Esau delighted much in hunting; while Jacob, being "a plain man" and of a more domestic turn, became the favourite of his mother Rebekah, by whose counsel and direction he surreptitiously obtained his father's blessing in preference to Esau. (Gen. xxv. 27, 34; xxvii. 1—46; Heb. xii. 17.) On Jacob's return into Canaan from Mesopotamia, whither he had fled to avoid his brother's resentment, Esau met him and received him with great kindness. (Gen. xxxiii. 1—16.) Esau is called a "proflane person," for having parted with the birthright, a peculiar privilege, the value of which he seemed scarcely to comprehend. And when he afterwards desired the blessing, he found no place of repentance, or change of his father's mind, although he sought for it with tears. (Heb. xii. 16, 17.) It is also written, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated;" (Mal. i. 2, 3; Rom. ix. 13;) but this merely refers to the bestowment of temporal blessings and the withholding of them. When the Hebrews compared a stronger affection with a weaker one, they called the first love, and the other hatred. Hence the passage simply means, "On Jacob have I bestowed privileges and blessings; but from Esau have I withheld these privileges and blessings"—in excluding him from being heir to the blessing promised to Abraham and his seed. Indeed the blessing pronounced on Esau was as good as that pronounced on Jacob, the mere temporary lordship, and being the progenitor of the Messiah, excepted. In this act of Divine sovereignty, there was nothing which necessarily involved the salvation of the one, or the perdition of the other.—See Edom.

ESEK: quarrel. A well near Gerar, so called by Isaac. (Gen. xxvi. 20.)

Eshbaal.—See Ishobaal.

Eshban: reason, intelligence. A descendant of Esau. (Gen. xxxvi. 26.)

Eshcol: a bunch, cluster, or a braid of grapes. An Amorite chief, the friend and ally of Abraham; (Gen. xiv. 13, 24;) from whom the valley near Hebron, probably derived its name. In Num. xiii. 23, 24, it is called the "brook of Eschol," but in Num. xxxii. 9; Deut. i. 24, it is correctly called the "valley of Eschol." The vineyards of this valley are very fine, and produce the largest and best grapes in all the country; and pomegranates and figs, as well as apricots, quinces, and the like, still grow there in abundance. The fine cluster of grapes, which the Hebrew spies took back with them, borne between two upon a staff, as a specimen of the fruits of the Promised Land, was doubtless large and heavy, but was carried in this manner in order to prevent its being bruised in the journey.

Eshean: prop, support. A city in the mountains of Judah. (Josh. xv. 52.)

Eshek: oppressor. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 39.)

Eshkalonites.—See Askelon.

Eshpar: a measure, esp. This Hebrew word denoting a certain measure of wine or drink, is erroneously rendered "a good piece of flesh." (2 Sam. vi. 19; 1 Chron. xvi. 3.)

Eshthaol: petition, entreaty! A city in the plain of Judah, belonging to the tribe of Dan. The inhabitants are called "Eshtaularites." (Josh. xxiii. 33; xix. 41; Judg. xili. 26; xvi. 31; 1 Chron. ii. 53.)

Eshtemoa: obedience. A Levitical city in the mountains of Judah. (Josh. xxi. 14; 1 Sam. xxx. 28; 1 Chron. iv. 17, 19; vi. 57.) Also called "Eshtemoah." (Josh. xv. 50.) It is now called Samaa, where are the remains of walls built of very large stones, bevelled, but left rough in the middle, several of which are more than ten feet in length.

Eshtemoah.—See Eshtemoa.

Eshton: womanish, lascivious. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 11, 12.)

Esli: removed? One of the progenitors of the Messiah. (Luke iii. 25.)

Espouse: see Marriage.

Esrom: see Hebron.

Esseines: Holy, Pious, or Healers! An ancient sect among the Jews, respecting the origin of which there is some difference of opinion. They were divided into two classes. 1. The practical Essenes, who lived in society, and some of whom were married. They dwelt in cities and their vicinity, and applied themselves to husbandry and other occupations. 2. The contemplative Essenes, who were also called Therapeutae or Physicians, from their application principally to the cure of the diseases of the soul, devoted themselves wholly to meditation, and avoided living in great towns, as unfavourable to a contemplative life. Both classes were exceedingly abstemious, exemplary in their moral deportment, avoided swearing or taking oaths, except the oath of initiation; and were most rigid in their observance of the sabbath, and held their property in common. In point of doctrine, their sentiments were nearly the same with those of the Pharisees. They believed that God was the author of all good, but not of evil; or, in other words, co-operated in good actions, but not in evil; that the soul was immortal; that the good after death receive rewards, and the wicked are punished. They objected to sacrifices from slain animals, and, accordingly, did not visit the temple. They believed everything to be ordered by an eternal fatality; and their austere and retired life is supposed to have given rise to monkish superstition. But though the Essenes are not expressly named in Scripture, it has been conjectured that they are alluded to in several passages. Thus, those whom Christ terms "canuca," (Matt. xix. 12,) are supposed to be the contemplative Essenes. Paul is understood, by some, to have referred to them in Col. ii. 18, 23, where "voluntary humility," and "neglecting the body," are peculiarly applicable to the Essenes.

ESTHER = a star, the star Venus, also good-fortune, happiness. A Jewish virgin of the tribe of Benjamin, born during the Exile. She was an orphan child of the kindred of Mordecai, and was adopted by him as his own daughter. She was fair and beautiful, and in process of time became the wife of Ahasuerus = Xerxes, and queen of Persia, in the room of Vashti whom the king had divorced. Her former name was Hadassah = a myrtle, but after she was raised to the rank of queen, she received the new and appropriate name of Esther. Esther and Mordecai were providentially the means of preventing the utter extermination of the Jews in the Persian empire. (Est. ii. 7; viii. 11.) —See Mordecai.

ESTHER, BOOK OF. The author of this book of the old Testament is not certainly known; but from his referring to the annals of the Persian kings, it is certain that he wrote before the overthrow of that monarchy. The most probable opinion is that the book was written a short time after the transactions which it records, since the author was acquainted with several minute circumstances relating to them. (Est. v. 10; ix. 7—10.) Whoever may have been the author, the work has this peculiarity, that, contrary to the universal practice of the Hebrews, it does not refer the reader to the Deity, or even mention His name. On this account De Wette, who objected to other books on account of their peculiar religious spirit, condemns this for its want of religion. This omission of the Divine Name has been accounted for, on the ground, that this book is a translated extract from the chronicles or memoirs of the Persian monarch Ahasuerus. However, the book bears the most unquestionable internal evidence of its authenticity; and the feast of Purim, of the institution of which this book gives an account, is still observed by the Jews. It contains an account of the elevation of Esther to be the queen of Xerxes, the pride and envy of Haman, his malicious plot for the extermination of the Jews, the turning of his schemes against himself, the honour and dignity of Mordecai, the destruction of the enemies of the Jews and among them of Haman and his family, and the extension of the power and glory of the king.

ETAM = place of venomous beasts. A city in Judah; also a neighbouring rock to which Samson withdrew. (1 Chron. iv. 3; 2 Chron. xi. 6; Judg. xlv. 8, 11.) It is now a village called Urtas, which is still inhabited, though the houses are in ruins, and the people dwell in caverns among the rocks of the steep declivity.

ETERNITY. An attribute of God. As God does not derive His existence from any other being, He must have "His life within Himself." (John v. 26; 1 Tim. vi. 16.) This life in Himself, is nothing else than His absolute necessary existence, which renders it impossible that His existence should terminate; (Pr. xli. 24—27; Deut. xxxii. 40; xxxiii. 27; Dan. xii. 7; Rev. x. 6;) or that His power should be diminished, or any change in Him occur; (1 Sam. xv. 29; Rom. i. 23; 1 Tim. i. 17;) or that His existence should have had a beginning; (Isa. xiii. 13; Ps. xc. 2;) in short, which renders Him eternal. (Rom. i. 20; Isai. xlvii. 15.) The same attribute is applied to Christ "the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty." (Rev. i. 8; iv. 8; Isa. ix. 6; John i. 1—4; 1 John v. 20.) Eternity rejects the idea of succession, which is included in the notion of time, in which one thing begins and another ceases; so that it follows that all things and events with God are simultaneous. "One day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." (2 Pet. iii. 8.) It must be observed that the terms eternal and everlasting, when applied to the future existence—happiness or misery of man, denote the endlessness of the state. (Matt. xix. 16; 2 Cor. iv. 17; Jude 7.) When applied to the principles of truth and justice, they signify unchangeableness. The same terms are often applied, as in common life, to denote long duration. (Gen. xvii. 8; xlix. 26; Ex. xii. 14.) But this restricted sense is always shown by the connection, and affords no argument in favour of the like restrictions in other connections, where the terms are evidently employed in their full force and extent. —See Everlasting.

ETHAM = border of the sea. A place on the confines of Egypt, not far from the north end of the Red sea. Etham, or Shur = a wall, was probably on the site of the present Bir Suweis—well of Suez, not far from the modern town of Suez. This place gave name to the adjacent desert stretching along the eastern shore as far as to Marah. (Ex. xii. 20; xv. 22; Num. xxxii. 6, 8.) That part of the Arabian desert which lies along the eastern shore of the Arabian Gulf, also bore the name of the "desert of Shur." (Ex. xv. 22; Gen. xvi. 7; xxx. 1; xxv. 18; 1 Sam. xvi. 7.)

ETHAN = permanency, prosperity. 1. The son of Zerah and grandson of Judah, famous for his wisdom. (1 Kings iv. 31; 1 Chron. ii. 6.) 2. A Levite, and one of the masters of the temple music. (1 Chron. vi. 42, 44; xv. 17.) To one of these the Ps. lxxxi. is incorrectly ascribed in the title.

ETHANIC = perennial streams. The seventh month of the ancient Hebrew year. It began with the first new moon in October; and was called by the Chaldeans Tisri. (1 Kings viii. 2.) The Feast of Tabernacles was kept in this month. (Lev. xxii. 34–43.)

ETH-Baal = with Baal, i.e. enjoying the favour of Baal. A king of Tyre and Sidon, Father of the infamous Jezebel, the wife of Ahab. (1 Kings xvi. 31.)

ETHER = abundance. A town or city in Simeon. (Josh. xv. 42; xix. 7.) ETHIOPIA = region of burnt faces. The name of this region of Africa was employed by the Greeks and Romans in all the latitude of its etymological meaning, to denote any of the countries where the people are of a sable, sunburnt complexion; very much as the word India is at this day. The Hebrew word "Cush" is generally rendered "Ethiopia," and all the tribes connected with this are to be sought only in Africa; so also the Egyptian monuments always represent the Cushites as an African people. On the ancient monuments several separate Cushite tribes are mentioned, in agreement with Gen. x. 7; according to which Cush is not the name of a separate tribe, but of several tribes belonging to one great family. By Cush, or Ethiopia, in the widest acceptation of the term, the Hebrews understood the whole of the region lying south of Egypt above Syene, the modern Aswan. This region was bounded north by Egypt; east by the Red sea, and perhaps a part of the Indian ocean; south by unknown regions of the interior of Africa; and west by Libya and the deserts. It comprehended the modern countries of Nubia or Senaar, and Abyssinia. Ethiopia, as a kingdom, was also applied in a more limited sense, to the state of Meroe, situated in the present kingdom of Senaar. Its chief city was also called Meroe, situated about twenty miles north of the modern Shendi, where ruins of splendid temples, pyramids, and other edifices have been found by modern travellers. But all the Ethiopian monuments belong to far later times than those of Egypt. (Ezek. xxiv. 10; xxx. 6; Isa. xviii. 1, 2; xliii. 3; xlv. 14; Zeph. iii. 11; Ps. lxxii. 10; Jer. xiii. 23; xlv. 9.) However, there seems to have been, at times, a close connection between Egypt and Ethiopia, as the same worship, in the same manners, the same mode of writing are found in both countries. Indeed Egyptian conquerors more than once invaded Ethiopia, and Ethiopian kings in return forced their way into Egypt. In Isa. xviii. 1, 2, Gesenius has observed, "What kingdom and people are meant is pretty clear from the political relations of that time, respecting which we have sufficient intimations. It is not Egypt alone, nor Ethiopia exclusively, but the people and kingdom of Tirhakah that are meant, which, besides Ethiopia, embraced a part of Egypt, probably upper Egypt. The king of this nation lived in war with the Assyrians. What was the state of his dominion over Egypt, appears pretty clearly from a comparison of the dynasties of Manetho with Herodotus and Diodorus. He was the last of the three Ethiopian kings, (Sahaco, Sevechos, and Tarkos,) who, immediately before Ptolemæus, had set up a powerful dynasty in Egypt, continuing for forty, or forty-four years. He reigned eighteen or twenty years. Contemporary with him, there existed two dynasties in Sais and Tanis, and without doubt his had its seat in Thebais. In the last years of his reign falls the Dodekarchy, at the end of which, the Ethiopians withdrew into their original kingdom. From this connection we may derive a satisfactory explanation of the fact, that Isaiah here mentions Egypt and Ethiopia in so close political relations—see especially Isa. xx. 3-6. The same fact is noticeable in the later prophets, and proves the continuance of a friendly understanding. (Ezek. xxx. 4; Jer. xlvi. 9.) Thus we obtain a suitable meaning for Isa. xviii. 2, where two nations, a nearer and a more remote, appear, whose territories are intersected and separated by streams. The first is the tribe of the Ethiopians in Thebais or Patros, the second the proper Ethiopians. In fine, Ethiopia is employed chiefly as the name of the national and royal family, that were now in the ascendancy." This intimate connection between the two countries presupposes a permanent alliance, which could only have been formed and maintained by a long, peaceable, and friendly intercourse. In recent times, the late Pasha of Egypt, Muhammad Aly, subdued part of Ethiopia, even farther south than Meroë. The Ethiopian queen Candace, was probably queen of Meroë, where a succession of females reigned, who all bore this name. (Acts viii. 27.)

ETHNA=N a gift, hire. A descendant of Asher. (1 Chron. iv. 7.)

ETHNARCH=ruler of a people. A title often applied to the prefect, chief, or governor of a country depending on or appointed by a king: Archelaus was called ethnarch of Judea by Augustus; (Jos. Wars ii. 6. 3;) and the governor of Damascus, under Artemas the king, is called "ethnarch." (2 Cor. xi. 30.)

ETHNI=giving, magnificent. One of the Levites. (1 Chron. vi. 41.)

EUBULUS=good counsel. A Christian, converted under Paul. (2 Tim. iv. 21.)

EUNICE=good victory. A Jewess, the mother of Timothy, her husband was a Greek proselyte. She was at an early period converted to the Christian faith, and the Apostle has pronounced a high eulogium on her piety. (Acts xvi. 1; 2 Tim. i. 5.)

EUNCHU=bed-keeper. A man deprived of virility, a castratus. In the most ancient times, such persons were employed as keepers of the bedchambers, and of the Oriental harems. Eunuchs often rose to stations of great power and trust in eastern courts; so that the term apparently came to be applied to any high officer of court, though not emasculated; so probably Gen. xxxvii. 6; xxxix. 1, a eunuch in the literal sense can scarcely be meant. Men are frequently represented on the Egyptian and Assyrian monuments with evident marks of fulness, especially of the chest and stomach, and beardless. These marks are characteristic of eunuchs. In the present day, eunuchs are employed in the courts and harems of the East, and especially black eunuchs. Castration was illegal among the Hebrews, and eunuchs were deprived from some outward privileges peculiar to the people of God. (Lev. xxii. 24; Deut. xxiii. 1; Isa. lvi. 4.) Nevertheless, the Hebrew kings appear to have employed eunuchs, who may have been captives bought from foreigners; but if they were Hebrews, their name expresses simply their office and dignity. (1 Sam. viii. 15; 1 Kings xxii. 9; 2 Kings viii. 6; ix. 32, 33; xx. 8; xxiii. 11; Jer. xxxviii. 7; xxxix. 16; xli. 16.) In Matt. xix. 12, the term is applied figuratively to persons naturally impotent; and also persons castrated. “Eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven’s sake” is evidently a hyperbolical description of such as lived in voluntary abstinence.

EUODIAS = good odour. A female Christian, probably a deaconess of the church at Philippi. (Phil. iv. 2, 3.)

EUPHRATES = sweet water. A celebrated river of western Asia. Scripture often calls it the “great river,” and assigns it for the eastern boundary of that land which God promised to the Hebrews. (Gen. xv. 18; Deut. i. 7, 8; xi. 24; Josh. i. 4; 1 Chron. v. 9.) The Euphrates is called the fourth of the rivers which issued from the common stream in Eden. (Gen. ii. 14.) It is the most considerable river of western Asia, and its basin, exclusive of that of the Tigris, is supposed to comprise about 108,000 geographic square miles. Although not so rapid as its twin river, the Tigris, it is far more majestic, and has a longer course. According to Col. Chesney, the Euphrates has two great sources in the mountains of Armenia. The most northern source is situated in the Anti-Taurus, about 25 miles north-east of Erz-Rum. This branch, sometimes called the Fret, and also the Kara-Su = black water, after a course of 270 miles is joined by the Murad-chai or Murad-So = river of desire. The Murad-chai, which is the eastern branch of the Euphrates, rises on the northern slope of Alas Taghi, a mountain about 900 feet high, and about 20 miles from the northern source. The Fret or Kara-Su was considered the proper Euphrates by the Greek and Roman writers; but the Armenians give that honour to the Murad-chai, which ought perhaps to be considered the principal stream. After the two streams have formed a junction, it then becomes a large river, which runs to the south and south-west, for more than 1760 miles from its eastern source, when the Euphrates and the Tigris unite their waters at Kurnah, and form the Shat-el-Arab = river of Arabies, which discharges itself into the Persian Gulf, 70 miles south of Basrah. During its southern course, the Euphrates approaches within 122 miles of the Mediterranean. Its breadth is very variable; at Malkat it is 100 yards, at Bir 180 yards, at Ul-Der 800 yards, while at Hillah its bed is contracted to about 200 yards; but when joined by the Tigris and forming the Shat-el-Arab, it has a depth of from three to five fathoms, and varies in breadth from 500 to 900 yards. The rapidity of the stream of the Euphrates varies considerably in different places; in the depressions of the alluvial plain it is often not a mile an hour, but over higher ground it runs from three to four miles an hour. The Euphrates and the Tigris have their regular inundations, arising from the early rains, and the melting of the snows, on the mountains of Armenia. There were anciently many canals which connected the Tigris with the Euphrates; many of them are still in being. The steam navigation of the Euphrates must be a question of considerable importance; and Mr. Layard has observed that this remarkable river, which spreads fertility through extensive districts almost unequalled for the richness of their soil, and for the varied nature of their produce, is navigable for nearly 850 miles from the Indian Ocean; while, on account of the neglect of the embankments and other obstacles, it is doubtful if a steamer of even the smallest useful size could now find its way through the great marshes that absorb the waters for nearly 200 miles above its confluence with the Tigris. Unless by railways, it can hardly be expected that this valley can ever be made available as an ordinary route between Europe and India. Yet in the time of queen Elizabeth, merchants from England went by this river, which was the high road to India. (Jer. xiii. 4—7; xlv. 2; Ps. cxxxvii. 1; Gen. xxxi. 21; Ex. xxi. 31.)—See HIDDEKEL.

EUROCLYDON = wave-stirring caster, or cast-sower. A tempestuous wind common in the Mediterranean, and supposed to be the same known to mariners by the name of a Levanter. It appears from the Greek term peloposides to have been a wind like the Typhon—the striker, the name, even in the present day, given to a tempestuous wind prevailing in the Mediterranean, and blowing a sort of hurricane in all directions from N.E. to S.E. (Acts xxvii. 14; Ps. xlvii. 7; Jon. i. 4; iv. 8.)

EUTYCHUS = good chance. A young man of Troas, who sat in the open window of the third floor, while Paul was preaching late in the night, and who, being overcome by sleep, fell out into the court below. It is generally supposed he was killed by the fall, and that his restoration to life by Paul was a miracle. (Acts xx. 5-12; 1 Kings xvii. 21; 2 Kings iv. 34.)

EVANGELIST = a messenger of good tidings. A Christian minister, not located in any particular place, but travelling as a missionary to preach the gospel and found Christian churches. Evangelists were early designated as a particular class of Christian teachers, but this distinction is supposed to have been merely temporary, like that of apostles and prophets. Though the extraordinary gifts and powers they possessed have ceased, the principal duties and services which they performed, and many to which they were not called, seem to have fallen upon those who in modern days are called "Missionaries." We commonly call the writers of the four Gospels the "Evangelists," because they, in a preeminent sense, have declared good tidings. (Acts xxii. 8; Eph. iv. 11; 2 Tim. iv. 5.)

EVE = IYve. The wife of Adam, and the common mother of the human race. The account of the creation of Eve is given in Gen. ii. 20-24. When Jehovah brought the woman to the man, Adam said, "She shall be called Isabella, the feminine of 앒 = "man," and properly signifies, however unmeaning the sound to our ears, "man," woman. But after the fall, he changed her name and called her "Eve" = IYve, not only because she was to be the mother of the human family, but because God had said that she should be the mother of that Seed that should bruise the serpent's head. In the creation of Eve, Matthew Henry has beautifully observed, "That the woman was made of a rib out of the side of Adam; not made out of his head to top him, not out of his feet to be trampled upon by him, but out of his side to be equal with him, under his arm to be protected, and near his heart to be beloved." (Gen. iii. 20; iv. 1; 2 Cor. xi. 3; 1 Tim. ii. 13, 15; Eph. v. 28-32.)—See ADAM.

EVENING. The Hebrews reckoned two evenings in each day; as in the phrase "between the two evenings." (Ex. xli. 6; Num. ix. 3; xxviii. 4, margin.) In this interval the passover was killed, and the daily evening sacrifice offered. (Ex. xxix. 39-41.) According to the Rabbis, the first evening began when the sun inclined to descend more rapidly, at the ninth hour, or three o'clock in afternoon; while the second or real evening commenced at sunset. According to the Caraites, it was the interval from sunset to complete darkness, that is the evening twilight. (Deut. xvi. 5.)

EVERLASTING. This term when used with respect to God, denotes duration without beginning or end; but when applied to created intelligences, a duration that has a beginning, but will have no end. The Hebrew word אֵיךָ, and the Greek words aion and aionios, commonly translated "forever," "ever," "eternal," and "everlasting," joined with a negative "never," properly signify an indefinite, unlimited period. Sometimes they are used in a modified or improper sense, but such exceptions are merely examples of catachrestic usage, or usage which is uncommon or aside from the strict sense of the word; just as in our own language the terms perpetual scurry, eternal vacation, endless truce, everlasting disgrace, etc., are occasionally employed for that which endures a great while, or for an indefinite period, or which is without intermission. Yet who supposes, that on this account the words everlasting, ETERNAL, perpetual, endless, are not, with the strictest propriety, applied to time which has no bounds, or in other words, to eternity! So in all the cases where glory and praise are ascribed to God "forever," or "forever and ever," it will not be credited that the sacred writers mean to declare, that this will take place for only a definite period of time, or for certain ages only. Nor can it be doubted, that when God is called eternal, or when the things of the heavenly world are said to be so, that eternity in the proper sense of the word is meant. Neither will it be questioned, in regard to the cases where αἰών = "forever," is applied to the happiness of the righteous in another world, and the cases where αἰωνίος = "eternal," is applied to the same, that a happiness without limits, without end, is intended to be designated. Can it be reasonably doubted, then, that the terms αἰών = "forever," and αἰωνίος = "eternal," applied to the future punishment of the wicked have a meaning like that of the preceding cases! The time designated in both is future; the world is future. We take it for a rule of construing all antithetic forms of expression, that where you can perceive the force of one side of the antithesis, you do of course come to a knowledge of the force of the other side. If life eternal is promised on one side, and death eternal is threatened on the other and opposite one, it is not to be supposed, that the word eternal which qualifies death, is a word of equal force and import with the word eternal which qualifies life? The result seems to be plain, and philologically and exegetically certain, that either the declarations of Scripture do not establish the facts, that God and His glory, and praise and happiness are endless; nor that the happiness of the righteous in a future world, is endless; or else they establish the fact, that the punishment of the wicked is endless. Indeed, we must either admit the ENDLESS misery of hell, or give up the ENDLESS happiness of heaven. (Gen. xxi. 33; Dan. xii. 2; Rom. i. 26; xvi. 28; Heb. vi. 2; xiii. 21; John x. 25; Mark iii. 29; 2 Cor. iv. 18; John vi. 40; Matt. xviii. 8; xxv. 41, 46; 2 Thess. i. 9; 2 Pet. ii. 17; Jude, 6, 13; Rev. xiv. 11; xix. 3; xx. 10; xxii. 5.)—See ETERNITY.

EVIL = desire or dwelling. A king of Midian, slain by the Hebrews. (Num. xxxi. 8; Josh. xiii. 21.)

EVIL. Evil is generally distinguished into natural and moral. Natural evil is whatever destroys or any way disturbs the perfection of natural beings, such as blindness, diseases, death, etc. But as all that we call natural evil is not the penalty of sin, nor as some have supposed, only the penalty of it, such disturbance is not necessarily an evil, inasmuch as it may be counterpoised, in the whole, with an equal if not greater good, as in the afflictions and sufferings of good men. When such disturbance occurs as the penalty of transgression, it is the necessary consequence of moral evil. Moral evil is the disagreement between the actions of a moral agent, and the rule of those actions, whatever it be. Applied to choice, or acting contrary to the revealed law of God, it is termed wickedness or sin. Applied to an act contrary to a mere rule of fitness, it is called a fault. Many attempts have been made by philosophers and divines, to trace out the origin of evil; but it is not improbable that the first sin, either in angel or man, is to be resolved entirely into the voluntary act of the sinning creature, placed in a state of trial or probation. Any attempt to throw the sinning power and disposition beyond the will itself into the attendant circumstances or temptations, as though they formed necessitating motives, must inevitably carry us back to the Divine mind, and relieve the sinning creature from all responsibility and guilt. For, as liberty or freedom implies a natural power of doing evil, as well as doing good, there necessarily arises a possibility of evil in the abuse of this liberty, notwithstanding that the Creator is infinitely good. Were intelligent beings so constituted in their nature as to be exempted from all chance of sinning, there would be no room for the practice of what we now call virtue. And, as without the presence of danger it is not easy to conceive any proof of courage, or of obedience without temptation to do wrong, it would have been impossible for man to have been so constituted as to attain the highest happiness without this kind of moral discipline. Indeed, to suppose that kind of moral excellence, which leads to higher degrees of happiness, to be attainable without previous trial or probation, may, for aught we know, be as absurd as to suppose a circle with unequal radii; and to suppose trial or probation without the possibility of evil seems to be equally absurd. Hence moral evil arises wholly from the abuse of liberty, which God gave to his creatures for other purposes, and which it was reasonable and fit to give them for the perfection and order of the whole creation; only they contrary to God's command, have abused what was necessary to the perfection of the whole, to the corruption and depravation of themselves. Notwithstanding the existence of evil in the world, it is without any diminution of the infinite goodness of its glorious Creator and Governor. (Gen. ii. 17; Job ii. 10; Eccl. ix. 3; Matt. xv. 18—20.)

EVI: MERODACH — Mardak's fool, i.e. Mardak's foolish worshipper. A king of Babylon, who sat at liberty Johoischin king of Judah, after he had been long detained in prison by Nebuchadnezzar. (2 Kings xxv. 27; Jer. lii. 31.) He probably held the reins of government for two of the seven years during which his father was deprived of reason. He is said to have been murdered by his brother-in-law Neriglisar, who thereafter ascended the throne.

EXCOMMUNICATION. The judicial exclusion of offenders from the religious rites and other privileges of the particular community to which they belong. Among the Jews excommunication was not only an ecclesiastical punishment but a civil one; because in their theocracy, there was no distinction between the Divine and the civil right.

(Ex. xxxi. 14; Esra x. 3, 11; Neh. xiii. 28.) But among the Christians, excommunication was strictly confined to ecclesiastical relations; as the situation and constitution of the church during the first three centuries admitted of no intermingling or confounding of civil and religious privileges or penalties. Excommunication, in the Christian church, consisted, at first, simply in exclusion from the communion of the Lord's Supper and the Lovefeast: "with such an one, no not to eat." (1 Cor. v. 11.) It might also include a total separation from the body of the faithful; and such a person was, with regard to the church, "as a heathen man and a publican." But this excommunication did not exempt him from any duties to which he was liable in civil life; neither did it withhold from him any natural obligations, such as are founded on nature, humanity, and the law of nations. (Matt. xviii. 17; 1 Cor. v. 5, 11; x. 16—18; 2 Thess. iii. 6, 14; 2 John 10, 11.)

EXECUTIONERS. In ancient Egypt, the superintendence of executions belonged to the most distinguished of the military caste. Potipher was chief of Pharaoh's "slaughtermen or executioners." (Gen. xxxvii. 36, margin.) But such executioners had nothing to do with carrying into effect the awards of the law, but only with the decrees of the king. It does not appear that the Hebrews had public executioners to carry into effect the awards of the law in its ordinary course. Sometimes the chief magistrate executed the criminal with his own hand, or ordered his attendants to do it. (Judg. viii. 20, 21; 1 Sam. xxi. 18.) Generally the congregation or assembly of people executed the criminal, but the witnesses commenced the work of death. (Lev. xxiv. 16; Deut. xvii. 7; John v. 7; Acts vii. 57—60.) Executions in the East are often very prompt and arbitrary. In many cases the messenger of death hurries to the unsuspecting victim, shows his warrant, and executes his order that instant in silence and solitude. (2 Kings vi. 32; Prov. xvi. 14; Mark vi. 27.) — See CHERETHITES.
EXODUS —

The second book of Moses, so called because it narrates the exodus or departure of the Hebrews from Egypt. It comprises a history of the events that took place during the period of about 145 years, that is, from the death of Joseph to the erection of the tabernacle. It was evidently written by Moses, probably after the giving of the Law on Sinai, and the erection of the tabernacle; as the author was evidently an eye and ear witness of the transactions he has narrated. This book contains a mass of incidents and detailed descriptions which have gained new force from the modern discoveries and researches in the field of Egyptian antiquities; so that the prejudiced critic henceforth will be obliged to recognise in the connection of the book of Exodus with Egypt and the desert, one of the most powerful arguments for its credibility and for its composition by Moses.

The exodus from Egypt, and the subsequent wanderings of the Hebrews in the desert, form one of the great epochs in their history. The period of their sojourning in Egypt is stated to have been "four hundred and thirty years;" (Ex. xii. 40;) but their actual stay did not exceed two hundred and fifteen years. The expression must, therefore, include the whole period from the time that Abraham entered the land of Canaan to the time of the exodus of his descendants from Egypt. On the night of the self-same day which terminated the above period, their wanderings commenced. A large portion of the people, including "the mixed multitude, and very much cattle," the whole probably amounting to two and a half millions, were apparently already collected at Rameses, waiting for permission to depart, when the last great plague took place. (Ex. xii. 37, 38; Num. i. 2, 3, 45, 46.) From Rameses to the head of the Red sea, a distance of some thirty or thirty-five miles, the direct and only route of the Hebrews was along the valley of the ancient canal. They broke up from their rendezvous at Rameses "on the fifteenth day of the first month, on the morrow after the passover;" (Ex. xii. 37; Num. xxxii. 9;) and the first day's march brought them to Succoth = booths, perhaps a temporary station or encampment. On the second day they reached Etham "in the edge of the wilderness," perhaps not far from the present head of the Gulf. (Ex. xiii. 20; Num. xxxii. 6.) Having arrived at the Red sea, the question arises, at what part did the passage take place. This many writers and travellers have assumed to be the point at the mouth of Wady Tawarik, south of Ras Atakah, where the sea is more than thirteen English miles in breadth, equal to a whole day's journey. We adduce the observations of Dr. Robinson, an intelligent traveller, who cannot be accused of Rationalistic leanings: (Biblical Researches i. 79;) He says, the discussion of this question has often been embarrassed by not sufficiently attending to the circumstances narrated by the sacred historian. (Ex. xiv. 11, 12, 21, 28.) In this narration there are two main points on which the whole question may be said to turn. The first is, the means or instrument with which the miracle was wrought. The Lord, it is said, "caused the sea to go (or flow out) by a strong east wind." The miracle therefore is represented as mediate—a miraculous adaptation of the laws of nature to produce a required result. In Hebrew phraseology, an "east wind" means any wind from the eastern quarter; and would include the N.E. wind which often prevails in this region. Now it will be obvious from the inspection of any good map of the Gulf, that a strong N.E. wind, acting here upon the ebb tide, would necessarily have the effect to drive out the waters from the small arm of the sea which runs up by Suez, and also from the end of the Gulf itself, leaving the shallower portions dry; while the more northern part of the arm, which was anciently broader and deeper than at present, would still remain covered with water. Thus the waters would be "divided, and be a wall (or defence) to the Hebrews on the right hand and on the left." Nor will it be less obvious, from a similar inspection, that in no other part of the whole Gulf would a N.E. wind act in the same manner to drive out the waters. On this ground, then, the hypothesis of a passage through the sea opposite to Wady Tawarik would be untenable. The second main point has respect to the interval of time during which the passage was effected. It was night; for the Lord caused the sea to go (out) "all night." The Hebrews were probably on the alert, and entered upon the passage as soon as the way was practicable; but as the wind must have acted for some time before the required effect would be produced, we cannot well assume that they set off before the middle watch, or towards midnight. Before the morning watch or two o'clock, they had probably completed the passage; for the Egyptians had entered after them, and were destroyed before the morning appeared. As the Hebrews numbered more than two millions of persons, besides flocks and herds, they would of course be able to pass but slowly. If the part left dry were broad enough to enable them to cross in a body one thousand abreast, which would require a space of more than half a mile in breadth, and is perhaps the largest supposition admissible, still the column would be more than two thousand persons in depth; and in all probability would not have extended less than two miles. It would then have occupied at least an hour in passing over its own length, or in entering the sea; and deducting this from the largest time intervening before the Egyptians must also have entered the sea, there will remain only time enough, under the circumstances, for the body of the Hebrews to have passed at the most over a space of three or four miles. This circumstance is fatal to the hypothesis of their having crossed at the wider point from Wady Tawarik. The preceding considerations tend conclusively to limit the place of passage to the neighbourhood of Suez. The part left dry might have been within the arm which sets up from the Gulf, which is now two-thirds of a mile wide in its narrowest part, and was probably once wider; or it might have been to the southward of this arm, where the broad shoals are still left bare at the ebb, and the channel is sometimes forded. If similar shoals might be supposed to have anciently existed in this part, the latter supposition would be the most probable. The Hebrews would then naturally have crossed from the shore west of Suez in an oblique direction, a distance of three or four miles from shore to shore. In this case there is room for all the conditions of the miracle to be amply satisfied. Either of the above suppositions satisfies the conditions of the case; on either the deliverance of the Hebrews was equally great, and the arm of Jehovah alike gloriously revealed. (Ps. xviii. 13-19; lxvii. 15, 20.)

Of the exodus of the Hebrews, and its fatal circumstances, no records were likely to find a place in the proud monumental annals of Egypt. As the Scriptures speak, with the exception of one poetical passage, (Ps. cxxvii. 15,) of the destruction of Pharaoh's host in the Red sea, rather than of Pharaoh himself, it would appear, that the impious monarch did not advance into the sea, and thus survived the ruin of his army.

After the passage of the Red sea, the Hebrews then advanced along its eastern shore, and through the valleys and desert, to Mount Sinai, where they arrived about the middle of the third month, or June, having been two months on their journey. Here the law was chiefly given; and here they abode until the twentieth day of the second month (May) in the following year, a period of about eleven months. Breaking up at this time from Sinai, they marched by way of the Red sea, and so along the coast to Akabah; and then went probably through the great Wady-el-Arabah to Kadesh.—See CAMP.

EXORCIST. One who exacts an oath, or, who by adjuration professes to expel demons. The Jews had their exorcists. (Jos. Ant. viii. 2, 5.) They were a class of persons who, like our travelling quacks, or conjurors, pretended to cure violent disorders beyond the skill of the physician, and even to cast out evil spirits; and all this with the use of certain incantations or charms, made effective, partly by administering certain powerful medicines, and partly by strongly operating on the imagination. Christ communicated to His disciples not only a real power over such diseases as were said to be occasioned by demons, but also authority to drive out evil spirits by the power of the Holy Spirit, and in His own name. (Matt. x. 1; xii. 27; Mark ix. 38; Luke x. 17; Acts xvi. 18; xix. 13.)

Eye. The custom of putting out the eyes as a mode of punishment, was very common in the East. (1 Sam. xi. 2.) Thus Samson was deprived of sight by the Philistines; (Judg. xvi. 21;) and Zedekiah by the Chaldeans. (2 Kings xxxv. 7.) The woodcut, from the Assyrian monuments, represents three captives, each having a ring inserted in the lower lip, to which a cord is attached, and the king is thrusting the point of his spear into the eyes of the suppliant. "I will put my hook in thy nose, and my bridle in thy lips." (2 Kings xix. 28; Isa. xxxvii. 29.) It is not uncommon in the East, for persons who have excited disturbance against the government, to have their eyes put out. In some cases, they deprive the criminal of the light of day, by sealing up his eyes with some kind of adhesive plaster. (Isa. xliv. 10.) The custom of painting the eye-lids and brows with a moistened powder of black colour, has been practised in the East from the earliest times. So "Jezabel painted her face," literally, "put her eyes in paint." (2 Kings ix. 30.) The same custom is frequently alluded to: "though thou rentest thy face with painting," literally, "though thou rentest thine eyes with painting." (Jer. iv. 30; Ezek. xxiii. 40; Prov. vi. 25.) The paint, called phæ or kohhl, used by the Hebrew ladies, was a powder producing a black colour, commonly prepared from antimony, or from lead ore and zinc, which they mixed with water, and spread upon the eyelids in such a way, that the white of the eye might appear more white by being surrounded with a black margin, thereby, apparently enlarging the eyes, and rendering their effect more powerful. The females of Arabia and Egypt not only colour their nails red, and their hands and feet yellow, with the herbal-henna; but they also use a collyrium, with which they tinge the inside of their eye-lids coal-black, thus giving the eyes an exquisitely soft, bewitching expression. The kohhl, of which there are different kinds, is applied with a small probe, of wood, ivory, or silver, tapering towards the end, but blunt; this is moistened, sometimes with rose-water, then dipped in the powder, and drawn along the edges of the eye-lids. The custom of thus ornamenting the eyes prevailed among both sexes in Egypt in very ancient times; and kohhl-vessels, with the probes, and even with the remains of the black powder, have often been found in the ancient tombs. The allusions in the term "eyes," in Ezek. i. 18; x. 12; Rev. iv. 6, 8, are evidently to the ascendency and vigilance with which the angels, as the ministers of Jehovah, perform His will. From some such association of ideas, the favourite ministers of state in the Persian monarchy were called "the king's eyes;" and even at this day, in China, a foreign officer of rank is called "a barbarian eye." (Num. x. 81; Pin-dar, Olymp. ii. 10; vi. 16.) As various affections and emotions, such as envy, pride, jealousy, pity, desire, humility, joy, are expressed by the eye; so, in the oriental style, they are often ascribed to that organ. (Ps. xviii. 28; Job xxii. 29; Matt. xx. 15; Prov. vi. 17; xii. 9; Isa. iii. 16; 2 Pet. ii. 14; 1 John ii. 16; Ezek. xxxv. 16, 25; Prov. xiiii. 6; xxviii. 22.)
EZA

EZAR.—See Ezer.

EZBAI = Assir, or Assyr. The father of Naarai. (1 Chron. xi. 37.)

EZBON = a worker. 1. A son of Gad; (Gen. xxxvi. 16;) called also "Oseni" = long or large ear. (Num. xxvi. 16.) 2. A son of Bela. (1 Chron. vii. 7; viii. 3.)

EZEKIAH.—See Hezekiah.

EZEKIEL = whom God makes strong, or God will prevail. A celebrated prophet, the son of Buzi a priest. He was carried into captivity with king Jehoiachin, and lived in the Jewish colony on the banks of the river Chebar. His prophecies extend to the sixteenth year after the capture of Jerusalem. (Ezek. i. 3; xxiv. 24; xxix. 17.) Jewish tradition fixes the tomb of the prophet at Kifel, on the banks of the Euphrates, in the neighbourhood of Babylon. The Book of Ezekiel abounds with sublime visions of the Divine glory, and awful denunciations against Israel for their rebellious spirit against God, and the abominations of their idolatry. It contains also similar denunciations against Tyre, and other hostile nations. The latter part of the book contains oracles respecting the return and restoration of the Jews from exile. That Ezekiel was a poet of no mean order is acknowledged by almost all critics. Louth compares him to the Grecian Eschylus, and observes, "In many respects he is perhaps excelled by the other prophets: but in that species of composition to which he seems by nature adapted, the forcible, the impetuous, the great and solemn, not one of the sacred writers is superior to him." And Michelle says, "that Ezekiel lived at a period when the Hebrew language was visibly on the decline. And when we compare him with the Latin poets who succeeded the Augustan age, we may find some resemblance in the style, something that indicates the old age of poetry." Some writers deny that the last nine chapters are to be ascribed to Ezekiel. But the arguments in support of this hypothesis are rejected by Eichhorn, and by De Wette; and even Gesenius observes, "This book belongs to that not very numerous class which, from beginning to end, maintains by means of favourite expressions and peculiar phrases such a oneness of tone as by that circumstance alone to prevent any suspicion that separate portions of it are not genuine." Nothing therefore can be established in opposition to the genuineness of these prophecies; and it is confirmed by their contents. The visions, the manner of conveying reproof, the multitude of circumstantial particulars, the character of the language and style, in all which respects Ezekiel is remarkably distinguished from other writers, prove that he must have been the author of those chapters. No imitation could possibly have been so successful.

EZEL = departure. A boundary, or monumental stone, mentioned in the agreement between Jonathan and David; properly Eben-El = stone of departure. (1 Sam. xx. 19.)

EZEM.—See Azem.

1. Ezer = treasure. One of the sons of Seir, also called "Esar." (Gen. xxxvii. 21, 30; 1 Chron. i. 38, 42.)

2. Ezer = help. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 4.) He is also called "Esra." (1 Chron. iv. 17.) 3. One of the valiant men who followed David to Ziklag. (1 Chron. xii. 9.) 4. A descendant of Ephraim, who was slain by the men of Gath. (1 Chron. vii. 21.) 5. The son of Jashua. (Neh. iii. 19.) 6. One of the priests. (Neh. xii. 42.)

EZION-GEBAER = back-bone of a mare. A very ancient city and sea-port in Idumea, on the Elanitic Gulf of the Red sea, not far from Elath. (Num. xxxiii. 35; xvi. 4; Deut. ii. 8.) Dr. Robinson observes, "Esion-gaber became famous as the port where Solomon, and after him Jehoahaphat, built fleets to carry on a commerce with Ophir. (1 Kings ix. 26; xxii. 48; 2 Chron. viii. 17, 18; xx. 36.) Josephus says it lay near Elana, and was afterwards called Berenice. But it is mentioned no more; and no trace of it seems now to remain; unless it be in the name of a small Wady with brackish water, el-Ghadyun, opening into el-Arabah from the western mountain, some distance north of Akaba.” Dr. Prideaux considers that the establishment of Ezion-geber, or Ezion-geber and Elath, as sea-ports, by David and Solomon, to have been the commencement of the East India trade, which, after being in the hands of different nations, is now so extensively carried on by our own country. (Cana. i. 7–12.)

—See Elath.

EZNITE.—See JASHOREM.

EZRA = İsaq. 1. A descendant of Serahah, and a celebrated scribe, priest, and leader of the Jewish nation. He appears to have enjoyed great consideration in the Persian court. He obtained letters from king Artaxerxes, and went at the head of a large party of returning exiles to Jerusalem. The conduct and superintendence of them was entrusted to Ezra, who was thoroughly conversant with the Mosaic code, and to whom authority was given to appoint judges, rectify abuses, watch over the observance of the laws, and punish the disobedient according to the extent of their delinquency, with imprisonment, confiscation of goods, banishment, or even death. He was, moreover, invested with powers to make a collection for the temple service among the Jews who remained in Babylonia; and the king and his counsellors not only gave large contributions themselves, but instructed the treasurers on this side of the Euphrates to provide Ezra with whatever he should require. (Ezra vii. 1–28; viii. 1–36.) Until the arrival of Nehemiah, Ezra had the principal authority in Jerusalem, and Josephus says that he was buried there; but the modern Jews believe that he died at Zamzuma, a town on the Tigris, while on his way from Jerusalem to Susa, to have an interview with Artaxerxes, concerning the affairs of the Jews. At this place his supposed tomb is still pointed out. Ezra, in company with other eminent men of his time, according to ancient Jewish tradition, restored and published the Holy Scriptures, after the return of the Jews from the exile. They collected all the books of which the Holy Scriptures then consisted, disposed them in their proper order, and settled the canon. They corrected the errors which had crept into the existing copies of the Sacred Writings by the negligence or mistakes of transcribers; and added, throughout, what appeared necessary for illustrating or completing them. They also changed the ancient names of several places which had become obsolete, and substituted for them the new names by which they were at that time called. As the people, during the exile, had become accustomed to the Aramean language, and scarcely understood Hebrew, Ezra established the office of dragomans — interpreter, who stood near the reader in the synagogue, and translated every verse after it was read.

The Book of Ezra is a continuation of the Jewish history from the close of the books of Chronicles. It contains a history of the return of the Jews from the time of Cyrus; with an account of the reformation of religion under Ezra; and it may be read advantageously in connexion with the prophecies of Haggai (i. 12,) and Zechariah. (iii. 1; Ezra v.) The books of Ezra and Nehemiah, on account of the similarity of their contents, were anciently reckoned by the Jews as one volume, and were divided by them into the first and second books of Ezra: the same division is recognised by the Greek and Latin churches. This book was evidently written by Ezra, who was personally present at the transactions which he records. Some critics deny that Ezra was the author of the whole book, but the most judicious scholars, along with the Jews, ascribe the whole book to him. The book of Ezra is written in Chaldee from chapters iv. 8—vi. 18, and vii. 10—26; for as this portion of the work contains abstracts from original documents in that language, the fidelity of the historian induced him to take down the very words which were used. The people, too, having been accustomed to the Chaldee during the exile, were in all probability better acquainted with it than with the Hebrew; for it appears from Nehemiah's account, that they did not all understand the law of Moses, as it had been delivered in the original Hebrew tongue. 2. One of the first colonists, after the exile, under Zerubbabel. (Neh. xii. 1, 13, 23.) 3.—See Eze.

EZRAHITE. One of the descendants of Ezra; spoken of Ethan; (1 Kings iv. 31; Psalm lxxix. 1;) also of Heman. (Ps. lxxxviii. 1.) In 1 Chron. ii. 6, both these are said to be descendants of "Zerah," the son of Judah; so that we may regard "Ezrah" as another form of the same name, found only in the patronymic. In 1 Kings iv. 31, Ethan is distinguished as "the Ezrahite," from Heman, Chalcol, and Darda, who are called "sons of Mahol," unless, indeed, this word, Mahol, be taken not as a proper name, but appellatively, for "sons of music, dancing," etc., in which case it would apply to Ethan as well as to the others. This interpretation is strengthened by finding the other names associated with that of Ethan, in 1 Chron. ii. 6, as sons of Zerah.

EZR = Help of Jehovah. The overseer of the agriculturists for king David. (1 Chron. xxvii. 26.)

FABLE. A fiction, a mythic tale or discourse. Paul exhorts Timothy and Titus to shun profane and Jewish mythotis = "fables," meaning the Rabbinical traditions and speculations afterward embodied in the Mischna and the Talmud. So the "interminable genealogies" shows the fondness for genealogical investigation which has ever distinguished the Jews. (1 Tim. i. 4; iv. 7; 2 Tim. iv. 4; Tit. i. 14; 2 Pet. i. 16.) The careful reader finds in the traditions of various countries, and also in the fables of the ancient classics, many correspondencies with the early Biblical history; such correspondencies as intimate, that these traditions were derived from this history. Of such a nature, are the tales concerning a golden age of our race, an apotheosis, the flood, and a future restoration. These traditions point us to the time when the human family dwelt in one region; and afterwards separated into various branches.

FACE. The Hebrew word posseh — "face," designates that which is most exposed to view; hence we read of the "face of the earth, or of the waters, or sky, etc." The "face of God" denotes His presence, however manifested. Thus in Gen. iii. 8, "Adam and his wife hid themselves from the presence of the Lord God." After the first transgression, the persuasion was very prevalent, that no one in this present state could "see God face to face and live." (Gen. xxxii. 30; Ex. xx. 19; xxxvii. 20.) The gracious displays of divine favour and love are meant, when the face of God is said to "shine" upon us. (Num. vi. 23—26; Ps. xxxi. 16; Dan. ix. 17; 2 Chron. xxx. 9; Rev. xxii. 4.) The "face" of Christ denotes His person, as the image of the invisible God, and the divine medium through which every mercy is communicated to our hearts; (2 Cor. iv. 6; iii. 18;) also His glorious or terrible appearances. (Rev. xx. 11.) The highest happiness, reserved for the faithful in glory, is "to see God;" (Matt. v. 8; Heb. xii. 14;) and the greatest misery, reserved for the unbelieving, is to be shut out from His immediate presence. (Gen. iv. 14, 15; 2 Thess. i. 9: 1 John iii. 2.)

FAIR HAVENS. The situation of Fair Havens, off the coast of Crete, is, by the ancient name being still preserved in Kalos Limonas, fixed to a place a little to the N.E. of Cape Leon, the present Cape Matara. It was not a regular port, but an open road-stead, though well sheltered from tempestuous winds by the Cape and some islands situated to the west and east of it.

(Acts xxvii. 3.)

FAIRS. This term may either mean periodical meetings for purposes of traffic, or fixed places of commerce. The natural sea-port of western Asia, and the centre of the commerce of the East, was Tyre, or rather the ports of Phoenicia, for Tyre was but one of them. Phoenicia early grasped this commerce, and retained it until the rise of Alexandria.

The enumeration of the articles of traffic, in Ezek. xxvii., shows that a large part of the commerce of Tyre was in articles of luxury; though it was the grand mart for all the trade of the Eastern and Western world. (Ezek. xxvii. 12-22.)

FAITH. Faith is not an essence or principle independent of the acting of the mind, but a purely intellectual act, the assent of the understanding, under the influence of the Holy Spirit, to the testimony of Divine revelation, elevating the "heart," i.e. the mind, away from self and all created things, to earnest trust or confidence in God the proper object of faith. Faith does not consist in believing what God has not revealed. The belief of science, moreover, is not faith; though true science and faith are never opposed to each other. Nor is the belief of superstition to be confounded with faith. Faith is believing in things not evident or apparent of themselves, on the testimony of the words of God. Hence the exercise of faith may occasionally be above reason, though not opposed to reason, but rather its associate. As it is the real essence of the Divine declarations which we are to believe, reason has to determine and settle, by some proper laws of interpretation, what is to be believed, faith then performs her office and believes. Mere belief in the facts, or credit given to the events narrated in the Scriptures, can scarcely be called faith. Though the faith of the patriarchs and others, exhibited and adverted to in Heb. xi. 1-40, was the same disposition of mind—belief in Divine revelation—it evidently had respect mainly to "the promises" and to the future.

"Now faith is confidence in respect to things hoped for—evidence of things not seen." So also, the instances of faith in the persons miraculously healed by Christ, were of this kind; their faith was belief in his claims, and also confidence in His goodness and power. And the faith which is required of us as a condition of salvation is an exclusive reliance on God through Christ, founded on the belief of those declarations of Scripture respecting the person, offices, and promises of Christ the Saviour of sinners. Hence that faith in Christ which is connected with salvation, is faith in God's love to thee as an individual; and, as being thus exercised upon an object having a personal reference to thee, necessarily combines belief with trust, assent with reliance. "Whatever ye ask the Father in my name," that is, in dependence upon my interest and merits, "He shall give it you." Christ is said to be set forth as a propitiation, "through faith in His blood," which faith can neither merely mean assent to the historical fact that His blood was shed by a violent death; nor mere assent to the general doctrine that His blood has an atoning quality; but as all the ancient expiatory offerings were trusted in as the means of propitiation, faith or trust was now to be exclusively rendered to the blood of Christ, as the Divinely appointed sacrifice for sin, and the only refuge of the true penitent. To all true penitents, Christ, as the only atonement for sin, is exhibited as the object of their trust, with the promise of God, "that whosoever believeth in Him shall not perish, but have everlasting life." "For faith," says Luther, "is a sure and certain belief, or confidence concerning God, that through Christ He is propitious,—that through Christ He thinks of peace concerning us, and not thoughts of affliction or of anger. For the thought or promise of God, and the faith by which I lay hold on that promise are related to each other. For if you still believe the promises made by God, God will account you righteous." He, therefore, who believes God promising, who feels that He is true, and that He will perform whatever He has promised, such an one is righteous, or accounted so. Faith alone lays hold on the promise; it believes in the promises of God; it stretches forth its hand to God who is offering something, and receives it. This is the appropriate work of faith alone. This is the clear and indubitable testimony of Scripture, that the righteousness of faith is imputed, i.e. that Abraham believing in God is reputed by God as righteous. This the Scripture says not of works. Let this distinction, therefore, be observed, that faith which contracts with God promising, and accepts His promise, that alone justifies.” Faith, then, is the condition to which the promise of God annexes justification; not faith meritoriously, but faith instrumentally, — the condition of our pardon. “For if Christ had not merited, God had not promised; if God had not promised, justification had never followed on this faith; so that the indissoluble connection of faith and justification is from God’s institution, whereby He hath bound Himself to give the benefit upon the performance of the condition. Yet there is an aptitude in faith to be made a condition; for no other act can receive Christ as a Priest propitiating and pleasing the propitiation, and the promise of God for His sake to give the benefit. As receiving Christ and the gracious promise in this manner, it acknowledgeth man’s guilt, and so man renounceth all righteousness in himself, and honoureth God the Father, and Christ the Son the only Redeemer. It glorifies God’s mercy and free grace in the highest degree. It acknowledges on earth, as it will be perpetually acknowledged in heaven, that the whole salvation of sinful man, from the beginning to the last degree thereof, whereof there shall be no end, is from God’s freeest love, Christ’s merit and intercession, His own gracious promise, and the power of His own Holy Spirit.” — See JUSTIFICATION.

FAITHFUL. A Divine attribute, denoting the truth and certainty of the accomplishment of all that God has declared. (Num. xxiii. 19; Ps. cxxxix. 1, 33, 34; Heb. x. 23; Rev. i. 5.) The term is also used as an appellation of professing Christians; and it is used to this day in that application in ecclesiastical language. (Acts xvi. 15; 1 Cor. iv. 17; Eph. vi. 21; Col. iv. 9; 1 Pet. v. 12.)

FALLOW YEAR. Among the Hebrews every seventh year was a sabbath of rest unto the land. The commencement of this year was on the first day of the seventh month, Tishri = October. There was neither sowing nor reaping; the vines and the olives were not pruned; there was no gathering of fruits; for all spontaneous productions were left to the poor, the traveller, and the wild beast. (Lev. xxv. 1—7; Deut. xv. 1—10.) The sabbatical year was instituted in order that the land might be improved, and that the Hebrews might be taught economy and foresight; and also invited to exercise a large degree of trust in the providence of Jehovah their king. During this year they could fish, hunt, take care of their bees, and flocks, repair their buildings, manufacture furniture and clothes, and carry on commerce. Debts, on account of there being no income from the soil, were not collected. (Deut. xv. 9; xxxi. 10—13.) Nor were servants manumitted on this year, but at the end of the sixth year of their service. (Ex. xxii. 2; Deut. xv. 12; Jer. xxxiv. 14.) The Hebrews remained longer in the tabernacle or temple this year, during which the whole Mosaic law was read, in order to be instructed in religious and moral duties, the history of their nation, and the wonderful works and blessings of God. (Deut. xxxi. 10—13.) When Jehovah gave the Hebrews this remarkable institute, in order to guard them against the apprehension of famine, he promised, on the condition of their obedience, so great plenty in every sixth harvest, that it alone would suffice for three years. (Lev. xxv. 20—22.) However through the avarice of the Hebrews, this seventh year’s rest, as Moses had apprehended, (Lev. xxvi. 34, 85,) was for a long time utterly neglected; (2 Chron. xxxvi. 21;) for in all the history of the Hebrew kings there is no mention of the sabbatical year, nor of the year of jubilee. The period when this wise and advantageous law fell into disuse, may, probably, be understood from the prediction of Moses, in Lev. xxvi. 33, 34, 43; compared with 2 Chr. xxxvi. 21; Jer. xxv. 11. Thus was it foretold, that the Hebrews for the violation of this law, should go into captivity: "To fulfill the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah, until the land had paid off her sabbaths; for as long as she lay desolate she kept sabbath, to fulfill three-score and ten years." Here it is taken for granted, that seventy sabbatical years, including the jubilee years which succeeded every seventh sabbatical year, had been neglected by the unfaithful people. The Hebrews were frequently weary of the law; and at different periods, during the commonwealth, they appear to have utterly neglected the fallow or sabbatical years. Hence it appears that the captivity of the Hebrews, and the desolation of their country, was an act of retributive Providence, brought upon them for this very reason, that the land might pay off those sabbatical years of rest, of which the Hebrews had deprived it, in neglecting the statute of Jehovah their king. (Lev. xxvi. 43.) After the exile the fallow or sabbatical year appears to have been more scrupulously observed, as we learn from Joe. Ant. xi. 11, 8. See JUBILEE.
FAM

FAMILIAR. — See DIVINATION.

FAMINE. The first famine that we read of is recorded in Gen. xii. 10, which is described as so grievous, as to compel Abraham to quit Canaan for Egypt. (Gen. xxvi. 1.) Another occurred in the days of Isaac, which was the cause of his removal from Canaan to Gerar. (Gen. xxvi. 17.) The most remarkable one was that of seven years in Egypt, while Joseph was governor; which was distinguished for its duration, extent, and severity. The ordinary cause of famine in Egypt is connected with the annual overflow of the Nile. But it would appear that more than local causes must have been in operation in the case noticed in Gen. xii. 30; for it is said that "the famine was sore in all lands." This event illustrates the benignity and wisdom of Divine Providence, in bringing to Egypt a band of shepherds, to prepare and qualify them for being ultimately the founders of the Hebrew nation. A famine in Judea sometimes arises from the rains not falling at the customary seasons, or when caterpillars, locusts, or other insects destroy the produce of the earth. (Joel i. 4.) Sometimes a famine is the effect of God's anger. (2 Sam. xxi. 1; 2 Kings viii. 1, 2.) In Amos viii. 11, a heavier woe than even the want of bread is appropriately spoken of under the appellation of a famine: "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the land; not a famine of bread nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the word of the Lord." The context shows that idolatry was the moving cause of this heavy punishment. (Deut. xxvii. 22—42; 2 Kings vi. 25—28; xxv. 3; Jer. xiv. 15; xix. 9; xili. 17; Ezek. v. 10—16; vi. 12; vii. 15; Matt. xxiv. 7.) See DOVES' DUNG.

FAN. The Greek word πνων, rendered "fan," denotes an agricultural implement, for winnowing corn; of which there are two kinds: one a sort of fork, with which they throw up the corn to the wind, that the chaff may be blown away; the other, for a still further purification, is a kind of wooden scoop or shovel, with which the grain is tossed up and the chaff wafted away. (Isa. xxx. 24; Jer. xv. 7.) Our Lord is represented as having His fan in His hand, in order to purge His floor, by separating the righteous from the wicked. (Matt. iii. 12.)

FARM. Moses, following the example of the Egyptians, made agriculture the basis of the Hebrew state. He, accordingly, apportioned to every Hebrew a certain quantity of land, and gave him the right of tilling it himself, and of transmitting it to his heirs. (Num. xxvi. 33—54.) This equal distribution of the soil was the basis of the Hebrew agrarian law. As in Egypt, the lands all belonged to the king, and the husbandmen were not the proprietors of the fields which they cultivated, but farmers or tenants who were obliged to give to the king one-fifth of their produce. (Gen. xlvi. 20—25.) Just as Moses represents Jehovah as the sole possessor of the soil of the Promised Land, in which He was about to place the Hebrews by His special providence; and this land they held independent of all temporal superiors, by direct tenure, from Jehovah their king. (Lev. xxv. 23.) Moses further enacted, that for the land, the Hebrews should pay a kind of quit-rent to Jehovah the sovereign proprietor, in the form of a tenth or tithes of the produce, which was assigned to the priesthood. The condition of military service was also attached to the land; as it appears that every freeholder was obliged to attend the general muster of the national army, and, with few exceptions, (Deut. xx. 5—9,) to serve in it, at his own expense, as long as the occasion required. The Hebrews appear to have acquired in Egypt considerable knowledge of agriculture; but the physical circumstances of the land of Canaan were in many respects essentially different, as it was not a land rarely refreshed with rain as Egypt. (Deut. xi. 10—15.) The Hebrews, notwithstanding the richness of the soil, endeavoured to increase its fertility in various ways. In order to avert the aridity which the summer droughts occasioned, they watered the soil by means of aqueducts communicating with the brooks; and thereby imparted to their fields a garden-like verdure. (Ps. i. 3; lxv. 10; Prov. xxi. 1; Isa. xxxi. 2, 20.) In the hilly part of the country terrace cultivation was practised, so that the hills otherwise barren, were rendered fertile. (Deut. xi. 11; Ps. lxviii. 16; 2 Cor. xi. 25.) With the use of manure, the Hebrews were undoubtedly acquainted; and that the soil might not be exhausted, it was ordered that every seventh year, the whole land lay fallow. The dung, the carcases, and the blood of animals were used to enrich the soil. (2 Kings ix. 27; Ps. lxxiii. 10; xiii. 2; Jer. xi. 22.) Salt, either by itself or mixed in the dunghill in order to promote putrefaction, is specially mentioned as a compost. (Matt. v. 13; Luke xiv. 24, 35.) The soil was enriched also by means of ashes; to which the straw, stubble, husks of corn, brambles, grass, etc., that overspread the land during the fallow or sabbatical year, were reduced by fire. The burning over the surface of the land had also the good effect of destroying the seeds of noxious herbs. (Prov. xlvi. 31; Isa. xxx. 25.) The soil of Palestine is very fruitful, if the dew of spring, and the rains of autumn and winter are not withheld. “Nevertheless,” observes Hengstenberg, “it is to be considered that the Canaan of which Moses speaks is in a manner an ideal land. It was never what it might have been, since the bond of allegiance, in consequence of which God had promised to give the land its rain in its season, was always far from being perfectly complied with.” Among the Hebrews, the occupation of the husbandman was held in high honour; and even distinguished men disclaimed not to put their hands to the plough. (1 Sam. xi. 6—7; 1 Kings xix. 19; 2 Chron. xxvii. 10.) The esteem in which agriculture was held, diminished as luxury increased; but it never wholly ceased; even after the exile, when many of the Jews had become merchants and mechanics, the esteem and honour attached to this occupation still continued, especially under the dynasty of the Parthians who were agriculturists from religious motives.

FARTHING. The word assaria, rendered “farting,” designates a Roman copper coin, in value a little over three farthings in our money, and equal to one-tenth of the denarius. The term is used to denote the most trifling value, like our mite or farthing. (Matt. x. 29; Luke xii. 6.)

FAST. An entire or partial abstinence from food; frequently expressed in the Hebrew phrase, “to afflict the soul.” (Num. xxix. 7; xxx. 13; Ps. xxxv. 13; Isa. lix. 3, 5, 10.) Moses instituted a fast on the great day of annual atonement, which occurred on the tenth day of the seventh month, Tsiri = October, on which food was interdicted from evening to evening. (Lev. xvi. 29, 31; xxii. 27, 32; Acts xxvii. 9.) The Hebrews occasionally held extraordinary fasts; (1 Kings xxi. 9; Jer. xxxvi. 9; 2 Chron. xx. 3;) particularly whenever they had met with any adverse occurrences. (Judg. xx. 26; 1 Sam. vii. 6; xxxi. 13; 2 Sam. iii. 35; Isa. viii. 3–12.) Sometimes they made even children at the breast fast. (Joel ii. 16.) The fast of the seventeenth day of the fourth month, Tamnux = July, was instituted in memory of the capture of Jerusalem. (Jer. lii. 6, 7; Zech. viii. 19.) That of the ninth day of the fifth month, Ab = August, in memory of the burning of the city and the temple. (Jer. lii. 12; Zech. vii. 3–5; viii. 19.) The fast of the third day of the seventh month, Tsiri = October, was held in memory of the death of Gedaliah. (2 Kings xxv. 25; Jer. xli. 2; Zech. vii. 5; viii. 19.) That of the tenth day of the tenth month, Tebeth = January, was established in memory of the commencement of the siege of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar. (2 Kings xxv. 1; Zech. viii. 19.) Occasionally private or individual fasts were held in connection with times of mourning, sorrow, and affliction. (1 Sam. i. 7; xx. 34; Ezra x. 6; Neh. i. 4.) Among the Hebrews, fasting did not always include an entire absence from food. From a consideration of Dan. i. 10–16, compared with Ex. xxxiv. 28; 1 Kings xix. 8, it does not appear to be a necessary inference that Moses and Elijah totally abstained from food during the period of forty days. Our Lord fasted forty days and forty nights in the wilderness, “and in those days He did eat nothing.” (Matt. iv. 1–4; Luke iv. 1–4.) He neglected the observance of those stated Jewish fasts which had been superadded to the Mosaic law, to which the Pharisees paid such scrupulous attention; (Matt. xi. 18, 19;) and He represented such observances as inconsistent with the genius of His religion. (Matt. vi. 16; ix. 14, 15; Mark ii. 15–22; Luke v. 33–39; xviii. 11, 12.) The practice of voluntary and occasional fasting He neither prohibited nor enjoined; He spoke of it, however, as being not unsuitable on certain occasions, nor without its use in certain cases; (Matt. ix. 15; xviii. 21;) and He warned His disciples against all ostentatious and hypocritical observances of this kind. The apostles joined fasting with prayer on solemn occasions. (Acts xiii. 2, 3; xiv. 23; Rom. xiv. 14, 22; Col. ii. 16–23; 1 Tim. iv. 3–5.)
FAS

FAT

The Hebrews were forbidden to eat the fat covering the intestines, the large lobe of the liver, the kidneys and the fat upon them; (Ex. xxix. 10, 22; Lev. iii. 4, 10, 15; iv. 9; ix. 10, 19;) also the fat tail of the sheep; (Ex. xxix. 22; Lev. iii. 9; vii. 8; viii. 26; ix. 19;) all of which was set apart for the altar—“All the fat is the Lord’s.” (Lev. iii. 15, 11.) They might eat the fat involved in the muscular tissue—in short, fat meat; and we know that animals were occasionally fattened for food. (1 Kings iv. 23; Jer. xlv. 21; Hab. iii. 17; Luke xiv. 23.) One reason of this prohibitory law may have been to prevent cutaneous diseases, which, in the East, are aggravated by the use of fat;—at the same time, to encourage the cultivation of the olive tree, for the sake of its excellent and delicious oil. The terms “fat” and “fattiness” are sometimes used metaphorically, for the best, richest, part of anything, as “the fat of the land,” that is, its best fruits, richest productions; (Gen. xlv. 18;) also, for any kind of abundance. (Job xxxvi. 16; Ps. lxxiii. 5; lxv. 11; Isa. lv. 2; Jer. xxxi. 14; Gen. xxvii. 28.)

FATHER. Among the Hebrews, the authority of a father extended not only to his own children, but to his children’s children also; and the service and love due to parents are fully recognised in the laws of the Hebrew polity. (Ex. xx. 12.) The son who had acquired property, was commanded to show his gratitude to his parents, not only by words, but by gifts also. (Matt. v. 6; Mark vii. 11—13.) The term “father” is also applied to a remote ancestor, forefather. (1 Kings xi. 11; Num. xviii. 1, 2; Isa. xxxii. 27; Gen. xv. 15; x. 21; xvii. 4, 5; Josh. xxiv. 3; Matt. iii. 9; Acts vii. 2; Rom. iv. 17.) God, as the Creator and Governor of all things, is called “Father.” The Father of men; (Deut. xxxii. 6; Isa. liii. 16; ixv. 8; Luke iii. 28; Acts xvii. 28;) of the Hebrews; (Jer. xxxi. 9; John viii. 41; 2 Cor. vi. 18;) and of Christians. (Matt. vi. 4, 8; John i. 12; Rom. i. 7; Heb. xii. 9.) God is called the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, in respect to that peculiar relation in which Christ is the Son of God. (Eph. i. 17; Matt. xi. 27; John x. 18; Rom. xv. 6.) The Messiah is called the “everlasting Father” — Father of His people. (Isa. ix. 5.) Satan is called the “father” of wicked and depraved men. (John viii. 41, 44.) The author, or originator of a thing, is called “father,” as Juba the inventor of music. (Gen. iv. 21.) Also a benefactor, as doing good and providing for others in the manner of a father. (Job. xix. 15; Ps. cxviii. 5; Isa. xxii. 21.) The term is used as a title of respect and reverence towards one who is regarded in the light of a father. (Prov. iv. 1; Luke xvi. 24.) So of a master or teacher, as exercising paternal care, authority, etc. (Gen. xiv. 5; 1 Sam. x. 12; 2 Kings ii. 12; Judg. xvii. 10; Matt. xxii. 9; 1 Cor. iv. 15; Phil. ii. 22.)

FATHOM. The Greek word ὀρθωσ, rendered “fathom,” indicates the space which one can measure by extending his arms laterally. (Acts xxvii. 28.) As a measure of length it was equal to six feet, equivalent to the English fathom.

FEAR. The uneasy emotion which springs from a sense of danger; in excess, it is dread, terror; qualified by reverence, it is awe. The fear of God is a grace of the Spirit, and denotes such a reverence for His holy character, and such a dread of offending Him by a violation of His holy law, as to lead to watchfulness, humility, and unceasing prayer. This kind of fear, being thus compatible with confidence and love, is sometimes called filial fear; whilst “the fear which hath torment,” sometimes called slavish fear, being the result of conscious guilt, and the anticipation of punishment, is removed by that love to God which results from a consciousness of our reconciliation to Him. (Gen. xxii. 12; Neh. v. 15; Ps. xix. 9; xxxiv. 11; Prov. viii. 13; Eccl. xii. 13; Jer. xxxii. 40; 1 John iv. 18.)

FEASTS. Among the Hebrews, feasts were sometimes given as examples of hospitality; (Gen. xix. 3; xxxi. 27; Judg. vi. 19; 2 Sam. iii. 20; 2 Kings vi. 23; Job i. 13;) but generally to celebrate important or joyous events. (Gen. xxx. 1; xxxi. 22; xi. 20; Job i. 4; Matt. xiv. 6; Luke xv. 28.) Feasts were held at the time of harvest; (Isa. x. 3;) of sheep-shearing; (1 Sam. xv. 36; 2 Sam. xii. 23;) and of the vintage. (Judg. ix. 27.) Feasts were generally held towards evening; (Matt. viii. 12; xxii. 13; xxv. 30;) the guests were invited to the feast by the servant; (Matt. xxii. 4;) were anointed with oil; (Ps. xxiii. 5; xiv. 7; Am. vi. 6; Luke vii. 38, 39;) appeared in becoming garments; (Eccl. x. 8; Matt. xxii. 11;) and were seated or reclined according to rank or consequent precedence. (Prov. xxv. 7; Luke xiv. 8, 9.) Jests, riddles, music, singing, and dancing, were not excluded from feasts. (Judg. xiv. 12; Prov. iv. 2—5; Isa. v. 11, 12; xxiv. 7—9; Am. vi. 4—7; Luke xv. 25.) Sometimes drinking at feasts was carried to great excess; and was continued from evening until morning. Such riotous meetings are condemned. (Isa. lvii. 12; Rom. xiii. 13; Gal. v. 21; 1 Pet. iv. 3.) The “governor” or “ruler of the feast” was generally a domestic, appointed to direct or superintend the preparations for, and management of, a feast. (John ii. 3, 9.) On these matters our Lord gave no new commandment, but simply expounded the ancient law: “When thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind; and thou shalt be blessed.” (Luke xiv. 13,
The Hebrews also had sacrificial feasts, held at the holy place, which were rendered sacred by being connected with religion; (Deut. xii. 5—7; 1 Sam. ix. 12, 13; xvi. 3—5; 2 Sam. vi. 19;) as the annual feast at the second tithe; (Deut. xii. 17; xiv. 22—27;) the feast of the second sort of firstfruits; (Deut. xii. 12—18; xvi. 11—14;) the feast at the tithe of the increase, at the termination of three years; (Deut. xiv. 25; 29; xvi. 12;) and at the feast of Pentecost. (Deut. xvi. 11.) The Hebrews were forbidden to have anything to do with idolatrous festivals. (Ex. xxxiv. 15; 1 Cor. x. 28.) The kingdom of the Messiah is represented under the image or symbol of a feast. (Matt. xxii. 1—14.) The words joy, rejoice, feast, and feasting, are often used as interchangeable terms. (Ps. lxviii. 4; Est. iv. 18; 19; Matt. xv. 21, 23.)

As the term “feast” is now, with us, generally applied to hospitable entertainments, the term festival, would better designate the Hebrew religious institutions, recurring at stated intervals. The festivals were attended with particular duties and ceremonies, by the observance of which some great event in God’s providence was brought into remembrance:—such were the Sabbath, Passover, or feast of Unleavened Bread; Pentecost, or feast of Weeks, or of Harvest; Tabernacles, or feast of Ingathering; Day of Atonement, New Moon; Trumpets; Fallow, Release, or Sabbath Year; Jubilee, Purim; and the Dedication. Three times in the year—at the Three great Festivals of the Passover, Pentecost, and Tabernacles—all the males were to appear before Jehovah, at the place which he should choose. (Ex. xxxiv. 22, 24; Deut. xvi. 18.) So large a concourse of people was also calculated to give greater solemnity to these festivals; and as no Hebrew was to come empty handed, but every one was to give according as Jehovah had blessed him; and there before Jehovah was every one to rejoice with his family, the Levite, the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow, ample provision was thus made for the ministers of the sanctuary, and all the people. (Ex. xxxiii. 14—17; xxxiv. 22—24; Deut. xvi. 18, 17.) Perhaps, it was impossible for every male to attend the sanctuary thrice within seven months; but whoever neglected, without absolute necessity, subjected himself to extirpation from among the people. (Num. ix. 13; John vii. 18.)

Or, as Dr. Palfrey supposes, “a man might well be said to have virtually executed this duty, who appeared before the Lord (not in person, but) with his offering, sent by the hand of a friend, as a suitor is said in our common speech to appear in a court of justice, when he is represented there by his attorney.” It does not appear that the women were prevented attending the festivals, if they chose. (1 Sam. iii. 7.) These festivals would not only give the people an opportunity of renewing the acquaintance, correspondence, and friendship of their tribes and families from various parts; but they would render them familiar with the law of Jehovah, and thus tend to keep them under the influence of religion, and by the majesty of that service instituted among them, which abounded in mystical symbols or types of evangelical things, would keep alive the expectation of the Messiah, and his more perfect dispensation.

FEASTS OF CHARITY. The origin of the αὐγάστας = “love-feast,” or “feast of charity,” in the ancient churches, has never yet been satisfactorily explained, and is not fully known. The only passage in the new Testament where this custom is supposed to be named, is Jude, 12.—“There are spots in your feasts of charity.” With this passage some critics compare 2 Peter ii. 13.—“Spots are they and blemishes, living luxuriously in their deceivings,” where they propose to read αὐγάστας = “love-feasts,” instead of ἀποτασίς = “deceivings.” The difference in the Greek word being only in one letter. But others, on equal ground, propose to change αὐγάστας = “love-feasts,” in Jude, into ἀποτασίς = “deceivings,” as in Peter. The evidence of manuscripts is pretty nearly alike on both sides. The two passages evidently refer to the same class of persons; and it is not improbable that the original reading was the same in both Epistles. The internal evidence would seem to favour the reading _apostolos_ = "deceivers" in both passages; and if so, the _agape_ are not mentioned directly in the new Testament. Notwithstanding the obscurity which rests upon the origin of the _agapes_, many eminent scholars think that they were celebrated conjointly with the Lord's supper, in the earliest period of the Christian church; and that both were signified by the several phrases "breaking of bread," "to break bread," "their meat," and "serve tables." (Acts ii. 42, 46; vi. 2; xx. 7.) And it is not improbable that the _agapes_ originated simply in the circumstances of our Lord's last supper with His disciples; and that they were in imitation of the Jewish passover meal, which followed the eating of the passover proper, but preceded the institution of the Lord's supper at its first celebration by Christ and His disciples. However, a festive meal, like the _agape_, furnished by each member of the church according to his ability, and taken on such a religious occasion, would naturally present many temptations, and give rise to irregularities of several kinds, especially in the Gentile churches, who were strangers to Jewish laws and customs. Hence, even in Paul's day, the church at Corinth had begun to degenerate and to become prone to sensual indulgence, in the abuse of the festive meal. (1 Cor. xi. 20—22.) On these occasions great inequality seems to have been manifested between the members of the church; the more wealthy eating sumptuously and drinking freely, while the poor were left hungry and destitute. Hence the Apostle complains of the incivility manifested at the festive meal. "Each takes beforehand—before the proper time—his own supper; and one is hungry, but another drinks freely: have ye not houses to eat and to drink in?" Hence Paul scarcely seems to approve of the _agape_; but if it must be allowed and practised, he insists that it shall be taken at a proper time and place, and be so regulated as not to give rise to the evils of which he complains. Such a festive meal, in which one was "filled," and another "hungry," was an unpromising preparation for the Lord's supper,—an ordinance which above all others, ought to be celebrated with the spirit of humility and brotherly love. The inconvenience and indecencies of which Paul complained, were soon felt by other churches; which caused them to postpone the _agapes_ to the Lord's supper, so that the communicants might approach the table of the Lord in a fasting and sober state. And afterwards it was determined, in consequence of irregularities, that the president should deliver to each guest his portion separately. Even this was insufficient to forestall the mischiefs that might so easily arise. Clement of Alexandria, and others, complain much of the irregularities occasioned by the festive meal. Nor were heathen writers backward in making it a subject of calumny and misrepresentation. The general conduct of the Christians, however, was successfully vindicated by Tertullian and others. But real disorders having afterwards arisen, and having proceeded to considerable lengths, it became necessary to abolish the practice altogether. The Council of Laodicea, a.d. 364, enacted that "the _agapes_ should not be celebrated in churches"—a prohibition which was repeated by the third Council of Carthage in the year 397. In the same manner decided the second Council of Orleans, a.d. 533; the Trullan Council at Constantinople, a.d. 692; and the Council of Aix-la-Chapelle, a.d. 788. By the efforts of Gregory of Neocaesarea, Chrysostom, and others, a custom was generally established of holding the _agapes_ only under trees, or some other shelter in the neighborhood of the churches; and from that time the clergy and other principal members of the church were recommended to withdraw from them altogether. But, of course, by such a measure, they soon lost their good reputation, and gradually went into disgrace.

The agapes, or love-feasts, are still celebrated by the Hindo-Syrian Christians on the coast of Malabar. And the Moravians, the Methodists, and some others, have revived the custom in the West, yet it is partial only, and with strenuous caution against the ancient abuses.

FEET. To wash the feet of strangers coming off a journey, as they generally travel barefoot, or wear sandals only, is still considered a necessary part of Eastern hospitality. (Gen. xvii. 4; 1 Sam. xcv. 41; Luke vii. 44; John xiii. 5-14.) It is considered disrespectful to enter a room without taking off the outer covering of the feet. It is equivalent to uncovering the head in Europe. It was likewise a mark of homage. (Ex. iii. 8.) The ancient Egyptian priests officiated barefoot; and, it would appear, from the frequent washings of the feet enjoined by the law, that the Hebrew priests served in the tabernacle with their feet naked, as they did afterwards in the temple. "To be under any one's feet," denotes subjection; in allusion to conquerors setting their feet upon the neck or body of the chiefs whom they had vanquished. (Josh. vi. 4; 2 Sam. xx. 35; Ps. viii. 6; xvii. 4; xlvii. 4; 1 Cor. xv. 25; Heb. ii. 8.) This custom is frequently figured on the monuments of Egypt and Assyria. So "to be at the feet of any one," is used for being at the service of any one, (Ex. vi. 8,) following him, (Judg. iv. 10; 1 Sam. xcv. 42,) or of willingly receiving his instructions. (Deut. xxxiii. 3; Luke x. 39; Acts xii. 3.) "To set one's foot" in a place signifies to take possession of it; (Deut. i. 36; ii. 5; xi. 24; 1 Sam. xiv. 13; Ezek. xxxiii. 7;) and "to fall at the feet" of any one is to render homage. (1 Sam. xcv. 24; 2 Kings iv. 37; Est. viii. 3.) "Lameness of the feet" or "halting" generally, denotes affliction or calamity; (Ps. xcv. 15; xxxvii. 19; Jer. x. 10; Mic. iv. 8;) and being "feet to the lame" is affording assistance to the miserable and helpless. (Job. xxxix. 16.) The Hebrews frequently used the word "feet" to express the parts and the acts which modesty forbids to name. Hence such phrases as "from between his feet," from his seed or offspring; (Gen. xxix. 18;) "from between her feet," from her womb; (Deut. xxvii. 57, margin;) "hair of the feet," i.e. of the pudenda; (Isa. vii. 20;) "water of the feet," urine. (Isa. xxxvi. 12.) The phrase "to cover the feet," (Judg. iii. 24; 1 Sam. xcv. 5;) does not mean to lie down for sleep, but is an euphemism for to ease oneself, to satisfy a call of nature. (Judg. iii. 24, margin; Jos. xvi. 13.)

FELIX = fortunatus. The Roman procurator of Judea, about A. D. 51—53, after Cumanus and before Festus. He was a freedman of the emperor Claudius. He first married Drusilla, a grand-daughter or niece of Antony and Cleopatra, and afterwards another Drusilla, the daughter of Herod Agrippa I., whom he persuaded to leave her husband and marry him. By this marriage Felix had a son who perished with his mother in an eruption of Mount Vesuvius. Seutonius calls him the husband of three queens or royal ladies. (Seut. Claud. 23.) His administration in Judea was cruel and vindictive; and Tacitus says of him: "he exercised regal power with the disposition of a slave." (Hist. v. 9.) He was recalled by Nero, and escaped punishment only through the influence of his brother Pallas. Paul being brought to Caesarea, Felix treated him leniently, hoping he would procure his liberty by a bribe. Paul was summoned to appear before Felix, that he, and Drusilla who was a Jewess, might hear from him some account of the Christian religion. The Apostle discoursed concerning "righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come," so that Felix was alarmed in view of his own sins, and of their impending punishment. It would appear, however, that the impression was merely transient; for he kept the Apostle in custody two years without any warrant... or just cause, and postponed the inquiry respecting his own salvation, until a more convenient season. (Acts xxiii. 24, 26; xxiv. 3, 22–27; xxv. 14.)—See DORCILLA.

FELLOWSHIP.—See COMMUNION.
FENCED CITIES.—See CITY.

FERRET. The Hebrew wordmasteka rendered "ferret," (Lev. xi. 30,) denotes a species of reptile, probably of the lizard genus, having its name from its moosmg cry. (Lev. xi. 30, The Septuagint and Vulgate render it the same avuncus—"shrew-mouse." Some understand the lacerta gecko, a lizard of a reddish gray, spotted with brown, to be intended. It is found in the countries bordering the Mediterranean, and emits an odd sound, especially in the night, from its throat, not unlike that of a frog.

FERRY-BOAT. This may have been a raft or float, if not some kind of boat, used for crossing the Jordan. (2 Sam. xix. 18.) The Hebrews were undoubtedly acquainted with the float used in crossing the Nile. They were bundles of reeds floated by calabashes or earthen pitchers. These may have been the boats made of papyrus. (Isa. xviii. 2.) So also the boats used on the Euphrates and the Tigris, were constructed with reeds and willow, thickly coated with bitumen, or a covering of skin.

FESTUS = festive. The Roman procurator of Judea, about A.D. 58–62; sent by Nero to supersede Felix. To please the Jews, Felix, when recalled to Rome, left Paul in prison at Cesarea. (Acts xxiv. 27.) When Festus arrived, he heard the Apostle on the charges alleged against him by the Jews. But in the exercise of his right as a Roman citizen Paul appealed unto Caesar, and was accordingly sent to Rome for trial. Festus died in Judea, A.D. 63; and was succeeded by Albinus. (Acts xxv. 1–24; xxvi. 24–32; Jos. Wars ii. xiv. 1.)

FEVER. The Hebrew word haddakath signifies a burning fever; (Lev. xxvi. 18; Deut. xxviii. 22;) in the Septuagint and the new Testament it is termed πυρετος = a fiery-heat, a fever. (Deut. xxviii. 22; Matt. viii. 15; Mark i. 31; Luke iv. 38; John iv. 53; Acts xxviii. 8.) We have no means of determining what kind of fever is to be understood; but we know that hectic, pestilential, and tertian fevers are prevalent in the East.

FIG-TREE. This tree is common in Palestine and the East, and flourishes with the greatest luxuriance, spontaneously in the open country. (Deut. viii. 8; Num. xiii. 23.) It has a smooth stem, which is seldom quite straight; and is covered with a gray bark; the leaves are of the shape of a heart, with three or five lobes, and are indented; the upper side is rough, the lower is covered with fine hair. The fruit makes its appearance before the leaves, but not before the flowers or blossom which lies concealed within a hollow, fleshy receptacle. (Hab. iii. 17.) Travellers describe the shade of the fig-tree as very pleasant. To "sit under one's own vine and fig-tree," is a symbol of a quiet and happy life. (1 Kings iv. 25; Zech. iii. 10; Mic. iv. 4.) There are three descriptions of fruit, which the tree bears, almost throughout the whole year, but at different periods: 1. The early fig is fully ripe about the middle or end of June; and being the first kind of fruit in the year, was reckoned a great dainty. As soon as they are ripe, they fall off the tree. (Sol. Song ii. 13; Isa. xxviii. 4; Jer. xxiv. 2; Nah. iii. 12.) 2. The summer fig appears in August, when the last mentioned is ripe, and it ripens late in the autumn, when the tree has lost its foliage. In mild winters, fruit is found on the tree even in the month of January. This kind of fig is larger than the former, of an oblong shape and violet colour. Figs were not only eaten when fresh, but were preserved in great quantities both for home consumption and for exportation. There were two modes of preservation: either by pressing a number of figs so closely together that they formed one adhesive lump, or by pounding them into a mass of uniform consistence; and, in both cases, they were formed into round or square cakes; sometimes of the shape of bricks. (1 Sam. xxv. 18; xxx. 12; 2 Kings xx. 7; 1 Chron. xii. 40; Isa. xxxviii. 21.)

Dried figs seem to be denoted in 2 Sam. xvi. 1; Jer. xl. 10; Am. viii. 1, 2, by the term, “summer fruits.” That the fig-tree, clothed with foliage, but which bore no kind of fruit whatever, condemned by Christ as altogether useless, was intended to be an emblem of the Jewish nation, appears probable from the circumstance, that in another parable, (Luke xiii. 6—9,) He compares that people to a fig-tree, whose proprietor had for three years sought fruit from it in vain, and therefore gave orders to the gardener to cut it down, but at his earnest entreaty spared it yet another year. (Matt. xxi. 19; Mark xi. 12.)—See STOMACH.

FIGURE.—See TYPE.

FILE. The Hebrew word pisirah, rendered “file,” signifies dexterity, skill, etc.; hence the passage should read, “when the notches were in the edges of the plough-shares, and of the coulters, etc.” (1 Sam. xiii. 21.)

FINER. A worker in metals, a refiner, specially, of gold and silver; (Prov. xxv. 4;) a founder; (Judg. xviii. 4;) a goldsmith. (Isa. xlii. 7.) The ancient Egyptians carried the working of metals to an extraordinary degree of perfection; and there is no doubt that the Hebrews derived their knowledge of these arts from this source. The “fining pot,” was the crucible, in which the precious metals were smelted and purified with fire, and thus separated from the scoria. (Prov. xvii. 3; xxvii. 21.)

FINES. In some instances, by the Mosaic law, the amount of a fine, or of an indemnification that was to be made, was determined by the person who had been injured; in other instances it was fixed by the judge, and in others was defined by the law. (Ex. xxi. 19—30; Deut. xxii. 19—29.) Twofold, four-fold, and even five-fold restitution of things stolen, and restitution of property unjustly retained, with twenty per cent over and above, was required. Thus, if a man killed a beast, he was to make it good, beast for beast. (Lev. xxiv. 18.) If an ox pushed or gored another man’s servant to death, his owner was bound to pay for the servant thirty-shekels of silver. (Ex. xxi. 32.) In the case of one man’s ox pushing or goring another’s to death, the living ox was sold, and the price, together with the dead one, equally divided between both owners. (Ex. xxi. 35.) If, however, the ox had previously been notorious for pushing, and the owner had not taken care to confine him, he was obliged to give another to the man whose ox had been gored, and the dead ox he got himself. (Ex. xxi. 36.) If a man let a pit belonging to him remain open, and another man’s beast fell into it, the owner of the pit was obliged to pay for the beast, and had it for the payment. (Ex. xxi. 33, 34.) When a fire was kindled in the fields, and did any damage, he who kindled it was obliged to make the damage good. (Ex. xxii. 6.)

FINGER. The “finger of God” signifies the manifestation of His power. The Egyptian magicians, terrified by the numerous plagues inflicted upon their country, at length said, “This is the finger of God.” (Ex. viii. 19.) The tables of the law were written by the “finger of God.” (Ex. xxxi. 18.) The heavens are said to be the work of “God’s fingers.” (Ps. viii. 3.) And Christ cast out devils with “the finger” or power of God. (Luke x. 20.) To “put forth the finger,” is a bantering insulting gesture. (Isa. lxviii. 9.) “Four fingers thick,” equivalent to the handbreadth, occurs as a measure, in Jer. iii. 21.

FIR-TREE.—See CYPRESS.

FIRE. The Hebrews were not allowed to kindle a fire on the Sabbath for the purpose of cooking victuals. (Ex. xxvi. 28; xxxiii. 3.) But it does not appear that the use of fire for warmth, on the Sabbath-day, was included in this interdiction. Fire fell from heaven to consume the victims sacrificed to Jehovah, and was an indication of His approbation. (Gen. iv. 4;
Lev. ix. 24; Judg. xiii. 19, 20; 2 Chron. vii. 1; 1 Kings xviii. 38. The fire which descended from heaven upon the altar, in the tabernacle, and also upon that in the temple, was constantly fed and preserved by the priests, and was regarded as celestial or hollowed fire. In the sacred oral services no fire but that of the altar of burnt offerings could lawfully be used. (Lev. x. 8; Num. iii. 4, 26, 61; Isa. xxxi. 9.) We have no account of any supernatural fire being kindled for the second temple. The “fire of the Lord,” or “from heaven,” also denotes lightning. (1 Kings xviii. 38; 2 Kings i. 10, 12, 14; Job i. 16; Ex. ix. 23.) Fire is often used as the symbol of the presence of Jehovah. (Gen. iii. 24; Ex. iii. 2; xix. 18; Isa. vi. 4; Ezek. i. 4; Rev. i. 14; Dan. vii. 10.) He not only accepts the homage of his people; (Isa. iv. 4, 5; Heb. xii. 29;) but consumes in His anger those who reject His grace and mercy. (Deut. xxxii. 22; Isa. x. 17; Jer. iv. 4; Ezek. xxii. 21; 2 Thess. i. 8.) The enlightening and sanctifying influences of the Holy Spirit are compared to fire. (Isa. iv. 4, 5; Matt. iii. 11; Acts ii. 3.) The words of God are said to operate like fire. (Jer. v. 14; xxiii. 29; Isa. vi. 6; Hab. iii. 5.) Severe trials, afflictions, and persecutions, are symbolized by fire; (Ps. lxxvi. 12; Isa. xlii. 25; lxvi. 15, 16; Ezek. xxii. 20; Zech. xiii. 9; Luke xii. 49; 1 Cor. iii. 13, 15; 1 Pet. i. 7; iv. 12;) so also war and destruction. (Num. xxix. 28; Judg. ix. 15, 20; Isa. vii. 4; I. 11; i. 31; xxx. 30; Job xv. 34.) The eternal punishments, of the wicked in hell, are symbolized by fire that shall never be extinguished. (Matt. v. 22; xxv. 41; Mark iv. 43, 44; Luke xvi. 28, 24; Rev. xiv. 10, 11; xxi. 8.)

FIREPAN.—See CEMEM.

FIRKIN. The Greek word στρες, rendered “firkin,” signifies a measure for liquids, equivalent to nearly nine English gallons. (John ii. 6.)

FIRMAMENT. The Hebrew word דבש signifies a solid expanse, the firmament of heaven; (Gen. i. 6—20; Ps. xix. 1;) above which was the throne of Jehovah. (Ezek. i. 22—26; x. 1.) The Hebrews speak of the firmament as being spread out like a hemispheric arch over the earth; (Ex. xxiv. 10; Dan. xii. 3;) in it were fixed the stars; (Gen. i. 14—17;) and above it was the celestial ocean, whence rain descended upon the earth. (Gen. i. 7; xii. 11; Ps. civ. 3; cxlviii. 4.) The true state of the case, that the firmament was a mere expanse, was not unknown to them. (Gen. ii. 6; Job xxxvi. 27, 28.)

FIRST-BORN. The first-born son among the Hebrews enjoyed special privileges above his brethren; (Deut. xvi. 15—17;) and enjoyed an authority over those who were younger. (Gen. xxv. 23; xxvii. 29; 2 Chron. xxi. 3.) The paternal blessing was in a peculiar sense the right of the first-born. Before the time of Moses, the privileges of birthright might be forfeited, or transferred to a younger child; (Gen. xxxi. 30—33; xxvii. 19—26; xlviii. 18, 19;) but the practice occasioned much contention, and a law was enacted overruling it. (Deut. xxi. 15—17.) The first-born received a double portion of the estate; (Gen. xlviii. 5—8; Deut. xxi. 17;) he was also the priest of the whole family; but the honour of exercising this office was transferred, by the command of God, from the tribe of Reuben, to whom it belonged by right of primogeniture, to that of Levi. (Num. iii. 12—18; viii. 18.) Hence the first-born of the other tribes were to be redeemed, at a valuation made by the priest not exceeding five shekels, from serving God in that capacity. (Num. xviii. 15, 16; Luke ii. 22.) In some of these privileges we perceive the peculiar force and appropriateness of the titles, “first-begotten,” “first-born” or heir, etc., given to the Divine Redeemer. (Ps. lxix. 27; Rom. viii. 29; Col. i. 15—18; Heb. i. 2—8; Rev. i. 5, 11.) The destruction of the first-born, by an epidemic, was the tenth and last plague inflicted on the Egyptians. (Ex. xi. 1—8; xii. 29, 30.) It must not be inferred that none of the first-born remained alive in the land, or that none besides the first-born died; since in every house there was not a first-born: "There was no house in which there was not one dead." (Ex. ix. 15.) Among the Hebrews, the firstling of every clean beast was offered at the sanctuary, not to be redeemed, but to be killed; an unclean beast, a horse, an ass, or a camel, was either redeemed or exchanged; an ass was redeemed by a lamb or five shekels; if not redeemed, it was killed. The redemption money became part of the sacred revenue. (Ex. xiii. 2, 11—15; Num. iii. 12, 13; xviii. 15—17; Lev. xxvii. 26, 27; Deut. xxii. 13.)

FIRST-FRUITS. The Hebrews presented part of the fruits of the harvest, as an expression of submission, dependence, and thankfulness to Jehovah. The first sheaf of barley on the second day of the Passover, and the first loaves on the feast of the Pentecost, were offered as a heave offering, in the name of the people. But individuals also were bound to offer the first-fruits of the vine, of fruit trees, and of their grain, honey, and wool; by means of which offerings the exhibited that gratitude which was due to Jehovah, for the country he had given them. The offerings thus made became the property of the priests. (Ex. xxiii. 19; Lev. ii. 12; xix. 23, 24; xxii. 10, 17; Num. xv. 17—21; xxiii. 10, 18; Deut. xvii. 4; xxvi. 1—11.) It appears from Deut. xvi. 1—11, that what was denominated the "second first-fruits" were appropriated to the sanctuary, and were consumed in the feasts which were made from them. Accordingly every Hebrew was commanded when he brought his basket to the tabernacle or the temple, to set it down before the altar, and return thanks with a loud voice to Jehovah, who had given to his undeserving countrymen so rich an inheritance. The "first-fruits of the Spirit" are the earnest, the pledge of future and still higher gifts. (Rom. viii. 23.)

FIS. The Hebrews had few names, if any, for particular fishes. (Gen. ix. 2; Num. xi. 22; Jon. ii. 1, 10; Matt. vii. 10; xiv. 17; xvi. 34; Luke v. 6; John xxi. 6; viii. 11.) In the Mosaic law, the species proper for food, are distinguished by having scales and fins, whether living in rivers, lakes, or seas; while those without scales and fins are held to be unclean. (Lev. xi. 9—12; Num. xvi. 4.) The Hebrews would undoubtedly be acquainted with several species of fish, found in the seas, rivers, and lakes, bordering the Promised Land. The following have been noticed by recent naturalists and travellers:—

Mediterranean Sea.—Several species of Sargus or Sheephead, Perch, Merrow, Gurnard, Mackeral, Scad, Ray, Pilot-fish, Parrot-fish, Flying-fish, Sea-Camel, Sea-Mullet, Sturgeon, Dolphin, Sea-devil, Pike, Cat or Sheat-fish, Serran, Blonde, Saw-fish, Cod, Herrings, Shad, Flat-fish, Rock-fish, Sharks, and great Sea-bream; also Cetaceans or the Whale tribe, are found in this sea. Also Oysters, Oniussa, Pinna murex, Craw-fish, Cuttle-fish, and the Murex, which furnished the celebrated Tyrian purple, are found upon some parts of the coast. The Running Crab, abounds on the coasts about Egypt and Syria.

Red Sea.—Porpoises, Sharks, the Tuna, which is a species of Halicoes, Cat or Sheat-fish, Barbore, Leaping Caranx, Perch, Merrow, Pilot-fish, Sea-Mullet, Sea-devil, Bony; a species of Cod, called Leech; and a species of fish resembling a Turbot, are found in this sea. Several species of shell-animals, and diminutive Crabs, abound upon the sands.

Lakes of Tiberias.—A great number of edible fishes, of several species, including several sorts of Carp or Binyu, the Karmut, Haffefi, Perch, an flat-fish called Meah, and a fish called Abou Sooka, are found in this lake. Some of the same species of fish are met with here, as in the Nile. The fishes found in the Jordan are mainly the same as are found in the Lakes Merom and Tiberias. The streams, Sheriat el Mandian, or Yarmuk, and the Zurka, which flow into the Jordan, are full of fish, in general small, but of excellent flavour. In a small lake near the castle Mezereh, there is an abundance of fish, not inferior in beauty to our gold and silver fishes. It also abounds with Carp, and a species called Emshatt. The fisheries of the Lakes Merom and Tiberias are usually farmed out by the government.

Euphrates, and Tigir.—Among the more remarkable species in the waters of Syria and Mesopotamia, are the Aleppo eel, Black-fish, Binny, and several others; the Carp is the most common fish of Upper Euphrates and of the pond of Abraham at Urfa. In the Lake of Antioch, Aleppo eel, Carp, and Black Fish are found. Trout are common in Taurus. Among the species noticed in the small river Kowick, are the Loche, Binny, Barbel, Chub, Carp, the Aleppo eel, and several others. A species of Crab is found in the rivers of Syria, which is esteemed one of the greatest delicacies of the table. It strays from the river, and feeds upon the ripe fruit scattered upon the ground.

Nile.—Of fishes found in the Nile are the Herring; also the Nile Salmon, one of which has been known to weigh a hundred pounds. Several species of Mormyrus are common to the Nile and the Lake of Tiberias. Perch, Mullet, Bala, Shad, and Bokir, also inhabit the waters of Egypt; besides a fish called Ystrosodon, to eat of which, it is said, causes instant death. The right of fishing on the canals and lakes of Egypt is annually farmed out by the government to certain individuals, who pay large sums for the privilege. The fishermen of Egypt and Tyre are frequently alluded to in the Scripture. (Is. xix. 8—10; Ezek. xxvi. 5; xxix. 4, 5; lvii. 10; Neh. xiii. 16.) And, from the ancient monuments, it appears that there is no mode of fishing now in use, which was not known and practised by those ancient nations. (Jer. xvi. 16; Job xli. 2—7; Ezek. xxix. 4; Amos iv. 2.) The art of curing fish, also, was well understood in Egypt, and unquestionably in Phenicia. The Hebrew words dag gadal, rendered "great fish," (Jon. i. 17,) and the Greek ichtyos, rendered "whale," (Matt. xii. 40,) signify any large fish, or huge sea monster. Petrified fishes and shells abound in the calcareous strata, in several parts of Syria and Palestine.

FISH GATE.—See GATE.

FITHESES. The Hebrew word kusseth, rendered "fitches," probably denotes rese or spelt. (Exod. iv. 9.) The word kusseth, also rendered "fitches," denotes the nigella or melanthium, the funnel-flower, or black comun. (Is. xxviii. 25, 27.) This plant reaches the height of a cubit, has narrow leaves like the funnel and a blue flower. The seed is black, but of a pleasant smell, and of a sharp taste, not unlike pepper. The Hebrews seem to have used it for the seasoning of food; they cultivated it like comun in ploughed fields.

FLAG. The word kabis rendered "meadow," (Gen. xlii. 2, 18,) and "flag," (Job viii. 11,) is an Egyptian word, signifying marsh-grass, reeds, bulrushes, sedge, everything green which grows in wet grounds. (Gen. xlii. 18; Is. xix. 7; Ezek. xli. 16.) The Hebrew word suph, rendered "flag," (Ex. ii. 3, 5; xix. 6,) and "weed," (Jon. ii. 5,) signifies rush, reed, sedge, or perhaps alga or sea-seed. (Jon. ii. 5.) Hence yam suph = sea of sedge, i.e. the Arabian Gulf or Red sea, which abounds in seaweed. (Ex. x. 19; xiii. 18; xv. 4; Num. xiv. 25; Deut. i. 40; Ps. cxx. 7, 9, 22; xxxvi. 13.) In Ex. ii. 3, 5; Is. xix. 6, suph denotes the rush, bulrush, growing in the Nile. The Hebrew word agmon denotes a reed or rush, growing in the marshes. (Job xlii. 2; Is. x. 14; xix. 15; lviii. 5; Jer. li. 32.) The rush belongs to the family of cyperaces or reed-grasses; but the reed to the family of grasses.—See Reed.

FLAGON. The Hebrew word satch, rendered "flagon," does not signify a vessel or measure, but properly a pressed or compacted cake of dried grapes or raisins. (2 Sam. vi. 19; 1 Chron. xvi. 3; Hos. iii. 1; Sol. Song. ii. 5.) They differed from dry grapes or raisins not pressed into the form of cakes; (1 Sam. xxv. 18;) and also from figs pressed into cakes. In Isa. xxii. 24, the Hebrew words קֵסֶב אָבֶנָה, rendered "vessels of flagons," in the margin, "instruments of viols," properly signify "vessels of bottles."

FLAX. The Hebrew word פֶּטֶחַ is properly rendered "flax." In the earliest ages, flax was one of the most important objects of agriculture and trade in Egypt, and is so still. (Ex. ix. 31; Isa. ix. 19.) Not only the harvest of this plant, but its manufacture, is represented on the ancient tombs of Egypt; and the spinning of flax appears to have employed, in that country, whole communities. The "fine linen manufactured from it was used by the Egyptians as an article of dress, and also for enveloping the dead after embalming. Fine cotton was also much used for the same purpose. Flax was cultivated in Palestine, even before the Hebrews conquered the country. (Josh. ii. 5.) The spinning of flax and cotton was anciently the labour of the most noble ladies. (Prov. xxxi. 13—24; Hos. ii. 5—9.) Lines and cords were often made of flax. (Judg. xv. 19, 14; Ezek. xl. 3.) "Tow" is mentioned in Judg. xvi. 9; Isa. i. 31. The word "tow," in Isa. xiii. 17, designates the "wick" of a taper or lamp. The gentleness of Messiah's reign is referred to: "The bruised reed He will not break, and the smoking flax He will not quench." (Isa. xi. 3; Matt. xii. 20.) He will not extinguish the faint and almost expiring light; He will not add to their sorrows; but will speak peace and comfort to the oppressed, and strengthen the faith of the wavering.

FLEA. This insect, in the East, is often used as a popular emblem for insignificance. David, in his address to Saul, (1 Sam. xxiv. 14; xxvi. 20,) likens himself to a "single flea," importing, that while it cost Saul much pains to catch him, he would obtain very little advantage from it. Owing to the habits of the lower orders, fleas abound so profusely in Syria, especially during the spring, in the streets, and dusty bazaars, that persons of condition always change their long dresses upon returning home.

FLESH. This term is of extensive application in the Scriptures. It is applied to the whole animal creation. (Gen. vi. 13, 17, 19; vii. 15, 16, 21; viii. 17.) To the human race, mankind. (Gen. vi. 12; Isa. xl. 5, 6; Luke iii. 6; John xvii. 2; 1 Pet. i. 24; Rom. iii. 20; Heb. ii. 14.) "Flesh," or the body, as distinguished from "soul," or "spirit." (Job xxvi. 28; John vi. 52; Col. ii. 5; 1 Pet. iv. 6.) It denotes the incarnation of Christ. (John i. 14; 1 Tim. iii. 16; Heb. v. 7; 1 John iv. 2, 3.) "Flesh" is also used for the secret parts; (Gen. xvii. 11; Ex. xxviii. 43; Lev. xv. 2, 3, 7, 15, 19; Ezek. xxiii. 30; 2 Pet. ii. 10; Jude 7; Prov. v. 11;) and for the rite of circumcision. (Gen. xvii. 11; Rom. ii. 28; 2 Cor. xi. 18; Gal. iii. 3; Eph. ii. 1.) The term "flesh" also denotes the carnal nature, the appetites and propensities, which, in the unregenerate, enslave the intellect, and keep the spirit in condemnation. (Rom. vii. 5; viii. 1, 4, 5, 6; Gal. v. 16, 17; Eph. ii. 3.)

FLIES. The insect designated by the Hebrew term שְׁבָע, which constituted the fourth plague, which fell upon the Egyptians, is supposed to have been a species of gad-fly, exceedingly troublesome to man and beast, and so called from its sucking the blood. (Ex. vii. 17—23; Ps. lxxvii. 43; Rev. xvi. 13.) The most numerous and troublesome insects in Egypt are the flies; their pertinacity weary the most patient. Mrs. Foote observes: "As to the vermin of Egypt, I really think that the flies occasion the greatest annoyance, so abundant are they, and so distressing." The miracle involved in the plague of flies may, probably, have consisted, partly at least, in the insects being brought against the Egyptians in so great an abundance during winter. The Hebrew word שְׁבָע is probably the general word for "fly." Some think a particular fly is to be understood by the "shebab;" and in Isa. vii. 18, they refer it to the large and troublesome Ethiopian fly, called sibab by the Arabs, seen by Bruce and other travellers in the vicinity of the Red sea and the Nile. In Ecol. x. 1, it is said, “venomous, or deadly, flies cause the apothecary’s ointment to stink.” As a fly, though a diminutive creature, can stain and corrupt much precious perfume; so a small mixture of folly and indigitation will tarnish the reputation of one who, in other respects, is very wise and honourable; and so much the more, because of the malignity and ingratitude of mankind, who are disposed rather to censure one error, than to commend many excellencies.
FLI

FLINT. The Hebrew word kallah-mash, rendered “flint,” in Dent. viii. 15; xxxii. 13; Job xxxii. 9; Ps. cxxiv. 8; Lam. i. 7, seems to denote a particular kind of rock, probably flint, silex, or any hard stone, granitae. The Hebrew word kallah is rendered “sharp stone;” (Ex. iv. 25;) and “flint” (Isa. v. 28; Ezek. iii. 29.) Flints abound in nearly all the plains and valleys through which the Hebrews wandered. In the northward desert, low hills of chalk occur, as well as frequent tracts of chalky soil, for the most part covered with black flints. Chalk abounds in many parts of Palestine; and here, of course, as elsewhere, chalk and flint occur in constant confection. The flinty nodules are, however, not confined to the chalky tracts, but appear also in the sandy plains and valleys.

FLOCKS. See Folds.

FLOOD. The narrative of this terrible event—which occurred about 1656 years after the creation of Adam,—was probably written by Noah or Shem, is fully given, in the venerable records incorporated by Moses, in the book of Genesis. (Gen. vi. 11—viii. 14.) The general belief which has prevailed, and is found in the traditional history of every region, respecting the deluge, so carefully described in the inspired narrative, is very remarkable. And the very fact, that every nation tells its own story about it, conformably to the peculiarities which distinguish its annals, sufficiently attests that it must have been derived from one and the same locality, the seat of the family of Noah, the cradle of the human race, before the nations “were scattered and peopled,” when their language and their name were one. But it will be observed, that between the universality of historical tradition, and a geographical uni versality of the deluge itself, there is no necessary connection. Indeed the terms of the inspired narrative scarcely oblige us to understand a deluge simultaneous and universal for every part of the earth’s surface. It is well known, that in the Scriptures, such universal terms as “all” and “every,” are often used to signify only a very large amount in number or quantity; and that the term “earth” is frequently used for the inhabitants of the earth, or of a country: (Gen. xiv. 31, xli. 56, 57; Ex. ix. 6, 9, 19, 22, 25; x. 15; Deut. ii. 25; Acts ii. 5; Col. i. 23;) whence it seems reasonable to infer that the universal terms in Gen. vi. 17, have their proper reference to mankind, “the world of the ungodly.” (2 Pet. ii. 5,) the subjects of guilt, whose flagitious character cried for a condign manifestation of Jehovah’s displeasure. If so much of the earth’s surface was overflowed as was occupied by the human race, both the physical and the moral ills of that awful visitation were fully answered. Those who maintain that the deluge was universal in extent, consider, that not only the bones and shells, and other entombed organic remains, chiefly of extinct species, but that nearly all the superficial drift, consisting of sand, gravel, bowlders; and even the depositions, the fractures, the diallocations, the denudations, the transport of materials, and the entire formation of strata,—of several miles in thickness,—were the effects of one and the same cause, the waters of the deluge during the period of three hundred and eighty days! But these remarkable appearances on and beneath the surface of the earth, are immensely more remote than the deluge of Noah or even the creation of man. They yield evidences of repeated paroxysms of internal energy, accompanied by the elevation of mountain-chains, and followed by mighty waves desolating whole regions of the earth; but yet limited and marked with characters of independent action and diversity of time. No certain traces have yet been found of any great diluvian catastrophe which we can affirm to have occurred within the period that man has been a sojourner on the surface of the earth. The rise and fall of the waters of the Noachian deluge noticed in sacred history, are described to have been gradual, and of short duration, so that they would have produced comparatively little change on the surface of the country they overflowed. And should there be any physical monuments of the transient flood still in existence, their traces can no longer be distinguished from other disturbances, which have occurred at different eras of time, and at great respective distances, on the crust of the earth. Indeed accurate geological investigation has shown, that there never was a period, since any vestiges occur of the existence of organized creatures, when the earth did not possess a varied face; partly dry land with its vegetable and animal occupants, and partly the wide domain of waters possessing their numerous inhabitants. It thus appears that the Noachian deluge was limited in extent, and confined to the region inhabited by man. And in the awful catastrophe, the sacred narrative informs us, "the fountains of the great deep were broken up, and the windows of heaven were opened," i.e. "the ocean overflowed, while the rain descended in vast quantities;" implying that natural forces, miraculously summoned into action, produced the deluge. The seat of the antediluvian population was undoubtedly in western Asia. In this region, Dr. J. F. Smith, observes, "a large district—the site of Mesopotamia and Persia, and part of Afghanistan and Turkestan, taken generally—even in the present day, lies considerably below the level of the sea. It must not be forgotten that six weeks of continued rain would not give an amount of water forty-times that which fell on the first or a subsequent day; for evaporation would be continually carrying up the water, to be condensed and to fall again: so that the same mass of water would return many times. If, then, in addition to the tremendous rain, we suppose an elevation of the Persian and Indian seas, or a subsidence of the inhabited land toward the south, we shall have sufficient causes, in the hand of almighty justice, for submerging the district, covering its hills, and destroying all living beings within its limits, except those whom divine mercy preserved in the ark. The draining off of the waters would be effected, by a return of the bed of the sea to a lower level, or by the elevation of some tracts of land, which would leave channels and slopes for the larger part of the water to flow back into the Indian ocean, while the lower part remained a great lake, or an inland sea, the Caspian. This is not the only mode in which an elevation of a vast body of waters may be conceived as probable, and as adequate to the production of the effect. It is established by abundant evidence that, through a period geologically recent, a district lying immediately north of the primeval seat of mankind, was occupied by an inland sea, more than equal in extent to the existing Mediterranean. The shores and basin of this ancient sea are incontrovertibly determined by littoral and marine remains. It is also certain that repeated elevations and subsidences of the region still further to the north have taken place. One such elevation, proceeding gradually for forty days, would throw southward such a body of water as would produce the effect described; and the cessation might leave the separate basins of the Aral, the Caspian, and the Euxine seas, in a state to be brought to their present form by the progress of evaporation and drying."—See ARK, AND ARABAT.

FLO

FLOOR.—See Threshing.

FLOUR.—See Mill.

FLOWERS. The Hebrew word sris, and the Greek othias, are the general terms for "flower." (Num. xxi. 8; Job xiv. 2; Ps. ciil. 15; Isa. xxvii. 1; xl. 6—8; 1 Kings vi. 18, 29, 32; James I. 10, 11; 1 Pet. i. 24.) The Hebrew words "nītzaḥ, (Gen. xli. 10; Job xv. 53; Is. xlvii. 5; Sol. Song ii. 12,) and "peret," (Ex. xxv. 38; xxvi. 17, 20; Num. viii. 4; xvi. 8; Is. v. 24; Nah. i. 4;) are also used for a flower, specially bloom. Flowers grow in great variety and abundance on the mountains and plains of Palestine. Travellers have noticed different species of anemone, ranunculus, crocus, tulip, narcissus, hyacinth, lily, violet, aster, pink, iris, spadix, daffodil, crownfoot, wind-flower, willow-herb, hyssop, dragon-wort, periwinkle, squill, the spiky veronica, white clover, jasmine, the henna plant; also the cistus, white or red, sometimes called the rose of Sharon; and a flower resembling the hollyhock, and several others, which, by their variety and multitude, perfume the air and yield a very lovely prospect. We have seen specimens of several of these beautiful flowers from Palestine. The pretty red flower of the nemen plant abounds on the mountains and in the valleys of Sinai.

FLUTE. The Chaldee word maślākitha, rendered "flute," signifies a pipe, syrinx. (Dan. iii. 6, 7, 10, 16.) This instrument may have had some resemblance to the Hebrew ḫaṭil, rendered "pipe," in 1 Sam. x. 5; Is. v. 12; xxx. 29; Jer. xlvii. 36; 1 Kings i. 40, margin, "flute." Both of them were made out of reed, and were not unlike the shawm. The Greek κοῦρος, rendered "pipe," had a general resemblance to the fagotet. (1 Cor. iv. 7; Rev. xviii. 22; Matt. ix. 23.)

FLUX. Another name for the dysentery. (Acts xxviii. 8.) Dr. Mead considers the disease of which king Je-horam died, to have been a severe dysentery. (2 Chron. xxvi. 16, 18, 19.)

FOLD. An uncovered enclosure, often made of hurdles, in which during the summer months the flocks are kept by night or at noon. They were usually divided into two parts, for the sheep and the goats. (Judg. v. 16.) They are also called "sheepfolds," or sheeppotes. (Num. xxxii. 16, 24, 36; 2 Sam. vii. 8; Zeph. ii. 6.) In the East it is common for shepherds to make use of ruined edifices to shelter their flocks. (Ezek. xxv. 5; Is. xiii. 19; xvii. 2; xxxii. 14.) The expression in Ps. lxviii. 13, "though ye have lien among the pots," would be better rendered, "though ye have lain among the folds;" spoken proverbially of shepherds and husbandmen living in leisure and quiet. In John x. 16, our Lord predicts the admission of the Gentiles to the Christian flock, and the joint participation of them and the Jews in all the blessings of the common salvation; "Other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold,—properly one flock, and one Shepherd."

FOOD. It is impossible to say from Scripture, whether the antediluvians used animal food or not; though some think it may be inferred from the early division of animals into clean and unclean. (Gen. vii. 2.) By the Divine instructions communicated to Noah, all that moved with life, and therefore, all orders of the animal kingdom were freely given as meat to the human race, to be used as freely as vegetable food; the blood alone being forbidden to be used. (Gen. ix. 3, 4.) But to the Hebrews a series of precepts were given by Jehovah, through Moses, as to what animals they should abstain from, and as to what they should use. (Lev. xi. 3—30; Deut. xiv. 4—21.) The food of the Hebrews consisted chiefly of bread, vegetables, fruits, green and preserved, honey, milk, curds, cream, butter, and cheese. (Gen. xxv. 30, 34; Num. xi. 4, 5; Ezek. xvi. 13.) Flesh was served up at festivals, or when a stranger was present. (Gen. xviii. 7; Deut. xv. 19, 20; Luke xv. 28.) The flesh of the "fatted calf," and of fatted oxen, were peculiarly esteemed; (Gen. xvi. 7; xlii. 2; 1 Sam. xvi. 20; xxviii. 24; 2 Sam. vi. 18;) also of the sheep and goat kind, particularly of lambs and kids. The animal was slain by the master of the family, and the cooking also was done by his wife. (Gen. xviii. 2—8; xxvii. 3, 4, 9, 10; Judg. vi. 19.) All the flesh of the slain animal, owing to the FOOL. This term, in the Scriptures, denotes a stupid or absurd person, whose conduct is not regulated by the dictates of reason and religion. (Ps. xiv. 1; 2 Sam. xiii. 13; Prov. xix. 1, 29; xx. 3; Matt. vii. 27; xxiii. 17; Rom. i. 22; 1 Cor. i. 27; iv. 10; xv. 36.) The phrase, "thou fool," in Matt. v. 22, implies not only an angry temper, by which such severe language is prompted, but a scornful, contemptuous feeling, which exposes the individual who is under its influence to eternal punishment.

FOOTMAN. The Hebrew word, refi, rendered “footman,” is used only in a military sense, signifying foot-soldier. (Ex. xii. 37; Num. xi. 31; Judg. xx. 2; 1 Sam. iv. 10; xv. 4; 2 Sam. x. 6; 1 Chron. xiv. 4; xix. 18; Jer. xii. 5.) The word raat, rendered “post,” (Job ix. 25; Jer. li. 31,) signifies a reader, courier, also a running footman, who ran before the chariot of a prince. (1 Sam. viii. 11; 2 Sam. xv. 1; 1 Kings i. 5.) Also the body-guard and royal messengers of the Hebrew kings; (1 Sam. xxii. 17; 2 Kings x. 25; xi. 6; 2 Chron. xii. 10, 11; xxiii. 12; xxx. 6; 10;) probably the same who are called “Pelethites.” (1 Kings i. 5, 14, 27; 2 Sam. xv. 1, 3.) The same term, rendered “posts,” denotes the mounted couriers of the Persians, who carried the royal edicts to the provinces. (Est. iii. 13, 15; viii. 14.)

FOOTSTOOL. Kings when enthroned in state, required a “footstool,” at which the applicants bowed down, and rendered homage. (2 Chron. ix. 18.) The Divine glory, which resided between the cherubim, is represented as using the ark as a footstool. (1 Chron. xxviii. 2; Ps. xcv. 5; cxv. 7.) So the earth is called God’s footstool by the same expressive figure which represents heaven as His throne. (Ps. cx. 1; Isa. lxvi. 1; Matt. v. 35.)

FOREIGNER. A sojourner or stranger, living in another country without the rights of a citizen. (Ex. xii. 45; Ps. xxxviii. 12; Eph. ii. 19.)

FOREKNOWLEDGE. The Divine attribute which is commonly termed foreknowledge or prescience, is described as something peculiar to the Supreme God. (Isa. xlii. 22—29; xliii. 25.)

FOOD. The founder, the Jabbok, and the Arnon, had several fordable places, which, of course, were more numerous in summer than in winter or spring, when the streams were swollen with the rains or melted snow. The fords were well known to the inhabitants, who, on several occasions, guided them, to prevent the passage over the rivers. (Josh. vii. 7; Judg. xvi. 28; Gen. xxxii. 22; Is. xvi. 2.)

FOREHEAD. Marks upon the forehead, for distinguishing purposes, are frequently mentioned in the Scriptures. In Ezek. iv. 5, 6, an angel is commissioned to go through the city of Jerusalem, and mark upon the forehead all who should be exempt from the approaching slaughter. So in Rev. vii. 3, the mark or seal upon the foreheads of the Christian Jews, was both the symbol and pledge of exemption from slaughter, in the destruction of Jerusalem. This mark upon the forehead, as the pledge of safety, is different from the name upon the mitre, which is given as the reward of victory. (Rev. ii. 17.) Herodotus, (i. 113,) speaks of the worshippers of a certain deity as having his name branded on them; and such was the custom of the idolatrous Hindus, in having the titub or mark of different colours placed upon the forehead, indicative of the followers of Veeshna or Seeva. So also, the worshippers of the beast are represented as bearing his mark, by having his symbol, or letters mystically expressing his name, impressed on their right hand, or upon their foreheads, as the token of their subjection to him. (Rev. xiii. 16—18; xiv. 9, 11; xvi. 2; xix. 20; xx. 4; 3 Macc. ii. 29.) In Isa. iii. 24, a “burning” or brand, is mentioned as a mark of servile disgrace. The Romans usually marked their soldiers in the back; and their slaves in the forehead.

FOOD. The Jordan, the Jabbok, and the Arnon, had several fordable places, which, of course, were more numerous in summer than in winter or spring, when the streams were swollen with the rains or melted snow. The fords were well known to the inhabitants, who, on several occasions, guided them, to prevent the passage over the rivers. (Josh. vii. 7; Judg. xvi. 28; Gen. xxxii. 22; Is. xvi. 2.)

FOREHEAD. Marks upon the forehead, for distinguishing purposes, are frequently mentioned in the Scriptures. In Ezek. iv. 5, 6, an angel is commissioned to go through the city of Jerusalem, and mark upon the forehead all who should be exempt from the approaching slaughter. So in Rev. vii. 3, the mark or seal upon the foreheads of the Christian Jews, was both the symbol and pledge of exemption from slaughter, in the destruction of Jerusalem. This mark upon the forehead, as the pledge of safety, is different from the name upon the mitre, which is given as the reward of victory. (Rev. ii. 17.) Herodotus, (i. 113,) speaks of the worshippers of a certain deity as having his name branded on them; and such was the custom of the idolatrous Hindus, in having the titub or mark of different colours placed upon the forehead, indicative of the followers of Veeshna or Seeva. So also, the worshippers of the beast are represented as bearing his mark, by having his symbol, or letters mystically expressing his name, impressed on their right hand, or upon their foreheads, as the token of their subjection to him. (Rev. xiii. 16—18; xiv. 9, 11; xvi. 2; xix. 20; xx. 4; 3 Macc. ii. 29.) In Isa. iii. 24, a “burning” or brand, is mentioned as a mark of servile disgrace. The Romans usually marked their soldiers in the back; and their slaves in the forehead.
knowledge we form a conclusion respecting the mode of the Divine foreknowledge. But we act improperly in thus determining: because unless this mode differ entirely from the mode of human prescience, and have nothing analogous to it, it is not Divine. Human knowledge, indeed, possesses something analogous to that which is Divine; but the mode of Divine knowledge is decidedly transcendent. But God knows as infallibly what things will happen contingently, as what will happen necessarily; for his foreknowledge does not depend upon an immutable cause of the existence of the thing, but on the insufficiency of the Divine knowledge. And what praise is due to the divine wisdom, if it therefore foreknow future things—because God resolves to produce them by such a power as the creatures cannot resist? By a metaphysics, therefore, that which belongs to the foreknowing mind is ascribed to the thing foreknown, as though an event would necessarily happen because it was infallibly foreknown by the Divine Mind.

FOREBINDER. A precursor, one who not only goes before to a particular place, to lead or prepare the way, but who makes arrangements for those who follow. Spoken of Jesus, the high priest of the new dispensation, as entering before His followers into the heavenly sanctuary, and making expiation of perpetual efficacy for sinners. (Heb. vi. 20; ix. 11, 12, 22—26; John xiv. 2.)

FORESKIN.—See CIRCUMCISION.

FOREST. Tracts of wood-land were anciently more common in Palestine than at the present day. The localities designated “woods” or “forests” are:

1. The “forest of cedars,” in Lebanon, called in 2 Kings xix. 26; Isa. xxxvi. 24, “the forest of his Carmel,” margin, “the forest and his fruitful field;” properly “the forest of his park,” i.e. like a park. (Hos. xiv. 5, 6.) The “house of the forest of Lebanon,” was the magnificent armoury of Solomon; so called from the cedar of Lebanon with which it was built. (1 Kings vii.
FOR

2; x. 17; Isa. xxii. 8; Neh. iii. 19.

2. The “forest of oaks,” in the mountains of Bashan. (Zech. xi. 2; Isa. ii. 13; Ezek. xxvii. 8.) 3. The “forest of Hareth,” in the mountains of Judah. (1 Sam. xxii. 5.) 4. The “forest of Ephrains.” (Ps. xxxii. 6; 2 Sam. xlvii. 6.) Devoted kingdoms are represented under the symbol of a forest which God threatens to cut down; (Isa. x. 17—24;) where the “glory of the forest” are the nobles; the “briers and thorns” the common people. (Jer. xxi. 14; xxii. 7; Zech. xi. 1—3.)

FORGIVENESS. The consciousness of guilt is universal; hence in all parts of the world, among all classes of people, there are found customs or institutions, which are altogether inexplicable, unless they have direct reference to expiation and forgiveness. The gospel of Christ alone makes known a way of mercy, safe to man and honourable to God. It not only shows that to forgive sin is the exclusive prerogative of Jehovah, of whose law sin is the transgression; (Ps. cxxx. 4; Isa. xliii. 25; Mark ii. 7;) but also how, through the sacrifice of the cross, He can forgive sin and still maintain unshunned the infinite purity, and holiness, and perfection of His nature, government, and law, and even clothe them all with new glory. And even now, the gracious God, who compassionated our misery, offers forgiveness—full, free, and everlasting—to all who will believe in the Lord Jesus Christ. (Acts iii. 19; v. 31; xiii. 38, 39; 1 John ii. 12.) The duty of mutual forgiveness is urged upon man with the most solemn sanctions. (Matt. v. 44; vi. 14, 15; Luke xvii. 3, 4; Col. iii. 13; Eph. iv. 32.) If God has remitted the “talents” we owed to Him, we may well remit the “pence” in which any of our fellows are indebted to us. (Matt. xxiii. 33—35.) This was a new lesson, and utterly unknown till taught by Christ, and enforced by His own example.

FORKS. The “forks” mentioned in 1 Sam. xiii. 21, are pronged agricultural implements, used in gathering and removing the crops. The orientals, in partaking of food, seldom make use of plates, spoons, knives, or forks; nor are these implements considered necessary. And where they are used it is the result of European intercourse.—See MEALS.

FORM, The Greek word morphi, translated “form,” in Phil. ii. 6, 7, does not mean resemblance, similitude, or an outward visible aspect, but properly, real state, essential condition, or nature. Of Christ Jesus it is said, “Who being in the essential condition of God, did not eagerly regard His equality with God; but subjected Himself, by taking the essential condition of a servant, being made in the similitude of men.” As God is immaterial and invisible, and properly has no “form” nor shape, the term morphi, when applied to Him, can have no allusion to outward visible aspect, or manifestation in any way, but only to real and essential condition. Hence the passage affirms of Christ, that as He was really and essentially man, of the same nature with us; so also was He really and essentially God, of the same nature and being with Him. And that even in His incarnate state, the Saviour did not divest himself of His essential condition as God; but while He veiled His glories in a robe of humanity for a time, He still retained all His essential perfections unaltered and unchangeable. (John i. 14.)—See FULLNESS.

FORNICATION.—See ADULTERY.

FORSWear.—See OATH.

FORTRESS. A castle or stronghold situated on a mountain. Military fortifications, furnished with towers, bastions, fosses, and gates, often appear on the Egyptian and Assyrian monuments. The Hebrews while in Egypt, built for Pharaoh fortified cities; (Ex. i. 11;) and when they entered Canaan they took many such cities from the inhabitants. (Num. xiii. 28.) The art of fortification was encouraged by the Hebrew kings, and Jerusalem was always well defended, especially mount Zion. (2 Sam. v. 6—9; xxii. 2.)

FORTUNATUS = fortunate. A Christian of Roman birth or origin, who resided at Corinth. (1 Cor. xvi. 17.)

FOUNTAIN. A spring or stream of "living" or constantly running water, in opposition to cisterns or pools. Several ancient fountains and aqueducts still exist, in the neighbourhood of Tyre, and of Jerusalem. As fountains of water were so extremely valuable to the inhabitants of the East, it is easy to understand why the inspired writers so frequently allude to them, and deduce from them some of their most beautiful and striking similitudes, when they would set forth the perpetuity and inexhaustible nature of the spiritual blessings which God imparts to His people. (Ps. xxxvi. 8, 9; Jer. ii. 13; Joel iii. 18; John iv. 14; Rev. vii. 17.) The stoningment is represented as a fountain. (Zech. xiii. 1.) The term "fountain" is also figuratively used to denote an extended posterity. (Deut. xxxii. 28; Ps. lxviii. 28; Prov. v. 16; xiii. 14.)—See CISTERN.

FOWL. There are several Hebrew words rendered "fowl," and "bird." 1. ὄπα signifies the generic name of all the feathered tribe. (Gen. i. 21, 30; Lev. xvii. 12; Ps. xi. 11; Ezek. xxxi. 6, 13; Dan. ii. 38; vii. 8.) 2. Ἄγιον, collectively, birds of prey. (Gen. xv. 11; Job xxvii. 7; Ezek. xxxix. 4; Isaiah xviii. 36; xlvii. 11.) 3. Βατραχίων, fatted fowl, capons, or more probably geese. (1 Kings iv. 23.) 4. Ταππορ, a small bird, sparrow, or thrush, as caught by the fowler; (Job xii. 5; Ps. xi. 1; lxiv. 2; 2 Cor. vi. 17; Prov. vi. 16; 2 Sam. vii. 4.) also birds, or fowl generally. (Lev. xiv. 4—53; Deut. iv. 17; Ps. viii. 8; Ezek. xxxix. 4.) The Hebrews practiced fowling with nets, snares, and gins. (Prov. vii. 23; Eccl. ix. 12; Ezek. xx. 37.)—See BIRDS.

FOX. The Hebrew word shahal, rendered "fox," signifies digger, or burrower, from its burrowing underground. Under this general name the Hebrews comprehended, not only the fox, but also the jackal, still called in Persia, skahal, an animal rightly described as something between the wolf and the fox; and hence sometimes termed by naturalists "the wolf-fox." These animals, which are very numerous in Palestine, prowl together in large herds or packs, and are particularly prone to resort to tombs and ruined towns, where they feed on dead bodies. (Psalm lixii. 10.) Hence the prophets describe the future desolation of a city, as "the habitation of jackals," a prediction verified by the actual condition of many places they name. The howlings of these packs of jackals are frightful; whence they are also called in Hebrew, ayim—howlers, improperly rendered "wild beasts of the islands." (Isa. xi. 22; xxxiv. 14; in the margin, Ἰμω, and Ἰμώ.) That jackals are intended in Judg. xv. 4, we may infer from the number taken by Samson and his assistants, which must have been easier with gregarious creatures, than with a solitary and very wily animal like the fox. The fox is also of frequent occurrence in Palestine, and as both are included under the common term skahal, it must generally be left to the bearing of the context to determine when the jackal and when the fox are respectively denoted. (Neh. iv. 3; Sol. Song ii. 15; Lam. v. 16; Matt. vii. 20; Luke i. 58.) The term "fox" is sometimes used symbolically of a shrewd cunning man. (Ezek. xiii. 4; Luke xiii. 32.)

FRANKINCENSE. — See INCENSE.

FREEDOM. The right of citizenship. Strangers resident in Palestine had the fullest protection of the law, equally with the native Hebrews; (Lev. xxiv. 22; Num. xv. 15; xxxv. 18; Deut. 11; xxiv. 17; xxi. 16;) the law of usury was the only exception. (Deut. xxiii. 20.) The advantage the Hebrew had over the Gentiles was strictly spiritual, in his being a member of the ecclesiastical, as well as the civil community of Jehovah. But even to this spiritual privilege Gentiles were admitted under certain restrictions. (Deut. xxiii. 1—9; 1 Sam. xii. 8; 2 Sam. xi. 11.) The Ammonites and Moabites were excluded from the citizenship of the theocracy, and the persons mentioned in Deut. xxiii. 1—6. The Mosaic code points out the several cases in which the servants of the Hebrews were to receive their freedom.
(Ex. xxii. 2—4, 7, 8; Lev. xxv. 39—41, 47—55; Deut. xv. 12—17.) There were various modes whereby the freedom of Rome could be attained by foreigners, such as by merit or favour, by money, (Acts xxii. 26,) or by family. The indigenous or freeman, came directly by birth to freedom and to citizenship. The iservitus or freedman, was a man-umitted slave; and his children were denominatated iservitii, i.e. freedmen or freedmen's sons. Among the Greeks and Romans the freedmen had not equal rights with the freemen or those of free birth. The Roman citizen could not be legally scourged; neither could he be bound, or be examined by question, or torture, to extort a confession from him. And if, in any of the provinces, he deemed himself and his cause to be treated by the president with dishonour and injustice, he could, by appeal, remove it to Rome to the determination of the emperor. (Acts xvi. 37—39; xxi. 39; xxii. 25; xxiv. 11, 12.) Christians are represented as inheriting the rights of spiritual citizenship, by being members of the commonwealth or community of Jehovah. (Eph. ii. 12; Phil. iii. 20.) The Christian slave is the Lord's freedman, and a partaker of all the privileges of the children of God; and the Christian freedman is the servant of Christ. (1 Cor. vi. 22; Rom. vi. 20—22.) Paul acknowledges that freedom is worthy of being eagerly embraced; but the freedom which he esteemed most important in its consequences, was that which is given through our Lord Jesus Christ. (1 Cor. vii. 21—23.) The Jews, under the Mosaic law, are represented as in a state of servitude, and Christians as in a state of freedom. (John viii. 31—36; Gal. iv. 22—31.)

FRIEND. One specially loved and esteemed. (Ex. xxxii. 11; Prov. xvii. 17; xviii. 24; xxvi. 6, 9, 10, 17.) Abraham is called “the friend of God;” (2 Chron. xxvii. 7; Isa. xlix. 8; James ii. 23;) and Christ calls his disciples “friends.” (John xv. 15.) “Friend” is also a word of ordinary salutation, like the word neighbour. (Matt. xxii. 12; xxvi. 50; Luke xi. 5.)

FRINGE. The Hebrew words isitzuth, (Num. xv. 38,) and gaddi, (Deut. xxii. 12,) properly signify the “fringe” or tassel, as worn by the Hebrews on the corners of the outer garment. Together with the fringe was worn a “riband” or cord of bluish or cerulean purple, which was to remind the Hebrew of his consecration to Jehovah, and the duties consequently devolving upon him. (Ex. xxviii. 31; Num. xv. 37—41.) Our Lord wore the “fringe,” usually termed the “hem” or “border;” and it was this part of His dress which the sick desired to touch, on account of its peculiar sanctity, under the impression that the contact would make them whole. (Matt. ix. 20; xiv. 35; xxii. 5; Mark iii. 10; v. 27; vi. 55; Luke viii. 44.)—See Blue.

FROG. The Hebrews called this well-known amphibious animal teepa—aredda = marsh-leaper. The only species noticed as existing in Palestine is the Rana esculenta = green frog. Dr. Wilson saw in the streams and pools, in the vale of Jericho, troops of large green frogs. The Rana puestata = speckled frog, and other species, are found in the waters of Egypt. Hasselquist tells us, that numbers of frogs cover the country when the waters decrease, and multiply extremely during the time of the flood. They are devoured by the ibis, for were they to remain and rot they would certainly occasion a stench mortal to men and beasts. The sudden appearance of frogs in untold numbers, was the second plague with which Jehovah afflicted the Egyptians. “The frogs came up and covered the land of Egypt;” they were sent upon the Egyptians in such numbers as to fill their beds, ovens and kneading troughs; and when they died, as they did in immense masses, they filled the land with an offensive and pestilential effluvia. (Ex. vii. 2—14; Ps. lxviii. 45; cv. 30; Rev. xvi. 13.) The Egyptians had a female frog-headed deity called Hpsk = a frog. Weights were often made in the shape of a frog. The toad does not appear on the monuments.
the only traces of it are the embalmed reptiles and figures.

FRONTLETS.—See PHYLACTERIES.

FROST. Congealed or frozen dew. It appears in a still night, when there is no storm or tempest, and descends upon the earth as silently as if it were produced by mere breathing. (Job xxxvii. 10.) Throughout western Asia, very severe and frosty nights are often succeeded by days warmer than any our summers afford. Dr. Robinson says, in Jerusalem "the ground never freezes; but Mr. Whiting had seen the pool back of his house covered with thin ice for one or two days." Volney relates an affecting story of a hapless wanderer who was, like Jacob, frozen by the north wind at night, and burnt by the dreadful heat of the sun by day. (Gen. xxxi. 40; Ex. xvi. 14; Jer. xxxvi. 30.)

FRUIT. Among the fruit-bearing trees of Palestine, are the vine, olive, pomegranate, fig, sycamore, palm, pear, almond, quince, citron, orange, mulberry, carob, pistacia, and walnut. Other trees and plants also abounded, which yielded their produce in the form of odoriferous resins and oils, as the balsam, galbanum, frankincense, ladanum, balm, myrrh, spikenard, storax gum, and tragacanth gum. Among the Hebrews, the produce of planted fruit-trees was not to be eaten for the first three years; they were considered as "uncircumcised" or unclean. The blossoms were pinched off, in order that the trees might bear more abundantly afterwards. (Lev. xix. 23-25; Num. xviii. 12, 13.) In the fourth year it was offered to the Lord. They were also prohibited from destroying fruit-trees in time of war. (Deut. xx. 19;) but this prohibition was not always regarded. (2 Kings iii. 19—25.)

The word translated fruit, denotes not only the produce of the trees, (Gen. i. 29; Matt. iii. 10;) but also of the earth and fields. (Gen. iv. 3; Deut. vii. 18; xxviii. 51; Isa. iv. 2; Lam. xii. 16;cf. 34; Matt. xiii. 8.) The word "fruit" is also used symbolically for offspring, children; (Ex. xxii. 22; Gen. xxi. 2; Ps. xxxii. 18; Acts ii. 30;) also for the results or consequences of conduct;

(Prov. xi. 30; Lam. iii. 10; Jer. vi. 19;) also for words. (Heb. xiii. 9.) "Fruit unto God," and "fruit unto death," signify to live worthy of God or of death. (Rom. vii. 4, 5.) The "fruits of the Spirit," are those graces which the Holy Spirit produces in the believer. (Gal. v. 19, 23; Phil. i. 11; Eph. v. 9; James iii. 17, 18.) Fruitfulness in the divine life stands opposed to an empty, barren, and unproductive profession of religion. (John xv. 2-8; Col. i. 10; 2 Pet. i. 5-8; Matt. vii. 16-20.)

FUL. See (Coal.)

FULFILLED. This word is generally used, not in the way of accommodation or illustration, but in reference to the actual fulfillment of Scripture prophecy. In the formulas, "Now all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet;" (Matt. i. 22; ii. 15;) "then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet;" (Matt. ii. 17;) the events narrated are not to be understood in what is called the telic way, that is, as happening merely for the purposes of making good the predictions; but rather in the so-called ectic sense.—So that in or by these events was actually accomplished, or literally fulfilled the predictions of the prophet. If we say, "All this took place, in order that what was spoken by the prophet might be fulfilled," that is representing the events themselves that are spoken of, as taking place in subordination to the prophecy, and merely or principally in order to fulfil it. But if we say, "All this took place, so that the prediction by the prophet was, or should be, fulfilled," then we merely affirm that the mode of the events was such, that a fulfilment of prophecy was accomplished in it; while at the same time, the events themselves might have an unspeakably higher end in view. (Matt. ii. 23; iv. 14; viii. 17; xii. 17; xiii. 35; xxi. 4; xxvi. 50; xxvii. 35; Mark xiv. 49; John xii. 38; xiii. 19; xv. 25; xviii. 12; xiv. 9; xii. 24; xxviii. 36.)

FULLER. A person whose business it was to cleanse soiled garments, or to full new ones. The Hebrew word lakes, rendered “wash,” signifies to tread, to trample with the feet; hence to wash, to cleanse clothes or garments by treading them in a trough. This may have been an early part of the operation; afterwards they probably rubbed the cloth on an inclined plane, in the manner which is figured in the paintings on the monuments of Egypt, and still common in the East. (2 Kings xviii. 17; Ex. xix. 10; Lev. xi. 25; Mal. iii. 2; Mark ix. 3.)—See EX-ROXIL.
FUL

FULLEST'S FIELD.—See AOB-DAMA.

FULLEST'S SOPE.—See SORC.

FULNESS. The Greek term pleroma, translated “fulness,” when connected with the name of God or of Christ, designates that which is in them, i.e. what they possess, what belongs to them, with the accessory idea of copiousness or abundance. It designates the knowledge of God, or the treasures of wisdom in the Godhead; (Eph. iii. 19.) the grace and truth of Christ; (John i. 14, 16; Eph. iv. 13.) also His supreme authority or pre-eminence. (Col. i. 19.) The term pleroma = “fulness,” in Col. ii. 9, “in Him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily,” denotes that all the Divine attributes and qualifications, dwelt in the Saviour bodily, i.e. in His human body—“the Word became flesh.” The errors whom the Apostle controverted, partook largely of the Gnostic theosophy, and maintained that all created beings, who should be purified from all contact with matter, which they regarded as the source and seat of all evil, would gradually become absorbed into the fulness of the great Supreme. The Apostle asserts, that all the pleromas which they ascribed to the great Supreme, i.e. that fulness whence proceeds all existences, and which constitutes the peculiar, the essential, the exclusive attribute of the supreme and immutable and eternal Godhead, and which no emanated being or one of inferior order can possess— that very pleroma belongs to Christ. Though He descended to take upon Himself a human body—the condition of a servant, yet at the same time, the Apostle ascribes to Him nothing less than supreme and eternal Godhead. (Phil. ii. 7; iii. 21.) In the possession of “all the fulness of the Godhead bodily,” the Saviour is One with the Father, the radiance of His glory and the exact image of His substance. (Heb. i. 3; John i. 14.)

In Eph. iii. 19, believers are represented as partaking of the Divine fulness. To say that they are “filled with all the fulness of God,” is confounding the Creator and creature, or at least an admission of the most absolute and unlimited pantheism. The passage properly reads “in order that ye might be filled unto all the fulness of God,” i.e. until ye should extend or reach unto the full and perfect experimental acquaintance of “Him in whom all fulness dwells.” So in John i. 16, “Of His fulness have we all received, even grace for grace”—we have received gifts and graces, which, according to our measure and capacity, correspond with His. The same truth is taught in Col. ii. 10, “and in Him are ye filled;” also in 2 Pet. i. 4, “that ye might be made partakers of the Divine nature.” Thus are Christians represented as being in Christ—united to Him as members belonging to the body of which He is the Head,—sustaining, by the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, such an intimate relation to Him, as to be called “the temple of the living God.” (Eph. i. 23; John xvii. 21, 23; 1 Cor. iii. 16; vi. 19; 2 Cor. vi. 16; 1 John iv. 12, 15, 16.) The “fulness of time” denotes the time when Christ appeared, to introduce the new and better dispensation of mercy; the period which the Holy Spirit, by the prophets specified; beyond which the Mosaic institutions should no longer avail, but Jew and Gentile alike have the offer of the common salvation through the gospel. (Gal. iv. 4; Eph. i. 9, 10; iii. 9.)

FUR

Furlong. The Greek word stadia, rendered “furlong,” signifies the standard, or measure. As a measure of distance it contained 600 Greek or 625 Roman feet, equivalent to 608 feet 9 inches English. The Roman mile contained eight stadia. (Luke xxiv. 13; John vi. 19; xi. 18; Rev. xiv. 20; xxi. 283
16. The stadium, rendered "race," also denotes the stadium or circus, in which public games were exhibited. (1 Cor. ix. 24.)

FURNACE. The Hebrew word הָבָשָׁן, rendered "furnace," signifies a brick or lime-kiln, perhaps a potter’s furnace. (Gen. xix. 23; Ex. ix. 8, 10.) The furnace used by the metallurgist was termed קֶשֶׁר. (Prov. xviii. 3; xxvii. 21; Ezek. xxii. 18, 20, 22.) On the Egyptian monuments, the jeweller appears with a little portable furnace and blow-pipe, which he carried about with him, as is still the case in India. The term "furnace" is used metaphorically in Isa. lxi. 10; Jer. xi. 4; Deut. iv. 20; 1 Kings viii. 51, denoting extreme affliction.

FURNITURE.—See Carpenter.

G.

GAAL = loathing. A son of Ebed, who raised a revolt in Shechem against Abimelech. (Judg. ix. 26-41.)

GAASH = a shaking, earthquake. A mountain among the mountains of Ephraim. (Josh. xxiv. 3; Judg. ii. 9.) Hence "the valleys of Gaash" around that mountain. (2 Sam. xxii. 30; 1 Chron. xi. 32.)

GABA.—See GABA.

GABBAI = tax-gatherer. A descendant of Benjamin. (Neh. xi. 8.)

GABBATHA = the back, i.e. an elevated place, probably tribunal. This Syro-Chaldaic word (John xix. 13) is explained by the Greek term ἱλιστρόν = stone-strewed, paved, i.e. "pavement." The place connected with the Roman praetorium, in Jerusalem, where Pilate’s tribunal was set on the occasion of the condemnation of Christ, was covered with stones of various colours, commonly called a tesselated pavement. The Romans tried causes within the praetorium, but always pronounced sentence in the open air. (John xix. 13.) There was also a "pavement" in the outer court of the temple. (2 Chron. vii. 3.)

GAD

GABRIEL = man or hero of God. An angel sent to Daniel to unfold the vision of the ram and he-goat, (Dan. viii. 16,) and to communicate the prediction of the Seventy Weeks. (Dan. ix. 21.) He was also employed to announce the birth of John to his father Zacharias, (Luke i. 19,) and that of Jesus to Mary. (Luke i. 26.) In Luke i. 19, Gabriel is said to "stand in the presence of God."

GAD = fortune. 1. A son of Jacob, the name being probably derived from good fortune; (Gen. xxx. 11;) although the signification "troop," appears to be alluded to in Gen. xlix. 19. Gad was the head of the tribe of like name, the "Gadites," whose territory lay in the mountains of Gilead, (Deut. iii. 12, 16;) between that of Manasseh and Reuben. (Josh. xiii. 24-28; Num. xxxi. 30-36; Ezek. xlvii. 27, 28.) In this position they were subject to frequent incursions from the neighbouring horses, but they were valorous, and, under David, subdued all their enemies. (Deut. iii. 12; xxxiii. 20, 21; 1 Chron. v. 18-22; xii. 8-15.) The "river" or torrent of Gad is the Jabbok, not the Arnon. (2 Sam. xxiv. 5.) 2. A prophet, who was on more than one occasion God’s messenger to David. (1 Sam. xxii. 5; 2 Sam. xxiv. 11-19; 1 Chron. xxi. 9-13; 2 Chron. xxx. 25.) He also wrote a history of David’s reign. (1 Chron. xxix. 29, 30.) 3. The god Fortune, worshipped by the Babylonians and Jewish exiles; perhaps the planet Jupiter. Gad is rendered "troop," but the margin reads "Gad." (Isa. lxv. 11.)

GADARENES. The inhabitants of the city of Gadara = surrounded, enclosed, the fortified capital of Persea, or the region east of the Jordan. The present ruined and deserted village Um Keis, situated on the southern bank of the Sheriat el Mandhur, which falls into the Jordan below the lake of Tiberias, is supposed to be the ancient Gadara. It was formerly a large and opulent town; great numbers of sarcophagi, and remnants of marble columns, tolerably perfect, still exist. Here are several caverns which serve as places of retreat for families of Arabs. The country bears the name of Al-jadar, which is probably derived from Idar or Gadara. This region was the scene of the miracle recorded in Mark v. 1; Luke viii. 26. Matthew mentions two demons, Mark and Luke only mention one; yet that by no means denies the existence of two. They probably mention but one because of his superior forcefulness. The reading "Gergesena," in Matt. viii. 26, originated merely in a conjecture of Origen. Several manuscripts also read "Gerasene." The city Gerasa was situated in the territory of Gadara.
GAD

GADD (GAD) — fortunes. A descendant of Maccabees. (Num. xiii. 11.)

GADDEE — fortunes of God, i.e. semi from God. A descendant of Zebulon. (Num. xiii. 10.)

GADD — Gadite. The father of Menasheh. (2 Kings xv. 14.)

CAHAM — flaming eyes? A son of Nabor. (Gen. xxii. 24.)

GAHAR —inhabitant place. One whose descendants returned from the exile. ( Ezra ii. 47; Neh. vii. 49.)

GAIUS — bridegroom. 1. A Macedonian, and fellow-traveller of Paul. (Acts xix. 29.)
2. A man of Derbe. (Acts xx. 4.)
3. An inhabitant of Corinthis with whom Paul lodged. (Rom. xvi. 26; 1 Cor. i. 14.)
4. A Christian to whom John addressed his Third Epistle. (2 John 1.)

GALAL — weighty, worthy? Two Levites after the exile. (1 Chron. ix. 16; Neh. xii. 17.)

GALATIA —region of the milk-white, or wanderers? A province of Asia Minor, lying S. and S.E. of Bithynia and Paphlagonia; W. of Pontus; N. and N.W. of Cappadocia; and N. and N.E. of Lyconia and Phrygia. Its name was derived from the Gallic or Celtic tribes, called by the Greeks Galatia, who, about 280 years B.C., made an irruption into Macedonia and Thrace. Several of the Gallic tribes from Germany appear to have migrated eastward. One division, after many adventures, passed the Hellespont into Asia Minor, and seated themselves finally in Phrygia, about

249 B.C. About 188 B.C., the Gallograeci or Grecian Gauls were brought beneath the Roman dominion. They, however, retained their own princes till the war between Antiochus and the Romans. Under Augustus, about B.C. 26, Galatia became a Roman province. Galatia was distinguished for the fertility of its soil and for its trade. (Acts xvi. 6; xvii. 29; 1 Cor. xvi. 1; Gal. i. 2; iii. 1; 2 Tim. iv. 10; 1 Pet. i. 1.)

GALATIANS, EPISTLE TO THE. The Pauline origin of this Epistle has been generally admitted; and is referred to by Irenæus, Clement of Alexandria, and Tertullian. Paul's first visit to Galatia is recorded in Acts xvi. 6. His second visit was to encourage the church there and in Phrygia. (Acts xviii. 23.) Soon after Paul's second visit there appears to have been a speedy and unexpected change among the Galatian churches. (Gal. i. 6.) Certain Jewish Christians who had not long since come thither from Jerusalem, gained the ascendancy; and persuaded the Galatians of the indispensableness of the whole Jewish ritual to the followers of the Messiah. The Galatians permitted themselves to be circumcised, and, indeed, they conformed to the Jewish religion in its entire extent; and faith came to be regarded as a subordinate thing. Paul being in Ephesus, soon learned the state of the churches; and in this Epistle, which was written about A.D. 56, he urged upon their attention the principles he had recently inculcated upon them. (Gal. i. 10.) He maintained that he was an Apostle, taught and endued with authority from on high. Further, that the law was but a preparation for Christianity; it was only our schoolmaster; but now we are released from its superintendence; we have become of age, and are heirs of God. (Gal. iv. 8.) Christianity is the religion of liberty, the law that of bondage. (Gal. iv. 25, 26.) Judaism, therefore, is no longer suitable for Christians; labour rather to improve your morals, and to amend your minds and hearts. Henceforth glory in Christ alone.

GALBANUM. A resinous gum of strong, but disagreeable odour, flowing from the fœnus galli, which grows in Syria and Arabia. When mixed with other fragrant substances, as was the case in the perfume for the sanctuary, it strengthened the perfume, and made its effects more lasting. (Ex. xxx. 34.)

Galeed.—Keep or hold of testimony. A monument of stones erected by Jacob in testimony of his covenant with Laban the Syrian: but Laban called it Jegar-sahadutha = hill or heap of stones of testimony. (Gen. xxxi. 47.)

Galilee.—A circular circuit, or basin. A region of Palestine, including the whole of the northern part of the country, and lying between the Jordan and the Mediterranean, and between Samaria and Phoenicia, and was divided into upper and lower Galilee; the former lying north of the territory of Zebulon and abounding in mountains; the latter being more level and fertile and very populous. Capernaum and Nazareth were situated in lower Galilee. (Matt. iv. 13; Mark i. 9; Luke ii. 52; iv. 14; viii. 26; John vii. 52.) The Galileans were brave and industrious; though the other Jews regarded them as stupid, unpollished, and seditious. (John i. 47; vii. 52; Luke xii. 4.) Their turbulent character explains why Pilate, when sitting in judgment upon Jesus, caught at the word "Galilee," when used by the chief priests, and asked if "he were a Galilean." (Luke xxiii. 5, 6.) They had a peculiar dialect, by which they were easily distinguished from the Jews of Jerusalem. (Mark xiv. 70.) The disciples of Christ were also called "Galileans." (Matt. xxv. 69; Mark xiv. 70; Luke xxii. 59; John iv. 46; Acts i. 11; ii. 7.)

Galilee, Sea of.—See Sea.

Gall.—The substance secreted in the gall-bladder of animals, commonly called bile. (Job xvi. 15; xx. 25.) "The gall of asps," is the poison of venom of vipers. (Job xx. 14, 16.) The Hebrew word rōsh, rendered "gall," (Deut. xxix. 18; xxxii. 29; Ps. lxxix. 21; Lam. iii. 6, 19.) and "hemlock," (Hos. 10. 4.) denotes a poisonous plant, probably the poppy, so called from its heads. Thence it derived, rendered "water of gall," is the source of the poppy, opium. (Jer. viii. 14; ix. 15; xxxii. 16.) hence put for poison or bitterness generally. (Deut. xxxii. 32, 33.) In Matt. xxvii. 54, of Jesus it is said, "They gave him vinegar to drink mingled with gall;" but in Mark xv. 23, it is called "wine mingled with myrrh." Whence it is probable, that the Greek word chosos = gall, is a general name for whatever is exceedingly bitter, bitter, acrid, worm, poppy, drug, etc. The term "gall" is used figuratively for great troubles. (Jer. viii. 14) wickedness. (Am. vi. 12.) and malady. (Acts viii. 26; Heb. xii. 15.)—See Myrrh.

Galleries.—The Hebrew word most often rendered "gallery", in Ezek. xii. 15, 16; xiii. 9, is an architectural term, denoting a balcony or a roofed gallery, open or covered. It occurs in Sol. Song, i. 17, the term rāšāh rendered "ramparts," in the margin, "galleries," signifies a covered or fretted ceiling. The word revolution, translated "galleries," in Sol. Song vii. 5, signifies lock, curb, so called from their flowing down.

Galley.—See Ship.

Gallium.—Fountain. A city of Benjamin, lying north of Jerusalem. (1 Sam. xxv. 44; 1 Sam. x. 30.)

Gallio.—A cook. A Roman "deputy," properly procurator of Achaia, under the Emperor Claudius. Like his brother, the philosopher Seneca, Gallio was put to death by order of Nero. When Paul first visited Corinth, Gallio nobly refused to abet the persecution raised by the Jews against the Apostle. The honourable conduct of Gallio showed that it was his opinion, that the civil magistrate had nothing to do with religious opinions or the concerns of conscience, in matters where the safety of the state was not implicated; he therefore prudently refused to make the subject a matter of legal discussion. (Acts xviii. 12, 17.)
GAL

GALLOWS. The execution of criminals by hanging them on a tree, post, or cross, appears to have been practised amongst the ancient Egyptians and Persians, as well as among the Hebrews. (Gen. xl. 19; Deut. xxi. 22; Esth. ii. 23; v. 14; vi. 4.)

GAMALIEL = reward or benefit of God. 1. A distinguished Pharisee and doctor of the law at Jerusalem, under whom Paul was educated. (Acts xxii. 3.) According to the Talmud, he was son of Simeon and grandson of the celebrated Hillel; and for a long time president of the Jewish Sanhedrin. When the Jewish rulers, alarmed at the progress of Christianity in Jerusalem, arrested the Apostles, wishing to put them to death, Gamaliel by his dispassionate advice, checked their impetuousity. He reasoned in the affair with the tact of worldly wisdom and experience, urging that religious opinions usually gain strength by persecution; while, if not noticed at all, they are sure not to leave any lasting impression on the minds of the people, if devoid of truth: and that it is vain to contend against them, if true. (Acts v. 25—41.) 2. A chief of the tribe of Manasseth. (Num. i. 10; ii. 20; vii. 54.)

GAMMADIM = invincibles. This Hebrew word is not the name of a nation or tribe, but rather a description of the character of a people, as the brave soldiers, fierce warriors. (Ezek. xxvii. 11.)

GAMUL = exalted. A descendant of Aaron, and the head of the twenty-second course in division of the priesthood. (1 Chron. xxiv. 17.)

GARDEN. The Hebrew word gēn signifies a place surrounded and protected by a fence or wall, hence a garden, especially a park, orchard, a place planted with trees. Several gardens are mentioned in the Scriptures, as "the garden of Eden," (Gen. iii. 24; Joel ii. 3.) also called "the garden of God," (Ezek. xxvii. 13; xxxi. 8, 9,) and "the garden of Jehovah." (Gen. xiii. 10; Isa. li. 3.) Ahab's "garden of herbs;" (1 Kings xxi. 2.) "the garden of Unna" or "the king's garden;" (2 Kings xxi. 18; xxv. 4.) "the garden" of the Persian kings at Susa; (Esth. i. 5; vii. 7, 8;) "the garden" of Gethsemane; (John xviii. 1; Matt. xxvi. 36,) and "the garden" of Joseph of Arimathea. (John xix. 41; Matt. xxvii. 57—60.) Gardeners, also watchmen over gardens, are mentioned. (Ecc. ii. 5; John xx. 15; Isa. i. 8.) Gardens were planted with various fragrant and medicinal herbs, and ornamental plants, and trees. (Sol. Song iv. 13; vi. 11.) They owed all their freshness to the waters, of which they were never destitute. (Num. xxiv. 6; Deut. xi. 10; Sol. Song iv. 15; Isa. i. 30.) The Jews frequently performed their devotions in gardens; (John i. 48; xviii. 1, 2,) and the worship of idols in those shady seclusions was not of unfrequent occurrence. (1 Kings xvi. 25; Isa. lxv. 3; lxvi. 17; Ezek. xx. 28.) Sometimes they were used as burial places. (2 Kings xxi. 18; Mark xvi. 46.) Palestine still exhibits fruitful and well watered gardens, filled with vegetables, flowers, and fruit-trees, in the highest perfection of luxuriance and beauty. They are sometimes hedged with prickly pear, which forms an impenetrable barrier. (Gen. xiii. 10; Isa. li. 3.) A "garden" is the symbol of a pleasant region; (Gen. xiii. 10; Isa. li. 3;) of prosperity and fruitfulness; (Job viii. 16;) also of the church. (Sol. Song iv. 16; Isa. lxvii.11; Jer. xxxi. 12.)

GAREB = scabby. 1. An Ithrite, one of David's distinguished warriors. (2 Sam. xxiii. 38; 1 Chron. xi. 40.) 2. A hill near Jerusalem. (Jer. xxxi. 39.)

GARLAND. A fillet or wreath, with which the heathen frequently decorated the heads of the oxen which they designed to sacrifice to their deities. (Acts xiv. 13.)

GARLIC. The Hebrew word sālam is also the Arabic and Ethiopic name for the allium sativum or garlic. The onion and the garlic were extensively cultivated by the ancient Egyptians.
GAR

(Num. xi. 5.) Herodotus mentions garlic, in connection with the onion, as a principle article of food among the Egyptians, especially of the poorest classes. Dioscorides also describes the garlic among the plants of Egypt; but it is not now produced in that country. It formed a favourite viand with the common people among the Greeks and Romans.

GARMENTS. Immediately after the fall, our first parents clothed themselves with the leaves of the fig tree; afterwards with the skins of animals. The art of manufacturing cloths from wool, cotton, flax, or hair, by spinning and weaving, is of very great antiquity. (Gen. xiv. 23; xli. 22; Job vii. 6; 1 Chron. iv. 21.) One of the oldest and simplest garments was a stripe of cloth bound around the loins, and reaching to the knees. (Isa. xx. 2-4.) Garments woven or dyed of various colours were much esteemed. They were generally made by women, and were occasionally tastefully embroidered. (Gen. xxxvii. 3; Ex. xxvii. 4-8; xxxix. 3; Judg. v. 32; Prov. xi. 21-24.) As the Asiatic modes of dress are nearly the same from age to age, we may suppose the ordinary dress of the Hebrews to have consisted of the inner garment, or tunic; the outer garment, or mantel, and a girdle. From the simplicity of their form, they could be worn with equal ease by several persons. (Judg. xiv. 19.) The tunic was of linen, and reached usually to the knees; that worn by females, reached to the ankles. This garment was sometimes woven without seam; (John xix. 23;) the sleeves were wide and open, and easily thrown up. Hence to "make bare the arm" is the removal of all encumbrances for any vigorous exertion. (Isa. iii. 10.) The upper garment, or mantel was a piece of woolen cloth, nearly square and several feet in length and breadth, which was wrapped round the body, or tied over the shoulders. This capacious garment was often girded round the loins with a girdle; and could be so arranged as to form a "lap" or "bosom" for carrying things. (2 Kings iv. 39; Luke vi. 38.) As this garment served the poor man for bed-clothing, the law provided, that if it was pledged it should be restored before night fall. (Ex. xxi. 26, 27.) The females were generally habitated in a loose flowing outer garment, with a belt or some round the waist, and a veil or hood over the head. The outer robe and the turban were sometimes very elegant. The appendages to female attire, were jewels of gold and of silver, in rich variety. (Isa. iii. 18, 24.) In later times the Jews derived several of their articles of dress from the Greeks and Romans. People of rank delighted in white or purple raiment; (Ezek. ix. 8; Rev. vii. 9; Luke xvi. 19;) blue was also a common colour. (Ezek. xxix. 16, 24.) The Jews were in the habit of keeping several changes of raiment, and this was a mark of wealth. (Job xvii. 16; Isa. iii. 6; Matt. vi. 19.) The garments of mourning, were sackcloth and haircloth, sometimes also worn by the prophets. (2 Kings i. 8; Zech. xiii. 4.) The Hebrews were forbidden to wear, "a garment mingled of linen and woolen." (Lev. xix. 19; Deut. xxix. 11;) perhaps on account of their having been so generally worn by the heathen. The changing the dresses of the two sexes, were also interdicted. (Deut. xxvii. 15.) In the wilderness the Hebrews had weavers and workmen among them, so that their raiment "waxed not old," i.e. was not exhausted during their journey of forty years. (Deut. vii. 4.)—See ROBS.

GARMITE. The Hebrew word Garmi = bosy, whence "Garmite," is not the name of a people, but of a man. (1 Chron. iv. 19.)

GARRISON. A post or station held for purposes of offence and defence by a military force. (1 Sam. vi. 5; xii. 3, 4; 2 Sam. viii. 6, 14.)

GASHMU. —See GESHEM.

GATAM = swy. This. A son of Eliphaz. (Gen. xxxvi. 11, 16.)

GATE. The gates of Oriental cities were generally made of wood, and sometimes sheathed with strong plates of copper or iron, and secured with strong heavy bolts and locks. (Deut.
iii. 5; Judg. xiv. 3; Ps. cvii. 16; Isa. xlv. 2; Acts xii. 10.) They were opened at sun-rise and shut at sun-set. (Neh. vii. 3.) At the gate was the forum or place of public concourse, where judicial trials were held, and disputed points determined. Hence the phrase, "in the gate," often signifies before the tribunal. The Ottoman palace or court derived its appellation of the Porte, from the dispatch of public business at its gates. (Gen. xxiii. 10, 18; Deut. xvi. 18; xvii. 8; Josh. xx. 4; Ruth iv. 1, 11; Zechar. viii. 16.) As the inhabitants frequently assembled at the gate in large numbers, either for business, or to spend their leisure hours, the term "gate" often denotes the city or the people of the city. (Gen. xix. 1; Ps. lxix. 13; xxxvii. 5; Ruth iii. 11; margin; Gen. xii. 17; Deut. xii. 12.) Criminals were punished without the gates. (1 Kings xxi. 13; Acts vii. 58.) An inscription, extracted from the law, was sometimes put upon the gate of the court leading to the house. (Deut. vi. 9; xii. 20.) To "exalt the gate" is to exhibit vanity, and thus court destruction. (Prov. xvii. 19.) The gates of Jerusalem were—1, "Fountain-gate;" (Neh. ii. 14; iii. 15;) 2, "Dung-gate;" (Neh. ii. 13; xii. 31;) 3, "Valley-gate;" (Neh. iii. 13; 2 Chron. xxxiii. 14;) 4, "Corner," or "Tower-gate;" (2 Chron. xxvi. 9; Zech. xiv. 10;) 5, "Ephraim-gate;" (Neh. viii. 16;) also called "Benjamin-gate;" (Jer. xxxvii. 13; Zech. xiv. 10;) 6, "Old-gate;" (Neh. iii. 8;) also called "First-gate;" (Zech. iv. 10;) 7, "Fish-gate;" (Neh. iii. 3; Zeph. i. 10;) 8, "Sheep-gate;" (Neh. iii. 10;) 9, "Miphkad-gate;" (Neh. iii. 31;) 10, "Horsegate;" (Neh. iii. 28;) 11, "Water-gate;" (Neh. xii. 37;) perhaps the same as "East" or "Sun-gate;" (Jer. xix. 2; 12, "Inner" or "Middle-gate;" (Jer. xxxix. 3.) Some of these gates were perhaps not in the walls of the city, but in the external wall of the temple, or in the wall between Zion and the lower city. The "gates of death," or "gates of hell," mean the region of the dead, or the unseen world of spirits. (Job xxxviii. 239)

17; Ps. ix. 13; cvii. 18; Isa. xxxviii. 13.) So in Matt. xvi. 18, the "gates of hell" may designate the invisible world, death, which shall never exhaust the church, insomuch as it shall be replenished with living members from age to age, until the world shall be evangelized.

GATH = press, wine-press, or trough, vat. One of the five chief cities of the Philistines, celebrated as the residence of Goliath; afterwards fortified by Rehoboam. (1 Sam. v. 7; vi. 17; xxvii. 4, 23; xxi. 10—12; 1 Kings ii. 36—41; 2 Chron. xi. 8.) It appears early to have been destroyed, (Am. i. 7, 8; vi. 2,) and is not enumerated by the later prophets along with the other four cities of the Philistines. (Jer. xxi. 20; Zeph. ii. 4; Zech. ix. 5.) The inhabitants were called "Gittites." (Josh. xi. 8) Dr. Robinson, on his return from Gaza to Beit Jibrin, found no traces of antiquity from which, at least, a presumption might be drawn as to the site of Gath.

GATH-HEPHER = wine-press of the well. A city of Zebulun, the birthplace of the prophet Jonah: (2 Kings xiv. 25;) also called "Gittah-hepher." (Josh. xix. 13.)

GATH-RIMMON = press of the pomegranate. A city of Dan; but belonging to different tribes at different periods. (Josh xix. 45; xx. 24, 25; 1 Chron. vi. 69.) Dr. Robinson finds its site at Deir Dubban, near which are remarkable excavations.

GAZA = the strong. Valencia. An ancient Canaanitic city: (Gen. x. 19;) and afterwards one of the five chief cities of the Philistines. It was a royal city, (Zech. ix. 5;) situated near the southern border of Palestine: (1 Kings iv. 24;) was subdued by the Hebrews, (Judg. i. 18;) but soon afterwards recovered by the Philistines. (Josh. xi. 22; Judg. xvi. 1, 21; 1 Sam. vi. 17; Jer. xxv. 20; Am. i. 6, 7; Zeph. ii. 4.) In several of these passages Gaza is called "Azazah." The inhabitants were called "Gazites." (Judg. xvi. 2.) Gaza, now called Gazzah, was situated on the route of the great caravans which passed between Egypt and Syria. Few vestiges of the ancient city are found, except occasional scattered columns of marble and gray granite. Dr. Robinson says, GAZ is situated on a low round hill of considerable extent, not elevated more than fifty or sixty feet above the plain around. But the greater part of the modern city has sprung up on the plain below, a sort of suburbs, stretching far out on the eastern and northern sides. These suburbs appear to be thickly populated; the houses are numerous and wholly built of mud or unburnt bricks, like the villages we passed on the great plain. The city is surrounded with numerous gardens; and the soil is rich and productive. It has a population of about 15,000 souls. The bazaars are better supplied than those of Jerusalem. The baptism of the sushoon by Philip, may have been at the water in the Wady, near Tel el-Haay, on the southern road from Jerusalem, now "desert," i.e. without villages or fixed inhabitants. (Acts viii. 26.)

GAZER.—See GAZA.

GAZER = shecer. A son, and also a grandson of Caleb. (1 Chron. ii. 48.)

GAZITSES.—See GASA.

GAZZAM = devouring. One whose posterity returned from the exile. (Ezra ii. 43; Neh. vii. 51.)

GBA = hill. A Levitical city in Benjamin. (Josh. xxix. 17.) situated on the north-eastern border of the kingdom of Judah; (2 Kings xxiii. 8; Zech. xiv. 3; 1 Kings xxviii. 26; Is. vi. 29;) about five miles north by east from Jerusalem. It is now a half ruined village called Joba. Gaba is read "Gaha," in Josh. xxviii. 24. In 1 Sam. xiii. 16; xiv. 16, "Gibeh" is erroneously put for "Gaba."

GEBA = mountain. 1. A mountainous tract inhabited by the Edomites, extending from the Dead Sea southwards to Petra, and still called by the Arabs "Jobal = Mountains." (Ps. lxxxiii. 7.) 2. A Phoenician city between Tripolis and Beirut, situated on a hill near the sea, at the foot of Lebanon. (Ezek. xlvii. 9.) It was called by the Greeks Byblus. The Arabs still call it Jebel = "little Mountain." The inhabi-GEBAL = mountains. 1. A mountainous tract inhabited by the Edomites, extending from the Dead Sea southwards to Petra, and still called by the Arabs "Jobal = Mountains." (Ps. lxxxiii. 7.) 2. A Phoenician city between Tripolis and Beirut, situated on a hill near the sea, at the foot of Lebanon. (Ezek. xlvii. 9.) It was called by the Greeks Byblus. The Arabs still call it Jobal = "little Mountain."

GEM

GEMARIAH = whom Jehovah makes perfect. 1. The son of Hilkiah. (Jer. xxxix. 1—10.) 2. The son of Shaphan. (Jer. xxxvi. 10—26.)

GENEALOGY. The lineage of a family; hence history, especially family history, since the earliest history among oriental nations is drawn mostly from the genealogical registers of families. Moses illustrated his history by several genealogical tables, which are the most ancient ethnographic documents we possess; and by noting the years of births and deaths, he interwove with them that chronology, the aid of which he saw to be essential to a perfect history. (Gen. v. 3—32; vii. 11; ix. 28—29; x. 1—32; xi. 1—32; etc.) The tables show that Moses must have had access to the archives of the Egyptians, Phenicians, and Edomites; and other authentic memorials from the hands of the early patriarchs. The Hebrews were remarkably careful in framing and preserving their family registers. They were of the utmost importance to a people divided into tribes, as they settled all questions of inheritances, and designated the right to this or that privilege. The officers who were appointed to the care of them were generally Levites; and the office may have been in the temple at Jerusalem. And it is a matter of astonishment that records of such high antiquity—and concerned principally with names of individuals and families, which are very liable to inaccuracies from transcription—are preserved so perfectly. Some of the registers are necessarily given by the sacred writers in a condensed form, as they were only solicitous to trace up the posterity to its true source. Even the variations which seem to exist in some of the genealogical records of the old Testament have been in a great measure reconciled by those who have diligently investigated and compared them. The comparison of the following passages, with the registers in Matthew and Luke, will contribute materially to show the fulfilment of the prophecies relative to the advent of the Messiah. They establish incontestably our Lord's legal right to the throne of David. (Gen. v. 1—32; vi. 10—26; Ruth iv. 18—22; 1 Chron. viii. 1—34; ix. 1—15; xii. 1—17; Heb. vii. 14.)

The following genealogical table traces the pedigree of Jesus Christ, according to the flesh, through the period of four thousand years. It shows that Luke iii. 28—38, traces the genealogy of Jesus from Mary his real mother to David, to Abraham, and to Adam; while Matthew i. 1—17, exhibits that of Joseph his reputed or supposed father through the line of the kings of Judah, to David and to Abraham.

GOD.
1 Adam
2 Seth
3 Enos
4 Cainan
5 Mahalaleel
6 Jared
7 Enoch
8 Methuselah
9 Lamech
10 Noah
11 Shem
12 Arphaxad
13 Cainan
14 Salih
15 Eber
16 Peleg
17 Reu
18 Serug
19 Nahor
20 Terah
21 Abraham
22 Isaac
23 Jacob 24 Judah
25 Pharez
26 Hezon
27 Ram
28 Amminadab
29 Nahshon
30 Salomon or Salma
31 Boaz
32 Obed
33 Jesse 34 David
35 Solomon
36 Nathan 37 Abijah or Abijam
38 Rehoboam
39 Eliakim 36 Mattathias
37 Menan
38 Melea
39 Eliaum
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>GEN</th>
<th>GEN</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>30 Asa</td>
<td>40 Jona</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>39 Jehoshaphat</td>
<td>41 Joseph</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>40 Jehoram</td>
<td>42 Jada</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>43 Simeon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>44 Levi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ahaziah</td>
<td>45 Mathat</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Azariah</td>
<td>46 Jerim</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jehoahaz</td>
<td>47 Elizer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Josiah</td>
<td>48 Jose</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>49 Er</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amaziah</td>
<td>50 Elum-dam</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Uzziah</td>
<td>51 Cosam</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>52 Addi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>53 Melchi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>54 Neri</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maasah</td>
<td>56 Salathiel</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>58 Zorobabel</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amon</td>
<td>57 Rhesa</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Josiah</td>
<td>58 Joaana</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jehoiakim</td>
<td>59 Juda</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eliakim</td>
<td>60 Joseph</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>61 Semai</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>62 Mattathias</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Coniah</td>
<td>63 Maaah</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salathiel</td>
<td>64 Nage</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shalithiel</td>
<td>65 Eli</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Zerubbabel</td>
<td>66 Naum</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ahim</td>
<td>67 Amos</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eliah</td>
<td>68 Mattathias</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Azor</td>
<td>69 Joseph</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Badoc</td>
<td>70 Janna</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Achim</td>
<td>71 Melchi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eliud</td>
<td>73 Levi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eleazar</td>
<td>74 Jose</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mathan</td>
<td>75 Mary the wife</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jacob</td>
<td>76 the real mother</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Joseph the husband of Mary, and the reputed father of Jesus.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Such omissions are of frequent occurrence, merely for the purpose of condensing the account; as in Ezra vii. 1-5, compared with 1 Chron. vi. 3-15, where Ezra in tracing back his own genealogy to Aaron, omits at least six generations. A similar omission for the same purpose is necessarily implied in the genealogy of David, as given in Ruth, iv. 20-22; 1 Chron. ii. 13; Matt. i. 3, 6. The genealogy in Luke is more full; for the purpose of showing that Mary was a descendant of David, in the line of Nathan the son of David. We may therefore rest in the necessary conclusion, that as our Lord's regular descent from David was always asserted, and was never denied even by the Jews; so the evangelists, in tracing this admitted descent, appealed to genealogical tables, which were public and acknowledged in the family and tribe from which Christ sprang. Since the final overthrow of the Jewish nation by the Romans, the Jews have lost all their genealogical records; and now they are utterly unable to trace the pedigree of any one descendant of Abraham.

GENERAL.—See Paroch.

GENERATION. This word properly signifies an age, i.e. the revolving period or circle of the years of human life. (Deut. xxiii. 2, 3, 8; Num. xxxii. 13; Judg. ii. 10; Job xii. 16; Eccles. i. 14.) The Hebrews, as we do, seem commonly to have reckoned the duration of a generation at from thirty to forty years; (Deut. i. 35; ii. 14;) but in the times of the patriarchs it was reckoned at a hundred years. (Gen. xv. 13, 16; Ex. xvi. 14, 19; xii. 40.) So among the Romans the word annum originally signified an age or generation of men, and was later transferred to denote a century. The Greeks reckoned three generations for one hundred years, or thirty-three years and a third for a generation; so Herod. ii. 142, "three generations of men make one hundred years." "The generations of the heavens and of the earth," signify the history of their origin. (Gen. ii. 4.) "The book of the generations” i.e. the genealogy, family history. (Gen. v. 1; vi. 9; x. 1; Matt. i. 1.)

GENESIS = creation or origin. The first book in the Old Testament. It contains the history of about 2365 years, and is divided into two main parts;—one universal, and one special. The most ancient history of the whole human race is contained in chapters i.—xi.; and the history of the house of Abraham, and the patriarchs in chapters xii.—i. But whence did Moses derive the materials for the history contained in Genesis? He must have derived his knowledge of the events which he records, either from immediate Divine revelation, or from oral tradition, or from ancient written documents. The nature of many of the facts related, and the minuteness of the narration, render it entirely improbable that Moses received them by an immediate revelation. That his knowledge should have been derived from oral tradition, appears morally impossible, notwithstanding the length of the lives of the patriarchs, when we consider the great number of names, of ages, of dates, and of minute events which are recorded. It remains then, that Moses must have derived his information from archaic records, written by different persons and at different periods, long anterior to his own times. Some of the ancient records, wrought up by Moses in Genesis, are evidently of such a nature that they could have been derived only from immediate revelation to the father of our race. How otherwise can we account for the narration of that which took place before man existed to have witnessed it, but from a supernatural communication? Thus then, it appears far from improbable that we have, in Genesis, materials gathered from the family archives of Abram and his ancestors; documents from the hands of Jacob, Abraham, Shem, Noah, and, possibly ascending higher still, authentic memorials from Enoch, Seth, and Adam. The ancient memorials being carefully preserved, were under Divine guidance collected, arranged, and condensed, by Moses,—with additions from authentic monuments preserved among the Egyptians, Phenicians, Edomites, and other surrounding nations,—probably during the middle part of his life which he spent in the retirements of Arabia. We have several instances in the Old Testament, of written records being used by the sacred writers; (Num. xxi. 14; Josh. x. 13; 2 Sam. i. 18; 1 Chron. iv. 22; ix. 1; ) and not improbably in the Gospels. (Luke i. 1, 2.) Nothing can be more natural, in the composition of such a book as Genesis, than the use of earlier authentic records, in order to constitute it an introduction to the other four books of the Pentateuch. Nor does the use of ancient fragments diminish the value of the book in the least, but rather, by exhibiting the fruits of study and research, increases it; and the whole being composed by an inspired writer, has received the sanction of the Holy Spirit in an equal degree with any other book of the inspired volume. The writer was evidently a Hebrew who was well acquainted with everything relating to ancient Egypt and Arabia. Moses was educated in the Egyptian court. (Acts vii. 22.) He also lived many years in the wilderness, and became, doubtless, intimately conversant with the whole Arabian peninsula. He, therefore, had the best possible opportunity to become acquainted with everything relative to the natural and civil condition of those two countries. He is the only Hebrew known, who ever possessed this advantage; no other one could have written the Pentateuch. The accounts given by ancient classical writers, as well as the monuments of Egypt and Assyria, frequently furnish splendid confirmations of the truth of the Mosaic history.

GENNESARET = Harp. A small region of Galilee on the western shore of the Lake of Tiberias, three and a half miles in length, and nearly two and a half in breadth, and distinguished for its fertility and beauty. It derived its name from the ancient city “Chinnereth”; (Josh. xix. 35;) but is now called el-Ghoseir—"Little Ghor."

GENUBATH = theft. The son of Hadas the Edomite. (1 Kings xi. 20.)

GENTILES. The Hebrew word גירה, and the Greek word εθνος, rendered "nation," "gentile" also "heathen," signify a people, nation, race; and are used of nations universally, and also of the Hebrews; (Isa. i. 4.; Gen. xxv. 11; xii. 2; Ps. xxxii. 12; Acts xvii. 26; 1 Pet. ii. 9; Matt. xx. 25; and also of nations foreign to the Hebrews; (Neh. v. 8; Jer. xxxii. 20; and of pagan nations, idolaters. (Ps. ii. 1; Jer. xxxi. 10; Ezk. xxx. 11; Matt. iv. 15; Luke ii. 32; Rom. ii. 14; iii. 29.) Sometimes the term "Greeks" is used for "Gentiles." (Rom. i. 14, 18; 1 Cor. i. 22-24; Gal. iii. 28.) The Greek term Ἑλληνες, sometimes rendered "Gentiles," denotes the Greeks. The "Gentiles," or "Nations," in Gen. iv. 1; Josh. xii. 23, may designate nations of the West, or perhaps the united Nations or Tribes.

GERA = a grain. 1. The father of Shimai. (2 Sam. xvi. 5.) 2. Four descendants of Benjamin. (Gen. xlvi. 21; Judg. iii. 15; 1 Chron. viii. 3, 5, 7.)

GERAH = a grain, berry. The smallest weight and money of the Hebrews, equivalent to the twentieth part of a shekel; and equal to about three half-pence of our money. (Ex. xxx. 13; Lev. xxvii. 25; Num. iii. 47; xviii. 13.)

GERAR = a sojourn, lodging-place, perhaps also water-pot. A city not far from Gaza; anciently the residence of a Philistine king. The "valley of Gerar" was probably the great Wady Sherıck, or one of its branches. (Gen. xx. 1; xxvi. 1, 17, 20, 26.)

GERASENES. The inhabitants of the city of Gerasa = expulsion or possession! This city was situated in the eastern part of Gilead, near the confines of the Arabian desert, on a small stream which flows into the Zuras, and was one of the cities of the Decapolis. It was large, opulent, and splendid; as is apparent from the magnificent ruins still remaining. It is now called Jerash. Many manuscripts read "Gerasenes" in Matt. viii. 28, where others have "Ger-

GERGESENES. = See Gergashites and Gadarenes.

GERIZIM = dwelling in a corner or desert land. One of the mountains of Ephraim, situated over against Mount Ebal, (Deut. xi. 29; xxvii. 12; Josh. viii. 33) and over Shechem; on which, after the exile, a temple was built by the Samaritans as the seat of their national worship. Mount Gerizim seems to be properly Mount of the Gerizites; it is now called Jebel el-Tur. The summit, which is high table land, commands a wide view of the country, and especially of the great plain below. Mount Gerizim is referred to as "this Mountain," in Christ's conversation with the woman of Samaria, at Jacob's well—which still exists at the base of the Mountain. (John vi. 20, 21.) In Deut. xxvii. 4, the Samaritan text has changed "Mount Ebal" into "Mount Gerizim," in order to give sanction to the temple built by the Samaritans, not long after the time of Nehemiah, upon the latter Mountain. —See Ebal.

GERSHOM = expulsion, or a sojourn or there. 1. The first of the two sons (Eliezer was the second) born to Moses in Midian by Zipporah. (Ex. ii. 22; xviii. 3.) These sons of the great lawgiver held no other rank than that of simple Levites, while all the privileges of the priesthood were vested in the sons of their uncle Aaron. (1 Chron. xxiii. 14.) 2. The father of Jonathan the priest to the tribe of Dan. (Judg. xvi. 30.) 3. A descendant of Phinehas. (Exiv. viii. 2.) 4. —See Gershom.

GERSHON = expulsion. A son of Levi and the founder of the family of the "Gersonites." (Gen. xlix. 11) Ex. xvi. 16; 1 Chron. vi. 1.) He is called "Gershom," in 1 Chron. vi. 16, 17, 20. The office of the Gersonites was to carry the vails and curtains belonging to the tabernacle, on the western side of which they encamped. (Num. iii. 23-26; xxvi. 57.)
GER

GERSHONITES. — See Gershon.

GERZITES. — See Gezer.

GESHAM = filthy. A descendant of Caleb. (1 Chron. ii. 47.)

GESHEM = raia, i.e. violent raia. An Arabian, who was probably a subaltern officer among the Samaritans. (Neh. ii. 19; vi. 1, 2.) In Neh. vi. 6, he is called “Gashmu.”

GESHUR = a bridge. A district of Syria, in the neighbourhood of Gilead, probably at the foot of Mount Hermon, on the north of Bashan and Argob. In David’s time it was subject to king Toli- mai, whose daughter David married. (1 Chron. ii. 23; 2 Sam. iii. 3; xiii. 37; xv. 8.) The inhabitants are called “Geshuri,” (Dent. iii. 14,) and “Geshurites.” (Joshua xii 5; xiii. 11, 13.) Probably a branch of the same family early settled in the south of Palestine. (Josh. xiii. 2; 1 Sam. xxvii. 8.)

GESHER. — See Geshur.

GESHERITE. — See Geshur.

GATHER = redundant. A son of Aram; who gave name to an Aramean region now unknown. (Gen. x. 23.)

GETISEMANE = oil-press. A small field, or garden, just out of Jerusalem, over the brook Kidron, and at the foot of the Mount of Olives. Dr. Robinson says, the place fixed on by early tradition as the site of Gethsemane, is a plat of ground nearly square, enclosed by an ordinary stone wall. The west side measures 160 feet in length; and the north side 150 feet. Within this enclosure are eight very old olive-trees, and several young ones, with stones thrown together around their trunks. There is nothing peculiar in this plat to mark it as Gethsemane; for adjacent to it are other similar enclosures, and many olive trees equally old. The spot was not improbably fixed upon during the visit of Helena to Jerusalem, A.D. 326; when the places of the crucifixion and resurrection were supposed to be identified. Whether it is the true site, is perhaps a matter of more question. According to John xxi. 1, 2, Jesus “went forth over the brook Cedron, where was a garden.” But Luke xxii. 39, says He “went out as He was wont to the Mount of Olives.” This last passage, taken in connection with Luke xxii. 37, where it is said that He taught in the daytime in the temple, and at night went out and abode in the Mount of Olives, may suggest a doubt, whether Gethsemane was not perhaps situated higher up on the Mount of Olives. Here, or at least not far off, the Saviour endured “that agony and bloody sweat,” which was connected with the redemption of the world. (Matt. xxvi. 42.)

GEUEL = majesty of God. A descendant of Daon. (Num. xiii. 15.)

GEZER = a steep place, precipice. A royal city of the Canaanites; (Josh. x. 33; xii. 12;) situated on the western border of Ephraim, and assigned to the Levites. (Josh. xvi. 3, 10; xxii. 21; Judg. i. 29.) The inhabitants are called “Gezrites,” margin “Gerizites.” (1 Sam. xxvii. 8.) It was destroyed by the Egyptians, and re-built by Solomon. (1 Kings ix. 15—21.) It is called “Gazer;” (2 Sam. v. 25;) and “Gob.” (2 Sam. xxii. 18, 19; compare 1 Chron. xx. 4.)

GEZRITES. — See Gezer.

GHOST. — See Spirit.

GIAH = breaking forth. A place near Gibeon. (2 Sam. ii. 24.)

GIANT = earth-born. This word is derived from the Greek gigantes, in allusion to the Classical myth of the Titans, who are said to be the sons of Terra = earth, and as being of gigantic size. These beings of unusual height are found in the early history of most nations, from some broken traditions respecting the antediluvian apostates, who, in the sense of being earthly, sensual, vile, despising heavenly things, might justly be denominated “earth-born.” The Hebrew word nephilim, rendered “giants,” is a term descriptive of cruelty, rapine, monsters of wickedness and lust, as well as of enormous stature (Num. xiii. 33.) The nephilim are also called gibborim = “mighty men,” heroes, who of old were men of renown, and had made themselves famous, by their deeds of violence, robbery, and wrong. (Gen. vi. 4; Job xvi. 14.) The term Reapa = high, tall, or lofty ones, not only denotes an ancient Canaanitish tribe beyond the Jordan, celebrated for their gigantic stature, but is sometimes used to denote all the giant tribes of Canaan. (Gen. xiv. 6.) This term is rendered "giants," (Deut. ii. 11, 20; iii. 11, 13; Josh. xii. 11, 13; xi. 21; xv. 15, and "Rephaim," (Gen. xiv. 6; xv. 20; Josh. xvii. 15, in the margin.) The term "Repha," = high, tall, translated "giants," margin "Repha," is the name of the founder of a family of Rephaim, who dwelt in Gath. Some of his posterity were men of great stature, and had on every hand six fingers, and on every foot six toes. (2 Sam. xxi. 22; 1 Sam. xii. 4; 1 Chron. xx. 4—8.) The "Anakim," were a race of giants terrible for their fierceness and stature, whose seat, before the invasion by the Hebrews, was in the vicinity of Hebron. The Hebrew spies reported that in comparison to those monstrous men, they themselves were but as grasshoppers. (Num. xiii. 22, 32, 33; Deut. ii. 10, 11.) They were for the most part reduced by Joshua and Caleb, yet numbers of them escaped and took refuge in the country of the Philistines, and settled there. (Josh. xi. 21, 22; xii. 14; Deut. ii. 10, 11; ix. 2; Judg. i. 20.) The "Emim," were a people of Moab, "a people great and many, and tall, as the Anakim; which also were accounted Rephaim or giants." (Gen. xiv. 4; Deut. ii. 10, 11.) The "Zamzummim" were a race of giants, who dwelt in the territory of the Ammonites, but were extinct before the time of Moses. (Deut. ii. 20, 21.) From this enumeration, it is evident that the Scriptures tell of giants both before and after the Flood. But the opinion that the primitive races of men greatly surpassed others in stature, cannot be inferred from Scripture; it is not supported by the remains of human beings found in tombs of Egypt, nor by the monuments which have survived from remote antiquity. Neither is there any variety of stature in the different races of men which can afford any ground for suspecting them to be of distinct origin or species. There are no varieties of stature in different nations which are so considerable as those which frequently occur in the same family.

GIBBAR = a mighty man, hero. One whose posterity returned from exile; (Ezra ii. 20;) or perhaps the name of a city, apparently Gibeon. (Neh. vii. 25.)

GIBBETHON = a height, hill. A city of the Philistines in Dan; (Josh. xix. 44;) and assigned to the Levites. (Josh. xxii. 23; 1 Kings xxvii. 15, 17.)

GIBEA = a hill. A descendant of Caleb. (1 Chron. ii. 49.)

GIBEAH = a hill. A city of Benjamin, also called "Gibeah of Benjamin," (1 Sam. xiii. 15; 2 Sam. xx. 19,) and "Gibeah of Saul." (1 Sam. vi. 4.) It is also "Gibeah of God," rendered "hill of God." (1 Sam. v. 5;) and "Gibeah." (Josh. xviii. 28; Hos. v. 8; ix. 9; x. 1; 1 Sam. xx. 28.) It was the scene of the atrocious crime, which involved in its consequences almost the entire extermination of the tribe of Benjamin. (Judg. xii. 12—30; xx. 1—48.) It seems to have been reckoned among the ancient sanctuaries of Palestine. (1 Sam. v. 5; xx. 19; xxi. 1; 2 Sam. xxi. 18—20.) The inhabitants were called "Gibeahites." (1 Chron. xii. 3.) It is now a place with ruins, called Tell el Fust = Hill of beans or Bean-hill, about four and a half miles from Jerusalem. 2. A place in Judah, about ten miles south-west of Jerusalem. (Josh. xv. 57.) It is now called Job's, and lies upon an isolated hill in Wady-el-Muarr. 3. A place in the mountains of Ephraim, called also "Gibeh," or "Hill of Phinehas." (Josh. xxiv. 33.) It is now called Job's, and lies in Wady-el-Jeb. 4. A place near Gilgal, called in the margin "Gibeah-heremoth" = Foreskins' hill. (Josh. v. 3.)

GIBEATH = See GIBEAH.

GIBEON = hill-city. A royal city of the Hivites, whose inhabitants, secured by stratagem the protection and alliance of the Hebrews. (Josh. ix. 3–27; x. 1–14. The place afterwards fell to the lot of Benjamin, and became a Levitical city; (Josh. xviii. 25; xxi. 17;) where the tabernacle was set up for many years under David and Solomon. (1 Chron. xvi. 39; xxi. 29; 2 Chron. i. 3, 4; 1 Kings iii. 4. 15; ix. 2.) It is now a village with massive ruins, called el-Jib, situated on the summit of a hill about five miles north-west of Jerusalem. The "Pool of Gibeon" may be the waters of the fountain; (2 Sam. 12–32; xx. 8–12;) and these are also probably "the great, or many waters in Gibeon." (Jer. xlii. 12.) In 1 Chron. xvi. 16, "Gibeon" appears to have been put for "Geba" by an error in transcribing. (2 Sam. v. 25.)

GIBEONITES. The Hivites, inhabiting the four Canaanitish cities Gibeon, Chephirah, Beeroth, and Kirjath-jearim; where they appear to have enjoyed a sort of democratic government. (Josh. ix. 11; compare x. 2.) They secured the protection and alliance of Joshua by stratagem. Upon the discovery of the truth, they were reduced to the condition of bondmen, or "hewers of wood and drawers of water for the congregation, and for the altar of the Lord." (Josh. ix. 27.) The Gibeonites continued faithful to the Hebrews; nevertheless Saul slew great numbers of them when he smote the city of Nob with the edge of the sword, (1 Sam. xxviii. 18, 19;) for which, in the reign of David, the Hebrews were visited by a most grievous famine; and Saul's cruelty towards the unoffending Gibeonites was punished on his own house. (2 Sam. xxii. 1–9.)

GIBLITES.—See Gebal.

GIDDALTI = made great. A son of Heman. (1 Chron. xxv. 4, 29.)

GIDDEL = too great, giant. Two men whose posterity returned from exile. (Esra. ii. 47; Neh. vi. 49; Esra. ii. 56; Neh. vii. 63.)

GIDEON = tree-feller, i. e. impetuous warrior. A judge or regent of the Hebrews, who delivered them from the bondage of Midian. He was the son of Joash of the tribe of Manasseh; and having destroyed the worship of Baal, was surnamed Jerubbaal or Jerubbesheth = with whom Baal or the idol contends. (Judg. vi. 32; 2 Sam. xi. 21.) After the overthrow of the Midianites, Gideon, in the true spirit of theocracy, rejected the proffer of hereditary royalty, which the rulers in the warmth of their gratitude had made him. From the golden earrings of the slaughtered foe, Gideon made an "euph," probably in honour of Jehovah. It became, however, a snare to the Hebrews who dwelt in Gilead; who neglected the tabernacle at Shiloh, and fell into idolatry. (Judg. viii. 24–33.) Gideon judged the Hebrews forty years. (Judg. vi. 1–40; vii. 1–25; viii. 1–35; 1 Sam. xii. 11; Heb. xi. 32.)

GIDEONI = cutting down, destroyer. A man of the tribe of Benjamin. (Num. i. 11; ii. 22.)

GIDOM = a cutting down. A place in the tribe of Benjamin. (Judg. xx. 45.)

GIER EAGLE.—See Eagle.

GIFTS. The practice of making presents as a token of honour, respect, or affection, prevailed extensively in the East. (Gen. iv. 3, 11; 1 Sam. ix. 7; xvi. 20; Job xlii. 11.) Hence to refuse making presents to a king was deemed a mark of contempt. (1 Sam. x. 27.) Kings often made presents of garments to those whom they were disposed to honour. (Gen. xlv. 22, 23; 2 Kings x. 22; Matt. xxii. 11, 12.) Gifts for the purposes of bribery and corruption are strongly reprobated. (Ex. xxiii. 8; Deut. x. 17; Ps. xlv. 5; xxxvi. 10; Is. i. 23; xxxiii. 18.) The peculiar offerings under the law are spoken of as "gifts." (Deut. xvi. 17; Matt. v. 23, 24.) The blessings of the Gospel are preeminently called "gifts." (Rom. v. 15–21; vi. 23; Eph. iv. 8–12.) Spiritual gifts were bestowed on the Apostles; such as the gift of tongues, of prophecy, etc.; and when the end of conferring them was answered they ceased. Among the disciples at Corinth they were not always exercised in an orderly and edifying way. (Rom. xii. 6; 1 Cor. xiii. 2, 8.)
GIH

GIHON = a stream, river. The second of the four rivers of Eden, which is said to flow around the land of Cush or Ethiopia; thus indicating the Ethiopian Nile. (Gen. ii. 13.) Some apply here the Arabic usage of the word Jihoon = river, and understand the Araxes; thus taking Cush in a sense very different from the usual one. 2. A fountain with a stream and pools near Jerusalem. (1 Kings i. 38, 39.) Hesekiah "stopped" or covered over the upper out-flow of the waters of Gihon, and brought it down to the west side of Jerusalem; (2 Chron. xxxii. 30; xxxiii. 14;) in order to cut off the supply of water from the approaching Assyrian army. (2 Chron. xxxii. 1-4.) This fountain, or one of the pools, was also called the "dragon well." (Neh. ii. 13.) Dr. Robinson says, "the waters may still continue to flow by subterranean channels down to the ancient temple, and perhaps to Siloam."

GILALAI = dumgyl. A Levite after the exile. (Neh. xii. 36.)

GILBOA = boiling fountain. A mountainous tract, in Issachar, south of the plain of Jezreel. (1 Sam. xvii. 4; xxxi. 1-6; 2 Sam. i. 6-21.) The name was probably derived from a town near a fountain; perhaps the village now called Jelbon.

GILEAD = hard, stony region, or heap or hill of testimony. 1. A district of Palestine beyond the Jordan, strictly comprehending the mountainous region south of the river Jabok; (Gen. xxxii. 21-48; Judg. vii. 3; Sol Song iv. 1;) with a city of like name. The highest point of the mountains east of the Jordan, is still named Jebel el Jilad or es-Salt, from the ruined city of that name, rising about 3000 feet above the Ghor. But the name "Gilead" was also employed in a wider sense, so as to include the whole mountainous tract between the Arnon and Bashan, inhabited by the tribes of Gad, Reuben and Manasseh, now called el-Beka and Jebel Ajman. (Num. xxxii. 28, 29, 39; Deut. iii. 12, 15; xxxiv. 1; Judg. v. 16, 17; Josh. xii. 2, 5; xiii. 11, 31, 32; Ps. lx. 7; cxxii. 8.) This fertile region was famous for its medicinal balsams, which formed important articles of commerce. (Gen. xxxvii. 2; Jer. viii. 22; xlv. 11; li. 8.) 2. A son of Machir; his descendants are called "Gileadites." (Num. xxxv. 29, 30.) 3. The father of Jephthah. (Judg. xi. 2; ii. 4.) 4. A descendant of Gad. (1 Chron. v. 14.)

GILGAL = circle, or a rolling down. 1. A place situated between Jericho and the Jordan. (Josh. iv. 19, 20; v. 9; ix. 6; x. 6, 7; xiv. 6; xv. 7.) Also called "Beth-Gilgal" = house of the circle. (Neh. xi. 29.) The ancient district seems to have been called "Geliloth" = circles, or districts. (Josh. xviii. 17.) Samuel came to Gilgal in his annual circuit as judge; (1 Sam. vii. 16; x. 8; xi. 14, 15; xii. 4-9; xv. 21, 33;) and here also was a school of the prophets. (2 Kings iv. 38.) It was situated in the vicinity of the village of Rika; but no trace either of its name or site now remains. The Hebrew term translated "quarries," signifies, as in the margin, "green images," or idols. (Judg. iii. 19,) which were worshipped in Gilgal. (Hos. iv. 15; ix. 15; Am. v. 6.) 2. A place in the western part of Palestine; not far from Antipatris. (Deut. xi. 30; Josh. xii. 23; Neh. xii. 29.) It is now a village called Jiljulah.

GILOH = exile. A city in the mountains of Judah. The inhabitants were called "Gilonites." (Josh. xv. 51; 2 Sam. xv. 12.)

GIMZO = place fertile in succamore. A place in the plain of Judaea, east of Lydda. (2 Chron. xxviii. 18.) It is still a large village called Jisra.

GINATH = a garden. The father of Thbi. (1 Kings xvi. 21, 22.)

GINNETHON = gardener. A priest who returned from exile. (Neh. x. 6; xii. 16.) In Neh. xii. 4, he is called "Ginetho."

GIRDLE. The girdle which confined the loose tunic was of two kinds. One was a band of leather six inches broad, sometimes studded with metal bosses, or plated, and when worn with the cuirass defended the lower part of the body; it was fastened with clasps or buckles. (2 Kings i. 8; Matt. iii. 4; Mark i. 4.) The other was of worsted, linen, cotton, or silk, long and narrow, and wound in many folds round the waist. (Jer. xiii. 1 ; Ezek. xvi. 10.) A girdle curiously and richly wrought, was, among the Hebrews, a mark of honour; (Rev. i. 15.) and sometimes bestowed as a reward of merit. (2 Sam. xviii. 11.) The girdle worn by females was sometimes embroidered and ornamented with studs. (Isa. iii. 24.) The girdle answered the purpose of a pocket or purse. (Matt. x. 9 ; Mark vi. 8 ; Ezek. ix. 2.) To "gird up the loins," denotes readiness for service and activity; (1 Kings xvii. 46 ; Job xxxviii. 3 ; Prov. xxi. 17 ; Luke xii. 35 ; 1 Pet. i. 13;) and to "loose the girdle" was to give way to reposes and indolence. (Isa. v. 27.)
GIR  GLO

GIRGASHITES—dwellers in a clayey loamy soil. A Canaanitish tribe, also called "Girgasites." Perhaps the same as the "Gergesenes" who dwelt at Gergesa, in the territory of Gadara. (Gen. x. 16 ; xv. 21 ; Josh. xxiv. 11 ; Deut. vii. 1 ; Matt. vii. 28.)—See GADARENE.

GISPA = cores, matter. An overseer of the Nethinim. (Neh. xi. 21.)

GITTATH-HEPHER.—See GATH-HEPHER.

GITTAIM = two wine-pressers. A city in Benjamin. (Neh. xi. 33.)

GITTITES.—See GATH.

GITTIT = a stringed instrument. A kind of harp or lyre; perhaps the same as the Ne根noth. (Ps. vii. lxxxv. in the titles.)

GIZONITE. An inhabitant of Gizo = quarry. (1 Chron. xi. 34.)

GLASS. The Egyptians appear to have been acquainted with the manufacture of glass long before the time of Moses; and the whole process is represented in the paintings of Beni Hassan. The glass-blowers of Thebes were greater proficient in their art than we are. In the British Museum there are bottles and vases of porcelain or opaque glass; and also a piece of glass beautifully stained throughout, and skillfully engraved with the emblazonment of Thothmes III. To produce this effect of glass staining, oxides of cobalt, or of calcined copper and zinc, must have been used for blue, oxide of gold for purple, oxide of silver for yellow, and oxide of copper for green. They imitated amethysts and other precious stones with wonderful dexterity; and they must have been aware of the use of the diamond in cutting and engraving glass. Glass bowls and bottles were found by Mr. Layard in the ruins of Nineveh; also a vase of transparent glass with the name of Sargon on it. The Hebrews were undoubtedly acquainted with glass. The Hebrew word sekalim, rendered "crystal," denotes glass. (Job. xxvii. 17.) The Greek word eidos is properly rendered "glass;" (Rev. xxi. 18, 21;) glassy, i.e. transparent. (Rev. iv. 8 ; xv. 2.) But the Hebrew word gilgalem rendered "glasses," (Isa. iii. 23,) signifies mirrors, properly tablets or plates of polished metal, which were used by the Hebrew women as mirrors. So also, the Greek word esoptron, rendered "glass," denotes a metal mirror. (James i. 23 ; 2 Cor. iii. 18 ; 1 Cor. xiii. 12.)—See LOOKING-GLASS.

GLEAN. According to the Mosaic law the corners of the field were not to be reaped—the owner was not to glean his own fields—and a sheaf accidentally left behind in the field was not to be fetched away, but left for the poor. There were equally liberal regulations respecting the vineyards and the oliveyards. (Lev. xix. 9, 10 ; xxii. 23 ; Deut. xxiv. 19—21 ; Ruth ii. 8, 14.)

GLEDE.—See VULCREM.

GLORY. The Hebrew word cabod, signifying to be heavy, is spoken of the liver as being the heaviest of the viscera, both in weight and importance; just as the lungs, the lightest of all are in our language called the lights. (Lev. iii. 4, 10 ; Prov. vii. 23 ; Ezek. xxi. 21.) Like the Greek doxa, it denotes abundance, honour, splendour; and is rendered "honour;" (Gen. xli. 6 ; Ps. vii. 5 ; Prov. viii. 18;) and "glory." (Gen. xxxi. 1 ; Isa. x. 3 ; Matt. iv. 8 ; Luke iv. 6 ; Rev. xxi. 24.) The "glory of Lebanon," its magnificence and beauty. (Isa. xxxv. 2.) So of the splendour of the sun, stars, etc. (1 Cor. xv. 40, 42) of glorified saints; (Luke ix. 31, 32) of and celestial light. (Rev. xiii. 1.) The glory and majesty of Jehovah, that firey effulgence in which He is represented as appearing. (Lev. ix. 23, 24; Isa. lix. 19; 2 Thess. i. 9.) The perfections of God, as manifested in His power; (John xi. 40; Rom. vi. 4.) and beneficence. (Rom. ix. 23; Eph. iii. 18.) Also of Jesus, as the effulgence of the Divine perfections. (Heb. i. 3; John i. 14; ii. 11.) The term “Glory” is used also of glorified saints i.e. salvation, eternal life, etc. (Rom. ii. 7, 10; v. 2; viii. 18; 1 Cor. ii. 7; Heb. ii. 10.) So to “glory” when spoken of God and Christ, is to render conspicuous and glorious the character and attributes of God as glorified by the Son; (John xii. 28; xiii. 31, 32; xiv. 13; xvi. 8; xxii. 1, 4.) of Christ as glorified by the Father; (John viii. 54; xiii. 32; xxii. 1; Acts iii. 18; 1 Cor. xii. 3.) or by the Spirit; (John xvi. 14; or by Christians; (John xvi. 10.) or generally. (Lev. x. 8; John x. 4; xii. 13.)

GNAT. The Hebrew word noudem, rendered “lice,” properly means goats. (Ex. viii. 16–18.) In the third plague which Jehovah inflicted upon the Egyptians, “the dust of the land became gnats upon man, and upon beast.” These are even in ordinary years very troublesome in Egypt. All travellers speak of these gnats as an ordinary plague of the country. In cool weather they are especially bold. They pursue the men, prevent them from eating; disturb their sleep, and cause swellings which are extremely painful. (Matt. xxiii. 24.)

GOAD. A stout rod with a small spade at one end to free the ploughshare from clods, and a small pike at the other end, with which the oxen were urged on. (Judg. iii. 31; 1 Sam. xiii. 21; Acts ix. 5.) The “words of the wise are as goads,” i.e. they penetrate the minds of men and stir them up to the practice of duty. (Ecc. xii. 11.)

GOAT. The goat exhibits varieties of form and appearance; they are both hairy and woolly. The goats of Aleppo are of two breeds; one is like the English, and the other somewhat larger, with ears often a foot long, and broad in proportion. There is a breed of goats near Jerusalem of various colours, black, white, and grey; the ears are remarkably long. (Am. iii. 12.) Goats were among the chief possessions of the wealthy; they formed a principal part of the Hebrew flocks; and both the milk and the young kids were daily articles of food. (Gen. xxvii. 9; 1 Sam. xxv. 2; 2 Chron. xvii. 11; Ex. xxxiii. 19; Prov. xxvii. 27; Deut. xiv. 4.) The goat was a pure animal for Jewish sacrifice, and a kid might be substituted as equivalent to a lamb. (Ex. xii. 5; Lev. iii. 12; xvi. 15; Num. xv. 27; Ezra vi. 17.) The hair was manufactured into curtains for the tabernacle, and coverings for tents. (Ex. xxv. 4; xxvi. 7.) The soal, or “wild goat” is probably the ibex or mountain goat, called by the Arabs beden. They are still found in the mountains in and adjacent to the peninsula of Sinai, and in the mountains east and south of the Dead sea, the ancient mount Seir. From Lev. xvii. 7, it appears that the rebellious Hebrews, while in the desert, fell into the idolatrous worship of the Ac-goat, (rendered “devils,” compare 2 Chron. xi. 15,) after the example of the Egyptians, under whose influences they had grown up.

GOAT, SCAPE.—See SCAPE GOAT. GOTH = living. A place near Jerusalem. (Jer. xxxi. 39.)

GOB.—See GEBER.

GOD. The two principal Hebrew names of the Supreme Being are Jehovah, and Elohim. Other appellations frequently occur, but they belong rather to his attributes; they are enumerated in Ex. xxxiv. 5–7; xv. 11–13; Deut. vi. 4; x. 17, 18; Isa. xlv. 6; Hab. iii. 6; Ps. cii. 27; Prov. xv. 3; Rev. i. 8; vii. 11, 12. The term “God” is quite a different word from the Angle-Saxon word god = god. In the Icelandic Godi, whence perhaps “God,” signifies the Supreme Magistrate. Demonstrative cartainty of the existence of a Supreme Being is, perhaps, unattainable, inasmuch as that would seem to be inconsistent with our condition, as moral and accountable agents. Neither, however, is the contrary capable of being demonstrated. But as we everywhere meet with marks of design, we cannot but trace them to one great intelligent designing cause. So also the existence of an All-Perfect-Mind, who created, and sustains all things, appears to be no less a matter of universal human consciousness than of Divine revelation. (Heb. xi. 6.) In the Scriptures no attempt is made to prove the existence of a God; such an attempt would have been entirely useless, because the fact was universally admitted. The error of men consisted, not in denying the existence of a God, but in admitting too many; and one great object of the Bible is to show that there is but one. (Deut. iv. 35, 39; vi. 4; xxxii. 39, 40; Is. xxxii. 8; xiv. 6, 8; xiii. 10; xiv. 6—22; xlv. 9; Ps. lxxxvi. 8; Mark xii. 29; John xvi. 5; Rom. xvi. 27; iii. 29, 30; 1 Tim. ii. 5; 1 Cor. viii. 4—6.) The term Jehovah signifies the Existing One, the Eternal, the Immutable, and is generally translated "Lord," while Elohim, meaning the Supreme God, is used to indicate the abundance and super excellence contained in the Divine Being. Elohim, translated "God," is the abstract expression for absolute Deity apart from the special notions of unity, holiness, substance, etc.; and occurs generally in the plural form, yet connected with a verb in the singular. For the sake of emphasis, the Hebrews commonly employed most of the words which signify Lord, God, etc., in the plural form, but with the sense of the singular. This is called the plural of excellence, or of majesty. So the forms Adonai = God; Kedoshim = the most Holy One; (Hos. xi. 12; Prov. ix. 10; xxxi. 3; Josh. xix. 19; Shaddai = the Almighty; Osai = my Maker; Job xxxv. 10; and Bereks = thy Creator, are all in the plural. (Escl. xii. 1; Isa. xxii. 11; xlii. 5; Ps. cvi. 2.) Baeem = lord; and Teraphim = household god, are used in the same way. (1 Sam. xix. 13, 14.) The evidence, however, drawn by some, from this peculiar use of the plural, of a plurality of persons in the Godhead, seems too doubtful to be relied upon. That promissas were used in a similar way, among the Oriental nations, seems to be somewhat certain: "The letter which ye have sent unto us," it is king Artaxerxes who says this; ( Ezra iv. 18;) "We will take the interpretation of it," (Dan. ii. 36;) "Like one of us;" (Gen. iii. 22;) "Let us go down, and let us confound;" (Gen. xi. 7;) also "Who will go for us." (Isa. vi. 8.) So also in Mark iv. 30; John iii. 11; 1 John i. 4. But if the plural term Elohim, evinces of itself a plurality in the Godhead, what shall be said of its use in Ps. xiv. 6, 7, where first the Son and then the Father is each respectively called Elohim? Is there then a plurality of persons in the Son and in the Father too? The use of the plural in respect to words denoting rank, authority, eminence, majesty, is merely for the purpose of giving to them greater fulness, emphasis, and intensity of meaning. At all events, the subject of such plurality of names is encompassed with so many difficulties, when viewed in any other light, that nothing positive can safely be built upon it, in respect to plurality in the Godhead; an expression, by the way, against which the graver and more cautious writers on the subject of the Trinity are often warning us, because of its polytheistic aspect. We do not expect to find as full and complete a revelation, in the old Testament, of this Christian doctrine, as in the new. Indeed, we have no evidence that the Jews were Trinitarians before the coming of Christ. All the efforts to prove it have ended in mere appeals to cabalizing Jews, who lived long after the new Testament was written. It remained for Christ to make the full revelation of this doctrine. It was only by the incarnation, that the Trinity of the Godhead was fully developed. And when the new Testament asserts, that this or that thing was done by Christ, or the Logos, under the ancient dispensation, or that this or that was spoken by Him, it is only then that we come to a full knowledge of any specific nature, as it respects the old Testament, concerning the persons of the Godhead. —See Trinity.

GODLY. That which proceeds from God, is Godlike, or pleasing to Him. It also signifies conformity to His will, and an assimilation to His character. (Ps. xli. 1; Mal. ii. 15; 2 Cor. i. 12; Tit. ii. 12.) "Godliness" denotes piety, resulting from the knowledge and the love of God, and leading to the cheerful and constant obedience of His commands. (2 Pet. i. 6; iii. 11.)

In 1 Tim. iii. 16, godliness means the substance of revealed religion, as developed in practical life.

GODS. Probably the first stage of idolatry was the worship of some representative of the Supreme Being; as the sun, the elements, or some favoured mortal. From this the transition would be easy to the worship of idols and beasts, considered as personifications and some divine principles, and as sources of good or evil to mankind. In process of time, heroes, and benefactors or even destroyers of mankind, their deeds being magnified by the dim light of tradition, came to be deified, as gods, or demigods, and objects of adoration. In a more recent age, although the study of philosophy flourished, the most wicked of heathen kings, while yet living, obtained temples, and procured priests to adore them, with the offering up of sacrifices. The doctrine of polytheism, or the belief of many gods, being thus disseminated, their number increased surprisingly; the gods of one nation being adopted by another, and frequently their history and attributes mingled in inextricable confusion. The gods of the heathen were of both sexes, lived in matrimony, committed adultery, and even polluted themselves by intercourse with mortals. (1 Kings xvii. 27, 28; xx. 29, 29; 2 Kings xvii. 24—34; Isa. xiv. 1; Jer. ii. 28; xlvii. 7; Hose. x. 5; Dan. xi. 36; Rev. xiii. 1—18.) —See Idolatry.

GOL. The king of the land of Magog, and ruler of Meshech and Tubal. (Ezek. xxxviii. 2—16; xxxix. 1—11.) In Rev. xx. 8, Gog, like Magog, seems to be the name of a remote region or people, and not of a king. 2. A descendant of Reuben. (1 Chron. v. 4.) —See Magog.

GOLAN = exile. A city of Bashan, afterwards belonging to Manasseh. (Deut. iv. 43; Josh. xx. 8; xxii. 27; 1 Chron. vii. 71.) The district of which it was the capital was called Gaulonites; and is recognized in the present Jaulas, bounded east by Hauran, and west by the country along the Lakes of Tiberias and Merom.

GOLD. The most valuable of the precious metals; and with the exception of Platinum, the heaviest of all known bodies. It is the most ductile of the metals, is not susceptible of rust, and is not sonorous when struck upon. The continual action of common fire, carried to its utmost vehemence, has no further effect on gold than the fusing of it; it will come out at last unaltered, and with its weight entire. On being exposed to a very powerful burning mirror, or to the heat of the oxy-hydrogen blow-pipe, it melts, and even rises in vapour. (1 Pet. i. 7.) The Hebrews had several words designating different kinds of gold. They obtained their supplies chiefly from Egypt; (Ex. xii. 35; Sheba; (1 Kings x. 2; Ophir; (1 Kings ix. 28; and Parvaim. (2 Chron. iii. 8.) The surfeiture regions of California and Australia were probably then unknown. No traveller in Palestine makes any mention of gold, except Dr. E. D. Clarke. At the Lake of Tiberias, he observes: "Native gold was found here formerly. We noticed an appearance of this kind, but, on account of its trivial nature, neglected to pay proper attention to it, notwithstanding, the hints given by more than one writer upon the subject." However, for every practical purpose, it may be said that Palestine has no gold. The purification of gold by fire is mentioned in Prov. xvii. 3; xxvii. 21. Lead and antimony are commonly used for purifying gold, but the ancients also made use of salt, of tin, and of barley-bran. (Prov. xvii. 3; xxvii. 21.) Gold was, in the earliest antiquity, manufactured into utensils, trinkets, and ornaments. (Gen. xiii. 2; xxiv. 22; xli. 42.) The Hebrews acquired their skill in the working of gold while in Egypt. (Ex. xxxv. 32.) Several utensils of the tabernacle, and many ornaments of the mercy-seat and the ark of the covenant, and subsequently many implements of the temple of Jerusalem, were made of gold. (Ex. xxv. 35; 1 Kings vi. 21, 22.)
GOL

The golden ornaments found in Egypt, and in Nineveh, some of them of elegant workmanship, show that the goldsmith’s art was carried to great perfection in remote antiquity. (Mal. iii. 2, 3; Judg. xvii. 4; Isa. xl. 19.)

GOLGOLTHA.—See CALVARY.

GOLIATH = exile, or exiled. A Philistine giant, slain by David in single combat. He was a native of Gath, and his height was six cubits and a span. (1 Sam. xvii. 4, 11, 23, 46—51; xxi. 9; xxii. 10.)—See LAHMI.

GOMER = coal, or the burned. 1. The eldest son of Japheth, and the progenitor of a northern people. (Gen. x. 2, 3; Ezek. xxxviii. 6.) Probably the Cimmerians, inhabiting the Chersonesus of Tanais and the adjacent regions, are to be understood. (Herod. i. 6, 15, 103; iv. 1, 11, 12.) The Arabs call this people Kirim, whence the modern Krime, the Crimean, i.e. the ancient Thracian Chersonesus; also Bahr-ei-kirinas, the Cimmerian sea, for the Euxine. 2. The wife of the prophet Hosea. (Hos. i. 3.)

GOMORRAH = submersion. One of the four towns in the vale of Siddim, submerged in the Salt sea. The recent traveller, M. de Saulcy, imagined he had found the ruins of Gomorrah, near the north-west angle of the Dead sea. But that was not the site of the city. The traveller had mistaken weather-fretted stones for ruins; and was evidently imposed upon by his Arab guides. Lieut. Van de Velde found there no ruins at all; though he had the advantage of De Saulcy’s map. (Gen. x. 19; xiv. 8; xix. 24, 25; Deut. xxix. 23.)

GOPHER-WOOD.—See LIME.

GOSEH = land of herbage or flowers. 1. A province or district of Egypt where the Hebrews dwelt from the time of Jacob until Moses, i. e. during the period of about two hundred and fifteen years. (Gen. xlv. 10; xlvi. 28, 34; xlvii. 27; i. 8; Ex. ix. 28.) It was situated in that part of lower Egypt lying east of the Pelusian branch of the Nile, between Heliopolis and the extremity of the Gulf of Suez. From Gen. xlvii. 28; xlvi. 1; Ex. xii. 17, it appears that the land of Goseh was the eastern border-land of Egypt, and that it was adjacent to the land of the Philistines. According to Gen. xlv. 10, Goseh was near to the royal residence of the kings of Egypt at that time, which, according to Josesus, was Memphis, but according to Ps. lixviii. 12, 43; Num. xiii. 22, was Zomar or Tanis, situated on the eastern side of the Tanitic arm of the Nile, and within the Delta. (Ex. ii. 3; v. 8.) The city of Hecopolis was reckoned to Goseh; and the whole district was sometimes called “Rameses,” after its capital. (Gen. xlvii. 11.) This region is described as a pasture-ground; (Gen. xlvii. 34; xlvii. 4;) and as one of the most fruitful parts of Egypt. (Gen. xlvii. 6, 11; Deut. xi. 10; Num. xi. 5.)

This tract is now comprehended in the modern province al-Shurkin, which extends from the neighbourhood of Abu Za’bel to the sea, and from the desert to the former Tanitic branch of the Nile; thus including also the valley of the ancient canal. It was called “the best of the land;” and even now it bears the highest valuation and yields the largest revenue. The immediate descendants of Jacob were doubtless nomadic shepherds dwelling in tents; and probably drove their flocks for pasture far up into the Wadys of the desert, like the present inhabitants of the same region. But in process of time, they became also tillers of the soil, and exchanged their tents for more fixed habitations. They lived interspersed among the Egyptians of that district, as appears from their borrowing "jewels of gold and silver," from their Egyptian neighbours; and also from their houses being marked with blood, in order that they might be distinguished and spared in the last dread plague of the Egyptians. (Ex. xi. 2; xii. 12, 13, 22, 23.) A'city, with the neighbouring districts, in the mountains of Judah. (Josh. x. 41; xi. 16; xv. 51.)

GOSPEL. The Greek word evangelia, signifying good news, is rendered by the appropriate term "Gospel," from the Anglo-Saxon God-spell, meaning God's word, instruction, or declaration. In the new Testament. The term Gospel is not applied to written documents, but only to the things described orally, the glad tidings concerning Christ and his salvation; (Matt. iv. 23; ix. 35; Mark i. 14; Acts xx. 24; Rev. xiv. 6;) or the gospel scheme, its doctrines, declarations, precepts, promises, etc. (Rom. ii. 16; 1 Cor. ix. 14; Gal. i. 11; Eph. i. 13; Phil. i. 5; Col. i. 5; 2 Tim. i. 10.) The term "Gospel" was not appropriated to the written documents, in the sense of a history, embodying the oral accounts concerning the life of Jesus, etc., as in the titles of the first four books of the new Testament, until after the apostolic period. The four Gospels which have been transmitted to us were written in the Greek language; and we learn from undoubted authority, that these four Gospels only, were ever received by the Christian church as the genuine and inspired writings of the evangelists, Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John. One of the first things which strikes the mind of the reader of the four Gospels, is the singular resemblance which these compositions bear to each other in many passages. Each of the Evangelists has indeed a character of individuality. The style of each is peculiar, the mental traits which they severally exhibit, are diverse. Each one has, to some extent, his own method of arrangement, and has some narrations which the others do not contain. But, even in the parts where the resemblance between them is strongest of all, the diversity is still such as to show that there is not the least probability that they copied each other, or merely copied common documents; but rather that each Gospel is a composition original and independent. The writers of the four Gospels appear to have based their compositions, partly on an original oral Gospel, possessing to some extent a stereotype character, which prevailed in the different circles of their Christian intercourse; and partly on written sources of information, or memorials, derived from eyewitnesses. Indeed, the existence of written records or memoranda is affirmed by Luke, in the proem to his Gospel. In this way we may well account for the similarity the Gospels exhibit to each other; and yet this would seem to have been produced without any direct connection between the Evangelists. The Gospels can in no sense be regarded as methodical annals, yet it is remarkable how every thing in them accords with the time taken and the places where they were composed. And the attentive reader can scarcely fail to observe how wonderfully the Evangelists are supplemental to each other in minute as well as important particulars, and thus exhibit fully and clearly the fundamental characteristic of their testimony, Unity in Diversity.

An argument in favour of the integrity of the Gospels down to the present time, may be derived from, and applied in its full strength, to the manuscripts in circulation near the end of the second century. In order to show how difficult it would have been to bring about any considerable changes in copies of the Gospels at that day, Mr. A. Norton has endeavoured to calculate, at near as may be, how many copies must have been at that period, in circulation. The number of manuscripts then in existence bore some proportion to the number of Christians, and this, to the whole population of the Roman empire. The population of the Roman empire in the time of the Antonines is estimated by Gibbon at about 120 millions; and, probably, it had not decreased at the period referred to. With regard to the proportion of Christians, if we suppose that not more than a twentieth part of the empire was Christian at the end of the third century, just after which the conversion of Constantine took place, we can hardly estimate more than a fortieth part of it as Christian at the end of the second century. The fortieth part of 120 millions, the estimated population of the empire, is three millions. At the end of the second century, then, there were three millions of believers, using our present Gospels, regarding them with the highest reverence, and anxious to obtain copies of them. Few possessions could have been more highly valued by a Christian than a copy of those books, which contained the history of the religion for which he was exposing himself to the severest sacrifices. If we suppose that there was only one copy of the Gospels for every fifty Christians, the estimate is probably much within the truth. This proportion, however, will give us sixty thousand copies of the Gospels for three millions of Christians. Even the cost at that period, of a manuscript copy of one of the Gospels, must have been but a very trifling consideration. Martial, in his Epigrams, has stated the price of his 13th book, which contains 272 verses, to have been four sesterces; or, if this should be thought too much, two sesterces; which would still leave a profit, as he says, to the bookseller. The last named sum amounts to a little over three-pence halfpenny of our money. With such facts in view, one can scarcely refrain from believing, that the estimate of 60,000 copies of the Gospels as being in circulation at the close of the second century, is far—very far—within the bounds of truth. At this period the numerous copies of the respective Gospels agreed essentially with each other. Had there been important discrepancies among these 60,000 copies, no series of events could either have destroyed the evidence of their discrepancies, or would have produced the present agreement among existing copies, derived as they are, from those in use at the period in question. It, therefore, that, in the interval between the composition of the Gospels and the end of the second century, their text did not suffer, as has been fancied, from the licentiousness of transcribers. But the Gospels, in addition to the usual motives for care in transcription, present the highly important and influential ones which are drawn from their being deemed sacred. They were the basis of the Christian religion, inasmuch as the words and deeds of Jesus, recorded in them, must be the foundation of this religion. It would have been deemed sacrilegious, therefore, to have purposely mutilated or disfigured these records in any way whatever. As the canon of the New Testament was finally settled before the close of the fourth century, the rejected writings which bore the names of the Apostles and Evangelists, which were chiefly forgeries by early heretics, and ever considered spurious by the faithful, soon sunk into merited oblivion; and few, if any have descended to our times in their original form.—See Epistles.

GOURD. The Hebrew word kikayon, rendered "gourd," is derived from the Egyptian word kiki or kouki, and is generally supposed to designate the Ricinus or Palm of Christ, whence the margin of Jon. iv. 6, has "Palmier," generally known by the name of the Castor-oil Plant. This plant, which is often cultivated in our gardens, is perennial and has the appearance of a shrub or woody-tree in its native clime, but biennial or annual in colder latitudes. This elegant plant is called al-kherwa by the Arabs; and at Jericho it still becomes a considerable tree. Like all plants of a very rapid growth, when injured, it quickly fades away. Thus, the Palm of Christ, which "came up in a night," i. e. grew rapidly, under whose shade Jonah sat, being at day-break struck by an insect, faded away so suddenly, that at sunshine the shrub was quite withered. (Jon. iv. 6—10.) The Hebrew word pokcoketh, rendered "wild gourde," may designate the colocynth, a plant of the cucumber tribe, producing round yellow fruits, extremely bitter, laxative, gripping, and hurtful to the nerves. This plant is indigenous in Palestine, in Syria, and in Arabia. (2 Kings iv. 39.)

GOVERNOR. The governors or satraps, of the large provinces among the ancient Persians, possessed both civil and military power. They are called Akhasardarpanis, from kratrapo—warrior of the host; and the term is translated “lieutenants.” (Ezra viii. 36; Est. iii. 12; viii. 9; ix. 3.) The prefect or governor was the governor of a province less than a satrapy; and was called Pahka—companion friend, the same as Psaki; and is generally rendered “governor,” “deputy,” “ruler,” and “captain.” It was applied to the governor in the Assyrian empire; (2 Kings xviii. 24; Isa. xxxvi. 9;) the Babylonian: (Jer. li. 57; Ezek. xxiii. 6, 23;) the Median; (Jer. lii. 23;) the Persian; (Est. viii. 9; ix. 3; Neh. ii. 7, 9; iii. 7; Ezra viii. 36;) also to the governor of Judea. (Hag. i. 1, 14; ii. 2, 21; Mal. i. 8.) This office was held by Zerubbabel, and then by Nehemiah. (Hag. i. 1, 14; Neh. v. 14, 18; xii. 26.) The term is occasionally used of a prefect of Judea, in the time of Solomon; (1 Kings x. 15; 2 Chron. xi. 14;) and of Syria in the days of Benhadad. (1 Kings xx. 24.) The term “governor” is also applied to the procurator and procurator of a Roman province. Cyrenius was “president” or procurator of the imperial province of Syria. (Luke ii. 2; Matt. x. 18; Mark xiii. 9; Luke xxi. 12; 1 Pet. ii. 14.) Sometimes the procurator discharged the office of a procurator or president, especially in a small province, or in a portion of a large province where the president could not reside; as did Pilate, who was procurator of Judea. Hence he had the power of punishing capitally, which the procurators did not usually possess. So also Felix, Festus, and the other procurators of Judea. (Matt. xxvii. 2, 11, 14, 15, 21, 23, 27; xxviii. 14; Luke xix. 20; Acts xxiii. 24, 26, 33, 34; xxiv. 1, 10; xxxi. 30.) While the Jews were under the Roman government, the only privilege, in respect to the officers of government, that was granted by the procurators to that nation, was the appointment from among them of persons to manage and collect the taxes. They also had the privilege of submitting litigated questions to referees, whose decisions the Roman governor was bound to see put in execution.

GOZAN = quarry. A region of Mesopotamia subject to the Assyrians, situated on the river Chebar, whether a part of the ten tribes was carried away by Shalmaneser. Ptolemy names this region Gozania; it is now called Kas-akra. Misled by an error in the text of 1 Chron. v. 26, several writers have considered “Gozan” as the name of a river, and have detected it in the present Kizzil Oza = Golden River, a stream running eastwards through that part of Persia that answers to the ancient Media, and emptying itself into the southern end of the Caspian Sea. The Habor or Chebar is the river of Gozan. (3 Kings xvii. 6; xviii. 11.)—See Chebar.

GRACE. The Greek word charis, rendered “grace,” ordinarily denotes the influences of the Holy Spirit upon the human mind. In reference to the primary operations of the Divine influence upon the mind, the Apostle says, “The grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men;” not only to counterbalance, in our minds, the influences of the first transgression, but also to awaken in us right emotions, and predispose our hearts to receive the words of God, so that we may abide and grow in the love of the truth. (Tit. ii. 11; Phil. ii. 13; John i. 16.) This salutary influence is communicated to all, in consequence of the sacrificial death, and glorious exaltation of our gracious Redeemer. (Acts ii. 17, 33.) And, as Christ Jesus died for all, so, “unto every one of us is given grace, according to the measure of the gift of Christ,” i.e. the gift of grace is co-extensive with the gift of Christ,—the measure of the one is the measure of the other. (Eph. iv. 7; Rom. v. 15; John iii. 16.) Dr. John Brown has well observed,
GRA

"The first communication of Divine influence is not in answer to our prayers, but in answer to the prayers of Him whom the Father heareth always. The first communication of Divine influence is not to faith, and the prayer of faith. It produces faith, and leads to the prayer of faith. But in the economy of grace, the established order is, and it is plainly founded on the reason of things, on what is true and right, that further communications of Divine influence are granted in answer to believing prayer,—are communicated to him who, feeling his want, comes to Him who alone can supply it." The subsequent operations of this Divine influence are for the enlightening, comforting, and strengthening believers in the ways of holiness. Nor does the internal influence of God on our minds, which is for the purpose of assisting us in our conflict with the depraved propensities of our nature, consist in or involve any violation of the laws of our moral agency. There is no moral coercion. It is true, indeed, that we cannot prevent the religious convictions and feelings excited in the soul by the immediate agency of God; but we are able to suppress them after they have been excited, or to cherish them by yielding obedience to them. In short, the effects of those feelings are under our control. And this is the case, not merely in the first religious impressions, but in every subsequent gracious influence. (Matt. xii. 20—23; Acts vii. 51—53; xxiv. 25; Rom. viii. 12, 13; Eph. iv. 30.)

The degree of this salutary influence is different, even among those who cherish the good feelings excited in them by the immediate agency of God, and act in conformity to the directions of the Holy word. (Matt. xiii. 8, 23.) This diversity may arise from the different degrees of carefulness with which these gracious influences are cherished, or from the different degrees of faithfulness evinced in obeying the instructions of the Holy word, or from a diversity of disposition, talent, means, or incentives to understand and apply the doctrines of the sacred oracles. The term "grace" also denotes Divine favour, as exercised in conferring gifts, graces, and benefits on man. (2 Cor. iv. 15; vii. 1; 1 Pet. v. 5.) And also favour, kindness, good-will, benevolence. (Gen. vi. 8; xviii. 3; xxxix. 4, 21; Acts ii. 47; vii. 46.) Also for a gift, or alms; a charitable disposition. (1 Cor. xvi. 3; 2 Cor. viii. 4, 6, 7, 19.)—See REGENERATION.

GRAFT. In training fruit trees, the process of grafting and budding, are often resorted to, in order to improve the quality of the fruit; by taking shoots, or buds, from approved trees, and inserting them on others, where, with proper precautions, they continue to grow. By this process, particular sorts of fruit may be kept from degenerating, which they are very apt to do when raised from the seed; for the grafts, though they receive their nourishment from the stocks, always produce fruit of the same sort as the tree from which they were taken. (Rom. xi. 17—24.) An insect of the giant species is said to breed in the male fig-tree, and being covered with the pollen of the male flowers, impregnates with it the stigma of the female tree. The flowers of the palm tree yield fruit only on the female tree, when its stamens have been fecundated by pollen from the male; and as it is precarious to leave this process to be effected by insects or the wind, it is commonly done by manual labour. The Hebrews appear to have pinched off the blossoms of the fruit trees, during the three first years of their growth, in order to improve their fruitfulness. (Num. xviii. 12, 13.)

GRAPE. The soil and climate of Palestine were well suited to the growth of the vine, and particular districts of that country were famed for the excellence of their grapes. (Deut. viii. 7, 8; Num. xiii. 23; Gen. i. 11; Sol. Song i. 14; Isa. vii. 8; vii. 23; Hos. iv. 7.) The Hebrew spies brought back to the camp a cluster of grapes, of an unusual size, which they had cut off in the valley of Eschol; "they carried it on a stick by two," not only on account of its weight, but also in order to prevent
HAB

A place in Arabia, probably so called from a temple of Baal. (2 Chron. xxvi. 7.)

H

HAHASHTARI = mule-driver. One of the sons of Naarah. (1 Chron. iv. 6.)

HABAIH = whom Jehovah hides, protects. One whose posterity returned from captivity. (Esa ii. 6; Neh. vii. 63.)

HABAKKUK = embrace. One of the twelve minor prophets, of whose birth we know neither the time nor place. The opinions respecting the age in which he lived are various. Jahn and Wahl think that Habakkuk prophesied during the first years of King Manasseh. But Eichhorn places the age of Habakkuk subsequently to the reign of Jehoiakim, in the commencement of the oppression of the Hebrews by the Chaldeans. De Wette places it still later, making the prophet a contemporary of Jeremiah. (Hab. i. 1; iii. 1.) The book of Habakkuk contains complaints over the calamities brought upon the Jews by the Chaldeans; together with the expression of strong desires and hopes that these savage enemies will be requited. The costume is highly poetical. The third chapter is one of the most splendid portions of the prophetic writings; the language of it rises to the loftiest flight of lyric poetry. On the ground of this portion of his prophecy, Habakkuk may be placed in the first rank of the Hebrew poets. Habakkuk has some things indeed in common with other sacred poets, as Judg. v. 4; Ps. xviii. 34; lxviii. 7, 9; Isa. xi. 9; xiv. 4; Mic. iii. 10; but he makes even these his own by his peculiar manner. He is distinguished for the purity and elegance of his diction, and the fire and vivacity of his imagery.

HABAZINIAH = light or lamp of Jehovah. One of the descendants of Rechab. (Jer. xxxv. 3.)

HABERGEON.—See COAT OF MAIL.

HABOR.—See CHEBAR.

HACHALIAH = whose eyes Jehovah enlightens. The father of Nehemiah the governor. (Neh. x. 2.)

HACHILAH = dark horse. A hill near the desert of Ziph. (1 Sam. xxiii. 19; xxvi. 1.—3.)

HACHMONI = wise. The father of one of David’s distinguished warriors. He is called an “Hachmonite.” (1 Chron. xi. 11; xxvii. 32.)—See JASHOBAM.

1. HADAD = sharp. One of the twelve sons of Ishmael. (1 Chron. i. 30.) In Gen. xxv. 15, this name is written “Hadar.”

2. HADAD = the sun. The chief deity of the Syrians and Edomites. This term appears to have been used as a title by the Syrian and Edomitic kings, like Pharaoh among the Egyptians. 3. A king of Edom, who defeated the Midianites in the field of Moab. (Gen. xxxvi. 35; 1 Chron. i. 46.) 4. A king of Edom. (1 Chron. i. 50.) In Gen. xxxvi. 39, he is called “Hadar.” 5. A Syrian king who reigned in Damascus during the war between David and Hadad-ezer. David defeated the king of Zobah; and when the Damascus sent auxiliaries to Hadad-ezer, these also were routed. (2 Sam. viii. 5.) 6. A descendant of the royal family of Edom. When David conquered that country, Hadad, then a little child, was carried into Egypt. The king of Egypt received him with great favour, and in process of time Hadad married Taphenes, the queen’s sister. After David’s death, Hadad returned to Edom, and became “the adversary of Solomon.” (1 Kings xi. 14—23.)

HADAD-EZEB = Hadad-helped. A king of Zobah, in Syria. This powerful monarch was defeated by the Hebrews in the neighbourhood of HAD

the Euphrates. (2 Sam. viii. 3, 4; 1 Chron. xviii. 3, 4.) When Hadad-ecer had formed an alliance with Hadad, David defeated them. (2 Sam. viii. 5—7; 1 Chron. xviii. 5—7.) Some time afterwards, Hadad-ecer and three other Syrian princes formed an alliance to assist the Ammonites against David; but the Hebrews defeated the whole army. (2 Sam. x. 6—14; 1 Chron. xix. 6—14.) But Hadad-ecer again attempted to dispute with David the predominancy in south-western Asia, when the whole Syrian army was vanquished by the Hebrews, under the command of David, and the power of Hadad-ecer was totally broken. (2 Sam. x. 15—19; 1 Chron. xix. 16—19.) This name is also written “Hadarezer.” (2 Sam. x. 16—19; 1 Chron. xix. 16—19.)

HADAD-RIMMON = Hadad the exalted. A place in the plain near Megiddo; probably so called from the worship of the idol Hadadrimmon. It was afterwards called Mazzinopolis. It lay at or near the present village of Salim. (Zech. xii. 11; 2 Chron. xxxv. 22—25.)

HADAR.—See HADAD.

HADEREZER.—See HADAD.

HADASHAH = new. A town of Judah. (Josh. xv. 37.)

HADASSAH.—See ESTHER.

HADATTAH = new. A town of Judah. (Josh. xv. 25.)

HADID = sharp. A city in Benjamin. (Exra ii. 33; Neh. vii. 37; xi. 34.)

HADLAI = resting. A descendant of Ephraim. (2 Chron. xxviii. 12.)

HADORAM = altitude. 1. A tribe of the Joktanites in Arabia Felix; probably the Adramitai, on the southern coast of Arabia, between the Himyarites and the Satchalite. (Gen. x. 27.) 2. See ADONIRAM, and JORAM.

HADRACH. This is a very obscure word. Perhaps “the land of Hadrach” is the region of Damascus. (Zech. ix. 1.)
perhaps ill treating him. (Gal. iv. 29.) Ishmael's conduct gave mortal offence to Sarah, and she immediately requested Abraham to banish him and his mother from their home. Abraham, grieved at her request, but being divinely admonished to comply, supplied Hagar with bread (i.e. food) and a bottle of water, and sent her and her son away. In the wilderness of Beersheba, probably on her journey towards Egypt, when her supply of water was exhausted, and she saw nothing before her and her son but famine and death, God renewed his promise to Hagar, "That he would make Ishmael a great nation." The lad grew up in the wilderness, "and his mother took him a wife out of the land of Egypt." In Gal. iv. 24, the Apostle, in an allegory, makes Hagar represent the Jewish church, which was in bondage to the ceremonial law; as Sarah represents the church of Christ, which is free from this bondage.

HAGARENES. The Hebrew word Hagri=fugitive, rendered "Hagarites," (1 Chron. v. 10; xix. 20.) and "Haggeri," margin Haggerii, (1 Chron. xi. 38.) and "Hagarenes," (Ps. lxxxvii. 6.) designates an Arabian people and region adjacent to the Persian Gulf, perhaps the Agraioi, in the province now called Bahrein.

HAGARITES.—See HAGARENES.

HAGGAI=festive. One of the Hebrew prophets, supposed to have been born at Babylon, whence he probably accompanied Zerubbabel in the first return of the Jews from captivity. Haggai prophesied during the second year of Darius Hystaspes, who mounted the Persian throne in 521 B.C. His prophecy is principally composed of keen reproof and of affecting exhortations, to induce his countrymen to resume the building of the temple, which they had abandoned for fourteen or fifteen years, because of the opposition and intrigue of their enemies. In this he was successful. (Hag. i. 1; Ezra v. 1—17; vi. 3, 14.) The prophecy also contains predictions concerning Christ and the universal establishment of His kingdom. The glory of the temple, which is predicted with great clearness, (Hag. ii. 7—9,) was to be occasioned by the coming of the Messiah; and though Herod made important alterations in it, still the temple of Zerubbabel was always regarded as the second temple, and Christ, the "Desire of all nations," did appear and teach in it. (Mal. iii. 1; Isa. xi. 10; lx. 3; Luke xix. 47; John xviii. 20.)

HAGGERI.—See HAGARENES.

HAGGERITE.—See HAGARENES.

HAGGI=festive. A son of Gad. His descendants are called "Haggites." (Num. xxvi. 15.)

HAGGIAH=festival of Jehovah. A descendant of Merari. (1 Chron. vi. 30.)

HAGGITES.—See HAGGI.

HAGGITH=festive. The wife of David and mother of Adonijah. (2 Sam. iii. 4; 1 Kings i. 5.)

HAL.—See AI.

HAILSTONES. Masses of ice or frozen vapour, perhaps occasioned by rain falling through a dry and very cold stratum of air, and descending from the clouds in showers or storm. They assume various figures; some are round, others angular, others pyramidal, others flat, and sometimes they are stilted with six radii, like crystals of snow. The difference in the formation of snow and hail is, that in the former case the vapour in the clouds is congealed before it is collected into drops; in the case of hail, the vapour is collected into drops or masses, and then frozen. A hail-storm is generally accompanied by lightning, and seems to be produced by a certain electrical state of the atmosphere. So "hail mingled with fire," is mentioned as one of the plagues of Egypt. (Ex. ix. 22—25; Ps. lxxviii. 47—49;cv. 32; cxviii. 8.) Several travellers have noticed thunder and hail in Egypt, in January and February, a violent storm of hail was also supernaturally employed in the overthrow of the army of the kings of Canaan. (Josh. x. 11.) Magazines of snow and hail are spoken of as being reserved for the day of battle and war. (Job xxxviii. 22, 23; Ezek. xxxiii. 22.) Violent tempests of hailstones, of prodigious size, are not uncommon in the East. An American gentleman, Capt. Porter, describes one which occurred in August, 1831, of which he was something more than an eye-witness: "Immediately we heard a sound like rumbling thunder, or ten thousand carriages rolling furiously over the pavement. The whole Bosphorus was in a foam, as though heaven's artillery had been discharged upon us and our frail machine. Our fate seemed inevitable; our umbrellas were raised to protect us, the lumps of ice stripped them into ribbons. We fortunately had a bullock's hide in the boat, under which we crawled and saved ourselves from further injury. One man of the three oarsmen had his head literally smashed; another was much injured in the shoulder. Balls of ice, as large as my two fists, fell into the boat, and some of them came with such violence as certainly to have broken an arm or leg had they struck us in those parts. One of them struck the blade of an oar and split it. The scene lasted, perhaps, five minutes; but it was five minutes of the most awful feeling that I ever experienced. When it passed over we found the surrounding hills covered with masses of ice—I cannot call it hail—the trees stripped of their leaves and limbs, and every thing looked desolate. My own servants weighed several pieces of three quarters of a pound; and many were found by others of upwards of a pound. There were many which fell around the boat in which I was, that appeared to me to be as large as the swell of a large size water decanter. It was the most awful and terrific scene that I ever witnessed, and God forbid that I should be ever exposed to such another." Terrible storms of "hail" are the symbols of the Divine vengeance upon evil nations, and persecutors of his people. (Isa. xxviii. 2; Hag. ii. 17; Rev. viii. 7; xi. 19; xvi. 21.)

HAIR. The colour of the hair of the people of the East is commonly black, rarely red. The ancient Egyptian priests shaved not the beard only, but also the head; and others, if they did not shave it with a razor, were accustomed to wear the hair very short. The abundant and long hair which often covers the head of the figures on the monuments was probably false like our wigs. The Egyptian periwigs were quite proficient in their art, as may be seen from the periwig brought from Thebes, in an entire state of preservation, in the British Museum. It resembles the wigs worn by females of quality, delineated on the tombs and statues. It is as large as those worn by our learned judges at the present time; and is of a glossy auburn, but differs from the modern style in having the plaits beneath, and the ringlets above. The Hebrews were accustomed to cut the hair very much as we do, except that they used a razor or knife, and not scissors; (Isa. vii. 20; Ezek. v. 1; xlv. 20;) and excelling also in the case of a vow or religious obligation to let it grow, as in the case of Absalom. (Sol. Song v. 6; 2 Sam. xiv. 26.) At one period a fine head of hair was esteemed a great ornament, as in the case of Absalom. (Sol. Song v. 6; 2 Sam. xiv. 26.) The hair was combed and set in order; (Isa. iii. 24;) and anointed with aromatic oil, especially on festivals; (Ps. xxxiii. 5; xcvii. 10; cxxxiii. 2; 2 Sam. xiv. 2;) and perhaps daily. (Eccle. i. 8; Ruth iii. 3; Prov. xxix. 17.) Females, as is commonly the case, let the hair grow long. (Luke vii. 38; 1 Cor. xi. 6—15,) and “plaited,” or “braided” it, and fixed it with crisping pins. (Num. v. 18; 1 Tim. ii. 9; 1 Pet. iii. 3.) They ornamented their hair with gems and gold. (2 Kings ix. 30.) Baldness was a source of contempt. (2 Sam. xiv. 26; 2 Kings ii. 23; Isa. lii. 14.) The plucking or shaving off the hair by others, denotes punishment or disgrace. (2 Sam. x. 4; 1 Chron. xix. 4; Isa. vii. 20; Neh. xiii. 23.) The practice of shaving, or cutting off the hair, was an indication of mourning or sorrow. (Job i. 20; Jer. vii. 29.) A change in the colour of the hair was one of the earliest indications of the leprosy. (Lev. xiii. 4, etc.; xiv. 8, 9.) The hoary head, is the symbol of the respect due to age. (Lev. xix. 32.) See Beard.
HAL

HAKKATAN = the little or small. The father of Johanan. (Ezra viii. 12.)

HAKKOZ = See Koz.

HAKUPHA = bent, crooked. One of the Nethinim. (Ezra ii. 51; Neh. vii. 55.)

HALAH = fortified. An Assyrian province, into which a part of the ten tribes were transported by Shalmaneser. (2 Kings xvii. 6; xviii. 11.) Some suppose Halah to be a river of Gozan—the Al-Halih—but others regard it as the region identical with the Calachene of the Greeks and Romans. See Gozan.

HALAK = smooth, bare, bald. A mountain in the neighbourhood of Seir. (Josh. xi. 17; xii. 7.)

HALHUL = surrounded. A town in the mountains of Judah. (Josh. xix. 28.) It is now a ruined site, called Hulah.

HALI = necklace, trinket. A town in the tribe of Asher. (Josh. xix. 25.)

HALLUHUL = praise ye Jehovah. A common exclamation of joy and praise in the Hebrew worship. It was also sung on solemn days of rejoicing, as an expression of praise; and as such it has been adopted into the Christian church, and is still used in devotional psalmody. This word occurs at the beginning and at the end of Psalms cv. xvi. cxii. cxvii. cxxxv. It is sometimes rendered “praise ye the Lord” (Ps. cxv. 35; cxvii. 1; cxlv. 1;) and is also written “Alloluia.” (Rev. xix. 1, 3; iv. 6.)

HALLOHESH = enchanter. One who sealed the covenant with Nehemiah. (Neh. iii. 12; x. 33.)

HALLOW. See Holy.

HAM = warm, hot. 1. The youngest son of Noah, whose posterity is described in Gen. x. 6, 20, as occupying the southernmost regions of the known earth. (Gen. ix. 22.) From Ham, the ancestor of the Egyptians, perhaps the same as Amon, their supreme deity, Egypt derived its domestic name Khemah, or the land of Ham, which occurs so frequently in the hieroglyphic monuments; and is found more than ten times on the Rosetta Inscription. (1 Chron. iv. 40; Ps. lxxvii. 31; cv. 23, 27; cvi. 22.) 2. A region in or near the country of the Ammonites, inhabited by the Zuzim. (Gen. xiv. 5.)

HAMAN = magnificent, splendid. The “son of Hammedatha, the Agagite,” probably of the royal family of the Amalekites. (Est. iii. 1; Jos. Ant. xi. vi. 5.) This wicked and ambitious courtier became prime minister to Xerxes, the Persian monarch. And because Mordecai, a Jew, in an humble station at court, refused to pay him the homage which his pride and vain-glory craved, Haman resolved on his destruction; and to accomplish it, was willing to sacrifice the whole body of the Jews who were then scattered throughout the Persian dominions. He succeeded, by falsehood and intrigue, in obtaining a decree for this purpose; but the queen, through the influence of Mordecai, was prompt to interpose for their deliverance, which she accomplished; and Haman ended his career on the very gibbet which he had caused to be prepared for the execution of Mordecai. (Est. vii. 10.)

HAMATH = fortress, citadel. A large and important city of Syria, situated in the narrow valley of the "Asy," the ancient Orontes, near the northern boundary of the Holy Land.
(Num. xiii. 21; xxxiv. 8; Am. vi. 2.) It was the seat of a powerful king; (2 Sam. viii. 9;) but in the reign of Hesekiah it fell into the hands of the Assyrians. (2 Kings xvii. 24; xviii. 34; Isa. x. 9.) It is also called "Hamath-Zobah." (2 Chron. viii. 3.) The "land of Hamath," is the country or district around; (2 Kings xxv. 21;) the inhabitants were called "Hamathites." (Gen. x. 18; Josh. xiii. 5; Judg. iii. 3.) Hamath was called by the Greeks Epiphanes; but it now retains its ancient name Hamah. It is reckoned one of the most pleasant towns of Syria; and is said to contain more than 40,000 inhabitants. Within the town are many dams and water-machines, by means of which the water is led off by canals from the river to irrigate the gardens, and supply private houses. The principal trade of Hamath is with the Arabs, who buy here their tent furniture and clothes. The government of Hamath comprises about 120 inhabited villages, and 70 or 80 which have been abandonned. The western part of its territory is the granary of northern Syria; yet in the beautiful and fertile plain of Hamah a peculiar obstacle hinders successful tillage. It is infested by mice, which often destroy a whole crop at once.

HAMMANIM. This Hebrew word, rendered "images," in Lev.
xxvi. 30; 2 Chron. xiv. 5; xxxiv. 4, 7; Isa. xvii. 8; xxvii. 9; Ezek. vi.
4, 6; but, in the margin, almost invariably, sun images, properly denotes sun images, images of the sun, i. e. images or figures of Baal, used in Idolatrous worship.—See BAAL.

HAMMATH = warm springs. A town of Naphtali, near Tiberias, (Josh. xix. 35,) celebrated for its warm fountains. It was called by the Greeks *Ammous = warm baths.
"Hammoth-dor" = warm spring dwelling, is probably the same place.
(Josh. xxi. 32.) Vespasian, for a time, had a fortified camp near these springs. (Jos. Ant. xviii.
ii. 3; Wars, iii. x. 1; iv. i. 3.)
The late Ibrahim Pasha erected a splendid building in connection with these springs, in which is a public bath, with a marble pavement; and also private rooms for wealthier guests, furnished in an uncommonly good oriental style. Dr. Robinson says, "The water, as it issues from the ground, is too hot to bear the hand in it; a pocket thermometer held for some time in the water, and then examined in the air, stood at 140° F. At the time of the earthquake, Jan. 1, 1837, and for some days afterwards, the quantity of water flowing from the springs is said to have been immensely increased;
it was also thought to have been hotter than at ordinary times. The taste is excessively salt and bitter, like heated sea-water; there is also a strong smell of sulphur, but no taste of it. The water deposits a sediment as it runs down to the sea, which differs in colour below the different springs, being in one white, in another greenish, in a third reddish yellow, etc. These baths are regarded as efficacious in rheumatic complaints, and in cases of debility;
and are visited, principally in July,
by people from all parts of Syria."

HAMMEDATHA. The father of Haman. (Est. iii. i; vii. 5.)

HAMMELECH = the king. The father of Jerahmeel and Malchiah.
(Jer. xxxvi. 16; xxxviii. 6.)

HAMMOLEKETH = the queen. A woman of the tribe of Manasseh.
(1 Chron. vii. 18.)

HAMMON = warm or sunny. A place in Asher. (Josh. xix. 28.)

HAMMAT-DOR.—See Hammath.

HAMMONAH = multitude. The prophetical name of a city in a valley where the slaughter of Magog was to take place. (Ezek. xxxix. 16.)
HAMON-GOG = multitude of Gog. The prophetical name of a valley, where Gog and all his multitude were to be buried; described in Ezek. xxxix. 11, as the “valley of the passengers,” east of the sea of Galilee. (Ezek. xxxix. 1—16; compare Rev. xx. 7—9.)

HAMOR = an ass. A Hivite, contemporary with Jacob and his sons. (Gen. xxx. 19; xxxiv. 2—26; Josh. xxiv. 32; Judg. ix. 28.)

HAMUEL = wrath of God. A descendant of Simeon. (1 Chron. iv. 26.)

HAMUL = pitted, spared. A son of Pharez; (Gen. xvi. 12; 1 Chron. ii. 5;) his descendants were called “Hamulites.” (Num. xxxvi. 21.)

HAMUTAL = father-in-law, or kinsman of the dew. The daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah, and the wife of king Jehoshaphat. (2 Kings xxiii. 31; xxiv. 18; Jer. lii. 1.)

HANAMEEL = which God has graciously given. The cousin of Jeremiah. (Jer. xxxii. 7—12.)

HANAN = merciful. One of David’s officers. (1 Chron. xi. 43.)

2. A son of Azel. (1 Chron. vii. 38; ix. 44.) 3. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. vii. 23.) 4. One of the Nethinim. (Ezra ii. 46; Neh. vii. 49.) 5. Four Levites in the time of Nehemiah. (Neh. x. 10, 22, 26; xiii. 13.)

HANANEEL = which God has graciously given. A name of Jerusalem. (Jer. xxxi. 38; Zech. xiv. 10; Neh. iii. 1; xii. 39.)

HANANI = gracious. A seer in the time of Ass, and the father of the prophet Jehu. (1 Kings xvi. 1, 7; 2 Chron. xiv. 7.) 2. The brother of Nehemiah. (Neh. i. 2; vii. 2.) 3. A son of Heman. (1 Chron. xxv. 4, 25.) 4. A son of Immmer. (Ezra x. 20; Neh. xii. 36.)

HAND. This word is employed in the Scriptures in a variety ofusions. The hands of the high-priest were laid on the head of the scape-goat when the sins of the people were publicly confessed. (Lev. xvi. 21.) The Hebrews, when presenting their sin offerings, confessed their sins while they laid their hands upon the victim. (Lev. i. 4.) To “give the right hand” was a pledge of fidelity; (2 Kings x. 15; Ezra x. 19;) and to “strike hands” was a pledge of suretship. (Prov. xvii. 18; xxvi. 26; 2 Chron. xxx. 8. margin.) The vanquished gave their hands as a pledge of submission and fidelity to the victors. (Ezek. xvii. 18; Jer. i. 15; Lam. v. 6.) The right hand was lifted in taking an oath. (Gen. xiv. 22; Deut. xxxii. 40; Ezek. xx. 28; Ps. cxlv. 11; Isa. lxii. 8.) To stand or be at one’s right hand, is to aid or assist any one; (Ps. xvi. 8; cix. 31; ex. 5; xxxi. 5;) so also “man of thy right hand,” i.e. whom thou sustains, aidest; (Ps. xxxv. 17;) and to take, or hold the right hand, is to sustain, to aid. (Ps. xiii. 23; Isa. xli. 13; xlv. 1.) My hand is with any one, i.e. I aid him, am on his side. (1 Sam. xxii. 17; 2 Sam. xxii. 2; Kings xxii. 19.) To sit at the right hand, is the highest place of honour. (1 Kings ii. 19; Ps. xlv. 10; cx. 1; Job xxx. 12; Ps. c. 1; Acts ii. 34; Heb. x. 12.) To smite the hands together over the head, was a gesture of despairing grief. (2 Sam. xiii. 19; Jer. li. 37.) The expression “to lead,” rendered “though hand join in hand” is simply “hand to hand,” and signifies from hand to hand, to hand down, i.e. through all ages and generations, the wicked shall not go unpunished. (Prov. xi. 21.) To “kiss the hand” is an act of homage. (1 Kings xix.
18; Job xxxi. 27.) To the right hand signified to the south, as the left hand signified to the north. (Job xxviii. 9; 1 Sam. xxix. 19; 2 Sam. xxiv. 5.) To pour water on any one’s hands signifies to serve him; (2 Kings iii. 11;) and to wash one’s hands denotes innocence; (Matt. xxvii. 24;) the Jews washed their hands before eating as a mark of purity. (Matt. xv. 2.) The “hand of God” is spoken of as the instrument of power; and to it is ascribed that which strictly belongs to God Himself. (Job. xxvii. 11; Ps. xxxi. 16; xxv. 4; Isa. lxii. 3; Prov. xxx. 1; Acts iv. 28; 1 Pet. v. 6.) So the hand of the Lord being upon or with any one, denotes divine aid or favour; (Ezra vii. 5, 28; viii. 15, 22, 31; Neh. ii. 8; Isa. i. 25; Luke i. 66; Acts xi. 21;) further, the hand of the Lord is upon or against thee, denotes punishment. (Ex. ix. 3; Deut. ii. 15; Judg. ii. 15; 1 Sam. vii. 13; xii. 15; Ezek. xiii. 9; Am. i. 8; Acts xiii. 11.) The laying on and lifting up of hands were modes of benediction; (Gen. xlviii. 14; Lev. ix. 22; Mark x. 16; Luke xxv. 50;) and also of inauguration to any particular office; (Num. viii. 10; xxvii. 15–23; Deut. xxxiv. 9;) it was also the symbol of the communication of the Holy Ghost, endowing the recipient with miraculous gifts. (Acts viii. 17; xix. 6; 1 Tim. iv. 14; 2 Tim. i. 6; Heb. vi. 2.)

See Ordain.

HAND-BREADTH. The palm, used as a measure of four fingers, equal to three-and-a-half inches. (Ex. xxv. 25; xxvii. 12; 1 Kings vii. 26; 2 Chron. iv. 5; Ezek. xii. 5, 43; Jer. lii. 21; Ps. xxxix. 5.)

HANDKERCHIEF. The original word rendered “handkerchief” (Acts xix. 12,) and “napkin,” (Luke xix. 20; John xi. 44; xx. 7;) properly signifies a sweatcloth, and in a general sense, a handkerchief or napkin; which was sometimes beautifully wrought with the needle. The Hebrew term rendered “kerchiefs,” in Ezek. xiii. 18, 22, properly means cushions, quilts, or mattresses.

HANDMAID. On the Egyptian monuments there are various representations of maid-servants waiting upon their mistresses, sometimes at the bath, at others at the toilette, and also in bringing refreshments and handing them round to visitors. Sometimes the lady of a mansion is seen rigidly enforcing her authority, even with the rod or whip, over her female domestics. The noble Egyptians, with their wives, had also other inmates of the harem, who were sometimes merely servants, and sometimes also concubines; most of them appear to have been foreigners, either taken in war or brought to Egypt to be sold for slaves. Hagar was one of the female slaves obtained by Abraham in Egypt, for a handmaid to Sarah. Not unfrequently such handmaids occupied the position of secondary wives. (Gen. xvi. 1–4; xxix. 24; Ex. xxii. 12.)

HANDSTAVES. Weapons of war, resembling spears or javelins, which were cast with the hands. (Ezek. xxxix. 9.)

HANES—Hercules city. A royal city of middle Egypt, on the western side of the Nile, called by the Greeks Herculeopolis. Others identify it with Lebennus, now Mamunhoud, in the Delta. At both places remains are still to be seen. (Isa. xxx. 4.)

HANG. Hanging on a tree or gibbet, appears to have been a mark of infamy, inflicted on the dead bodies of criminals, rather than a punishment, as modern nations employ it. (Gen. xl. 17–19; Num. xxxv. 4, 5; Deut. xxii. 22, 23; 2 Sam. xxi. 6.) The Jews included crucifixion also in this mode of punishment. (John xix. 31; Acts v. 30; Gal. iii. 13; 1 Peter ii. 24.) The person suspended was considered as a curse, an abomination in the sight of God, and as receiving this token of infamy from His hand. The body, nevertheless, was to be taken down and buried on the same day.
HANGINGS.—See VEXIL.

HANIEL = grace of God. A descendant of Asher. (1 Chron. vii. 39.)

HANNAH = entreaty. One of the wives of Elkanah, and the mother of the prophet Samuel. (1 Sam. i. 2.)

HANNATHON = graciously regarded. A place in the tribe of Zebulon. (Josh. xix. 14.)

HANNIEL = grace of God. A phylarch or chief of the tribe of Manasseh. (Num. xxxiv. 23.)

HANOCH = initiated, or initiating. A son of Midian, the son of Abraham. (Gen. xxv. 4.)

HANOKH = reuben. (Gen. xlii. 9; Ex. vi. 14.)

His descendants were called “Hanochites.” (Num. xxxvi. 5.)

HANUN = graciously regarded, favoured. A king of the Ammonites, and the successor of Nahash. After the death of Nahash, David sent messengers to Hanun to concile with him, and to express his respect for the memory of the deceased king. But Hanun pretended to think that David had sent them as spies; so he took them and shaved off one half of their beards, and cut off their garments in the middle, and in this condition sent them home. This ungenerous conduct led to war, which terminated fatally for Hanun, whose army was utterly discomfited, and his capital taken. (2 Sam. x. 1-19; xli. 3; xlii. 26-30; 1 Chron. xix. 1-19; xx. 1-3.)

2. The son of Zalaph. (Neh. iii. 30.)

3. A man mentioned by Nehemiah. (Neh. iii. 13.)

HAPIPAIM = two pits. A place in the tribe of Issachar. (Jos. xix. 19.)

HARA = mountainous land. A region of Assyria, probably a part of Media, now called Irak Ajamu, also el-Jebel = the mountains. (1 Chron. v. 26.)—See GOZAN.

HARAHDAM = terror, fear. A station of the Hebrews in the desert. (Num. xxxii. 24.)

1. HARAN = parched, dry. A city in Mesopotamia, in which Abraham dwelt after he had left Ur, and where Terah his father died. (Gen. xi. 31, 32; xxvii. 43.) Haran had commercial intercourse with Tyre; (Ezek. xxvii. 23.) and was subdued by the Assyrian army. (2 Kings xix. 12; Isa. xxxvii. 12.) It was called Carrhae by the Greeks and Romans; and “Charran.” (Acts vii. 4.) It was celebrated as the place where Crassus, the Roman general, was defeated and killed by the Parthians. Harran, as it is now called, is situated in a flat and sandy plain, and is only peopled by a few wandering Arabs, who select it for the delicious water which it contains.

2. A son of Caleb. (1 Chron. ii. 46.)

3. HARAN = mountaineer. The brother of Abraham and the father of Lot. (Gen. xi. 26-38.)

4. A son of Shimei. (1 Chron. xxxiii. 9.)

HARARITE = a mountaineer. An inhabitant of the mountainous tract of Ephraim or Judah. (2 Sam. xxiii. 11, 33.)

HARBONA = ass-driver. A eunuch of Xerxes; (Est. vii. 9;) also written “Harbona.” (Est. i. 10.)

HARE. The Hebrew word armaheth, rendered “hare,” may designate either of the two species of Syrian hare, which differ considerably in point of size. The largest is the Turkman hare, and chiefly haunts the plains; the other is the common hare of the desert. Both are abundant. This animal was pronounced unclean by the Mosaic law, “because he cheweth the cud,” or rather re-cheweth, “but divideth not the hoof.” (Lev. xi. 5; Deut. xiv. 7.)

HAREL = mount of God. A name given to the altar of burnt offering. (Ezek. xxiii. 15.)—See ABAR.

HAREPH = plucking off. A son of Caleb. (1 Chron. ii. 51.)

HARET = thickest. A wood in the mountains of Judah. (1 Sam. xxii. 5.)

HARHAI = seal of Jehovah. The father of Uzziel. (Neh. iii. 8.)

HARHAS = zealous. An ancestor of Huldah; (2 Kings xxii. 14;) also written “Harrah.” (2 Chron. xxxiv. 22.)

HARHUR = inflammation. One whose descendants returned from the captivity. (Ezra ii. 51; Neh. vii. 53.)

HABID.—See HADID.

HARIM = flat-nosed. One whose descendants returned from the exile. (Ezra ii. 32; Neh. iii. 11.)

HARIPH = autumnal rain. One who sealed the covenant with Nehemiah; (Neh. vii. 24; x. 19; also called “Jorah.” (Ezra ii. 18.)

HARLOT. This term is generally applied to an abandoned woman, whether married or unmarried. (Gen. xxxviii. 24; Lev. xix. 29; Josh. ii. 1; Judg. xi. 1; Hos. iii. 8.)

From the Scriptures we learn, that long before the time of Moses, morals had become very much corrupted, and not only the prostitution of females, (Gen. xxxviii. 21, 22,) but of boys, was very common among many nations, and even made a part of the sacred worship; as may be inferred from the Hebrew words hadesh, a prostitute boy; a sodomite, and kadeeshah, the feminine of it, a sodomiteess, which words properly and originally mean a person religiously set apart and consecrated to the flagitious vice in question. (Deut. xxiii. 17; 1 Kings xiv. 24; Job xxxvi. 14; Num. xxv. 1; Hos. iv. 14.)

The evidence of the monuments is not very favourable to the modesty of the Egyptian women. They are represented as addicted to excess in drinking wine, as even becoming so much intoxicated as to be unable to stand or walk alone, or “to carry their liquor discreetly.” To prevent those evils to which the Egyptians, and, in later times, the Greek and Roman philosophers, refused to oppose any decided resistance, Moses enacted, that among the Hebrews, no prostitute, neither male nor female, should be tolerated; and that if the daughter of a priest especially, were guilty of whoredom, she should be stoned and her body burnt. (Lev. xix. 29; xxii. 19; Deut. xxii. 20, 21; xxiii. 17, 18.) These laws, it must be admitted, were severe; but prostitutes of both sexes, notwithstanding their severity, were set apart, in the time of the kings, in the service of idols. (Prov. ii. 16—19; v. 3—6; vii. 5—27; 1 Kings xv. 12; 2 Kings xxiii. 7; Am. ii. 7; vii. 17.) The terms “harlot” and “whoredom” are frequently used figuratively to denote the wicked and unchaste conduct of the Hebrews, in forsaking their covenant with God, and giving themselves up to idolatry and impurity. (Lev. xvii. 7; xx. 5, 6; Deut. xxxi. 16; Jer. iii. 1—9; v. 7; Hos. i. 2; Ezek. xxiii. 2—49.) Spoken also of the intercourse and commerce of heathen nations among themselves; (Nah. iii. 4; Isa. xxxiii. 17; Jer. lvi. 7;) so pagan Rome is called “the mother of harlots,” I.e. the chief or leader of all harlots, wholly given to idolatry and to worshiping the beast, alluring and seducing all its tributary nations to do the same. (Rev. xvii. 5.)

HARNEPHER = snorter, snorer. A descendant of Asher. (1 Chron. vii. 36.)

HARNESS. The Hebrew word asar signifies to harness, to yoke, and refers to the furniture of a horse to fit him for the chariot. (1 Kings xvii. 24; Gen. xlvi. 29; Jer. xlvi. 4.)

From the monuments we see that the harness of the Egyptian and Assyrian war chariots was composed of leather, and the trappings were richly decorated, being stained with a great variety of colours, and studded with gold and silver. (Ex. xiii. 18; xiv. 6; Isa. xxxvii. 29; James iii. 3.)

HAROD = fear, trembling. A place near a fountain, not far from Gilboa, on the borders of Manasseh. (Judg. vii. 1; 1 Sam. xxix. 1.) The inhabitants were called “Harodites.” (2 Sam. xxiii. 25.) Also written “Harorites.” (1 Chron. xi. 27.)

HAROEH.—See REAIH.

HAROSHETH = working in wood. A city in the north of Palestine, called “Harosheth of the Gentiles,” so called, perhaps, from the remains of the Canaanitish nations having resorted thither in great numbers to obtain the protection of Jabin. It is supposed to have been afterwards called "Galilee of the Gentiles." (Judg. iv. 2; Isa. ix. 1.)

HARP. An instrument of music, which consisted of an unornamented section of a circle, or of a triangular frame, with strings drawn parallel to each other from the upper bar to one of the sides; consequently, the strings gradually diminished in length, and also in size or weight, from the lowest to the highest, so as to be tuned by semitones, like the strings of a piano-forte. The Egyptians designated their stringed instruments, which possessed the same general form as the harp, the lyre, and the guitar, by the general term taboumi; which probably answers to the Hebrew gitteth and ne'ginoth = stringed instruments. (Ps. viii. 1; lxxxi. 1; iv. 1; vi. 1; Hab. iii. 19.) The Hebrew nebel, the psaltery or harp, had ten or twelve strings; (Ps. xxxiii. 2; cxxxiv. 9;) and was made of cypress or of sandal wood. (2 Sam. xvi. 5; 1 Chron. xiii. 8; 1 Kings x. 12; 2 Chron. ix. 11.) This instrument was used in the public worship of God. (2 Sam. vi. 5; 1 Kings x. 12; 1 Chron. xv. 16; xvi. 5; xxx. 1–7; 2 Chron. xx. 28; xxix. 25;) and was employed at festivals, and for luxurious purposes. (Isa. v. 12; Am. v. 23; vi. 5.) The sabbac, rendered "sackbut," appears to have been only another kind of the nebel, distinguished by the number of its strings. (Dan. iii. 7, 10, 15.) The Chaldee term pesanterius denotes the psaltery of the Greeks, and is the name of another species of the nebel. All these harps appear to be of the same class, their general form being probably the same. The Hebrew kinnor and Greek kitharos are generally translated "harp;" but the term lyre would, perhaps, be the better term. The invention of the kinnor or lyre is ascribed to Jubal. (Gen. iv. 21.) This instrument was consecrated to joy and exultation. (Gen. xxx. 27.) Hence the frequency with which, in the lyrical poems of the old Testament, the kinnor, the instrument handled by David as a master, and employed as the means of driving away the melancholy of Saul—is summoned to the praise of the Divine majesty. (1 Sam. xvi. 16–23; Ps. xxxiii. 2, 3; xlii. 4; xlix. 4; lxxi. 22; xcii. 3, 4; cxxxvii. 2; cxlii. 3; Am. vi. 5; I Cor. xiv. 7; Rev. v. 8; xiv. 2; xv. 2.) It was used in the temple; (1 Chron. xvi. 5; xxv. 3;) and at festivals, and was also carried round by courtiers; and by its presence, also made the means of increasing the joy of the vintage. (Isa. v. 12; xxiii. 16; xxiv. 8.) The Hebrew word mahhalath, which occurs in the titles of Ps. lii. and lxxxviii., signifies a lute or guitar, accompanied by the voice. This ancient instrument is frequently found on the most ancient Egyptian monuments. Indeed, upon the oldest monuments of Egypt and Assyria, instruments are found with the most diverse number of strings, so that any advancement in the art of constructing them cannot be traced.

HARROW. The harrow seems to have been a rude implement of Hebrew husbandry; probably a mere plank or log of wood, upon which stones were heaped and the labourer sat, and which was drawn over the field by oxen, to break in pieces the clods and level the surface. (Isa. xxviii. 24; Job xxxix. 10; Hos. x. 11.) The original words rendered “harrows of iron,” properly signify “threshing sledges of iron.” (2 Sam. xii. 31; 1 Chron. xx. 3.)

HARSHA = enchanter, magician. One of the Nethinim. (Ezra ii. 52; Neh. vii. 54.)

HART. The Hebrew word ajal, rendered “hart,” denotes the male deer, stag, hart; and was used of the various species of deer, and antelopes, which in part are furnished with twisted horns like the ram. The hart is one of the most graceful and beautiful of animals. It was clean by the Levitical law; (Deut. xii. 15; xiv. 5;) and noted for the grace and agility of its motions. (Sol. Song ii. 9; Isa. xxxv. 6.) The “hind,” or female, is smaller and weaker than her mate, and has no horns. (Gen. xlix. 21.) She is sure and swift of foot, and leaps fearlessly among the rocks and precipices. (2 Sam. xxii. 34; Ps. xviii. 33; Hab. iii. 19.) The instinctive affection of the hart and hind are alluded to in Prov. v. 18, 19; Sol. Song ii. 7; iii. 5. They are soon exhausted by hunger and thirst. (Jer. xiv. 5; Lam. i. 6; Ps. xxix. 9; xlii. 1.) See DEER.

HARUM = made high. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 8.)

HARUMAPH = snub-nosed. One who returned from exile. (Neh. iii. 10.)

HARUPHITE.—See SHEPHATIAH.

HARUZ = eager, active. The father-in-law of Manasseh. (1 Kings xxi. 19.)

HARVEST. In Palestine, the barley-harvest precedes the wheat harvest by a week or a fortnight. In the valley of the Jordan, the former takes place in the last half of April, and the latter in the first half of May. (Josh. iii. 15.) On the plain along the coast, the harvest is usually a fortnight later; and on the mountains, at Jerusalem and Hebron, still later by another fortnight. Dr. Robinson says: “On the 4th and 5th of June, the people of Hebron were just beginning to gather their wheat; on the 11th and 12th, the threshing-floors on the Mount of Olives were in full operation. We had already seen the harvest in the same state of progress on the plains of Gaza on the 19th of May; while at Jericho, on the 12th of May, the threshing-floors had nearly completed their work.” On the sixteenth day of the first month, Abib = April, a handful of ripe ears was offered before the Lord, as the first fruits; after which it was lawful to put the sickle to the corn. (Lev. xxiii. 9—14.) The harvest is described as beginning with the barley, and with the festival of the Passover; (Lev. xxiii. 9—14; 2 Sam. xxi. 9, 10; Ruth ii. 23;) and ending with the wheat, (Gen. xxx. 14; Ex. xxxiv. 22,) and with the festival of Pentecost. (Ex. xxiii. 16.) In the most ancient times the corn was plucked up by the roots. When the sickle was used, the wheat was either cropped off under the ear, or cut close to the ground: in the former case, the straw was afterwards plucked up for use; in the latter, the stubble was left and burnt on the ground for manure. (Isa. xvii. 5; Job xxxiv. 24.) The sheaves were collected into a heap, or removed to the threshing-floor. (Gen. xxxvii. 7; Lev. xxiii. 10—15; Ruth ii. 7—15; Job xxiv. 10; Jer. ix. 20; Mic. iv. 12; Am. ii. 13.) The reapers were the owners and their children, and men and women servants. (Ruth ii. 4, 8, 21, 23; John iv. 36; James v. 4.) Refreshments were provided for them, especially drink, of which the gleaners were often allowed to partake; (Ruth ii. 9;) so in the Egyptian scenes, we see reapers drinking, medans call infidels gisour. (Ps. ii. 1; Luke ii. 32; Matt. xvi. 17; Rom. ii. 14; iii. 29.) At this day, the heathen, or those without the knowledge of the gospel, comprise more than three-fourths of the human family. Though the actual state of the heathen is affecting bad, nothing against their possible salvation can be deduced from their depraved condition; inasmuch as the question is—not what they are, but what they have had the means of becoming. If all matters of faith in the Divine will, and the gracious influences of the Holy Spirit, have passed away from the heathen through the fault of their ancestors, and without the present race having been parties to the abandonment of truth, then they would appear no longer to be accountable, being neither under law nor under grace. But, as the Scriptures declare that all men are responsible to God, and that the whole world will be judged at the last day, we are bound to admit the accountability of all, and, with that, the remains of law and the existence of a merciful government towards the heathen on the part of God. Though they have no written revelation of the Divine will, yet as Christ has died for all men, and the communication of preventing grace—a “law written on their hearts”—is co-extensive with the gift of Christ, it would appear that the Divine sovereignty is exercised, not in leaving any portion of our race without the means of salvation, then punishing them for sins which they have no means of avoiding, but rather in communicating superior advantages to us, and inferior ones only to the heathen. God never exacts of men according to what they have not, but only requires a good use of what they possess. There may be heathen who have not only come to a perception of the evils of idolatry, but who conscientiously act with reference to the Divine will, so far as that will has been revealed to them through the law of conscience; and if so, they may be accepted, saved through the mercy of God in Jesus Christ. Degraded as the heathen are, it might be found that there are among them the same grades of intelligence and morality which we find in Christian lands; it may be, as many living up to the light which they enjoy, as Christians to their superior lights and privileges; while, at the same time, it may be presumed that fewer are saved where less means are vouchsafed, than among others who have the invaluable pre-eminence in the possession of the full revelation of the Divine will. The thought, that some heathen may be saved, cannot serve to invalidate the duty of sending to them the gospel, inasmuch as professing Christians are exposed to equal peril with them, in withholding from them the means of attaining the full knowledge of the way of salvation by faith in Christ.—See Gentiles.

HEAVEN.—See OFFERING.

HEAVEN = heaved, or elevated. The Hebrew term shamaim, rendered “heaven,” and “heavens,” properly signifies high, elevated, and designates the expanse of the sky, the firmament; (Gen. i. 8, 14;) poetically represented as supported on foundations and columns; (2 Sam. xxii. 8; Job xxvi. 11;) but including also the regions above the sky, the “third heaven,” (2 Cor. xii. 2,) the “heaven and heavens of heavens” = the “highest heaven,” (Deut. x. 14; 1 Kings viii. 27;) the abode of God and angels and glorified spirits, the spiritual paradise. (Ps. ii. 4; Eph. iv. 10; 2 Cor. xii. 4; Heb. iv. 14; vii. 26.) Heaven is preeminently the temple of the Most High; the other parts of the universe may be regarded as the outer court; or, if we regard the universe at large as His temple, heaven will be the holy of holies, and we must consider the most resplendent displays of His majesty, afforded by the visible creations—the glories of the earth, and of the sun, and moon, and stars—merely the decorations of the veil which separates between the holy and the most holy place. And if such be the magnificence of the veil, what will be the splendours and glories of the inner sanctuary? Here is the throne of God and the Lamb; and here the faithful out of every kindred, and people, and tongue, will be gathered together in the endless happiness of perfect holiness, to see His face, and to admire and adore the riches of Divine grace and glory. (Ps. xvi.
15; Matt. v. 8; Rev. xxiii. 3, 4.) The Hebrews generally, and other nations of antiquity, seem to have had but feeble notions of a future state.
The patriarchs and prophets, undoubtedly, had proper views on this subject, for the apostle expressly asserts that “they sought a better and a heavenly country.” (Heb. xi.
16; Gen. v. 24; 2 Kings ii. 1–12; Matt. xvii. 3.) But still it was reserved for the gospel to turn Hebrew twilight into broad Christian day: “Christ has abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel.” (2 Tim. i. 10.)
It is of importance to remember that while the Scriptures but occasionally speak of the glories of heaven, they have said more about that meekness which is requisite to our admission there—“holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord.”

HEAVEN, KINGDOM OF.—See KINGDOM OF HEAVEN.

HEBER = society, community. 1. A descendant of Asher. (Gen. xli. 17; 1 Chron. vii. 31.) His descendants are called “Heberites.” (Num. xvi. 45.)
2. A descendant of Hobab, and the husband of Jael. (Judg. v. 11, 17, 24.) 3. A descendant of Benjamin.
(1 Chron. viii. 17.) 4. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 18.)

HEBER = region or country beyond the river. 1. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 22.) 2. A descendant of Gad. (1 Chron. v. 13.)
3.—See EBEN.

HEBREWS. This name, applied to the descendants of Abraham, is derived from the name “Eber;” (Gen.
327 which it would seem pri-arily to have been an appellative from “Eber” = land or country beyond the Euphrates; hence “Abraham the Hebrew” would be equiva-tent to “Abraham the Trans-Euphratean.” (Gen. xiv. 13.) The name was applied to them by the Canaanites and other foreign nations, but in later times “Jews” was used. The writers of the old Testament apply to the Israelites the term “Hebrews,” either where foreigners were introduced as speaking; (Gen. xxxix. 14, 17; xlii.

12; Ex. i. 16; ii. 6; 1 Sam. iv. 6, 9; xiii.
19; xiv. 11; xxix. 3;) or where Israelites are represented as speaking of themselves to foreigners; (Gen. xl.
15; Ex. i. 10; ii. 7; iii. 18; v. 3; vii.
16; ix. 1, 13; Jon. i. 9;) or where they are opposed to other nations.
(Gen. xliii. 32; Ex. i. 15; ii. 11, 18;
xxii. 2; Deut. xv. 12; Jer. xxxiv. 9, 14; 1 Sam. iii. 3, 7; xiv. 21.) “Hebrew of the Hebrews,” one of full Hebrew descent, and acquainted with the Hebrew language. (Phil. iii. 5; 2 Cor. xi. 2.) The Hebrews were the chosen or peculiar people of Jeovah. He was their King; and that they might answer their high destination, in preserving the knowledge of Jehovah through succeeding ages, for the ultimate benefit of all nations, civil institutions were necessary, by which the knowledge and worship of the true God should be so intimately connected with the political structure of this nation, that they must be imperishable, so long as the nation should remain a nation. The Land of Canaan was considered as the royal possession, of which the Hebrews were to be the hereditary occupants, and from which they were to render to Jehovah a double tithe, as the Egyptians did to their king.
The invisible King delivered to them the summary of His law—the Magna Charta of the state—from the summit of Sinai. This was designed for the unalterable fundamental law of the commonwealth; and the Hebrews bound themselves to the observance of the great compact by a solemn oath. Jehovah finally promised His subjects such a government, and such a peculiar direction of their affairs and destinies, that blessing and national prosperity should follow the observance of the law as its reward; but cursing and national calamity the transgression of the law, as its punishment, till they should again return to their obedience. But the Hebrews frequently violated the compact by engaging in idolatrous worship, for which they were occasionally given into the hands of their enemies, and finally to captivity in Assyria and Babylon.—See Jews.

HEBREWS, EPISTLE TO THE. There is probably, if not certain evidence, that this Epistle was written by Paul during his imprisonment at Rome, early in A.D. 63, and before the second Epistle to Timothy. It was written in the Greek language, and was chiefly addressed to the Hebrew Christians in Palestine. The object of this Epistle was to prove to the Jews, from their own Scriptures, the divinity, humanity, atonement, and sovereignty of Christ, particularly his pre-eminence over Moses and the angels of God—to demonstrate the superiority of the Gospel to the Law; and the real object and design of the Mosaic institutions—to fortify the minds of the Hebrew converts against apostasy under persecution, and to engage them to a deportment becoming their Christian profession. This Epistle is the key to the ritual of Moses, which unlocks its most intricate and mysterious, and apparently trivial arrangements. It brings to view the soul that animated the whole body of its ceremonies, and which gives them all their importance; and by the light it affords, we are enabled to enter into the darkest places of that extraordinary edifice, and to see the wisdom of its proportions, and the admirable adaptation of all its parts to their design. It was calculated to reconcile the Jew to the destruction of his temple, the loss of his priesthood, the abolition of his sacrifices, the devastation of his country, and the extinction of his name, because it exhibits a nobler temple, a better priesthood, a more perfect sacrifice, a heavenly inheritance, and a more durable memorial. And, as the distinguished honours and privileges which it makes known are equally the portion of the Gentile believer, they are no less fitted to wean his mind from the beggarly elements of this world, and to reconcile him to the lot of a stranger and sufferer on earth.

HEBRON = conjunction, alliance. An ancient city of Judah, situated twenty-two miles south from Jerusalem. It was first called "Kirjath-Arba"—city of Arba, from Arba, the father of Anak. (Gen. xxiii. 2; Josh. xiv. 15.) It is one of the most ancient cities in the world, being mentioned even prior to Damascus, (Gen. xiii. 18; xv. 2,) having been built seven years before Zaan, or Tanis, the ancient capital of Lower Egypt. (Num. xiii. 22.) Hebron appears also to have been called "Mamre," probably from the name of Abraham's friend. (Gen. xxiii. 19; xxxv. 27.) At the conquest of Palestine by the Hebrews, Hebron was taken by Joshua, and it afterwards became one of the six cities of refuge. (Josh. x. 36, 37; xiv. 6—15; xv. 13, 14; xx. 7; xxi. 11, 18; Judg. i. 20.) Hebron, before the capture of Jerusalem, became the royal residence of David. (2 Sam. ii. 1—4, 11; v. 1, 3; 1 Kings ii. 11.) After the exile, the returning Jews dwelt again in the city and surrounding villages. (2 Chron. xi. 10; Neh. xi. 25.) Hebron is situated in a deep, narrow valley, abounding in pastureage, with many vineyards: there are manufactories of glass, and also of water-skins. There are two ancient reservoirs still existing; one of which was probably the "pool of Hebron," over which David hanged the assassins of Ishboseth. (2 Sam. iv. 12.) The present inhabitants are said to be the wildest, most lawless, and desperate people in the Holy Land; and it is a singular fact that they sustain now the same mutinous character with the rebels of ancient days, who armed with David against Saul, and with Absalom against David. 2. The son of Mareshah. (1 Chron. ii. 42, 43.) 3. One of the sons of Kohath; (Ex. vi. 18; 1 Chron. vi. 2, 18;) his descendants are called “Hebronites.” (Num. iii. 27; xxvi. 58.)

HEGEN. A remarkable feature in Palestine, which is universal, is the want of enclosures in the agricultural districts; the whole country being one immense common. The only exception is found in a few enclosed gardens and vineyards, close to the walls of some of the towns, which are hedged with the prickly pear, or other thorny shrubs. The limits of a field are usually marked by a narrow slip of unploughed ground—sometimes by a rough pillar or heap of stones. The crops are secured against the cattle only by the watchful care of the herdsmen, who usually keep them at a distance upon the hills.” (Job xix. 8; Prov. xv. 9; Hos. ii. 6.)

HEEL. When Jehovah had pronounced the sentence of condemnation upon the first human pair, it was His sovereign pleasure also to intimate a purpose of mercy: “And the Lord God said unto the serpent, I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; He shall wound thee, as to the head = vitally, incurably, and thou shalt wound him, as to the heel = partly, curably. (Gen. iii. 14, 15.) In this announcement, which has with great propriety been styled the First Gospel, lies the grand principle of all true religion. It is the root and substance of all the prophecies and promises of after times. The war between the two parties, thus described, was then declared, and has since been prosecuted without intermission. (Rom. vii. 23.) The Son of God appropriately, and all true believers by their union with Him, are the seed of the woman. (Acts xiii. 23; Gal. iv. 4; Heb. ii. 16; John xvii. 21—23.) The servants of the devil and the host of evil spirits who fell with him are the seed of the serpent. (John viii. 44; 1 John iii. 8.) The wounding of the head of the serpent refers to the utter overthrow of his empire in this world, and his final expulsion from the region he has invaded, to that which is his appointed place. And the wounding of the heel of the seed of the woman refers to the injury done by Satan to the cause of Christianity, in impairing the dignity and retarding the progress of its triumphs. Thus shall the empire of Satan be smitten with incurable disaster; while the cause of the Redeemer shall be merely wounded in the heel, from which it would recover, and pursue its triumphs until the earth be subjected to the sway of Him whose right it is to reign. —See Seed.

HEGAI = eunuch. A eunuch in the court of Ahasuerus; (Est. ii. 8, 15;) in verse 3, he is called “Hege.”

HEIFER. A young cow, used by the Hebrews in sacrifices. The heifer was to be free from blemish, and of a red colour, to characterise it as a sin-offering; as the red colour, in the symbolic language of the Scriptures, denotes sin. (Isa. i. 18.) It was to be slain and burned without the camp; and the ashes, mingled with water, sprinkled upon the unclean, for the purposes of purification. (Num. xix. 1—10; Heb. ix. 13, 14.) The whole ceremony had “the remembrance of sin” for its object. (Heb. x. 3.)

HEIR. —See First-Born, and Inheritance.

HELAIN = rust, scab. A wife of Ashur. (1 Chron. iv. 6, 7.)

HELAM = stronghold. A city near the Euphrates, where David gained a victory over Hadadezer. (2 Sam. x. 16, 17.)

HELBAN = fruitful, fertile region. A city in Asher. (Judg. i. 31.)

HELBOH = fat, fertile. A Syrian city, celebrated for its excellent wine.
HEL

(Ezek. xxvii. 18.) This city was generally supposed to be the same as Aleppo, the modern Haleb; but recent research has detected the ancient Helbon in a village situated in the upper part of a valley, of the same name, descending from Antilebanon, north of the Burada, the ancient Abana, and parallel to it. This valley is celebrated for its fine grapes and vineyards. Dr. Robinson says "the wine of Helbon" is the best and most famous wine in the country, while Aleppo produces none of any special reputation. (Ezek. xxvii. 18.)

HELDAI = worldly. 1. A man mentioned in Zech. vi. 10; in verse 14, he is called Helem = a dream. 2. —See HELDAI.

HELEB = fat, fatness. One of David's military chiefs. (2 Sam. xxiii. 29.) In 1 Chron. xi. 30, he is called "Heled" = transcient; and in 1 Chron. xxvii. 15, he is called "Heldai."

HELER = part, portion, lot. A son of Gilead; his descendants were called "Helekites." (Num. xxxvi. 30; Josh. xvii. 2.)

HELEM = stroke. A descendant of Asher. (1 Chron. vii. 35.) 2. —See HELDAI.

HELEPH = exchange. A place in Naphtali. (Josh. xix. 33.)

HELEZ = loin. 1. A descendant of Shesham. (1 Chron. ii. 39.) 2. One of David's military chiefs; called the "Paltite," also the "Pelonite." (2 Sam. xviii. 26; 1 Chron. xi. 27; xxvii. 10.)

HELI = ascent, summit. The father of Mary, and father-in-law of Joseph. (Luke iii. 23.)

HELIOPOLIS —See ox.

HELKAI = Jehovah is his portion. One of the priests. (Neh. xii. 15.)

HELKATH = field. A city of the Levites in Asher. (Josh. xix. 25; xxii. 31.)

HELKATH-HAZZURIM = field of swords. A place near Gibeon, so called from the deadly combat mentioned in 2 Sam. ii. 13-17.

HELL = the covered, concealed, or lower regions. As there are four distinct words in the Hebrew and Greek Scriptures — sheol, hades, tartarus, and gehenna — indifferently rendered "hell" by our translators, it would appear that, in their day, the word hell had not acquired, so exclusively as at present, the meaning of world of future misery. The Hebrew word sheol signifies a cavity, a hollow subterranean place; and is used to designate the grave, the under-world, the region of the spirits of the dead. It was considered as an immense region, a vast subterranean kingdom, of which the grave seems to have been as it were only a part, or a kind of entrance-way; (Deut. xxxii. 22; Job xi. 8; xxvi. 6; Isa. xiv. 9; Jer. v. 14;) and was regarded as extending deep down into the earth, even to its lowest abysses, as deep as the heavens are high above it. (Job xii. 8; Ezek. xxxi. 15; Jon. ii. 2; Am. ix. 2; Deut. xxxii. 22; Ps. cxxxix. 9.) Sheol was poetically represented as involved in thick darkness, a place of utter and perpetual gloom; (Job x. 21, 22;) of inaction and silence; (Ps. vi. 6; xxx. 17, 18; xxv. 17; 1 Sam. ii. 9; Isa. xxxviii. 18; Eccl. ix. 10;) shut up with strong gates and bars; (Isa. xxxviii. 10; Job xvii. 16;) and from it there is no possibility of escape. (Job vii. 9, 10; 2 Sam. xii. 23;) Sheol is also personified, as an insatiable monster, devouring all without remorse or distinction. (Prov. i. 12; xxvii. 20; xxx. 16; Isa. v. 14; Sol. Song viii. 7; Job xxix. 19; Ps. xlix. 14.) The term sheol sometimes designates the world or region to which both the righteous and the wicked go after death. (Gen. xxv. 8; xxxv. 29; xxxvii. 35; xlix. 29; Num. xx. 26; Deut. xxxii. 50; Judg. ii. 10.) According to this general view of the word sheol, our translators have rendered it by the term "grave" in thirty instances out of the sixty-three in which it occurs in the Hebrew Scriptures. (Gen. xxxvii. 35; xl. 38; xlv. 29, 31; 1 Sam. ii. 6; 1 Kings ii. 6, 9; Job vii. 9; xiv. 12; xvii. 13; xxx. 12; xlv. 19; Ps. vi. 5; xxx. 8; xxxvi. 17; xlix. 29; Num. xx. 26; Deut. xxxii. 50; Judg. ii. 10.) According to this general view of the word sheol, our translators have rendered it by the term "grave" in thirty instances out of the sixty-three in which it occurs in the Hebrew Scriptures. (Gen. xxxvii. 35; xl. 38; xlv. 29, 31; 1 Sam. ii. 6; 1 Kings ii. 6, 9; Job vii. 9; xiv. 12; xvii. 13; xxx. 12; xlv. 19; Ps. vi. 5; xxx. 8; xxxvi. 17; xlix. 29; Num. xx. 26; Deut. xxxii. 50; Judg. ii. 10.) According to this general view of the word sheol, our translators have rendered it by the term "grave" in thirty instances out of the sixty-three in which it occurs in the Hebrew Scriptures. (Gen. xxxvii. 35; xl. 38; xlv. 29, 31; 1 Sam. ii. 6; 1 Kings ii. 6, 9; Job vii. 9; xiv. 12; xvii. 13; xxx. 12; xlv. 19; Ps. vi. 5; xxx. 8; xxxvi. 17; xlix. 29; Num. xx. 26; Deut. xxxii. 50; Judg. ii. 10.) According to this general view of the word sheol, our translators have rendered it by the term "grave" in thirty instances out of the sixty-three in which it occurs in the Hebrew Scriptures. (Gen. xxxvii. 35; xl. 38; xlv. 29, 31; 1 Sam. ii. 6; 1 Kings ii. 6, 9; Job vii. 9; xiv. 12; xvii. 13; xxx. 12; xlv. 19; Ps. vi. 5; xxx. 8; xxxvi. 17; xlix. 29; Num. xx. 26; Deut. xxxii. 50; Judg. ii. 10.) HELMET. A piece of defensive armour which covered the head. In the earliest ages it was made of skins or leather, in the form of a skull-cap. The kings had helmets of metal, of various forms, and usually adorned with crests or plumes. The Assyrian warriors, as appears from the monuments, wore helmets of leather, copper, and also of iron. (2 Chron. xxvi. 14; 1 Sam. xvii. 5, 38; Jer. xlv. 4; Ezek. xxvii. 10; xxxviii. 5; xxxix. 24.) The term "helmet" is used figuratively for defence and protection. (Isa. lix. 17; Eph. vi. 17.)

HELAN = strong. The father of Elijah. (Num. i. 9; ii. 7.)

HEMAN = See Heman.

HEMAN = faithful. 1. A wise man of the tribe of Judah. (1 Kings iv. 31; 1 Chron. ii. 6.)
2. A Levite, one of David's chief singers or "seers." (1 Chron. vi. 23; xv. 17; xvi. 41, 42; Ps. lxxxvii. 1; 2 Chron. xxix. 30; xxxv. 15.)

HEMAT = warm springs. The father of the house of Rechab. (1 Chron. ii. 55.)

HEMDAN = pleasant. A descendant of Esau. (Gen. xxxvi. 26.) In 1 Chron. i. 41, he is called "Amram."

HEMLOCK = See Gall.

HEN. The Hebrews appear to have been accustomed to the breeding of poultry. In the East, when the hen sees a bird of prey coming, she makes a noise to assemble her chickens, that she may cover them with her wings from the danger. The Roman army, as an eagle, was about to fall upon the Jews; our Lord expresses a desire to guard them from threatened calamities; but they disregarded his invitations and warnings, and fell a prey to their adversaries. (Matt. xxiii. 37; Luke xiii. 34; xxi. 60, 61.)

HEN = favour. A son of Zephaniah. (Zech. vi. 14.)

HENA. A city of Mesopotamia. (2 Kings xviii. 34; xix. 13; Isa. xxxvii. 13.) It is supposed to be a town upon the Euphrates, still called Anah by the Arabs.

HENADAD = favour of Hadad.

One of the Levites. (Exx. iii. 9; Neh. iii. 18.)

HENOEH = See Enoch.

HEPHER = a pit, well. 1. A city of the Canaanites. (Josh. xii. 17; 1 Kings iv. 10.) 2. A son of Gilead. Num. xxvi. 32; xxvii. 1; Josh. xvii. 2.)
His descendants were called "Heperites." (Num. xxvi. 32.) 3. One of David's distinguished officers. (1 Chron. xi. 36.) 4. A son of Ashur. (1 Chron. iv. 6.)

HEPHZIBAH = my delight is in her. The mother of king Manasseh. (2 Kings xxii. 1.) Also used as a symbolic name of Zion. (Isa. xxxii. 4.)

HERALD. The laws of Moses, as well as the temporary edicts of Joshua, were communicated to the people by the skotēria = "officers." (Josh. i. 10; iii. 2.) Subsequently, the laws and edicts of the kings were proclaimed publicly bycriers or heralds. (Jer. xxxiv. 8, 9; Jon. iii. 5—7; Dan. iii. 4; v. 23.) They were made known in distant provinces, towns, and cities, by messengers sent for that purpose. (1 Sam. xi. 7; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 22; Exx. i. 1; Am. iv. 5.)

HERB. The Hebrew word ʿaseb signifies clean herb, plant, and is applied to vegetables and the larger plants, whose stalk is not ligneous; growing in the fields; (Gen. ii. 5; iii. 18; Ex. x. 22; x. 12, 15.) and on mountains; (Isa. xlii. 16; Prov. xxvii. 15;) growing up and setting seed; (Gen. i. 11, 12, 20;) and serving as food for man; (Gen. i. 30; iii. 18; Ps. civ. 14;) and for beasts. (Deut. xi. 15; Ps. civ. 20; Jer. xiv. 6; Dan. iv. 15, 23, 32, 33; v. 21; Am. vii. i. 2.) Men are said to "flourish as a green herb," (Ps. lxxxii. 16; xci. 7; Job v. 25;) also "to wither." (Ps. cii. 4, 11; 2 Kings xix. 26; Isa. xxxvii. 27.) The Hebrew word jarash properly signifies green, and is applied to any green thing, verdure, foliage of fields and trees; (2 Kings xix. 26; Isa. xxxvii. 27; x. 6; Ex. x. 15; Num. xxii. 4; Ps. xxxvii. 2; Gen. i.
HER

30; ix. 3;) especially a plant, herb; (Deut. xi. 10; 1 Kings xxii. 2;) a portion of herbs, vegetables. (Prov. xv. 17.)—See BITTER HERBS.

HERDMAN.—See SHEPHERD.

HERES the sun. A mountain of the Amorites. (Judg. i. 32.) 2.—See Ox.

HERESH = silence. One of the Levites. (1 Chron ix. 15.)

HERESY. The Greek word airesis, rendered "sect;" (Acts v. 17; xv. 5; xxiv. 5; xxvi. 5; xxviii. 22;) and "heresy;" (Acts xxiv. 14;) properly imports no more than option, choice, a chosen way of life; and was nearly equivalent to the English words sect, school, party. The term is used by the historian merely for distinction's sake, without the least appearance of intention to convey either praise or blame. The word "heresy" is used by implication for discord, dissension. (1 Cor. xi. 19; Gal. v. 20; 2 Pet. ii. 1.) So in Tit. iii. 10, the term "heretic signifies one who creates dissensions, introduces errors, etc., a factions person. Hence the term does not answer to the English word "heretic," which always implies one who entertains opinions in religion, not only erroneous, but pernicious; whereas the word "heresy," in Scriptural use, has no necessary connexion with opinion at all; its immediate connexion is with division or dissension, as it is thereby that sects and parties are formed.

HERMAS = Mercury. A Christian at Rome, to whom Paul addressed special salutation. (Rom. xvi. 14.)

HERMES = Mercury. A Christian at Rome. (Rom. xvi. 14.)

HEROGENES = begotten of Mercury. A companion, for some time, of Paul. (2 Tim. i. 15.)

HERMON = prominent summit, peak. The high southern part of Anti-libanus, lying around the sources of the Jordan; and now called Jebel-es-Sheikh = Old Man's Mountain. It has three peaks or summits, hence called "the Hermonies;" incorrectly rendered the "Hermonites." (Ps. xiii. 6.)

HEROD was the northern limit of the territory of Israel beyond the Jordan. (Deut. iii. 8; iv. 49; Josh. iii. 17; xii. 11.) Hermon and Tabor are the representatives of all the mountains of the Promised Land. (Ps. lxxxix. 12; xlii. 6; cxxvii. 8.) Mount Hermon bore also the name of "Sion;" (Deut. iv. 48;) and was called by the Sidonians "Sirion" = cost of mail, and by the Amorites, "Shenir" or "Senir" = cataract; which may have been the names of the different summits. (Deut. iii. 9; Sol. Song iv. 8; 1 Chron. v. 23.) Hermon rises to an elevation of 10,000 feet above the Mediterranean. The top is partially covered with snow, or rather ice, during the whole year; which, however, lies only in the ravines, and thus presents, at a distance, the appearance of radiant stripes, around and below the summit. The high ridge, Jebel-ed-Duly, on the north of the valley of Jezreel, is sometimes called the Little Hermon; but Jebel-es-Sheikh is the true and only Hermon of the Scriptures.—See LEBANON.

HEROD, surnamed the GREAT. The son of Antipater, the Idumean, who was made by his father procurator of Galilee. A few years after, Herod and his brother Phasaelus were appointed tetrarchs of Judea by Mark Antony. Herod, being driven into exile by Antigonus, repaired to Rome, where, by the influence of Antony, he was declared king of Judea. He returned, subdued the country by force, put to death Antigonus, and to reconcile the Jews to his sway, married Mariamme, the grand-daughter of Hyrcanus. After the battle of Actium, Herod joined the party of Octavius, and was confirmed in his possessions. Herod was notorious for his jealousy and cruelty. He exterminated the ancient Maccabean family. On a groundless charge he had Mariamne put to death upon the scaffold. He endeavoured, however, to conciliate the affections of the Jews, by rebuilding and decorating the temple; but the prejudices of the nation against a foreign yoke were only heightened when he erected theatres and gymnasia at Jerusalem. After a while, Alexander and Aristobulus, his two sons by Mariamne, were accused of conspiring against their father’s government, and were executed. Herod died a few days before the Passover, in the earliest days of Nisan = April, in the year 750 from the foundation of Rome, in the thirty-seventh year after his appointment to the throne, and the seventieth year of his age, in reality about two years after the birth of Christ, but four years, at least, before it, according to the received erroneous chronology. The massacre of the children in Bethlehem, “from two years old and under,” occurred but a few months before the death of Herod the Great. (Macrobius Saturn. ii. 4; Matt. ii. 1–22; Luke i. 5; iii. 1; Jos. Ant. xiv. 9 sqq. xv. 6 sq. xvi. 5 sq. xvii. 11. 4; xviii. 5. 1.)

HEROD ANTIPAS. The son of Herod the Great, by Malthace, his Samaritan wife. After the death of his father, he was appointed by Augustus to be tetrarch of Galilee and Perea, whence, also, the very general appellation of “king” is sometimes given to him. (Matt. xiv. 9; Mark vi. 14; Luke iii. 1.) He married a daughter of Aretas, an Arabian king, but afterwards induced Herodias, the wife of his brother, Philip Herod, to connect herself with him. Herod was banished by Caligula to Lugdunum, Lyons, about A.D. 41. He appears to have been of the sect of the Sadducees. (Matt. xiv. 1, 3, 6, 9; Mark vi. 14–22; viii. 15; Luke iii. 1, 19; vii. 3; ix. 7, 9; xiii. 31; xxiii. 7–15; Acts iv. 27; xiii. 1; Jos. Ant. xvii. 1. 8; xviii. 5. 7.)

HEROD AGrippa. 1. The son of Aristobulus, and grandson of Herod the Great and Mariamne. Agrippa received from Caligula the title of “king,” with the provinces which had belonged to his uncle Philip, and to Lysanias, and those of Herod Antipas. Claudius afterwards gave him all those parts of Judea and Samaria which had belonged to his grandfather Herod the Great. In order to ingratiate himself with the Jews, he commenced a persecution against the Christians. He died suddenly and miserably at Cesare, in the fifty-fourth year of his age. (Acts xii. 1–21; xxiii. 35; Jos. Ant. xvii. 5 sq. xix. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8 sq.)

2. The son of the preceding Herod Agrippa. On the death of his father, Claudius set him over the kingdom of Chalcis, now Asjkar, in Lebanon, which had belonged to his uncle Herod. He was afterwards transferred from Chalcis, with the title of “king,” to those provinces which his father at first possessed, Batanes, Trachonitis, Auranitis, and Abilene. It was before this Herod Agrippa that Paul was brought by Festus. He died in the early part of the reign of Trajan. (Acts xxv. 18–26; xcvii. 1–32; Jos. Ant. xix. 9. 2; xx. 5. 2; xx. 6 sq. 7 sq.)

HERODIANS. A Jewish sect, originating probably in a political partiality towards the Roman emperor and Herod Antipas his deputy. The great body of the Jews, and especially the Pharisees, held that the law of Moses forbade their subjection to a foreign power; (Deut. xvii. 5;) while Herod Antipas and his partisans—the Herodians—regarded that law as forbidding a voluntary subjection; but if they were reduced by force of arms, they considered it lawful to avow their allegiance and pay tribute. Hence the difficulty of the question proposed to Christ by the Herodians and Pharisees. (Matt. xxii. 15–18; Luke xx. 19–23.) The Herodians, as supporters of the Roman domination, also held that it was lawful to comply with the customs and adopt the rites of the conquering nation, which the Pharisees did not. The Herodians appear to have been, generally, Sadducees, as the “leaven of Herod” is also denominated the “leaven of the Sadducees.” (Matt. xvi. 6; Mark iii. 6; viii. 15; xii. 18.) HERODIAS. The daughter of Aristobulus, and grand-daughter of Herod the Great and Mariamne. She was married to her uncle Philip Herod, but abandoned him and connected herself with his brother Herod Antipas. It was by her artifice, that Herod Antipas was persuaded to cause John the Baptist to be put to death, she being enraged at John on account of his bold denunciation of the incestuous connection which subsisted between her and Herod. When Herod was banished to Lyons, she also accompanied him. (Matt. xiv. 3, 6; Mark vi. 17—22; Luke iii. 19.)

HERODION. A Christian whom Paul calls his kinsman. (Rom. xvi. 11.)

HERON. The Hebrew word ašaphah is the name of an unclean bird, probably the "heron." (Lev. xi. 19; Deut. xiv. 18;) which is found in Egypt, and also in Hauran, where it frequents the margins of the lakes and pools, striking and devouring a great quantity of fish. It appears from the monuments, that the ancient Egyptians used to keep tame herons, probably to assist in fishing, as among the Chinese at the present day.

HESED = desire, ardor. An officer under Solomon. (1 Kings iv. 10.)

HESHBON = reason, intelligence. The capital of the Amorites, afterwards falling within the bounds of Reuben and Gad and assigned to the Levites; and still later ranked among the cities of Moab. (Num. xxxi. 24—30; xxxii. 37; Deut. ii. 24—30; Josh. ix. 10; xiii. 17; xxi. 39; 1 Chron. vi. 81; Isa. xv. 4; Jer. xliv. 2.) It was situated twenty-one miles east of the point where the Jordan enters the Dead sea. It was celebrated for its fish-pools; (Sol. Song vii. 5;) and is now called Heshbon. Numerous ruins, with cisterns, attest its ancient splendour.

HESHMON = fatness, fat soil. A place in Judah. (Josh. xv. 27.)

HETH = terror, dread. A Canaanite, the ancestor of the Hittites; who dwelt in the vicinity of Hebron. (Gen. x. 15; xv. 20; xxiii. 3, 7; xxxv. 16; Deut. vii. 1; Josh. i. 4. The "kings of the Hittites," refers generally to all the Canaanitish kings. (2 Kings vii. 6; Gen. xxvii. 46; 1 Kings xi. 1; Ezek. xvi. 3.) From the monuments it appears that the Hittites were frequently at war with the Egyptians.

HEZRON: wrapped up, hiding place. A city of Syria of Damascus. (Ezek. xlvii. 15; xlviii. 1.)

HEZEKIAH = Jehovah strengthens. 1. The son and successor of Ahas, king of Judah. He reigned twenty-nine years, from b. c. 725 to b. c. 697. Immediately on his accession to the throne he purified the temple, restored the worship of Jehovah, and abolished idolatry. He re-established the festivals, and invited the Hebrews of the neighbouring kingdom of Israel to share with their brethren of Judah, in the homage due to Jehovah their Supreme King. (2 Kings xviii. 1—6; 2 Chron. xxix. 1—9; xxx. 1—27; xxxi. 1—21; Prov. xxv. 1.) He extended the fortifications and supplied Jerusalem more plentifully with water by a new aqueduct. (2 Chron. xxxxi. 27—30.) He conquered the Philistines; and shook off the Assyrian yoke which Ahas had voluntarily taken on himself. But in the fourteenth year of his reign, Sennacherib came with a large army to reduce Judah to obedience, and to conquer Egypt. Hezekiah submitted to this potent conqueror, and paid the required tribute. This campaign is carefully noted on the Assyrian cuneiform inscriptions, where the amount of tribute is stated at 30 talents of gold, and 800 talents of silver, being an excess of 500 talents of silver, probably taken from the temple. The facts stated by the sacred historian are repeated on the contemporary inscriptions with marvellous accuracy, and yield beautiful confirmation to Holy Writ. (2 Kings xvi. 18—17.) But after Sennacherib had gained possession of Ashdod, he determined to complete the subjugation of Judah. He soon reduced several cities and summoned Jerusalem to surrender. Hezekiah relied on the promise of Divine deliverance announced to him by Isaiah, "Behold I will send a blast upon him, and he shall hear a rumour, and shall return to his own land; and I will cause him to fall by the sword in his own land;" (2 Kings xix. 7; Isa. xxxvii. 7;) and this deliverance was soon accomplished. The "rumour" which Sennacherib heard was of the advance of Tirhakah, the Ethiopian, who was on his march through Arabia to attack the Assyrian territories, with a force which Sennacherib did not deem it prudent to meet. Soon after, the predicted "blast"—probably a violent tempest of mingled hail and fire—smote the Assyrian camp, and cut off in one night a hundred and eighty-five thousand men. The Assyrian army was so suddenly reduced by the immediate judgment of God, that Sennacherib was obliged to make a precipitate retreat to Assyria. (2 Kings xviii. 17—37; xix. 1—37; 2 Chron.xxxii. 1—22; Isa. xxxvi. 1—22; xxxvii. 1—88.) Soon after this signal deliverance, Hezekiah was attacked by the plague; and though it made its appearance externally, in the plague-boil, there was so little hope of his recovery, that Isaiah earnestly requested him to make his will. (Isa. xxxviii. 1.) But afterwards, in answer to his prayer, Hezekiah received a Divine promise of recovery in three days, and of an addition of fifteen years to his life. Merodach-Baladan, king of Babylon, sent an embassy to Hezekiah, to congratulate him on his recovery, and on his deliverance from Sennacherib. Hezekiah appears to have been so greatly elated, that he made before the foreign ambassadors a vain and somewhat pompous display of his possessions. He was, however, reproofed by Isaiah, and assured that his wealth should, at a future day, be transported to Babylon, and his own sons become servants in the palace of her king. When the fifteen years had expired, Hezekiah was gathered to his fathers, and was sincerely lamented by all his people. (2 Kings xx. 1—21; 2 Chron. xxxii. 23—33; Isa. xxxviii. 1—22; xxxix. 1—6.) 2. One of the sons of Neariah. He is called "Hiskijahu" in the margin. (1 Chron. iii. 23.) 3. One whose posterity returned from exile. (Neh. vii. 21.) 4. In Neh. vii. 17, he is called "Hiskijah."
HEZ

HEZION = vision. The grandfather of Benhadad. (1 Kings xv. 18.)

HEZIR = evasive. 1. One of the priests in David's reign. (1 Chron. xxiv. 15.) 2. A Levite in the time of Nehemiah. (Neh. x. 20.)

HEZRAI = enclosed. One of David's distinguished warriors. (2 Sam. xxii. 85.) He is called "Hezro the Carmelite." (1 Chron. xi. 37.)

HEZRON = enclosed. 1. A son of Reuben. (Gen. xlvii. 9; Ex. vi. 14.) His descendants were called "Hersonites." (Num. xxvi. 6.) 2. A son of Phares. (Gen. xlvi. 12; Ruth iv. 18, 19; 1 Chron. ii. 6, 18, 21, 24, 25.) He is also called "Ezrom." (Matt. i. 3.) 3. A city in the south of Judah, called also "Hazor." Perhaps the village Haror, near Kadesh. (Josh. xv. 25.)

HIDDAI = breakers. One of David's distinguished warriors. (2 Sam. xxiiii. 30.) He is also called "Hurai." (1 Chron. xi. 32.)

HIDDEKEL = the rapid Tigris. A celebrated river of western Asia; it is called the third of the rivers which issued from the common stream in the garden of Eden, and is said to "flow before Assyria," i.e. to wash it on the west. (Gen. ii. 14; Dan. x. 4.) The Hiddekel, called in the ancient Zend language, "Teger" = streams, whence the name "Tigris," like its twin river, the Euphrates, has, in the Armenian territory, numerous sources. The western branches, which form the principal stream, according to Colonel Chesney, spring from the southern slope of the Anti-Taurus, at no great distance from the sources of the Araxes, the Euphrates, and the Halys; and form a junction at Osman Kein, not far from Diarbekir. The eastern branch is formed by the union of several streams, some of which, according to the recent researches of Mr. Layard, have their sources on the southern slopes of Nimrud Dagh, and others in the districts of Munks and Shattak; and, further eastward, in the Botan districts, in the mountains of Kurdistan, which all fall into the united waters of the Bitlis and Sert, and form a stream nearly equal to the western Tigris. The eastern and western branches of the Tigris unite at Tillich; whence the river rushes through a long, narrow, and deep gorge, to the low country of Assyria. After reaching Musul = collection or snow, so called from the bridges of boats which connect that city with the vicinity of Nineveh, the river is about 300 feet wide, and, when swollen by its periodical increases from the rains, or the melting of the mountain snows, becomes impetuous, inundating the lower country, and sometimes destroying the bridges of boats. The river receives several important tributaries; and between Musul and Baghdad passes over several ledges of limestone rocks, which form rapids of greater or less importance. In the latter part of its course it avaees 600 feet in width, frequently 15 or 20 feet in depth; and, during a sudden rise, flows about five miles an hour; still, in passing over the alluvial plain, the current is often less than a mile an hour. At Kurnah, between Baghdad and Baarah, the Euphrates and the Tigris unite; the combined stream receives the name of Shat-el-Arab, which, after a course of about 200 miles, falls into the Persian Gulf. The whole course of the Tigris, to its junction with the Euphrates, has been estimated at 1146 miles; and the basin as inclosing an area of 36,000 geographical square miles. The Tigris is navigable from the Persian Gulf almost as far as Tekrit, a distance of nearly 600 miles, to vessels drawing from three to four feet of water. There is an active commerce along the river between Basrah and Baghdad, by means of the large country boats which go in fleets; above the latter city, it is chiefly carried on by rafts from Musul. The Euphrates Expedition ascended the Tigris to beyond Dokhalah; and the Euphrates steamer passed from the Euphrates to the Tigris by the ancient canal, which leaves the former a few miles above Felugo, and enters the latter a short way below Baghdad. However, the usual indifference of the Turkish government is not only bringing about the same changes in the course and condition of the Tigris, as in those of the Euphrates, in neglecting to keep up the embankments, but has, by continued misgovernment, oppression, and neglect, contributed to turn one of the most fertile countries in the world into a desert and a wilderness. The banks of the Tigris, where stood Nineveh, and other populous cities, once the seats of high culture, and the residence of mighty kings, are now covered with mounds and ruins, the relics of ancient greatness. Such is the desolation, that there is scarcely one permanent settlement on the banks of the Tigris, from Jezirah to the immediate vicinity of Baghdad, with the exception of Musul and Tekrit.—See Euphrates.

HIEL = God liveth. A man of Bethel, who rebuilt Jericho, notwithstanding the imprecation denounced in Josh. vi. 26.—See Ahiram.

HIERAPOLIS = sacred city. A city of Phrygia, situated about ten miles from Laodicea. (Col. iv. 13.) The ruins of the city are extensive; among which are the remains of temples, churches, a triumphal arch, a theatre, gymnasium, baths, and highly ornamented sarcophagi. Hierapolis was celebrated for its warm springs, which hold in solution carbonate of lime, depositing incrustations on anything with which the waters come in contact.
HIG

HIGGAION. This word, rendered “a solemn sound,” (Ps. xcvii. 8,) properly means “murmuring tones,” of the harp. In Psalm ix. 16, the words “Higgaiion Selah,” appear to be used as a musical sign: instrumental music, pause, i.e. let the instruments strike up a symphony, and the singers pause.

HIGH PLACES. The Hebrew word bamon, is a general term, comprehending mountains and hills; but in Ezek. xx. 29, it is given as the proper name of a place; while in other passages it is usually and correctly translated “high place.” The Hebrews, like most other ancient nations, frequently offered sacrifices upon high places, notwithstanding the prohibition in Deut. xii. 1—32, both to Jehovah, and to idols; (1 Sam. ix. 12—14; 1 Kings iii. 2, 4; 2 Kings xii. 3; (1 Chron. xvi. 39;) and erected chapels thereon, and had ministers of the sacred rites. (1 Kings xii. 32; xiii. 32; 2 Kings xvii. 25, 32.) Even Solomon, after the erection of the temple, and other kings, till the time of Josiah, frequently sacrificed on hills and mountains. (1 Kings xi. 7; 2 Kings xiv. 4; xv. 4, 35; 2 Chron. xx. 35; Ezek. vi. 3; Lev. xxvi. 30.) Probably the massive circular ruins on the summits of Hermon, are the remains of such places of ancient idolatrous worship. (2 Kings xxiii. 7; Ezek. xvi. 10; Am. v. 8.)

HIGH PRIEST.—See PRIEST.

HIGH-WAY. Travellers have frequently noticed the lack of roads in Palestine. Travel and transport being all performed on the backs of beasts of burden, which usually move in single file, the most important routes are only marked by narrow winding paths; and the soil is often so hard as to take no impression from the feet of animals, so that the eye of an unpractised traveller there perceives, even upon a common thoroughfare, no evidence that others have passed along the same way. No repairs are ever made—no labour employed to remove an obstacle or prevent a breach. Dr. Olin says, “The great road, leading across the plain from the Damascus Gate at Jerusalem, has been worn by travel and washed by rains, till it has the appearance of a deep artificial trench, into which an infinite number of small rolling stones have been gathered from the adjacent fields. It is hardly necessary to remark that there are no roads, there can be no wheel carriages. I did not see so much as a cart or wheel-barrow in the Holy Land. Convenient artificial roads never existed here to any great extent, with the exception of the few military routes constructed by the Romans during their sway over these countries.” (Lev. xxvi. 22; Ps. lxxxiv. 5; Prov. xvi. 17.)

HILEN.—See Holon.

HILKIAH = portion of Jehovah.

1. A high priest of the Hebrews. (2 Kings xxiv. 4, 8, 12.) 2. The father of Jeremiah. (Jer. i. 1.) 3. The father of Eliakim. (2 Kings xviii. 18, 26; Isa. xxii. 20; xxxvi. 3.) 4. A descendant of Merari. (1 Chron. xxvi. 11.) 5. The father of Gemariah. (Jer. xxix. 3.) 6. A descendant of Merari. (1 Chron. vi. 45.) 7. One who stood with Ezra when he read the law. (Neh. viii. 4.)

HILL-COUNTRY.— See JUTTAH.

HILLEL = praise. The father of Abdon. (Judg. xii. 13, 15.)

HIN = a vessel. A measure of liquids, containing the sixth part of a bath, equal to about ten pints. (Num. xv. 4, sq. xxviii. 5, 7, 14; Ex. xxix. 40; Ez. iv. 11.)—See BATH.

HIND.—See HART.

HINNOM. A valley at the foot of the southern brow of Mount Zion, on the south and west of Jerusalem, through which passed the southern boundary of Benjamin and the northern of Judah, commonly called the “Valley of the son of Hinnom.” (Josh. xv. 8; xvii. 16; 2 Kings xxiii. 10; Neh. xi. 30; Jer. vii. 32; xix. 2, 6.) The Greek genitive, and the English “gehinном” and “gehenna,” are merely forms of the Hebrew name. It is now called Wady Jehinnam. (Matt. v. 22, 29, 30; Mark ix. 43, 45, 47.) It was noted for the human sacrifices here offered to Moloch, under some of the idolatrous kings; hence it was also called "Tophet" =place of burning. (Jer. vii. 31; xix. 11—14.) In allusion to this detested and abominable burning, the later Jews applied the name gehenna, to denote the place of future punishment, or the fires of hell. Josiah caused to be carried there the filth of the city of Jerusalem. (2 Chron. xxviii. 3; 2 Kings xxiii. 10; Ezek. xxv. 37, 39.) But we have no evidence that the custom of desecrating this place was continued down to the period when our Saviour was upon earth, or that perpetual fires were kept up, in order to consume the offal which was deposited there. Parts of the valley are now under tillage, and planted with olive and other fruit trees.

HIRAH =nobility, noble birth. An Adullamite. (Gen. xxxviii. 1, 12.)

HIRAM =noble, high born. A distinguished king of Tyre, contemporary with David and Solomon. (2 Sam. v. 11; 1 Kings v. 1—18; ix. 11, 14; x. 11; 1 Chron. xiv. 1.) He is also called "Hiram." (2 Chron. ii. 2; vii. 2, 18; ix. 10, 21.) His dominion is supposed to have extended over the western parts of the chain of Lebanon. Under his reign, the city of Tyre became celebrated for its commerce and magnificence; and the vast supplies he furnished to the Hebrew kings, show the greatness of his resources. When David was building himself a palace, Hiram sent him cedar-wood from Lebanon, and skilful artificers. He also furnished Solomon with gold, timber from Lebanon, stone, and artificers, for his magnificent buildings, especially for the temple at Jerusalem. Hiram also took part in Solomon's traffic to the Eastern seas—which certainly could not have been undertaken by the Hebrew king without his assistance in providing ships and experienced mariners.

HIV

2. A celebrated Tyrian artificer, the son of a widow of the tribe of Dan, and of a Tyrian father. He was sent by Hiram, king of Tyre, as his "father," i.e. master-workman, to Solomon, for whom he executed the principal work in the interior of the temple, as well as several of the sacred utensils. (1 Kings vii. 18, 14, 40.) He is called "Huram," (2 Chron. ii. 13; iv. 11, 16,) and "Hirom." (1 Kings vii. 40, margin.)

HIROM.—See HIRAM.

HIRELING. A labourer who is employed on hire for a limited time. (Job vii. 1; xiv. 6.) By the Mosaic law, such an one was to be paid his wages as soon as his work was over. (Lev. xix. 13.) The little interest which would be felt by such a temporary labourer, compared with that of the shepherd or permanent keeper of the flock, furnish a striking illustration in one of our Lord's discourses. (John x. 12, 13.) The working-day in the East begins with the rising of the sun, and ends when it sets. The parable in Matt. xx. 1—14, is interesting, not only as showing what were the day's wages of a labourer at this period in Judea, "a penny," i.e. the Roman denarius, about sevenpence-halfpenny of our money; but also as showing that the salvation of the Gentiles can in itself become no impediment to the Jews; and, as eternal life is the free gift of God, He has a right to give it in whatever proportions, at whatever times, and on whatever conditions He pleases.

HISKIJAH.—See HEZEKIAH.

HISS. To call any one by a hiss, or whistle, in the manner of beekeepers calling bees, denotes power and authority. (Isa. v. 26; vii. 18; Zech. x. 8.) The term is also used as an expression of scorn and derision. (1 Kings ix. 8; Job xxvii. 23; Jer. xiv. 8; xxv. 9; xlix. 17.)

HISTORY.—See SCRIPTURES.

HITTITES.—See HITH.

HIVITES =villagers. A Canaan-itish people, anciently dwelling at the foot of Hermon and Lebanon; (Josh. xii. 3; Judg. iii. 3; also at Shechem and Gibeon. (Gen. xxxiv. 2; Josh. xii. 19; 2 Sam. xxiv. 7; 1 Kings ix. 20.).

HIZKIAH = Jehovah strengthens. An ancestor of the prophet Zephaniah. (Zeph. i. 1.)

HISKIAH.—See HEZEKIAH.

HOBAB.—See JETHRO.

HOBAH = hidden, hiding-place. A place to the northward of Damascus. (Gen. xiv. 15.)

HOD = splendour. A descendant of Asher. (1 Chron. vii. 37.)

HODAIAH = praise ye Jehovah. A descendant of David. (1 Chron. iii. 24.)

HODAVIAH = praise ye Jehovah.
1. A descendant of Manasseh. (1 Chron. v. 24.)
2. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. iv. 7.)
3. One of the Levites. (Ezr. ii. 40.) In the margin he is called "Hodevah." (Neh. vii. 43.)

HODESH = a month.—See BAARAN.

HODIAH = splendour of Jehovah.
A descendant of Judah. She is probably called also "Jehudijah" = celebrated. (1 Chron. iv. 18, 19.)

HODIJAH = splendour of Jehovah.
The name of five Levites. (Neh. viii. 7; ix. 5; x. 10, 18, 18.)

HOGLAH = partridge. A daughter of Zelophehad. (Num. xxxvi. 83; xxvii. 1; xxxvi. 11.)

HOHAM = whom Jehovah impels. A king of Hebron. (Josh. x. 3.)

HOLLINESS. This attribute denotes the absolute excellency of the Most High, in the infinite rectitude of His will, manifested in perpetual justice, in His external relations to accountable beings. (Ps. xxii. 3; xcix. 3—9; Deut. xxxii. 4; Ex. xv. 11; Isa. vi. 3.) So also, the Messiah is called the "Holy One!" (Ps. xvi. 10; Luke iv. 34; Acts iii. 14); and "Holy" is the common epithet given to the eternal Spirit. (John xiv. 26.) Holiness, in intelligent creatures, is conformity of the mind to the will of God, expressed in justice in all the relations of life.

Personal holiness is not merely imitative of the Divine perfection, but has its seat in the heart, and is the effect of the indwelling of the Spirit of Christ. (Rom. viii. 9, 10); v. 5; Eph. ii. 8—10.) Hence, holiness is not so much any principle or element belonging to myself that lives, as it is Christ who lives in me, informing and actuating the whole man by His almighty agency. If, then, Christ lives in the believer, the believer is holy; and, in so far as Christ, rather than the renewed nature, is the presiding activity within, the believer cannot commit sin. (Gal. ii. 20; 1 John iii. 9.) Holiness is the foundation of happiness and the basis of true dignity. It is not only the privilege of every believer, but also his imperative duty; (1 Peter i. 16; and it is absolutely essential to the enjoyment of God here and hereafter. (Heb. xii. 14.) In the following Greek words, occurring in the new Testament, holiness seems to be the fundamental idea: "Katharos" = pure, immaculate, rendered "pure;" (Matt. v. 8; Rom. xiv. 20; 1 Tim. iii. 9; Titus i. 15; Heb. x. 22; and "clean." (Luke xi. 41.) "Amian--" = "undefiled." (Heb. vii. 26; xiii. 4; James i. 27; 1 Peter i. 4.) "Agnos" = "pure, chaste, clean, rendered "clear;" (2 Cor. vii. 11; "pure;" (1 Tim. v. 22; 1 John iii. 3; James ili. 17); and "chaste." (2 Cor. xii. 2; Titus ii. 5; 1 Peter iii. 2. "Ostas" = pious, holy, rendered "holy;" (1 Tim. ii. 8; Titus i. 8; Heb. vii. 26; Rev. x. 4.) "Holy One;" (Acts ii. 27; xiii. 35; compare Ps. xvi. 10; and "mercy," margin "holy," or "just things," i.e. benefits promised. (Acts xiii. 34.) "Ieros" = sacred or consecrated, rendered "holy;" (2 Tim. iii. 15) and "holy things." (1 Cor. ix. 13.) "Agios" = sacred to God, holy, pure, clean; just as in the Hebrew word kadesh = holiness, the cognate notions of purity and sanctity exist; (Lev. xi. 49, 44; compare 1 Pet. i. 16. Deut. xxi. 14; 2 Sam. xi. 4; Ex. xix. 22; 2 Chron. v. 11; Isa. lvii. 17.)

Agios is spoken in the new Testa-
HON

Mention of things or persons sacred to God; (Rom. xi. 16; Luke ii. 23;) of the prophets; (Luke i. 70; Acts iii. 21; 2 Pet. i. 21;) of the priesthood; (1 Pet. ii. 5;) of the apostles; (Eph. iii. 5;) of the angels; (Matt. xxv. 31;) of places, especially of Jerusalem, and of the temple; (Acts vii. 38; Ex. iii. 5; Matt. iv. 5; Acts vi. 13; xxi. 28;) also of Christians. (Acts ix. 13, 32; compare Dan. vii. 21; viii. 24.) Also of that which is to be generated or treated with all honour, and primarily with respect to God. (John xvii. 11; Luke i. 49; Rev. iv. 8; Rom. i. 2; Luke i. 72; 1 Cor. iii. 17.) Then the idea of purity being added to this, it frequently denotes that which is free from error and vice, or from actual defilement. (1 Pet. i. 15; 1 John ii. 20; Mark vi. 20; Eph. i. 4; 1 Cor. vii. 34; 2 Pet. iii. 11.) So the commandment is called “holy” (2 Pet. ii. 21;) and the calling or invitation is “holy,” insomuch as it is an invitation to a life of holiness. (2 Tim. i. 9.) — See SANCIFICATION.

HOLON = sandy. A city of Judah; (Josh. xv. 51; xxi. 15;) also called “Hilen.” (1 Chron. vi. 58.) 2. — See HEBRON.

HOLY CITY. —See JERUSALEM.

HOLY DAY. —See FEASTS.

HOLY GHOST. —See SPIRIT.

HOLY LAND. —See CANAAN.

HOLY OF HOLIES. —See TABERNACLE.

HOMA = destruction. A descendent of Esau; (1 Chron. i. 39;) also called “Hemam.” (Gen. xxxvi. 22.)

HOMER = a heap. A measure for things dry; equivalent to the “cor” = baths or measure, containing ten ephahs, i.e. 32 pecks, or 75 gallons; or, according to others, 104 bushels or 866 gallons. (1 Kings iv. 22; Lev. xxvii. 16; Num. xi. 32; Ezek. xiv. 11, 13, 14.) — See MEASURES.

HONEY. Palestine was a country flowing with milk and honey.” (Deut. xxxii. 13; Ps. lxxx. 16.) There are three Hebrew words rendered “honey” by our translators. 1. Debaš = honey of bees; (Judg. xiv. 8; Lev. xi. 2; 1 Sam. xiv. 26, 27, 29, 41; Prov. xvi. 24; xxiv. 13;) also “wild honey,” i.e. from wild bees. (Deut. xxxii. 13; Ps. lxxx. 16; Matt. iii. 5; Mark i. 6.) The same term is also used for honey of grapes, syrup, i.e. the newly-expressed juice of grapes, served boiled down to the half or third part, now called sirup, and much used by all classes as a condiment with their food. (Gen. xlii. 11; Ex. iii. 8, 17; xiii. 5; xxi. 3; Lev. xiv. 24; Num. xiii. 27; Ezek. xxvii. 17.) This term is also rendered “dates.” (2 Chron. xxxii. 5; margin.)

2. The word yaśar signifies the droppings of honey, i.e. honey flowing or dropping of its own accord from the comb. (1 Sam. xiv. 27; Sol. Song v. 1.)

3. The word nozeph signifies honey that drops, usually associated with the tuph or “comb,” i.e. honey dropping from the comb. (Ps. xix. 10; Prov. vi. 6; xxxiv. 13; xxi. 7; Sol. Song iv. 11.) Milk and honey were among the chief dainties in the earlier ages, as they are now among the Bedawin; and butter and honey are also mentioned among articles of food. (Isa. vii. 15.) The ancients used honey instead of sugar; (Ps. cxix. 103; Prov. xxv. 13; xxv. 16, 17.) On account of its fermenting nature, honey was not permitted to be offered on the altar of the Lord. (Lev. xi. 11.) As it is coupled with leaven in this prohibition, it would seem to amount to an interdiction of things sour and sweet. The first fruits of different kinds of honey, however, were presented for the support of the priests. (2 Chron. xxxii. 5; Gen. xlii. 11; Luke xxiv. 42; Rev. x. 9, 10.)

HOOD. —See TURBAN.

HOPE. The desire and expectation of some good, attended with the possibility, at least, of obtaining it. No passion seems to be more natural to man than hope, and considering the numerous troubles with which he is encompassed, none is more necessary; for life, without hope, would be a heavy and spiritless thing, and perhaps hardly to be borne; whereas hope infuses strength into the mind, and, by so doing, lessens the burdens of life. The hope of the Christian is a confident expectation of all necessary good, both in time and in eternity, founded on the promises, relations, and perfections of God, and on the full and free atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ. Hope is attended with "patience," (Rom. viii. 24, 25,) and "purity." (1 John iii. 2, 3.) It is called "lively;" (1 Pet. i. 3;) "good;" (2 Thes. ii. 16;) "joyful;" (Rom. v. 2;) and "sure." (Heb. vi. 19; Rom. v. 25.)—See Anchor.
HOP

HÖPHNI = fighter. One of the sons of Eli. (1 Sam. i. 3; ii. 34; iv. 4.)

HÖPHRA. A king of Egypt, contemporary with Zedekiah, king of Judah, and Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon. He is identified with the Apries and the Psammetechus III. On the monuments his name is written

\[\text{ra ho ph}\]

the first character \text{ra} = the sun, i.e. king, is read last. Pharaoh Hophra formed an alliance with Zedekiah against Nebuchadnezzar, and his advance with an Egyptian army constrained the Chaldeans to raise the siege of Jerusalem, but they soon returned and took and destroyed the city. (Jer. xxxvii. 5—11.) The momentary aid, and the danger of placing reliance on the protection of Hophra, led the prophet to compare the Egyptians to "a staff of reed to the house of Israel." (Ezek. xxix. 6, 7.) This arrogant monarch was the last of the ancient Pharaohs. He was deposed by Amasis, and his country was subdued by the Chaldeans. (Jer. xliv. 30.) Henceforth there was "no more a prince of the land of Egypt." (Ezek. xxix. 3, 19, 20; xxx. 13.) Amaasis being of low birth, did not inherit the kingdom, but reigned on behalf of a foreign lord. He was not a king, but only a viceroy. (Jer. xlvi. 22; xlii. 1—13; xlv. 1—30; xlvi. 13—28; Ezek. xxix. 1—21; xxx. 1—26; xxxi. 1—18; xxxii. 1—32.)

HÖR = mountain. 1. A mountain of Arabia Petrae, on the confines of Idumea, and forming part of the mountain of Seir or Edom. It lay one-and-a-half days' journey from the Red sea, between the two; and at its eastern foot lay the ancient city of Petra. (Num. xx. 22, 29; xxxiii. 37—39.) The mountain now identified with Mount Hor is the most conspicuous in the whole range of Mount Seir, and bears the name of Jebel Nebir Harun = Mount of the Prophet Aaron. Its form is a cone irregularly truncated, having three ragged points or peaks; of which that on the north-east is the highest, and has upon it the Mohammedan Wely or tomb of Aaron. The Wely Nebir Harun upon the summit, is nothing different from other Arab tombs of saints, which are so common upon the mountains and hills of Palestine. The view from the summit of the edifice is very extensive in every direction. In Deut. x. 6, Aaron is said to have died at Mosera, which was the station close by Mount Hor, whence he ascended the mount and died. 2. A spur of Lebanon, at the north-eastern extremity. (Num. xxxiv. 7, 8.)

HÖRAM = height, or mountaineer. A Canaanitish king who dwelt at Gezer. (Josh. x. 33.)

HÖREB = dry, desert. The general name of the whole cluster of mountains of which Sinai was a particular summit. So also, the Arabs now apply the name Jebel et-Tur to the whole central granite region; while the different mountains of which it is composed are called Jebel Katherin, Jebel Musa, etc. In the Mosaic writings Horeb never appears as a single mountain in contrast to Sinai. Sinai, on the other hand, is always a single

342
HOR

The mountain of the range of Horeb. The mountain of Sinai and its wilderness are distinguished as the theatre of events that took place in the district of Horeb; and the whole of Horeb is called “the mountain of God,” which designation, nevertheless, is only applicable to the whole, on account of what transpired on part of it, Sinai. (Ex. iii. 1, 12; iv. 27; xvii. 6; xviii. 5; xxxiii. 6.) Hence, sometimes, “Sinai” alone is spoken of. (Ex. xix. 11, 19, 23; xxiv. 16; xxxi. 18; xxxiv. 29, 32; Lev. vii. 38; xxv. 1; xxvi. 46; xxvii. 34; Num. i. 1; iii. 1, 14; xxxiii. 15.) But frequently “Horeb” alone is named; and the same events are spoken of as occurring on Horeb, which are described as taking place on Sinai. (Deut. i. 2; vi. 19; iv. 10, 15; v. 2; ix. 8; xvii. 10; xxix. 1.) Later sacred writers employ both names; e.g. “Horeb;” (1 Kings viii. 9; xix. 8; 2 Chron. v. 10; Ps. cvi. 19; Mal. iv. 4; ”Sinai;” (Judg. v. 5; Ps. xlviii. 8, 17.) In the new Testament, “Sinai” alone is read, and had then apparently become a general name, as at the present day. (Acts vii. 30, 38; Gal. iv. 24, 25.) The same is the case throughout in the writings of Josephus. In more modern times, and ever since the crusades, the application of the names Sinai and Horeb to the particular mountains or peaks has varied greatly among travellers in this region. The range of Horeb spreads over an extensive field, exhibiting rugged and venerable mountains of dark granite, stern, naked, splintered peaks and ridges, of indescribable grandeur, rising perpendicularly in frowning majesty, from twelve to fifteen hundred feet in height. Shrubs and tufts of herbs are found in the valleys and ravines; and the valley in which the convent is situated is an oasis of beauty amid scenes of the sternest desolation. — See SINAI.

HOREM = devoted. A place in the tribe of Naphtali. (Josh. xix. 38.)

HOR-HAIDAHDAG.—See GUD-GODAHL.
(Dan. x. 7, 8, 24; viii. 8, 21.) In Hab. iii. 4, the term “horns” denotes rays of light. “Horns of ivory,” designate elephants’ tusks. (Ezek. xxvii. 16.) The term “horn” was also used for peak, summit of a hill or mountain. (Isa. v. 1; margin.) Horns of metal were sometimes worn by warriors on their caps or helmets, as a symbol of power, authority or strength. (Deut. xxxiii. 17; 1 Kings xxii. 11; 2 Chron. xviii. 10.) Some of the females of Mount Lebanon and Tyre, wear on their foreheads the tautour or horn, which gives them a wild and fierce appearance. This appendage to the head-dress is made of dough, tin, silver, or gold, according to the wealth of the different classes. This conical tube is generally the distinguishing badge of wifehood. Mr. Graham says, some of them are more than one English yard in length. The rank is indicated by the length; the nobler the lady, the longer the horn. A long veil descends from the horn; and this incommodious appendage is not always thrown aside on retiring to rest.

HORNET. The Hebrew word tsirah, rendered “hornet,” signifies collectively hornets, wasps, so called from striking, i. e. stinging. (Ex. xxiii. 28; Deut. vii. 20; Josh. xxiv. 12.) Some understand the term “hornets,” as a symbol of the terror, panic, sent from God upon the enemy, (Gen. xxxv. 5) by which they were agitated and put to flight, as if stung to madness. (Ex. xxiii. 27, 28; Deut. vii. 20, 23.) However, we incline to the literal meaning, that Jehovah employed this well-known and terrific insect in driving out the Hivites, Canaanites, and Hittites, from before the Hebrews. Αelian relates that the Phaselites, a Phenician people, were driven from their locality by wasps; —not unlikely the same event which took place in the days of Joshua.

HORONAIM = two caverns. A Moabish city. (Isa. xv. 5; Jer. xlviii. 3, 5, 34.) The inhabitants are called “Horonites.” (Neh. ii. 10, 19.)

HORSE. Horses appear to have been originally derived, by the Egyptians, from high Asia. (Gen. xlvii. 17, Ex. ix. 8; Deut. xvii. 16.) The Hebrews employed several terms to denote this animal. Sus = a horse; (Gen. xlix. 17; Josh. vi. 4; Job xlii. 19.) sem = a mare; (Sol. Song i. 9.) abhir = strong ones, mighty ones, a horse; (Jer. viii. 16; xlvi. 3; I. 11.) parash = a horse for riding, a steed; (1 Kings iv. 26; Ezek. xxvii. 14; Joel ii. 4; Isa. xxvii. 28.) rekes = a horse of a fleeter race, a steed, courser; (Mic. i. 13; 1 Kings iv. 28.) rekeb = a beast for riding, a chariot, also horses and the warriors who sit upon the chariots; (Isa. xxii. 7; xxvii. 7; 2 Sam. viii. 4; x. 18; 2 Kings ii. 17.) ram = a mare. (Est. viii. 10.) The patriarchs did not possess horses; and after the departure of the Hebrews from Egypt, Jehovah expressly forbade their ruler to procure them. (Deut. xvii. 16.) The tabernacle was drawn by oxen in the desert. (Num. vii. 3.) Horses and war-chariots were used by the Canaanites and Syrians; but the Hebrews houghed or ham-strung the horses of their enemies. (Josh. xi. 4, 6, 9; 2 Sam. xviii. 4.) Solomon was the first who established a cavalry force among the Hebrews; he also carried on a trade in horses “out of all lands,” for the benefit of the crown. In 1 Kings x. 28, the term “linen-yarn,” ought to have been “a band” or “company.” “And a company of the king’s merchants brought from Egypt a com-company of horses at a price.” (1 Kings x. 26, 29; 2 Chron. ix. 25, 28.) The Tyrians obtained horses from Armenia. (Ezek. xxvii. 14.) From the Egyptian monuments, we learn that horses were principally used in the war-chariots. (Ex. xiv. 9, 23.) In the sculptured battle-scenes representing the victories of Sesostris over nations of Central Asia, the enemy’s armies, as well as the foreign allies of Egypt, are abundantly supplied with horses, both for chariots and for riders. The Assyrian monuments also give representations of cavalry, of chariots, with warriors standing upright; “their horses are swifter than the leopards, and are more fierce than the evening wolves.” (Hab. i. 8; Neb. iii. 3; Hos. xiv. 8; Ezek. xxiii. 6; xxvii. 20.) The wood-cut representing Assyrian horsemen, is from the Assyrian monuments.—See Chariots.

HORSE-LEECH. The Hebrew word alukak signifies a leech, blood-sucker, without reference to distinction of species. (Prov. xxx. 15.) The Hebrews do not appear to have made use of the leech for medicinal purposes. The lake Birket-er-Ram, the ancient Phiala, about three hours from Banias, the ancient Caesarea Philippi, is said to be so crowded with leeches, that a man can gather 6000, or even 8000, in a day; while the fountain at Banias is not infested by a single leech. This reptile is so apt an emblem of insatiable rapacity and avarice, that it is said to have “two daughters, crying give, give,” i.e. insatiable.

HOSAH = a refuge. 1. A place in the tribe of Asher. (Josh. xix. 29.) 2. A descendant of Merari. (1 Chron. xvi. 39; xxvi. 10.)

HOSANNA = save now. A Hebrew word of joyful acclamation. The people cried, “Hosannah to the Son of David” = be now propitious to the Son of David, as Jesus entered Jerusalem in triumph; i.e. they thus invoked the blessings of heaven on him as the Messiah. (Matt. xxi. 9, 15; Mark xi. 9, 10; John xii. 13.) The same acclamation is supposed to have been used in the procession at the feast of Tabernacles. (Ps. cxviii. 25, 26.)

HOSEA = deliverance, safety. The son of Beeri. He lived in Samaria, and as he was coeval with Uziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah, we may infer that his prophecy embraced a period of at least sixty years. The first three chapters of the book of Hosea contain a series of symbolical representations, directed against the idolatries of Israel. The remaining chapters are chiefly occupied with denunciations against Israel, and especially Samaria, for the worship of idols which prevailed there. The general idea, in the Divine directions to the prophet, seems to be that the whole is a figurative or parabolic representation or illustration of the consequences of the faithless conduct of the nation towards Jehovah. (Hos. i. 2; iii. 1.) Apostasy is described as whoredom and adultery, and the same representation is carried through the remaining chapters, though not with equal prominence. Nor can it be without good reason that the prophet mentions Gomer, probably the daughter of Diblaim, a woman generally known at the time for her profligacy, acting, perhaps, a prominent part in the orgies of the idolatrous Israelites. The names mentioned by Hosea are mere personifications of abstract ideas, relating to the manner in which Jehovah will act towards the nation. The first and third chapters are written in prose. The remainder of the book is poetical, although the parallelism is not always carefully preserved. Eichhorn, describing the style of Hosea, says, “The elocution of the prophet resembles a garland composed of a multiplicity of flowers. Figures are entwined with figures; comparisons interwoven with comparisons; metaphors strung on metaphors. He plucks a flower and throws it down, in order directly to pluck another. Like a bee he flies from HOSHIAIAH = whom Jehovah helpeth. 1. A man mentioned in Neh. xii. 32. 2. The father of Jehozaniah. (Jer. xlii. 1.) 3. The father of Azariah. (Jer. xliii. 2.)

HOSHAMA = whom Jehovah heareth. A descendant of king David. (1 Chron. iii. 18.)

HOSHEA = deliverance, safety. 1. The son of Elah, and the last of the kings of Israel. He conspired against Pekah, his predecessor, and slew him in the fourth year of Ahaz, king of Judah; but he did not ascend the throne till the twelfth year of the same reign, after an anarchy had continued for nine years, from B.C. 740 to 731. (2 Kings xv. 30.) Hence the twentieth year of Jotham seems to mean "the fourth year of Ahaz, in the twentieth year after Jotham had begun to reign." (2 Kings xv. 30.) Hoshea imprudently attempted to shake off the Assyrian yoke; he imprisoned the Assyrian officer who was appointed to collect the tribute, and formed a fruitless alliance with So, king of Egypt. Upon this Shalmaneser laid siege to Samaria, and, after three years, gained possession of the city and destroyed it, in the ninth year of Hoshea's reign, B.C. 731. (2 Kings xv. 29, 30; xvii. 1-6; xviii. 1, 9, 10, 11; Isa. xxx. 1-7.) 2. A ruler of the Ephraimites under David. (1 Chron. xxvii. 20.) 3. One of the Levites. (Neh. x. 28.) 4. See Joshua.
HOSE

The practice of receiving strangers into one's house, and giving them suitable entertainment, is regarded by all Oriental nations as one of the highest virtues. In the early ages of the world there were neither inns nor taverns; population was thinly scattered over a great extent of country, and travelling comparatively infrequent; so that the voluntary exhibition of hospitality was not only highly honourable, but useful; inasmuch as the host probably had, and was likely again to have, need of similar kindness. The guest, for the entertainment of his host, repeats the news of the country, or gives a narration of his travels. The stern law of Arab hospitality demands, that whenever a guest is present at a meal, whether there be much or little, the first and best portion must be laid before the stranger; and if the stranger eat even a crust of bread with an Arab, he is bound to treat his guest as a friend, and to defend him, even at the hazard of his own life. In every village throughout the provinces of Jerusalem and Hebron, as well as in other parts of Syria, there is a public room, called a Menzel or Medafsh—a guest room, or more than one, according to the size and ability of the place, devoted to the entertainment of strangers. The guest lodges in the Menzel, and his food is supplied by the families to whose circle it belongs. Sometimes they take turns in his entertainment; at other times it is left to those who offer themselves, or rather, who claim the privilege. The guest gives nothing as a remuneration when he leaves. To offer money would be taken as an insult; and to receive it would be a great disgrace.

HOSTS. — See ASHOKAS.

HOST OF HEAVEN. The Hebrew word tsheba, rendered "host," signifies an army, men of war, soldiers; (1 Kings xvi. 16; 2 Sam. ii. 8; Num. xxxi. 32; 53;) and is spoken of the angelic host; (1 Kings xxi. 19; 2 Chron. xvii. 18; Ps. ciii. 21; cxlvi. 2; Luke ii. 13;) also of the sun, moon, and stars—"the powers of the heavens." (Matt. 24, 29; Job xxxviii. 7; xxv. 5; iv. 18; Isa. xxxiv. 4; xl. 26; xlv. 12; Jer. xxxiii. 22;) which were worshipped by idolatrous nations. (Deut. iv. 19; xvii. 3; 2 Kings xvii. 18; xxi. 3; 5; 2 Chron. xxxiii. 3; 5; Jer. xix. 11; Zeph. i. 5; Acts vii. 49; Dan. iv. 35.) Jehovah is called "Lord God of hosts," i.e. of the celestial armies, embracing both angels, and the sun, moon, and stars; (Gen. xiii. 1, 2; Josh. v. 14; 15; Ps. ciii. 21; lxxx. 4, 7, 14; Jer. v. 14; xxxviii. 17; xli. 7; Hos. xi. 3; Am. iii. 13;) of "sabaoth," "hosts," the term being retained untranslated; (Rom. ix. 29; James v. 4;) the epithet being equivalent to "Jehovah, God of heaven." (Gen. xxxiv. 7; 2 Chron. xxvi. 23; Job xv. 15; Est. i. 2; Neh. i. 5; Ps. ccxxvi. 26; Dan. ii. 37, 37; Rev. xi. 13.) In Isa. xxxiv. 21, "the host of the high ones," denotes the Jewish ecclesiastical rulers. So "the host of heaven," evidently means those persons who occupied places of power and trust in the ecclesiastical arrangement of Judea, who were overthrown and put to death by Antichus Epiphanes, B.C. 170. (Dan. viii. 10—13.)

HOSTAGE. Conquered kings or nations often delivered distinguished persons into the hands of the conqueror as hostages or security for the payment of their tribute, or for the continuance of their subjection. (2 Kings xiv. 14; 2 Chron. xxv. 24; Dan. i. 5.)

HOTHAM = a seal, signet ring. 1. A descendant of Asher. (1 Chron. vii. 32.) 2. The father of two of David's officers; erroneously written "Hothan." (1 Chron. xi. 44.)

HOTHIR = shaking off, loosing. A son of Heman. (1 Chron. xxv. 4.)

HOUR. The Chaldee word shahak, rendered "hour," signifies a moment of time, immediately. (Dan. iii. 6, 15; iv. 19, 35; v. 5.) So the Greek and Latin hora, rendered "hour," properly signifies a time, season; (John viii. 30; Mark xiii. 32; John ii. 4, 21;) also an hour, one of the twelve equal parts into which the natural day was divided. (Mark xv. 25, 33, 34; Luke xxiii. 44; John xix. 14; Acts ix. 8; xvi. 33.) In Palestine, sunrise was the first hour, mid-day the sixth hour, and sunset the twelfth hour; but the length of the hour varied, just as the sun was a longer or a shorter time above the horizon. At the equinox the hours were exactly the same length as ours; but in midsummer, when the sun rose at five o'clock and set at seven, twelve Jewish hours were equal to fourteen of ours; and, in winter, when the sun rose at seven o'clock and set at five, twelve Jewish hours would be equal to ten of ours. The term “hour” is also used in the hours of the night, as counted from sunset. (Acts xxiii. 23.) The hours of the day were probably measured by the sun-dial; the clepsydra or water-clock may also have been employed.—See Day.

HOUSE. The Hebrew word beth, translated “house,” also signifies a tent, or other dwelling. The ancient Egyptians constructed their temples of stone; other public and private edifices were generally of sun-burnt bricks. The Babylonians and Assyrians built their temples and palaces of sun-dried, and also of kiln-burnt bricks; and sometimes faced them with stone. But, throughout the East, private dwellings were generally constructed of sun-dried bricks, or mud walls, reeds, and rushes. Such houses became appropriate comparisons of the fragility of human life; (Job iv. 19;) hence the expression, “digging through houses,” is easily accounted for. (Job xxiv. 16; Ezek. xii. 5; Matt. vi. 19.) The Hebrews, on entering Canaan, occupied the houses which the previous inhabitants had built: hence the region is called “a city of habitation.” (Ps. cvii. 4, 7.) They afterwards constructed their own on the same model, with the advantages peculiar to those they had seen in Egypt. In later times the Hebrews made considerable progress in domestic architecture. (1 Kings vii. 1—13; Jer. xxii. 13, 14.) It would seem that the mass of the houses in Palestine were such as are now seen in Syria and Mesopotamia. Many of them, however, are of hewn stone, with upper stories. They generally occupy two, three, or four sides of an enclosed court, into which the windows of the several apartments open for air and light. The building fronts into the quadrangle, and has no front to the street, unless a high wall, with the principal entrance, and perhaps a lattice above, may be so called. The court has generally a fountain in the centre, and is often planted with a few trees. A verandah screens the principal front of the buildings, and has a balustrade, the covering of which is supported by pillars of wood. (Ps. lxxv. 3; Prov. ix. 1; Gal. ii. 9.) The roofs of the houses are flat, and covered with mould or a prepared compost, and fenced by a parapet or balustrade. (Dent. xxii. 8; 2 Kings i. 2.) Many domestic offices were performed, and business of importance was occasionally transacted on the house-top. (Josh. ii. 6; 1 Sam. ix. 25; 2 Sam. xi. 2; Isa. xxii. 1; Matt. xxiv. 17; Mark xiii. 15; Luke v. 17—26; Acts x. 9.) The houses in Jerusalem, and some other parts of Palestine, are furnished with small domes upon the flat roofs, which give a greater elevation and an architectural effect to the ceiling of the room, which rises within them. The floors are laid with tiles or slabs of marble. No ancient houses had “chimneys;” the word so translated signifies “a hole” over the hearth, through which the smoke escaped. (Hos. xiii. 8.) In better houses, the rooms were warmed in winter by charcoal in braziers, as is still the practice. (Jer. xxxvi. 22; Mark xiv. 54; John xviii. 18.) The doors were of wood, made double or folding; sometimes of stone, and moved on pivots inserted into holes in the threshold below and the lintel above.
HUL

They were secured by bars of wood; (Deut. iii. 5; Judg. xvi. 3; Job xxxviii. 10;) or locks, which were merely wooden slides, which entered a hole in the door post, and were thence secured by teeth or catches. The key was of very simple construction. (Sol. Song v. 4.) The windows had no glass; they were only latticed, and thus gave free passage to the air and light. In winter the cold was excluded by veils, or by shutters with holes in them. (1 Kings vii. 17; Sol. Song ii. 9.) In some modern houses the windows are of glass; but they are not well adapted to a warm climate. Some of the rooms are richly ornamented, and well furnished, especially the harem, or that part of the house inhabited by the women. The houses have generally a gloomy appearance from the street; as they are so constructed as to render them as private as possible. Among the Hebrews the dedication of a house formed a ground for exemption from military service. (Deut. xx. 5.) The word “house” is frequently employed in the sense of “family,” including servants, etc., “household;” (Gen. xii. 17; Acts x. 2; 1 Tim. v. 8;) or of “race,” or “lineage;” (2 Sam. vii. 18; Luke ii. 4;) of “property.” (1 Kings xiii. 8.) Also of the body, as the dwelling of the soul. (2 Cor. v. 1.) Heaven is spoken of as the “house” of God. (John xiv. 2.)

HUKKOK — presbried, decreed. A Levitical city on the confines of Asher and Naphtali. (Josh. xix. 34.) In 1 Chron. vi. 75, it is written “Hukk.” It is probably the present small village Yakut, between Tiberias and Safed.

HUL — circle. A Syrian region, so called from Hul, the son of Aram. (Gen. x. 23.) It is now called Ard el-Huleh, near the Lake Huleh, or Waters of Merom. (Josh. xi. 5.)

HULDAH — weasel. A prophetess, the wife of Shallum. (2 Kings xxii. 14; 2 Chron. xxxiv. 22.) She “dwelt in Jerusalem, in the college,” properly the second part, i.e. of the city. (Neh. xi. 9; Zeph. i. 10.)

HUMILITY. The opposite of pride, and one of the cardinal graces of the renewed heart. It consists in a man’s not thinking of himself more highly than he ought to think; and is urged with great force upon all who profess to be Christ’s disciples. (Matt. xviii. 4.) In this, as in all other respects, our divine Saviour’s life furnishes us with a perfect example; and the Scriptures abound with promises of grace and favour to the humble, and threatenings of sorrow and punishment to the proud. (Prov. xv. 33; Isa. li. 16; Ps. lxix. 32; Phil. ii. 3—8; James iv. 6; 1 Pet. v. 6.)

HUMTAH = place of lizards, or bulwark. A city of Judah. (Josh. xv. 54.)

HUNTING. The chase of wild animals, as a means of subsistence and defence, was one of the earliest occupations of mankind. (Gen. x. 9; xxvii. 27, 28.) The monuments of Egypt represent a variety of hunting scenes; and the Hebrews were fully acquainted with the different methods employed in the capture of game. Palestine was abundantly supplied with wild animals, wolves, leopards, wild boars, antelopes, hares, etc. (Ex. xxii. 29; Lev. xix. 16; Deut. vii. 22; Prov. vii. 27.) Moses enjoined that the dam should not be taken with the young. (Deut. xxxii. 6, 7.) Herds of deer and other beasts of chase were also kept in parks and enclosures. (1 Kings iv. 23.) The implements of hunting were usually the bow and arrow; the spear or lance; the javelin and the sword. They employed dogs, a species of greyhound, and nets, gins, snares, and pitfalls, in which lions were taken. (Ezek. xix. 8.) The instruments and modes of hunting are sometimes used figuratively to indicate the wiles of an adversary, great danger, or impending destruction. (Ps. ix. 16; liii. 6; xci. 3; xciv. 13; cxix. 85; Prov. xxvi. 27; Isa. xxiv. 17;
HUŚ
xlii. 22; Jer. v. 26; xvi. 16; xviii. 22; xlvii. 44; Am. iii. 5.)
HUPHAM = coast-man. A son of Benjamin. (Num. xxvi. 39.) In Gen. xlv. 21, he is called “Huppim.” His descendants were called “Huphamites.” (Num. xxvi. 39.)
HUPPAH = a covering. One of the priests. (1 Chron. xxiv. 13.)
HUPPIM = coverings. 1. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. vii. 12, 15.) 2. —See HUPHAM.
HUR = a hole. 1. A king of Midian slain by the Hebrews. (Num. xxxi. 8; Josh. xiii. 21.) 2. The husband of Miriam and brother-in-law of Moses and Aaron. (Ex. xvii. 10—12; xxiv. 14.) 3. A son of Caleb. (1 Chron. ii. 19, 50; iv. 1, 4; compare ii. 20; Ex. xxxi. 2.) 4. The father of Rephaiah. (Neh. iii. 9.) 5. The father of one of Solomon’s officers. (1 Kings iv. 8.)
HURAI = See HIDDAL.
HURAM = noble, high-born. 1. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 5.) 2. —See HIRAM.
HURI = worker in linen. A descendant of Gad. (1 Chron. v. 14.)
HUSBAND. —See MARRIAGE.
HUSBANDRY. —See FARM.
HUSBANDMAN. —See HIRELING.
HUSHAH = haste. A descendant of Judah; (1 Chron. iv. 4.) also called “Shuah.” (1 Chron. iv. 11.) His descendants were called “Hushathites.” (2 Sam. xxii. 18; 1 Chron. xi. 29; xx. 4.)
HUSHAI = hastening. The Archite, the friend and ally of David. (2 Sam. xv. 32; xvi. 16; Josh. xvi. 2.)
HUSHAM = haste. A king of Edom. (Gen. xxxvi. 34, 35; 1 Chron. i. 45.)
HUSHATHITE. —See HUSHAI.
HUSHIM. —See SHURAM.
HUSKS. The Hebrew term zag, rendered “husk,” designates the skin of a grape. (Num. vi. 4.) The word tzoklon, rendered “husk,” signifies a sack, bag, or scrip. (2 Kings iv. 42.) The term “husks” is also given as the translation of the Greek word ἄγρια φόδα, the fruit of the carob-tree, the ceratonia siliqua of Linnaeus, called by the Arabs ḥammab; by the Greeks keratinou = horn-tree.

HYP
The carob-tree is an evergreen; and sometimes grows very large; and bears slender pods or capsules, six or eight inches long, curved like a horn or sickle, containing a sweetish pulp and several small shining seeds. This tree is common in Palestine and Syria.
The pods are eaten with relish by the common people; and are used extensively by them as an article of sustenance. Sometimes they are steeped in water, and afford a pleasant drink.
Swine are fed upon them at the present day. The leaves and bark of the tree are used in tanning.
HUZ = to sink in the sand. The son of Nahor. (Gen. xxii. 21.)
HUZZAB = made to flow. This word occurs in Nah. ii. 7, as a proper name. Gesenius joins the close of the sixth with the opening part of the seventh verse, and renders “The palace is dissolved and made to flow,” i.e. the palaces of Nineveh inundated and undermined by the Tigris, and so falling in ruins.
HYMENAEUS = nuptials, marriage.
Probably a native of Ephesus, who apostatized from the faith of the gospel. He denied the doctrine of a future resurrection of the body, and said it was already accomplished. (2 Tim. ii. 17, 18.) Paul “delivered him unto Satan,” i.e. excommunicated him. (1 Tim. i. 20.)
HYMNL. —See PSALMS.
HYPOCRITE. The Greek word ὑποκρίτης, rendered “hypocrite,” means a stage-player, actor. It also designates a dissembler in respect to religion; one who feigns to be what he is not. The hypocrite has not put off the old man, but put the new man upon it. (Matt. vi. 2, 5, 16; xv. 7; xxii. 2—7; xxiv. 51; Mark vii. 6; Luke vi. 42; xi. 44; xii. 56; xiii. 15; xx. 20.) The Hebrew word ḥāneqeph, rendered “hypocrite,” signifies one profane, impious, polluted. (Job viii. 13; xiii. 16; xv. 34; xvii. 8; xx. 5; xxxiv. 30; xxxvi. 13; Isa. xxxii. 6.)
HYSSOP. The Hebrew word ezob, and the Greek ypsopos, translated "hyssope," designates a low plant or shrub, put in antithesis with the cedar of Lebanon. (1 Kings iv. 33; Heb. ix. 19.) It was indigenous in lower Egypt; (Ex. xii. 22;) in the wilderness of Sinai; (Lev. xiv. 4, 6, 52; Num. xix. 6, 18;) and in the vicinity of Jerusalem. (John xix. 29.) The particular plant designated by the Hebrew term has not yet been ascertained. Some suppose the caper plant to be designated. The monks of Sinai call the plant ja'heh, hyssope. Others consider the fragment za'ter, a species of thyme, thymeus serpyllum, scented almost like balm, and used in cooking, to be the Hebrew ezob. These plants grow in many places in Palestine and Syria, also in Egypt and on Mount Sinai. Hyssop was much used by the Hebrews in their ritual purifications and sprinklings. (Ex. xii. 22; xxiv. 5—8; Lev. xiv. 4—52; xvi. 14—18; Num. xix. 6—22.) It was the symbol of purification. (Ps. li. 7.) When Jesus, on the cross, cried "I thirst," the guard steeped a sponge in vinegar, and laid it on "hyssope," and thus held it to his mouth. (John xix. 29.) In Matt. xxvii. 48; and Mark xv. 36, the hyssop is not mentioned, and the sponge is said to have been put upon a "reed," probably a stalk, i.e. a branch of hyssop.

I.

IBHAR = whom Jehovah chooses. One of the sons of David. 2 Sam. v. 15; 1 Chron. xiv. 5.

IBLEAM = consuming the people. A city of Manasseh; (Josh. xvii. 11; Judg. i. 27; 2 Kings ix. 27;) also called "Bileam" = a foreigner, stranger. (1 Chron. vi. 70.)

IBNEIJAH = Jehovah will build up. The son of Jeroham. (1 Chron. ix. 8.)

IBNIJAH = Jehovah will build up. The father of Beuel. (1 Chron. ix. 8.)

IBRI = one from beyond. One of the sons of Merari. (1 Chron. xxiv. 27.)

IBZAN = of tin, or illustrious. The tenth judge or regent of the Hebrews. He was of Bethlehem; and governed seven years. (Judg. xii. 8—10.)

ICE. Congealed or frozen water. Ice is water deprived of its caloric. Although cold generally produces contraction, ice occupies a larger space than water; it is hence specifically lighter, and floats upon it. (Ps. cxlvii. 17; Job vi. 16; xxxviii. 29, 30.)

ICHABOD = inglorious, or, where is the glory? The son of Phinehas, and grandson of Eli. (1 Sam. iv. 19—22; xiv. 8.)

ICONIUM = Medusa's image. A large and opulent city of Asia Minor, now called Konieh. It lay near the confines of Phrygia, Lycaonia, and Pisidia, at the foot of Mount Taurus, in a beautiful and fertile country, about 260 miles south-east of Constantinople, and about 120 miles inland from the Mediterranean. Mountains covered with snow rise on every side, excepting towards the east, where a plain, as flat as the desert of Arabia, extends far beyond the reach of the eye. This city, formerly the capital of an extensive government, has now dwindled into insignificance, and exhibits, upon the whole, a mournful scene of desolation and decay. Its inhabitants are chiefly Turks. (Acts xiii. 51; xiv. 1, 19, 21; xvi. 2; 2 Tim. iii. 11.) In 1832, on the great plain before Konieh, the Turkish army was totally defeated and dispersed, by the Egyptians under the late Ibrahim Pasha; but the interference of Russia obliged Muhammed Ali to agree to the treaty of Kutayyah, and the Egyptian troops repassed the Taurus and retired to Syria.

IDALAH = to go softly. A place in Zebulun. (Josh. xix. 15.)

IDBASH = hounded. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 3.)

1. IDD = timely, seasonable. A prophet of Judah, who wrote the history of Rehoboam and Abijah. (2 Chron. ix. 29; xii. 15.) His book is named Midrash = "Commentary," or "Exposition." (2 Chron. xiii. 22.) His other contributions to the history of his country are called "visions," and "genealogies." Some suppose him to have been the prophet sent to Jeroboam at Bethel, who was slain by a lion. (1 Kings xiii. 1—32.) 2. The grandfather of Zechariah, the prophet. (Zech. i. 1, 7; Ezra v. 1; vi. 14; Neh. xii. 16.) The original of the following names are different.
IDO

3. IDDO = misfortune. A chief of the Nethinim. (Ezra viii. 17—20.) 4. IDDO = loving. A chief of the half tribe of Manasseh. (1 Chron. xxvii. 21.)

IDLE. The Greek words rema argon, rendered "idle word," properly signify empty and vain words;

INNOCENT. (Matt. xii. 36.) They denote the empty, inconsiderate, insincere language of a man who says one thing and means another.

IDOLATRY. Any image, figure, or creature, to which religious homage is paid, is an idol. Idolatry, or the rendering to creatures the homage which is due only to Jehovah, was prevalent at a very early period of the world; and there is reason to think that it was common before the deluge. (Gen. vi. 12.) All sorts of figures or representations formed and set up with the intention of paying superstitious worship to them, is expressly forbidden. (Ex. xxvii. 4, 5; Deut. xxix. 17.) Whoever in the Hebrew nation, over which Jehovah was king, worshipped another god, or practised any superstitions, by this very act renounced his allegiance to his king, and deserted to another. He committed high treason, and was properly considered a public criminal. Death, therefore, was the just punishment of idolatry and its kindred arts, magic, necromancy, and soothsaying; and also of inciting to idolatry. (Lev. xix. 31; xx. 5; Deut. xii. 2—12; xvii. 26.) The ancient Hebrews had no peculiar form of idolatry; but they frequently imitated the superstitions of other nations. (Gen. xxxi. 30; Josh. xxiv. 23; Judg. xi. 11, 12; vii. 27; xvii. 5; xviii. 30, 31.) Solomon, seduced by com- placency to his strange wives, caused temples to be erected in honour of their gods, and himself, impiously, offered incense to them. (1 Kings xi. 5—7.) Under the reign of Ahab, idolatry reached its greatest height; and the impious Jezebel endeavoured to extinguish the worship of Jehovah. Even the sacrifice of children, forbidden as it was under the most severe and summary penalties, was very common. (Lev. xx. 2; Jer. vii. 31; Ezek. xvi. 21.) The rites of idolatry were generally impure and obscene in the highest degree. The priests and the gods were alike the slaves and the patrons of the most scandalous and filthy practices, and hence the word "whoredom" is often used in Scripture as synonymous with idolatry. Indeed, the present state of the heathen world, as it is represented by our own missionaries, who have seen and heard with their own senses, shows conclusively that debasement of mind, utter alienation of the heart from everything pure and holy, the grossest immoralities, and the most licentious practices, are inseparable from idolatry. (Rom. i. 23, 28.) But when we regard idolatry in a moral point of view, as consisting not merely in the external worship of false gods, but in the preference of, and devotion to, something else than the Most High,—how many professing Christians must then fall under this charge? WHOEVER loves this world, or the pursuits of wealth, or honour, or ambition, and for these forgets or neglects God and Christ; such an one is an idolater in as bad a sense, at least, as the ancient Hebrews, and cannot hope to escape an awful condemnation. (Col. iii. 5.)—See GODS.

IDUMEA. —See Edom.

IGAL = whom God will avenge. 1. One of the twelve spies. (Num. xiii. 7.) 2. One of David's distinguished officers. (2 Sam. xxii. 36.)
IGDALIAH = whom Jehovah will make great. The father of Hanan. (Jer. xxxiv. 4.)

IGEAL = whom God will avenge. A descendant of David. (1 Chron. iii. 22.)

IM = ruins, rubbish. 1. A town of Judah. (Josh. xvi. 29.) 2. —See ILE-ABARIM.

ILE-ABARIM = ruins or heaps of Abarim. A town near the desert on the southern quarter of Moab. (Num. xxxi. 11; xxxiii. 44.) In Num. xxxiii. 45, it is called "Ilím."

ILON = waters. A fortified city in the tribe of Naphtali. (1 Kings xv. 20; 2 Chron. xvi. 4; 2 Kings xv. 29.)
The ruins at the base of Tel Dibbin, in the northern part of Merj Ayun = meadow of waters, a small, but very beautiful plain, not far from the Waters of Merom, are supposed to indicate the site of Ilon.

IKKESH = perverse. The father of Ira. (2 Sam. xxiii. 28; 1 Chron. xi. 28.)

ILAI = supreme. One of David’s warriors. (1 Chron. xxvii. 29.) In 2 Sam. iii. 28, he is called “Zalmon.”

ILLYRICUM. A country of Europe, on the eastern shore of the Adriatic Gulf, north of Epirus and west of Macedonia. It was anciently divided into Liburnia, now Croatia, on the north; and Dalmatia on the south, which still retains its name. The limits of Illyricum appear to have varied at different times. This region is now called Illyria.

IMAGE.—See IDOLATRY.

IMAGE OF GOD. According to the most ancient Record, the ancestor of the human race was created “in the image and after the likeness of God.” (Gen. i. 26, 27.) The terms “image” and “likeness,” thus employed in reference to man in his pristine state, would seem, from two classes of passages where they occur, to refer to the natural and moral similitude of the Most High. The natural image, in which Adam was created, is the immortal soul or mind, possessing those exalted faculties which gave him supremacy over the inferior creatures, and, in some measure, assimilated him to his Maker—a resemblance which all men still possess as the necessary endowment of human nature. (Gen. ix. 6; James iii. 9; 1 Cor. xi. 7; Acts xvii. 28, 29.)
The moral likeness is the state of mind, with which the first man was endowed immediately on his creation, which, according to his capacity, adumbrated the character of his Creator. This moral perfection, with which Adam, in his pristine condition, was endowed, comprehended holiness in the will, knowledge in the understanding, rectitude in the affections, and such an entire harmony in all his faculties that his members were obedient to his affections—his affections to his will—his will to his understanding—his understanding to the Divine law, and was the result of the indwelling and influence of the Holy Spirit in his mind, sustaining the inner or spiritual life, and constituting his body the temple of God. (Col. iii. 10; Eph. iv. 24.) This state of mind he subsequently forfeited by disobedience; he was deprived of primitive holiness; and “the flesh,” i.e. the inferior and animal principles, given to be servants, became the masters of the mind. Thus deprived of that moral perfection, which pre-eminently constituted the Divine similitude, all his descendants are born, not after the likeness of God, but in that of Adam. (Gen. v. 3.) They are all by nature destitute of primitive holiness, they “bear the image of the earthly,” and they must be “renewed in the spirit of their minds” by the Holy Spirit, before they can “bear the image of the heavenly.” (John iii. 5—7; 1 Cor. xv. 4—9.)

IMLAH = makes full. The father of Micaiah. (1 Kings xxii. 8, 9.)

IMMANUEL = God with us. The symbolical and prophetic name of a child. (Isa. vii. 14; viii. 8.) In Matt. i. 2, 3, “Emmanuel” is appropriately applied to the Messiah, who, as having united the Divine with the human nature, is “God with us.”
IMMER = lognaceous. 1. One of the priests. (1 Chron. ix. 12; xxiv. 14; Ex. ii. 37; Jer. xx. 1.) 2. One who went up from the exile to Jerusalem. (Ex. ii. 59; Neh. vii. 61.)

IMMORTALITY. A state of being not subject to decay or death. (1 Cor. xv. 53, 54.) It is ascribed to God, who is absolutely "the Immortal." (1 Tim. i. 17.) Angels are immortal. The bodies which we inhabit while in this world are mortal, exposed to sickness, pain, and death; but the soul, which is immortal, can never die, as the body dies. "Christ hath brought life and immortality to light," i.e. revealed to us the certainty of a future state of existence. (2 Tim. i. 10.)—See DEATH.

IMNÁ = he keeps back. A descendant of Asher. (1 Chron. vii. 33.)

IMNÁH = good fortune. 1. The father of Kore. (2 Chron. xxxi. 14.)

2.—See JINNÁH.

IMPUTE. The Hebrew word ḥhashab, and the Greek word logizomai, rendered "to reckon," "to count," and to "impute," are employed in designating any action, word, or thing, as imputed or reckoned to a person; and in all these, it is uniformly one's own doings, words, or actions, and not those of another, which are imputed. (Gen. xv. 6; Ps. cv. 51; Num. xxv. 6; 2 Sam. xix. 19; Ps. xxxi. 2; Lev. vii. 18; xviii. 27; Prov. xxvii. 14; 2 Cor. v. 19; 2 Tim. iv. 16; Rom. vi. 23; v. 14–16; Gal. iii. 6; James ii. 23.) In the Scriptures there is not one assertion that Adam's sin, on the one hand, or Christ's righteousness, on the other, is imputed to us. That all men are born destitute of original righteousness, or in other words, with a disposition that will certainly and always lead them to sin, in all their acts of a moral nature, before they are regenerated, and that this state of things is brought upon us by Adam's fall, is certain; but his conduct is never imputed to us, nor are we liable to punishment for his transgression. Though we suffer now in consequence of the first act of disobedience, yet it is impossible to im-the cherubim. (Ex. xxx. 7, 34—38; xl. 27; Lev. iv. 7; x. 1; xvi. 12, 13; Num. iv. 16.) Incense also denotes the savour of the sacrifices offered on the altar. (Lev. i. 9, 17; 1 Sam. ii. 16; Ps. lxvi. 15; Isa. i. 13; Ezek. xx. 41; Eph. v. 2; Phil. iv. 18.) The smoke ascending morning and evening from the altar of incense, was the symbol of prayer. (Ps. cxii. 2; Mal. i. 11; Luke i. 10; Rev. v. 8; viii. 3, 4.)

INDIA. The Hebrew word Hod- du, is the old Persic Hidanu, from the Sanscrit Sindhu = the land of Sinad, i.e. India. The Persian king is described as reigning “from India unto Ethiopia.” This fixes the extent of the Persian dominions eastward to the original station of the Hindus, at the head of the Indus. The inhabitants of Arabia Felix, in very early times, carried on a commerce with India in spices, and other foreign products. From the products mentioned in 1 Kings x. 22, it is not improbable that Solomon had ships which traded with India.

INGATHERING, FEAST OF.—See TABERNACLES, FEAST OF.

INHERITANCE. The Land of Canaan was divided by lot for an inheritance among the Hebrews, according to the tribes, and to the number and size of the families in each tribe. (Josh. xiii.—xxii.) Forty-eight cities were then assigned to the Levites. (Num. xxxiii. 50; xxxiv. 1; xxxv. 1.) The division of the land was made by a board of commissioners under Joshua and Eleazar; although an exact survey was not made till some time after the allotment. (Josh. xviii. 4, 5.) The estates thus allotted would descend to posterity; not so much the inheritance of their fathers, as that which Jehovah had immediately assigned to them. A Hebrew could say, “The Lord is the portion of mine inheritance and of my cup: thou maintainest my lot. The lines are fallen to me in pleasant places; I have a goodly heritage.” (Ps. xvi. 5, 6.) The inheritance thus acquired was never to leave the tribe to which it belonged. An heiress was not allowed to marry out of her own tribe, lest the property should pass by her marriage into another tribe. (Num. xxvii. 7—11; xxxvi. 6—12.) The land was Jehovah’s, and no man could finally alienate any part of the parental inheritance. (1 Kings xxi. 3.) Every fiftieth year, whatever land had been sold, returned to its former owner. Hence the value and price of land naturally rose or fell in proportion to the number of years that were to elapse prior to the ensuing fiftieth or jubilee-year. From this division of the land of Promise into inheritances, the kingdom of heaven is called an “inheritance.” (Col. i. 12; Eph. i. 11—14; 1 Pet. i. 4.)—See HEIR.

INIQUITY. The want of equity, injustice; whatever is done regardless of the law of God. Sin is the transgression of the law: iniquity is a contempt or disregard of the law. (Gen. xv. 16; Ps. li. 2, 9; ciil. 10.) Jehovah is said to “visit the iniquity of the fathers upon the children of them that hate him.” (Ex. xx. 5.) For the priests to “bear the iniquity,” is to make the expiation which is the prerequisite to forgiveness. (Ex. xxviii. 38; Lev. x. 17; Isa. lii. 6.)

INK. The common ink was made of water, pulverised charcoal, and gum. Other substances were, doubtless, used both for writing and colouring matter. (Num. v. 23; Jer. xxxvi. 18; 2 Cor. iii. 3.) The Egyptians frequently wrote with reddish ink. The professed writers, or scribes, in the East, usually carry the inkhorn and pen, or reed tube, in their girdle. (Ezek. ix. 2.)

INN. The Hebrew word malom, rendered “inn,” like the Greek word kataskeuas, signifies a place where travellers lodge, either in the open air or under a roof; lodging place, inn, a medeseh or caravanserai. (Gen. xiii. 27; xl. 21; Ex. iv. 24, Luke ii. 7.) So the Greek word pandocheion, rendered “an inn,” signifies a place where all are received, a menzel, khan.
(Luke x. 34.) Caravanserais or khans in the East, are generally large square buildings, in the centre of which is an area or open place. They are generally built at proper distances upon the road; and have commonly one storey above the ground floor, used for lodgings; the lower serves for the storing of goods. In every village there is, at least, one public room, called a menzel or medafeh—a guest room, devoted to the entertainment of strangers, by the inhabitants, without the expectation of a reward.
The Greek word katakuma is rendered “guest-chamber.” (Mark xiv. 14; Luke xxii. 11.) Inns, such as we have in Europe, are unknown in the East, excepting where they have arisen from European intercourse.

tables of the testimony” were written by the finger of God upon stone.
(Ex. xxxi. 18; xxxii. 15, 16, 19.)
And Moses inscribed the law upon stones, and set them up in Mount Ebal. (Deut. xxvii. 2—8; Josh. viii.
30.) The ancient Egyptians covered the walls of their palace-temples with reliefs; and on some of them, as well as on the statues, sphinxes, and obelisks, are exhibited hieroglyphic inscriptions, which are important as historical documents, and, in several instances, have confirmed the statements of the Scriptures. The Rosetta stone, now in the British Museum, was the key to the recovery of the mode of reading the hieroglyphics.
This monument is a block of black basalt, having three inscriptions in hieroglyphics, and the demotic or enchorial, which was the writing of the country, also a Greek translation.
The inscription was made about B.C
196; and contains a statute decreeing an apotheosis, or place among the gods, to Ptolemy Epiphanes, then in the ninth year of his reign. The ancient Assyrians also inscribed memorable events on their monuments, on slabs of stone, tablets of clay, bricks, and other durable materials. Such inscriptions are frequently found trilingual—in Assyrian or Babylonian, Median, and Persian; and are written in the cuneiform character, the different alphabets of which mainly vary from each other by a different arrangement of the arrow-heads or wedges of which the letters are composed. Some of the Persian inscriptions having been made out, they were used in deciphering the Assyrian and Median inscriptions, just as the Greek translation of the Rosetta stone was the key to the reading of the Egyptian hierogly-phics. One of the most valuable Assyrian documents which has yet been discovered, is the Black obelisk from Nimrud, now in the British Museum; of which the woodcut is a representation. This monument is a piece of black marble, 6 feet 6 inches in height; the greatest width at top 1 foot 5 inches; and at the bottom 2 feet; the width up the sides being somewhat less. The top is surmounted by three steps, which are, with the whole of the upper part, inscribed with cuneiform characters. Each side is then divided into five compartments filled with sculpture, exhibiting the homage of tributaries, and the tribute which is being brought to the king, with cuneiform inscriptions between and along the sides, describing the name of the person or country which pays the tribute, and the nature of the tribute itself. The obelisk was erected by Divanubar, the son of Ashurakhbal=Sardana-palus, about B.C. 880, and contains the annals of his reign, and the history of his conquests, extending through a period of thirty-one years. Among the kings tributary to Assyria, mentioned on this monument, are "Yaya, the son of Khumri," i.e. Jehu, the king of Israel, a successor of Omri; (1 Kings xvi. 16—28; 2 Kings ix. 1—14;) and Hazael, king of Syria. (1 Kings xix. 15—17; 2 Kings viii. 7—15.) The Sinaite inscriptions, which abound on the rocks, in the route from Egypt to Sinai, which some have supposed to have been done by the Hebrews while wandering in the wilderness, are probably the work of Christians, who had taken refuge in these regions in the earlier persecutions. They are supposed to be in the Himyaritic character, with Greek inscriptions occasionally intermingled. The trilingual inscription placed upon the cross of Jesus, was in Hebrew, the ancient language of the country; in Greek, the vernacular language; and in Latin, the language of the rulers of the country. (John xix. 19, 20.)

INSPIRATION. The Greek term Theopneustos = God-inspired, properly designates the mysterious power exercised by the Spirit of God upon the minds of the authors of the writings of the old and new Testaments, causing them to write, and guiding them in writing, even to the application of the words they have used, in order to preserve their statements from error, and to guarantee their authenticity and truth: "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God." (2 Tim. iii. 16.) This miraculous influence had for its object, not so much the writers, who were only the secretaries of the Holy Spirit, as the inspired documents themselves, which were to be the rule of the faith and practice of the faithful through all ages. The same inspiration attended the prophets and apostles, in all their official instructions and annunciations of the Divine will. Divine inspiration, as presupposing a Divine revelation, was widely different in its nature from all the phenomena of mere natural excitement and of genius; and, like the holy unction, was never used for ordinary purposes, but for the supernatural endowment of the messengers of heaven. Nor is this extraordinary gift the same as the ordinary work of the Holy Spirit in the enlightenment of the minds of the faithful. They differ essentially from each other, insasmuch as enlightenment has its degrees, and is a continuous work; but inspiration, as a miraculous gift, admitted no degrees, and was not extended beyond the period in which the task was accomplished, for which the Spirit had caused the prophets or apostles to speak or write. In the absence of inspiration, they were enlightened and Divinely sustained, as are all the faithful; but then they spake no longer as "moved or instigated by the Holy Ghost." However closely united were piety and inspiration, in the sacred writers, they were essentially distinct; insasmuch as the most enlightened believer may not speak by inspiration, whilst an ignorant and unrighteous man may not speak from his own impulse, but by Divine inspiration. (Num. xviii.; John xi. 49—51.)

Inspiration is evidently something distinct from, and additional to revelation. Revelation is the presentation of objective truth, which had existed in the Divine mind, to the minds of prophets and apostles. Inspiration is the breathing into—inspiring, i.e. the supernatural action on the minds of prophets and apostles, which is essentially distinct from the truth transmitted to them. Though the two may be said to be practically united, yet it is certain that the objective truth could be no revelation apart from the Divine illumination of the human mind to receive it. Hence the general idea of inspiration seems to comprise three supernatural acts: 1. The presentation, by the Holy Spirit, of the revelation or objective truth, in whatever way, to the minds of the sacred writers. 2. The subjective influence, and the consequent state of mind which was necessary for the right apprehension and reception of that truth. 3. The influence requisite for the correct impartation of that truth to others, either orally or by writing. In these several operations of the Holy Spirit no new mental faculty was conferred upon the sacred writers, nor was any violence done to the laws of their mental constitution; the dull ear was quickened, the dim eye was made clear, and their lips were touched with hallowed fire: “holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.” (2 Pet. i. 21.)

Three different modes of inspired revelation seem to be presented to our attention in the Scriptures; yet each is alike “the operation of the self-same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as He will.” The first mode of inspiration may be called the suggestive, in which the Most High communicated His will, either by an audible voice; (Gen. i. 28; ii. 16; xxii. 1, 2; Ex. iii. 4; xix. 3;) or by the ministry of angels; (Gen. xvii. 2; xix. 1; Gal. iii. 19; Heb. ii. 2;) or by dreams; (Gen. xx. 3; 1 Sam. iii. 4; Dan. vii. 18;) or by direct impressions on the mind, suggesting doctrines, promises, reproofs, and exhortations, as they are found in the writings of the prophets and apostles. The second mode may be called the historical, in which God inspired the writers of the earlier documents, which were the incipient unfoldings of His plan, which are incorporated in Genesis, and other historical books. Some of these memorials may have been written by Adam, Enoch, Noah, Shem, Abraham, and Jacob. Other historical memoranda were written by the prophets and the royal secretaries, which are supposed to have perished, but the contents of which are incorporated in the several historical books. (2 Chron. ix. 29; xii. 15; xiii. 22; xxvi. 22;) So also, Moses was Divinely inspired to condense the early patriarchal memorials in the book of Genesis, and other parts of the Pentateuch; and Samuel, and the authors of the several historical books, to condense and incorporate in their works notices from State papers, and from other writings, earlier than their own times, or contemporary with them. (1 Chron. iv. 21, 22; 1 Kings xi. 41; xv. 31; 2 Chron. xxvii. 26;) Even the writers of the Gospels seem to have used memoranda from other writers, as may be seen from the genealogies. (Matt. i. 1—25; Luke i. 1—5.) The apostles also occasionally quoted classic authors. (Acts xvii. 28.) Under the same Divine influence, the sacred historians chronicled facts with which they were personally acquainted, in order to secure their accurate transmission to others. The third mode of inspiration may be called the prophetic, in which the plans and purposes of the Most High were revealed to the prophets by objects and symbols in visions. The pictorial scenery passed successively before them, and they saw: so Moses beheld the model of the tabernacle; (Ex. xxv. 9; Heb. viii. 5;) Isaiah the suffering Messiah; (Isa. iii. 1—12;) Ezekiel the cherubim, and the wheel full of eyes; (Ezek. i. 28;) and John, the lamb having seven horns and seven eyes. (Rev. v. 6;
Under supernatural influence the prophets described orally or in writing, what they had seen on the tableaux; hence their frequent use of the past tense in their visions or prophecies. (Num. xxiv. 15—17; Dan. vii. 1—28; Isa. i. 1; Rev. i. 1.) Thus did God “at sundry times, and in divers manners, speak in time past, unto the fathers by the prophets.” (Heb. i. 1.) Yet in the variety of methods in which inspiration was communicated, no one method could be said to be more elevated than another; they were merely “the diversities of operations of the same God.” Indeed, the sacred writers, whether in writing concerning the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, or in collecting, condensing, or arranging more ancient records, or in writing the histories of their own times, just as in describing prophetic scenery—were merely the amanuenses of the Holy Spirit, variously moved, and yet in the perfect exercise of their own voluntary agency. Hence, each and every part of what they have written, on whatever subject, is Divinely inspired, and equally so, and in the same sense. And unless we hold that the Book, the entire Book, is inspired, and is as much the word of God as though He Himself had written it, with His own hand, on tables of stone, without human instrumentality, we cannot occupy safe and firm ground.

The plenary inspiration of the Scriptures is the first principle of our faith. We hold, that not only were the thoughts, but the very words also, Divinely supplied to the sacred writers. Otherwise, what assurance have we that their language bears the exact impress of the ideas, and that the thoughts deposited in their minds were reproduced unchanged? Nor is the verbal and plenary inspiration of the Scriptures, and their consequent infallibility, a modern view, merely set up, as some have imagined, by Protestantism, as a counterpoise to the infallible authority asserted and claimed by Romanism. The ancient churches regarded the supremacy of the Scriptures rather than the assumed infallibility of any ecclesiastical hierarchy. Some of the early writers compared the minds of the prophets and apostles to “a stringed instrument, attuned by the Holy Ghost, to send forth the Divine harmony of eternal life.” “The Holy Ghost,” says Claudius, “has made use of the pen of the evangelists and prophets. He supplied them with the occasions of writing. He gave them the desire, and the strength; and the matter, form, order, method, and expressions, are also by His immediate inspiration and under his direction.” And the Apostles declare that the Scriptures are “the words”—“the voice”—“the oracles of God,” and that they are written, “not in the words which man’s wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth.” (Rom. iii. 2; Acts vii. 36; 1 Cor. ii. 13.) Though the words, as well as the thoughts, were Divinely supplied, the sacred writers still reported every one in his own characteristic manner, as is evidenced by the individual peculiarities stamped upon the style of the books which they have written. While the Holy Spirit was pleased to employ the characteristics of every mind, the Divine energy never superseded the human, but appropriated and guided it to subserve His own purpose. And, though the writers had a distinct consciousness of their Divine commission, yet never, perhaps, were they more spontaneously active, and more consciously unfettered in the utterance of their thoughts, than when they were living and moving within the hallowed sphere of inspiration. Thus did God make use of the individual peculiarities of His servants, just as in the administration of His government, He sometimes takes advantage of events in human conduct, apparently incidental, for the accomplishment of His purposes, without interfering with the free-agency of His subjects.

The existence of several thousands of various readings, in the Hebrew and Greek manuscripts, is sometimes presented as an objection to the verbal inspiration of the sacred writings. If, however, we grant the inspiration of the first Hebrew and Greek manuscripts, the objection is reduced to a mere question of criticism:—Have the copyists transcribed accurately? It is well known that no book has been transmitted to us from antiquity so faithfully transcribed as the Scriptures. Yet in passing through so many hands, for so many ages, we could scarcely expect that the ancient copyists, who were not inspired any more than modern printers, should not have introduced occasional variances. But these variances do not, for the most part, extend beyond the difference of a single word, and sometimes even of a single letter; so that our incertitude, as to the primitive reading, is limited merely to the choice between one word and another, or one letter and another. By the careful comparison of manuscripts, and the application of a true and searching criticism, many of the discrepancies arising from various readings have vanished; and we anticipate that, by the same process, the remainder will be still further diminished, until we shall know which, in any case of two readings, is certainly the God-inspired word.

Nor does the concession of the verbal inspiration of the original Hebrew and Greek Scriptures deny it to the several versions. The books of the old Testament necessarily came, in the first instance, to the Hebrews in their own tongue; and those of the new Testament, not only to the same people, but to other nations, when the Greek language was almost universally understood. And as the Gospel was to be preached to all nations, and in every language, translations must be made for the people; but we do not see how the advantages of inspiration vanish in this process of literary transformation. Certainly we are more assured of the accuracy of the translations than we could be of that of the original text, supposing its expressions had not been given by the Holy Spirit. Already had the Divine word passed through four successive forms when it reached us in any translation. 1. It existed in the mind of the Eternal; 2. It was communicated by Him to the mind of man; 3. It passed from the mind of the recipient into the characters of an articulate language; 4. Men have reproduced it in new translations, from one human language into another. Of these four operations, the first three are Divine; the fourth alone is human, but when correctly executed, is no less infallible. Even the apostles themselves occasionally quote literally the Greek translation of the Hebrew Scriptures, called the Septuagint; sometimes they correct it by re-translating more accurately from the Hebrew; and again, to indicate more clearly in what sense they apply this or that declaration from the old Testament, they paraphrase the words. The several versions are certainly not equally accurate; but the least accurate contains all things necessary for salvation. The translations being the labour of a great number of men of every tongue and nation, who could devote to the work their time and attention, who controlled each other from century to century, and instructed and perfected each other, can always be compared and confronted with the Divine text, to be corrected and recorrected by this eternal model, until they become its perfect counterpart. Thus we can now, after a lapse of 250 years, with our lexicons in hand, test our inimitable authorised version, by the original standard, until we are assured that the expressions have received the impress of their original, and that we have obtained, for our use, the most faithful fac-simile.

Nor is this view of verbal inspiration at all incompatible with the fact, that there is much that is human as well as Divine, in the sacred records.
We do not affirm that the follies and mistakes in some of the arguments of Job and his friends were inspired when they were uttered; but we do affirm, that the fact of their being recorded in the Scriptures is Divine inspiration. The defects in the conduct of prophets and apostles are carefully recorded; but who would say that such defects were inspired? Their defects were human, the record of them alone is Divine. It is the inspired accuracy of the record of these things which remains unimpeached. So the Apostles occasionally introduce topics which seem to be of comparatively small significance; (2 Tim. iv. 13;) and Paul, when disclaiming the power of adjudicating on the propriety of entering into the marriage state, tells us that he had no Divine command. (1 Cor. vi. 12, 25.) Yet none of these passages imply the absence of the Divine endowment in the writer; and cannot, therefore, be employed against the doctrine of a plenary inspiration. Nor are we to suppose that inspiration is extended only to matters of a religious nature. The historical and the ethical are so intertwined with the religious, that the attempt to separate the woven threads is to be involved in hopeless perplexity. Whatever is written, was written by inspiration, for “our instruction and admonition.”

Some opposers of plenary inspiration have professed to detect errors in reasoning, in doctrine, in the narrations, and contradictions in facts, in the holy oracles. Now we maintain that a more attentive and serious study of the Divine word would reduce the apparent discrepancies to nothing. The experience of every age, and especially the results of recent critical research, have sufficiently demonstrated, that, before an impartial examination, all such difficulties vanish. What is an object of doubt to-day, will, by further study and research, become a motive of faith to-morrow; and what is to-day a subject of perplexity, will to-morrow be converted into proof. Hitherto, every apparent discrepancy which enlightened critical research has resolved, has exhibited the accuracy of the sacred penmen. What then may we not hope for, as the day dawns, regarding the few difficulties which still remain?

But others have professed to find, in the Scriptures, errors contrary to the philosophy of nature. We can only reply, the Bible was not written to teach science; still we maintain that no error in reference to physical phenomena can be found upon its pages. God is not man that He should lie. He cannot, in His word, contradict Himself in His works. Harmony everywhere exists between His works and His word; while ignorance and misapprehension belong to us. After all, it would not be difficult to show how large a store of science is latent in the language of inspiration. We have no sympathy with the idea that the sacred writers wrote on history or science, on their own authority, and according to the common notions of their time. We hold that, with respect to those matters, the declarations of the Bible are shown to be infallible when interpreted by the use of proper means, and the final sense thus elicited. Notwithstanding the rapid march of science which has characterised our own day, the venerable book still maintains its supreme position, and is contradicted by none of the investigations of the learned in sound philosophy. In God’s book we find none of those mistakes which the science of every century detects in the books of preceding generations. The most recent researches in astronomy, geology, ethnology, and the examination of the sculptures of Egypt, Babylon, and Nineveh, have alike corroborated the accuracy of the sacred records. Even in geography, the famous scholar and traveller, Dr. Robinson, maintains that the Bible is still the best handbook for the Holy Land. So in moral as in physical science, this book never...
INT

does violence to facts, nor to the principles of sound philosophy; but is in harmony with the just ideas which moral science has given us. Surely, then, ours is not the daring philosophy which would sit in judgment on the forms and materials of that book, which not only stands above and apart from the sublimest effusions of human genius, but holds in its hand the key of every moral difficulty, revealing truths bearing on man's highest interest and lying beyond the sphere where science and genius make their discoveries. However, if the glorious truths revealed on its hallowed pages, so wondrously adapted to the conditions of fallen humanity, producing on individuals and communities such radical and beneficent changes of heart and life, beckoning the way to honours unaging, and joys undying, do not attest alike its divinity and veracity, then we hesitate not to say that the influence of the Bible is a greater miracle than the miraculous inspiration which a frigid rationalism would set aside.—See Scriptures.

INSTRUMENTS.—See Music.

INTERCESSION.—To intercede is to interpose in behalf of another, and to plead for him. (Isa. lii. 12; lxi. 16; I Tim. ii. 1.) The intercession of Christ refers, in a general sense, to any aid which He, as perpetual High Priest, extends to those who approach God confiding in him. (Heb. iv. 16; vii. 25—27.) Intercession, in the sense of supplication, was not appropriate to the office of the Hebrew high priest; he was the presenter of sacrifices on account of sins, and made intercession or atonement by sprinkling the blood of victims before Jehovah: this gave, as it were, a voice to the blood. Hence, if we attach a special idea to the term "intercession," as applied to the work of our glorious High Priest, may we not say that it is equivalent to propitiation or atonement? In the holiest of all, "the blood of Jesus speaketh." (Heb. xii. 24.) The dignity and merit, power and authority of the Messiah, in His exalted state, imply a continue presentation of His obedience and sacrifice as ever valid and efficacious for the pardon and acceptance, the perfect holiness and eternal happiness, of all who are truly penitent, believing, and obedient. Hence His intercession, or His acting as High Priest in the heavenly world, was represented by the Hebrew high priest's entering into the most holy place, on the annual day of atonement, with the fragrant incense burning, and with the sacrificial blood which he was to sprinkle upon the mercy-seat, over the ark of the covenant, and before the awful symbols of Jehovah's presence. —See Advocate.

IDHEDELAH = whom Jehovah sets free. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 23.)

IR = a city. A descendant of Benjamin; (1 Chron. vii. 12;) also written "Iri" = a citizen. (1 Chron. vii. 7.)

IRA = wakeful. 1. A priest or ruler in the time of David. (2 Sam. xx. 26.) 2. The name of two of David's distinguished warriors. (2 Sam. xxiii. 26, 38.)

IRAD = ardent. The son of Enoch and grandson of Cain. (Gen. iv. 18.)

IRAM = a citizen. A phylarch of a tribe among the Edomites. (Gen. xlvi. 43.)

IRI.—See Ir.

IRIJAH = whom Jehovah looks upon. A captain of the ward who arrested Jeremiah. (Jer. xxxvi. 13, 14.)

IRNAHASH = city of serpents. A city, the site of which is unknown. In the margin it is called the "city of Nahash." (1 Chron. iv. 12.)

IRON. The most extensively distributed of the metals; and the most serviceable of all to which man is indebted. It exists largely both in the mineral and organic kingdoms, being a constituent of an immense number of minerals; and existing as an essential element in the blood of vertebrate animals, to which it gives the peculiar colour. Even a chain, three feet in length, has been manufactured of the iron taken from human blood.
This metal is not discovered in its perfect form, but is extracted from the ore which is found mixed with several other minerals. We can scarcely think that man, of his own unaided ingenuity, first fabricated iron, or any of the metals; he must have been instructed by the Divine Power. Iron was known long before the deluge, and was wrought by Tubal Cain. (Gen. iv. 22.) The Egyptians were acquainted with iron at an early period. (Dent. iv. 20.) In the Peninsula of Sinai, near the copper-mines wrought by the early Pharaohs, are found large masses of copper, mixed with a quantity of iron ore. Canaan was a "land whose stones were iron, and out of whose hills they might dig copper." (Dent. viii. 9; xxxiii. 25; Num. xxxi. 22.) Iron is abundant in Lebanon, and the mountains of Syria. In later times, superior iron seems to have been imported from the northern regions; (Jer. xv. 12;) also from Tarshish to Tyre; (Ezek. xxvii. 12;) and from Dan and Javan. (Ezek. xxvii. 19.) The Hebrews were forbidden to use stones to form the altar, which had been wrought with iron; i.e. the stones were to be unprepared by art. (Josh. viii. 31.) Iron is not mentioned among the materials employed in the construction of the tabernacle. This metal was chiefly used for tools; (Deut. xxvii. 5; 1 Kings. vi. 7; 2 Kings vi. 5;) weapons of war; (1 Sam. xvii. 7; Job xx. 24; 2 Sam. xxii. 7;) chariots; (Josh. xvii. 16;) and for agricultural and household purposes. (2 Sam. xii. 31; Am. i. 3; Acts xii. 10; Ezek. iv. 8; Ps. cv. 19; civ. 16.) The Hebrew word ḳâmâh, rendered "steel," signifies copper. (Job xx. 24; Ps. xlviii. 34; 2 Sam. xxii. 35; Jer. xv. 12.) The word ṣâdâh, rendered "torches," signifies superior iron, steel. (Neh. lii. 8.) Iron is often the symbol of strength: "sceptre of iron." (Ps. ii. 9;) "iron teeth," i.e. destructive power. (Dan. vii. 7.) "Iron unites iron," says the wise man, "so a man uniteth the countenance of his friend," i.e. the presence of a friend gives confidence and assurance. (Prov. xxvii. 17.)

IRON = "fearful," pious. A city in Naphtali. (Josh. xix. 38.)

IRPEEL = "God heals." A place in the tribe of Benjamin. (Josh. xviii. 27.)

IR-SHEMESH = "city of the sun."—See BET-SHEMESH.

IRU = "anxious." A son of Caleb. (1 Chron. iv. 15.)

ISAAC = "laughing, sporting, or mocking." The son of Abraham and Sarah, born in his parents' old age. (Gen. xvii. 17—19; xviii. 12—15; xxvi. 6, 9; xxvi. 8.) The birth of Isaac was the subject of many remarkable promises and prophecies; and he was made, by express covenant with Abraham, the ancestor of the promised Messiah. (Gen. xxi. 12.) At an early period of life he was made the object of the profane contempt of Ishmael, the son of Hagar. When he had arrived at mature years, his father was required by Jehovah to offer him up in sacrifice; and his conduct on this occasion as remarkably illustrates his docility, and submission, and filial confidence, as the course of Abraham did obedience and faith. (Gen. xxii. 1—18.) The event showed that it was the trial of Abraham, that God intended, not the fact; Isaac is sacrificed, and is yet alive. In this circumstance, Abraham truly, though vaguely, believed that God would either prevent the catastrophe, or restore his slain son to life. (Gen. xxii. 5; Heb. xi. 17—19.) Isaac appears to have passed his youthful days under the eye of his father, engaged in the care of flocks and herds up and down the plains of Canaan. He was a man of retired habits and of remarkable calmness of mind. In a few years after Isaac's marriage with Rebekah, the two rival brothers, Isaac and Ishmael, amicably met for the interment of Abraham. (Gen. xxv. 9.) After Isaac had been married twenty years, he "entreated the Lord for his wife;" and two children, Jacob and Esau, were born.
ISA

years, commencing in the year B.C. 763 or 759, and extending to the year B.C. 713. If he survived Hezekiah, he probably lived some time during the reign of Manasseh. The Rabbins say he was put to death by Manasseh, being sawn asunder with a wooden saw. (Heb. ii. 37.) The book of Isaiah has ever been regarded as one of the most complete and sublime of all the prophetic writings. Its references to the person, offices and kingdom of the Messiah, are so numerous and exact as to have obtained for the author the titles of the "Evangelical Prophet," and the Fifth Evangelist." His style is simple, bold, rapid, elevated;—he abounds in metaphor; and his writings are full of the boldest figures of rhetoric, and the most beautiful ornaments of poetry. The notion of some rationalist scholars, that the book is made up of fragments by different authors, some of whom lived near the close of the exile, is not worth noticing. Isaiah evidently wrote more than we have in the book which goes by his name. In 2 Chron. vi. 22, he is said to have written the acts of king Uzziah; and in 2 Chron. xxxii. 32, the acts of king Hezekiah. Many of the records which were made by Isaiah, Iddo, Nathan, etc., may have been public records, or documents which were laid up in the archives of the State. Many of these historical sketches or fragments have not come down to us; but all that was essential to us have been doubtless incorporated into the sacred narrative and transmitted to our time. When the books of Kings and Chronicles were composed, the memorials of Isaiah would be incorporated in them. (2 Kings xvii.—xx; 2 Chron. xxxii. 1—28.)

ISH

ISCOAH = she who looks abroad. The sister of Lot. (Gen. xi. 29.)

ISCAROT.—See JUDAB.

ISHBAH = praising. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 17.)

ISHBARK = leaving. A son of Abraham by Keturah. (Gen. xxv. 2.)

ISHBIL-BENOB = my seat is at Nob.
ISH

A Philistine giant, slain by Abishai. (2 Sam. xxi. 16, 17.)

ISH-BOSHETH = man of shame, bashful. A son of Saul, and the only one who survived him. After the death of his father and brothers, the tribe of Judah awarded the sceptre to David, but the other eleven tribes did homage to Ish-bosheth. After he had reigned two years over Israel, he was murdered by Rechab and Baanah, two generals of his own tribe. Eventually, the eleven tribes unitedly submitted to David. (2 Sam. ii. 8–32; iii. 1–39; iv. 1–12; v. 1–5.) Ish-bosheth is also called “Ehbaal” = man of Baal, or lordly man. (1 Chron. viii. 33.)

ISHI = saving, salutary. 1. Two descendants of Judah. (1 Chron. ii. 31; iv. 20.) 2. A descendant of Manasseh. (1 Chron. v. 24.)

ISHIAH = whom Jehovah lendeth. A descendant of Issachar. (1 Chron. vii. 8.)

ISHIJAH = whom Jehovah lendeth. One of the Levites. (Ezra x. 31.)

ISHMA = waste, desolation. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 8.)

ISHMAEL = whom God heareth. 1. The son of Abraham by Hagar, and the ancestor of many Arabian tribes, hence generally called “Ishmaelites.” (Gen. xxv. 12–18; 1 Chron. ii. 17; xxviii. 3.) Previous to his birth, Hagar was informed by an angel what would be the character of her son, and that his posterity would be innumerable. (Gen. xv. 11.) When Isaac was weaned, Ishmael was about seventeen years of age; and having offended Sarah by his treatment of her child, she insisted upon the banishment of Ishmael and his mother from the family. (Gen. xxv. 10.) When Hagar had reached the wilderness, her stock of water was exhausted, and her son was overcome with fatigue and thirst; God directed Hagar to a fountain, and renewed his promise to make him a great nation. Ishmael dwelt in the wilderness; (Gen. xvi. 12;) and was distinguished for lawless predatory habits, as his descendants have always been. (Gen. xxii. 20–21.) So rapidly did Ishmael’s progeny multiply, that in a few years afterwards they are spoken of as a trading nation. (Gen. xxxvii. 25; xxxix. 1.) Isaac and Ishmael amicably met at the burial of their father. (Gen. xxv. 9.) Ishmael died, perhaps in battle, at the age of one hundred and thirty-seven years; he was the father of twelve sons, who gave their names to as many tribes, who dwelt in the wilderness, from Havilah unto Shur. (Gen. xvii. 20.) 2. A prince of the royal family of Judah, who murdered the governor Gedaliah, with several of the Hebrews and Chaldeans who were attached to him. He fled to the Ammonites. (Jer. xl. 7–16; xlii. 1–18.) 3. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 38.) 4. A captain under Jehoiada the priest. (2 Chron. xxxiii. 1.) 5. One who put away his strange wife after the exile. (Ezra x. 22.)

ISHMAELITES.—See ISHMAEL.

ISHMAIAH = whom Jehovah keepeth. The chief over the tribe of Zebulun in David’s time. (1 Chron. xxvii. 19.)

ISHMERAI = whom Jehovah keepeth. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 18.)

ISHOD = man of splendour or glory. A descendant of Manasseh. (1 Chron. vii. 18.)

ISHPAN = bald. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 22.)

ISHTOB.—See Tob.

ISHUAH = even, level. A son of Asher. (Gen. xlii. 17;) also called “Isaiah.” (1 Chron. vii. 80.)

ISHUAL.—See Isu.

ISHUI = even, level. A son of king Saul. (1 Sam. xiv. 49.)

ISLE. The Hebrew word generally translated “isle” properly means habitable ground, dry land, in opposition to the sea and rivers. (Isa. xlii. 15; compare xliii. 19; l. 2.) Also maritime country, whether on the shore of the main land, or an island. Thus it means the coast of Ashdod; (Isa. xx. 6;) of Tyre; (Isa. xlii. 2, 6;) of Eli-shah; (Ezek. xxvii. 7.) It signifies an island, i.e. Crete; (Jer. xlvii. 4.) the isles of Chittim. (Ezek. xxvii. 6; Jer. ii. 10.) The phrase, "isles of the sea," is put in antithesis with the main land or continent. (Esth. x. 1.) The plural of the original word, usually translated "islands," was employed by the Hebrews to denote distant regions; (Jer. xxv. 22.) especially the islands and maritime countries of the west, which had become indistinctly known to the Hebrews, through the voyages of the Phenicians. (Isa. xxiv. 15; xl. 15; xli. 1, 5; xlii. 4, 10, 12; xlix. 1; li. 5;) and also those of the Mediterranean. (Gen. x. 5; Ps. lxxii. 10; Dan. xi. 4; Zeph. ii. 11.) By the "many isles," the Indian Archipelago is probably to be understood. (Ezek. xx. 15.)
ISR

ISMACIAH = whom Jehovah upholdeth. A priest in the time of Hesekiah. (2 Chron. xxxi. 13.)

ISMAIAH = whom Jehovah heareth. One of David's distinguished officers. (1 Chron. xii. 4.)

ISPAH = bold. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 16.)

ISRAEL = warrior, soldier, or prince of God. The name given by Jehovah to the patriarch Jacob, after the wrestling at Peniel; (Gen. xxxii. 24-29; Hosea iii. 4, 5;) but more frequently applied to his posterity, the people of Israel. (Rom. vii. 21; xi. 6; 1 Cor. x. 18.) Hence, for the whole people of Israel, the twelve tribes, or the "children of Israel," the Israelites; (Josh. iii. 17; vii. 25; Ex. xvi. 31; 1 Sam. ix. 9.) "Israelites" was the usual name of the twelve tribes, from the exodus, until after the death of Saul. But in consequence of the dissensions between the ten tribes and Judah, from the death of Saul onward, these ten tribes, among whom Ephraim took the lead, arrogated to themselves this honourable name of the whole nation; (2 Sam. ii. 9, 10, 17, 28; iii. 10, 17; xix. 40-48; 1 Kings xii. 1;) and on their separation, after the death of Solomon, into an independent kingdom, founded by Jeroboam, this name was adopted for the kingdom, so that henceforth the kings of the ten tribes were called "kings of Israel;" and the descendants of David, who ruled over Judah and Benjamin, were called "kings of Judah." So in the prophets of that period "Judah" and "Israel" are put in opposition. (Hos. iv. 15; v. 3, 5; vi. 10; vii. 1; viii. 2, 3, 6, 8; ix. 1, 7; Am. i. 1; ii. 6; iii. 14; Mic. i. 5; Isa. vi. 7.)

The two kingdoms are sometimes called "the two houses of Israel." (Isa. viii. 14.) After the destruction of the kingdom of Israel, B.C. 721, the name "Israel" began again to be applied to the whole surviving people. "Israel" is sometimes put for the true Israelites, the faithful, worthy of the name. (Ps. lxxii. 1; Isa. xlv. 17; xlix. 3; John i. 47; Rom. ix. 6; xii. 26.)—See JUDAH.

ISRAELITES.—See ISRAEL.

ISSACHAR = there is reward, or he brings reward. The fifth son of Jacob by Leah, and the head of one of the twelve tribes of Israel. (Gen. xxx. 14-18; xlv. 13; xlix. 14, 15; Num. i. 28, 29; xxvi. 23-25; Judges v. 16; 1 Chron. vii. 1-5; xii. 32.)

The territory of the tribe lay in the region adjacent to the sea of Galilee, and comprehended the whole of the rich valley or plain of Jezreel and the neighbouring districts. This region is still one of the most fertile tracts in Palestine. (Josh. xix. 17-33.)

ISSHIAH = whom Jehovah leaveth. The name of several Levites. (1 Chron. xxiii. 21, 25.)

ISUAH.—See ISHUAH.

ISUI.—See JESUI.

ITALY. A celebrated country of Southern Europe, once the seat of universal empire, but which, since the overthrow of the Roman power, has never formed an independent whole. This beautiful and fertile region, of which Rome was the capital, is now divided into the kingdom of the Two Sicilies, consisting of Naples and the island of Sicily; the States of the Church, or Papal States; the several Duchies of Tuscany, Lucca, Modena.
and Parma; the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom, including Lombardy, and subject to Austria; and the kingdom of Sardinia, including Savoy; or as it might be called, the Two Sardiniæ; the two latter States extending to the Alps. Its divided States suffer from their unhappy political condition. (Acts x. 1; xvii. 2; xxvii. 1.)

ITCH. The Hebrew word ḥhrees =to scrape, to scratch, rendered “itch,” evidently means a disease attended by feverish cutaneous eruptions. (Deut. xxviii. 27.) Perhaps the hot pustules, with which the Egyptians are sorely troubled when the waters of the Nile begin to rise, may be intended.

ITHAI.—See IITAI.

ITHAMAR = palm coast. The fourth son of Aaron. He, with his descendants, occupied the position of common priests, till the high priesthood passed into his family in the person of Eli. (Ex. vi. 20; xxxviii. 21; Num. iii. 2, 3, iv. 28.) In the time of Solomon, the pontificate reverted to the elder line of Eleazar. (1 Kings ii. 27.)

ITHIEL = God with me. 1. Ithiel and Ucal seem to have been children or disciples of Agur, to whom he addressed his maxims. (Prov. xxx. 1.) 2. A descendant of Benjamin. (Neh. xi. 7.)

ITHMAH = orphanage. A Moabite, one of David’s distinguished officers, (1 Chron. xi. 46.)

ITHNAN = bestowed. A city in the tribe of Judah. (Josh. xv. 23.)

ITHRA = abundance. The father of Amasa; (2 Sam. xvi. 25;) also called “Jether.” (1 Kings ii. 8.) His descendants were called “Ithrites.” (2 Sam. xxiii. 38.)

ITHRAN = excellence. 1. A descendant of Esau. (Gen. xxxvi. 26.) 2. A descendant of Asher; (1 Chron. vii. 37;) also called “Jether.” (1 Chron. vii. 38.)

ITHREAM = residue of the people. A son of David. (2 Sam. iii. 5; 1 Chron. iii. 3.)

ITHRIT. —See IITRAH.
IZRAHITÉ.—See SHAMMUTH.
IZRI = formation, frame. A singer in the temple service; (1 Chron. xxv. 11;) also called “Zeri.” (1 Chron. xxv. 3.)

JA

JAAKAN = turner, twister. A descendant of Seir. (1 Chron. i. 42.)
JAAKOSAH = heel-catcher, supplanter, lyc-in-wait. A prince of the tribe of Simeon. (1 Chron. iv. 36.)
JAAALA = a wild she-goat, or ibex. One whose posterity returned from the exile; Neh. vii. 58; also written “Jaalah.” (Esth. ii. 56.)
JAAALAM = hidden. A son of Esau. (Gen. xxxvi. 5, 14.)
JAAANAI = whom Jehovah answers. A descendant of Gad. (1 Chron. v. 12.)
JAAARE-OREGIM.—See JAIR.
JAAASAU = whom Jehovah has made. A descendant of Bani. (Esth. x. 37.)
JAAASIEL = whom God has made. The son of Abner. (1 Chron. xxvii. 21.)
JAAAZAH.—See JABAZ.
JAAZAANIAH = whom Jehovah hears. 1. The son of Jeremiah. (Jer. xxxv. 8.) 2. The son of Azar. (Ezek. xi. 1.) 3. The son of Hochariah; (2 Kings xxv. 23;) also called “Jezaniah.” (Jer. xl. 8; xlii. 1.) 4. The son of Shaphan. (Ezek. viii. 11.)
JAAZER = whom Jehovah helps. A city in the tribe of Gad, and for a long time subject to Moab. (Num. xxxi. 32; xxxii. 36.) It is also called “Jazer.” (Num. xxxii. 1, 3; Josh. xiii. 26; 2 Sam. xxiv. 5; Is. xvi. 8.) It was perhaps situated where now are found the ruins Ain Hazir, or those of Sar, or Sir; the latter place having fountains, with a stream which flows into the Jordan. The passage in Jer. xlviii. 32, may be rendered thus: “Thy shoots have overshot the sea, i.e. Dead Sea, along the sea, to Jazer have they reached.”

368

JAAZIAH = whom Jehovah consoles.) One of the Levites. (1 Chron. xxiv. 26, 27.)
JAAZIEL = whom God consoles. One of the Levites; (1 Chron. xv. 18;) also called “Azriel.” (1 Chron. xv. 2.)
JABAL = a stream, river. The son of Lamech, the father of the nomadic pastoral mode of life. (Gen. iv. 20.)
JABBOK = a pouring out, emptying. A stream or torrent near mount Gilead, flowing from the east into the Jordan on the northern border of the Ammonites. (Gen. xxxii. 22—26; Num. xxi. 24; Deut. ii. 37; iii. 16; Josh. xii. 2; Judg. xi. 13.) The Jabbok now bears the name of Zerka = the blue. It rises in the mountains of Hauran, and pursues a western course of some sixty miles to the Jordan, which it enters nearly midway between the Dead Sea and the sea of Galilee. In its course westward across the plains, it more than once passes underground; and in summer the upper portion of its channel becomes dry. In the rainy season it becomes a stream of considerable magnitude. It abounds in fish, in general small, but of excellent flavour.
JABES = dry. 1. A city in Gilead, hence fully written “Jabesh Gilead.” (Judg. xxi. 8; 1 Sam. xi. 1—13; xxxii. 10—13.) The ruin, with columns, called ed-Deir, in the Wady-Yabis, on the road from Beisan to Gerasa, is supposed to mark the site of this ancient city. In grateful remembrance of their deliverance from the Ammonites by Saul, the men of this city brought the bodies of Saul and his sons, which the Philistines had hung upon the walls of Bethshan, and caused them to be honourably interred in a wood near their city. 2. The father of Shallum. (2 Kings xv. 10, 18, 14.) JABEZ = he causes pain, i.e. to his mother. A descendant of Judah, who appears to have lived in Egypt during the sojourn of the Hebrews in that country. (1 Chron. iv. 9, 10; compare verses 18—23.) Jabez occurs, in 1 Chron. ii. 55, as the name of a place; but the Targumist understands the same person, and identifies him with Othniel.

JABIN = "he observes." 1. A king of Hazor, and one of the most powerful of all the chieftains who ruled in Canaan. He perished in battle against the Hebrews. (Josh. xi. 1—14.) 2. A king of Hazor, probably a descendant of the preceding, who oppressed the Hebrews twenty years. The Hebrews were delivered from his thraldom by the victory won by Deborah and Barak in the plain of Jezreel. (Judg. iv. 2—24; v. 1—31; Ps. lxxiii. 9.)

JABNETH = "he lets build." A city on the Mediterranean, taken from the Philistines by Uzziah, king of Judah. (2 Chron. xxvi. 6; Josh. xv. 46; 2 Macc. xii. 9.) It was called Jasmia by the Greeks and Romans; and Yebna is the name still borne by a village among the ruins of the ancient city.

JACHAN = "afflicted." A descendant of Gad. (1 Chron. v. 13.)

JACHIN = "he makes firm." 1. A son of Simeon; (Gen. xlvi. 10;) also called "Jarib." (1 Chron. iv. 24.) His descendants were called "Jachinites." (Num. xxxvi. 12.) 2. One of the priests. (1 Chron. ix. 10; Neh. xi. 10.) 3. The column on the right, before the porch of Solomon's temple. (1 Kings vii. 21—22.)—See Boaz.

JACINTH. The Greek word hysacith, rendered "jacinth," is properly the name of a flower of a deep purple or reddish blue, abundant in the meadows and plains of Palestine. It is also the name of a species of gem of a deep-red or violet colour. (Rev. xxii. 20; compare ix. 17.) The Hebrew lesehem, rendered "ligurie," denotes the same stone as that which we call a hyacinth. (Ex. xxviii. 19; xxxix. 12.)

JACOB = "heel-catcher, supplaster, lie-in-wait." 1. The youngest of the twin sons of Isaac by his wife Rebekah, called also Israel, and the founder of the Israelitish nation. Rebekah, in answer to her inquiry of the Lord, was informed that the founders of two nations should be born of her. (Gen. xxv. 22—24.) At the birth of the children, Jacob appears to have laid hold on his brother's heel, a kind of predictive intimation of his future conduct in life. When the brothers grew up, Esau devoted himself to hunting, and became the favourite of Isaac; while Jacob preferred the quiet occupations of the pastoral life, and was no less the favourite of his mother. (Gen. xxxv. 27.) Jacob having warily taken advantage of his brother's necessity, to obtain his birthright, and of his father's infirmity, to obtain the blessing of primogeniture, was compelled to fly into Mesopotamia, to avoid the consequences of his brother's wrath. (Gen. xxv. 29—34; xxvii. 6—45.) On his journey, the Divine purposes relative to his descendants were revealed to him. (Gen. xxviii. 10—19.) When Jacob arrived in Mesopotamia, he entered into a covenant of servitude with his uncle for seven years, at the end of which time Laban was to give him his daughter Rachel for a wife. Instead, however, of his beloved Rachel, Leah, her eldest sister, was given him deceptively. Laban proposed that if he would serve another seven years, he should still have Rachel. Jacob agreed, and probably received her immediately after he had married Leah. With each of his daughters Laban gave a maid, both of whom became the wives of Jacob, of the secondary or inferior kind. From all these there were born to Jacob, while he sojourned in Mesopotamia, eleven sons and one daughter; one was born near Bethlehem. (Gen. 39. 1—36; xxxi. 1—25; xxxv. 18.) Avarice seems to have been the ruling passion with Laban; but whatever plan of wages he would fix on, the Lord overruled it for the benefit of Jacob, so that he became extremely rich. (Gen. xxxi
JAC

5—13.) Jacob now resolved to return to his own country, with his wives and children, and all his cattle, and all his goods. After his final interview with Laban, Jacob had to pass near the land of Seir, where he heard that Esau was on his way to meet him, accompanied by four hundred men. As no other than a hostile attack could be mediated, Jacob had no other resource but to look to Heaven for help. Left alone in the silence of the night, the patriarch suddenly felt himself laid hold of by some unknown assailant, which he, at first, probably thought was one of Esau’s men. But his antagonist was more than human, though called “a man.” (Gen. xxxii. 24—32.) He is also called “an angel.” (Hos. xii. 4.) Again he is designated by the august title of “God,” leaving us to the inevitable inference that the mysterious wrestler was no other than the eternal WORD appearing in the likeness of that nature which He afterwards assumed in accomplishing the work of our redemption. In the struggle, “He smote the socket of his thigh; and the socket of Jacob’s thigh was wrenched,” i.e. the tendinous ligament connecting the thigh-bone with the hip-joint, was wrenched. (Gen. xxxii. 32.) It does not appear that the injury which Jacob received in the struggle was permanent. On this memorable occasion, his name was changed to Israel = warrior, or soldier of God. A pledge, that as he was permitted to prevail over the mysterious antagonist, so should he prevail over Esau. Jacob journeyed to Succoth, thence to Shalem and Bethel. (Gen. xxxv. 1—5.) Pursuing his way, he came near to Bethlehem, where Rachel died, thence to Mamre. Events finally led to the patriarch’s removal to Egypt, together with the sixty-six persons which came out of his loins, and the nine wives of his sons, all his kindred, amounting to seventy-five persons; (Gen. xlvi. 26; Acts vii. 14;) where they resided in the land of Goshen. Seventeen years afterwards, Jacob convened all his sons, and blessed them. He died aged one hundred and forty-seven years; and was interred in the family vault at Machpelah. (Gen. xlvi.; 1.) The term “Jacob” is sometimes used poetically for the people of Israel. (Isa. ix. 8; x. 20; xli. 8, 14; xlii. 24; xliii. 22, 28; xliv. 23; Ps. xxiv. 6.)

JAE

2. The father of Joseph the Carpenter. (Matt. i. 15, 16.)

JACOB’S WELL. Tradition has long fixed this celebrated well in the vale of Sychar, near the base of Mount Gerizim, about a mile and a half from the eastern gate of Nablus, the ancient Shechem. The well is dug in a firm rock, and has a vault or arch of solid masonry over the mouth. Dr. Wilson says “it is exactly seventy-five feet deep, and about nine feet in diameter.” The quantity of water the well contains is found to fluctuate: several travellers have found it dry. (John iv. 5—42.)

JADA = knowing, wise. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. ii. 28, 82.)

JADUA = loving. A son of Nebo. (Ezra x. 43.)

JADDUA = known. 1. The son of Jonathan, high priest of the Jews. (Neh. xii. 11, 22.) He is supposed to be the same high priest who went out to meet Alexander the Great, on his approach to Jerusalem, after the reduction of Gaza, a.c. 332. (Jos. Ant. xi. 8, 3—6.) 2. One of the Levites. (Neh. x. 21.)

JADON = judge. One who assisted in rebuilding Jerusalem. (Neh. iii. 7.)

JAEL = wild or mountain goat, ibex. 1. The wife of Heber the Kenite. After the defeat of Jabin’s army, Sisera, the general, fled towards the tent of Jael, for “there was peace between Jabin and the house of Heber.” As belonging to a friendly people, Sisera’s claim for protection was as valid as a common claim for hospitality, and could not be refused. So Jael invited Sisera to take refuge in her own tent, or in her division of her husband’s tent, into which no stranger might presume to enter. Fatigued and thirsty, he asked for water, and she gave him leben or sour milk. After he had fallen into a sound sleep, she took a tent-pin, and with a hammer drove it through his temples into the ground. This deed was probably performed in accordance with the mandate of Heaven. (Judg. iv. 11, 17, 18; v. 24.) 2. A judge or regent of the Hebrews, about the time of Shamgar; (Judg. v. 5;) unless the wife of Heber be intended.
JAH

JAGUR = lodging-place. A place in the tribe of Judah. (Josh. xv. 21.)

JAH = See Jehovah.

JAHAZ = place trodden down. A Moabish city situated near the desert, afterwards reckoned to the tribe of Reuben and assigned to the priests. (Num. xxxi. 23; Deut. ii. 32; Isa. xv. 4; Jer. xlvi. 84.) This name is written "Jahaza;" (Josh. xiii. 18;) "Jahazah;" (Josh. xxx. 36; Jer. xlvi. 21;) and "Jahazah." (1 Chron. vi. 78.)

JAHAZIAH = whom Jehovah beholds. The son of Tikvah. (Ezra x. 15.)

JAHAZIEL = whom God beholds.
1. One of David’s warriors. (1 Chron. xii. 4.)
2. One of the priests. (1 Chron. xvi. 6.)
3. A son of Hebron. (1 Chron. xxiii. 19.)

JAHDAI = whom Jehovah directs. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. ii. 47.)

JAHDEEL = whom God makes joyful. A descendant of Manasseh. (1 Chron. v. 24.)

JAHDO = his union. A descendant of Gad. (1 Chron. v. 14.)

JAHLEEL = hoping in God. A son of Zebulun. (Gen. xlvii. 14.) His descendants are called "Jahleelites." (Num. xxvi. 26.)

JAHMAI = whom Jehovah guards. The son of Tola. (1 Chron. vii. 2.)

JAM

JAHZAHz.—See JAHAZ.

JAHZEEL = whom God allots. A son of Naphtali; (Gen. xlvi. 24;) also called "Jahziel." (1 Chron. vii. 13.)

His descendants were called "Jahzeelites." (Num. xxvi. 48.)

JAHZERAH = whom Jehovah leads back.—See Ahasai.

JAHZIEL.—See JAHZEEL.

JAIR = whom he enlightens. 1. A descendant of Manasseh. (1 Chron. ii. 22.) He was the proprietor of twenty-three towns, called "Havoth-jair"—the villages of Jair, in that part of Argob bordering on Gilead. (Num. xxxii. 41; Deut. iii. 14; Josh. xiii. 60.) 2. The eighth judge or regent of the Hebrews; probably a descendant of the former. (Judg. x. 3.) He judged Israel twenty-two years. His descendants were called "Jairites." (2 Sam. xxvi. 26.) 3. A descendant of Benjamin. (Est. ii. 5.)

4. JAIR = he awakes. The father of Elhanan. (1 Chron. xx. 5.) In 2 Sam. xxi. 19, we read, instead of Jair, "Jaare-oregim"—forests of the weavers; by an error of the transcribers.

JAIRUS = he enlightens. An officer of the synagogue at Capernaum, whose daughter Jesus restored to life. (Matt. ix. 18, 26; Mark xii. 43; Luke viii. 41—56.)

JAKAN.—See AKAN.

JAKEH = pious. The father of Agur. (Prov. xxx. 1.)

JAKIM = he sets up. 1. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 19.)
2. The chief of the twelfth class or division of the priests. (1 Chron. xxiv. 12.)

3. See Jehoiakim.

JALON = abiding. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 17.)

JAMBRES.—See JANNES.

JAMES = heel-catcher, supplanter.
1. The son of Zebedee, and brother of John the evangelist. His occupation was that of a fisherman, probably at Bethsaida. He was present at several of the most interesting scenes in our Saviour’s life. James, the Apostle, is sometimes called “the Greater” or "Elder;" he was put to death at Jerusalem, by the elder Herod Agrippa, about A.D. 44. (Matt. iv. 21; x. 2; Mark iii. 17; Acts i. 13; xii. 2.) The brother of Jude; (Jude 1; Acts i. 13; Luke vi. 16;) and like him the son of Mary sister to our Lord’s mother and wife of Alpheus or Cleophas. (Matt. xxvii. 56; Luke, xxiv. 10; compare John xix. 25;) hence called the son of Alpheus, and also the “brother” = kinsman or cousin of our Lord. (Matt. x. 8; xiii. 55; Mark iii. 18; Acts i. 13; xii. 17; xv. 18; xxii. 18; Gal. i. 19; ii. 9, 12; 1 Cor. xvi. 7; James i. 1.) This Apostle is sometimes called James “the Less;” he had other brethren or kinsmen, who were slow in believing in the Messiahship of Jesus. (John vii. 3—5; Matt. xiii. 55.) According to Josephus, James, the brother of Jesus, who was called Christ, was put to death by Ananus the high priest, after the death of Festus, and before the arrival of his successor Albinus, about A.D. 62. (Ant. xx. 9. 1.)

JAMES, EPISTLE OF. General opinion has long regarded the apostle James, the son of Alpheus, and cousin of Jesus, as the author of this Epistle. It is called one of the Catholic or General Epistles; and was probably written at Jerusalem to the Jewish Christians scattered abroad, about A.D. 45. This Epistle was used by Clement of Rome, Hermas, Irenaeus, Athenagoras, and Origen. It was included in the earliest Syriac church-version, even after the subsequent rejection of all the other disputed Catholic Epistles. The obvious reason why the Epistle of James is not more frequently quoted by the ancients is, that it seems to contradict some of the positions which Paul had taken in regard to the matter of justification by faith. For this reason, perhaps, Erasmus entertained doubts respecting its authenticity. At any rate, Luther, in his preface to this Epistle, assigns this reason, and stoutly maintains that it is well grounded; as “it ascribes justification to works, directly contrary to St. Paul and all other Scripture.” So in his preface to his new Testament, he says: “St. James’s Epistle is a downright straungy Epistle.” So, too, judged several other scholars; all for the same reason—because James seems to contradict Luther’s views of justification; for that he contradicts Paul’s views, can never be made out. As an ethical production this Epistle ranks high; and abounds in valuable, practical instructions.

JAMIN = right hand, good fortune. 1. A son of Simeon. (Gen. xlvi. 10; 1 Chron. iv. 24.) His descendants were called “Jaminites.” (Num. xxvi. 12.) 2. A descendant of Hezron. (1 Chron. ii. 27.) 3. One who interpreted the law with Ezra. (Neh. viii. 7.)

JAMLECH = he makes king. A phylarch or chief in the tribe of Simeon. (1 Chron. iv. 34.)

JANNA = rest, quiet. One of the ancestors of Mary. (Luke iii. 24.)

JANNEES AND JAMBRES. The names of two of the Egyptian magicians who withheld Moses and Aaron, by attempting to imitate the miracles which they actually performed. (2 Tim. iii. 8; compare Ex. vii. 11, 12; viii. 17—19.) These names are not found in the old Testament, but were probably derived by Paul from ancient documents, garbled portions of which may be preserved in the Targums, Talmud, and Rabbinas.

JANOAH = rest, quiet. A place on the confines of Ephraim and Manasseh. (Josh. xvi. 6, 7.) In 2 Kings xv. 29, it is written “Janoah.”

JANUM = slumber. A place in the tribe of Judah. (Josh. xv. 53.) The margin has “Janus” = flight.

JAPHETH = widely spreading. The second son of Noah. (Gen. x. 2—5.) He is said to have had seven sons, whose descendants are described as occupying chiefly the western and northern regions. He was probably the same with the Japhetus of Greek mythology. (Gen. v. 32; vii. 13; ix. 18, 27; 1 Chron. i. 5.) The prophetic blessing pronounced on Japheth by his father was fully accomplished: "God shall enlarge Japheth, and He shall dwell in the tents of Shem." (Gen. ix. 27.) Besides Europe and the isles, the descendants of Japheth peopled those vast regions in the north-west of Asia. In the latter part of the prophecy, we understand not Japheth but God who was to dwell in the tents of Shem. This was typified when the Divine presence was manifested in the tabernacle and temple, and fulfilled when God was manifested in the flesh. (John i. 14.)
JAR

JAPHIA = splendid. 1. A place in the tribe of Zebulun. (Josh. xix. 12.) It is now a small village, called Yafa, a short distance S.W. of Nazareth. (Jos. Wars, ii. 20. 6.) 2. A king of the city of Lachish. (Josh. xiii. 3.) A son of king David. (2 Sam. xvi. 15; 1 Chron. iii. 7; xiv. 6.)

JAPHLET = whom Jehovah delivereth. A descendant of Asher. (1 Chron. vii. 32, 33.) In Josh. xvi. 8, "Japhlet" occurs as the name of a place; where it should be "Japhletes," the descendants of Japhlet.

JAPHO.—See Joppa.

JARAH.—See Jehoadah.

JAREB = an adversary. This word occurs as a proper name in Hos. v. 13; x. 6; it is here used in reference to an hostile king = the king of Assyria.

JARED = descent. The father of Enoch. (Gen. v. 15-20; Luke iii. 37.) In the margin, it is written "Jered." (Gen. v. 15.)

JARESIAH = whom Jehovah makes fat. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. vii. 27.)

JARIA = fragrant. The Egyptian servant of a Hebrew named Sheban, who married the daughter of his master, during the period of the sojourn in Egypt. (1 Chron. ii. 31, 34, 35.)

JARIAH = an adversary. 1. One of the delegates sent by Ezra to Iddo. (Ezra viii. 16.) 2. —See Jachin.

JARMUTH = height. 1. A city in the plain of Judah, anciently a royal city of the Canaanites. (Josh. x. 3; xii. 11; xv. 36; Neh. xi. 29.) It is now called Yarmuk. 2. A city of the Levites, in Issachar. (Josh. xxii. 29.)

JAROA = moon. A descendant of Gad. (1 Chron. v. 14.)

JASHEN = See Hashem.

JASHER = upright, or righteous. The name of an ancient book no longer extant, supposed to be cited in Josh. x. 13: "And the sun stood still, and the moon stayed, until the people had avenged themselves upon their enemies. Is not this written in the book of Jasher?" It is also cited in 2 Sam. i. 17, 18: "And David lamented with this lamentation over Saul and over Jonathan his son: also he bade them teach the children of Judah the Bow—i.e. the Dirge called 'the Bow;' or, as Tyndale renders it, 'the Stories thereof'—behold it is written in the book of Jasher." This ancient document, thus referred to in the book of Joshua; and again, some 430 years after the conquest of Canaan, in the book of Samuel, would seem to have been a collection or anthology of Hebrew poems, mingled with remarkable historical memoranda, which received accessions at various periods, and still continued to be quoted by its original title—the book of Jasher, i.e. the book of the Upright—which it received on account of the notices of theocratic heroes, and the fidelity of its annals. (Josh. Ant. v. 1. 17.) Those portions of its contents, designed by the Holy Spirit for universal edification, are undoubtedly incorporated in other parts of the inspired Volume. The apocryphal book of Jasher, printed in Rabbinical Hebrew, Venice, 1613; and translated into English, New York, 1840, is a fabulous and worthless production. The impudent fabrication, styled the book of Jasher, by Ili, is not worth mentioning.

JASHOBEAM = to whom the people turneth. One of David's distinguished warriors. (1 Chron. xii. 6; xxvii. 2.) Instead of the proper name Jashobeam, in 2 Sam. xxiii. 8, we have that name translated, "that sat in the seat;" the margin reads, "Josheb-bassebeth"
JAV

= Sitting in the sitting. And instead of "Adino" = brandishing, and "Exnute" = his spear, the translation should be, "he brandished his spear." Thus corrected the passage reads, "Jashobeam the Hachmonite, chief of the captains, he brandished his spear against eight hundred; whom he slew at one time." The "Tachmonite" is merely a corrupted reading of "Hachmonite." The incident mentioned in 1 Chron. xi. 11, may have been another occurrence.

JASHUB = turning himself. 1. A son of Issachar; his descendants were called "Jashubites." (Num. xxvi. 24; 1 Chron. vii. 1.) He is also called "Job" = howling. (Gen. xlvi. 13.) 2. A son of Banii. (Ex. x. 29.)

JASHUBI-LEHIEM = they shall return food. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 22.)

JASIEL = whom God has made. One of David's distinguished warriors. (1 Chron. xi. 47.)

JASON = healing. A kinsman of Paul, and his host at Thessalonica, whose house the rabble forced, in order to seize the Apostle. Not finding Paul, they dragged Jason and some friends before the magistrates; who released them with an admonition. (Acts xvii. 5–9; Rom. xvi. 21.)

JASPER. The Hebrew word yaspeh, and Greek jaspis, properly designate the jasper, a precious stone of the flint family of minerals, of various colours, but mostly green. (Ex. xxvii. 20; xxxix. 13; Ezek. xxix. 13; Rev. iv. 3; xxi. 11, 18, 19.)

JATHNIEL = whom God bestows. One of the porters of the temple. (1 Chron. xxvi. 2.)

JATTIR = pre-eminent. A city in the mountains of Judah, assigned to the priests. It is probably the village marked by caves upon a hill, called Attir. (Josh. iv. 48; xxxi. 14; 1 Sam. xxx. 27; 1 Chron. vi. 57.)

JAVAN = mire, dregs. 1. A city of Arabia Felix; probably Yawan, a town in Yemen. (Ezek. xxvii. 19.) 2. A son of Japheth. (Gen. x. 2.)

JEB

= Javelin. A sort of short spear, cast, as is supposed, with the hand. (1 Sam. xvi. 11.)

JAZER.—See JAAZER.

JAZIZ = he moves. David's chief shepherd. (1 Chron. xxvii. 31.)

JEALOUSY. This word is most frequently used to denote a suspicion of conjugal infidelity. According to the Hebrew law, a man who was jealous of his wife, without any actual evidence of her infidelity, was required to bring her to the priest, with an offering; and when they came to the presence of the Lord, a part of the water of the tabernacle or temple was taken, with certain ceremonies, and presented to the woman to drink; she at the same time holding the offering in her hand. Before drinking the water, the most bitter curses were imprecated upon her; and if she was guilty, the water was to become the cause of terrible bodily diseases. (Num. v. 11–31.) This imprecation water could not harm the accused person, without the direct judgment of God. "Jealous" is sometimes used for anger or indignation; or an intense interest for the honour and prosperity of another, and in this sense is ascribed to God. (Ex. xxxix. 11; Ps. lxxix. 5; Zech. i. 14; viii. 2; 1 Cor. x. 22; 2 Cor. xi. 2.)

JEALOUSY, Image of.—See TAMMuz.

JEARIM, Mount.—See CHESA-LOM.

JEATERAI = places, regions. One of the Levites. (1 Chron. vi. 21.)

JEBERACHIAH = whom Jehovah blesses. The father of Zechariah. (Isa. viii. 2.)

JEBUS = place trodden down, threshing floor. The ancient name of Jerusalem, among the Canaanites; (Judg. xix. 10, 11; 1 Chron. xi. 4, 5;) probably derived from a descendant of Canaan the son of Ham. (Gen. x. 16.) The Jebusites were partially subdued by Joshua; (Josh. x. 16, 40; xii. 10; xv. 63;) and they were permitted to remain after the conquest of Jebus, by David. (Num. xiii. 39;
JEH

2 Sam. v. 6—9; xxiv. 16—25; 1 Chron. xi. 4—8; Ezra ix. 1, 2.) “Jebus” is sometimes put for the city Jebus. (Josh. xv. 8; xviii. 10; Zech. ix. 7.)

JEBUSI.—See JEBUS.

JECAMIAH = whom Jehovah gathers. A descendant of Jesseiah. (1 Chron. iii. 18.)

JECHEL = able through Jehovah. The mother of king Azariah or Uzziah; (2 Kings xv. 2;) also written “Jecoliah.” (2 Chron. xxvi. 3.)

JECONEI.—See JEHOLACHIN.

JEDAIAH = praise Jehovah. 1. A descendant of Simeon. (1 Chron. iv. 37.) 2. A chief in the division of the priests. (1 Chron. ix. 10; xxiv. 7; Ezra ii. 36.) 3. The son of Harumaph. (Neh. iii. 10.)

JEDAIEL = known of God. 1. A son of Benjamin. (1 Chron. vii. 6, 10, 11.) 2. One of David’s distinguished warriors. (1 Chron. xi. 45.)

JEDIDIAH = one beloved. The mother of king Josiah. (2 Kings xxii. 1.)

JEDIDIAH.—See SOLOMON.

JEDUTHUN = praising, celebrating. A Levite of Merari’s family, and one of the principal choristers appointed by David. (1 Chron. ix. 16; xvi. 38, 41, 42; xxv. 1.) This name is also put for his descendants, “the Jeduthunites.” (2 Chron. xxxv. 19; Neh. xi. 17; the titles of Psalms xxxix., lxxi., lxxix.)

JEEL.—See ABIRAZER.

JEGARSAHADUTHA.—See GALED.

JEHALELEEL = who praises God. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 16.)

JEHALELEL = who praises God. A descendant of Merari. (2 Chron. xxix. 12.)

JEHDELEAH = whom Jehovah makes joyful. 1. A Levite. (1 Chron. xxiv. 20.) 2. The superintendent of David’s asses. (1 Chron. xxvii. 20.)

JEHEZEKEL = whom God makes strong. The chief of the twentieth class in the division of the priests. (1 Chron. xxiv. 16.)

JEHIAH.—See JEHIEL.

JEHIEL = God liveth. 1. A Levite; (1 Chron. xv. 18;) he is called “Jeiel;” (1 Chron. xvi. 5;) and also “Jehiah” = Jehovah liveth. (1 Chron. xv. 24.) His descendants were called “Jejehi.” (1 Chron. xxvi. 21, 22.) 2. The son of Achmoni. (1 Chron. xxvii. 32.)

JEHOLACHIN.—See JECONEI.

JEHONADAB = whom Jehovah adorns. A descendant of Benjamin; (1 Chron. viii. 36;) also called “Jarah” = honey. (1 Chron. ix. 42.)

JEHOADAN = whom Jehovah adorns. The mother of king Amaaziah. (2 Kings xiv. 2; 2 Chron. xxv. 1.)

JEHOAHAZ = whom Jehovah sustains. 1. The son and successor of Jehu, king of Israel. He reigned seventeen years, b. c. 854—838; and followed the evil example of the house of Jereboam. His dominions were ravaged by Hazael, and afterwards by Benhadad, kings of Syria; but, as he finally acknowledged the authority of Jehovah over Israel, he was released from these haughty foes. (2 Kings x. 35; xiii. 1—10, 25.) 2. The son and successor of Josiah, king of Judah. He is also called “Shallum.” (1 Chron. iii. 15; Jer. xxii. 11.) As he was the fourth son of Josiah, his irregular election to the throne offended Necho, king of Egypt. When he had reigned only three months, Necho sent him a prisoner into Egypt, and there he died. (2 Kings xxiii. 30—36; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 1—4.) He is designated in Ezek. xix. 3, 4, under the emblem of a young lion carried in chains to Egypt. 8.—See AHAZIAH.

JEOHAZ.—See JOSIAH.

JEHOAHANAN.—Whom Jehovah favours. 1. A military commander under Jehoshaphat. (2 Chron. xxi. 15, xxiii. 1.) 2. One of the Korhites. (1 Chron. xxvi. 8.) 3. Two of the priests. (Neh. xi. 13, 42.) 4. A son of Bebai. (Ezra x. 28.)

JEHOLACHIN = Whom Jehovah appoints. The son and successor of Jehoiakim, king of Judah. This name is also written “Jeconiah,” (Est. ii. 6; Jer. xxiv. 1; xxvii. 20; xxviii. 4; 1 Chron. iii. 17;) and “Coniah.” (Jer. xxiv. 24, 28; xxxvii. 1;) also “Jechonias.” (Matt. i. 12.) He probably reigned ten years in conjunction with his father; and three months and ten days alone. (2 Kings xxiv. 8; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 9.) He surrendered Jerusalem to Nebuchadnezzar; and his family, and the principal part of the nation, were carried into exile. Jehoiachin remained in prison at Babylon during the lifetime of Nebuchadnezzar; but his successor, Evil merodach, not only released him, but gave him an allowance for the support of his rank. (2 Kings xxiv. 1—16; xxv. 27—30; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 9, 10; Est. ii. 6; Jer. xxix. 2; xxxvii. 1; lii. 31, 34; Ezek. i. 2.) The expression, “Write ye this man childless,” signifies that this wicked king should have no heir to the throne of Judah. (Jer. xxxi. 30.)

JEHOIADA = Whom Jehovah knows. 1. A priest of great authority in the kingdom of Judah, in the times of Ahaziah, Athaliah, and Josiah. Jehoiada recovered the throne of Judah for the young king Josiah, who had been saved from the massacre by which Athaliah sought to exterminate the royal line of David. His remains were honoured with a place in the sepulchre of the kings. (2 Kings xi. 1—21; xii. 2—16; 2 Chron. xxii. 11—12; xxiii. 1—21; xxiv. 2—25.)

The father of Benhiah. (2 Sam. viii; xx. 23.) 3. One of David’s officers. (1 Chron. xxvii. 34.) 4. A chief of the Aaronites. (1 Chron. xii. 27.) 5. The son of Paseah. (Neh. iii. 6.)

JEHOIAKIM = Whom Jehovah sets up. The second son of Josiah, and the brother and successor of Jehoahaz, king of Judah; (1 Chron. iii. 15;) also called “Eliakim”; (2 Chron. xxxvi. 4;) and “Jakim.” (Matt. i. 11, margin.) For the first four years, Jehoiakim was subject to the king of Egypt, who had placed him upon the throne. But Nebuchadnezzar having driven Necho out of Asia, marched to Jerusalem; and Jehoiakim was again placed on the throne by the Babylonian prince. Nebuchadnezzar took part of the ornaments of the temple as booty, and the sons of the principal Hebrew nobles, as hostages, to Babylon. He reigned eleven years. (2 Kings xxiii. 31, 37; xxiv. 1—7; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 4—8; Jer. xxx. 1—14; xxxvii. 1; xxvii. 1, 20; xlvi. 2; Dan. i. 1.) Jehoiakim, towards the close of his reign, rebelled against Nebuchadnezzar; and during the siege of Jerusalem he died, or probably was slain in one of the actions; and the Chaldeans dragged the dead body before the city; and while yet unbaptized, his son Jehoiachin surrendered the city. (Jer. xxxvi. 30.)

JEHOIARIB = Whom Jehovah defends. The head of the first of the twenty-four classes of priests; (1 Chron. ix. 10; xxiv. 7;) also called “Joiarib.” (Ezra viii. 16; Neh. xi. 10; xii. 19.)

JEHONADAB.—See JONADAB.

JEHONATHAN = Whom Jehovah gave. 1. One of David’s officers. (1 Chron. xxvii. 25.) 2. A Levite. (2 Chron. xvii. 8.) 3. One of the priests. (Neh. xii. 18.)

JEHORAM = Whom Jehovah has exalted. 1. The son and successor of Jehoshaphat, king of Judah. He reigned eighteen years, three of which he was associated with his father. He married Athaliah, the daughter of Ahab and Jezebel; and, through her influence, all the brothers of the king.
were murdered, and the gross idolatries of the Phoenicians were introduced into the kingdom of Judah. The Edomites revolted, and made themselves independent. The Philistines on one side, and the Arabians on the other, ravaged the country, and even Jerusalem and the royal palace. Jehoram was at length smitten with a malignant dysentery. He died miserably, and was denied the honours of a royal burial. He is called "Joram." (2 Kings viii. 16, 21, 24; 2 Chron. xxi. 1—20.) 2. A priest. (2 Chron. xvi. 8.) 3. —See Joram.

JEHOASHABEATH.—See Jehoshabeath.

JEHOASHAPHAT = whom Jehovah judgeth. 1. The son and successor of Aa, king of Judah. He was distinguished for his faithfulness to Jehovah; and his reign, which lasted twenty-five years, was, upon the whole, prosperous. (2 Chron. xvii. 5, 6.) He diligently suppressed idolatry; and sent priests and Levites into every town, with a copy of the Law, to instruct the people. He improved the administration of justice, and caused the places of authority to be filled by the wisest and best men of the land. He, however, involved himself in an alliance with Ahab, king of Israel; (1 Kings, xxii., 44; 2 Chron. xviii. 1,) and again with Ahaziah, in a naval expedition, which turned out disastrously. Still he never relinquished the enterprise of reviving the navigation of the Red sea. Subsequently, Jehoshaphat entered into an alliance with Jehoram, the second son of Ahab, against the Moabites. The combined army of the two kings was joined by the Edomites, who, doubtless, were unfriendly to the Moabites, as being the conquerors and possessors of a part of their country. The combined army, through the special interposition of heaven, entirely discomfited the Moabites. (2 Kings iii. 1—27.) Subsequently, the Moabites, Ammonites, and Edomites confederated, and came up against Jehoshaphat to battle. But the Ammonites and Moabites fell out with the Edomites, of whom they made an utter slaughter; and afterwards they had a quarrel among themselves, in consequence of which they destroyed each other. The Hebrews took their spoils, returned home, and kept a day of thanksgiving for the signal deliverance which they had experienced. (1 Kings xxii. 1—50; 2 Kings i. 17; iii. 1—27; 2 Chron. xvii.—xxi.) In Matt. i. 8, he is called "Josaphat." 2. The historiographer of David. (2 Sam. viii. 16; xx. 24.) 3. One of Solomon's principal officers. (1 Kings iv. 17.) 4. The father of Jehu, king of Israel. (2 Kings ix. 2, 14.)

JEHOASHAPHAT, VALLEY OF. The deep valley running north and south between Jerusalem and the Mount of Olivies. The brook Kidron flows through it; but it is only mentioned in the Scriptures as the "Valley" or "brook Kidron." In some parts, the valley is tilled, and has gardens and plantations of olive, fig, and other fruit trees. The gardens furnish vegetables for the city. The head of the valley, on both sides, has many excavated tombs. The reference in Joel iii. 2, 12, to the "Valley of Jehoshaphat," in which God will judge the heathen for their oppression of the Jews, is merely a metaphorical allusion to the signification of the name—Jehoshaphat = Jehovah judgeth.—See Kidron.

JEHOSEBEA = whose oath is Jehovah. The daughter of king Joram, and wife of Jehoiada the priest. In 2 Chron. xxii. 11, she is called "Jehoshabeath." (2 Kings xi. 1—8.)

JEHOASHUA.—See Joshua.

JEHOVAH = the Exister. The most significant name of the eternal and self-existent God; perhaps ancienly pronounced Jahveh = He who causes existence. (Ex. vi. 2, 3.) The words "who is, and who was, and who is to come," are a periphrastic explanation of the word Jehovah = the Eternal, the Immutable. (Rev. i. 4, 8; Ex. iii. 18, 14; vi. 3; Gen. ii. 4.) The term
JEH

“Lord,” so frequently applied to Christ in the new Testament, is generally synonymous with “Jehovah” in the old Testament. (Ps. cii. 25–27; Heb. 1.10–12; xiii. 8; Rev. i. 4–8.) “Jah,” is a poetic form abbreviated from “Jehovah.” (Ps. lxviii. 4; iv. 3.) The later Hebrews scrupled to pronounce this ineffable name; hence, in the sacred text, wherever “Jehovah” was written, they substituted for it in reading, or pronounced for it the word “Adonai” = Lord. (2 Sam. vii. 18, 19; Isa. 1. 4; Jer. xxxii. 17.) The Hebrew name “Jehovah” is generally rendered by the word “Lord.”

JEHOVAH-JIREH.—See Moriah.

JEHOVAH-NISSI = Jehovah my standard. The name of an altar built by Moses. (Ex. xvii. 15.)

JEHOVAH-SHALOM = Jehovah pacific. The name of an altar built by Gideon. (Judg. vi. 24.)

JEHOVAH-SHAMMAH = Jehovah is there. The name of Ezekiel’s prophetic city. (Ezek. xlviii. 35. margin.)

JEHOVAH-TSIDKENU = Jehovah our Righteousness. A name given to the Messiah. (Jer. xxiii. 6. margin.) So the Rabbins constantly attributed the name Jehovah, in this passage, to the Messiah. In order to evade the argument for the Deity of Christ, which is derived from the application of the name Jehovah to the Messiah, in this passage, we are told the same title is applied to the city Jerusalem, in the parallel passage. (Jer. xxxiii. 16.) But the latter passage correctly translated stands thus: “And this is He who shall call to her, Jehovah our Righteousness,” i.e. Christ. And so the Apostle says, “He is made Righteousness unto us.” (1 Cor. i. 30; Rom. x. 4.)

JEHOZABAD = whom Jehovah bestows. 1. The second son of Obededom. (1 Chron. xxvi. 4.) 2. One of the assassins of Joash, king of Judah. (2 Kings xii. 21.) 3. One of Jehoshaphat’s officers. (2 Chron. xvii. 18.)

JEHOZADAK = whom Jehovah makes just. The son and successor of Seraijah, the high priest of the Hebrews. He appears to have exercised the sacred functions when Judah went into captivity, and himself to have been one of the exiles. (1 Chron. vi. 15.) He is also called “Jozadak,” (Ezra iii. 2, 8; v. 2.) and “Josedech.” (Hag. i. 12, 14; ii. 2, 4.)

JEHU = Jehovah is He. 1. The son of Jehoshaphat, and grandson of Nimshi, the commander-in-chief of the Israelitish army. While Jehu was with the army at Ramoth Gilead, he was anointed king over Israel, in accordance with an ancient command from Jehovah. (1 Kings xix. 16, 17.) Having been proclaimed king in the presence of the whole army, he proceeded towards Jezreel, and executed the predicted judgments upon the house of Ahab. He slew Joram, the reigning king, and mortally wounded Ahaziah, king of Judah, who was with him. (1 Kings xxii. 17–24.) Jehu then entered Jezreel, and had Jezebel thrown out of the window of the palace, and her body was trodden under foot. Jehu then secured possession of Samaria, the capital of the kingdom; and slew all that remained unto Ahab, till he had extirpated him, according to the word of the Lord. (2 Kings x. 1–17.) He then, at a great festival, exterminated all the idolatrous priests and prophets of Baal, as traitors to king Jehovah, and turned the temple of Baal into a drangthouse. (1 Kings x. 18–23.) For his services he received a Divine promise, that his descendants, for four generations, should possess the throne. Jehu, himself, was a decisive, terrible, and ambitious man. He erred in allowing the golden calves at Dan and Bethel to remain. He reigned twenty-eight years. (2 Kings x. 29–36.) The name of Jehu occurs on the black obelisk, in the British Museum, “Yahu, the son of Khumri,” i.e. Jehu, the successor of Oziri, the founder of Samaria. (1 Kings xviii. 16.) 2. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. ii. 38.) 3. A descendant of Simeon. (1 Chron. iv. 35.) 4. One of David’s distinguished officers. (1 Chron. xii. 3.) 5. The son of Hanani, a prophet in Samaria. (1 Kings xvi. 1—12, 2 Chron. xix. 1—3.) He wrote the annals of Jehoshaphat. (2 Chron. xx. 34.)

JEHUBBAH = whom Jehovah hides. A descendant of Asher. (1 Chron. vii. 34.)

JEHUCAL = potent. The son of Shelemiah; (Jer. xxxvii. 3;) also called “Jucal.” (Jer. xxxviii. 1.)

JEHUD = celebrated. A town of the Danites. (Josh. xix. 43.) Apparently the village el-Yehudiyeh.

JEHUDI = celebrated. The grandson of Shelemiah. (Jer. xxxvi. 14, 21, 23.)

JEHUDIJAH.—See HODIAH. JEHUSH = He hastens. A descendant of king Saul. (1 Chron. viii. 39.)

JEIEL = treasurer of God. 1. One of the temple musicians; (1 Chron. xvi. 5;) apparently called “Jehiah.” (1 Chron. xv. 24.) 2. A prince of Reuben. (1 Chron. v. 7.) 3. A scribe in the time of king Uzziah. (2 Chron. xxvi. 11.) 4. A descendant of Adoni-kam. (Ezra viii. 13.) 5. A son of Nebo. (Ezra x. 43.) 6. The name of four Levites. (1 Chron. xvi. 6; 2 Chron. xx. 14; xxix. 13; xxxv, 9.)

JEKABZEEL =which God gathers. A place in the southern part of Judah; (Neh. xi. 25;) also called “Kabzeel” = God’s gathering. (Josh. xv. 21; 2 Sam. xxiii. 20.)

JEKAMEAM = who gathers the people. A chief of the Levites. (1 Chron. xxiii. 10; xxiv. 23.)

JEKAMIAH = whom Jehovah gathers. 1. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. ii. 41.) 2. See JECAMIAH.

JEKUTHIEL = fear of God. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 18.)

JEMIMA = beautiful as the day. The name of one of Job’s daughters. (Job xii. 14.)

JEMUEL = day of God. A son of Simeon; (Gen. xlvi. 10; Ex. vi. 15;) also called “Nemuel,” and his posterity “Nemuelites.” (Num. xxvi. 12.)

JEPHTHAH = he sets free, or opener. The ninth judge or regent of the Hebrews. He was the son of Gilead by a concubine; and being banished from his father’s house, by his brothers, he withdrew to the land of Tob, not far from Gilead. Here his daring character had free scope, and he speedily became the head of a strong marauding party of brave but desperate men. When the war broke out between the Hebrews and the Ammonites, the Hebrews sent a delegation to seek his aid; and though he objected at first, on account of the treatment he had formerly received, at which the elders had connived, yet, upon their solemn covenant to regard him as their leader, in case they succeeded, he took the command of their army. He entered into preliminary negotiations with the Ammonites, in which the great question of the right to the country was discussed with a degree of diplomatic consideration for which we are scarcely prepared. But every attempt at conciliation failed: the two armies met; the Ammonites were defeated with great loss of life, and their country secured by the Hebrews. The Ephraimites, who regarded it as an insult, that they should not be called to assist, stirred up a civil war, which terminated very disastrously to themselves. On the eve of the battle with the Ammonites, Jephthah vowed, that if he obtained the victory, he would devote to God whoever should come forth from his house to meet him on his return home. This turned out to be his daughter, an only child, who welcomed his return with music and dancing. Jephthah was greatly afflicted by this occurrence; but his daughter cheerfully consented to the performance of his vow, which took place at the expiration of two months. We have no evidence that Jephthah slew his daughter and presented her as a sacrifice; nor that he redeemed her at a valuation, according to the law in Lev. xxvii. 2—12. The probability is that he devoted her to the service of the sanctuary, in accordance with a custom, not unknown among the Hebrews, for women of distinction to dedicate themselves, or to be dedicated to the Lord, to minister at the door of the tabernacle. (Ex. xxxviii. 8; Lev. xxvii. 1—8; Num. vi. 2; 1 Sam. ii. 22; Luke ii. 36, 37.) Annually the daughters of Israel went to the festival, at the tabernacle, "to celebrate the daughter of Jephthah the Gileadite." Jephthah judged the Hebrews six years. (Judg. x. 5—18; xi. 1—40; xii. 1—7; Heb. xi. 32.)—See Nazarites.

Jephunneh = for whom is prepared. 1. The father of Caleb. (Num. xiii. 6; xiv. 6—30.) 2. A descendant of Asher. (1 Chron. vii. 38.)

Jerah = moon. A people descended from Joktan, who gave name to a region of Arabia; (Gen. x. 26; 1 Chron. i. 20;) perhaps the moon coast, and moon mountain, near Hazaraveth.

Jerahmeel = whom God loveth. 1. A son of Hezron. (1 Chron. ii. 9, 25, 26, 42.) His descendants were called "Jerahmeelites." (1 Sam. xxvii. 10; xxx. 29.) 2. A Levite. (1 Chron. xxiv. 29.) 3. An officer in the court of Jehoiakim. (Jer. xxxvi. 24.)

Jered = descent. 1. The father of Enoch; (1 Chron. i. 2;) also written "Jared." (Gen. v. 15; Luke iii. 37.) 2. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 18.)

Jeremai = dwelling in heights. A son of Ashum. (Ezra x. 88.)

Jeremiah = whom Jehovah setteth up. 1. The distinguished prophet, son of Hilkiah, a priest of Anathoth. (Jer. i. 1—6.) He was called to assume the prophetic character when a youth, and on that account declined it; but God promised him grace and strength sufficient for his work. He prophesied under Josiah, Jehoiakim, Jehoiachin, and Zedekiah; and for some time during the exile. During the course of his prophecies, Jerusalem was in a distracted and deplorable condition, and the prophet was calumniated, imprisoned, and often in danger of death. Jeremiah expressly foretold that the captivity would endure for seventy years; he also predicted the return of the people to their own country. He appears to have stood high in the estimation of Nebuchadnezzar. (Jer. xxxix. 11—14.) Towards the close of his life, he was carried into Egypt against his will, by the Jews who remained in Judea after the murder of Gedaliah, where he probably died. Jeremiah is called "Jereym," (Matt. ii. 17,) and "Jeremias," (Matt. xvi. 14.) The name "Jereym," in Matt. xxvii. 9, 10, is probably an error of the transcribers for Zechariah. 2. The father of Hamutal. (2 Kings xxi. 31.) 3. A descendant of Manasseh. (1 Chron. v. 24.) 4. One who sealed the covenant with Nehemiah. (Neh. x. 2; xii. 1.) 5. Three of David's distinguished officers. (1 Chron. xii. 4, 10, 13.)

Jeremiah, Book of. This prophecy embraces a period of upwards of forty years, between A. D. 628 and A. D. 586. It relates to the judgments that were to come upon the people for their gross idolatry and corruption; to the restoration which awaited them, whenever they would repent of their sins, and forsake them; and to the glory which would arise on the church in future times. Melancholy, tender sensibility, and somewhat of the verbocity of grief, are the distinguishing characteristics of Jeremiah's style. The several prophecies may be arranged thus:—I. The Introduction, chap. i. II. Reproofs of the sins of the Jews, consisting of seven sections—a. chap. ii., b. iii.—vi., c. vii.—x., d. xi.—xiii., e. xiv.—xvii. 18, f. xviii. 19, 20, g. xxi.—xxiv. 18. A general review of the heathen nations, and also of the people of Israel, consisting of two sections—a. xlvi.—xlix., which may have been transposed, b. xxxv., and an historical appendix in three sections—a. xxvi.
b. xxvii. c. xxviii. xxix. IV. Two sections picturing the hopes of brighter times—c. xxx. xxxi. b. xxviii. xxxiii., to which is added an historical appendix in three sections—c. xxxiv. I—7. b. xxxiv. 8—22. c. xxxv. V. The conclusion, in two sections—c. xxxvi. b. xiv. Added some time afterwards—c. xxxvii—xxxix. b. xl.—xlii. c. xliv. 18—26. The fifty-second chapter of Jeremiah is nearly the same with 2 Kings xxiv. 18—xxv. 30. Both were mainly drawn from the same sources. The order of the prophecies of Jeremiah, from chap. xxi. 15, to the end of the book, is different in the Septuagint version from that of the Hebrew text; for those prophecies which, in the Hebrew, occupy the last place—xxvi.—li.—are found in the Greek translation after chap. xxv. 14, and in a different order.

JEREMOTH = heights. 1. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 14.) 2. A son of Elam. (Ezra x. 36.) 3. A son of Zattu. (Ezra x. 27.) 4. A Levite; (1 Chron. xxii. 23;) also called “Jerimoth.” (1 Chron. xxiv. 30.) 5. A singer in the temple service; (1 Chron. xxv. 32;) also called “Jerimoth.” (1 Chron. xxv. 4.)

JERIAH = founded of Jehovah. One of the Levites; (1 Chron. xxiii. 19; xxiv. 23;) also called “Jerijah.” (1 Chron. xxvi. 31.)

JERIBAI = adverse. One of David’s distinguished officers. (1 Chron. xi. 46.)

JERICHO = place of fragrance. A city of Benjamin, situated in a fertile region, near the Jordan and Dead sea. (Josh. ii. 1—3; 1 Kings xvi. 34.) It was also called the “City of Palm-trees.” (Deut. xxxiv. 3; Judg. i. 16.) As Jericho was the first city that was taken, on the west of the Jordan, the herem, or ban, was laid on all the property in it. Joshua burned the city with fire, and pronounced a solemn curse upon the person who, at any succeeding period, should build its walls, or set up its gates; (Josh. iv. 18;) which was executed upon Hiel, 520 years afterward. (1 Kings xvi. 33, 34.) Previous to this, however, the city had been rebuilt, but not upon its ancient foundations. (Judg. iii. 18; 2 Sam. x. 5; 2 Kings ii. 4, 5.) The more ancient city was probably in the neighbourhood of the beautiful fountain, which is apparently the same whose waters Edisha healed. (2 Kings ii. 18—22.) The later Jericho appears to have occupied the site of the miserable and filthy village, Riha, nearly two miles from the fountain. (Ezra ii. 34; Neh. iii. 2; Matt. xix. 1; xx. 29—34; Mark x. 1, 46, 52; Luke xviii. 35—48; xix. 1—10. Riha is situated in the midst of a rich plain, susceptible of easy tillage and abundant irrigation, with a climate to produce anything. Yet it lies almost desert; and one solitary palm-tree now timidly rears its head, where once stood the renowned “City of Palm-trees.” The inhabitants are a feeble and licentious race. The road between Jerusalem and Jericho still retains its ancient character for scenes of assault and robbery. (Luke x. 30.)

JEBIEL = founded of God. A descendant of Issachar. (1 Chron. vii. 2.)

JERIH—See JERIAH.

JERIOTH = curtains. One of the wives of Caleb. (1 Chron. ii. 18.)

JEROBOAM = whose people is many. 1. The son of Nebat, an Ephraimite, and the first king of Israel or the ten tribes; he reigned twenty-two years, from 975 to 954 B.C. He is distinguished as the man “who made Israel to sin.” Jeroboam having received from the prophet an intimation that the kingdom of Solomon was to be divided, probably took some means to bring about the event; and was compelled to flee to Egypt. (1 Kings xi. 26—40.) When Solomon died, the ten tribes recalled Jeroboam; and he appears to have headed the deputation which waited on Rehoboam, the heir to the throne, with a demand for securities for the rights which the measures of the late king had compromised. The answer of Rehoboam rendered a revolution inevitable; and the ten tribes at once elected Jeroboam for their sovereign.

(1 Kings xi. 37, 38.) Jeroboam, as king of Israel, fixed his residence at Shechem; but fearing that if the people went to Jerusalem to the festivals, they would return to their allegiance to the house of David, he set up two gilded calves, at Dan and Bethel, in imitation of the Apis and Mnevis of the Egyptians. Temples were built, and altars erected, for these images, and priests were appointed from all the tribes without distinction; and he appointed the festivals to be held a month later than they had hitherto been. The priests and Levites, and many citizens also, who were displeased with these innovations on their fundamental laws, retired to the kingdom of Judah. During Jeroboam's life, there were almost unceasing wars between him and the house of David. On account of his idolatrous measures, it was decreed that the throne should not long continue in his family. (1 Kings xii. 23, 33; xiii. 1—34; xiv. 1—36; 2 Chron. xi. 13—17.) 2. The son of Joash, king of Israel. He reigned forty-one years; and followed the former Jeroboam in the idolatry of the calves. Jehovah, however, by him, according to the prediction of the prophet Jonah, raised the kingdom of the ten tribes to its greatest splendour; and restored the empire to its ancient boundaries. (2 Kings xiii. 15; xiv. 16—29.)

JEROHAM = he is beloved. 1. The father of Elkanah. (1 Sam. i. 1.) 2. The father of Adaiah. (1 Chron. ix. 12.) 3. The father of Azareel. (1 Chron. xxvii. 22.) 4. The father of Azariah. (2 Chron. xxiii. 1.) 5. The father of Adaiah. (Neh. xi. 12.) governing, which was the throne of Jehovah, from Kirjath-jeearim to Jerusalem; and the city became the capital of the invisible King, "the City of God." (Ps. xlvii. 4; lxxviii. 1-3; I Kings xi. 36.) Here, on Mount Moriah, Solomon erected the magnificent temple, the palace of Jehovah, as the sanctuary for the whole Hebrew nation; (2 Chron. iii. 1;) and in his reign the city became renowned for its commercial enterprise, and its boundless wealth. (1 Kings xiii. 10-21; xiv. 14-29; Ps. lvi. 6; xxv. 1; lxxiv. 2.) After the revolt of the ten tribes from the house of David, Jerusalem became the capital of the kings of Judah only. During the government of the kings, the "Holy City" underwent various revolutions. (Dan. ix. 24.) In the reign of Rehoboam the city was taken and pillaged by Shishak, king of Egypt. (2 Chron. xiii. 9.) Under Amaziah, it was pillaged by Joash, king of Israel. (2 Kings xiv. 13; 2 Chron. xxv. 23, 24.) Uzziah strengthened the city by the erection of towers and fortifications; (2 Chron. xxvi. 9;) and Hezekiah considerably improved Jerusalem, and furnished it with an ample supply of water, by a subterranean aqueduct. (2 Kings xx. 20; 2 Chron. xxxii. 30.) Jerusalem was probably taken by the Assyrians, in the reign of Manasseh; (2 Chron. xxxiii. 11;) after his liberation, Manasseh strengthened and fortified the city. (2 Chron. xxxiii. 12-16.) Pharaoh-Necho, king of Egypt, appears to have entered Jerusalem, when he made Jehoiakim king. (2 Chron. xxxvi. 3, 4.) Jerusalem was several times ravaged by Nebuchadnezzar; and finally, after a siege of three years, he destroyed the city and the temple with fire. (2 Kings xxiv. 1-11; xxv. 1-10; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 6-21.) After the return from exile, Jerusalem was rebuilt by Jeshua and Zerubbabel; (Ezra i. 2-11; iii. 2-12; iv. 24;) and the temple was dedicated with great joy. (Ezra vi. 15-19.) At a later period, Nehemiah completed the rebuilding of the city and its wall; and in some degree restored Jerusalem to its former importance. (Neh. i.-vi. vii. 4; xi. 1-4; Zech. ix. 9; Hag. ii. 6, 7.) After the reduction of Gaza, n.c. 322; Alexander the Great visited Jerusalem; and attended by the high priest Judas, he went to the temple and offered sacrifices. In n.c. 224, Ptolemy, king of Egypt, plundered Jerusalem; and in a few years afterwards Palestine was annexed to Egypt. In n.c. 245, Ptolemy Euergetes visited the city, offered sacrifices, and made splendid presents to the temple. Some years afterwards, Palestine made common cause with the Syrians; and Antiochus the Great visited Jerusalem, and ordered the out-works of the temple to be completed. In n.c. 167, Antiochus Epiphanes plundered Jerusalem, and set up a statue of Jupiter in the temple. (Dan. viii. 9-14.) This led to the revolt of the Maccabees, who, after an arduous and sanguinary struggle, obtained possession of the city, and repaired and beautified the temple, n.c. 163. (Dan. xii. 7-11.) Ultimately the Maccabean princes expelled the Syrians from Jerusalem. In n.c. 63, Jerusalem was taken by Pompey, and the walls thrown down; and Judea fell under the dominion of the Romans. In the year n.c. 51, Crassus pillaged the temple. And a few years afterwards Antipater, the father of Herod the Great, rebuilt the walls of the city; and at a later period Herod the Great expended large sums in its embellishment. At length Jerusalem was overthrown by the Romans, under Titus, a.d. 70. (Dan. ix. 27; Matt. xxiv. 1-15; Mark xiii. 1-14.) When Jerusalem was taken, Vespasian struck medals and coins, with a device commemorative of the event. The woodcut is a fac-simile of one, having on the obverse the head of the emperor Vespasian; and on the reverse, the captive "daughter of Zion," weeping beneath the palm tree. (Isa. iii. 20; Iam. ii. 10.) The emperor Hadrian, about A.D. 130, determined upon the rebuilding of Jerusalem as a fortified place; when the Jews broke out into open revolt, under the mysterious Barcoochus, in A.D. 132. When this final tragedy was brought to a close, in A.D. 135, the Jews were forbidden even to approach their Holy City. Hadrian resumed the work of rebuilding the city; and the new Roman colony, established upon the site of the former Jerusalem, received the names of Colonia Elia Capitolina. The place became to all intents a Roman and pagan city; and was henceforth known chiefly as Elia, even so late as A.D. 536. In the days of Constantine the Jews were first allowed again to approach the Holy City. About A.D. 326, Helena, the mother of the emperor, repaired in person to Palestine, to visit the holy places. Among the splendid churches she caused to be erected was that of the Holy Sepulchre, which could not have been upon the site of our Lord's crucifixion and tomb; inasmuch as He was crucified without the gate of the city. About A.D. 362, the emperor Julian began to rebuild the city; but the attempt, according to contemporary writers, was rendered abortive by supernatural hindrances.
JER

Still Jerusalem was visited by devotees from every part of the world. Justinian erected a church in the city, apparently the edifice now known as the mosque of el-Aksa, on the southern part of the site of the temple. Jerusalem had now become the Holy City of the Christian world. However, in A.D. 614, the Persians under Chosroes IL invaded the Holy City, and took it by storm. But the emperor Heraclius finally routed the Persians, and the patriarch and other captives were restored to Jerusalem after fourteen years of exile. But Jerusalem was doomed to be subjected to the more galling and permanent bondage of the followers of Muhammad; and in A.D. 636, the troops of the Khalif Omar appeared before Jerusalem. The city, after a long siege, surrendered to Omar; and he erected a mosque upon the site of the ancient Jewish temple, which is usually regarded as that at present existing. Multitudes of pilgrims, of all ranks and classes, still flocked to the Holy City. But the establishment of the Seljuk kingdom of Syria, in A.D. 1078, by Tutush, the Turkish or Turkman leader, rendered the condition of the Christians and pilgrims in Jerusalem still more deplorable. Peter the Hermit, who had repaired as a pilgrim to Jerusalem, in A.D. 1096-97, beheld the calamities with which the native Christians and pilgrims were overwhelmed by the Muslims, and his spirit was roused to vengeance. He went forth to waken the energies of Europe in behalf of their suffering fellow Christians; and in A.D. 1099, the host of the crusaders appeared before the walls of Jerusalem, the Holy City was taken by storm, and Godfrey of Bouillon was elected king. The Christians retained possession of Jerusalem eighty-eight years. But in A.D. 1187, the Egyptian Sultan, Saladin, became master of Jerusalem; and the order of things was again reversed. However, in A.D. 1229, Jerusalem was again delivered over to the Christians.

After some other changes, about A.D. 1244, the city reverted for the last time into the hands of its Mohammedan masters. In A.D. 1517, Jerusalem with the rest of Syria and Egypt passed under the sway of the Ottoman Sultan, Selim I. From that time until our own days, Palestine and Syria have continued to form part and parcel of the Ottoman empire. In A.D. 1832, Syria became subject to Muhammad Ali, the late Pasha of Egypt; and the Holy City opened its gates to the victor without a siege. But in A.D. 1940, the powers of Europe determined to take into their own hands the support of the crumbling empire of the Sultan; Muhammad Ali withdrew his armies from the country; the British fleet retired from the coast; and Syria and Palestine returned beneath the nominal sway of the Sultan.

The houses of Jerusalem are substantially built of the limestone of which the whole of this part of Palestine is composed; but a large number of them are in a dilapidated and ruinous state. The principal streets of the city run nearly at right angles to each other; they are narrow and badly paved, but the steepness of the ground contributes to keep them cleaner than in most Oriental cities. Jerusalem is walled; but at present has only four open gates, one on each of the four sides of the city. The whole circumference of the city, according to Dr. Robinson's measurement, is about 80 yards less than 2½ English miles. The inhabitants, consisting of Muhammadans, Jews, and Christians, dwell in separate quarters of the city; and the total population may be about 12,000 souls. The Arabic is the vernacular language in Jerusalem, as well as throughout Syria and Egypt. A considerable body of troops usually lie in garrison in Jerusalem. The appointed guardians of the public peace are a band of undisciplined, ill-paid, and uncontrolled miscreants, Albanian Muslems or apostate Christians, who are the most dangerous part of the population. Jerusalem has few manufactures; and no exports, except what is carried away by the pilgrims. There are several establishments for the manufacture of soap; also a large tannery for leather. The bazaars, situated in the middle of the city, are not well furnished even for an Oriental city. The markets are supplied by the peasants from the neighbouring villages. The masses of the people seem to be without any regular employment; a considerable number, especially of the Jews, professedly live on charity. From the entire area of the Harem, the site of the ancient temple, now occupied by the mosques of Omar and el-Aksa, consecrated to Muhammadan worship, all Christians are rigorously excluded. In a few instances, by personal favour, travellers have obtained access to the sacred edifices, and explored the subterranean vaults, which occupy a considerable portion of the Harem. The Christian sects, consisting of Greeks, Latins, Armenians, and Copts, have each their own convents or monasteries in different parts of the city and its vicinity; and also their own chapels in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre. The three former have also convents or dwellings within the walls of the Church, for the monks who are shut up here to perform the regular offices day and night. Here are also niches with altars for the Abyssinians, Jacobites, Nestorians, Maronites, and other sects, whose service is performed in these chapels only occasionally. It is well known that a deep hatred exists among all those possessors of the Holy Sepulchre towards each other; especially is this the case between the Greeks and the Latins.

The American Board of Missions has paid considerable attention to Jerusalem. The object of the Missionaries is not to draw off members of the Oriental churches to Protestantism; but to awaken them to a knowledge and belief of the gospel truth, in the purity and simplicity of its original Scriptural form.

Since the establishment of the Protestant bishopric at Jerusalem, by the English and Prussian governments, a neat church has been erected near the northern brow of Zion. The excavations which were found necessary in laying the foundation of the Anglican church, show on what a vast accumulation of rubbish even the higher parts of the modern city have been built. At the depth of thirty or forty feet below the surface, bevelled stones and ornamented capitals were found. And, on sinking a shaft, at the depth of more than twenty feet, a vaulted chamber, with steps, of fine masonry, was found, leading into an immense conduit, partly hewn out of the solid rock, and partly solidly built in even courses. The city retains few traces of her ancient grandeur. Near the base of the western wall, around the area of the temple, may be seen immense stones, from twenty to thirty feet in length, and within the walls, beneath the platform of the temple, are immense crypts or broad-arched avenues, which evidently led up to the temple, which may have been the work of Solomon. But the glory of Jerusalem has long since departed. The metropolis of the Jewish commonwealth has sunk into a neglected capital of a petty Turkish province. And the gloomy silence and solitude of this devoted city, shows how fearfully, and almost to the letter, the “burden” of Jerusalem has been accomplished upon her. (Matt. xxiv. 1, 2.)

JERUSALEM, NEW. The symbolic name of the Christian church; also called “the Bride, the Lamb’s wife.” (Rev. xxi. 2-21; iii. 12.) The Apostle, from the summit of a high mountain, beheld, in a pictorial, symbol or scenic representation, a city resplendent with celestial brightness, which seemed to descend from the heavens to the earth. It was built upon terraces, one rising above another, each terrace having its distinct wall supporting or encircling it; and thus, although each wall was only 144 cubits = 252 feet high, the height of the whole city was equal to its diameter. This was stated to be a square of about 400 miles; or 12,000 stadia = about 1,600 miles in circumference,—of course a mystical number, denoting that the city was capable of holding almost countless myriads of inhabitants. In its general form, the symbolic city presents a striking resemblance to that of the new city in Ezek. xl.—xlviii. The pictorial symbol must be regarded as the representation not of a place or state, but of the church as a society, the “body of Christ.” (Eph. v. 23-30; Gal. iv. 26.) As Jerusalem and Zion are often used for the inhabitants and faithful worshippers, so the new Jerusalem is emblematical of the church of God, part on earth, and part in heaven. To suppose the invisible world to be exclusively referred to, would deprive the contrast between the Law and the Gospel economy, Sinai and Zion, of its appositeness and force. Moreover, the distinction between the general assembly of the enrolled citizens, and the “spirits of the just made perfect,” (Heb. xii. 22-24,) can be explained only by interpreting the former of the church militant, or the body of Christ on earth, and the latter of the church triumphant in heaven. And thus we see why the new Jerusalem was beheld, like Jacob’s ladder, extending from earth to heaven.

JERUSAH=possessed. The mother of Jotham, king of Judah; (2 Kings xv. 33;) also written “Jerushah.” (2 Chron. xxvii. 1.)

JESAJAH=help of Jehovah. 1. A son of Hananiah. (1 Chron. iii. 21.) 2. A descendant of Benjamin. (Neh. xi. 7.)

JESHANAH=old. A city in Ephraim or Samaria. (2 Chron. xiii. 19.)

JESHARELAH.—See Asarelah.

JESHEREAB=seat of one’s father. One of the Levites. (1 Chron. xxiv. 13.)

JESHER=uprightness. A son of Caleb. (1 Chron. ii. 18.)

JESHIMON=a waste, desert, or wilderness. In 1 Sam. xxii. 19, 24, this word is given as the name of a place, in the wilderness of Maon; but the term designates the “wilderness” itself; and so it is often rendered, as in the margin. (Ps. lixviii. 7; lxviii. 40; cvi. 14.)

JESHISHAI=son of an old man. A descendant of Gad. (1 Chron. v. 14.)
JESHOHAIAH = whom Jehovah bows down. A descendant of Simeon.
(1 Chron. iv. 36.)

JESHUA = Jehovah the salvation.
1. The son or grandson of Jehozadak or Josedech, and the first high-priest of the Jews after their return from the exile. (Neh. vii. 7; xii. 10; ii. 6; Ezra ii. 2; iii. 2; Neh. vii. 7.) He is also called "Joshua." (Hag. i. 1, 12; ii. 2, 4; Zech. iii. 1, 3, 6, 8, 9.)
2. The name of three Levites. (2 Chron. xxxi. 15; Ezra ii. 40; Neh. vii. 43; Ezra viii. 33; Neh. viii. 7; ix. 4, 5; x. 9; xii. 8, 24.) 8. One whose posterity returned from the exile. (Ezra ii. 6; Neh. iii. 19; vii. 11.) 4. A town or city of Judah. (Neh. xi. 26.)

JESHOVAH = Jehovah the salvation.
The chief of the ninth class in David’s division of the priests. (1 Chron. xxiv. 11.)

JESHRUN = the upright people.
A poetical name for the people of Israel, apparently expressive of affection and tenderness; (Deut. xxxii. 15; xxxiii. 5, 26;) also written "Jesurun." (Isa. xlv. 2.)

JESIAH = whom Jehovah lendseth.
One who went over to David at Ziklag. (1 Chron. xii. 6.)

JESIMIEL = desolation of God. A descendant of Simeon. (1 Chr. iv. 36.)

JESSE = firm, strong. A shepherd of Bethlehem, and the father of King David. He was a descendant of Obed, the son of Boaz and Ruth. (Ruth iv. 17, 22.) He was evidently a person of note and substance. (1 Sam. vii. 10; xxii. 3; xx. 27, 30, 31; xxii. 7, 8; 2 Sam. xx. 1; 1 Kings xii. 16.) The "stem of Jesse" designates the family of David; (Isa. xi. 1;) and the "root," i.e. sprout or scion, of Jesse, the Messiah. (Isa. xi. 10; Rev. v. 5; xxii. 16.)

JESUI = even, level. A son of Asher; his descendants were called "Jesuites." (Num. xxvi. 44.) He is also called "Iaui;" (Gen. xlvii. 17;) and "Ishuai." (1 Chron. vii. 30.)

JESUS = Jehovah the salvation. 1. This name is the Greek form of the Hebrew Jehoshua or Joshua, and is used as the ordinary and personal designation of the incarnate God and Saviour of mankind. (Num. xiii. 16; xiv. 30; Luke ii. 31; Matt. i. 20, 21.) Though this name may not of itself be evidence of the Divinity of Him who bears it; yet when, as in this case, He who bears a name so associated with the dread name of Jehovah, by express Divine appointment is shown, "by many infallible proofs" to be indeed the promised Messiah, we cannot but perceive in it a corroboration of the host of arguments which lead to the conclusion that He who "according to the flesh" was the Son of David, "according to the Spirit of Holiness," was the "Son of God."

"God over all, blessed for ever." (Rom. i. 3, 4; ix. 5.) The fact of Christ’s divinity is often developed, to the practised eye, where a superintending reader would not even suspect it. In Rev. ii. 17, a promise is made to him that overcometh, that he shall wear a diadem like that of the high-priest, on the front of which is a precious stone, and in this "a name is written, which no man knoweth, save him that receiveth it." Is not this the name of Jesus, associated with the awful, the peculiar, the incommunicable name of Jehovah? (Rev. iii. 12; xiii. 12, 13.) So Paul seems to have understood, when he says that to Christ is given "a name that is above every name." (Phil. ii. 9, 10.) So also it is said, "that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth," i.e. universal homage shall be paid to Him who is invested with supreme dignity and authority as Lord of all. The evidence of the doctrine of Christ’s supremacy, although presented with all the power with which reason and learning, and eloquence can enforce it, will produce no real effect, unless the heart be influenced by the Spirit of God. Indeed, says the Apostle, "no man can say that Jesus is the Lord," i.e. the Christ,
The Messiah, Lord and God, "but by the Holy Ghost." Flesh and blood cannot reveal this truth to any man. It must, as it was to Peter, be revealed by our Father who is in heaven. (1 Cor. xii. 3; Phil. ii. 11; Matt. xvi. 16, 17; John xx. 28.) The cordial belief, under the influence of the Holy Ghost, that Christ was the Son of the living God, was to embrace the entire Gospel scheme of mercy and salvation, of which that doctrine is not only the foundation, but an entire summary. This is the testimony of Jesus Christ, whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God;" who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God? 2. The Greek form of the name of Joshua, the illustrious successor of Moses. (Acts vii. 45; Heb. iv. 8.) 3. A fellow-labourer of Paul; he is surnamed "Justus." (Col. iv. 11.)

JETH, JETHAR (Ezra ii. 22), JETHAR. (Ezra vi. 25.) JETHAR, a Cord, rope. 1. Son of Gideon. (Judg. viii. 20.) 2. Two descendants of Judah. (1 Chron. ii. 32; iv. 17.) 8.—See JETHRO, ITHRA, and ITHRA.

JETHETH = pin, nail. An Edomitarian chief. (Gen. xxxvi. 40.)

JETHLAH = hanging, high. A place in the tribe of Dan. (Josh. xix. 42.)

JETHBO = excellence, pre-eminence. The son of Raguel the Midianite. He is also called "Hobab = beloved; and Jethro." (Ex. i. 1; Num. x. 29; Judg. iv. 11; Ex. iv. 18, margin.) He was a priest or prince of Midian, and the father-in-law of Moses. (Gen. xxv. 1, 2; Ex. xvii. 14—26.)

JETUR = an enclosure. A son of Ishmael. (Gen. xxxv. 15; 1 Chron. i. 31.) His descendants are also called "Jetur" (1 Chron. v. 19.)—See ISMAD.

JEUE, JEUEL = treasured of God. A descendant of Zerah. (1 Chron. ix. 6.)

JEUSH = to whom he hastens. 1. A son of Esau. (Gen. xxxvi. 8, 18.) 2. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. vii. 10.) 3. A son of Beoboam. (2 Chron. xi. 19.)

JEW, JEWZ = counsellor. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 10.)

JEWELS. The Hebrews, like the Orientals of the present day, were profuse in the use of jewels; and they were not confined to the females. (Gen. xxvii. 22, 53; Isa. iii. 18—24; lx. 10; Ex. xxv. 22; Num. xxxi. 50.) The Egyptians, and the Assyrians, at a very early period, were skilful in the manufacture of gold and silver ornaments, adorned with gems, such as chains, bracelets, ear-rings, nose-rings, rings, etc.; of which many specimens of exquisite workmanship, and of the most elegant forms, are to be found in the museums. Dr. Abbot possesses a necklace of Menai or Menea, perhaps the first Egyptian king; probably the oldest article of human manufacture which is now identified. It was not difficult for the Hebrews to borrow of their Egyptian neighbours "jewels of silver, and jewels of gold." (Ex. xii. 35; Ezek. xvi. 12; Hos. ii. 18.) In Prov. xxv. 15, knowledge or wisdom is called "a precious jewel." So also, the faithful servants of Jehovah are called his "jewels" or "special treasure." (Mal. iii. 17.)—See KINGS.

JEWRY.—See JUDEA.

JEWS. Properly the men of the tribe, country, or kingdom of Judah; in contradistinction from the succeeding ten tribes who retained the name of "Israelites." (2 Kings xvi. 6; xxxv. 25; Jer. xxxii. 12; xxxviii. 19; xl. 11; xii. 3; xiv. 1; lii. 28.) After the exile, the term "Jews" seems to have been applied to all the people without distinction; (Hag. i. 14; ii. 2; Est. iii. 4—6; Ezra iv. 12; v. 1, 5; Dan. iii. 8, 12; Neh. i. 2;) also to designate one of the two classes—Jews and Gentiles—into which the whole human family is frequently divided. (John iv. 9; Mat. i. 2; Acts ii. 5, 10; x. 22; xiv. 1; Rom. ii. 9, 10; 1 Cor. i. 23, 24.) After the exile, the Jews were subject to the Persian rule, until A. D. 332, when they were subjected JEW to the Greeks. They also passed to the rule of the Egyptians and the Syrians, until they established their independence under the Maccabees. They became subject to the Romans, A.D. 63; and, about A.D. 6, their country was reduced to the rank of a Roman province. In the war with the Romans, A.D. 70, there perished, perhaps not less than 1,100,000 persons; while 87,000 more were made captives. This was the "end of the world," or termination of the Jewish polity, predicted by our Lord. (Matt. xxiv. 1—28; Luke xvi. 20; xix. 11; xxxi. 20.) The subsequent revolt of the Jews, under Bar Cochba, the pseudo-Messiah, terminated, under Hadrian, A.D. 135, in the complete overthrow of the Jewish people and dispensation; when many thousands of the captives were sold as slaves and utterly driven out from the land of their fathers. This final calamity was also predicted by our Lord. (Matt. xxiv. 29—42; Luke xxi. 25—36.) From the final overthrow of Jerusalem to the present day, the history of the Jews is little else than a record of persecutions; in which sovereigns and their subjects, Pagans, Christians, and Mohammedans, opposed to each other in everything else, have formed a common design to ruin this people, without success. Their expulsion from the great cities of the kingdom has only scattered them through almost every part of the civilized world. The number of Jews is ordinarily estimated at about six millions. Of these, there are reckoned in Europe, 2,000,000; Asia, 700,000; Africa, 500,000; the United States, from 6,000 to 15,000. Banking, commerce, brokerage, and callings of the lowest order, are those chiefly followed by the Jews. They everywhere maintain observances peculiar to themselves, such as circumcision during infancy; also the observance of a sabbath, but not the same day of the week as that of other nations. They are also divided into various sects; some of which are attached to the observances enjoined in the Talmud; others, as the Caraites, profess to adhere solely to the Scriptures. Most of the Jews now resident in Palestine are such as have come up to the land of their fathers, in order to spend the remainder of their lives and die in one of the four holy places—Jerusalem, Hebron, Tiberias, or Safed. Many of them are poor, and are mainly supported by money collected for them by their emissaries in different countries. The efforts of the English Mission to the Jews have as yet been attended with very slight success; the recently erected Jewish-Christian church in Jerusalem may contribute to the influence of the Mission. Upon the whole, the Jews resident in the East are now far less favourably situated than their brethren in Europe. Though the measures which have of late been proposed in the imperial parliament for the entire removal of their civil disabilities have been unsuccessful, the English Jews are now, in the ordinary business of life, in no manner distinguished from the rest of the community. With respect to the future condition of the Jews, we may observe, that most of the prophetical passages of Scripture generally quoted in support of their literal restoration to Palestine, the land of their fathers, and the re-establishment of their national polity, had their absolute accomplishment in their return from the Assyrian and Babylonian exile; while other portions of prophecy invested with a Jewish drapery referred exclusively to the Messiah's advent among men, and of the results of his dispensation among all nations through earth's rolling ages. Undoubtedly the Jews will be converted to Christ, and, in common with all other nations, partake in the blessings of His reign on earth and in heaven, leaving their outward earthly condition to be determined by circumstances, and by JEZ

JEZANIAH.—See JAAZANIAH.

JEEZEBEL = non-cathed, chaste, Isabella. 1. The daughter of Ethbaal, king of Tyre, and wife of Ahab, king of Israel, infamous for her idolatry and cruel persecution of the prophets of Jehovah. She established the worship of Baal and other idols in the kingdom of Israel. (1 Kings xviii. 3—19.) When Jezebel planned and perpetrated the murder of Naboth, she exhibited her remarkable influence over the imbecile Ahab, and over the leading men in the kingdom. (1 Kings ii. 1—13.) Indeed, her character throughout exhibits her as a remarkably clever and decisive, but impious woman. For even after Ahab's death she maintained her ascendancy over her son Joram. The doom of this impious queen was predicted by the prophet Elijah, and was in due time visited upon her to the very letter. (2 Kings ix. 30, 37.) 2. A symbolic name of a woman in the church at Thyatira, who corrupted the people, so called in allusion to Ahab's idolatrous wife. (Rev. ii. 20—24.)

JEZER = formation, imagination. A son of Naphtali. (Gen. xlvii. 24.) His descendants were called "Jezreites." (Num. xxxvi. 49.)

JEZIAH = whom Jehovah sprinkles. A son of Parosh. ( Ezra x. 25.)

JEZIEL = assembly of God. One of David's distinguished officers. (1 Chron. xii. 3.)

JEZILIAH = whom Jehovah draws out. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 18.)

JEZOAR = oil. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 7.)

JEZRAHIAH = whom Jehovah brings forth. A singer in the temple service. (Neh. xii. 42.)

JEZREEL = God hath planted.

1. A city in the tribe of Issachar; (Josh. ix. 18; xxi. 1, 2;) in which Ahab and Jezebel had a palace. (1 Kings xviii. 45, 46; 2 Kings ix. 14—37; x. 1—11; Hos. i. 4, 11; ii. 22.) The city lay in the midst of the great plain of Jezreel, on the brow of the descent of the middle arm which runs down to the Jordan valley. It is now a village; its few inhabitants, and but few marks of antiquity, is called by the Arabs Zer'in. The beautiful fountain Ain Jalud, on the east of Zer'in, is the fountain of the ancient Jezreel. (1 Sam. xxix. 1.) 2. A town in the mountains of Judah. (Josh. xv. 56.) 3. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 3.) 4. The name given by the prophet Hosea to his eldest son. (Hos. i. 4.)

JEZREEL, VALLEY OF. The extensive plain of Esdrelon or Jezreel, now known among the Arabs as Merj Ibn 'Amir, may be said to lie in the form of a triangle, including some fifteen miles of fertile, though now neglected soil; having yellow fields of grain, with green patches of cotton and millet interspersed, checkering the landscape like a carpet. Three great arms go from the plain towards the east. The lower broad middle arm, which runs down eastwards to the Jordan valley, between the mountains of Gilboa and the modern little Hermon, seems to have been the "valley of Jezreel;" (Josh. xvii. 16;) and was the scene of the conflict of Gideon and the Midianites; and of Saul and the Philistines. On the rich and fertile plain of Jezreel, Deborah and Barak discomfited the host of Sisera; (Judg. iv. 12—15; vii. 9—25; Sam. xxix. 1; xxxi. 1—13.) There also was the conflict between the Israelites and the Syrians; and of Josiah and the Egyptians. (1 Kings xx. 26—30; 2 Kings xxiii. 29, 30; 2 Chron. xxxv. 20—24.) It has, in fact, been a chosen place for encampment in every contest carried on in the Holy Land, from the earliest times, with warriors out of every nation; even to Napoleon Bonaparte, who, with a comparatively small force, here routed the whole Turkish army, on the 16th of April, 1799.

JISAM = pleasant. A descendant of Issachar. (1 Chron. vii. 2.)

JIDLAPH = tearful. A son of Nahor. (Gen. xxii. 22.)

JINNAH = good fortune. A son of Asher; (Gen. xiii. 17;) also written "Jinna; " (Num. xxxvi. 44;) and "Imnah." (1 Chron. vii. 30.) His descendants were called "Jimmites." (Num. xxxvi. 44.)

JIPHTAH = opens, or sets free. A place in the tribe of Judah. (Josh. xv. 43.)

JIPHTHAH-EL = which God opens. A valley in the territory of Zebulun and Asher; (Josh. xix. 14, 27;) now called Wady Jiddin.

JOAB = whose father is Jehovah.
1. The son of Zeruiah, and nephew of David; and commander-in-chief of the army. He was an accomplished warrior, but a most unscrupulous man. (1 Chron. ii. 16; xi. 6.) He treacherously assassinated Abner. (2 Sam. ii. 23; iii. 27.) When Absalom rebelled, Joab adhered to the interests of David; and, contrary to express orders, he put Absalom to death. (2 Sam. xviii. 14.) Joab also assassinated Amasa, as he had done Abner. (2 Sam. xx. 10.) Joab combined in the plot to set Adonijah on the throne, in defiance of the will of David, who had, by Divine direction, resolved to make Solomon king. (1 Kings ii. 28.) After the death of David, Joab was slain at the altar, whither he had fled for protection; and was buried in his own domain in the wilderness. (2 Kings ii. 5—34.)

JOA = whose helper is Jehovah.
1. A son of Asaph, and the historiographer of Hezekiah. (2 Kings xvii. 18; Is. xxxvi. 3.) 2. The son of Johanan, and the historiographer of Josiah. (2 Chron. xxxiv. 8.)
3. A descendant of Gershom. (1 Chron. vi. 21; 2 Chron. xxix. 12.) 4. A son of Obed-edom. (1 Chron. xxvi. 4.)

JOAH = whom Jehovah takes, or sustains. The father of Josiah the recorder. (2 Chron. xxxiv. 8.)

JOANNA = Jehovah given. 1. One of the ancestors of Jesus. (Luke iii. 27.) 2. The wife of Chuzu, steward of Herod Antipas. She followed Christ, and ministered to His wants. (Luke vii. 3; xxiv. 10.)

JOASH = whom Jehovah gives. 1. The son and successor of Amaziah, king of Judah. On the murder of his brethren by Athaliah, he was preserved by his aunt Jehosheba, the wife of Jehoiada the priest, who concealed him for six years in one of the apartments of the temple. When Joash was seven years of age, Jehoiada concerted a plan, with Azariah and others, to place young Joash upon the throne of his ancestors, and dethrone his grandmother, the wicked Athaliah; and the young king was crowned in the court of the temple with great solemnity. (2 Kings xi. 1—21.) Joash behaved himself well while Jehoiada lived, and was his guide; but no sooner was this good man removed, than he began to listen to the counsels of his wicked courtiers. Zechariah the priest, son of Jehoiada, warned him of his sin and danger; but as a reward of his fidelity, he was, by order of Joash, stoned to death, between the porch and the altar. After suffering a variety of injuries from the Syrians, and after being loaded with ignominia, Joash was murdered by his own servants, after a reign of forty-JOASH = to whom Jehorah hastens. 1. A descendant of Issachar. (1 Chron. viii. 8.) 2. The steward over king David’s oil-cellars. (1 Chron. xxviii. 23.)

JOATHAM.—See Jotham.

JOB = one persecuted, or the assailed. 1. An inhabitant of the land of Uz, in the north-eastern part of Arabia Deserta, between Idumæa, Palestine, and the Euphrates, distinguished for his wealth beyond “all the men of the East.” He is celebrated for his piety, and the constancy of his piety and virtue, under the heaviest calamities. (Job i. 1—22; ii. 1—13; Ezek. xiv. 14, 20; James v. 11.) As it is stated, that after his affliction “he lived an hundred and forty years,” (Job xlii. 16.) the supposition of the Septuagint is not an unreasonable one, that he was about seventy years of age when his calamities came upon him; this would make his age at his death about 210 years. Judging from the well-known length of human life after the flood, it would seem that Job lived somewhere between the times of the patriarchs Terah and Jacob.

In the remarkable addition at the end of the Septuagint version of the book of Job, it is said: “His first name was Jobab; and having married an Arabian woman, he had by her a son whose name was Enon. He was himself a son of Zare, one of the sons of Esau; and his mother’s name was Bosorra; so that he was the fifth in descent from Abraham.” A somewhat curious use has been made by some astronomers of the reference to the stars Cæsil and Cimah—rendered “Orion and Pleiades”—to determine the time when Job lived. (Job ix. 9; xxxviii. 31.) Supposing the principal stars to be those of Taurus and Scorpio, and that these were the cardinal constellations of spring and autumn in his time; knowing the present longitude of these stars, and calculating from the precession of the equinoxes, they have fixed the time of Job, 164 years before the birth of Abraham. But the proof that the constellations referred to are Taurus and Scorpio, is too uncertain to give much weight to the argument. The “sore boils,” with which Job was afflicted, is supposed to have been the disease known as the elephantiasis; for which see the article BLAINS. (Job ii. 7.) 2.—See Jashba.

JOB, BOOK OF. Considerable difference of opinion has prevailed as to the date and author of this venerable inspired document. The Talmud assumes that it was written by Moses; others attribute it to the Chaldean period of the prophets. The book, except the two first chapters and part of the last, is written in Hebrew poetry, and abounds in Aramaic idioms. There is not in all antiquity a piece of poetry more copious, more lofty, more magnificent, more diversified, more adorned, or more affecting than this book. It abounds in references to natural scenery, and to Idumæan and Egyptian localities and objects; and shows an acquaintance with many of the Hebrew notions of things, with their opinions, their formule of speech, and the like. With events in general before and after the flood, the book manifests an acquaintance. But still the book seems to have been written independent of Hebrew peculiarities, and is based upon the more general views of the patriarchal religion. This would intimate that it was written before the establishment of the Hebrew commonwealth. As the main question of the book is concerning the doctrines of Divine Providence—whether the Divine Being constantly and adequately rewards virtue and piety, and punishes sin in the present world—we are not to suppose that the speeches of Job, Eliphaz, Bildad, Zophar, and Elihu, were inspired when they were uttered. The angry disputants frequently contradict each other; and most of their speeches God Himself has declared to be wrong. (Job xlii. 7, 9.) The author of the book was undoubtedly inspired to give an account of this dispute; and he had a great moral purpose in view. Job is referred to as an eminent man in Ezek. xiv. 14—20. In reference to the memorable passage in Job xix. 25—27, the great question has been, whether it refers to the Messiah, and to the resurrection of the dead; or to an expectation which Job had that God would come forth as his Vindicator in some such way as He is declared afterwards to have done. The passage does not necessarily refer to the Messiah, and to the resurrection of the dead. While there are obscure traces of the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead in the old Testament, which were sufficient to excite the hopes of the ancient saints; this glorious truth, in its clearness, is one of the peculiar doctrines of Christianity—one of the last truths of revelation, which seem to have been reserved for the Redeemer Himself to make known to man. All, however, which the passage fairly demands, is fully met by the events recorded in the close of the book.
phesied somewhat early in the reign of Uzziah, king of Judah, and rather before Amos; (Joel i. 14; ii. 1, 15, 32; iii. 1;) though some distinguished scholars say that his prophecy was uttered in the reign of Josiah, or of Hezekiah; while others fix it to the time of Manasseh, or even of Josiah. The occasion of the prophecy was the devastation caused by swarms of locusts, one of the most terrible of all the plagues of the East. (Joel i. 1—20.) Some understand the plague of locusts to be a figurative representation of the Chaldean, or some other invasion. However, the prophet admonishes to fasting and penitence; and promises the removal of the calamity and renewal of fertility. (ii. 21—32.) He also casts his eyes forward on a future still more remote, and predicts the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, and the signs, and wonders, and spiritual prosperity of the Messiah's reign. (Acts ii. 16—21.) The style and manner of Joel are exceedingly poetical and elegant; and the book ranks among the most splendid exhibitions of Hebrew poetry. 2. The eldest son of Samuel; (1 Sam. viii. 2;) also called "Vashni." (1 Chron. vi. 28.) 3. A son of Uzziah; (1 Chron. vi. 30;) also called "Shaul." (1 Chron. vi. 24.) 4. A descendant of Simeon. (1 Chron. iv. 35.) 5. A descendant of Reuben. (1 Chron. v. 4—8.) 6. A descendant of Gad. (1 Chron. v. 12.) 7. One of the Kohathites. (1 Chron. vi. 33.) 8. A descendant of Issachar. (1 Chron. vii. 3.) 9. One of David's distinguished officers. (1 Chron. xii. 38.) 10. A descendant of Gershom. (1 Chron. xv. 7—11.) 11. One of the Gershonites. (1 Chron. xxiii. 8; xxvi. 22.) 12. The son of Pedaiah. (1 Chron. xxvii. 20.) 13. A son of Nebo. (Ezra x. 43.) 14. The son of Zichri. (Neh. xi. 9.)

JOELAH = whom Jehovah helps. One of David's distinguished officers. (1 Chron. xii. 7.)

JOEZER = whose help is Jehovah.

---

One of David's distinguished officers. (1 Chron. xii. 6.)

JOBEHAH = elevated. A place in the tribe of Gad. (Num. xxxii. 35; Judg. viii. 11.)

JOGLI = exiled. A descendant of Dan. (Num. xxxiv. 22.)

JOHA = whom Jehovah revives. 1. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 16.) 2. One of David's distinguished officers. (1 Chron. xi. 45.)

1. JOHN = whom Jehovah gives or bestows. The son of Zacharias and Elizabeth, and the herald or forerunner of Christ. John, generally called "the Baptist," was born about six months before Christ. His birth and work were predicted by Isaiah; (Isa. xl. 3;) by Malachi; (Mal. iv. 5;) and by the angel Gabriel. (Luke i. 5—20.) His manner of life appears to have been solitary, and even austere; and he chiefly subsisted on locusts and wild honey. By Divine direction he baptised all who came to him with professions of repentance; (Luke iii. 3;) and announced to the Jews the near approach of the Messiah's kingdom, called "the kingdom of heaven." (Matt. iii. 1—17.) John was a fearless and uncompromising reformer; he was the last of the Hebrew race of prophets and the first of the Christian. His character was of the order of Elijah. (Matt.
JOHN

xvii. 12; Luke i. 15, 17; John i. 19—23; Mal. iv. 5.) Multitudes flocked to him from every part of the land; and among the rest came Jesus of Nu-zareth, to be by baptism consecrated to His holy office, when a voice from heaven declared Him to be the Messiah. Although John foresaw that his fame would be eclipsed by the coming of Christ, as the brightness of the morning star is dimmed by the rising of the sun; yet he rejoiced sincerely in the event, saying “He must increase, but I must decrease.” The testimony of John to the Divine nature and offices of Christ is full and distinct.
(John i. 29; iii. 28—32.) John faithfully reproved Herod Antipas, because he had put away his own wife, and had married Herodias, the wife of his brother Philip, he being alive.
For this the tetrarch shut him up in prison. (Matt. xi. 7—19.) After he had been in prison about a year and six months, Herodias, on a special occasion, requested of Herod the head of John the Baptist; and he was at once beheaded in the castle of Machaerus, about eight miles east of the Dead sea. (Matt. xiv. 1—5; Jos. Ant. xviii. 5. 2.) The disciples of John obtained his body, and laid it in a tomb. Thus, about three years after entering upon his ministry, terminated the life of one who “was a burning and a shining light,” a zealous and enlightened man; an example of what all the ministers of Christ’s gospel should be. (John v.
35; Mark vi. 14—29; Luke ix. 7—9.)

2. JOHN. The Apostle, commonly called the “Evangelist” or “Divine,” was the son of Zebedee, a fisherman of Galilee, and of Salome. He was probably born at Bethsaida, a fishing village on the sea of Galilee. That his family was in a condition of comfort and respectability, may be inferred from the fact that John was known to the high-priest. (John xviii. 15.) His mother was one of the women who ministered to the subsistence of Jesus; (Mark i. 20; Matt. xxvii. 57;) and at His death the Redeemer charged John to take Mary to his own home, where she probably abode till her decease. (John xix. 25—27.) John was probably younger than James his brother.
(Matt. iv. 21.) He was a follower of John the Baptist; ultimately he became an attached follower of Christ.
(Luke v. 10, 11.) He was one of the three disciples who were distinguished by marks of the peculiar regard and confidence of the Master; and he is called “the disciple whom Jesus loved.” (Matt. xvii. 1; xxvi.
37; Mark v. 37; John xiii. 23, 25;
xx. 2; xxi. 20.) John was of an ardent temperament, and exhibited a bold and unwavering attachment to the cause of Christ; nor did he forsake his Lord even at the cross, but stood by Him, and amid all the violence and dismay of that dreadful hour, received his last message, and bore witness to the minutest events that occurred. (John xix. 26, 27, 35.) After the ascension of Christ, John appears to have resided in Jerusalem. (Gal. ii. 9.) But he appears to have left Palestine before A.D. 58, as James was the only Apostle in Jerusalem, when Paul went up on his last visit. (Acts xxii.
18.) It was probably after A.D. 60 or 62, that John removed to Asia Minor, where he taught extensively, and finally fixed his abode at Ephesus.
After the imprisonment of Paul, these regions stood in special need of the care and oversight of an Apostle.
While in Asia Minor, the Evangelist was exiled, or obliged to retire, on account of the persecution which was raging under the emperor Domitius Nero, to the island of Patmos, one of the Sporades, in the Ægian Sea;
where he wrote the Revelation about A.D. 66. (Rev. i. 9.) John appears to have returned from Patmos to Ephesus, at the close of Nero’s life, where he is said to have died in the reign of Trajan, being upwards of 90 years of age; according to Jerome, he was 100; according to Suidas, 120.
The various traditions concerning the Evangelist John, handed down to us by the early ecclesiastical writers, are by the soundest critics pronounced mythical. 3. One of the kindred of the high-priest. (Acts iv. 6.) 4.—See Mark.

JOHN, GOSPEL OF. This Gospel everywhere bears the impress of John's vivid and amiable spirit; and the various scenes are described as none but an eye-witness could have described them. In its composition he needed no aid from foreign sources. (John i. 37—40; xviii. 10—16; xix. 35.) The early ecclesiastical writers Irenæus, Clement of Alexandria, Theophilus of Antioch, Tertullian, Origen, Eusebius, and Epiphanius, uniformly attribute this Gospel to John the Evangelist. It was written in Greek, probably at Ephesus, about a. d. 68 or 69. That it was written before the overthrow of Jerusalem, appears certain, as it contains no reference to that melancholy event. Indeed, from the words, "Now there is at Jerusalem, by the sheep-gate, a pool, which is called in the Hebrew tongue Bethesda, having five porches," it would seem that when John wrote, the Holy City was then in the like state and condition, as at the time when the Saviour performed the miracle at Bethesda. (John v. 2.) This Gospel contains a regular account of all the visits of Jesus to Jerusalem, after His ministry had commenced; while the other Gospels merely notice the journey just before the crucifixion. Still this Gospel was not designed merely as a supplement to the others; inasmuch as the writer has not only repeated a considerable number of things contained in the other Gospels, but almost in the same words. (Compare John ii. 16; Luke xix. 46; Mark xi. 17; Matt. xxi. 13.—John iii. 35; v. 20; vii. 19; x. 15; Luke x. 22; Matt. xi. 27.—John iv. 35; Matt. ix. 37.—John iv. 35; Matt. xiii. 57; John xiii. 20; Luke x. 16; Matt. x. 40.) Moreover, the traits of apparent discrepancy as to manner and cir-stances between John and the other Evangelists, where they speak of the same thing, are very numerous. The special object of John's Gospel was a doctrinal one; to show that Jesus was the Messiah, and the Son of God, in order that men might believe on Him and be saved. It is mainly made up of the discourses of Christ. He even tells us that the sayings and doings of Jesus were so numerous, that "the world would not contain—i.e. the times would not bear with such copiousness, the books which must be written, in case they were all reported." Of course he made, and he intended to make only a small selection, not omitting those things that he deemed most important to his specific purpose. Although, in the time of John, there were Zabians, Cerinthians, Nicolaitans, and Docetæ, with Gnosticism yet imperfectly developed, existing in Asia Minor; yet the Apostle does not seem to have written specifically against them. Certainly there is much emphasis and force given to several passages in his writings, by applying them as animadversions on the opinions of one and another of the various sects named. But the Apostle must be regarded, on the whole, as designing rather to refute error by teaching the truth, than as having engaged in designs directly and avowedly polemic.

396

JOHN'S FIRST EPISTLE. This Epistle was probably written at Ephesus, about a. d. 70, to some of the churches in Asia Minor. It is found in the old Syrian version; and is referred to by Polycarp, Papias, Irenæus, Clement of Alexandria, Tertullian, Cyprian, and Origen. The same doctrine prevails in the first Epistle of John as in his Gospel; the same style or manner of writing both as to diction and the construction of sentences, the same glowing spirit of love to God and man, the same ardent attachment to the Saviour and zeal for his honour and glory, is evident to every intelligent and impartial reader. The heresy of the Docete, who taught that Christ was only in appearance and seemingly, but not in reality, a man consisting of a real body and soul, would seem to be animadverted upon in this Epistle. (1 John i. 1—13; iv. 1—6.) So also, the "Antichrist," characterized in 1 John ii. 18—27, designates the heresy of those who denied that Jesus was the Messiah, and that the Messiah had come in the flesh. This is afterwards called "denying the Son;" and he who does this, is said also to deny the Father. The remarkable passage in 1 John v. 7, 8—"In heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost; and these three are one. And there are three that bear witness in earth"—has given rise to more controversy, since the commencement of the sixteenth century, than any other portion of the Sacred Writings. This clause was first printed in the Complutensian Polyglott, in 1514, although not published until 1522; and was either transcribed, with some variations, from Joseph Bryennius, a Greek monk of the fifteenth century; or translated into Greek by the editors, from the Latin Vulgate. In the first edition of the Greek Testament ever published, which was that of Erasmus, Basle, 1516, this clause does not occur. For not inserting the clause, Erasmus was attacked by Lope de Stunica, the principal editor of the Spanish Polyglott. Erasmus replied to Stunica, by observing that he had faithfully followed the Greek manuscripts from which he had edited his text; but professed his readiness to insert the clause in another edition, provided but a single Greek manuscript was found to contain it. Such a manuscript, he was afterwards informed, was found in England; upon which Erasmus, although entertaining strong suspicions respecting it, yet, faithful to his word, inserted the disputed clause in his third edition, published in 1522; whence it found its way into all the principal editions of the Greek Testament before the time of Griesbach. This manuscript, called by Erasmus the Codex Britannicus, is generally believed to have been the same with that now in the library of Trinity College, Dublin, called the Codex Montifortianus, or Dublinaeas. This Codex appears to have belonged originally to one Froy, a friar. About 1572, it was owned by Thomas Clement; and was for some time in the possession of Dr. Montfort, before it came into the hands of Usher, who gave it to the College library. This manuscript was evidently written by different hands; and was completed, as it now exists, in the reign of Elizabeth. There are several variations between this manuscript and the text of Erasmus, which may be accounted for, partly on the supposition, that the copy of the passage from the Codex Britannicus, made for Erasmus, was not the most correct; and partly from the editorial liberty which Erasmus may have taken with the Copy. In 1594, I examined the Codex Dublinaeas myself; and my conviction then was that this Codex was comparatively modern, and that the Epistles, at least, were written after the invention of printing, in order to supply Erasmus with the disputed text. Indeed, the passage in question is evidently a translation into Greek, from the Latin Vulgate. The controverted clause has been also found in a corrupted form, in the Codex Ottobon, 298, in the Vatican; which was also written after the invention of printing. Besides this Codex, and that of Dublin, no other Greek manuscript has been found which contains a vestige of this celebrated clause. The clause is also wanting in all the manuscripts of the Syriac, Armenian, and other ancient versions; it is also absent from all the oldest existing manuscripts of the Latin Vulgate, written between the eighth and tenth centuries. Nor has it been cited by a single Greek father; and it is alike opposed to the authority of the Oriental and Latin fathers. Such was Luther's view of the clause, that he uniformly rejected it from all his translations. It is inserted in all the early English printed translations, but is generally printed either in brackets, or in smaller letters. It was, however, ultimately printed without any marks of doubt. Indeed, the disputed clause is generally looked upon as a gloss or note, which may have been written on the margin or between the lines, and ultimately found its way into the text of most of the later manuscripts of the Latin Vulgate, where it has maintained a position in all the printed copies of that version. However, the most eminent scholars see little reason for receiving the clause as genuine; and do not hesitate to say that it is indefensible. Hence, it has been for some time generally omitted in all critical editions of the Greek Testament. The evidence against it is clear and proponderating; inasmuch as the internal exegetical criticism of the clause completely agrees with the results of the external and historical. Even the formula en eisī = "are one," would seem to have a different sense from that which is required by the doctrine of the Trinity.
JOH

JOHN'S SECOND AND THIRD EPISTLES. One is addressed to the "elect lady," properly to "Cyria the elect," apparently a woman distinguished for piety, and well known in the churches as a disciple of Christ. The other is addressed to Gaius, who seems to have enjoyed much of the Apostle's confidence. Both the Epistles were probably written at Ephesus, about A. D. 78 or 74. That 2 John v. 7—11 refers to the same deceivers which are characterized in 1 John i. 1—8; iv. 1—6, seems to be quite plain. The two Epistles are referred to by Clement of Alexandria, Origen, and Dionysius of Alexandria; but they are not found in the present copies of the Peshito or old Syriac version. They were recognized by the council of Hippo, A. D. 393; and by the third held at Carthage, A. D. 397. In ancient times, it would seem that doubts had arisen whether they should be included in the Canon, rather from the fact that these Epistles were directed to private individuals, than from any other circumstance.

JOIADA = whom Jehovah favours. A high priest of the Jews, in the time of Nehemiah, about B.C. 434. (Neh. xii. 10; xiii. 28.)

JOIAKIM = whom Jehovah sets up. A high priest of the Jews, successor to Joshua. (Neh. xii. 10.)

JOIARIB = whom Jehovah defends. 1. The son of Zechariah. (Neh. xi. 5.) 2. One of Ezra's counsellors. (Ezra viii. 16.) 3. One who returned from exile. (Neh. xii. 19.) 4. See JEHIOARIB.

JOKDEAM = burning of the people. A city in the mountains of Judah. (Josh. xv. 56.)

JOKIM = whom Jehovah sets up. One of those who had the dominion in Moab. (1 Chron. iv. 22.)

JOKMEAM = gathered by the people. A Levitical city in the tribe of Ephraim; (1 Chron. vi. 68;) also written "Jokmeam." (1 Kings iv. 12.) It is probably the same place as Kibsam = two heaps. (Josh. xxi. 22.)

JOKNEAM = possessed by the people. 1. A place in the tribe of Zebulun, at the foot of Mount Carmel; its site may have been at Tel Kaimon. (Josh. xii. 22; xix. 11; xxi. 34.) 2. See JOKMEAM.

JOKSHAN = fowler. A son of Abraham and Keturah, the ancestor of the Sabaeans and the Dedanites. (Gen. xxv. 2, 3.)

JORTAN = small. One of the sons of Eber, and the progenitor of many tribes in southern Arabia. (Gen. x. 25, 26.)

JONA.—See JONAS.

JONADAB = whom Jehovah impels. 1. A son or descendant of Rechab; also called “Jehonadab.” (2 Kings x. 15, 16; Jer. xxxv. 6–19.)
2. A nephew of king David. (2 Sam. xiii 3–5.)

JONAH = a dove. The son of Amittai, a native of Gath-hepher. (Jon. i. 1; 2 Kings xiv. 25.) He prophesied during the reign of Jeroboam II., king of Israel, about b.c. 825–784: when the Assyrian power had already become formidable in western Asia, and the Hebrews were rendered tributary to it. The pretended tomb of Jonah is still pointed out at Nebi Yunus = “Tomb of Jonah,” on the group of ruins near Kouyunjik, opposite Musul; which, some suppose to be the site of ancient Nineveh. In recent times, the rationalists have regarded the book of Jonah as an allegory, or a mythic romance; but the ancient Jews rightly regarded the whole as a narrative of facts. (Tob. xiv. 8; 3 Macc. vi. 8; Jos. Ant. ix. 10. 2.) So also Jesus Himself has given His sanction to it as such. (Matt. xii. 40 seq.; xvi. 4; Luke xi. 30.) The object of the book of Jonah was evidently to show in what manner the Divine Being recognizes the relation of every family of our race to Himself; and to inculcate on the narrow-minded and bigoted Jews, the great truth, that He regards the humble and penitent everywhere with favour; and that even the haughty, cruel, and idolatrous heathen, in case they repent and humble themselves, become the subjects of His compassion and clemency, and are more acceptable than the haughty descendant of Abraham, who is still the devoted slave of ritual observances, and of his own evil passions. Nor have we any reason to conclude that Jonah alone, of all the Hebrew prophets, was sent as a missionary to the heathen. We are inclined to think that all the oracular threatenings against the ancient nations, during the prophetic dispensation, were in some way announced to them. Otherwise, how would the oracles be considered as warnings to those nations. Such a view will help to commend the prophetic dispensation to our feelings. Nor do we see any difficulty in the case of Jonah being swallowed up by the fish or whale. A whale, it is said, has not a gullet large enough to receive a man. But it is now known that the gullet of the cachalot whale is quite in proportion to the tongue of the animal; so that it would easily swallow a man. Moreover, whales are not uncommon in the Mediterranean. The original terms do not designate the animal or fish which swallowed the prophet; they merely signify any large fish or marine animal. Even the canis carharias, or sea-dog, common in the Mediterranean, can surely swallow a man, for it has done so; and so can some other fishes. The objection that the stomach of the fish must have dissolved and digested Jonah, is of no weight; for every one acquainted with physiology knows, that living flesh does not digest in the least in the stomach. And certainly, the God who meant to punish, but not to destroy Jonah, could arrange all these circumstances, and also preserve his life, in such a way as is stated in the narration. Hitzig and others, ascribe the prophecy against Moab, in Isa. xv.–xvi., to Jonah. The prophet is also called “Jonas.” (Matt. xii. 40.)

JONAN = dove. One of the ancestors of Jesus. (Luke iii. 30.)

JONAS = dove. 1. The father of the apostle Peter, a fisherman; (John xxi. 15–17;) also called “Jona.” (John i. 42.) 2.—See JONAH.

JONATHAN = whom Jehovah gave. 1. A Levite, descended from Gershom, a resident at Bethlehem. He apostatized from the worship of Jehovah, in order to become a priest to Micah, who had a “house of gods.” He went with the Danites.
to Laish; and his descendants were priests in Dan until that idolatrous establishment was eventually merged in that of the golden calf, set up by Jeroboam. (Judg. xvii. 1–13; xviii. 1–31.)

2. The eldest son of king Saul, and consequently the heir apparent of the throne which David was destined to occupy. (1 Chron. viii. 33; ix. 33.) He displayed signal valour and prowess upon all occasions that offered, during the wars between his father and the Philistines. (1 Sam. xiv. 1–23.) Having ignorantly violated a decree of his father, that no man should stop on pain of death, in the pursuit of the enemy, to taste of food, the people interposed and saved him from the penalty which his father was ready to inflict. (1 Sam. xiv. 24–45.) After David’s defeat of Goliath, Jonathan became acquainted with him, and their friendship for each other was so remarkable as to be minutely described by the sacred historian. (1 Sam. xviii. 1–4; xix. 1–7; xx. 1–42; xxiii. 15–18.) Jonathan fell, with his father and two brothers, in the fatal battle of Gilboa. (1 Sam. xxxi. 6–13.)

3. The son of Abiathar the priest. (2 Sam. xv. 27, 36; 1 Kings i. 42, 43.)

4. Two of David’s distinguished officers. (2 Sam. xxi. 21; 1 Chron. xx. 7; xxvii. 32; 2 Sam. xxiii. 32; 1 Chron. xi. 34.)

5. A descendant of Jerahmeel. (1 Chron. ii. 32, 33.)

6. A scribe, in whose house Jeremiah was imprisoned. (Jer. xxxvii. 15, 20; xxxviii. 26.)

7. A son of Karesah. (Jer. xl. 8.)

8. A descendant of Adin. (Ezra viii. 6.)

9. The son of Assahel. (Ezra x. 15.)

10. One of the priests. (Neh. xii. 14.)

11. A Jewish high priest, the father of Jaddua. (Neh. xii. 11.) He is called “Johanan” (Neh. xii. 22;), and “John,” by Josephus. (Ant. xi. 7. 1, 2.)

JONATH-ELEM-RECHOKIM. These words occur as the title of Ps. lvi.; and probably signify, on the subjugation of foreign princes, i.e. mighty men.

JOPPA = beauty. A very ancient maritime city in the territory of Dan, with a celebrated harbour on the Mediterranean, about 40 miles north-west of Jerusalem. It is also called “Japho,” but now Yafa. (Josh. xix. 46; 2 Chron. ii. 15 margin; Ezra iii. 7; Jon. i. 3; Acts ix. 36–43; x. 32; xi. 6–13.) It is situated on a promontory, jutting out into the sea, rising to the height of about 150 feet above its level, and offering on all sides, picturesque and varied prospects. The town has all the appearance of a poor village; the streets are very narrow, uneven, and dirty; and are rather entitled to the appellation of alleys. Joppe was chiefly distinguished for its harbour, which was the only port possessed by the Hebrews till Herod formed the harbour at Cæsarea. As a station for vessels, Joppa is one of the worst on the coast; its harbour being choked with sand, and very dangerous in boisterous weather, as it is mainly surrounded with rocks. Yafa stills enjoys a considerable trade with the neighbouring coasts. In 1799, Yafa was taken by storm by the French army under Napoleon Bonaparte, and was sacked without mercy, when the Turkish and Egyptian prisoners, amounting to several hundreds, were carried to the neighbouring sandhills, and put to death by his order. This massacre of the remnant of the garrison of Yafa, by the order of Napoleon, has justly been considered as one of the most atrocious acts recorded in history.

JORAH = sprinkling.—See HAIR.

JORAI = whom Jehovah teacheth. A descendant of Gad. (1 Chron. v. 13.)

JORAM = whom Jehovah has exalted. 1. A king of Israel, son of Ahab, and successor of Ahaziah. He reigned twelve years, from 895 to 884 B.C. (2 Kings viii. 16.) He is also called "Jehoram." (2 Kings i. 17; iii. 1, 6.) Joram acknowledged Jehovah as His God and Sovereign. He, however, suffered the golden calves to remain; but took away the idolatrous image of Baal which his father Ahab had made. He made no direct attempt to extinguish idolatry. Joram, aided by Jehoshaphat, gained an important victory over the Moabites. Joram having been wounded at the siege of Ramoth-Gilead, was soon after slain by Jehu, the commander-in-chief of his forces. (2 Kings iii. 6—27; vi. 1—27; vii. 8—33; viii. 1—20; viii. 28, 29; ix. 1—37.) 2. The son of Tol, king of Hamath. (2 Sam. viii. 10.) In 1 Chron. xviii. 10, he is called "Hadoram." 3. One of the Levites. (1 Chron. xxvi. 23.) —See JEHORAM.

JORDAN = the flowing, i.e. the river. This extraordinary river of Palestine, now called by the Arabs esh-Sheriah = the watering place, rises from three principal sources: of these, the most remote springs in the valley between Lebanon and Anti-Lebanon, from a fountain near the village of Hasbeia. This fountain, called the Hasbany, is the true source or fountain-head of the Jordan. It forms a considerable stream, and pursuing a direction nearly south, for about twenty-five miles, enters the lake Huleh, the ancient Merom. At the head of the plain or marsh of Huleh, about ten miles above the lake of the same name, and three miles eastward of the stream from Hasbeia, another fountain gushes out of the crater of an extinct volcano, at Tel-el-Kady = hill of the judge, the site of the ancient Dan. The third fountain issues from the brow of a lofty rock, at Banias, the ancient Cesarea Philippi, about three miles east of Tel-el-Kady. Before reaching the lake, the three streams unite, and, with their tributaries, discharge themselves through one channel into the reservoir. The Jordan, after leaving the southern end of lake Huleh, passes rapidly along the narrow valley to the lake of Gennesaret. The distance between the two lakes is usually estimated at about nine miles. The Jordan issues from the lake of Gennesaret, near its south-west corner, and enters the ghor or deep plain. Its channel varies in different places, being in some wider and more shallow, and in others narrower and deeper. The river is fordable in many places during summer; but the few spots where it may be crossed in the rainy season, are known only to the Arabs. Although rapid and impetuous, the Jordan is graceful in its windings, and fringed with luxuriance; while its waters are sweet, clear, cool, and refreshing, and abounding in fish. The rapidity of the current may be accounted for in consequence of the higher level of the lake of Gennesaret. In 1848, Lieut. Lynch, of the United States' Exploring Expedition, had two metal boats, one of iron, and the other of copper, with which he moved from the sea of Galilee, down the Jordan, and entered the north end of the Dead sea. In the distance of about seventy English miles, i.e. from the lake of Gennesaret to the Dead sea, the Jordan winds along through a course of about two hundred miles. Within that distance the party plunged down no less than twenty-seven threatening rapids, besides many others of less descent. As the depression of the surface of the Dead sea is 1312.2, or according to another estimate, 1383 feet below the Mediterranean; and the lake of Gennesaret 650.2 feet below the level of the Mediterranean; it follows that there is a difference of from 662 to 732 feet between the level of the sea of Galilee and the Dead sea. And, as in the space of seventy miles, the Jordan travels at least 200 miles, the river will necessarily have an average fall of nearly four feet in each mile. The entire distance from the highest source of the Jordan, in Lebanon, to its outlet in the Dead sea, is, in a direct line, not more than 120 miles, in which distance it is said to make a descent of 2,000 feet. The streams which enter the Jordan from the east are the Jarmuth—the ancient Hieromax, and the Jabok. The Jordan has in some places three sets of banks, the upper or outer ones forming the first descent from the level of the great valley; the lower or middle ones enclosing the tract of canes and other vegetation; and the actual banks of the channel. But we have no evidence that this river annually overflowed its banks. The Jordan is said to “overflow all its banks” in the first month, or all the time of harvest; but the original Hebrew expresses nothing more, than that the Jordan “was full up to all its banks,” meaning the banks of its channel; it ran with full banks, or was brim full. (Josh. iii. 15; 1 Chron. xii. 3.) The phrase “swelling of Jordan,” should be rendered “pride of Jordan,” as in Zech. xi. 3, where the original word is the same. (Jor. xii. 5; xlii. 19; 1:54.) It refers to the verdure and thickets along the banks, but has no allusion to a rise of the waters. When the Hebrews crossed the Jordan, four days before the passover, there was, as now at the same season, a slight annual rise of the river, which caused it to flow with full banks, and sometimes to spread its waters even over the immediate banks of its channel, where they are lowest, so as in some places to fill the low tract covered with trees and vegetation along its sides. Further than this there is no evidence that its inundations have ever extended; otherwise, the line of vegetation would have been carried back to a great distance from the channel, and the greater portion of the ghur would not have been what it now is, a solitary desert. “The rains,” says Dr. Robinson, “which descend upon Anti-Lebanon and the mountains around the upper part of the Jordan, and which might be expected to produce sudden and violent inundations, are received into the basins of the Huleh and the lake of Tiberias, and there spread out over a broad surface; so that all violence is destroyed; and the stream that issues from them, can only flow with a regulated current, varying in depth according to the elevation of the lower lake. Hence these lakes may be compared to great regulators, which control the violence of the Jordan, and prevent its inundations.” When Lieut. Lynch passed down the Jordan, in April, the river was in the latter stage of a froschet—a few weeks earlier or later and a passage would have been impracticable.

JORMI = whom Jehovah has exalted. One of the ancestors of Jesus. (Luke iii. 29.)

JORKAM = paleness of the people. A town in the territory of Judah. (1 Chron. ii. 44.)

JOSABAD = whom Jehovah bestows. One of David’s distinguished officers. (1 Chron. xii. 4.)

JOSAPHAT. — See Jehoshaphat.

JOSE = whom Jehovah helps. An ancestor of Jesus. (Luke iii. 29.)

JOSEDECH. — See Jehozadak.

JOSEPH = He will add or increase. 1. The son of Jacob by Rachel. Jacob’s remarkable fondness for Joseph seems to have been the source of much of his family trouble.
Being hated by his brethren, Joseph was sold by them as a slave into Egypt. He was subsequently advanced to the highest honours; and sent for his father and brethren to Egypt, where he provided for them. He lived an hundred and ten years, and saw his descendants to the fourth generation. (Gen. xxxvii.—l.)

The Egyptian name "Zaphnath-paaneah," given by Pharaoh to Joseph in reference to his public office, has been variously rendered, the salvation or saviour of the age; the basis or support of life; and he who under the influence of wisdom flees from adultery. (Gen. xii. 45.) Mr. Corey identifies Paaneah, perhaps symbolized by the bird phénix, with the Thoth or Herme, who started the cycle which expired in the reign of Ptolemy Euergetes. Joseph, during his administration, by the sale of corn to the starving population, collected into the royal treasury immense wealth. He consolidated the kingdom; and laid the foundation of Egyptian greatness; and particularly of the architectural magnificence which characterized that nation. Joseph took an oath of his brethren, that when God should visit them, and bring them out of Egypt, they would carry up his bones with them. (Gen. i. 2—5.)

He was buried in Shechem. (Josh. xxiv. 32.) At Sakkarah, near Memphis, there is the tomb of an Egyptian prince, named Joseph, with the figure of which we have given a copy. The bones of Joseph may have reposed here, until their removal to Canaan; or another prince who had assumed his name, may have been the excavator of the tomb. The terms "Joseph," "children of Joseph," and "house of Joseph," are frequently put for the two tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh. (Josh. xiv. 4; xvii. 14, 17; xviii. 5; Judg. i. 22—35.)

Also for the kingdom of Ephraim, i.e. of the ten tribes. (Ps. lxxviii. 67; Ezek. xxxvii. 16, 19; Zech. x. 6.) And for the whole nation of Israel. (Ps. lxxx. 1; lxxxi. 5; Am. v. 15; vi. 6.)

2. A son of Asaph. (1 Chron. xxv. 2, 3.)

3. One of the priests. ( Neh. xii. 14.)

4. A descendant of Bani. ( Ezra x. 42.)

5. Three of the ancestors of Jesus. (Luke iii. 24, 26, 30.)

6. The husband of Mary, also called the Carpenter, and the reputed father of Jesus, who is called Christ. In Matt. i. 16, Joseph is called the son of Jacob; and in Luke iii. 28, he is considered as the son-in-law of Heli. It is probable that Joseph died before our Lord entered upon his public ministry. (Matt. i. 15—24; ii. 13—19; Luke i. 27; ii. 4—43; iv. 22; John i. 46; vi. 42; xix. 25—27.)

7. A native of Arimathia, a member of the Sanhedrin, and a disciple of Jesus. (Mark xv. 43—45.) He did not consent to the crucifixion of Jesus. (Luke xxiii. 50—53.) He solicited from Pilate the body of Jesus, and laid it in his own new and unoccupied tomb. (Matt. xxvii. 57—60; John xix. 38—42.)

8. See Barnabas.

JOSES = whom Jehovah helps. 1. A brother of James the Less. (Matt. xiii. 55; xxvii. 56; Mark vi. 3; xv. 40, 47.)

2. See Barnabas.

JOSIAH = whom Jehovah lets dwell. A descendant of Simeon. (1 Chron. iv. 34.)

JOSHAVIAH = whom Jehovah lets dwell. One of David's distinguished officers. (1 Chron. xi. 46.)

JOSHEBEKASHAH = seat in hardness. A son of Heman. (1 Chron. xxv. 4, 34.)

JOSH E R B A S S E B E T. — See JASHOREAM.

JOSHUA = Jehovah the salvation.

1. The son of Nun, and the minister and assistant of Moses. His name was changed by Moses from Oshea to Jehoshua, contracted to Joshua. (Num. xiii. 16; xiv. 6, 30.) He is also called "Jesus." (Acts vii. 45; Heb. iv. 8.) Jehovah had destined Joshua to be the commander-in-chief of His people, in which capacity Moses presented him to them shortly before his death. In the battle with the Amalekites, he bravely led the Hebrews to victory; (Ex. xvi. 9—18;) and he was one of the twelve spies whom Moses sent to explore the land of Canaan. Caleb and Joshua survived the forty years wandering in the desert, and participated in the conquest of the Promised Land. Joshua devoted his whole life to the settlement of the theocratic policy, and consequently to the preservation of the true religion. He died at the age of one hundred and ten years, and was buried at Timnath-serah, in Mount Ephraim. (Josh. xxiv. 1—31.) The Book of Joshua consists of two parts.
The first part, chap. i. xii., contains the history of the conquest of Canaan; the second, chap. xiii.—xxiv., contains the history of the division of the land, and of subsequent arrangements to provide for obedience to the laws. This venerable document, which may be termed the Doomsday book of the conquest of Canaan, was written at or near the time when the events which it records took place; as a record must then have been made of the division and apportionment of the land of Canaan. Some passages were undoubtedly written after the death of Joshua and his contemporary elders.
(Josh. xxiv. 1, 32.) The Samaritans, along with the Pentateuch, have also a book of Joshua, containing much of what is in the Hebrew book of the same name, with additional fabulous matter of their own. It is a sort of chronicle extending from Moses to the time of Alexander Severus. 2. A man of Bethshemesh.
(1 Sam. vi. 14, 15.) 3. A governor of Jerusalem. (2 Kings xxiii. 8.) 4. — See JESUS.

JOSIAH — whom Jehovah heals.
The most pious king that ever sat upon the throne of Judah. He ascended the throne at the early age of eight years, and before he had arrived at his eighteenth year, he had cut off and destroyed all the idols of the land, with their temples, groves and monuments of every kind;
and had ransacked the sepulchres of the idolatrous priests, and burned their bones upon the altars, in accordance with the prophecy of the man of God, announced in the presence of Jer-oboam 326 years before Josiah was born. (1 Kings xiii. 2; 2 Kings xxii. 1, 2; 2 Chron. xxxiv. 1, 2.) In the prosecution of the thorough repair and expurgation of the temple, Hilkiah "found the book of the Law of the Lord by Moses." Josiah immediately convoked the whole realm, and in person read the book of the Law to them, and exacted from them a promise to obey it. (2 Kings xxii.
8—20; 2 Chron. xxxiv. 14—33.) In the thirty-first year of Josiah's reign, Pharaoh-Necho, king of Egypt, marched through Palestine, to fight Nabopolassar, king of Babylon, who had renounced the authority of Assyria. As Josiah was tributary to the Assyrians, he refused to allow Necho a passage through his territories; and in attempting to oppose him at Megiddo, Josiah was mortally wounded, and died at Jerusalem, deeply regretted by all his subjects.
He is also called "Josias." (Matt.
i. 10, 11; 2 Chron. xxxv. 20—27; 2
Kings xxiii. 20—37.)

JOSIAS. — See JOSIAH.

JOSIBIAH = whom Jehovah lets dwell. A descendant of Simeon. (1 Chron. iv. 35.)

JOSIPHIAH = whom may Jehovah increase. A descendant of Shelomith. (Ezra vii. 10.)

JOT. This word is derived from the name of the Greek letter iota, and the Hebrew yod. It is the smallest letter in each of those alphabets, and is therefore used emphatically to denote the smallest part, or the least particle. (Matt.
v. 18.)

JOTBAH = goodness, pleasuness. A place where Haruz resided.
(2 Kings xxi. 19.)

JOTBATHAH = goodness, pleauness. A station of the Hebrews in the Desert. (Num. xxxiii. 33.) In Deut. x. 7, it is called "Jotham."

JOTHAM = Jehovah is upright. 1.
The youngest son of Gideon, and the only one who escaped the massacre of his brethren by Abimelech. (Judg.
ix. 5—21.) 2. A king of Judah. On account of the leprosy of Uzziah, Jotham appears to have been regent for some time before his father’s death.
Jotham was obedient to the law: he continued the improvements of the kingdom begun by his father; and died greatly lamented by his people.
(2 Kings xv. 30—38; 2 Chron. xxvi.
18—23; xxvii. 1—9.) 3. A descendant of Caleb. (1 Chron. ii. 47.)

JOURNEY. Among the Hebrews, the usual time for travelling was in the cold of the morning or evening; in the heat of the day travellers sought refreshment and rest. (Gen. xviii. 1 —5.) A "days journey" seems to have been from ten to twenty miles.
(Num. xi. 31; Deut. i. 2.) A "Sabbath day’s journey" was limited by the Rabbins to 2,000 cubits = 3,500 feet; and it is not unlikely that ordinarily it ranged from three-quarters to a whole English mile. (Ex.
xvi. 29; Num. xxxv. 4, 5; Josh. iii.
4; Acts i. 12.)

JOY. An agreeable affection of the soul, arising from the possession or prospect of good. (Exod. vi. 18; Est. viii. 16.) It is reckoned among the "fruits of the Spirit," and designates that religious emotion which springs from a sense of reconciliation to God our Father, by the union of the soul to Christ. (Luke xv. 10; John xvi. 22; Gal. v. 22; 1 Pet. i. 8.)
To "rejoice evermore" is the privilege of every Christian. (Ps. ii.
12; Hab. iii. 17, 18; Isa. lxi. 7; 1 Thes. v. 16.)

JOZABAD = whom Jehovah bestows. 1. One of the Levites. (2 Chron. xxxi. 18.) 2. The son of Jeshua. (Exod. viii. 33; x. 23.) 3. A son of Pashur. (Exod. x. 22.)

JOZACHAR = whom Jehovah remembers. One of the murderers of king Joash; (2 Kings xii. 21; also written “Zabad.” (2 Chron. xxiv.
26.)

JOZADAK = See Jehozadak.

JUBAL = music. One of Cain’s descendants, son of Lamech and Adah.
He was the inventor of music, and the term was afterwards applied as an appellation to its inventor. (Gen.
iv. 21.)

JUBILEE = sound or clangour of trumpets. A Hebrew festival, so called from the sounding of trumpets on the tenth day of the seventh month, Ethanim = October, by which it was announced to the people. It occurred every fiftieth year, or after every seven times seven years. (Lev. xxv. 37—55;
xxvii. 23, 24; Num. xxxiv. 4; Isa.
lxi. 1, 2.) In this year no one sowed or reaped; servants of every description were set free; property sold or mortgaged on the preceding years, was restored to the former owner; in other words, the debts for which lands were pledged were cancelled, just as those of persons who had recovered their freedom, after having been sold into servitude, on account of not being able to pay. Houses built in walled towns, if not redeemed within the space of a full year, became the freehold of the purchaser;
also those which had been consecrated to God, and had not been redeemed before the return of that year, were not restored. And as the effect of this singular festival was known and anticipated, the business of society was conducted with reference to that period, and of course no injustice or hardship was occasioned.—See Inheritance.

JUCAL = See Jehucal.

JUDA = celebrated. 1. Two of the ancestors of Jesus. (Luke iii. 26, 30.) 2. See Judah.

JUDAH = celebrated. 1. The fourth son of Jacob and Leah, born in Mesopotamia. (Gen. xxxix. 35.) He is also called "Juda," and "Judah." (Matt.
1: 3; Luke iii. 33.) The prophetic blessing of his father describes the warlike character and gradually increasing strength of the tribe of

2 D
Judah, with a promise of the regal power, and that it should not depart before the coming of the Messiah. (Gen. xlix. 8—12.) The south-eastern part of Palestine fell to the lot of this tribe. In its territory was Jerusalem, the seat of the national worship, and from Judah sprang David and his royal race, from which descended the Saviour of the world. (Josh. xv. 1—63; xix. 1—9; Heb. vii. 14; Rev. v. 5; vii. 8.) After the revolt of the ten tribes, who took the name of the kingdom of "Israel," the name of Judah was given to the other kingdom, comprising the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, with a portion of Simeon and Dan, and having Jerusalem for its metropolis. Hence, "Judah" often denotes the kingdom of Judah. (Isa. xix. 17; 2 Kings xiv. 20; 2 Chron. xxv. 28; Heb. vii. 8.) As this tribe possessed the temple at Jerusalem, it mainly preserved the true religion; while the ten tribes gave themselves up to idolatry. On the overthrow of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, the kingdom of Judah was destroyed, about B.C. 586. After the exile, the tribe of Judah in some sort united in itself the whole Hebrew nation, who from that time were known generally as "Jews," i.e. descendants of Judah; and the name "Judah," "Juda," "land of Judah," or "Judea," was applied to the whole country of the Israelites. (Ps. lxvi. 1; cxiv. 2; Isa. iii. 8; Jer. xiv. 2; Hos. iv. 17; Neh. i. 2; Hag. i. 14; Matt. ii. 6.) 2. A descendant of Benjamin. (Neh. xi. 9.) 3. Two of the Levites. (Ezra iii. 9; Neh. xii. 8, 34.) 4. One of the sacred musicians. (Neh. xii. 36.)—See ISRAEL.

JUDAS = celebrated. The apostle surnamed "Isacariot"—man of Kerioth, who betrayed our Lord. He seems previously to have been dishonest, though he enjoyed the confidence of the other Apostles. (John xii. 6.) When Judas saw that Jesus was delivered over to be crucified, he repented. Till then he had hoped, perhaps, to enjoy the reward of his treachery, without involving himself in the guilt of his master's blood. He returned to the temple, and finding the persons from whom he had received the money, he cast it down, saying, "I have sinned in that I have betrayed innocent blood;" and, unable to bear the burden of his misery, he went out, and hanged himself; (Matt. xxvii. 5;) and "falling headlong he burst asunder;" (Acts i. 18;) probably, the rope breaking, the fall was such as to cause the bursting of the abdomen. (Matt. x. 4; xxvi. 14—16; Mark iii. 19; xiv. 10, 43; Luke xxii. 3, 47, 48; John vii. 11; xii. 6; xviii. 2, 3.) 2. A man surnamed "the Galilean," who "rose in the days of the taxing, and drew away many people after him." (Acts v. 37.) The first census, about the time of Christ's birth, was opposed by Theudas; the second, made some years later, in connection with making Judea a Roman province, was opposed by Judas. He was destroyed, and his followers scattered by Cyrenius, then proconsul of Syria and Judea. 3. A Jew living at Damascus. (Acts ix. 11.) 4.—See JUDAH, BARBARAS, and JUDE. fluence of the Holy Spirit, had made a strong impression upon his mind.—See Enoch.

JUDEA.—See CANAAN, and JUDAH.

JUDGES. The Hebrew word shophetim, rendered “judges,” properly signifies rulers, princes, chiefs. (Ps. ii. 10; Am. ii. 3.) The term is used especially of the regents or chief magistrates of the Hebrews from Joshua to Samuel, who were raised up in extraordinary emergencies to deliver them from the oppression of neighbouring nations, and exercised during peace the office of chief ruler and judge. (Judg. ii. 16–18; iv. 5; Ruth i. 1; 2 Kings xxiii. 22.) The judges were protectors of the laws, defenders of religion, and avengers of crimes, particularly of idolatry; they were without pomp or splendour; and without guards, train, or equipage, unless their own wealth might enable them to appear answerable to their dignity. The several periods summed up, from the Exodus, during which Moses, Joshua, the elders, and the judges exercised their authority, and the intervals of servitude and oppression, unto the election of Saul, amount to 539 years. But the period that elapsed from the Exodus until the building of the temple, is stated, in 1 Kings vi. 1, to have been only 480 years; hence from the death of Moses to the election of Saul, was only 355 years. This period of 355 years is correctly formed by the obvious method of considering several of the judges, whose histories are related in succession, to have been contemporaneous rulers, since, in many instances, they governed only single tribes. Or a distinction may be made between total and partial conquests of Canaan by hostile nations; inasmuch as some of the periods of servitude seem to apply to contemporary epochs; as a partial servitude extended over one section of the country, the remaining portion might either have been reduced to subjection by a different invasion, or might have remained in a state of perfect repose. Nor docs the statement of Paul, in Acts xiii. 17–20, stand opposed to this view: “And after these things, which lasted about four hundred and fifty years, he gave them judges, until Samuel the prophet,” i.e. from the birth of Isaac, the time when God chose the fathers, to the time when the land of Canaan was divided by lot, was about the space of four hundred and fifty years; and then He appointed judges in Israel. The term “judges” was also used as the title of a class of magistrates appointed for the administration of justice by Moses, to relieve him of a part of the duties of the chief-magistracy. (Ex. xviii. 18–26; Deut. i. 16, 17; xviii. 8, 9.) This judicial establishment was re-organized after the Exile. (Ezra vii. 24.) Nevertheless, the more difficult cases, and appeals, were either brought before the ruler of the State, or before the high priest; until, in the age of the Maccabees, a supreme judicial tribunal was instituted.—See COUNCIL.

JUDGES, Book of. This book derives its title from the fact that it gives us the history of the Hebrews under the dynasty of the judges, for about 300 years. It consists of two divisions. The main historical elements in the first division end with the biogpgraphy of Samson; and seem to be connected with the early part of the book of Samuel. (Judg. xvi. 31.) The second division, comprising chaps. xvii. —xxi. contains an appendix, showing how anarchy and licentiousness were introduced, after the death of Joshua, among the men of the following generation. The authorship of the book has been variously ascribed to Samuel, Ezra, and others. The author evidently had access to written documents; still there is nothing in the diction or style of the book, which would seem to indicate a late origin. The peculiar sins of the people, their exemplary sufferings in consequence of them, and the signal deliverances which they experienced under this regent and that, occupy the whole book, with the except of the appendix; and this stands in connection with the general subject.

Judgment, Day or. No doctrine is more clearly set forth in the Scriptures than that of a day of judgment, at the close of the present dispensation—a day when all flesh shall rise from the dead and be gathered before the Omniscient Judge; when the righteous shall be separated from the wicked; and every one shall be rewarded or punished, according to his works. (Matt. xiii. 40—43; xxiv. 42—51; xxv. 1—46; John v. 28, 39; Acts xvii. 31; Rom. ii. 5—8; 1 Cor. xv. 51; 2 Cor. v. 10; 1 Thess. iv. 13—17; compare Dan. xii. 2; Rev. xxi. 12—15.) That Jesus Christ will officiate as Judge is also evident. (Jude 14; Acts i. 11; 2 Thess. i. 7.) And as He is God as well as man, He will guard the honour and majesty of the Divine law; and being man as well as God, He will equally guard the rights of the whole human race. (Acts xvii. 31; Gen. xviii. 25.) The passage in Mark xiii. 32, whether understood in reference to the day of judgment, or of the destruction of Jerusalem, does not deny that Jesus the universal Judge, is really God and truly man. If Jesus is both God and man distinctly, He must possess, distinctly, all the Divine and all the human attributes. His knowledge as a man must be limited—His knowledge as God must extend to all things. His knowledge, as God, cannot be confounded with His knowledge as man, any more than His nature as God, can be confounded with His nature as man. (Rev. xix. 12.) The argument for a general judgment may be thus stated:—1. The justice of God requires a general judgment, when all the apparent inequalities of the present life will be rectified, and the rectitude of the Divine administration will be vindicated before an assembled world. (Job xxii. 29, 30; Eccl. x. 9; Luke xvi. 25.) 2. That there will be a general judgment may be concluded, from the relation men stand in to God, as creatures to a Creator. If the violation of the laws of the Creator, as stamped upon our physical existence, is followed by immediate retribution, we cannot suppose that it is equally indifferent to God whether we obey or disobey the law He has prescribed in His word. It follows that man is accountable for his conduct, and that it must be an essential part of the Divine government to bring every action into judgment. And as it appears, in point of fact, that such retributions are not fully awarded in the present state, we must admit that a full and equitable distribution of punishments and rewards is reserved to that “great day.” 3. The moral perceptions implanted in the human constitution may be considered as having the force of moral laws. And, as the difference between right and wrong, virtue and vice, is founded upon the nature of things, and is eternal and unchangeable; and every moral agent is endowed with a faculty which enables him to judge whether his actions deserve reward or punishment; the accusations of conscience may be considered as testimonies in favour of the belief of a day of judgment. (Acts xxiv. 25; Rom. ii. 1—16.) 4. The Most High has also written the lesson of human responsibility and retribution upon the large scale of affinity and sequence, through the whole empire of nature. However men may fancy that the wave of oblivion passes over the greater part of their conduct, physical science shows us that those actions have been transfused into the very texture of the universe, so that no waters can wash them out, and no erosions, comminution, or metamorphoses, can obliterate them. Not a word has ever escaped from mortal lips, nor a deed been accomplished since man dwelt upon the earth, but it is registered indelibly upon the panorama of human history, spread out on the face of the universe. Mr. Babbage has shown that the discoveries of modern science acquaint us with the responsibility of man, and its eternal consequences:—Whilst the atmosphere we breathe is the ever living witness of the sentiments we have uttered, the water and the more solid materials of the globe bear equally enduring testimony of the acts we have committed. If the Almighty stamped on the brow of the first murderer the indelible and visible mark of his guilt; he has also established laws by which every succeeding criminal is not less irrevocably chained to the testimony of his crime; for every atom of his mortal frame, through whatever changes its several particles may migrate, will still retain, adhering to it through every combination, some movement derived from that very muscular effort by which the crime itself was perpetrated. The soul of the negro, whose fettered body, surviving the living charnel-house of his infected prison, was thrown into the sea to lighten the ship, that his Christian master might escape the limited justice at length assigned by civilized man to crimes whose profits had long gilded their atrocity, will need, at the last great day of human account, no living witness of his earthly agony. When man and all his race shall have disappeared from the face of our planet, ask every particle of air still floating over the unpeopled earth, and it will record the cruel mandate of the tyrant. Interrogate every wave which breaks unimpeded on ten thousand desolate shores, and it will give evidence of the last gurgle of the waters which closed over the head of his dying victim, confront the murderer with every corporeal atom of his immolated slave, and in its still quivering movements he will read the prophet’s denunciation of the prophet king—“Thou art the man.” But the arm, the tongue, the brain, were but the organism of the mind; and for mind with all its machinations God has made equally effective registers. If man can convey and register his words at the distance of thousands of miles in a moment, by electric wires, it can exult no higher wonder to be told that by means of some invisible power, all our thoughts are transmitted and registered where the instruments of righteousness are in preparation, and will be read as easily as we can read the types of the telegraph, in the day when “the Books will be opened.”

JUDGMENT-HALL. See Prætorium.

JUDGMENTS. This word generally denotes God’s judgments; either the secret decisions of the Divine will; (Ps. x. 6; xxxvi. 6) or the declarations of God’s will in the Scriptures; (Ex. xxii. 1; Deut. vii. 12; Neh. ix. 13; Ps. cxix. 7—173;) or the inflictions of punishment on the wicked. (Ex. vi. 6; xii. 12; Prov. xix. 29; Ezek. xxxv. 11; Rev. xvi. 7.)

JUDITH = Jewish. One of the wives of Esau. (Gen. xxvi. 34.)

JULIA = mossy, downy. A Christian woman at Rome. (Rom. xvi. 15.)

JULIUS = mossy, downy. The centurion who conducted Paul as a prisoner to Rome. (Acts xxvii. 1, 8, 43.)

JUNIA = youthful. A kinsman and fellow prisoner of Paul. (Rom. xvi. 7.)

JUNIPER. The Hebrew word rotham, rendered “juniper,” designates the genista retam, a species of the broom plant. (1 Kings xix. 4, 5.) Dr. Robinson says it is the largest and most conspicuous shrub of the deserts, between Akabah and Jerusalem, growing thickly in the watercourses and valleys. The Arabs generally select the place of encampment where it grows, in order to be sheltered by it at night from the wind. The roots of the rotham are very bitter, and are regarded by the Arabs as yielding the best charcoal. (Job xxx. 4; Ps. cxii. 4.)—See Heath.

JUPITER. The principal god of the Greek and Roman mythology. The character attributed to him is a compound of all that is wicked, obscene, and beastly in the catalogue of human crime. Still he was ever described as of noble and dignified port righteousness. Hence justification, and the remission or forgiveness of sin, relate to one and the same act of God, to one and the same privilege of his believing people. (Acts xiii. 39, 39; Rom. iv. 5, 8.) So also, "the justification of the ungodly," the "covering of sins," "not visiting for sin," "not remembering sin," and "imputing not iniquity," mean to pardon sin and to treat with favour; and express substantially the same thing which is designated by "imputing or counting faith for righteousness." Justification, then, is an act of God, not in or upon man, but for him and in his favour; an act which, abstractly considered, respects man only as its object, and translates him into another relative state: while sanctification respects man as its subject, and is a consequent of this act of God, and inseparably connected with it. The originating cause of justification is the free grace, and spontaneous love of God towards fallen man. (Rom. i. 5; iii. 24; Tit. ii. 11; iii. 4, 5.) Our Lord Jesus Christ is the sole meritorious cause of our justification, inasmuch as it is the result of His atonement for us. The sacrificial death of Christ is an expedient of Infinite Wisdom, by which the full claims of the law may be admitted, and yet the penalty avoided, because a moral compensation or equivalent has been provided by the sufferings of Him who died in the sinner's stead. (Eph. i. 7; Col. i. 14; Rev. v. 9.) Thus while it appears that our justification is, in its origin, an act of the highest grace, it is also, in its mode, an act most perfectly consistent with God's essential righteousness, and demonstrative of His inviolable justice. It proceeds not on the principle of abolishing the law or its penalty; for that would have implied that the law was unduly rigorous, either in its precepts or in its sanctions. Faith is the instrumental cause of justification, present faith in Him who is able to save, faith actually existing and exercised. The atonement of Jesus is not accepted for us, to our individual justification, until we individually believe, nor after we cease to live by faith in Him. The immediate results of justification are, the restoration of amity and intercourse between the pardoned sinner and the pardoning God; (Rom. v. 1; James ii. 23;) the adoption of the persons justified into the family of God, and their consequent right to eternal life; (Rom. viii. 17;) and the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, (Acts ii. 38; Gal. iii. 14; iv. 6,) producing tranquility of conscience, (Rom. viii. 15, 16,) power over sin, (Rom. viii. 1,) and a joyous hope of heaven. (Rom. xv. 18; Gal. v. 3.) We must not forget that the justification of a sinner does not in the least degree alter or diminish the evil nature and desert of sin. Though by an act of Divine clemency, the penalty is remitted, and the obligation to suffer that penalty is dissolved; still it is naturally due, though graciously remitted. Hence appear the propriety and duty of continuing to confess and lament even pardoned sin with a lowly and contrite heart. (Ezek. xvi. 62.)—See FAITH, and WORKS.

JUSTUS = just, upright. 1. A Christian at Corinth with whom Paul lodged. (Acts xviii. 7.) 2.—See BARBARAS, and JESUS.

JUTTAH = extended, or inclined. A city in the south of Judah, assigned to the priests. (Josh. xv. 53; xxi. 16.) It is now a Mohammedan village, called Yatta. In Luke i. 39, the “city of Judah” is written by a corruption, instead of the “city of Juttah.”

KABZEEL.—See JEBANEEL.

KADESH = sacred, consecrated. A place in the south-eastern extremity of Judah, adjacent to Idumea, where the Hebrews twice encamped with the intention of entering the Promised Land, and whence they were twice sent back. (Gen. xiv. 7; xvi. 14; xx. 1; Num. xiii. 26; xx. 14, 16, 22; xxxiii. 36, 37; Judg. xi. 16, 17.) Here was a fountain called “Ennishpat” = fountain of judgment; (Gen. xiv. 7;) also called the “waters of Meribah;” (Deut. xxxii. 51;) and the adjacent desert was called the “wilderness of Kadesh.” (Ps. xxxix. 8.) Kadesh is also called “Kadesh-barnea” = doomed wandering. (Num. xxxii. 8; xxxiv. 4; Deut. i. 2, 19; ii. 14; Josh. x. 41.) Dr. Robinson says, “These notices go to fix the site of Kadesh in the western part of the Arabah south of the Dead sea, probably at the fountain Ain-el-Weibeh, the most frequented watering place in all that region.”—See CAMP.

KADMIEL = minister of God. One of the Levites. (Ez. ii. 40; iii. 9; Neh. vii. 43; ix. 4; x. 9; xii. 8.)

KADMONITES = orientals. A Canaanitish tribe, which inhabited the north-eastern part of Palestine, about Mount Lebanon. (Gen. xv. 19.)

KAIN.—See KENITES.

KALLAI = swift messenger of Jehovah. One of the priests. (Neh. xii. 20.)

KANAH = place of reeds. 1. A stream on the borders of Ephraim and Manasseh. (Josh. vi. 8; xvii. 9.) 2. A city in Asher; (Josh. xix. 28;) now a large village called Kana, a few miles south-east from Tyre.

KAREAH.—See CAREAH.

KARKAA = foundation, bottom. A place in the south of Judah. (Josh. xv. 3.)

KARKOR = foundation. A place beyond the Jordan. (Judg. viii. 10.)

KARNAIM.—See ASHEROTH.

KARTAH = city. A place in Zebulun. (Josh. xxi. 34.)

KARTAN = two cities. A city in Naphtali; (Josh. xxi. 32;) also called “Kirjathaim.” (1 Chron. vi. 76.)

KATTATH = small. A place in Zebulun. (Josh. xix. 15.)

KEDAR = dark skin, dark-skinned. A son of Ishmael; (Gen. xxv. 13;) also an Arabian tribe descended from him. (Isa. xxi. 16, 17; xlii. 11; lx. 7; Jer. ii. 10; xlix. 28; Ezek. xxvii. 21; Sol. Song i. 6.) They are the Ceduoi of Pliny. (Hist. Nat. v. 11.)

In
Pa. cxx. 5, "Kedar" and "Mescheh" are put for barbarous tribes.

KEDEMMAH = eastward. A son of Ishmael. (Gen. xxxv. 15.)

KEDEMOTH = beginning. A city in Reuben, near the Arnon; (Josh. xiii. 18; xxxi. 37; 1 Chron. vi. 79;) which gave its name to the adjacent wilderness. (Deut. ii. 26.)

KEDESH = sanctuary. 1. A city of refuge in Naphtali. It was situated about eighteen miles from Tyre, and not far from the western sources of the Jordan. It lay upon the hills west of Lake Huleh, and still exists under the Arabic name Kedès. (Josh. xii. 22; xix. 37; xxxi. 32; Judg. iv. 6, 9, 10; 1 Chron. vi. 76.) 2. A city in the southern part of Judah. (Josh. xv. 23.) 3. A city in Issachar; (1 Chron. vii. 22;) also called "Kishion" = hardness; (Josh. xix. 20;) and "Kishon." (Josh. xxxi. 28.)

KEHELATHAH = convocation. A station of the Hebrews in the desert. (Num. xxxii. 22, 23.)

KEILA = a lofty place. A city in Judah, about twenty miles southwest from Jerusalem. (Josh. xv. 44; 1 Sam. xxiii. 1–18; 1 Chron. iv. 19; Neh. iii. 17, 18.)

KELAIHAH = swift messenger of Jehovah. One of the Levites; also called "Kelita" = dwarf. (Ex. x. 23; Neh. viii. 7; x. 10.)

KELITA = See Keliaiah.

KEMUEL = assembly of God. 1. A son of Nahor. (Gen. xxii. 21.) 2. The son of Shiphtan. (Num. xxxiv. 24.) 3. One of the Levites. (1 Chron. xxvii. 17.)

KENAN = See Cainan.

KENATH = possession. A city east of the Jordan, on the western slopes of Jebel Hauran. It was also called "Nobah" = a barking, from the Hebrew who conquered it. (Num. xxxii. 42; 1 Chron. ii. 23.) It is now called Kunavat; and is remarkable for the ruins of temples, palaces, and theatres, with many Greek inscriptions. (Josh. xiii. 30; Judg. viii. 11.)

KENAZ = hunting. 1. An Edomite descended from Esau; who gave name to an Arabian region. (Gen. xxxvi. 11, 15, 42.) 2. The grandfather of Otniel, the brother of Caleb. (Josh. xv. 17; Judg. i. 19; 1 Chron. iv. 13.) The family is called the "Kenite." (Num. xxxii. 12; Josh. xiv. 6, 14.) 3. A grandson of Caleb; (1 Chron. iv. 15;) called "Uknaz," in the margin.

KENITES =smiths. One of the tribes dwelling in Canaan in the time of Abraham. (Gen. xv. 19.) When driven from Canaan, they are spoken of as dwelling near the Ammonites and Moabites; (Num. xxiv. 21, 22;) and still later among the Amalekites. (1 Sam. xiv. 6; xxvii. 10.) For the sake of Jethro, the Kenites were saved from the destruction which came upon the Amalekites. (Judg. i. 16; iv. 11, 17; v. 24.) The Rechabites resident in Palestine were also Kenites. (1 Chron. ii. 55; Jer. xxxvi. 2.) In Num. xxiv. 22, margin, we have "Kain," properly rendered "Kenite." Some of the Kenites, according to an ancient prediction, appear to have been carried into exile with the Hebrews; (Num. xxiv. 21, 22;) and the account of their captivity is duly recorded on the Assyrian sculptures.

KENIZITES = hunters. A Canaanitish tribe. (Gen. xv. 19.)

KERCHIEFS.—See Handkerchiefs.

KEREN-HAPPUCH = paint-horn. One of Job's daughters. (Job xlii. 14.)

KERIOTH = cities. 1. A city in the tribe of Judah; probably the ruined village el-Kurein, not a great way from Arad. (Josh. xv. 25.) 2. A city in Moab; also written "Kirioth." (Jer. xliv. 24, 41; Am. ii. 2.)

Keros = a weaver's comb. One of the Nethinim. (Ex. iv. 44; Neh. vii. 47.)

KESITAH = weighed out. A certain weight, especially of gold or silver, by which, as also by the shekel, money was estimated in the time of the patriarchs. It probably contained about four shekels. In Gen. xxxiii. 19, the word kesitah is rendered "pieces of money;" margin, "lambs." (Acts vii. 16;) in Josh. xxiv. 32, "pieces of silver," margin, "lamb's," and in Job xlii. 11, "piece of money." In these passages the Hebrew word kesiath, like the word shekel, would have been better retained in the version.—See SHEKEL.
KET

KETTLE. The Hebrew word dad, properly signifies a boiler, pot, or kettle. (1 Sam. xiii. 14.) In the British Museum may be seen Egyptian and Assyrian bronze boilers, kettles, dceans, and pans; some of them of tasteful form, and engraved with mythological devices, which appear to have been used in the temples and palaces.

KETURAH = incense. The second wife of Abraham, whom he married after the death of Sarah. She bore him six sons, who were all settled in the "east country." (Gen. xxv. 1, 2, 6; I Chron. i. 32.)

KEY. The keys of the ancients were large, and generally made of wood. The term "key" is frequently used as the symbol of power or authority. Hence Christ is said to possess "the key of the house of David." (Isa. xxii. 22; Rev. iii. 7.) He also has the "keys of hell and of death." (Rev. i. 18; ix. 1; xx. 1. The gift of the keys of the kingdom of heaven implied no supremacy conferred upon Peter, as the power or authority of opening the church of God to all believers, Jew and Gentile, and the binding or closing up the ritual of the Jewish dispensation is applied equally to all the Apostles. (Matt. xvi. 19; xviii. 18; Acts ii. 14; x. 23; xv. 7—11; xxi. 24.) The "key of knowledge," is the power of attaining to true knowledge. (Luke xi. 25; xxiv. 32; Matt. xxiii. 18.)—See BIND.

KEZIA = cassia. One of Job's daughters. (Job xliii. 14.)

KEZIZ = stripped or cut off. A valley in the tribe of Benjamin. (Josh. xviii. 21.)

KIBROTH-HATTAAVAH = graves of longing. A station of the Hebrews in the desert. (Num. xii. 34, 35; xxxiii. 16, 17; Deut. ix. 22.)

KIBZAIM.—See JOKHEBM.

KID. The young of the goat was reckoned a great delicacy among the ancients; (Gen. xxvii. 9; xxxviii. 17; Judg. vi. 19; xiv. 6; I Sam. xvi. 20;) and it still continues to be a choice dish among the Arabs. The Hebrews were forbidden to dress a kid in the milk, or perhaps butter or fat, of its dam. (Ex. xxii. 19; xxxiv. 26; Deut. xiv. 21.) Kids were also among the sacrificial offerings. (Ex. xii. 8, margin; Lev. iv. 23—26; Num. vii. 16—87.)

KIDRON = the turbid. The brook or winter torrent which flows in the ravine which takes its origin above a mile to the north-east of Jerusalem. The ravine of the "Kidron" or "Cedron" forms an angle opposite the temple, then takes a south-east direction, and passing through the Valley of Jehoshaphat, between Jerusalem and the Mount of Olives, enters a singularly wild gorge, having several precipices in its bed, from ten to twelve feet high, down which catacarts plunge in winter, and finally empties its waters into the Dead sea. The Greek convent, Santa Saba, is situated in this gorge; and the sides of the desolate chalky limestone mountains contain innumerable caverns, which once formed a sort of troglodyte city, in which the early Christians probably resided. (2 Sam. xv. 23, margin; 1 Kings ii. 27; xv. 13; 2 Kings xxii. 4; Jer. xxxi. 40; John xviii. 1.)—See JEHOSIIAPLAT, VALLEY OF.

KIKAJON.—See GOURD.

KINAH = song. A town in Judah. (Josh. xv. 22.)

KINE.—See Cow.

KING. The title of a chief ruler. It is applied in the Scriptures to God, as the sole proper Sovereign and Ruler of the universe; (1 Tim. i. 17;) and to Christ, the Son of God, the sole Head and Governor of His church; (1 Tim. vi. 15, 16; Matt. xxvi. 11; Luke xix. 38; John i. 49; xvii. 33, 34;) also to the people of God, who are called "kings and priests." (Ps. xlix. 14; Dan. vii. 22, 27; Matt. xix. 28; Luke xxii. 29, 30; 1 Cor. vi. 2, 3; 2 Tim. ii. 12; Rev. i. 6; ii. 26, 27; iii. 21; v. 10; xxii. 5.) When applied to men, as invested with regal authority by their fellows, the term “king” does not always imply the same degree of power or importance; inasmuch as “chiefs” or “leaders” are called “kings”—so Moses was called “king in Jeshurun.” (Gen. xiv. 18; Judg. ix. 6; Deut. xxxiii. 4, 5.) As there were kings of single towns, we need not be surprised at seeing so small a country as Canaan containing so many kings before its conquest by the Hebrews. (Josh. xii. 9, 24; Judg. i. 7; 1 Kings iv. 21; xx. 1, 16.) As Jehovah was in reality the Supreme King of the Hebrews, they were governed, first by elders; then by rulers; and then by judges. But in the old age of Samuel, the last of the judges, the tribes, as had anciently been predicted, strenuously demanded a king, in order to be like the surrounding nations. (1 Sam. viii. 19; Gen. xvii. 16; Deut. xxvii. 8.) In obedience to the Divine direction, Samuel appointed Saul, the son of Kish, as their monarch. (1 Sam. vii. 22; x. 1.) According to the principles of the theocracy the elected king was to act as the viceroy and vassal of Jehovah; the laws of the constitution were sworn to by him, and the record thereof was deposited in the holy place before the throne of Jehovah, the invisible king. (1 Sam. x. 24, 25.) The authority of the Hebrew kings was by no means absolute; although they, on some occasions, evinced a strong disposition towards despotism. (Deut. xvii. 14—20; 1 Sam. xi. 5, 7; xxii. 17, 18.) The succession of the royal house depended on the will of Jehovah, who announced by His prophets, the succession of the family of David, in the kingdom of Judah; and of the different families in the kingdom of Israel.

KINGDOM OF HEAVEN. The phrases, “kingdom of God,” (Matt. vi. 33; Mark i. 14, 15; Luke iv. 43; vi. 20; John iii. 3, 5,) “kingdom of Christ,” (Matt. xiii. 41; xx. 21; Rev. i. 9,) “kingdom of Christ and of God,” (Eph. v. 5,) “kingdom of David,” (Mark xi. 10,) “the kingdom,” (Matt. viii. 12; xiii. 19; ix. 35, and “kingdom of heaven,” (Matt. iii. 2; iv. 17; xiii. 11, 31, 33, 44, 47; 2 Tim. iv. 18,) designate the spiritual kingdom of the Messiah, i.e. the Gospel dispensation. The idea of this kingdom has its basis in the prophecies, where the coming of the Messiah and his triumphs are foretold. (Ps. ii. 6—12; ci. 1—7; Isa. ii. 1—4; Mic. iv. 1; Isa. xi. 1—10; Jer. xxxiii. 5—6; xxxi. 31, 34; xxxii. 37—44; xxxiii. 14—18; Ezek. xxxiv. 25—31; xxxvii. 24—28; Dan. ii. 44; vii. 14, 27; ix. 25, 27.) These predictions were doubtless to be understood of a spiritual theocracy, and so they were received by Zacharias, Simeon, Anna, and Joseph. (Luke i. 67—79; ii. 25—30; xxiii. 50, 51.) But the Jews at large, and even the Apostles, for some time gave to these prophecies a temporal meaning; and expected a Messiah who should come as king, free them from the yoke of foreign dominion, and at length reign over the whole earth. (Matt. v. 19; viii. 12; xviii. 1; xx. 21; Luke xvii. 20; xix. 11; Acts i. 6.) Jesus, in accordance with the higher sense of these predictions, delivered his people from the thraldom of error and of sin, and brought them from the kingdom of darkness to the kingdom of light. The people thus redeemed from the power or kingdom of Satan, though still in a world of suffering, live in the enjoyment of life eternal, consisting in internal fellowship with God, which ever grows and reaches its perfection only in another life. In this spiritual community, of which Jesus is the Head, the prime element is mind, pious, devoted to God, in which He reigns supreme. Hence, the subjects of this theocracy are represented, rather, as the family of which God is the Father; than as the State, of which He is the King. (Matt. iii. 2; iv. 17, 23; ix. 35; x. 7; Mark i. 14, 15; Luke KIN

x. 9, 11; xxiii. 51; Acts xxvii. 31.) This spiritual kingdom, in its internal and spiritual form, already exists, in the reign of grace, in the hearts of all Christians. (Rom. xiv. 17; Matt. vi. 30; Mark x. 15; Luke xvii. 21; xviii. 17; John iii. 3, 5; 1 Cor. iv. 20.) It “suffereth violence,” implying the eagerness with which the truly penitent receive Christ. (Matt. xi. 12; Luke xvi. 6.) In its external form, it is embodied in the church of Christ, and so far is present; and progressive, until the world is converted; (Matt. vi. 10; xii. 28; xiii. 24, 31, 33, 41, 47; xvi. 19, 28; Mark iv. 30; xi. 10; Luke xiii. 18, 20; Acts xix. 8; Heb. ii. 28;) and it is to be perfected in the future glory of the Redeemer’s kingdom in heaven. (Matt. viii. 11; xxv. 34; xxi. 29; Mark ix. 47; Luke xiii. 18, 29; Acts xiv. 22; 1 Cor. vi. 9, 20; xv. 50; Gal. v. 21; Eph. v. 5; 2 Thess. i. 5; 2 Tim. iv. 18; James ii. 5; Rev. xii. 10.) The kingdom of Christ, of which “there shall be no end,” is sometimes spoken of, both in the internal and external sense, and referring both to its commencement in this world, and its completion in the world to come. (Matt. v. 3, 10, 20; vii. 21; xi. 11; xiii. 11, 12, xviii. 3, 4; Col. i. 13; 1 Thess. ii. 12; Luke i. 33.) In 1 Cor. xv. 24—26, it is said “He shall deliver up the kingdom to God even the Father.” This refers to the mediatorial dominion, which office, when accomplished, He will resign for ever; while the reign of Christ, as God Suprême, will never cease. “His throne,” in the empire of the universe, “is for ever and ever.” (Heb. i. 8.)

KINGS. The two books of Kings are a continuation of the two books of Samuel; and contain the history of the Jewish kings from the reign of Solomon down to the Exile. These books have evidently a prophetic origin; but who the author was, is not known. The Talmud attributes the authorship to Jeremiah. They were certainly completed before the return from the Babylonish exile.

The author was inspired to employ written documents as the basis of his work; such as State papers; records by Isaiah; the books of the Acts of Solomon; the Kings of Israel, and the Chronicles of the Kings of Judah. (1 Kings xiv. 19; xvi. 5, 20, 27; xxii. 39; xv. 7.) The books contain predictions of the Babylonish Exile; (2 Kings xx. 17;) the destruction of the temple; (1 Kings ix. 7, 8;) the dispersion of the people; (1 Kings xiv. 15;) and the return from Exile. (1 Kings viii. 47.)

KIR = a walled place. A region and people subject to the Assyrian empire. (Isa. xxii. 6; 2 Kings xvi. 9; Am. i. 5; ix. 7.) Probably Gurgistan or Georgia, on the river Cyrus or Kur, which empties itself into the Caspian Sea.

KIR-HARASETH.—See Kir-Moab.

KIR-HARESH.—See Kir-Moab.

KIR-HERES.—See Kir-Moab.

KIRIOTH.—See Kerioth.

KIRJATH.—See Kirjath-Jearim.

KIRJATHAIM = double city. 1. A place in Reuben; (Num. xxii. 37; Josh. xiii. 19;) afterwards subject to Moab. Also written “Kiriatihaim.” (Jer. xlviii. 1, 28; Ezek. xxv. 9.) 2. See Kartan.

KIRJATH-ARBA.—See Hebron.

KIRJATH-ARIM.—See Kir-Jath-Jearim.

KIRJATH-BAAAL.—See Kir-Jath-Jearim.

KIRJATH-HUZOTH = city of streets. A city in Moab. (Num. xxii. 39.)

KIRJATH-JEARIM = city of forests. A city on the confines of Judah and Benjamin; (Josh. ix. 17; xviii. 14, 15; Judg. xviii. 12; 1 Sam. vi. 21; Jer. xxxvi. 20;) also called “Kirjath,” (Josh. xviii. 28;) “Kirjath-arim” = city of watchers; (Ex. ii. 25;) “Baalah,” (Josh. xv. 9;) and “Kirjath-Baal” = city of Baal. (Josh. xv. 60; xviii. 14.) This city may be recognised in the present village Kuryet-el-Enab = city of grapes; KIR

situated on the direct way from Jerusalem to Ramleh and Lydda. (1 Sam. vi. 21; vii. 1, 2.)

KIRJATH-SANNAH.—See Kirjath-Sephir.

KIRJATH-SEPHIR = city of the book. A city in the tribe of Judah; also called "Debir" = oracle; (Josh. x. 33; 39; xi. 21; xxi. 15; ) and "Kirjath-Sannah" = city of Palms. (Josh. xv. 49.) This place was probably an ancient Canaanitish seat of learning before the Hebrew invasion under Joshua. (Josh. xv. 7, 15, 16; Judg. i. 11, 12.)

KIR-MOAB = fortress of Moab. A city in the territory of Moab; (Isa. xv. 1; ) called also "Kir-Haraeth;" (2 Kings iii. 25; ) "Kir-Hareseth;" (Isa. xvi. 7; ) "Kir-Haresch;" (Isa. xvi. 11; ) and "Kir-Iltoros;" (Jer. lviii. 11, 36; ) each signifying brick-fortress. It is now called Kerak, which is also the name of the whole district. The town is situated a few miles east of the southern end of the Dead sea, upon the brow of a hill, 3,000 feet above the sea. The houses are a collection of stone huts, built without mortar, and without windows and chimneys. Kerak contains a population of about 300 families, three-fourths Christian. Some of the women tattoo their faces, like the South Sea islanders. The Christians are described as kind and as obling as the Muslims are insolent.

KISH = a bow. 1. The father of Saul. (1 Sam. ix. 1; xiv. 51; 1 Chron. viii. 33; ) 2. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 30; ix. 52; ) 3. A son of Mahli. (1 Chron. xxiii. 21, 22; xxiv. 29; ) 4. The son of Abdi. (2 Chron. xxix. 12; ) 5. The ancestor of Mordecai. (Est. ii. 5; )

KISHI.—See KUSHIAH.

KISHION.—See KEDESH.

KISHON = curved, winding. 1. A stream which rises near Mount Tabor, and, after traversing the plain of Jezreel, empties itself into the Mediterranean, in the bay of Acre, at the west of Carmel. (Judg. iv. 7; v. 21; ings xviii. 40; ) The Kishon, or "Kison," (Ps. lxxxiii. 9; ) now called el-Mukhatta, in traversing the plain from the western and southern parts of Tabor, is not now a permanent stream; but usually flows only during the season of rain, and for a short time afterwards. Yet the river, as it enters the sea, never becomes dry; and we must therefore seek for its perennial sources along the base of Mount Carmel. 2.—See KEDESH

KISON.—See KISSEH.

KISS. A mode of salutation; also a sign of affection; (Gen. xxvii. 26; 27; xxxix. 13; xxxi. 55; ) of friendship; (2 Sam. ix. 9; Ruth i. 14; Luke vii. 45; Acts x. 37; ) of homage to the king; (Ps. i. 12; 1 Sam. x. 1; ) and of idolatrous worship. (1 Kings xix. 18; ) It was usual to kiss the mouth; (Gen. xxxiii. 4; Ex. iv. 27; xvii. 7; 1 Sam. xx. 41; Prov. xxiv. 26; Sol. Song i. 2; or the beard; (3 Sam. xx. 9; Matt. xvi. 49; ) and also the feet. (Luke vii. 45; ) Kissing the hand was an idolatrous token of adoration. (Job xxxi. 27; Hos. xiii. 2; ) To lick or kiss the dust was a token of subjection. (Isa. xlix. 28; Mic. vii. 17; Ps. lxix. 9; ) In the early church the kiss of peace was in use among the faithful, as a token of charity and union. (Rom. xvi. 16; 1 Cor. xvi. 20; 2 Cor. xiii. 12; 1 Thess. v. 26; 1 Pet. v. 14; )

KITE. The Hebrew word awyaḥ, rendered "kite;" (Lev. xi. 14; Deut. xiv. 18; ) and "vulture;" (Job xxviii. 7; ) properly signifies cry, clamour, hence the name of a bird of prey, unclean, also keen sighted. Probably a species of falcon or hawk, called by the Arabs ayyu, i. e. falco asalon, called in English merlin.

KITHLISH = a man's wall. A town in the tribe of Judah. (Josh. xiv. 40; )

KITRON = knotty. A town of Zebulun. (Judg. i. 38; )

KITTIM.—See CHITTIM.

KNEADING-TRough.—See BREAD.

KNIFE. The knives used by the Hebrews, were doubtless similar to those used by the Egyptians. In the British Museum, various specimens of ancient Egyptian knives may be seen; the blades are of bronze, steatite, and iron; some of the handles are composed of agate or hematite.
KNO

KNOP. An ornament of the golden candlestick, probably resembling a pomegranate. (Ex. xxv. 31—34; xxxvii. 17—22.)

KNOWLEDGE, TREE OF.—See LIFE, TREE OF.

KO = he-camel, stallion. This word is used tropically, for a prince, noble. (Ezek. xxiii. 23.)

KOHATH = assembly. A son of Levi, and head of the “Kohathites,” who were appointed to carry the ark and sacred vessels of the tabernacle. (Gen. xlvii. 11; Ex. vi. 16; Num. iii. 37; Josh. xxi. 4.)

KOLAI = voice of Jehovah. 1. The father of Ahab. (1 Kings xxix. 21.)
2. A descendant of Benjamin. (Neh. xi. 7.)

KORAI = ice, hail. 1. A son of Esau. (Gen. xxxvi. 5, 14.)
2. A son of Eliphaz, and ancestor of an Edomish tribe. (Gen. xxxvi. 16.)
3. A Levite, who rebelled against Moses, with Dathan and Abiram, and with them was swallowed up by the opening of the earth. (Ex. vi. 21, 24; Num. xvi. 1—50; xxxvi. 9—11.) The descendants of Korah, or “Core,” (Jude 11.), called “Korhites,” “Korahites,” and “Korathites,” were a celebrated family of singers and poets in the time of David. (Num. xxxvi. 59; 1 Chron. ix. 19; xii. 6; xxxvi. 1.) Ten of the Psalms are attributed to them. (Ps. xlii. xlv. xlvii. xlviii. xli. lxxxiv. lxxxv. lxxxvii. lxxxviii.)
4. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. ii. 48.)

KORE = a partridge. A descendant of Korah. (1 Chron. ix. 19; xxvi. 1; 2 Chron. xxxi. 14.)

KORHITES. See KORAH.

KOZ = a thorn. A descendant of Levi; (Ex. xxii. 61; Neh. vi. 4, 21; vii. 63;) also called “Hakkoz.” (1 Chron. xxiv. 19.)

KUSHAI = bow of Jehovah, i.e.
tends greatly, by separating men from each other, to restrain them from the excesses of evil. Moreover, by experiencing the toils and hardships of life, man becomes more resigned to quit this world when commanded away by death, and is stimulated to fix his hopes of happiness on another and a better state of existence.

LABOURER.—See Hirpling.

LACE. The Hebrew word pathil, rendered “lace;” (Ex. xxvii. 38; 37;) “thread;” (Judg. xvi. 9;) and “line;” (Ezek. xi. 8;) designates the cord or string by which the signet-ring was suspended in the bosom. (Gen. xxxviii. 18, 25.)

LACHISH = smitten, captured, or the tenacious, i.e. impregnable. A fortified city in the plain of Judah. Anciendy the seat of a Canaanite king. (Josh. x. 3; xii. 11; xv. 39; 2 Chron. xi. 9; Neh. xi. 30; Jer. xxxiv. 7; Mic. i. 13.) Mr. Layard discovered in the ruins of the palace of Sennacherib, at Kouyunjik, several slabs, representing the siege and capture of Lachish, in the time of Hesekiah. On the bas-reliefs, Sennacherib is represented on his throne, with a cuneiform inscription above his head: “Sennacherib, the mighty king, king of the country of Assyria, sitting on the throne of judgment, before the city of Lachish, I give permission for its slaughter.” (2 Kings xvii. 14, 17; xix. 8; Isa. xxxvi. 2; xxxviii. 8.)

LAEL = of God. One of the Levites. (Num. iii. 24.)

LAHAD = oppression. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 2.)

LAHMAN = provisions. A place in the plain of Judah; (Josh. xv. 40;) several copies read “Lahmas.”

LAHMI = food.—See Elhanan.

LAISH = a lion. The father of Phalti or Phaltiel. (1 Sam. xxv. 44; 2 Sam. iii. 15.)—See Dan.

LAKE.—See Sea.

LAKUM = way stopper, i.e. a fortified place. A place in Naphtali. (Josh. xix. 33.)

LAMB. The young of the sheep, though the Hebrew word means also the kid or young of the goat; and by the Mosaic law it is expressly provided that the sacrifice of the passover might be either a lamb or a kid. (Ex. xii. 5.) Sundry peculiar enactments are contained in the same law, respecting the qualities of the animal. (Ex. xiii. 19; xxxvi. 19; Lev. xxii. 27.)—See Kid.

LAM OF GOD. This symbolical appellation applied to Jesus Christ, in John i. 29, 36, does not refer merely to the character or disposition of the Saviour; inasmuch as He is also called “the Lion of the tribe of Judah.” (Rev. v. 5.) Neither can the appellation signify the most excellent lamb, as a sort of Hebrew superlative. The term Lamb is simply used, in this case, to signify the Sacrifice, i.e. the Sacrificial-victim, of which the former sacrifices were typical. (Num. vi. 12; Lev. iv. 32; v. 6, 18; xiv. 13—17.) So the prophet understood it: “He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter;” (Isa. liii. 7;) and Paul: “For even Christ, our passover,” i.e. our passover-lamb, “is sacrificed for us.” (1 Cor. v. 7; compare Pet. i. 18, 19.) As the lamb was the symbol of sacrifice, the Redeemer is called “the Sacrifice of God,” or the Divine Sacrifice. (John i. 14; compare 1 John xx. 28; Acts xx. 28; Rom. ix. 5; 1 Tim. iii. 16; Tit. ii. 13.) As the Baptist pointed to the Divinity of the Redeemer’s Sacrifice, he knew, that in this consisted its efficacy to remove the sin of the world. The dignity of the Sacrifice, whose blood alone has an atoning efficacy for the sin of the world, is acknowledged in heaven. In the symbolic scenery, John beheld “a Lamb, as it had been slain, having seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven spirits of God,” i.e. invested with the attributes of God, omnipotence and omniscience, raised to the throne of universal empire, and receiving the homage of the universe. (1 Cor. xv. 25; Phil. ii. 9—11; 1 John iii. 8; Heb. x. 5—17; Rev. v. 8—14.)

LAMECH = the taster. 1. A son of Methusael, a descendant of Cain.
LAM

(Gen. iv. 18—24.) He is notorious as the first polygamist: “he took unto him two wives.” He appears also to have been the first to misuse the arms invented by his son, by slaying a man who had assaulted him; and his address to quiet the apprehensions of his wives, who entertained fears for his safety, is the most ancient relic of poetry extant. 2. The son of Methuselah, and father of Noah. (Gen. v. 28—31.)

LAMENTATIONS. This book is without an inscription, but from the most ancient times it has been attributed to Jeremiah. The contents, the tender and pathetic style, accord entirely with this tradition. Though Jeremiah composed an elegiac ode on the occasion of Josiah’s death, (2 Chron. xxxv. 25,) this book does not seem to exhibit it. The holy city, its solemnities, its feasts, its people gone into captivity, the horrors of the siege, the famine and pestilence that ensued, and the like, constitute the whole burden of the elegies. The first four chapters of the book are in the acrostic form; every verse or couplet beginning with a letter of the Hebrew alphabet, in regular order. The first and second chapters contain twenty-two verses, according to the letters of the alphabet; the third chapter has triplets beginning with the same letter; and the fourth is like the first two, having twenty-two verses.

LAN

and the oil used in them was olive oil of the finest quality. (Ex. xxvii. 20.) The wicks were probably the outer and coarser fibres of flax. Some of the lamps, perhaps lanterns, for the open air, appear to have been covered at the top, and furnished with handles. (Judg. vii. 16, 20; Ezek. i. 13; Matt. xxv. 1—10; John xviii. 3.) The “burning lamp,” was a symbol of an unbroken succession. (3 Sam. xxxi. 17; 1 Kings xi. 36; xv. 4; Ps. cxxxii. 17.) And the “putting out” of the lamp denoted the ruin and extinction of the family. (Job xviii. 5, 6; xxxi. 17; xxix. 3; Prov. xiii. 9; xx. 20; xxxi. 18; Jer. xxv. 10, 11.)

LANCE.—See SPEAR.

LAND.—See EARTH.

LANDMARK. When the promised Land was divided by lot, the importance of preserving accurately the boundaries of individual or family possessions would be obvious. Hence, to prevent mistakes and litigation, the fields were marked off by stones set up on the limits, which could not be removed without incurring the wrath of heaven. (Deut. xix. 14; xxvii. 17; Prov. xxiii. 11.)

LANGUAGE. Before the dispersion of the Babel builders, there was but one language, and that one the universal language of all mankind: “And the whole earth was of one language, and of one speech.” (Gen. xi. 1—9.) This one primeval and universal language was no arbitrary, artificial, and gradual invention of the reflective understanding, neither was it given by superior communication, but was a necessary and organic product of the mind, with which the Creator inspired the first human pair, and was developed contemporaneously with the activity of thought. The first man is represented as conversing with God, and giving to each animal its particular name—a fact which took place before the creation of his wife, and, therefore, before he felt the necessity of inventing language, by his position in society. (Gen. ii. 19, 20.) Indeed, language taken in its completest sense, with its roots and its structure, its pronunciation and written character, would seem to have had a natural and spontaneous origin with the first man, when he came into existence, with the intellect and sympathies of humanity ripened and in full maturity. This primeval language may have been essentially the same as the Hebrew, which continued, not only to the time of the confusion of Babel, but passed onwards, mainly through the faithful descendants of Shem, and continued in their line down to the times of sacred and profane history. Though the language of the whole human family was but one, down to the time of the dispersion of the Babel builders; yet now we find this primeval tongue separated into many and strangely different languages. As the dispersion of the people was evidently sudden and miraculous, in order to frustrate the attempt at premature centralisation, the diversity of tongues may have been the immediate result of it, and not necessarily the cause of it. At the dispersion, there was introduced a divergence of the primordial language into varieties of dialect, and each variety became a proper language, and ultimately the parent of a group or family. Since the first confusion, the number of languages has increased, by the springing up of new ones, phoenix-like, from the remains of others, as the Italian and French from the Latin. It has been estimated, by Adelung and Vater, that the total number of languages, and dialects, known in the world, is about 8,000:—1,000 in Asia; 500 in Europe; 800 in Africa; and 1,200 in America. Most of these are mere dialects, or variations of other tongues; so that the whole number may be reduced to about 80 original languages; and these may be arranged in a few large groups of families, say ten or twelve; those of each family having doubtless a common origin. However insulated certain languages may at first appear, however singular their caprices and their idioms, the most learned philologists and ethnographers have shown that there is a universal affinity among them; which scarcely appears explicable on any other hypothesis than that of admitting fragments of a primary language yet to exist, through all the languages of the old and new worlds; everywhere evidencing the truthfulness of the Inspired Record, concerning a former point of departure, and the division of the human race into certain great characteristic families. Like those grouped but disunited masses, which geologists consider as the ruins of former mountains, we see in the various dialects of the globe the wrecks of a vast monument belonging to the ancient world. The nice exactness of their tallies in many parts, the veins of similar appearance which may be traced from one to the other, show that they have been once connected so as to form a whole; while the boldness and roughness of outline at the points of separation prove, that partly by sudden disruption, and partly by gradual devolution, they have been riven in sunder. In order to give an impetus to the religion of Christ, the disciples were supernaturally endowed with the ability to speak in various languages, without having gone through the process of learning them. (Acts ii. 4-11; x. 46; I Cor. xii. 10-30.) It is gratifying to know that the Bible has been translated, wholly or in part, into 168 languages, including those which are deemed the most important; and exists in 180 versions.

LAODICEA = people, i. e. worshippers of Dike or Nemesis, the goddess of justice. The chief city of Phrygia, Piacatana, in Asia Minor, situated on the river Lycus, a little above its junction with the Meander. (Col. i. 1; iv. 18-16; Rev. i. 11; iii. 14-22.) This splendid city is now an extensive heap of desolate ruins, and is known among the Turks of the neighbouring towns by the name of "Eski-hissar"—the Old Castle.
LAP

LAPIDOTH = torches. The husband of Deborah. (Judg. iv. 4.)

LAPPING. Among the Arabs, lapping, or throwing water into the mouth with the hand, is a common and very expeditious way of drinking water from a stream or fountain. It was the test of dexterity in Gideon’s men. (Judg. vii. 5, 6.)

LAPWING. The Hebrew word daqaphath, rendered “lapwing,” is probably the hoopoe; a beautiful but unclean bird, with fawn-coloured plumage, barred with black and white. (Lev. xi. 19; Deut. xiv. 18.)

LASEA = stony region. A maritime city of Crete. (Acts xxvii. 8.)

LASHA = chasm, or fountains.

A place on the eastern shore of the Dead sea; afterwards called Callirrhoæ, and celebrated for its warm springs. (Gen. x. 19.) Herod’s castle, Macheraus, was situated above the fountain. The Zurka Main is the outlet of the hot streams of Callirrhoæ. The stream rushes with great velocity into the Dead sea, between lofty banks of red and yellow sandstone, fringed with canes, tamarisks, and the castor-bean. The water is tepid, and a little sulphurous to the taste. The fountains were discovered by Anah. (Gen. xxxvi. 24.)—See MUL.

LASHARON.—See SHARON.

LATCHET.—See SANDAL.

LATIN. The language of the ancient Romans. (John xix. 20.)

LATTICE.—See HOUSE.

LAUGH. This term is employed to denote joy; (Gen. xxii. 6; Ps. cxxxvi. 2; Ecc. iii. 4; Luke xi. 21;) merriment; (Gen. xviii. 13; Ecc. ii. 2; James iv. 9;) or conscious security. (Job v. 22.) When used concerning God, it signifies that He disregards the person or subject. (Ps. lii. 4; lxix. 8; Prov. l. 26.)

LAVEN. The circular vessel used in the tabernacle service, formed of the brass mirrors presented by the devout women. (Ex. xxx. 16—28; xxxxi. 9; xxxvii. 8; xl. 30—32.) In the temple, the large brass laver, or "molten sea," was capable of containing 3,000 baths = 22,500 gallons. (2 Chron. iv. 2—6.) There were also ten smaller brassen lavers, each containing 40 baths = 300 gallons. The water of the lavers was used for the personal ablutions of the priests; and for washing the flesh of the victims that were sacrificed. (1 Kings vii. 27—39.)

LAW. This term, in reference to intelligent and voluntary agents, may be defined a rule of conduct; but in reference to inanimate objects, it denotes merely a mode of existence, or an order of sequence. Laws may be distinguished as either Divine or Human: the former emanating directly from the will of God; and its requirements and sanctions are not the dictates of the mere or sovereign will of the Deity, but the results of the real nature of things and the propriety of relations: the latter framed by men; though they are wise and safe only when they conform to the Divine law. Over the physical universe God rules according to certain fixed principles, some of which He has enabled mortals to discover; and they have called them laws of nature. Over the universe of intellectual beings, who act from volitions and are governed by motives, He rules also by certain fixed principles; and these are the laws of the moral world, which must be of immutable and eternal obligation. Our knowledge of them is derived from Himself; partly as He has implanted them in the moral instincts of our nature, partly as He has made them discoverable by our reasoning powers, and partly as He has given them clear expression by the voice of revelation. (Rom. ii. 14, 15.) All the prohibitions and requirements of the moral law lie in the single idea of justice, that is, rendering to every being that which, in right, he ought to have. The Decalogue comprises the great principles of the moral law. (Ex. xx. 1—17.) Our Lord reduces these precepts, and every moral injunction of "the law and the prophets,” to two: (Matt. xxii. 38—40; Mark xii. 29—33) and the Apostle still further contracts them into one—LOVE to all with whom we have to do, which is the spirit and source of law, the transcript of the Divine mind. (Rom. xiii. 8—10; Gal. v. 14.) Well has Hooker said: “Of law there can be no less acknowledged, than that her seat is the bosom of God, her voice the harmony of the world; all things in heaven and in earth do her homage, the very least as feeling her care, and the greatest as not exempted from her power; both angels and men, and creatures of what condition soever, though each in different sort and manner, yet all, with uniform consent, admiring her as the mother of their peace and joy.” We cannot depend upon our obedience to the law for justification, but on the grace of God through Christ, inasmuch as Christians are freed from the law as a covenant of works, but still bound to it as a rule of life. (Rom. iv. 12—14; iv. 14; vii. 1—6; Gal. ii. 19—31; iii. 10—12; v. 18.) The term “law” is also used for the Mosaic code; (Deut. i. 5; iv. 44; John i. 17; vii. 19; Matt. v. 18; xxii. 36; Acts vii. 53; Rom. ii. 13—15; Gal. iii. 10—12; 1 Kings ii. 3; 2 Kings xxii. 25;) “called also the law of the Lord.” (Ps. xix. 7; xxxvii. 31; Isa. v. 24; Luke ii. 39.) The Mosaic institution, which was typical and prophetic, is called the “law,” and was fulfilled, rather than abrogated by Christ, when the Holy Spirit was poured out on the day of Pentecost. (Matt. v. 17, 18; Luke x. 26—28; Acts ii. 16—21.) The term “law” also denotes the book of the law, the Pentateuch; (2 Kings xiv. 6; Josh. xxiv. 26; Deut. xxviii. 61; Matt. xii. 5; Luke ii. 29;) “the Law and the Prophets;” (Matt. v. 17; Luke xvi. 16; Acts xiii. 13;) the old Testament. (John x. 34; xv. 25; comp. Ps. xxxv. 19; 1 Cor. xiv. 21; Isa. xxviii. 11, 12.) A copy of the Law was deposited in the side of the ark for preservation. (Deut. xxxi. 26.) The term “law” also designates the Christian dispensation; (James i. 25; ii. 12; iv. 11;) and the precepts of the gospel. (Rom. xiii. 9, 10; Gal. vi. 2; v. 23.)

LAWYERS. See Doctor of the Law.

LAZARUS = God is his help. 1. The brother of Mary and Martha of Bethany, raised by Jesus from the dead. (John xi. 1—43; xii. 1—17.) 2. The poor man named in our Lord’s parable, in which is illustrated the retributions of eternity. (Luke xvi. 20—23.)

LEAD. This metal is widely diffused; and was employed by the Egyptians chiefly as an alloy with more precious metals. Portions of lead have also been found in the Assyrian ruins. (Ex. xv. 10; Job xix. 23, 24.) It was also used for purifying silver, and even gold. (Jer. vi. 29.) The Hebrews appear to have obtained lead and other metals from Tarshish. (Ezek. xvii. 12.) They also used leaden weights; (Zech. v. 7, 8; Am. vii. 7, 8;) and a plummet for taking soundings at sea is mentioned in Acts xxvii. 26.—See Tin.

LEAF. Leaves are the organs of respiration and inhalation in plants. Their flourishing and their decay, their restoration and their fragility, furnish the subjects of numerous allusions of great force and beauty. (Lev. xxvi. 36; Isa. i. 30; xxxiv. 4; Jer. viii. 13; Ezek. xvii. 9; Dan. iv. 12, 14, 21; Mark xi. 13; xiii. 28; Rev. xviii. 2.) The fresh colour of the leaf of a tree is the symbol of prosperity; (Ps. i. 3; Jer. xvii. 8; Ezek. xlvii. 12;) and a faded leaf is the emblem of adversity and decay. (Job xii. 23; Isa. lxv. 6.)

LEAGUE. Lest the Hebrews should be seduced to a defection from Jehovah their king, they were individually debarred from any close intimacy with idolatrous nations; yet nationally they were permitted to form treaties with Gentile States, with the following exceptions: The Canaanites including the Philistines; (Ex. xxii. 32, 33; xxiv. 12—16; Deut. vii. 1—11; xx. 1—18;) the Amalekites, or Caneanites of Arabia; (Ex. xvii. 8, 14; Deut. xxxv. 17—19; Judg. vi. 3—5; 1 Sam. xv. 1—33; xxvii. 8, 9; xxx. 1, 17, 18;) the Moabites and Ammonites. (Deut. ii. 9—19; xxxii. 3—6; Judg. iii. 12—30; 1 Sam. xiv. 47; 2 Sam. viii. 2; xii. 26.) The Midianites acted in so hostile a manner, that no permanent peace could be preserved with them. (Judg. 1—40; vii. 1—25; viii. 1—21.) It was expressly enacted, that the Edomites, as well as the Egyptians, in the tenth generation, might be admitted to citizenship. (Num. xx. 14—21; Deut. ii. 4—8.) Treaties were permitted with all other nations, provided they were such as would tend to the public welfare.

LEAH = weared. The elder daughter of Laban and wife of Jacob. (Gen. xxix. 16, 17, 23, 25, 32; xxx. 9—21.)

LEATHER. The Hebrews undoubtedly derived their knowledge of the art of tanning and preparing leather from the Egyptians. (Ex. xxvi. 14.) The Egyptians, from the remnants of leather found in the tombs, dyed of different colours, appear to have employed the bark of the Shittim-wood in tanning, and the periplacca secamone, which grows near the Red Sea. Leather was used for covering the framework of war-chariots; and in the manufacture of leather thongs, which were twisted into ropes, or cables. They sometimes covered the wood of their harps with coloured morocco; they also made bottles, quivers, and pouches of different colours, and ornaments, caps, aprons, shields, etc., of leather. It was extensively used by the shoemakers in sandal-making, etc., as appears from the monuments, and by the curious display of shoes and half-boots, resembling those of modern manufacture, in the British Museum. Girdles were frequently made of leather. (2 Kings i. 8; Matt. iii. 4.)

LEAVEN. The mass of sour dough, used to produce fermentation in the making of bread. For this purpose the lees of wine were sometimes used as we use yeast. The Hebrew word seor is correctly rendered "leaven;" (Ex. xii. 15, 19; xiii. 7; Lev. ii. 11;) and incorrectly, "leavened bread," (Deut. xvi. 4.) The Hebrew word hhames, rendered "leavened bread;" (Ex. xii. 15; xiii. 3, 7;) and "leavened;" (Ex. xii. 39;) when applied to solids, signifies soured, seasoned, or fermented; when applied to liquids, fermented wine, or other liquor, soured wine, i. e. vinegar. (Num. vi. 3; Ruth ii. 14; Ps. lxix. 21; Ex. xii. 7.) All leavened or fermented substances were purged away at the Passover festival; and strictly prohibited during the succeeding seven days of the festival of Unleavened bread, in commemoration of the Exodus from Egypt, when the Hebrews in haste made bread of unleavened meal. (Ex. xii. 5—17; xix. 20; Matt. xxvi. 17; Mark xiv. 12; Luke xxii. 7.) Salt, as the symbol of corruption and perpetuity, was to constitute a part of every oblation to Jehovah; whilst leaven or ferment, in any form, as the symbol of corruption or decay, was never to be offered unto Him. (Lev. ii. 13; Num. xviii. 19; Ezek. xliii. 24.) Hence "leaven" is used tropically for corruptness of life, doctrine, etc. (Matt. xvi. 6, 12; Mark vii. 15; Luke xii. 1; 1 Cor. v. 7, 8; Gal. 5, 9.) The quickening and universal influence of leaven on the mass represents the influence of the Gospel. (Matt. xiii. 33; Luke xiii. 21.—See PASSOVER.

LEBANAH = the white. One of the Nethinitim. (Ezra ii. 45; Neh. vii. 48.)

LEBANON = white mountain. A celebrated chain of mountains, which, branching off from the great ranges of Asia Minor, extends from north to south with slight interruptions and at various elevations, through all Syria and Palestine, and terminates in the desert of Sinai, on the shores of the Red sea. It consists of two lofty and nearly parallel ridges, of which the western one is called Lebanon, while the eastern ridge bears the name of Anti-Lebanon, and in its high southern part, that of Hermon. The whole eastern ridge is called by the Arabs Jebel esh-Shurkhiyeh = east mountain; while its southern part or Hermon, as having upon it ice in its ravines for a great part of the summer, takes the name of Jebel at-Telj = snow mountain; but more commonly that of Jebel esh-Sheikh. As seen from Beirut, the mighty wall of Lebanon rises in indescribable majesty, to the height of some nine thousand feet. The whole range is mainly composed of whitish limestone. Basalt and other igneous rocks appear east and south of the lake of Galiée; and the heights skirting the Dead sea present granite, gneiss, etc. Iron and coal are abundant in some parts of the range. The western side of the mountain is severed by deep wild ravines, forming the beds of mountain torrents, which stream down in rivers to the sea. The eastern declivity of Anti-Lebanon is less steep. But the outward declivities of both the ranges have numerous villages; and, with the valley of the Beka’a, sustain a teeming population. The sides of the range are cultivated, often on terraces built up with great labour, and covered above with soil. Except a few Muslims, the population is made up of Christians and Druzes; the latter constituting perhaps one third part of the whole; the former embracing more or less of all the various sects found within the limits of Syria and Palestine; but the most numerous are the Maronites, who are zealous Romanists. All the inhabitants are Arabs; they are an active and laborious race; many of them are employed in weaving silk, woolien garments, cotton stuffs, and dyeing; and in raising corn, wine, tobacco, cotton, hemp, indigo, and sugar. Exorbitant taxes are however, a great hindrance to industry. On the mountains, wolves, leopards or panthers, and a small species of bear, are frequently met with; also antelopes, roebucks, wild goats, mountain sheep, and birds of prey are numerous. Lebanon, with its cedars and fragrant odours, was the great source of imagery to the Hebrew poets; and they were not slow to improve it. (Deut. iii. 25; Sol. Song iv. 11; Isa. lx. 13; Hos. xiv. 5—7.) The amphitheatre in which the cedars are situated is more than 6,000 feet above the level of the sea; and the loftiest ridges of Lebanon, partly covered with snow, rise between two and three thousand feet higher. On the sides of the mountain too are still found the moss-grown ruins of heathen temples, of which history has preserved no record; but which, in their rude though massive architecture, evince an origin coeval with the mightier wonders of Ba’albeck. The Sublime Porte has divided the government of the Mountain; and allowed each party to select its own head, to govern each according to its own customs, subject directly to the Turkish power. The American Missionaries have established several schools among the people of Lebanon; and for some years past, pleasing success has attended their efforts in the Mountain.

LEBAOTH.—See BETH BIREI.

LEBBAUS.—See JUDE.

LEBONAH = frankincense. A city between Bethel and Shechem. (Judg. xxi. 19.) It is now called Lubbun; and in the rocks above it are excavated sepulchres.

LECAH = a going, journey. A place in Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 21.)

LEEK. The Hebrew word ḫatsir rendered “leeks,” (Num. xvii. 5.) “grass,” (1 Kings xviii. 5; Job x. 15; Ps. civ. 14.) and “herb,” (Job viii. 12.) generally signifies food for cattle. fodder. It designates properly the trigonella fenum Gracum or tenu-grecum; an annual plant, known in Egypt under the name of Ḫabeh, very much resembling clover. This vegetable, when fresh and young, is tied-up in large bunches, which the inhabitants eagerly purchase at a low price, and which they eat with an incredible
LEE

11.) They were occasionally used in bread. (Ezek. iv. 9.)

LEOPARD. The Hebrew word shema-rim signifies spotted, speckled, hence used as the name of the “leopard” or panther, a fierce animal of the feline genus; whose hide is of a yellowish colour, thickly and beautifully dotted with black spots. Leopards are still numerous in the mountains of Syria. (Sol. Song iv. 8.) The Syrian leopard is considerably below the stature of the lioness, but very heavy in proportion to its bulk. The prophet alludes to its manner of watching for its prey, (Jer. v. 6; Hos. xiii 7;) its fleetness; (Hab. i. 8;) its fierce nature and cruelty, (Isa. xi. 6;) and in Dan. vii. 6, it is made the emblem of power.

LEPROSY. A disease which affects the skin, and sometimes increases in such a manner, as to produce very large sores, a slight itching; but not to affect the general health. The Mosaic code prescribed no natural remedy for the cure of this disease; but required the affected person to appear before the priest, who should judge of his leprosy: if it appeared a real leprosy, he separated the leper from the company of mankind. Certain sacrifices and particular ceremonies were appointed for the purification of a leper, and for restoring him to society. (Lev. xiii. 1—46; xlv. 1—32.) It is not certain that the leprosy was contagious. It was sometimes inflicted as a judgment; as in the case of Miriam; (Num. xii. 10;) Gehazi; (2 Kings v. 27;) and Uzziah. (2 Chron. xxvi. 16—23.) Dr. Robinson, when at Jerusalem, saw some miserable hovels, inhabited by persons called lepers. He says, “whether their disease is or is not the leprosy of Scripture, I am unable to affirm; the symptoms described to us were similar to those of elephantiasis. At any rate they are pitiable objects, and miserable outcasts from society. They all live here together, and intermarry only with each other. The children are said to be healthy until the age of greediness, without any kind of seasoning. It is also relished by the cattle.

LEP

LEES. The Hebrew word shema-rim, rendered “lees,” properly signifies preserves. (Isa. xxv. 6.) The term evidently refers to preserves of fruit, which were esteemed as a luxury by the Hebrews. To “settle upon one’s lees” signifies to be on guard, i.e. to maintain the position. (Jer. xlviii. 11; Zeph. i. 12.)—See Wine.

LEGION. A body of troops in the Roman army, which originally contained 3,000 infantry. In the time of Augustus it consisted of about 6,000 men, of all arms; with 300 horsemen as the regular complement. Each legion was divided into ten cohorts, or regiments, each cohort into three maniples or bands, and each maniple in three centuries, or companies of 100 men each. The term “legion” is used for an indefinitely great number. (Matt. xxvi. 53; Mark v. 9—15; Luke viii. 30.)

LEHABIM.—See Libya.

LEHIM = jaw bone. A district on the borders of Philistia, written fully “Ramath-Lehim” = height or hill of the jaw bone. (Judg. xv. 9—19.) At this place Samson slew a thousand Philistines with a new or moist jaw-bone of an ass. Near the scene of action, “God clave an hollow place that was in the jaw—properly in Lehi, as in the margin—and there came water thereof,” and from the fountain Samson quenched his thirst.

LEMUEL = created of God. A prince to whom the maxims in Prov. xxxi. 2—9 are directed.

LEND.—See Pledge.

LENTILES. The Hebrew word adashim, rendered “lentils,” is the crown lens, a kind of pulse resembling small beans, called by the Arabs adasic. They are dressed in the same manner as beans, dissolving easily into a mass, and making a pottage of a red or chocolate colour, much esteemed in Egypt and western Asia. (Gen. xxv. 29—34; 2 Sam. xvii. 28; xxiii. 425 puberty or later; when the disease makes its appearance in a finger, on the nose, or in some like part of the body, and gradually increases so long as the victim survives. They were said often to live to the age of forty or fifty years.” Among other miracles, the Redeemer cleansed lepers. (Matt. viii. 3; Mark i. 42; Luke v. 12, 13.) The leprosy of houses was probably an incrustation of saltpetre, which injures the walls; and at all times corrupts the air and is injurious to the health. (Lev. xiv. 34—48.) The leprosy in clothes was probably a sort of mould or mildew arising from dampness, corrupting the air, and injurious to health. (Lev. xiii. 47-52.)

LESHEM.—See LAISH.

LETHECH. This Hebrew word, rendered “an half bomer,” occurs in the margin of Hos. iii. 2; and signifies a measure for grain.

LETTER. Epistolary correspondence was practised in periods of the most remote antiquity. Letter-writing is noticed by Homer, and by Euripodes as common in their day. (Iliad, x. 168—9; Hec. 856; Iph. i. 35; Hippil. 85. 6.) The letters were probably in the form of rolls, and were often sent open; sometimes they were enclosed in a purse or bag. (2 Sam. xi. 14, 15; Ezra vii. 11; Neh. vi. 5.)

LETTERS.—See Writing.

LETUSHIM = the hammered, or sharpened. An Arabian tribe descended from Dedan. (Gen. xxv. 3.)

LEUMMIM = peoples, nations. An Arabian tribe, supposed to be the same with the Allumicots of Ptolemy. (Gen. xxx. 3.)

LEVI = a joining. 1. The third son of Jacob and Leah. He participated in the revenge against the Shechemites, which occasioned the prophetic denunciation of Jacob, that his posterity should be scattered over all Israel. However, the Levites were not the worse provided for. (Gen. xxix. 34; xxxiv. 23; xlii. 5—7.) 2.—See Matthew.

LEV

LEVIATHAN = the wreathed or twisted animal. This Hebrew word, rendered “mourning,” in the margin leviathan, (Job iii. 8,) evidently designates the crocodile. So also, Ps. lxxiv. 14; civ. 26; Isa. xxvii. 21, would seem to refer to the crocodile. In Job xli. 1—34, the general description of the leviathan agrees well with the crocodile. These animals are found in the Nile, and other rivers of Africa; and also in the southern rivers of America, and are usually called alligators. The crocodile sometimes reaches thirty feet in length from the tip of the snout to the end of the tail; though its most usual length is about eighteen or twenty feet. It is endowed with great strength; and the armour, with which the upper part of the body is covered, may be numbered among the most elaborate pieces of nature’s mechanism. A musket ball will penetrate the skin under the belly and destroy it.

LEVITES. The descendants of Levi, through his sons Gershon, Kohath, and Merari, who were chosen by God instead of the first-born of the Hebrews, for the services of the tabernacle and temple. While the sons of Levi generally were to perform numerous services, necessary to the public rites of religion, and therefore were priests in the wider sense of the term, it was only “the seed of Aaron the priest that should come nigh, to present the offerings of the Lord made by fire.” The high priest sustained the highest office in the tribe, and ranked as the head of both priests and Levites. (Num. iii. 1—31; iv. 1—49.) The services of the Levites were exacted from the thirtieth to the fiftieth year of their age; but they commenced the less difficult duties at twenty-five, and even twenty years of age. (Num. iv. 3; viii. 24, 25; 1 Chron. xxiii. 24, 27; Ezra iii. 8.) They were divided into classes; each class waited by turns, weekly in the temple. (1 Chron. xxiii. 1—92; xxiv. 1—31; xxvi. 17—20; 2 Chron. xxiii.
LEV

1—8.) As the priests and Levites had no proper inheritance in the land, God assigned for their habitation forty-eight cities, with their suburbs. (Num. iii. 1—15; xxxv. 2; Josh. xx. 7, 9; xxxi. 1—42.) And their fellow-citizens were bound to provide for them by tithes, first-fruits offerings, and parts of beasts sacrificed. (Deut. xviii. 1—8; xxvi. 12, 13.) Special liberality and charity to the Levites are strongly enjoined by Moses. (Deut. xii. 18, 19; xii. 27—29.) In return for these contributions, the Levites were to be the judges and magistrates of the land, in both an ecclesiastical and civil respect. They did not go round, and preach and teach in a public capacity; but it was their business to settle and adjudicate all controversies between man and man; to declare the law in all cases of trespass or injury; to decide all dubious cases of conscience about rites and ceremonies; to give counsel, whenever asked, about anything which pertained to duty; and, in a word, to perform the office of judges and of religious and civil monitors. (Deut. xvii. 8—10; xxiv. 8; Lev. x. 10, 11; 2 Chron. xix. 5—11; Ezek. xlv. 23—31; Mal. ii. 7.)

LEVITICUS = relating to the Levites. The third book written by Moses; and frequently cited as his production. (Ex. xli. 17; Num. i. 1.) It is divided into four principal sections: 1. The laws concerning the various sacrifices. 2. The institution of the priesthood, and the consecration of the high priests. 3. The laws concerning the various purifications. 4. The laws concerning the sacred festivals, etc. It contains, also, many of the laws by which the civil department of the government was to be administered, besides many remarkable prophecies. The general design of the book of Leviticus is to make known to the Hebrews the Levitical laws, sacrifices, rites, and ordinances; and by those "shadows of good things to come" to lead the Hebrews to the hope of the Messiah; (Gal. iii. 4; Heb. x. 1;) and it would appear from the argument of Paul, that they had some idea of the spiritual meaning of these various institutions. (1 Cor. x. 1—4.) Numerous passages of the new Testament, especially in the Epistle to the Hebrews, are explained by reference to this book; in fact, they would be scarcely intelligible without it.

LIB

LIBERTINES. Those were probably Jews, who having been carried as captives to Rome, and there freed by their masters, had settled down as residents in that city, as Roman freedmen; but not possessing fully the rights of citizenship. Many of them were accustomed to visit Jerusalem. (Acts vi. 9.) Instead of "Libertines," some would read "Libyans," an African people, like the Cyrenians and Alexandrians.—See FREEMEN.

LIBNAH = whiteness, clearness. 1. A city in the plain of Judah; anciently the seat of a Canaanitish king. (Josh. x. 29—31; xii. 15; xv. 42; xxi. 13; 1 Chron. vi. 57.) Its inhabitants revolted from king Jerem. (2 Kings viii. 22; 2 Chron. xxx. 10.) In the time of Hezekiah the Assyrian king Sennacherib warred against Libnah; and before this city he sustained that dreadful stroke, by the immediate judgment of God, which obliged him to make a precipitate retreat to his own country. (2 Kings xix. 8; Isa. xxxvii. 8.) 2. A station of the Hebrews, in the wilderness. (Num. xxxiii. 20.)

LIBNATH = clear, transparent. A small stream or river, called more fully "Shihor-Libnath"—stream or river Libnath, which empties itself into the sea, in the territory of Asher. (Josh. xix. 26.)

LIBNI = white. A son of Gerashon; (Ex. vi. 17; Num. iii. 18;) his descendants were called "Libnites." (Num. iii. 21; xxvi. 58.)

LIBYA = a dry or thirsty region. This name, in its widest sense, was used by the Greeks to denote the whole of Africa. Among the Hebrews, the "Lehabim," (Gen. x. 13,) the "Labima," (2 Chron. xii. 8; xvi. 18) the "Libim." (Nah. iii. 9,) and the "Libyans." (Dan. xi. 43,) were properly considered a people of Egyptian origin. Properly, Libya was a region of Africa, lying west of Egypt along the coast of the Mediterranean, and extending back indefinitely into the desert. The Libyans were eventually subjugated by the Carthaginians; and afterwards by the Greeks and the Romans. The tract along the coast was divided under the Romans into two parts; on the east Libya Marmarica; and towards the west Libya Cyrenaica, called also Libya Pentapolis, from the five cities which it contained, Apollonia, Araxoas, Berenice, Cyrene, and Ptolemais. In all these cities there dwelt many Jews. (Acts ii. 10.)

LICE.-See Gnat.

LIEUTENANTS.—See Governor.

LIFE. This term is used of God and Christ or the Word, as the absolute source and cause of all life. (1 Tim. vi. 16; John i. 4; v. 26, 39; xi. 50; xiv. 6; xvii. 8; Col. iii. 4; 1 John i. 1, 2; v. 20.) Also generally, for human life, as opposed to death. (Gen. ii. 7; xxxv. 7; Luke xvi. 25; Acts xvii. 25; 1 Cor. iii. 23; xv. 19; Heb. vii. 3; James iv. 14; Rev. xi. 11; xvi. 3.) It is also used in the following acceptations:—1. For life without end, immortality. (Heb. vii. 16.) Also also, "tree of life," or immortality; (Rev. ii. 7; xxii. 2, 14; Gen. ii. 9; iii. 22;) "bread of life;" (John vi. 35, 51;) "way of life;" (Ps. xvi. 11; Acts ii. 28;) "water of life," i.e., living water, perennial; (Rev. vii. 17;) "crown of life," the reward of eternal life. (James i. 12; Rev. ii. 10.) 2. The manner of life, conduct, in a moral respect; "newness of life;" (Rom. vi. 4;) "the life of God;" i.e., a holy life. (Eph. iv. 18; 2 Pet. i. 8.) 3. The term "life" is also used for spiritual life, or the holiness and happiness of salvation, eternal life. (John iii. 36.) Life is the image of all good, and is, therefore, employed to express it; (Deut. xxx. 15; John iii. 16—18, 36; v. 24, 39, 40; vi. 47; vii. 51; xii. 26; Rom. v. 12, 18; 1 John v. 11;) as "death" is the consummation of every kind of evil. (Jer. xxii. 8; Ezek. xlviii. 28; xxxiii. 11; Rom. i. 32; vi. 21; vii. 5, 10, 13, 24; John vi. 50; viii. 21.) 4. "Life" is also used for eternal life, i.e., the life of bliss and glory in the kingdom of God. (Matt. xix. 16, 17; John iii. 16; 1 Tim. iv. 8; Acts v. 20; Rom. v. 17; 1 Pet. iii. 7; 2 Tim. i. 1.)

LIFE, TREE OF. Whatever may have been the frame and texture of Adam's body while in Eden, it is certain, that being "of the earth, it was earthy," and was thus liable to disease and exposed to decay; just as his soul, at the same time, was liable to the greater evil of temptation, by being exposed to the power of the Tempter. Hence while "every tree of the garden was given for food," the tree of life, in the midst of the garden, was provided by Infinite Wisdom as the appointed antidote of disease or decay of the body; while, at the same time, the enjoyment of spiritual life, or the indwelling of the Spirit of God, and the right of access to the tree of life—thus securing immortality, were suspended on our first parents not eating the forbidden fruit of the tree of knowledge. (Gen. ii. 9—17.) The various references to the "tree of life," evidently consider it to have been the Divinely appointed medium for securing the immortality of our first parents. (Prov. iii. 18; xi. 30; Ezek. xlvii. 19; Rev. ii. 7; xxii. 2, 14.) The tree of knowledge of good and evil, of which they were forbidden to eat under penalty of excision from the tree of life, and consequent death, which also occupied a conspicuous place in the garden, was the Divinely appointed test of good and evil; the means whereby God would try and prove the faithfulness and obedience of our first parents. It was the test of moral good and evil, i.e., of holiness and sin, and of conse-sequent happiness or misery. (Gen. iii. 1—24.) When, through the instigation of the Tempter, the first human pair disregarded the command of their Creator, and partook of the fruit of the prohibited tree, they lost the indwelling of the Spirit of God, and forfeited the right of access to the tree of life. On that day the sentence of death was awarded to the guilty pair: they were now dead in the eye of the Divine law, and the same condemnation passed upon the whole race of man. By partaking of the prohibited tree they obtained an experimental sense of the distinction between good and evil. Hence their expulsion from Eden, and removal from the tree of life was an act of mercy as well as of justice; for had they been allowed to retain the use of the tree of life, it would, in their condition, have sustained them in an immortality of guilt and misery.

LIGHT. Light is generally supposed to be caused by a peculiar fluid, or other medium, diffused throughout all nature; in which vibrations are produced by luminous bodies, like those in the air by sounding bodies; only, far more rapid, and sensible only to the eye. (Gen. i. 3—5.) This element radiates from luminous bodies in straight lines; and moves at the velocity of nearly 12,000,000 of miles in a minute. Without light the animal and vegetable tribes could not subsist as they now do. Light is the symbol of Divinity. "God is light." (1 John i. 5; 1 Tim. vi. 16; James i. 17.) Christ is called "the light of the world." (John i. 4—9; viii. 12; xii. 35, 36; Matt. iv. 16; Luke ii. 32.) And Christians are called "lights." (John v. 35; Matt. v. 16; Acts xiii. 37.) Light is also the emblem of knowledge and joy. (1 Kings xi. 36; Ps. iv. 6; xxvii. 1; Prov. iv. 18; Eccl. xi. 7; Isa. ii. 5; viii. 20; x. 17; xliii. 8; Hos. vi. 5; Ezek. xvi. 8; Col. i. 12; 2 Tim. i. 12; 1 Pet. ii. 9; 2 Pet. i. 19.)

LIGHTNING. The electric fluid seems to pervade every part of nature, and to be one of the chief agents in producing many of the phenomena of the material world. Lightning is the rapid motion of vast masses of electric matter, and thunder, the noise, with its echoes, produced by the rapid motion of the lightning through the atmosphere. Thunder and lightning are frequent in Syria, in the autumn and winter. Thunder is called "the voice of the Lord." And the terrors of the Divine wrath are often represented by thunder and lightning. (Ps. cxxxv. 7; cxliv. 6; 2 Sam. xxii. 15; Job xxvii. 25; xxxvii. 14; Rev. iv. 5; xvi. 16—17; Nah. i. 2—6.) It is pleasing to know that this terrible element has already been applied to many useful purposes in the arts, and not the least, for conveying intelligence at the rate of 200,000 miles in a second of time.

LIGN-ALOE—See ALOES.

LIGURE.—See JACINTH.

LIKHI = learned. A descendant of Manasseh. (1 Chron. vii. 12.)

LILY. Several varieties of this beautiful flower, and of various colours, are indigenous in the East. Many travellers suppose that the Amaryllis lutea, or yellow amaryllis, whose golden liliaceous flowers in autumn afford one of the most brilliant and gorgeous objects in nature, is the flower alluded to in Sol. Song. ii. 1, 2; Hos. xiv. 5; Matt. vi. 28, 29. Others have considered the Liliuncum montanum, a plant allied to the amaryllis, of very great beauty, with a slender stem, and clusters of the most delicate violet flowers, to be the flower alluded to. Others, again, have preferred the Liliuncum chalcedoniacus, or scarlet martagon lily, sometimes called Turk's cap, with its turban-like flowers, of a brilliant red. This flower, which is also found in brilliant profusion in Palestine, may be referred to in Sol. Song. iv. 6; v. 13, vi. 3.) The ornaments of "lily-work," mentioned as decorating the columns of the Temple, are supposed to have been lotus-formed; for the LOTUS resembles the lily, and it was frequently used in Egypt to decorate the head-pieces of columns. (1 Kings vii. 19, 22; 2 Chron. iv. 5.)

LIME. A very prevalent ingredient in rocks, and, combined with carbonic acid, forms marble, chalk, and limestone, of various degrees of hardness and every variety of colour. Limestone occupies at least a seventh part of the surface of the globe. It is the prevailing constituent of the mountains of Syria; and occurs under various modifications of texture, colour, form, and intermixture, in different parts of the country. It cannot be doubted that limestone consists almost entirely of the shells and coralline productions of sea animals, imbedded by the deposit from the solution of carbonate of lime in water. Indeed, so prevalent are organic remains, in limestone, chalk, and other strata, that it would seem that there is scarcely an atom of the solid materials of the globe which has not passed through the complex and wonderful laboratory of life. Lime for cement, was anciently obtained, as in modern times, by calcining or burning marble, limestone, chalk, shells, bones, and other substances, to drive off the carbonic acid. (Ezek. xiii. 10, 11; Isa. xxxi. 12.) In Am. ii. 1, it is said, that the king of Moab “burned the bones of the king of Edom into lime;” and the Rabbins say that it was used by the conqueror for plastering his palace. The Hebrew word sed, rendered “lime,” in the passage cited, is also rendered “plaster.” (Deut. xxvii. 2-4.) The Egyptians generally coated their sculptured figures with a calcareous composition, in order to prevent the final colouring from being too readily imbibed by the porous stone.

LINE. A cord or tape to measure with. In Josh. xviii. 9, we find an account of the earliest topographical survey on record, and it proves that there must have been some knowledge of geometry among the Hebrews; and there can be no doubt that they acquired the art of measuring land, as well as numerous other arts, from the ancient Egyptians with whom they had resided. (2 Sam. vii. 2; Ps. xvi. 6; Ixxviii. 55; Am. vii. 17; Zech. i. 16; ii. 1.)

—See Inheritance.

LINEN. The Hebrew word bad properly signifies “linen,” that is, “fine twined linen,” the product of the well-known plant flax. All the priest’s official garments among the Hebrews were to be composed of fine white linen. (Ex. xxviii. 22; xxxix. 28; Lev. xvi. 4; 2 Sam. vi. 14; Ezek. ix. 2; xli. 17; Jer. xii. 1; Dan. x. 5; Rev. xv. 6.) The Egyptians from a remote era, were celebrated for their manufacture of linen, cotton, and other cloths, and the produce of their loom was exported to, and eagerly purchased by, foreign nations. Those who have merely looked at the rough cloths in which the mummies were enveloped, may imagine that “the fine linen of Egypt,” so celebrated in Scripture, was of no finer quality than our common linen sheeting. Sir J. G. Wilkinson describes a piece of ancient Egyptian fine linen which contains no less than 540 threads in the warp, and 110 in the woof, to the inch. The fineness of the linen of Egypt was therefore worthy of its repute. The Egyptian word shesh, rendered “fine linen,” margin silk, (Gen. xii. 42; Ex. xxxvi. 31; xxvii. 9, 18; xxviii. 39; Prov. xxxi. 22,) was by the later Hebrews called batz, also rendered “fine linen,” (1 Chron. iv. 21; xv. 27; 2 Chron. iii. 14; v. 12; Est. i. 6; viii. 15; Ezek. xxvii. 16;) both terms are translated byrme in the Septuagint, and appear to have included cotton fabrics. The fibres of ancient Egyptian linen, examined by the microscope, exhibit a jointed, cane-like structure; the fibres of the cotton examined by the same process, exhibit the appearance of a flat and bordered ribbon. It appears that the ancient Egyptian factories combined linen, wool, or hair, and cotton in their fabrics, made at the same time.
LIN

the cloth which we now designate as mousseline de laine! It would appear from the monuments that men and women, as well as boys and girls, were employed promiscuously in the cotton and linen factories, in various departments, as in ours. (1 Chron. iv. 21.) Occasionally the muslin, beautifully dyed and patterned, was interwoven with silver and gold thread, some specimens of which can be traced up to the early period of Thothmes I., and even of Osirtesen.

—See weaving.

LINUS = flax. A Christian mentioned by Paul, (2 Tim. iv. 21.)

LION. The most powerful, daring, and impressive of all carnivorous animals. Though the lion does not now exist in Palestine, there is ample evidence of its being very common there in early times. The Hebrews had several different names for the lion, expressing the differences in its age, character, etc., as Ari, or Arieh = the puller in pieces. This appears to be the general or common name of the lion; (1 Kings x. 19, 20; 2 Kings xvii. 25, 26; Jer. xlix. 19; l. 44; 2 Chron. ix. 18, 19; Num. xxiii. 24; xxiv. 9; 1 Sam. xvii. 34, 36, 37; 2 Sam. xvii. 10; xxiii. 20; Nah. ii. 11, 12; Prov. xxviii. 15;) Gor = a cub, whelp; (Gen. xlix. 9; Deut. xxxii. 22; Jer. ii. 38; Ezek. xix. 2, 3, 5; Nah. ii. 12;) Cephir = shaggy, hence a young lion; (Judg. iv. 5; Ps. civ. 21; Prov. xix. 12; Jer. ii. 15; Am. iii. 4;) beginning to seek prey for itself; (Job. iv. 10; Isa. v. 29; Jer. xxv. 88; Mic. v. 8;) and ferocious. (Ps. xvii. 12; xci. 13; Isa. xi. 6.) This term is also used tropically for cruel and bloodthirsty enemies; (Ps. xxxiv. 11; xxxvi. 17; lviii. 6; Jer. ii. 15.) Jehoahaz, king of Judah, is called “a young lion, taken in a pit” by his enemies. (Ezek. xix. 3, 4;) Pharaoh, king of Egypt, is called “a young lion,” prowling among the nations; (Ezek. xxxii. 2;) it is also used of the young princes or warriors of a State. (Ezek. xxxviii. 18; Nah. ii. 13.) Shahhal = the roarer; (Job iv. 10; x. 16; xxviii. 8; Ps. xci. 13; Prov. xxxvi. 13; Hos. v. 14; xiii. 7.) Laish = firm, strong; Job iv. 11; Isa. xxx. 6; Prov. xxx. 30.) Labis = roaring, hence lioness. (Gen. xlii. 9; Num. xxiv. 9; Deut. xxxii. 20; Ps. liii. 4; Isa. v. 29; xxx. 6; Nah. ii. 11; Job iv. 11; xxxviii. 39; Ezek. xix. 2.) In Job xxxviii. 8, the Hebrew words beni shahhats, rendered “the lion’s whelps,” properly signify “sons of pride,” and are applied to the larger beasts of prey, as the lion, leviathan. In Babylon it appears to have been the custom to throw offenders to be devoured by lions kept in dens for that purpose. (Dan. vii. 7–28.) A lion is the symbol of royalty and of power. Thus the tribe of Judah is styled a lion’s whelp, and is compared to a lion or lioness couching, whom no one dares to rouse. (Gen. xlix. 9.) So our Lord, who sprang from the tribe of Judah, (Heb. vii. 14,) is called “the Lion of the tribe of Judah.” In Dan. vii. 4, the lion with the wings of an eagle, is supposed to have been the symbol of the Chaldean Babylonian kingdom. In 2 Tim. iv. 17, “the lion” is probably an allusion to the Emperor Nero. The “roaring lion,” on account of its rapacity, is a fit emblem of Satan. (1 Pet. v. 8.)

LIP

This word is used for language or pronunciation; (Gen. xi. 1; Isa. xiii. 18, margin;) “a man of lips,” i.e. full of talk, a babbler; (Job xi. 2, margin;) “the lip of truth,” i.e. truth spoken. (Prov. xii. 19.) “Unclean lips,” i.e. polluted by sinful words; (Isa. vi. 5, 7;) “burning lips,” expressions of malignant passions; or false professions of friendship. (Prov. xxxvi. 23.) The “calves of our lips,” signifies, the fruit of our lips, the sacrifice of praise to God. (Hos. xiv. 2; Heb. xiii. 15.) “Covering the lip,” or chin, with the outer garment, was a token of mourning. (Ezek. xxiv. 22; Lev. xiii. 46.) “To shoot out the lip,” is a mark of contempt or scorn. (Ps. xxii. 7.) Lip is also used for the boundary of a country; (Judg. vii. 22;) and for the coast of the sea. (Gen. xxi. 17.)

LIT

LIT. The Hebrew word tzab, rendered “litter,” margin “coaches,” properly signifies a couch, sedan, or palanquin, as being light and gently borne. (Isa. lxvi. 20.) In Num. vii. 3, it is rendered “waggons,” properly litter waggon. So also, the Hebrew word aphirion, rendered “a chariot,” signifies a sedan, litter, a portable couch or palanquin. (Sol. Song iii. 9.) The litter or palanquin, borne on men’s shoulders, was in use in ancient Egypt, and is still employed in one form or other throughout the East; and we have ample evidence that many of the luxuries and refinements of Egypt were adopted by the Hebrews.

LIVER. The Hebrew word cabad, signifying heavy, is used for “the liver,” as being the heaviest of the viscera; just as the lungs, the lightest of all, are with us called the lights. The term cebod signifies the honour, or glory of any one, hence it is used poetically for the mind, the heart; it is rendered “honour;” (Gen. xliv. 6; Ps. vii. 5;) “glory;” (Ps. xvi. 9; compare Acts ii. 26; Ps. xxx. 12; Ivi. 8;) and “heart.” (Ps. cxvii. 1.) The expressions in Lam. ii. 11; Job xvi. 18; Prov. vii. 28, are hyperbolical, for the severest mental suffering. Divination was practised by inspecting the condition of the liver of a slain animal. (Ezek. xxi. 21.)—See HEART.

LIZARD. An animal having the conformation of a serpent, with the addition of feet. From the various Hebrew names it would appear that several species are alluded to; as the Letsaah, perhaps the starry lizard; (Lev. xvi. 30;) coahh, rendered “chameleon,” a large lizard, perhaps the skink; (Lev. xi. 30;) tzab, rendered “the tortoise,” the Nilotic lizard or varan; (Lev. xi. 39;) semmanith, rendered “spider,” a species of spotted lizard; (Prov. xxx. 28;) anakah, rendered “ferret,” perhaps the lizard called gecko; (Lev. xi. 30;) thinahemeth, rendered “mole,” the chameleon; (Lev. xi. 30;) hhamet, rendered “snail,” (Lev. xi. 30;) probably the sand lizard. (Lev. xi. 30.) Lizards of different species are extremely abundant both in the settled country, and in the deserts of Syria; the ground and the walls of the ruined buildings are often covered with them, many thousands are often seen glittering under the sun.

LOAVES.—See BREAD.

LO-AMMI = not my people. The symbolic name of the son of Hosea. (Hos. i. 9.)

LOCK. The Hebrew word rendered “lock,” designates a bolt or bar. (Sol. Song v. 4, 5; Isa. xlv. 2.) The doors and gates of the Hebrews were secured by bars of wood or iron. (1 Kings iv. 13.) These were almost the only locks known in early times; and they were furnished with a large and clumsy key, which was applied to the bar through an orifice on the outside, by means of which the bolt or bar was slipped forward as in modern locks. (Judg. iii. 24.)

LOCUST. A voracious insect, generally about three inches in length; belonging to the genus griffi. Its general form and appearance are not unlike the grasshopper. Locusts seem to live in a sort of republic, like ants. (Prov. xxx. 27.) They abound, at certain seasons, in various countries; among which are Palestine and its vicinity. There are several Hebrew words rendered "locust," which may designate different species; but they afford us no clue to the particular species intended by the sacred writers. The term arbeh = a multitude, is apparently a collective name for the common "locust." (Ex. x. 4, 12, 13, 14, 19; Lev. xi. 22; Deut. xxxvii. 38; 1 Kings viii. 37; 2 Chron. vi. 28; Ps. lxviii. 46; cv. 34; cix. 23; Prov. xxx. 27; Joel i. 4, ii. 25; Nah. iii. 15, 17; also rendered "grasshopper." (Judg. vi. 5; vii. 12; Job xxxix. 20; Jer. xlv. 23.) Gob = creeper, probably a wingless species of devouring "locust." (Isa. xxxiii. 4; also rendered "grasshopper," or "green worms." (Nah. iii. 17; Am. vii. 1.) Gasam = the devourer, a locust not yet winged; also rendered "palmerworm." (Joel i. 4, ii. 25; Am. iv. 9.) Hhagar = the hider or seeler, a "locust," winged and edible; (2 Chron. vii. 13; also rendered "grasshopper." (Lev. vi. 22; Num. xiii. 33; Eccl. xii. 5; Isa. xl. 22.) Hhanamal, rendered "frost," but apparently a species of locust. (Ps. lxxxviii. 47.) Hhasil = the devourer, a species of locust; rendered "caterpillar." (1 Kings viii. 37; 2 Chron. vi. 28; Ps. lxviii. 46; Isa. xxxiii. 4; Joel i. 4; ii. 25; Nah. iii. 15, 16.) Ihargol = the leaper, a winged and edible species of locust; rendered "beetle." (Lev. xi. 22.) Yelek = the feeder, a species of locust, winged, and rough or hairy; rendered "caterpillar;" (Ps. cv. 34; Jer. li. 14, 27; and "cankerworm." (Joel i. 4; ii. 25; Nah. iii. 15, 16.) Salam = the consumer, a species of locust, winged and edible; rendered "the bald locust." (Lev. xi. 22.) Tselaatzeal = whizzer, a species of "locust," or stridulous insect which gives forth a whizzing sound. (Deut. xxviii. 42.) On many occasions the locust has been employed by the Almighty to chastise mankind for their sins. From a comparison of Ex. x. 4, 12, 13, 14, 19; with Ps. lxxxviii. 46, 47; cv. 34, it appears that no less than four species of locusts, the arbeh, hhanamal, hhasil, and yelek, were employed in the eighth plague on Egypt. So also in Joel i. 4, 7; ii. 3, 11, no less than four different species of locusts are mentioned, as having been employed in the work of devastation — the gasam, arbeh, yelek, and hhasil. Some writers understand the description as a symbolic representation of invading armies, as in Rev. ix. 2, 12. The devastations of the locusts are often a great detriment to the agriculturist; they sometimes cross the country, destroying every thing before them. A few years ago the army of Ibrahim Pasha, in the attempt to extirpate them, gathered up no less than 65,000 arbels, each equal to five English bushels, and, therefore, equivalent in the whole to 325,000 bushels. No one can estimate the damage caused by these creatures; and when they are grown to a certain size, it is impossible to conquer or resist them; they come like flights of birds, darkening the air, and the destruction of hundreds of thousands seems in no respect to diminish their numbers. Still the locusts, like every creature which God has made, answer important purposes in the economy of nature; by clearing the way for the renovation of vegetable productions which are in danger of being destroyed by the exuberance of some particular species. In the meantime, lest the locusts themselves should multiply too fast, they are exposed to innumerable causes of repression. They are followed and destroyed by the Semermer or locust-bird; and afford sustenance to various tribes of birds, beasts, reptiles, etc.; and as they always fly with the wind, vast multitudes are annually carried into the sea, where they perish. Among the Hebrews several species of locusts were permitted for food. (Lev. xi. 21, 22; Matt. iii. 4.) Strange as this permission to eat locusts may appear to us, yet nothing is more certain than that several nations, both of Asia and Africa, anciently used these. insects for food, and that they are still eaten in the East; and are even esteemed a delicacy when properly cooked.

LOD.—See Lydda.

LOBEBAR = no pasture. A town of Gilead. (2 Sam. ix. 4, 5; xvii. 27.)

LODGE. This word not only denotes a place for passing the night, but also a hut, erected to afford shelter to those who guarded the fields or gardens from thieves, or from wild beasts. (Job xxvii. 18; Isa. i. 8.)

LODGING-PLACE. See Inn.

LOG = a deep cavity, basin. The smallest measure of liquids, containing the twelfth part of a hin. (Lev. xiv. 10, 12, 13, 21, 24.)

LOGOS. See Word.

LOINS. See Girdle.

LOIS = better? A Christian matron, the grandmother of Timothy. (2 Tim. i. 5.)

LOOKING-GLASS. The Hebrew words rendered "looking-glasses," and "glasses," (Ex. xxxvii. 8; Isa. iii. 23,) have no reference to silvered glass, but properly signify mirrors, tablets, plates of mixed metal, chiefly of copper, most carefully wrought and highly polished. The mirrors used by the Hebrews were undoubtedly like those of the Egyptians, which are found in the British Museum. They were round or oval, and inserted in ornamental handles, like our hand-mirrors. Many in the East, even at this day, pour water into a vessel, which they use for a mirror. The brazen laver was made of the mirrors devoted to that purpose, by the Hebrew women; though we need not suppose that the mirrors were the only materials used in its formation. (Ex. xxxvii. 8.)

LORD. The Hebrew word Adonai = Lord, is also applied to God; (Ex. xxii. 17; Josh. iii. 13; Ps. cxiv. 7;) also to a king, lord, governor; (Gen. xxxii. 4, 5; 2 Sam. xiv. 19; 1 Kings iii. 17; Isa. xxi. 13;) a royal consort; (1 Kings i. 17, 18;) to a father; (Gen. xxxi. 35;) a brother; (Num. xii. 11;) a husband; (Gen. xviii. 12;) and a master. (Gen. xxiv. 14-27; xxxix. 2-7.)—See Jehovah.

LORD'S DAY. See Sabbath.

LORD'S SUPPER. This ordinance, also called "the Lord's Table," and "the Communion;" (1 Cor. xi. 20; x. 16, 21;) was instituted by our Saviour, as a constant memorial of His sufferings and death. (Matt. xxvi. 26-28; Mark xiv. 22-24; Luke xxii. 19, 20; 1 Cor. xi. 23-25.) The institution of the Lord's supper took place at the close of the passover meal, and in connection with the "cup of blessing" which terminated the proper meal. (Luke xxii. 17.) At the paschal supper, the Hebrews annually commemorated their deliverance from the bondage of Egypt; but the Lord's supper, which was intended to supersede the passover, was to commemorate the deliverance of all mankind from sin by the sacrifice of Christ. Evidently at the institution of the Lord's supper unleavened bread, and newly-made or unfermented wine, were employed, such as were commonly employed at the Hebrews' passover table; because no other kind could be had in all Judea at this time, all leaven or ferment having been purged away from their houses. (Ex. xii. 15-20; xiii. 3-7; xxii. 15; xxxiv. 25; Matt. xxvi. 17-21; Mark xiv. 12-18; Luke xxii. 7-15; John xiii. 1-5; 1 Cor. v. 6-8.) Hence, in our celebration of this ordinance, so far as significance depends on the symbols, it is doubtless better to keep as near the original celebration, both as to the manner of administration and kind of elements employed, as may be convenient and ordinarily possible. The Roman custom of making the bread into wafer, and that of some Protestants who take one small cube of fermented bread, previously divided from the mass with a knife, and separated by the fingers of the minister, and the use of fermented wine, scarcely answer to the proper significance of the eucharist. The Redeemer "took bread and blessed," not it, but God, i. e. "gave thanks and brake it, and gave it unto them." (Matt. xxvi. 26; Luke xxii. 19; 1 Cor. xi. 24.) The disciples took the bread which he had broken, and each one broke from it a portion for himself, and handed the remainder to his neighbour for him to do likewise. So also, with the cup: Christ gave it to him who lay in his bosom, i. e. reclined in front of him, and when he had drank he handed the cup to his neighbour for him to do likewise, until they all drank of it. Hence this ordinance is called the communion of the body and of the blood of Christ. (1 Cor. x. 16, 17; Acts ii. 42, 46.) Blessing and consecrating the elements are merely Romish ceremonies, necessary, of course, to those who pretend to transmute the bread and wine into the real body and blood of Jesus Christ. The advocates of transubstantiation ought to know that the words "This is my body," simply mean "this symbolizes or represents my body." (Matt. xiii. 38; compare Gen. xlii. 26, 27; Dan. vii. 24; 1 Cor. x. 4; Gal. iv. 24; Ps. lxxxiv. 11.) If they will cling to the literal sense, let them do so throughout the passage. The Redeemer said, "This cup, not the wine, "is the new Testament in my blood." The bread is no more the body of our Lord than the cup is the wine. (Luke xxi. 20; 1 Cor. xi. 25.) The Lutheran idea of consubstantiation, that the body and blood of Christ are on, in, and under the bread and wine, does not much help the matter. Indeed, consubstantiation is the twin doctrine of transubstantiation, if it is not the same notion expressed in different words. In this sacred rite Christ is present with the faithful communicant, not as or with the symbols. The custom of kneeling to receive the communion was unknown till the doctrine of transubstantiation was adopted by the Romanists. A table-posture is the proper mode of receiving the symbols of the Lord's body, and of showing forth His death till He come in His glory.

LOT = a covering, veil. The son of Haran, and the ancestor of the Ammonites and Moabites. (Gen. xi. 27, 28, 31; xii. 5; xiii. 1-13; xiv. 12, 16; xix. 1-38; Deut. ii. 9; Ps. lxxxiii. 8.) Lot accompanied his uncle Abraham from Ur to Canaan, but their numerous flocks, and the quarrels of their servants, rendered a friendly separation necessary. Lot chose the fertile plain of the Jordan for his pasture ground, and fixed his abode in the city of Sodom. When Chedorlamaster attacked the Pentapolis, Lot was taken prisoner, along with other inhabitants, and was rescued and brought back by Abraham. On the destruction of the cities of the Plain, Lot and his two daughters escaped with their lives, but his wife, looking back, perhaps lingering behind the rest, was suddenly involved in destruction, and she "became a pillar of salt." (2 Pet. ii. 7, 8; Luke xvii. 28, 29.) Josephus, Clement of Rome, and Irenaeus, mention the pillar of salt as existing in their day. The mass of rock-salt still existing on the mountain called Usdum, at the south-western extremity of the Dead sea, may have been the basis of the ancient tradition. In 1848, Lieut. Lynch examined this pillar. He says, "Soon after, to our astonishment, we saw on the eastern side of Usdum, one third the distance from its north extreme, a lofty, round pillar, standing apparently detached from the general mass, at the head of a deep, narrow, and abrupt chasm. We found the pillar to be of solid salt, capped with carbonate of lime, cylindrical in front and pyramidal behind. The upper or rounded part is about forty feet high, resting on a kind of oval pedestal, from forty to sixty feet above the level of the sea. It slightly decreases in size upwards, crumbles at the top, and is one entire mass of crystalization. A prop or buttress connects it with the mountain behind, and the whole is covered with debris of light stone colour. Its peculiar shape is doubtless attributable to the action of the winter rains. However, "a statue or pillar of salt," is not demanded by the words in Gen. xix. 26. As the term "salt," is frequently used as a symbol of perpetuity; (Num. xviii. 19; 2 Chron. xiii. 5;) so "a pillar of salt" merely conveys the idea, that in her sudden destruction she became a perpetual memorial, of the sad consequences of disobedience, a monument or example of Divine displeasure to subsequent generations.

(Linke xvii. 32.)

LOTAN = covering. A son of Seir. (Gen. xxxvi. 20, 29; 1 Chron. i. 38, 39.)

LOTS. The Hebrew word geulah, signifies a small stone, as used in casting lots; (Josh. xix. 1; 1 Sam. xiv. 41; Jon. i. 7; Acts i. 26;) hence also a method used to determine cases or preferences. "The lot," i. e. the pebble, "is cast into the lap," properly into the bosom of an urn or vase. (Prov. xvi. 33.) The decision by lot was often resorted to among the Hebrews, but always with the strictest reference to the interposition of God; as in the division of the land among the tribes; (Num. xxvi. 55; xxxiii. 54;) the selection of the scape goat; (Lev. xvi. 8, 9;) and the classes of the priests and Levites. (1 Chron. xxiv. 5.) Property was divided in the same way. (Ps. xxii. 18; Matt. xxvii. 35; Ezek. xxiv. 6; Joel iii. 3.) The term "lot" is also used for a portion, or inheritance; (Josh. xv. 1; Judg. i. 3; Ps. cxxxv. 3; Isa. xvii. 14; Ivi. 6; Acts xvi. 21;) also for portion, or destiny, as assigned to men from God. (Ps. xvi. 5; Dan. xii. 13; Rev. xx. 6.)

LOVE. Perfect benignity is not merely an attribute of the Supreme Being, but also the character of the very essence of His nature. His essential, intellectual love, in its infinite, overflowing fulness, and substantial goodness, is placed before us in two words, Light and Love. (1 John i. 5; iv. 16.) His universal, impartial, and unmerited love, is exemplified in all the phenomena of creation; but especially in the redemption of fallen humanity by Christ Jesus. (John iii. 16; Rom. v. 8; Eph. iii. 10; 1 John iii. 16; iv. 19.) The love of God, according to the different ways in which it is expressed towards His creatures, assumes the form of benevolence, complacency, pity, mercy, forbearance, or patience; and is always exercised in harmony with His wisdom and justice. (Ps. xxxvi. 7; ciii. 13; cxxxi. 1; Rom. ii. 4; xv. 5.) Love to God is the attachment of the affections to Him; and in its perfect exercise is comprehended the whole of our duty to God and our fellow creatures. (Matt. xxi. 27—40.) Love to God is essential to true obedience. (John xiv. 15.) But love to God cannot be fully exercised so long as we are sensible of his wrath. (1 John iv. 17, 18.) Hence no man can love God supremely, but as His character is unfolded in the cross of Christ. (1 John iii. 16.) "We love Him because He first loved us." (1 John iv. 19.) The inward sense of God's personal love to the believer in Christ, revealed to him by the witness of the Holy Spirit, is the foundation and spring of his affection. "Love is the fulfilling of the law," and every action which has not this for its principle, fails of accomplishing the precepts which are obligatory upon us. (Rom. xiii. 8—10; Gal. v. 14; James ii. 8.) Love is the greatest of all graces; (1 Cor. xiii. 1—13; 1 Tim. i. 5;) and is accounted of such importance, that without it every other attainment is of no avail. True religion is love to God; and true morality is love to our fellow creatures. (1 John iii. 14, 17; iv. 20, 21; Eph. vi. 18; Rom. xv. 1, 2; Gal. vi. 2; 1 Pet. i. 23.) LUBIM.—See LIBYA.

LUCAS.—See LUKE.

LUCIFER = light-bringer. The Hebrew word hidel, rendered “Lucifer,” properly signifies splendid, or brilliant star, i.e. the morning star; and is evidently applied to the king of Babylon. (Isa. xiv. 12.)

LUCIUS = luminous. A Cyrenian, and one of the ministers in the church at Antioch. (Acts xiii. 1; Rom. xvi. 21.)

LUD = strife, quarrel. 1. A son of Shem, whose descendants probably are the Lydians in Asia Minor. (Gen. x. 22.) The kingdom of Lydia, of which Sardis was the capital, was bounded on the east by greater Phrygia, on the north by Bœotis or Mysia, on the west by Ionia and the Aegean sea, and on the south it was separated from Caria by the Maeander; but in the more flourishing times of some of their kings, the Lydian territories were far more extensive. It was once under the dominion of Croesus, the wealthiest monarch of his age. In the time of the apostles it was a province of the Roman empire. 2. A son of Misraim; hence the name of a people of Africa, perhaps sprung from the Egyptians. (Isa. lxvi. 19; Ezek. xxvii. 10.) They are called “Ludim;” (Gen. x. 13;) rendered “Lydians;” (Jer. xlv. 9;) and their country “Lydia.” (Ezek. xxx. 5.) The Ludim act a conspicuous part on the ancient Egyptian monuments.

LUDIM.—See LUD.

LUHITH = made of tablets, i.e. boarded or floored. A Moabish city. (Isa. xv. 5; Jer. xlviii. 5.)

LUKE = a grove. The evangelist, also called “Lucas,” appears to be the same person who is called by Paul, “the beloved physician.” (Col. iv. 14; Phil. 24.) Luke was probably a native of Antioch; though the Hebrew-Greek style of writing, observable in his productions, sufficiently evince that their author was a Jew. Luke travelled extensively with Paul; (Acts xvi. 10–18; xx. 5–18;) and accompanied him in his last journeys to Jerusalem and Rome. (Acts xxii. 1–17; xxvii. 1–44.) He appears to have left Rome about the close of the second year of Paul’s imprisonment. (Acts xxviii. 30, 31; 2 Tim. iv. 11.) The latter part of Luke’s life is involved in impenetrable obscurity.

LUKE, GOSPEL OF. This Gospel was written in Greek, by Luke, probably in Palestine, about A.D. 60, during the imprisonment of Paul at Caesarea. That it was written by the companion of Paul, is attested by Ireneus, Tertullian, Clement, Origen, Tatian, Epiphanius, Jerome, and others. Both the Gospel and the Acts were dedicated to Theophilus, a distinguished Gentile Christian; and their composition sufficiently indicate that the author had received a liberal education. The diction of Luke is substantially the same as that of the other Evangelists, though it is considerably purer and less Hebraised. In the proem to his Gospel, which is remarkably pure Greek, Luke tells Theophilus, that “many” had composed narratives respecting the sayings and doings of Jesus, who had not accurately traced all things to their original sources. But this remark cannot apply to the other authentic Gospels. The narratives of the “many,” to which Luke refers, are now entirely lost; for when the four authentic Gospels came into general use, all apocryphal documents were disregarded and forgotten. The Evangelist, in collecting materials for his Gospel, and for the purpose of accurately tracing all matters to their original sources, not only had frequent opportunity of meeting several of the original eye-witnesses when he travelled with Paul, but he also carefully examined oral tradition or the testimony of eye and ear-witnesses, scattered over all the country of Palestine. He also diligently examined authentic documents; and also the writings of the “many,” of which he probably made a careful use, inasmuch as they would exhibit much that was true and useful.

LUN

Acts ix. 32—38.) Lydda was called by the Romans Diospolis = the city of Jupiter. It now exists as a considerable village under its ancient name,

LUS

Lud. The celebrated saint and martir St. George, is said to have been born here, in the third century.

LYDIA = region = strife. 1. A woman of Thyatira, who dwelt in the city of Philippi. She was converted to the Christian faith under Paul’s ministry. (Acts xvi. 14—40.) She is described as “a seller of purple,”

i.e. of purple-dyed cloths. (Ezek. xvii. 7, 16.) Some suppose that Lydia is not the name of the woman, but merely an appellation signifying a Lydian woman, from the circumstance of her native place being in the province of Lydia. 2.—See Lud.

LYDIANS.—See Lud.

LYING. The speaking of falsehood wilfully, with an attempt to deceive. A lie is a breach of promise; for whoever seriously addresses another, tacitly promises to speak the truth, because he knows that the truth is expected. The punishment with which lying has been sometimes visited is tremendous, as in the case of Ananias and Sapphira. (Acts v.

1—11; compare Rev. xxi. 8.)

LYSANIAS = liberator. A tetrarch of Abilene, in the time of Tiberias Cesar, when John the Baptist entered upon his public ministry.

(Luke iii. 1.) From the statements of Josephus, he appears to have been a grandson of a former Lysanias.
The first Lysanias was put to death through the intrigues of Cleopatra, about B.C. 34. (Jos. Ant. xiv. 13, 3; xv. 4. 1.) The second Lysanias was tetrarch of Abilene some sixty-five years after the murder of his ancestor; and was contemporary with

Herod Antipas and Philip. About

A.D. 38, the emperor Caligula gave to Herod Agrippa the territory of Philip, and added likewise Abilene, der the name of “the tetrarchy of Lysanias.” (Jos. Ant. xviii. 6, 10; xix. 5, 1; Wars, ii. 11. 5.) After the death of Herod Agrippa, (Acts xii.)

21—23.) Claudius gave to the younger Agrippa a portion of his father’s territories, including the tetrarchy of Lyssanias. (Jos. Ant. xx. 7. 1; Wars, ii. 12. 8.)

LYSTRA = liberation. A city of Lycaonia in Asia Minor, chiefly celebrated for the miraculous cure of a cripple, which led the Lycaonians to suppose that Paul and Barnabas were gods come down to them in the likeness of men. (Acts xiv. 6—21.) Timothy appears to have been a native of Lystra. (Acts xvi. 1—3; 2 Tim. iii. 11.) Mr. Bremer thinks that Kilisea represents the ancient Lystra. The limestone rocks, both within and without the town, abound in excavations, some of which may have been dwellings of former generations, and others sepulchres for the dead.

M

MAAACA = compressed, included.
1. A city at the foot of Mount Hermon; (2 Sam. x. 6, 8;) in the district of “Syria-Maachah,” (1 Chron. xix. 6;) which seems to have extended from Mount Hermon eastwards, on the south of the plain of Damascus. (Josh. xii. 3; xiii. 11, 13; Deut. iii. 14.) The name of this region is also written “Maachah;” (1 Chron. xix. 7;) and the inhabitants are called “Maachathis;” (Deut. iii. 14;) and “Maachathites.” (2 Kings xxv. 23.)
2. The daughter of Talmai, king of Geshur, wife of David, and mother of Absalom; (2 Sam. iii. 3;) also called “Maachah.” (1 Chron. iii. 2.)

MAAACHA = compressed. 1. A son of Nahor. (Gen. xxii. 24.) 2. The father of Achish; (1 Kings ii. 39;) also called “Maoch” = breastband. (1 Sam. xxvii. 2.) 3. The father of Hanan. (1 Chron. xi. 43.) 4. The father of Shephathiah. (1 Chron. xxvii. 16.) 5. The wife of Machir. (1 Chron. vii. 15, 16.) 6. A concubine of Caleb. (1 Chron. ii. 48.) 7. The wife of Rehoboam, and mother of Abijah. She was the granddaughter of Absalom or Abishalom. (1 Kings xv. 1, 2; 2 Chron. xi. 20—22.) In 2 Chron. xiii. 2, she is called “Michaiah, the daughter of Uriel.” Her mother seems to have been the wife of Uriel of Gibeah; and thus Maachah was the daughter of Uriel, and grand-daughter of Absalom. (1 Kings xv. 10—13. 8.—See MAACA.

MAADAI = ornament of Jehovah. A son of Bani. (Exz x. 34.)

MAADIAH = ornament of Jehovah. A priest in Zerubbabel’s time; (Neh. xii. 5;) also called “Moaddiah.” (Neh. xii. 17.)

MAALI = compassionating. One of the priests. (Neh. xii. 36.)

MAALEH-ACRABBIM. —See AKRABBIM.

MAARATH = naked place. A place in the mountains of Judah. (Josh. xv. 59.)

MAASEIAH = work of Jehovah.
1. One of the priests. (Jer. xxi. 1; xxxvii. 3.) 2. The father of Zedekiah. (Jer. xxxix. 21.) 3. The son of Shallum. (Jer. xxxv. 4.) 4. One of the Levites. (1 Chron. xxvii. 18, 20.) 5. The son of Adiah. (2 Chron. xxxiii. 1.) 6. The son of Ahaz, slain by Zichri. (2 Chron. xxxvii. 7.)

MAASIAH = work of Jehovah. One of the priests. (1 Chron. ix. 12.)

MAATH = extended. An ancestor of Mary, the mother of Jesus. (Luke iii. 26.)

MAAZ = anger. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. ii. 27.)

MAAZIAH = consolation of Jehovah.
1. The chief of the last of the twenty-four families of the priests. (1 Chron. xxiv. 18.) 2. A priest in the time of Nehemiah. (Neh. x. 8.)

MACEDONIA = an oblong or extended region. An extensive country lying to the north of Greece proper, bounded on the east by Thrace and the Aegean; on the west, by the Adriatic and Illyria; on the north, by Dardania and Moesia; and on the south, by Thessaly and Epirus. The kingdom of Macedonia was founded by Caranus, B.C. 814. The uninterrupted series of victories of Alexander the Great, made Macedonia, in a short time, mistress of half the world. In Dan. viii. 5–8, the empire of Alexander is described under the emblem of a goat with one horn. Coins still exist on which Macedonia is represented under its usual symbol of a one-horned goat. Under the Romans, the whole of Greece was divided into two great Provinces, Macedonia and Achaia. The province of Macedonia received the Gospel before any other part of Europe. (Acts xvi. 9–13; xviii. 5; xix. 21, 22, 29; xx. 1–3; xxvii. 2; Rom. xv. 36; 1 Cor. xvi. 5; 2 Cor. i. 16; ii. 13; vii. 6; viii. 1; ix. 2, 4; xi. 9; Phil. iv. 15; 1 Thess. i. 7, 8; iv. 10; 1 Tim. i. 3.) It now forms part of Turkey in Europe, and is called Macedonia.

MACHBANIA = putting on the robe or cloak? One of David’s distinguished captains. (1 Chron. xii. 13.)

MACHBENAH.—See CABBON.

MACHI = burned or smitten. A descendant of Gad. (Num. xiii. 12.)

MACHIR = sold. 1. A son of Manasseh, and father of Gilead. (Gen. i. 23; Josh. xvii. 1; 1 Chron. vii. 14—17; Judg. v. 14.) His descendants were called “Machirites.” (Num. xxvi. 29.) 2. The son of Aumuel. (2 Sam. ix. 4, 5; xvii. 27.)

MACHNADEBAI = what like the liberal? A descendant of Bani. (Ezra x. 40.)

MACHPELAH = portion, part, lot. A field in Hebron, containing a cave, which Abraham purchased of Ephron the Hittite, for a family burial-place. (Gen. xxii. 17–20; xxv. 3, 10; xlix. 29–32; 1.13.) Of this place, Dr. Robinson says, “The Haram, or outer structure which incloses the mosque, and covers the cavern of the sepulchre, evidently belongs to a high antiquity; and the resemblance of its architecture to that of the remains of the ancient temple at Jerusalem, seems to point to a Jewish origin.”

MADAI = middle. The third son of Japheth, from whom the Medes are supposed to have descended. (Gen. x. 2.)

MADIAN.—See MIDIAN.

MADMANNAH = dunghill. A town in the south of Judah. (Josh. xv. 31; 1 Chron. ii. 49.)

MADMEN = dunghill. A town in the borders of Moab. (Jer. xlviii. 2.)

MADMENAH = dunghill. A town in the tribe of Benjamin. (Isa. x. 31.)

MADON = contention, strife. A royal city of the Canaanites. (Josh. xi. 1; xii. 19.)

MAGBISH = gathering. The name of a place, or, according to others, of a man. (Ezra. ii. 30.)

MAGDALA = tower. Probably the same as “Migdal-er = tower of God,” a city of Naphtali; (Josh. xix. 38;) situated on the western coast of the sea of Galilee, near Dalmannah, and not far from Tiberias. (Matt. xv. 39; Mark viii. 10.) It is now called el-Mjdel, and is a miserable little Muslim village. It was the native town of Mary Magdalene. (Mark xvi. 9.)

MAGDIEL = praise of God. A prince of the Edomites. (Gen. xxxvi. 43; 1 Chron. i. 54.)

MAGI = great, powerful. This term was used as the title of the priests and philosophers among the Medes, Persians, and Babylonians. So the word “Kab-mag,” (Jer. xxxix. 3,) used as a proper name, properly signifies the prince Magus, or chief of the Magi. The magi were also known by the name of “wise men,” and “Chaldeans.” (Isa. xlv. 25; Jer. i. 35; Dan. ii. 12–37; iv. 6, 18; v. 7, 8, 11, 12, 15.) To their number, doubtless, belonged the “astrologers” and “star-gazers,” (Isa. xlvii. 13;) also the “soothsayers” and “dream-interpreters.” (Dan. i. 20; ii. 10, 27; iv. 7; v. 7, 11.) The magi acquired great honour and influence; they were introduced into the courts of kings and consulted on all occasions. The elevation of Daniel to the office of president, or prince of the college of the magi, in Babylon, must have contributed to make this peculiar caste acquainted with the Hebrew sacred writings; and to awaken the hope of the Messiah on the shores of the Euphrates and the Tigris. (Dan. ii. 47—49; iv. 34—37.) The magi or "wise men," who came from the East to salute the infant Messiah, evidently came from beyond the Euphrates, probably from Persia. (Matt. ii. 17, 16.) We are constrained to admit that they had a revelation, and undoubtedly took the journey under Divine influence. They were the representatives of the Gentile world, doing homage to the Lord. We have no evidence that the magi visited the infant Messiah at Bethlehem, either before or after the presentation in the temple. The proper mode of conciliation of Matthew with Luke will be seen by taking up the circumstances in the following order:—Jesus is born in Bethlehem; (Matt. ii. 1.) after forty days the presentation of Jesus takes place in the temple; (Luke ii. 22—24;) after the presentation in the temple the holy family returns to Nazareth; (Luke ii. 39;) after some time the magi arrive in Jerusalem, and guided by the star, they visit the infant Messiah in Nazareth; (Matt. ii. 11;) the magi return to their own country by another route; after this ensued the flight to Egypt, and the massacre of the infants at Bethlehem; the death of Herod takes place, and the holy family return from Egypt to Nazareth. (Matt. ii. 12—23.)

MAGIAN. In every period the orientals have been strongly addicted to magic and other delusive practices. (Gen. xlii. 8; Ex. vii. 8—22; Isa. ii. 6; Acts viii. 9; xiii. 6, 8; xix. 19; Rev. xiii. 11—18.) Capital punishment was inflicted upon impostors of this character; (Deut. xiii. 1—5;) and upon those who consulted them. (Lev. xix. 31, xx. 6.) Many of these miracle pretenders appear to have possessed some knowledge of natural philosophy, which it seems they abused to the purpose of working on the minds of the vulgar by pretended prodigies; throwing them into amazement by the exhibition of certain phenomena known only to themselves. Sometimes they attempted to compete with the true prophets of God before or in the view of the multitude. (1 Kings xviii. 26—29; 2 Kings i. 10—15; Luke ix. 54; Acts xix. 19; Rev. xiii. 11—18.) Mr. Lane, in his work on the "Modern Egyptians," Ed. 1846, has related some remarkable things of the modern Egyptian magicians, which, until recently, with all the light of science beaming upon us, filled us with surprise. His account of the magician Abd-el-Kadir, is the most vivid and accurate account of a then undetected imposture, which excited the greatest curiosity and interest throughout the civilized world. Happily the delusion has since been entirely dissipated, and a solution of the difficulties surrounding it has been derived from the candour and sagacity of Mr. Lane himself. This wonderful miracle-monger is now fully proved to have been nothing else than a shallow impostor; and such is, and has ever been, the whole herd of magicians, astrologers, etc. Such modern superstitions, as table-turning, spirit-rapping, clairvoyance, etc., are as inimical to science and civilization, as the absurdities of bleeding portraits, and winking statues.—See DIVINATION.

MAGISTRATE. The Hebrew word shophetin = "judges," were a kind of magistrates. (Deut. i. 16, 17; Ezra vii. 25.) The saganim = "rulers," properly nobles, were Babylonian magistrates, prefects of provinces; (Jer. li. 23, 28, 57; Ezek. xxii. 6;) and Jewish magistrates. (Ezra ix. 2; Neh. ii. 16; iv. 14; xiii. 11.) The Greek word archon = "magistrate," (Luke xi. 15; Tit. iii. 1,) signifies *first in authority," "a prince;" (Mat. xx. 25; 1 Cor. ii. 6, 8;) "a ruler;" (Acts iv. 26; Rom. xiii. 3;) the high priest; (Acts xxiii. 5;) and civil judges; (Luke xii. 58; Acts xvi. 19.) The Greek word strategoi is used for the Roman "magistrates" of Philippi. (Acts xvi. 20, 22, 35, 36, 38.) The Greek word echousiai = "Powers," is used for rulers, magistrates. (Luke xii. 11; Tit. iii. 1.) The Roman emperor, and some of the subordinate magistrates, wore a small sword or dagger, the symbol of punishment, as a part of their official costume. In Rom. xiii. 1—5, the Apostle exhorts the Roman Christians to be subject to the "higher powers," i.e. the ruling authorities—the magistrates in office—all invested with civil power, from the emperor or king as supreme, to the lowest civil officer—all who are employed in making and executing the laws; insomuch as government is of God, though the particular form of it is of man. (1 Pet. ii. 13.) The exceptions to this obedience included all acts which might be required, by the Roman government, inconsistent with the Divine law. In this case, the primitive Christians were not only not bound to obey, but they were bound not to obey. (Acts iv. 18, 19; v. 29.) Another class of exceptions included illegal commands and exactions. However, when the compliance with those did not imply sin on the part of him who yielded it, he was not morally bound not to obey or submit, but he was not morally bound to obey or submit. It became a question, not directly of conscience, but of expediency, though indirectly, like almost all questions of expediency, it might become a question of conscience. (Acts xvi. 35; xxii. 25; xxii. 3.) Another class of exceptions included all cases in which the magistrates, though not acting illegally, went beyond the limits of civil authority, and interfered in matters of religion, that no way pertained to them. It must be evident that if there be things at all that are entirely God's, and not in any sense Caesar's, they are the things of religion. Should it be asked, When duty, or when expediency dictated to Christians not to comply with commands of magistrates, what were they to do then? Were they quietly to submit to the punishment the magistrate chose to inflict; or where they authorized to combine together, and endeavour to subvert the government? To this question there can, we apprehend, be but one answer given. They were bound to submit, allowing no proper opportunity to pass, however, of showing that they considered themselves illegally treated, if they were illegally treated—unjustly treated, when they were unjustly treated. They are quietly to submit to such sufferings as the government may inflict on them for non-compliance with what they account sin; and they are to do nothing to unsettle the government, except by the dissemination of the doctrines and laws of Christ, which sooner or later will, by their moral power, either improve or destroy all the secular governments on the face of the earth. —See TRIBUTE.

MAGOG = great Gog, or region of Gog? A son of Japheth; (Gen. x. 2; Ezek. xxxviii. 2; xxxix. 6;) also the name of a powerful people, and of a remote northern region inhabited by them. They were probably the northern tribes of the Caucasus, between the Euxine and the Caspian seas. The people of that region, it seems, were a terror to Middle Asia; and they have often been named the Scythians of the East. In Rev. xx. 7—9, the terms Gog and Magog are evidently used tropically, as names of the enemies of Christianity.—See GOG.

MAGOR-MISSABIB = terror on every side. The symbolical name given to Pashur. (Jer. xx. 3.)

MAGPIASH = moth-killer. One of the Levites. (Neh. x. 20.)

MAHALAH = disease. A descendant of Manasseh. (1 Chron. vii. 18.)

MAHALALEL = praise of God.
1. A patriarch descended from Seth; (Gen. v. 12—17;) also called "Male-lel." (Luke iii. 37.) 2. A descendant of Judah. (Neh. xi. 4.)

MAHALATH = music or melody.
1. The daughter of Ishmael, and wife of Esau. (Gen. xxviii. 9.) 2. The wife of Rehoboam. (2 Chron. xi. 18.)

MAHALATH LEANNOT. These words probably mean music, i.e. the lute or cithara, accompanied by the voice. Rosenmüller thinks they refer to singing in alternate choruses, accompanied by musical instruments. (Ps. liii. and lxxxviii. title.)

MAHAL.—See MAHL.

MAHANAIM = camps, or hosts. A Levitical town beyond the Jordan on the confines of Gad and Manasseh. (Gen. xxxii. 3; Josh. xiii. 26, 30; xxi. 38; 2 Sam. ii. 8, 12, 29; xvii. 24, 27; 1 Kings ii. 8; iv. 14.) Perhaps the ruins now called Manah.

MAHANE-DAN = camp of Dan. A place at Kirjath-Jearim. (Judg. xviii. 12.)

MAHARAIM = impetuous. One of David's distinguished officers. (2 Sam. xxiii. 28; 1 Chron. xi. 30; xxvii. 13.)

MAHATH = taking, grasping. One of the Levites. (1 Chron. vi. 35; 2 Chron. xxix. 12; xxxi. 13.)

MACHATITES = smitten. The name of a family or people, otherwise unknown. (1 Chron. xi. 46.)

MAHAZIOTH = visions. A son of Heman. (1 Chron. xxxv. 4, 30.)

MAHER SHAALI-HASH-RAZ = he hasteth to the spoil. The symbolic name of one of the sons of Isaiah, prophetic of the sudden attack of the Assyrians upon Damascus and Samaria. (Isa. vii. 1, 3.)

MAHLAH = disease. A daughter of Zelophehad. (Num. xxvi. 33; xxvii. 1; Josh. xvii. 3.)

MAHLI = sick. 1. A son of Merari; also called "Mahali." (Ex. vi. 19; Num. iii. 20, 39; 1 Chron. xxiii. 21.) His descendants were called "Mahites." 2. A son of Mushii. (1 Chron. xxiii. 23; xxiv. 30.)

MAHOL = sick. A son of Elimelech. (Ruth i. 2; iv. 9, 10.)

MAHOL = dancing. A man whose sons were noted for wisdom. (1 Kings iv. 31.)

MAID-SERVANT.—See HANDMAID.

MAINSAIL. The Greek term artemon, rendered " mainsail," properly denotes the foresail of an ancient ship. (Acts xxvii. 40.)

MAJESTY. The Hebrew word ladar, rendered " majesty," signifies splendour, pomp; and denotes the infinite dignity and splendour of God. (Ps. civ. 1.)

MAKAS = end. A place where one of Solomon's officers resided. (1 Kings iv. 9.)

MAKHELOTH = place of assemblies, choirs. A station of the Hebrews in the desert. (Num. xxxiii. 25.)

MAKKEDEH = place of shepherds. A royal city of the Canaanites, in the plains of Judah. (Josh. x. 10; xii. 16; xv. 41.)

MAKTESH = a mortar. A valley near Jerusalem. (Zeph. i. 11.)

MALACHI = messenger of Jehovah. The last of the inspired prophets under the ancient dispensation. (Mal. i. 1.) He flourished after the return from Exile, about 400 B.C., and was some time contemporary with Nehemiah. His prophecy contains sharp rebukes of the sin and folly of the Jews; the most glowing representations of the Messiah's advent; and predicts the preparation of his way by the preaching of John the Baptist, a second Elijah, who will endeavour to produce a reformation among the people. But, at length, the land shall be condemned to an irrevocable curse—evidently referring to the Jewish war, and the complete devastation of the country by Titus. Thus Malachi sealed up the volume of prophecy with the description of that personage at whose appearance the Evangelists begin their Gospel history. (Mal. i. ii. iii. i—3; iv. 1—6.)

MALCHAM = their king. 1. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 9.) 2.—See MALACH.

MALCHIAH = Jehovah's king. 1. A descendant of Levi. (1 Chron. vi. 40.) 2. The father of Pashur; (Neh. xi. 12; Jer. xxxiii. 11;) also called "Malchiah." (1 Chron. ix. 12.) 3. A descendant of Parosh. (Ezra x. 25.) 4. A descendant of Harim; (Ezra x. 31; also called "Malchiah." (Neh. iii. 11.) 5. The son of Rechab. (Neh. iii. 14.) 6. The son of a goldsmith. (Neh. iii. 31.) 7. One of the Levites; (Neh. viii. 4) also called “Malchiyah.” (Neh. x. 3) 8. The son of Hammelech. (Jer. xxxviii. 6.)

MALCHIEL = God’s king. A grandson of Ashur; (Gen. xlvi. 17; 1 Chron. vii. 81;) his descendants were called “Malchielites.” (Num. xxvi. 45.)

MALCHIJAH = Jehovah’s king. 1. The chief of the fifth division of the priests. (1 Chron. xxiv. 9.) 2. A descendant of Parosh. (Ezra x. 25.) 3. See MALCHIAH.

MALCHIRAM = king of altitude. A son of Jeconiah. (1 Chron. iii. 18.)

MALCHI-SHUA = king of help. A son of king Saul; (1 Chron. viii. 33; ix. 39;) also called “Melchi-shua.” (1 Sam. xiv. 49; xxxii. 2.)

MALCHUS = counsellor. The servant of the high priest, whose right ear was cut off by Peter; but Jesus touched his ear, and healed him. (John xviii. 10; Luke xxii. 50, 51; Matt. xxvi. 51; Mark xiv. 47.)

MALELEEL. See MAHALALEEL.

MALLOW = my fulness. One of the temple musicians. (1 Chron. xxv. 4, 26.)

MALLOWS. The Hebrew word malluakh, rendered “mallows,” (Job xxx. 4,) is derived from melakh = “salt;” and seems to designate a saline plant; perhaps the orache, sea-purslane, the buds and leaves of which were eaten by the poor both raw and boiled. Others think the garden mallow, reared in Egypt, and boiled with meat, is intended.

MALLUCH = counsellor. 1. A descendant of Merari. (1 Chron. vi. 44.) 2. A descendant of Bani. (Ezra x. 29.) 3. One of the priests, (Neh. x. 4; xii. 2;) also called “Melicu.” (Neh. xii. 14.) 4. One of the Levites. (Neh. x. 27.)

MAMMON = wealth, riches. This term was used by Christ as a personification of wealth; perhaps the god of riches. (Matt. vi. 24; Luke xvi. 9, 11.)

MAMRE = fattening. An Amoritis chief; (Gen. xiv. 13, 24;) whence the city of Hebron is also called Mamre. (Gen. xxiii. 19; xxxv. 27.) Mamre also appears to have given his name to the “plain,” or rather the terebinths of Mamre, near Hebron, by which Abraham dwelt. (Gen. xiii. 18; xviii. 1.) The grove of terebinths is supposed to have been the place called by the Arabs er-Rameh or Ramet-el-Khulli, one hour from Hebron, where are extensive foundations and vestiges of antiquity, probably both Jewish and Roman. After the capture of Jerusalem and the overthrow of the Jews by Hadrian, about A.D. 130, great multitudes of every age and sex were here publicly sold as slaves.

MAN. There are four Hebrew words translated “man.” 1. Adam, the proper name of the first man; (Gen. ii. 17; iii. 7;) also used as the generic name of the human race, sex, mankind; and also for person, whether man or woman. (Gen. i. 26, 27; v. 1.) 2. Ish, a male, a man, as distinguished from isha, a woman. (Gen. iv. 1; 1 Sam. xviii. 33.) 3. Enosh, a man, “man” in general. (2 Chron. xiv. 11; Job v. 7.) 4. Geber, a man so called from his strength; (Deut. xxii. 5;) also man generally. (Psa. xxxiv. 8; lii. 7.) Notwithstanding the apparent differences of physical organization, and of intellectual qualities, which characterize the inhabitants of different regions, the Scriptures everywhere consider the whole family of man as having descended from one common progenitor. (Gen. i. 26–31; ii. 7–25; iv. 1, 25; v. 1, 2; Acts xvii. 26; 1 Cor. xiv. 22, 45, 47; Rom. v. 12, 19.) The Mosaic account of the unity of the human race, finds the fullest confirmation in the facts revealed by the scientific investigations of the natural history of man. Ethnologists have shown from a comparison of languages, that there was originally one primary language; (Gen. xi. 1;) and that the entire human race then formed but one family. The physical differences that distinguish the human form, in the various regions of the globe, are properly ascribed to external or adventitious causes, such as climate, food, way of life, etc. The human species therefore is single, and all the varieties it exhibits are to be regarded merely as varieties. While the unity of the human species, on natural and scientific principles, is generally acknowledged, the varieties are reduced by the ethnologist Blumenbach to five: 1. The Caucasian; 2. The Mongolian; 3. The Ethiopian; 4. The Malayean; and 5. The American; and will probably be yet reduced to three—the Japhetic, the Semitic, and the Hamitic. Indeed, whatever number of varieties we may fix upon, and however well we may distinguish them, we see them, after all our attempts, constantly running into each other by every shade of gradation. The progress of true science corroborates the statements of the inspired Records, that men are men all the world over, and belong to one species or lineage. Even the savage and the negro are men—veritable men, and form a part of the universal brotherhood of mankind; and, though so far mentally degraded, notwithstanding the efforts of the minute philosophers, who link morality along with the contour of the countenance, who measure the understanding and capacity for salvation by a scale of inches and the acuteness of angles,—cannot be banished from the hopes, the destiny, the rank, and the family of man. The phrases, “son of man,” and “sons of men,” denote mas, men, generally. (Deut. xxxii. 8; Num. xxi. 19; Job xxx. 6; Ezek. ii. 1; Ps. viii. 4; Dan. x. 16; Mark iii. 28; Heb. ii. 6.) “Son of man,” is applied to the Messiah, as appearing in a human form. (Dan. vii. 13, Matt. xii. 32; xv. 13, 16, 20; Luke xxii. 69, 70; John iii. 19; vi. 62; xii. 34; Rev. i. 13; xiv. 14; Acts vii. 56.) “Man of God,” a servant and minister of God; spoken of angels; (Judg. xiii. 6, 8) of prophets; (1 Sam. ii. 27; 1 Kings xi. 1; 1 Tim. vi. 14) of Moses; (Deut. xxxiii. 1.) and of David. (2 Chron. viii. 14.) “The old man,” signifies the unrenewed disposition of the heart; and “the new man,” the disposition which is created and cherished by the religion of Jesus. (Rom. vi. 6; Eph. ii. 15; iv. 22, 24; Col. iii. 9.)

MANAHATH = rest. 1. A descendant of Seir. (Gen. xxxvi. 28; 1 Chron. i. 40.) 2. The name of a place otherwise unknown. (1 Chron. viii. 9.)

MANAHETHITES.—See HATTI-HAMMENCHOTH.

MANASSEH = who makes forget. The elder of the two sons of Joseph, born in Egypt; (Gen. xlii. 51; xlvii. 20; xviii. 1–20;) whom Jacob adopted as his own, by which act each became the head of a tribe in Israel. (Num. i. 32–35; ii. 18–21; Ps. lxxx. 2.) In the conquest of Canaan, half the tribe of Manasseh, with Reuben and Gad, received, according to their own request, the territory east of the Jordan, stretching from the Jabbok to Mount Hermon; while the other half had its portion on the west of the Jordan, between Ephraim and Issachar, across the country from the Jordan to the Mediterranean. (Num. xxxii. 39–41; xxxiv. 14, 15; Deut. iii. 12–17; xxxiii. 17; Josh. xii. 6; xiii. 7, 8; xvi. 9; xvii. 5–18; Judg. i. 27–29; 1 Chron. v. 28–36.) The descendants of Manasseh are called “Manassites.” (Deut. iv. 43.) 2. The grandfather of Jonathan the Levite. (Judg. xviii. 30.) 3. The son and successor of Hesekiah, king of Judah. He ascended the throne at the age of twelve years, and reigned fifty-five years, from 696 to 642 B. C. The former part of his reign was distinguished for acts of daring impiety and wanton cruelty. (2 Kings xx. 21; xxi. 1–18; 2 Chron. xxxiii. 1–10.) For these sins, in which he persuaded his subjects to participate, the country was visited with God’s judgments; and he was at last taken captive by the general of the Assyrian king, Esarhaddon, and ignominiously transported. to Babylon. Manasseh, during his captivity, repented of his folly, and was restored to his throne, after, it is supposed, about a year's absence. Undoubtedly he remained tributary to the Assyrian monarch, and his territory was probably made to serve as a barrier between Assyria and Egypt. He died in Jerusalem, after having done much to repair the evils of his former life, and was buried in the garden of his house. (2 Chron. xxxiii. 11—23.) He is called "Manasses" in Matt. i. 10. 4. A descendant of Pahath-moab. (Ezra x. 30.) 5. A descendant of Hashum. (Ezra x. 33.)

MANASSES.—See MANASSEH.

MANDRAKE. The Hebrew word dudaim, rendered "mandrakes," properly signifies love apples, i.e. the apples of the atropa mandragora, a plant similar to the belladonna, with a root like a beet, descending several feet underground, bearing white and reddish fragrant blossoms, and yellow apples, also fragrant, which ripen from May to July. This plant frequently grows wild in Palestine and the neighbouring countries. (Gen. xxx. 14—16; Sol. Song vii. 13.)

MANEH = part, portion, number. A weight of a hundred shekels, as we gather from 1 Kings x. 17, where the term "maneh" is rendered "pound." (2 Chron. ix. 16.) The computation in Ezek. xlv. 12, "twenty shekels, five and twenty shekels, fifteen shekels, shall be your meanch;" is spoken either of a single maneh of twenty, twenty-five, and fifteen shekels; or of a single maneh, distributed into three parts, 20 + 25 + 15 = 60 shekels.

MANNA = what is it? or a portion, gift from heaven. The miraculous food given by God to the Hebrews, during their wanderings in the desert. It was a small grain, white like hoarfrost, round, and the size of a coriander seed. It is called "the bread rained from heaven;" (Ex. xvi. 4;) "the corn of heaven," and the "bread of the mighty ones," or "angels' food." (Ps. lxxviii. 24, 25.) When the Hebrews first saw this remarkable sub-seventh day, none was furnished; 3. That what they kept from the sixth day to the seventh was sweet and good, while what they kept from any other day to the next day bred worms and became offensive. (Ex. xvi. 20—30.) The manna ceased to be given while the Hebrews were encamped at Gilgal, immediately after they had celebrated the passover for the first time in the Land of Promise. (Josh. v. 10—12.) To commemorate this long-continued and wonderful miracle, Moses laid up in a golden pot, an omer of the manna, and placed it in or near the ark of the Testimony; that succeeding generations might see with their own eyes the very substance on which their fathers were miraculously fed. (Ex. xvi. 32—36; Heb. ix. 4.)

The manna which was thus laid up in the inner sanctuary was a symbol of that which is “hidden” or reserved for the feast of the blessed, in the eternal sanctuary of the heavens. (Rev. ii. 17.)

MANOAH = rest, quiet. The father of Samson. (Judg. xiii. 2—22.)

MAOCH.—See Maachah.

MAON = habitation, dwelling. 1. A town of Judah, about seven miles south by east from Hebron. (Josh. xv. 53; 1 Sam. xxv. 2.) In its vicinity was the wilderness of Maon. (1 Sam. xxi. 4, 25.) The ruins, now called Ma'in, occupy a summit of a hill, whence there is an extensive prospect. 2. A descendant of Caleb. (1 Chron. ii. 45.)

MAONITES. An Arabian tribe mentioned in connexion with the Amalekites and others, as having oppressed the Hebrews. (Judg. x. 12.) They are the same as the “Mehunims,” (2 Chron. xxvi. 27.) rendered “the habitations.” (1 Chron. iv. 31.) Probably the inhabitants of a place still called Ma'on, in Arabia Petraea, to the south of the Dead Sea, are intended.

MARA.—See Naam.

MARA = bitterness. A bitter or brackish fountain in the peninsula of Sinai. (Ex. xv. 23; Num. xxxiii. 8.)

The fountain of Hawarah is generally regarded as the bitter fountain Marah, which the Hebrews reached after three days’ march in the desert of Shur. Dr. Robinson describes the fountain, as “lying to the left of the road on a large mound, composed of a whitish rocky substance formed apparently by the deposits of the fountain during the lapse of ages. The basin is six or eight feet in diameter, and the water about two feet deep. Its taste is unpleasant, salty, and somewhat bitter. Near by the spring were two stunted palm trees; and round about it many bushes of the shrub Ghurkud—Nitraria tridentata, in blossom. The effect produced upon the water of Marah, by casting in the branch of a tree, was purely miraculous. Lord Lindsey has well observed: “Whatever the tree was, it can have had no more inherent virtue in sweetening the bitter well of Marah, than the salt had, which produced the same effect, when thrown by Elisha into the well of Jericho.” (Ex. xv. 25; 2 Kings, ii. 19—21.)

MARALAH = trembling, earthquake. A place in the tribe of Zebulun. (Josh. xix. 11.)

MARANATHA.—See Anathema.

MARBLE. Of calcareous stones, the most important is marble, which is simply chryssallized limestone; and of a colour varying from pure white, which constitutes the statue marble, to various shades of gray, brown, black, and green. The Hebrew word shaish probably signifies white marble. (1 Chron. xxix. 2; Est. i. 6; Sol. Song v. 15.) The pavement of the palace of Shusan is said to have been “of red, and blue, and white, and black marble;” (Est. i. 6;) or according to the marginal reading, “of porphyry, and marble, and alabaster, and stone of blue colour.”

MARCUS.—See Mark.

MARESHAH = on the top of a hill. 1. A fortified city in the plains of Judah. (Josh. xv. 44; 1 Chron. iv. 21; 2 Chron. xi. 8; xiv. 9—12; Mic.
The ruins about a mile and a half from Beit Jibrin, the earlier Eleutheropolis, seem to mark the site of Maresah. Not improbably Eleutheropolis sprung up after the destruction of Maresah, and was built with its ruins. 2. The father of Hebron. (1 Chron. ii. 42.)

MARK = a hammer. The writer of the second of the four Gospels. His mother was the Mary at whose house the apostles and disciples were assembled when Peter was delivered out of prison. (Acts xii. 12.) He was the cousin of Barnabas; (Col. iv. 10; and is the same person who is called "Marcus," (Col. iv. 10; 1 Pet. v. 12,) "John," (Acts xiii. 5, 13,) and "John, whose surname was Mark." (Acts xii. 25.) Mark was probably instructed in the doctrines of Christianity by Peter, who on that account calls him his "son." (1 Pet. v. 13.)

He travelled with Paul and Barnabas as far as Pamphylia, where he left them, and returned to Jerusalem. (Acts xii. 5-12.) When Paul and Barnabas settled at Antioch, we find Mark with them, and disposed to accompany them in their future journeys; but Paul refused to take Mark with them. (Acts xv. 37-38.) While Paul was on his second missionary tour, Mark accompanied Barnabas to Cyprus. (Acts xv. 30.) Paul seems to have been again reconciled to Mark, since we find him at Rome performing signal services for the Gospel during his imprisonment. (Col. iv. 10; Phil. 24.) He was subsequently in Asia, and with Timothy, whom Paul desires to bring with him to Rome. (2 Tim. iv. 11.) After the death of Paul, Mark appears to have attached himself to Peter in the capital of Babylonia. (1 Pet. v. 13.) Tradition says, that having planted a church at Alexandria, he died and was buried there.

MARK, Gospel of. The writer of this Gospel is almost universally admitted to have been John, sur-named Mark. This Gospel was originally written in Greek, about A.D. 66 or 67; probably in the capital of Babylonia, after the death of Paul, and before the death of Peter. As Mark was the intimate friend and companion of Peter, his Gospel contains the substance of the public discourses and private conversations of our Lord, obtained in a great measure, according to John the Presbyter, Ireneus, Clement of Alexandria, Origen, Eusebius, and others, from the statements of Peter. It is not unlikely that Peter himself had an opportunity to examine Mark's Gospel. We have no evidence that Mark made use of the Gospel of Matthew. There are a sufficient number of important differences between the Gospel of Mark and the other three, to show that it is not an abridgment or compilation from them, or either of them; and among these we may mention two miracles which are not recorded in any other Gospel; (Mark vii. 32-37; viii. 22-26;) and yet there are but twenty-four verses, and a few inserted clauses or words, in the Gospel of Mark, which are not mentioned in one or both of the two parallel Gospels of Matthew and Luke. The authenticity of the last twelve verses of this Gospel has been impugned by several critics, but defended by more. All the Greek manuscripts, with the exception of cod. Vaticana B, have the paragraph. And it is sanctioned by Ireneus, Hyppolytus, and other early writers. —See Gospels.

MARKET. The Hebrew word ma'arab, rendered "market," signifies place of barter, market, mart; (Ezra xxvii. 13, 17, 19, 25;) also barter, commerce, trade, traffic; and also gain or wealth acquired by traffic. (Ezek. xxvii. 27.) So also the word sa-lahar, rendered "mart," signifies mart, emporium; (Isa. xxiii. 8;) also to traverse countries as a merchant, in order to buy or sell; and also profit, wealth. (Gen. xxxii. 24; Isa. xlv. 14.) In very early periods markets were held at or near the gates of cities. (2 Kings vii. 18.) The Greek word agora, renordered "market-place," signifies any place of public resort, hence a forum, market-place, where things were exposed for sale, and assemblies and public trials held. (Acts xvi. 19; xvii. 17.) The forum was generally a square, having a public market on one side only, the other sides of the area being occupied by temples, theatres, courts of Justice, and other public buildings. The bazaars, or streets of shops, in the East, are in general, like that of Jerusalem, covered walks; but in some instances they are open streets, in which are displayed an extensive assortment of goods, frequently of British manufacture. In some of them, all the shops are occupied by persons of the same trade. (Jer. xxxvii. 21.) In Alexandria, the peasants, when asked the price of anything which they have for sale, will often say as Ephron did to Abraham, "Receive it as a present." (Gen. xxiii. 11.) This answer being a common form of speech, advantage is never taken of it; and when desired again to name the price, they generally name a sum that is exorbitant, which is of course rejected. The shopkeeper lowers his demand; then the customer bids somewhat higher than before: thus, after a lengthy altercation, they usually meet about half way, and the bargain is concluded.

MAROTH = bitterness, bitter fountains. A place in the tribe of Judah. (Mic. i. 12.)

MARRIAGE. A primeval institution, which, in order to secure the propagation of the species, joined in marriage one man and one woman. (Gen. i. 27, 28; ii. 21—25; Matt. xix. 6.) It is also considered a civil and religious contract between the parties united, for securing the advantages of 1. Domestic comfort; 2. Provision for the education, and support of children; 3. The distribution of society into families, with a head over each who possesses natural authority in his own house; 4. The promotion of security to the state, which arises from parental anxiety; and, 5. The encouragement of industry. Among the Hebrews, celebacy was esteemed a great reproach. (Gen. xix. 30, 32; Isa. iv. 1; lxii. 4; Heb. xiii. 4.) Persons were often betrothed several months before the marriage was celebrated. (Gen. xxiv. 55; Judg. xiv. 8.) From the time of the agreement till its consummation by marriage, though there had not been even an interchange of conversation, the parties were considered and spoken of as man and wife. (Matt. i. 18—20; Luke ii. 5.) A virgin was ordinarily married at the age of twelve years. (Prov. ii. 17; Joel i. 8.) The father of a family selected wives for his sons, and husbands for his daughters; (Gen. xxi. 21; xxiv. 3, 4; Ex. xxi. 9; Deut. xxii. 16; Judg. xiv. 1—4;) but he could not give the daughter in marriage without the consent of the brothers. (Gen. xxiv. 50; xxxiv. 11, 27; 2 Sam. xiii. 20—29; compare Gen. xii. 11—15; xx. 6; xxvi. 7—16.) Intermarriages were prohibited with the Canaanites; (Ex. xxxiv. 15, 16; Deut. vii. 3;) and other foreigners. (Ezra ix. 2—12; x. 3; Neh. xiii. 29—26.) There were other restraints binding on the Hebrews. (Lev. xviii. 7—17; xx. 11—21; xxi. 7—15; Num. xxvii. 1—11; xxxvi. 1—12.) The marriage covenant was confirmed between the father and the brothers of the bride, and the father of the bridegroom, in the presence of witnesses; (Prov. ii. 17; Ezek. xvii. 6; Mal. ii. 14;) and the dowry which the father received for the bride was fixed, which was usually from thirty to fifty shekels. (Gen. xxix. 18—30; xxxiv. 11—12; Josh. xv. 16; I Sam. xviii. 23—27; Deut. xxii. 29; Hos. iii. 1, 2.) The wife who was freely given without her father receiving any pecuniary compensation, was the more highly esteemed. (Gen. xvi. 5, 6; xxi. 9—11; xxxi. 14—16.) When the day of marriage had arrived, the bride adorned herself splendidly with the choicest of her ornaments. About evening, the bridegroom, clothed in the festival robe, (Isa. lxi. 10,) attended with a company of young men about the same age, and cheered with songs and instrumental music, conducted the bride from her father's house, to the house of his father. She was also surrounded with virgins of her own age. (Judg. xiv. 11—16; John iii. 29.) The procession was generally one of great pomp; and in case it was evening, the way was lighted with lamps or flambeaux. (Matt. xxv. 1—13.) Having arrived at the place where the nuptials were to be celebrated, the attendants began to indulge themselves in feasting and conviviality. (Matt. ix. 15; Mark ii. 19.) At length the nuptial blessing, a numerous offspring, was implored upon the parties concerned; (Gen. xxiv. 60; Ruth iv. 11, 12;) a ceremony, which, simple and concise as it was, appears anciently to have been the only one that was performed at the consummation of the marriage. A numerous offspring was considered an instance of the Divine favour; and sterility was looked upon as a great reproach. (1 Sam. i. 6, 7; Ps. cxvii. 3—5; cxxviii. 3—6; Hos. ix. 14; Eccl. vi. 3; Prov. xvii. 6; compare Gen. xvi. 1, 3; xxx. 1, 10, 15, 16, 18.) By the primeval institution of marriage, polygamy was evidently forbidden. (Gen. iv. 19; Matt. xix. 4—8.) Many evils and inconveniences evidently resulted from having a plurality of wives; (Gen. xvi. 4—10; xxx. 1—3, 15;) evils, which travellers in Eastern countries assure us are very great. Though Moses did not interdict this ancient custom, he appears to have so regulated it that the evil might, in progress of time, be diminished. (Ex. xxi. 10; Gen. xxx. 14—16; Lev. xviii. 18, 19; Matt. xix. 8.) The Levirate law existed prior to the time of Moses: (Gen. xxxvii. 8—12;) If in any case the husband died without issue, leaving a widow, the brother of the deceased, or the nearest male relation, was bound to marry the widow, to give to the first-born son the name of the deceased kinsman, to insert his name on the genealogical register, and to deliver into his possession the estate of the deceased. Moses, however, reduced it within certain limits, and enacted, that whoever was unwilling to marry the widow of his deceased kinsman, might declare it in the presence of judges, in case he would allow the woman the privilege of taking off his shoes, of spitting in his face, and of addressing him with the disreputable salutation of unshod or barefoot. (Deut. xxv. 5—10; Ruth iv. 7—8; Matt. xxii. 23—28.) The Mosaic law contained no prohibition to the marriage of a deceased wife's sister. The meaning of the Hebrew of Lev. xviii. 18, is perfectly simple and obvious; as is also the literal English version: "And a wife to her sister thou shalt not take, to vex, to uncover her nakedness, besides her, in her lifetime." Here the first verb prohibits; the second assigns a reason; the third defines; and the words "in her lifetime" limit the prohibition: A wife to her sister thou shalt not take, to be a source of rivalry and jealousy, so as to do her the duty of marriage, besides the wife, in the wife's life-time. This passage does not prohibit, but merely regulates, the marriage of a wife's sister; for bidding that it should take place during the life-time of the former. It precludes the occurrence of cases like that of Jacob with Leah and Rachel. (Gen. xxx. 1, 2.) The term "marriage" is also used to represent the relation of the Jewish church to Jehovah; (Isa. l. 1; liv. 5, 6; lxii. 4, 5; Ps. xlv. 11—17; Jer. iii. 1—14; Hos. i. 2—10; ii. 1—20;) and that of the Christian church to Christ. (Matt. ix. 15; John iii. 29; 2 Cor. xi. 2; Eph. v. 22—32; Rev. xix. 7; xxi. 2.)

MARSENA = worthy man. A Persian prince or noble. (Est. i. 14.)

MARS' HILL.—See Arrepagus.

MARSH. The Hebrew gebaai, rendered "marshes," properly means swamps or marshes; (Ezek. xlvii. 11;) probably the salt marshes and aliny plains in the neighbourhood of the Dead sea.
MART.—See MARKET.

MARThA = bitterness. The sister of Lazarus and Mary, who resided in the same house with them at Bethany. She was probably the elder sister. Though there are strongly marked points of contrast in the characters of the two sisters, yet the character of Martha stands unimpeachable in the Gospel, and of her piety there is no question. (Luke x. 38—41; John xi. 1—39; xii. 2.)

MARTYR. The Greek word martus, generally rendered “witness,” denotes a witness in a judicial sense; (Matt. xviii. 16; xxvi. 65; Mark xiv. 63; Acts vi. 13; vii. 58; 2 Cor. xiii. 1; 1 Tim. v. 19; Heb. x. 28;) also one who testifies of what he knows; (1 Thes. ii. 5; 10; 1 Tim. vi. 12; Rom. i. 9; Phil. i. 8; 2 Cor. i. 23; Heb. xii. 1;) especially those who bear witness to the truth as it is in Jesus; (Luke xxiv. 48; Acts i. 8, 22; ii. 32; iii. 15; v. 32; x. 39, 41; xxii. 15; 2 Tim. ii. 2; 1 Pet. v. 1.) Christ is called the “faithful and true witness.” (Rev. i. 5; iii. 14; xi. 3.) The term martyr, in a more limited sense, denotes one who by his death bears witness to the truth. Still, however, it must be observed, that it is not the blood, but the cause, which makes the martyr. (Acts xxii. 20; Rev. ii. 13; xvii. 6; vi. 9; xx. 4.)

MARY = rebellion. 1. The mother of Jesus, and wife of Joseph, whose genealogy is given in Luke iii. 29—38. She was of the royal race of David, as was also Joseph her husband. Mary being espoused to Joseph, the angel Gabriel announced to her that she should be, by a miracle of Divine power, the mother of the Messiah. (Luke i. 26—38.) In the birth of Jesus we have the literal fulfilment of the prophecy given centuries before by Isaiah, that “a virgin should conceive, and bear a son, and should call His name Immanuel, which being interpreted, is God with us.” (Isa. vii. 14; Matt. i. 22, 23.) Few particulars of this “highly favoured” woman are mentioned in the Gospel history.
from the few fragments still remaining, it is evident that it was merely a translation of the Greek Matthew, somewhat interpolated, or altered, or mutilated, by the different sects among the Judaizing Christians, and was current in the Hebrew language of the day. Indeed, if a Hebrew original of Matthew's canonical Gospel were extant and current in the second and third centuries, how is it possible to account for the fact, that the authors of the Peshito, or old Syriac version, made at the close of the second or beginning of the third century, should have translated the Gospel of Matthew from our canonical Greek copy; as it is certain they did? Nay, why need they have translated it at all, inasmuch as the Hebrew original itself, if in existence, would have been altogether intelligible among the Syrians? From this circumstance alone, it is evident, that no such Hebrew original of Matthew's Gospel ever existed; the original is before us in the Greek language. The arguments of Strauss, Norton, and others, to show that the first two chapters of Matthew's Gospel are a spurious interpolation, are worthless. All the manuscript copies of Matthew, the world over— with the exception of some two or three, the beginning of which have perished—and all the ancient Versions, without an exception, contain the first two chapters of Matthew, and exhibit them as part of his Gospel. The first two chapters constituted a component part of the Greek Matthew; and are quoted by Ignatius, Justin Martyr, Clement of Alexandria, Irenæus, Celsus, Tertullian, Origen, and others. It is somewhat remarkable that the Ebionites and Nazarenes, who received the Hebrew translation of the Greek Matthew, mutilated it by omitting the first two chapters; while Cerinus and Carpocrates laboured to prove, from these very chapters, in their Hebrew copies, the merely natural and human origin of the Saviour. Here, then, at an early period, we find a sect of Judaizing Christians using a so called Hebrew Gospel, which contained the chapters whose genuineness is now called in question.

MATTHIAS = gift of Jehovah.
One of the disciples, who was chosen by lot to fill up the vacancy in the apostleship, occasioned by the death of Judas Iscariot. (Acts i. xxiii. 26.)

MATTTHIAH = gift of Jehovah.
1. The son of Shallum, a Levite. (1 Chron. ix. 31; xv. 18, 21; xvi. 5.) 2. The chief of the fourteenth family of the Levites. (1 Chron. xxvi. 21.) 3. A son of Nebo. ( Ezra x. 43.) 4. One of the Levites. (Neh. vi. 4.)

MATTOCK. The Hebrew words mahharashah, and mahharesheth, rendered "share," and "mattock," are the names of two agricultural cutting instruments; the first indicates the plough-share, and the second the coulter. (1 Sam. xiii. 20.) Both are included in the plural term mahharashoth, rendered "mattocks." (1 Sam. xiii. 21.) The word maddair, rendered "mattock," properly signifies weeding-hook or hoe. (Isa. vii. 25.)

MAUL. The Hebrew word maapis, rendered "maul," signifies a mallet; one used as a weapon of war, a war-club. (Prov. xxv. 18.)

MAZZAROTH = premonitions, forewarnings. The Hebrew word mazzaloth, rendered "the planets," marginal reading, "twelve signs," or "constellations," (2 Kings xxiii. 3,) appears to be identical with "mazzaroth," also rendered "the twelve signs." (Job xxxviii. 32, margin.) Our translators properly suppose this word to denote the twelve signs of the zodiac, a broad circle in the heavens, comprehending all such stars as lie in the path of the sun and moon. As these luminaries appear to proceed throughout this circle annually, so different parts of it progressively receive them every month; hence the mazzaroth were considered the constellations prefiguring or indicating the regular succession of the various seasons.
MEAH = a hundred. A tower in Jerusalem. (Neh. iii. 1; xii. 39.)

MEALS. The Hebrews took a kind of lunch in the forenoon, consisting of bread, milk, cheese, etc. (1 Kings xx. 16; Ruth ii. 14; Luke xiv. 12.) The dinner was served up at mid-day among the ancient Egyptians; (Gen. xlili. 16;) but they appear to have taken supper in the evening. Supper, after the labours of the day were over, appears to have been the principal meal among the Hebrews, as it was among the Greeks and Romans. (Mark vi. 21; Luke xiv. 16, 24; John xii. 2.) In eating, generally, no knives, and much less forks, were used, but each morsel of food was conveyed from the dish to the mouth by the right hand. This mode of eating made it necessary that the hands should be washed before and after meals. (Ruth ii. 14; Prov. xxvi. 15; John xiii. 26; Matt. xv. 20; Luke xi. 38.) In ancient times every one seems to have had his separate portion of meat placed before him; (Gen. xliii. 34; 1 Sam. i. 4, 5; ix. 23, 24;) in later times every one helped himself from the dish nearest to him. (Matt. xxvi. 23.) The orientals do not drink during meals, but afterwards water or wine is handed round. (Matt. xxvi. 27.) The Hebrews seem to have had two modes of sitting: when they used seats or chairs, like the ancient Egyptians, they ate from a table; but when they sat on the floor, the meal was laid on a cloth spread on the floor, or on a table raised only a few inches. During the captivity, the Jews acquired the Persian practice of reclining at meals upon couches, or upon mats or couches, around the tables in such a way that the head of every person approached the bosom of the one who reclined next above him. (John xiii. 23; Luke vii. 38.) In the time of Christ it was common before every meal to give thanks. (Matt. xiv. 19; xv. 36.)—See Food.

MEARAH = a cave, cavern. In Josh. xliii. 4, this word occurs as the name of a cave not far from Sidon; the margin reads, "the cave." Dr. Robinson, in his journey from Tyre to Sidon, passing along the Phoenician Plain, observed many sepulchral grooves, hewn out of the hard limestone rock. This may be the spot spoken of by William of Tyre, as the Tyrian Cave in the territory of Sidon; if so, we might compare it with the "Mearah" = cavern, that was beside the Sidonians.

MEASURING REED. The Hebrew qeneh = measuring-reed, was a measure of six larger cubits, i.e. six cubits and six hand-breathths. (Ezek. xl. 3, 5, 8; xli. 8; xlii. 16-19.) So the Greek kalamos, rendered "reed," was a measure of six cubits and two-thirds. (Rev. xi. 1; xxi. 15.) Sometimes a "measuring-line" was used, (2 Sam. vii. 2; Am. vii. 17; Zech. ii. 1;) perhaps of the same length as the reed.

MEASURES. The Hebrew word mithdah, rendered "measure," "size," or "stature," signifies a standard of comparison, or the dimensions of anything measured. (Ex. xxvi. 2, 8; xxxvi. 9, 15; 1 Kings vi. 25; Isa. xlv. 14; Ezek. xl. 10, 24; Ps. xxxix. 4.) Such also is the usage of the Greek word metron, rendered "measure." (Matt. vii. 2; xxiil. 32; Mark iv. 24; Luke vi. 38; John iii. 34; Rom. xii. 3.) The Hebrew word saah, rendered "measure," (Isa. xxvii. 8; Jer. xxx. 11; xvi. 28,) denotes the same measure as the Greek saton, hence equivalent to about one peck and one pint English. (Gen. xviii. 6; 1 Sam. xxv. 18; 2 Kings vii. 1, 18; Matt. xiii. 33; Luke xiii. 21.) The Hebrew word cor, like the Greek koras, is also rendered "measure." (1 Kings iv. 22; v. 11; 2 Chron. ii. 10; Luke xvi. 7.) In Luke xvi. 6, the Greek word batus, the same as the Hebrew bath, is rendered "measure." In Rev. vi. 6, the Greek word chemis, rendered "measure," denotes an Attic measure for grain, nearly equivalent to one quart English. Our knowledge of the measures of the Hebrews does not admit of perfct accuracy. We give the following, merely as a probable approximation to the truth:
WEA

Hebrew measures of capacity reduced to English Corn and Wine measures.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Measure</th>
<th>daekh</th>
<th>pocha</th>
<th>peck</th>
<th>peck</th>
<th>gal.</th>
<th>plat.</th>
<th>plat.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>ligg ...</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0.838</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0.838</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cab ...</td>
<td>2.8888</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>8</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>8.333</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>8.333</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>omer ...</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>5.1</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>5.1</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>5.1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>hin ...</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>2</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>seah ...</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>2</td>
<td>4</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>2</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>bath ...</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>7</td>
<td>4</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>7</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>homer ...</td>
<td>82</td>
<td>75</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>75</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Relative values of Hebrew measures of Capacity.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Measure</th>
<th>Homer or Cor</th>
<th>Bath or Ephah</th>
<th>Seah</th>
<th>Hin</th>
<th>Omer</th>
<th>Cab</th>
<th>Log</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Homer</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>10</td>
<td>8</td>
<td>100</td>
<td>150</td>
<td>720</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cor</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>10</td>
<td>8</td>
<td>100</td>
<td>150</td>
<td>720</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bath</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>10</td>
<td>8</td>
<td>100</td>
<td>150</td>
<td>720</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ephah</td>
<td>10</td>
<td>10</td>
<td>100</td>
<td>80</td>
<td>1000</td>
<td>1500</td>
<td>7200</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Seah</td>
<td>10</td>
<td>10</td>
<td>100</td>
<td>80</td>
<td>1000</td>
<td>1500</td>
<td>7200</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hin</td>
<td>8</td>
<td>8</td>
<td>80</td>
<td>64</td>
<td>800</td>
<td>1200</td>
<td>6400</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Omer</td>
<td>80</td>
<td>80</td>
<td>800</td>
<td>640</td>
<td>8000</td>
<td>12000</td>
<td>64000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cab</td>
<td>100</td>
<td>100</td>
<td>1000</td>
<td>800</td>
<td>10000</td>
<td>15000</td>
<td>100000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Log</td>
<td>720</td>
<td>720</td>
<td>7200</td>
<td>5760</td>
<td>72000</td>
<td>108000</td>
<td>720000</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Hebrew measures of length reduced to English measures.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Measure</th>
<th>in.</th>
<th>fath.</th>
<th>yd.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>The Cubit</td>
<td>3 3/4</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>1 1/2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Span</td>
<td>10 3/4</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>3 1/2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Foot</td>
<td>12 3/4</td>
<td>4</td>
<td>4 1/2</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

MEAT-OFFERINGS.—See OFFERINGS.

MEATS. In the English version this word means food in general; or when confined to one species of food, it always signifies meat, flour, or grain, but never flesh, which is now the usual acceptance of the word. A meat-offering is always a vegetable and never an animal offering; and it might now be rendered a bread-offering, or a meat-offering instead of a meat-offering. In reference to meats, i.e. flesh, offered to idols, there was a diversity of opinion in the ancient church, for which Paul applied a suitable remedy. The Apostle declared that all things were clean to such as were clean, and that an idol was nothing at all. That a man might safely eat of whatever was sold in the shambles, and need not scrupulously inquire whence it came; and that if an unbeliever should invite a believer to eat with him, the believer might eat of whatever was set before him. But at the same time, he enjoins that the laws of charity and prudence should be observed; that believers should be cautious of scandalizing or offending weak minds; for though all things might be lawful, yet all things were not always expedient. (1 Cor. viii. 7, 10; x. 25, Rom. xiv. 20, 21; Tit. i. 15; Acts xiv. 20—29.)

MEBUNNAI.—See Sinbechel.

MECHERATHITE. Hepher, one of David's distinguished officers, is called "the Mecheraithite," from Mechera = a sword? a place otherwise unknown. (1 Chron. xi. 36.)

MEDAD = low. One of the seventy elders appointed to assist Moses. (Num. xii. 24—29.)—See ELDAD.

MEDAN = contention, strife. A son of Abraham and Keturah. (Gen. xxv. 2.)

MEDEBA = water of quiet. A city of Reuben, situated on a plain of the same name. (Num. xxxi. 30; Josh. xiii. 9, 16; 1 Chron. xix. 7.) It was afterwards reckoned to the Moabites. (Isa. xiv. 2.) Its extensive ruins, overshadowing a rounded eminence, are situated about five miles south-east from Hashbon.

MEDEBA.—See MEDIN.

MEDISA.—See MEDIA.

MEDIA = middle region. A country of Asia, supposed to have been peopled by the descendants of Madai, the son of Japheth. (Gen. x. 2.) This extensive region lies on the west and south of the Caspian sea, running in a northerly direction towards Armenia, and in a southerly towards Paristan, and comprehends the modern provinces of Shirwan, Azerbaijan, Ghiilan, Masanderan, and Irak Adjemi. This mountainous and fertile region was divided into two principal parts, of which the northern was called Azerbaijan, i.e. Atropatene, or little Media, now as in ancient times, a Persian province. The southern was called Great Media, and comprehended the modern Irak Adjemi, or Persian Irak. Indeed, the term "Medos" appears to have been anciently applied to the Persians also. Media was one of the first independent kingdoms of ancient times; but was afterwards reduced to a province of Assyria. About 804 B.C., Arbaces, the governor of Media, threw off the Assyrian yoke, and established himself on the throne of Nineveh. About 700 B.C., the Medes again revolted, and established their own nationality. About 606 B.C., the Median empire was finally overthrown by the combined armies of Media and Chaldea. In 559 B.C., the Median empire passed from the Medes to the Persians, under Cyrus. Then arose the Medo-Persian kingdom; to which Babylon was added as a province. (Est. i. 19; x. 2; Dan. vi. 8, 12.) After the lapse of about 200 years, Media, in conjunction with the entire Persian monarchy, fell under the yoke of Alexander the Great. After many variations of warlike fortune, Media passed over to the Parthian monarchy. (1 Macc. vii. 56; xiv. 2.) In the Persian captivity, the Israelites were transplanted into the country of the Medes, about 722 B.C. (2 Kings xvii. 6; compare 1 Chron. v. 26.) Jews from Media repaired to Jerusalem to keep the feast of Pentecost. (Isa. xxxii. 7; Jer. xxxv. 25; ii. 11, 28; Est. i. 3, 14, 18; Dan. viii. 20; Acts ii. 9.)
MED

MEDEIANS. One who interposes between two parties at variance, and effects a reconciliation. (Job ix. 35.)

This title belongs pre-eminently to the Divine Redeemer, who, on account of transgression, in the gracious establishment of the mediatorial economy, is the only mediator, in and by whom God is reconciling the world unto Himself. (1 Tim. ii. 5; Heb. viii. 6; xii. 24.) By Him all the Divine communications were made under the several dispensations. (Gal. iii. 19, 20; Deut. xxxiii. 2; Acts vii. 38, 53; Heb. ii. 1.)

Christ, by his assumption of humanity and his sacrificial death, has become the sponsor, pledge, or "surety of the new and better covenant;" (Heb. vii. 22;) pledging Himself for the fulfilment of the stipulations, on both sides; for God the righteous Judge, to man the suppliant for mercy; and for man the repenting and believing sinner, to God the Giver of all good. In the mediatorial work of our "faithful" High Priest, "Mercy and truth are met together, righteousness and peace have kissed each other." (Ps. lxxi. 10; Heb. ii. 17.)

MEDICINE. See Physician.

MEGIDDO = place of troops. A city of Manasseh, situated within the borders of Issachar, and formerly a royal city of the Canaanites. (Josh. xii. 21; xvii. 11; Judg. i. 27; 1 Kings iv. 12; ix. 15; 1 Chron. vii. 20.) It appears to have been the place afterwards called Legio, now Leijua, where are ancient foundations and prostrate columns. The neighbouring stream, probably the "waters of Megiddo," is the largest perennial tributary of the Kishon, and feeds three or four mills. (Judg. v. 19.) The "Valley or Plain of Megiddo," also called "Megiddon," was part of the Plain of Edraelon. (2 Kings ix. 27; xxiii. 29, 30; 2 Chron. xxxv. 22; Zech. xii. 11.)

MEGETABEL = blessed of God. The wife of Hadad. (Gen. xxxvi. 39.)

MEGETABELL = blessed of God. The father of Doleash. (Neh. vi. 10.)

MEHIDA = junction. One of the Nethinim. (Ezra ii. 52; Neh. vii. 54.)

MEHIR = price. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 11.)

MEHOLATHITE. A native of Abel-Meholah. (1 Sam. xviii. 19; 2 Sam. xxi. 8.)

MEHUJAEL = emitter of God. A descendant of Cain. (Gen. iv. 18.)

MEHUMAN = faithful. A eunuch in the court of Xerxes. (Est. i. 10.)

MEHUNIM = habitations. One of the Nethinim; (Ezra ii. 50;) also called "Meunim." (Neh. vii. 52.)

MEHUNIMS. See Magnates.

ME-JARKON = waters of yellowness. A town of the Danites, so called from a fountain. (Josh. xix. 46.)

MEKONAH = base, standing-place. A place in Judah. (Neh. xi. 28.)

MELATIATH = whom Jehovah delivereth. A Gibeonite. (Neh. iii. 7.)

MELCHI = my king. Two ancestors of Mary. (Luke iii. 24, 28.)

MELCHIAH. See Melchiah.

457
MELCHI-SHUA.—See Malchi-shua.

MELCHIZEDEK = king of righteousness, or righteous king. The king of Salem, i.e. Jerusalem, and "Priest of the Most High God." (Gen. xiv. 18, 20.) The brief notices contained in the archeaic records, respecting the person of Melchizedek, would seem to favour the opinion of the Targumists and Rabbins, which has ever been prevalent among the Jews, that he was no other than Shem, the son of Noah, who was undoubtedly still alive in the days of Abraham. Perhaps Melchizedek is not so much a proper name, as an appellation, expressive of his character and office—the Righteous King, the name by which he was universally known as the king of Salem, i.e. Peace, and the priest of the Most High God. The patriarch Shem would seem to have emigrated to Canaan before Abraham; where he founded the kingdom of Salem, and became by Divine appointment the priest of Jehovah, and the Oracle of the faithful. He lived till he was 600 years of age, and till Isaac was fifty; thus Shem and Abraham were contemporary about 150 years. We can scarcely suppose that Shem and Abraham would be contemporary for such a lengthened period, and not be intimately acquainted with each other. Indeed, we may reasonably suppose that they resided at no great distance from each other; and that Shem communicated to Abraham, and by him to his family, the inspired documents wrought up by Moses in the book of Genesis. In Heb. vii. 3, Melchizedek is said to have been "without father, without mother, without genealogy; who hath neither beginning of days nor end of life, but is like to the Son of God; remaineth a high priest perpetually." Now, as a man, Melchizedek doubtless had a father and mother, and was born and died like other men; and we may aver this on the supposition that Shem is Melchizedek, without resorting to the ancient tradition, "that he had neither father nor mother in the postdeluvian world, seeing he was born in the former or antedeluvian world." Hence the Apostle does not refer to Melchizedek as a person, but solely to his official character as the priest of Jehovah, whose priesthood was of a different order to that of Aaron. (Heb. v. 6, 10; vi. 20; vii. 1, 28.) The Aaronical priests had to prove their proper descent from Levi, by the genealogical tables, before they could sustain the priestly office. (Ex. xxvii. 1—43; 1 Chron. xxiii. 13; Neh. vii. 65; Heb. vii. 5, 6.) But Melchizedek was without descent from priestly ancestors; there was no genealogical table to prove that he had derived his office from any predecessor, by way of succession: he was a priest by an immediate Divine constitution. The Levitical priests were limited in the period of their service—they could not enter fully upon the duties of their office until they were thirty years of age; and when they attained to the age of fifty, they laid aside their priestly functions. (Num. iv. 3, 23, 35, 43, 47; viii. 24, 25; 1 Chron. xxiii. 3, 24, 27.) But Melchizedek "had neither beginning of days nor end of life," i.e., as a priest he had no limited time assigned for the commencement and expiration of his office. As Melchizedek sustained the high honours of king and priest, his offices were typical of the offices of Christ, the Righteous King and King of Peace; (Isa. viii. 6, 7; xxxvii. 1;) who is our "Great High Priest"—the universal Priest—the only one appointed to make intercession for our guilty race. (Ps. ex. 4; Heb. iv. 15.)

MELEA = supplier. An ancestor of Jesus. (Luke iii. 31.)

MELECH = a king. A descendant of Saul. (1 Chron. viii. 35; ix. 40.)

MELICU.—See Malluck.

MELITA = affording honey. An island of the Mediterranean on which Paul and his companions were shipwrecked. (Acts xxviii. 1—14.) It was doubtless the modern Malta; said to be situated in the Adriatic sea, the name anciently given to that part of the Mediterranean between Sicily and Greece. This island, which is about sixty miles in circumference, was successively subject to the Phen-icians, Greeks, Carthaginians, Romans, Vandals, Goths, Saracens, Normans, and French; until Charles V. surrendered it to the knights of St.
John, at Jerusalem, who, in 1798, were dispossessed by Napoleon Bonaparte.
In 1806, the French garrison surrendered to an English force; and the island has been ever since a dependency of the British crown. According to Acts xxvii. 1—44, it was about the time of the autumnal equinox, when sailing was reputed dangerous, that Paul and his companions embarked at Cæsarea, for Italy, in a ship from Adramyttium. Mr.
Smith, a nautical man, in his Work,
"On the Voyage and Shipwreck of St.
Paul," has shown, from a personal examination of the localities of the shipwreck, compared with the incidents in the narrative of Luke, that the ship could not have been wrecked anywhere but at Malta. We give a summary of his statements. He says, Paul's company on the second day touched at Sidon, seventy-eight miles from Cæsarea. Loosing hence, they were forced, by strong westerly winds, to leave Cyprus on the left hand.
Thence, favoured by the land breeze and currents, they arrived at Myra, in Lycia. At this port they were then transferred to a corn ship, from Alexandria, bound for Italy. Their subsequent progress, on account of unfavourable winds, was extremely slow, for it was "many days" before they came over against Cnidus, not more than 150 miles from Myra.
Sailing in the direction of Salmone, the eastern promontory of Crete, they coasted along, with north-west winds, as far as Cape Matara, the south side of the island. Here, however, the land bends suddenly to the north, and they made for the Fair Havens, a roadstead near the port of Lasa, company escaped safe to land. The place proved to be a bay on the north-east side of Malta, now known as St. Paul's Bay, an inlet with a creek, about two miles deep and one mile broad. Mr. Smith has shown by calculation, that a ship, starting late in the evening from Cnidos, would, by midnight on the fourteenth, be less than three miles from the entrance of St. Paul's Bay, i.e. a distance of 476 miles. In 1810, the British frigate, "Lively," went to pieces on those very breakers, at the point of Koura, at the entrance of the Bay. The crew, like Paul's shipmen, at the distance of a quarter of a mile, could not see the land, but saw the surf on the shore. So also, Mr. Smith has shown, that every ship approaching the land must here pass over twenty fathoms, and not only must this depth be close to the spot where they had the indications of land, but it must bear E. by S. from the fifteen-fathom depth. The fifteen-fathom depth is, as nearly as possible, a quarter of a mile from the shore, which is here girt with mural precipices, and on which the sea must have been breaking violently. At the bottom of the bay of St. Paul's, there is a communication with the sea outside, by a channel of not more than a hundred yards in breadth; formed by the separation of Salamis island, a long rocky ridge, from the main land. Near this channel, where "two seas meet," are two creeks, into one of which they ran the ship ashore; the fore part stuck fast in the mud and clay, while the stern was dashed to pieces by the force of the waves.

MELOS. The Hebrew word abattihim signifies "melons," perhaps water melons. (Num. xi. 5.) In Egypt some of the melons are three feet in length, and two feet in diameter. They contain a very cold watery juice. In some the pulp is red; the seeds are flat, and contain a white, tender, and delicious almond, from which a medicinal oil is extracted. This fruit serves the Egyptians for meat, drink, and medicine; and during the season in which it is ripe, the poor eat scarcely anything else.—See CUCUMBER.

MELZAR = master of wine, chief butler. An officer in the Babylonian court. (Dan. i. 11, 16.)

MEMPHIS = place of Ptah, i.e. temple of the good god. An ancient royal city of Egypt, standing at the apex of the Delta. From the ancient hieroglyphic name Ma-m-Ptah, came the Greek "Memphis," and probably the Hebrew "Mophi"; (Hos. ix. 6,) and "Noph." (Isa. xix. 18; Jer. ii. 16; xliv. 1; Ezek. xxx. 13, 16.) Not far from this ancient city are the pyramids and the long ranges of tombs, once the necropolis of the ancient city. After the founding of Alexandria Memphis fell into decay. It now bears the name of the nearest village, Mitraheny; and is merely marked by mounds of rubbish, a colossal statue sunk deep in the ground, and a few fragments of granite. Fostat arose out of the materials of Memphis; and when that city was in turn deserted, these ruins again migrated to the modern Cairo = the city of victory.

MEMUCAN = reducer. A prince in the court of Xerxes. (Est. i. 14, 16, 21.)

MENAHEM = consoler. The son of Gadi, probably a general in the Israelitish army, who slew the usurper Shallum, king of Israel, and reigned in his stead, from B.C. 770-760. His reign, which lasted ten years, was distinguished for cruelty and oppression. (2 Kings xv. 16-20.)

MENAN = answerer, refuter. An ancestor of Jesus. (Luke iii. 31.)

MENE. A word of that significant Chaldee inscription, supernaturally written "over against the candlestick upon the plaster of the wall" in Belshazzar's palace. (Dan. v. 5-28.) The various classes of "wise men" could not read the writing so as to interpret it. "Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharain," simply means Numbered, Numbered, Weighed, and Dividing. The full interpretation of this isolated device, evidently required a supernatural endowment on the part of Daniel—a conclusion which is confirmed by the exact coincidence of the event with the prediction; for, "in that same night was Belshazzar the king slain; and Darius the Median took the kingdom." (Dan. v. 28—31.)

MEN = fate, fortune, destiny. This word, rendered "that number," margin Meni; (Isa. lxv. 12,) was the name of an idol which the Jews in Babylon worshiped by public entertainments of food and drink. Probably the planet Venus, as coupled with God or Jupiter, is intended.

MEN-STEALERS. The seizing or stealing of a free-born Hebrew, either to treat him as a slave or sell him as a slave to others, was, by the law of Moses, punished with death. (Ex. xxi. 16; Deut. xxiv. 7.) To murder and sins of uncleanness, the Apostle subjoins "men-stealers," i.e. kidnapping; a crime universally regarded as of the deepest dye, and forbidden by the Greeks and the Romans. (1 Tim. i. 10.)

MENCHITES. — See HATI

HammunCroth. MEOVENIM. — See MAO.

MEONOTHAI = my dwellings. A son of Othniel. (1 Chron. iv. 13, 14.)

MEPHAATH = splendour, or lofty place. A Levitical city in Reuben, afterwards belonging to Moab. (Josh. xiii. 18; xxi. 37; 1 Chron. vi. 79; Jer. xviii. 21.)

MEPHIBOSHETH = extermination of Idols. 1. The son of Jonathan and grandson of Saul; (2 Sam. iv. 4;) also called "Meribbaal"—contender against Baal. (1 Chron. viii. 34; ix. 40.) He was only five years of age when his father was slain, and on the news of this catastrophe, the nurse who had charge of him, apprehending that the whole house of Saul would be exterminated, fled away with him; but in her flight stumbled with the child, and he died for life. David made provision for Mephibosheth and his family. (2 Sam. ix. 9—13; xvi. 1—4; xix. 24—30.) 2. A son of Saul by his concubine Rispah. (2 Sam. xxi. 8.)

MERAR. — See ABDIEL.

MERAIAH = rebellion against Jehovah. One of the priests. (Neh. xii. 12.)

MEROOTH = rebellions. 1. The son of Zerahiah, of the family of Elasar. (1 Chron. vi. 6, 7, 52; Ezra vii. 3.) 2. One of the priests. (1 Chron. ix. 11; Neh. xi. 14.) 3. See MIZRAIM.

MERARI = bitter, unhappy. The youngest son of Levi; (Gen. xvi. 11; Ex. vi. 16, 19; Num. iii. 17; 1 Chron. vi. 1;) whose descendants, the "Merarites," formed one of the three great divisions of the Levitical tribe. (Num. xxvi. 57.)

MERATHAIM = double rebellion. A symbolical name for Babylon. (Jer. ix. 21.)

MERCHANTS. The earliest mode of commerce was doubtless by caravans; hence the Hebrew word zakker, rendered "merchant," and "merchantman," signifies a travelling merchant, one who traverses countries in order to buy or sell. (Gen. xxviii. 18; xxxvii. 28; 1 Kings x. 28; Isa. xxxiii. 2; Ezek. xxvi. 21; xxxviii. 13; compare James iv. 13.) The earliest commerce with India, of which we have any knowledge, was carried on in this way by the merchants of Arabia and Egypt.

MERCURINUS = merchant. The Greek word Hermes = the interpreter, in heathen mythology, designated Mercury, the son of Jupiter and Maia, the messenger of the gods, the patron of eloquence, learning, and traffic. The people of Lystra thought that Paul and Barnabas were gods; "and they called Barnabas, Jupiter; and Paul, Mercurius, because he was the chief speaker." (Acts xiv. 12.)

MERCY. This attribute of Jehovah is a modification of His goodness. By the propitiatory sacrifice of our Divine Redeemer a way is opened for the exercise of mercy and grace, towards the human family, perfectly honourable to the attributes and government of God. But this Divine sacrifice made no alteration in the Divine mind regarding us. It did not create the mercy, inasmuch as there could have been no sacrificial atonement, had not mercy previously existed. It was the dictate and emanation of infinite mercy. Hence the plan of salvation by Jesus Christ, is the great proof of God's mercy, and provides for the exercise of it, consistently with the most rigid demands of truth and righteousness; so that, under this gracious dispensation, "mercy and truth" are said to have met together, and "righteousness and peace have kissed each other." (Gen. xix. 19; Ex. xx. 6; xxxiv. 6, 7; Ps. lxxxv. 10; lxxxvi. 15, 16; ciii. 17; Luke xviii. 13; Rom. ix. 15—18; Heb. iv. 16; viii. 12.) Mercy is also a Christian grace, and no duty is more strongly urged by the Scriptures than the exercise of it towards all men, and especially towards such as have trespassed against us. (Matt. v. 7; xviii. 33—35; Hos. vi. 6; Matt. ix. 13.) God is pleased with the exercise of mercy rather than with the offering of sacrifices; though sin has made the latter necessary. (1 Sam. xv. 22; Mic. vi. 6—8; Hos. vi. 6; Matt. ix. 13.)

MERCE-SÆAT. The lid, or cover, of the ark of the covenant. (Ex. xxv. 17—22; xxx. 6; xxx. 7; 1 Chron. xxviii. 11; Heb. ix. 5.) As the Hebrew word kippur means to cover sin, i.e. to make atonement for it, so kapporeth is properly rendered by the Greek word ἱλασθήν, i.e. place of propitiation, or "mercy-seat," because the high priest was accustomed once a year to enter the holy of holies and sprinkle upon the lid of the ark the blood of an expiatory victim, and atonement was made for sin. (Lev. xvi. 13—15; Ps. lxxx. 1.) Christ Jesus is set forth as our propitiatory sacrifice; (Rom. iii. 24, 25;) and through faith in His blood, we have free access at all times, to the throne of grace—the mercy-seat of heaven. (Eph. ii. 18; Heb. iv. 16; 1 John ii. 2.)

MERED—rebellion, defection. A descendant of Judah, who, during the residence in Egypt, married Bithiah the daughter of Pharaoh. (1 Chron. iv. 17, 18.)

MEREMOTH = heights. 1. The son of Uriah or Urijah the priest: ( Ezra viii. 38; Neh. iii. 4, 21; x. 5; xii. 8;) also called "Merozoth." (Neh. xii. 15.) 2. A son of Bani. (Ezra x. 36.)

MERES = worthy, deserving. A Persian prince or noble. (Est. i. 14.)

MERIBAH = quarrel, strife. 1. The fountain near Rephidim, which issued from the rock in Horeb, which Moses smote by the Divine command; also called "Massah" = temptation, trial. (Deut. vi. 16; ix. 22; Ex. xviii. 1—7.) This miracle occurred in the early part of the wanderings of the Hebrews in the desert. 2. Another fountain produced in the same manner, and under similar circumstances as the preceding, near Kadesh, in the desert of Zin; also called "waters of Meribah," and "Meribah Kadesh." (Deut. xxxiii. 8; Ps. cv. 8; cxi. 32.) This miracle occurred near the close of the wanderings of the Hebrews in the desert. (Num. xx. 1—24; xxvii. 14; Deut. xxxii. 51; Ps. lxxx. 7; Ezek. xlvii. 19.)

MERIB-BAAL.—See МеРИФБАШТ.

MERODACH = arrow? An idol of the Babylonians, probably the god of blood and slaughter. (Jer. i. 2.) Of the worship of this idol by the Assyrians and Babylonians, we have testimony in some of the names of the kings, as Evil-Merodach, and Merodach-Baladan. (2 Kings xx. 12; Isa. xxxix. 1.)

MEROM = height, high-place. The upper or highest lake on the Jordan, in the northern part of Judea; also called the "Waters of Merom." (Josh. xi. 7;) "the Lake Semehemotis;" (Josh. Ant. v. 5, 1;) and now "el-Huleh," by the Arabs. The length of the marsh is about ten miles, and is covered with reeds and rushes; but the plain on the west widens.
forming a beautiful and very fertile champaign called Ard el-Khait. The lake is estimated at about seven miles in length, and its greatest width six; but it rapidly narrows towards the outlet of the Jordan. The water is clear and sweet; and its surface is, in many places, covered with a marsh plant, having very broad leaves; and its bosom frequented by a variety of water fowl. During the dry season of the year the Arabs pasture their cattle on the northern part of the marsh; and penetrate as far down as the reeds of the lake. The whole marsh was probably at one time covered with water, and the northern part has been gradually filled by detritus from the mountains and plains. Even now, in the rainy season, it is mostly submerged. The whole lake and marsh, it is said, might be drained without difficulty, and at a moderate expense.—See Jordan.

MERONOTHITHE. Probably an inhabitant of Meron =place of wailing. (1 Chron. xxvii. 36; Neh. iii. 7.)

MEROZ = refuge. A place in the northern part of Palestine, the inhabitants of which were accused for not having taken the field with Barak against Sisera. (Judg. v. 23.) Mr. Wylie supposes the ruins el-Marooah, near the river Kishon, to mark the site of Meroz; but Dr. Wilson thinks that the village Kef Merr, on the southern bank of Mount Tabor, may be the representative of this ancient town.

MESECH.—See Meshech.
1. MESAHA = debt, loan. A place described as the eastern limit of the region inhabited by the descendants of Joktan; (Gen. x. 80;) probably Mesene, i.e. Meisan, situated among the mouths of the Pasigria, where this river empties itself into the Persian gulf.—See Sephar.
2. MESAHA = deliverance. A king of Moab, who refused to pay to the king of Israel the annual tribute; for which Jehoram, with his allies, invaded his territories, and closely besieged the king in the capital. Mesha attempted to cut his way through the ranks of the besiegers; but failing in this, in the madness of his despair, he made the horrible sacrifice of his eldest son, openly upon the wall, to propitiate his angry gods. The revolting spectacle compelled the Hebrews to raise the siege; and they immediately retired, contenting themselves with great spoil. (2 Kings i. 1; iii. 4—27.) 2. A son of Caleb. (1 Chron. ii. 42.)

3. MESAHA = retreat. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 9.)

MESHECH = guest of the Shah. The Chaldee name given to Mishael, one of Daniel's companions in the court of Babylon. (Dan. i. 6, 7; ii. 49; iii. 12—30.)

MESHECH = possession. A region supposed to have been peopled by the descendants of Meshech, the son of Japheth; (Gen. x. 2;) also written "Mesch." (Ps. cxx. 5.) The inhabitants of Meshech are supposed to be the same as the Moschi, inhabiting the Moschian mountains, between Iberia, Armenia, and Colchia. (Esekh. xxvii. 13; xxxii. 26; xxxviii. 2, 3; xxxix. 1.) The people of Meshech had commerce with Tyre; and are supposed, by some, to have been the progenitors of the Muscovites.

MESHELEMIAS = whom Jehovah repays, or treats as a friend. One of the Levites; (1 Chron. ix. 21; xxvi. 1, 2, 9;) also called "Shelemiash." (1 Chron. xxvii. 14.)

MESHEZAEBEL = delivered of God. One who sealed the covenant. (Neh. iii. 4; x. 21; xii. 21.)

MESHILLEMITH.—See Meshillemoth.

MESHILLEMOTH = retribution. 1. A descendant of Ephraim. (2 Chron. xxviii. 12.) 2. One of the priests; (Neh. xi. 13;) also called "Meshillemith." (1 Chron. ix. 12.)

MESHOBAB = returned. A descendant of Simeon. (1 Chron. iv. 34.)

MESHULLAM = friend. 1. One who returned from the Exile. (Ezra viii. 16; x. 18.) 2. A son of Bani.
(Est. x. 29.) 8. A son of Berechiah.
(Neh. iii. 4, 30.) 4. A son of Besodeiah.
(Neh. iii. 6.) 5. Three of the priests.
(Neh. x. 7; xii. 13; xi. 11.) 6. One who sealed the covenant.
(Neh. x. 20.) 7. A descendant of Benjamin.
(Neh. xi. 7.)
MESHULLEMETH = friend. The wife of king Manasseh. (2 Kings xi. 12.)
MESOBAILTE. Jasiel is so called, from Mesobaiah = garrison of Jehovah, otherwise unknown. (1 Chron. xi. 47.)
MESOPOTAMIA = the region between the rivers. The name given by the Greeks, and also by the Romans, to that extensive tract of fertile country lying between the rivers Euphrates and Tigris, from near their sources to the vicinity of Babylon. (Acts ii. 9; vii. 2.) It was called by the Hebrews Arum-Nakraham = Aram or Syria of the two rivers; (Gen. xxiv. 10; Deut. xxiii. 4; Judg. iii. 8, 10; 1 Chron. ix. 6;) and "Padan-Aram" = Plains of Syria; (Gen. xxiv. 20; xxxviii. 2–7; xiv. 15;) also "Aram" = Syria. (Num. xxiii. 7; Gen. xxxi. 20, 24.) On the Egyptian monuments, the upper part is called Nakarissa; and on the Assyrian, Nahiri. This region is now called by the Arabs el-Jezirah = "the Peninsula," or "Island." Strabo and Pliny inform us that Mesopotamia is bounded on the east by the Tigris; on the south by the Euphrates and the Persian gulf; on the west by the Euphrates; and on the north by Mount Taurus; the length being 800 miles, and the breadth, which is very irregular, 360 miles. This region forms a part of the Turkish empire. The great plains of Mesopotamia possess nearly similar characters, a nearly uniform level, with a soil possessing good agricultural qualities, but barren from want of irrigation. The exceptions are where the plains are intersected by hills, or ranges of hills. The climate of these plains is characterised by great dryness, combined with very great variations in the temperature of the air. The absence of trees on the plains is a phenomenon difficult to account for, but originates possibly in an only occasional supply of moisture. The middle of March, says Mr. Layard, in Mesopotamia, is the epoch of spring; the pastures then abound in rich and luxuriant herbage and the meadows are enamelled with flowers of every hue. The whole region is studded with mounds and ruins of Assyrian and Babylonian greatness. Mesopotamia appears to have been anciently divided into various distinct territories under princes of their own; (Judg. iii. 8–10; 3 Kings xix. 12, 18; Isa. xxvii. 12;) until subjugated by the kings of Assyria. Even after Mesopotamia became an Assyrian province, it formed part of the great monarchies which successively arose in Upper Asia, the Babylonian, Persian, and Macedonian.

MESSENGER. — See Footnote.
MESSIAH = anointed. This Hebrew term is applied, by way of eminence, to Jesus Christ, i.e. Jesus the Anointed. This term sometimes designates the Hebrew kings, who were anointed; (1 Sam. x. 1; xv. 1; xvi. 3, 13; 2 Sam. i. 14, 16; 1 Kings i. 39;) the high priests; (Ex. xxx. 30; xl. 13, 15; Lev. iv. 3, 5, 10; vi. 20;) and the prophets. (1 Chron. xvi. 22; Ps. cv. 15.) Even Cyrus the king of Persia, is prophetically called "the anointed of Jehovah." (Isa. xlv. 1.) But "Messiah" is the designation given by the Hebrews, pre-eminently to that Saviour and Deliverer whom they expected, and who was promised to them by the prophets. (1 Sam. ii. 10; Ps. ii. 2; Acts iv. 25–37; x. 39–39; John i. 41; iv. 25.) As the anointed of Jehovah, it was predicted that the qualities of "king," (Ps. ii. 6; lxii. 1–19; Isa. xxxvii. 1; Dan. ix. 25; Col. i. 17, 18;) "prophet," (Deut. xvii. 15; Acts iii. 22; Isa. lxi. 1–3; Luke iv. 16–21;) and "high-priest," would eminently centre in Him; (Ps. cx. 4; Heb. v. 10; vii. 24–28; ix. 11–12; x. 5–14.) That the Messiah has long since made his appearance is evident from Daniel’s prediction concerning the “seventy weeks” which were determined upon the Hebrews and upon the Holy City, when the Messiah should make an end of sin, and bring in an everlasting righteousness. (Dan. ix. 24—27.) That by the “seventy weeks” we are to understand seventy weeks of years, i.e. seventy sevens of years, equal to 490 years, is generally conceded by commentators. The seventy weeks or heptadecas, i.e. heptadecas of years are divided into the three portions of seven weeks, sixty-two weeks, and one week, or 49 + 484 + 7 = 490 years. We fix the commencement of the 490 years in the twentieth year of the reign of Artaxerxes Longimanus, when he gave to Nehemiah the command “to restore and to build Jerusalem.” (Neh. ii. 1—12.) Some chronologists fix the twentieth year of the Persian monarch in 454 B.C.; others in 444 B.C. Perhaps the variation may mainly arise from the difference of the lunar or the solar year, some nations reckoning by the one and some by the other; as at that period there was no uniform method of determining the length of the year. If we commence the period of 490 years, with 454 B.C., the first period of “seven weeks” or 49 years from this—when the city was rebuilt, “in troublous times,” and the national affairs established by Nehemiah—will terminate 405 B.C. From the rebuilding of Jerusalem to the public manifestation of the Messiah—His baptism by John—was 494 years, which terminated A.D. 29. After this we have the period of seven years, during which the Messiah confirms the ancient covenant with the Jews; in the midst of which, i.e. in about 34 years, “He was cut off,” when sacrifice and oblation ceased for ever, A.D. 33. During the remaining period of 34 years, His Apostles prosecuted the work of confirming the covenant with the Jews. At the close of the “seven weeks,” about A.D. 36, they turned to the Gentiles, and offered the Gospel of salvation to all the world. It thus appears, that from 454 B.C. to 36 A.D. the predictions of the “seventy weeks” or 490 years, were literally fulfilled; and the great design of rebuilding Jerusalem had been accomplished in the manifestation of the Messiah, and the establishment of the Gospel dispensation. The ancient dispensation had done its work, and from this period the Holy City hastened to ruin and desolation.

MESSIAS.—See MESSIAH.

METHEG-AMMAH = curb of the metropolis. This word which occurs as a proper name in 2 Sam. viii. 1, properly rendered, reads “the bridle = bit, of the metropolis”; i.e. David subdued the metropolis of the Philistines; probably Gath. (1 Chron. xviii. 1.)

METHUSAEL = man of God. A descendant of Cain. (Gen. iv. 18.)

METHUSELAH = man of the dart. The son of Enoch, and grandfather of Noah. This patriarch is celebrated as having reached the greatest age attained by man. He died in the year of the Deluge, at the age of 969 years. (Gen. v. 21—27.) He is also called “Mathusala.” (Luke iii. 37.)

MEUNIM.—See MEUNIM.

ME-ZAHAB = water, i.e. lustre of gold. The mother of Matred. (Gen. xxxvi. 39.)

MIAMIN = from the right hand. 1. A son of Parosh. (Exx. x. 25.) 2. One of the priests; (Nex. xii. 5;) also called “Mijamin;” (Nex. x. 7;) and “Miniamin.” (Nex. xii. 17, 41.)

MIBHAR = choice. One of David’s distinguished captains. (1 Chr. xi. 38.)

MIBSAM = sweet odour. 1. A son of Ishmael. (Gen. xxvi. 13.) 2. A descendant of Simeon. (1 Chron. iv. 25.)

MIBZAR = a fortress. A prince of the Edomites. (Gen. xxxvi. 42.)

MICAH = who as Jehovah? 1. One of the minor prophets, a native of Moresheth-Gath, hence surmamed the “Moreshethite” or “Morashite.” (Mic. i. 1, 14.) He prophesied under Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings.
MIC

of Judah, for about fifty years. He was contemporary with Isaiah; (Mic. iv. 1, 2, 18;) and it is supposed that a reference to one of Micah's predictions saved the life of Jeremiah. (Mic. iii. 12; Jer. xxvi. 18.) The Book of Micah contains prophecies concerning the overthrow of the kingdom of Israel; (Mic. i. 1-16; ii. 1-13; 2 Kings xvii. 8-23;) the kingdom of Judah, and the going into Exile. (Mic. iii. 1-12; iv. 10, 11; vii. 13.) It contains predictions of the return from Exile, and the condition of the Jews under the Persian and Grecian monarchies; (Mic. iv. 13; vii. 11, 12, 14;) the heroic deeds of the Maccabees, and their victories over the Syro-Macedonians, called also Assyrians; (Mic. iv. 13; v. 1, 5-16; Zech. x. 10, 11;) the establishment of the royal residence in Zion; (Mic. iv. 8;) the birth of the Messiah at Bethlehem; and the blessings of his reign upon earth. (Mic. v. 2; Matt. ii. 6; John vii. 42.) 2. A celebrated idolater in Mount Ephraim, who hired a wandering Levite to officiate as his priest. (Judg. xvii. 1-13.) The emissaries sent out by the tribe of Dan to find a settlement, happened to call at Micah's house, and saw the idols and the Levite. (Judg. xviii. 1-7.) The Danites who afterwards went to settle in Laish, also called, and took away the idols and priest, and maintained an idolatrous establishment in Dan. (Judg. xviii. 8-31.) 3. See Micaiah.

MICAH = who as Jehovah? The son of Imiah, a prophet in the time of Jehoshaphat and Ahab. He in vain endeavoured to dissuade Ahab from his purpose expedition against the Syrians in Ramoth Gilead. The expedition proved fatal to Ahab, as the prophet had intimated. (1 Kings xxii. 8-37; 2 Chron. xlvii. 7-34.)

MICHAL = who as God? 1. A descendant of Asaph (Neh. x. 11; xi. 17, 22; also called "Michaela.") (Neh. xii. 38.) 2. A son of Mephibosheth. (2 Sam. ix. 12.)

MICHAEL = who as God? 1. A chief angel, who is represented as the patron of the Hebrews before God. (Dan. xii. 1.) In Jude 9, Michael is represented "as contending with Satan about the body of Moses." So again in Rev. xii. 7, 9, the symbolic scenery which represents the Man-child = Jesus, as caught up to the throne of God, also represents Satan as following the risen and ascending Redeemer to the heavenly regions, with the design of annoying Him. Hence, also, Michael and his angels are represented as waging war with Satan and his angels in the upper regions; from which the latter are cast down upon the earth. It is a lively illustration of the malignity and bitterness with which Satan pursued Jesus and His disciples at all times and on all occasions. It is a representation of the like nature with that in Job i. 8-12; ii. 1-7. 2. A descendant of Asher. (Num. xiii. 13.) 3. A descendant of Gad. (1 Chron. v. 13, 14.) 4. A descendant of Levi. (1 Chron. vi. 40.) 5. Two descendants of Issachar. (1 Chron. vii. 8; xxvii. 18.) 6. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 16.) 7. One of David’s distinguished officers. (1 Chron. xii. 20.) 8. A son of king Jehoshaphat. (2 Chron. xxi. 2.) 9. A descendant of Shephatiah. ( Ezra viii. 8.)

MICHA = who as Jehovah? A son of Uzziel. (1 Chron. xxiv. 24, 25.)

MICHAIAH = who as Jehovah? 1. A commander under Jehoshaphat. (2 Chron. xvii. 7.) 2. The father of Achbor (2 Kings xxii. 12;) also called "Micah, the father of Abdon." (2 Chron. xxxiv. 20.) 3. The son of Gemariah. (Jer. xxxvi. 11, 13.) 4. One of the priests. (Neh. xii. 41.) 5. See Mica, and Maachaiah.

MICHAIL = who as God. The youngest daughter of king Saul, and the wife of David. (1 Sam. xiv. 49; xviii. 28.) She aided David to escape from the fury of her enraged father; and excused herself by a direct falsehood. (1 Sam. xix. 11—18.) However, during David’s exile, Saul gave Michal to Phalti, with whom she lived several years. She was subsequently restored to David. (1 Sam. xxv. 44; 2 Sam. iii. 13—16.) For her contempt at the expressions of joy at the restoration of the ark, she was visited with a special judgment. (1 Chron. xv. 29; 2 Sam. vi. 16—23.)

MICHMAS = something hidden. A city of Benjamin, situated on the east of Bethaven; (1 Sam. xiii. 1—5; Neh. xi. 31;) also called “Michmas.” (Ezra ii. 27.) It is now a desolate village with ruins, called Mukhmas, and lies about two miles N.E. of Geba; with a deep and difficult ravine between, called Wady-es-Sweinit, which is probably “the passage of Michmas.” (1 Sam. xiii. 23; Isa. x. 28, 29.) In the valley are two bills of a spherical form, one on the side towards Jeba, and the other towards Mukhmas; which would seem to be the two rocks—“Boxex and Seneh.” (1 Sam. xiv. 4, 5; 2 Kings xxii. 8.)

MICHEMATH = hiding place. A town on the confines of Ephraim and Manasseh. (Josh. xvi. 6; xviii. 7.)

MICHERI = price of Jehovah. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. ix. 8.)

MICH TAM = a writing. This Hebrew word denotes a poem, psalm, song; and is the same as the Hebrew michtab, rendered “writing.” (Isa. xxxviii. 9.) It occurs in the titles of Psalms lvi. lvi. lvii. lviii. lix. lix.

MIDDIN = measures. A town in the desert of Judah. (Josh. xv. 61.)

MIDIAN = strife, contention. An Arabian tribe, descended from Midian, a son of Abraham by Keturah; (Gen. xxi. 2;) whose territories seem to have extended from the eastern shore of the Elanitic Gulf to the region of Moab and the vicinity of Mount Sinai. The Arabian geographers still speak of the ruins of an ancient town called “Midian,” on the eastern shore of the Red sea. (Ex. iii. 1; xviii. 1; Acts vii. 29.) Sometimes the Midianites appear to be reckoned among the Ishmaelites; (Gen. xxxvii. 25, 27, 28, 36; Judg. vii. 12; viii. 22, 24;) elsewhere they are distinguished from them. (Gen. xxv. 2, 4, 12, 16.) Moses resided with the Midianites. (Ex. ii. 15—21; Num. x. 29;) Midian was celebrated for its camels and dromedaries. (Judg. vii. 12; Isa. ix. 6.) The Midianites joined the Moabites in the deputation to Balaam, to procure his services to curse the Hebrews. (Num. xxii. 4, 7;) They were completely subdued by the Hebrews. (Num. xxv. 6—18; xxxi. 1—54.) The Midianites again became a powerful nation, and oppressed the Hebrews; but were miraculously defeated by Gideon. (Judg. vi. 1—40; vii. 1—26; viii. 1—28; Ps. lxxxiii. 9, 11; Isa. ix. 4; Hab. iii. 7.) The Midianites hencelowards became gradually incorporated with the neighbouring Moabites and Aramians.

MIDIANITES.—See MIDIAN.

MIDWIVES.—See BIRTH.

MIDGEAL—EL.—See MAGDALA.

MIDGEAL-GAD = tower of Gad. A town of the tribe of Judah. (Josh. xv. 37.)

MIDGEAL-EDAR.—See EDAR.

MIDGEOL = tower. A city and fortified place situated in the northern limits of Egypt towards Palestine. (Jer. xlii. 1; xlvi. 14.) This name is rendered “tower,” in the phrase “from the tower of Syene;” (Ezek. xxix. 10; xxx. 6;) but the margin correctly has, “from Migdal to Syene,” i.e. Syene, the most southern border of Egypt, and Migdal the most northern. In Egyptian the name is written Meshtal = many hills; in the Septuagint Magdolum. The Hebrews, in their march, “encamped between Migdol and the sea,” and “they pitched before Migdol;” (Ex. xiv. 2; Num. xxxiii. 7;) and thereby they were entangled in the land, the wilderness shut them in; for the Egyptian garrison marching out from Migdol, could block up their way, and, with the sea before them, they saw no way to escape.
MIGRON = precipice. A place in Benjamin, probably between Deir Diwan and Michmassah. (1 Sam. xiv. 2; Isa. x. 28.)

MIJAMIN = from the right hand. 1. The chief of the sixth division of the priests. (1 Chron. xxiv. 9.) 2. See Miamin.

MIKLOTH = staves. 1. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 32; ix. 37, 38.) 2. One of David’s distinguished officers. (1 Chron. xxvii. 4.)

MIKNEIAH = possession of Jehovah. One of the Levites. (1 Chron. xv. 18, 21.)

MILALAI = eloquent. One of the priests. (Neh. xii. 36.)

MILCAH = a queen, or counsel. 1. The daughter of Haran, the wife of Nahor. (Gen. xi. 29; xxii. 20.) 2. A daughter of Zelophehad. (Num. xxvii. 1; xxxvi. 11.)

MILCOM. — See Moloch.

MILDEW. A destructive substance, probably a kind of fungus, which spots and corrodes plants. In the phrase “with blasting, and with mildew,” (Deut. xxviii. 22,) the Hebrew word shidapon, rendered “blasting,” properly signifies a blasting, bright, i.e. of grain by the influence of the east wind; and the word jarkon, rendered “mildew,” signifies paleness, yellowness, i.e. of grain turning yellow, withering away. (1 Kings viii. 37; Am. iv. 9; Hag. ii. 17.) In Jer. xxx. 6, this term is applied to persons, and signifies paleness of countenance.

MILE. This word refers to the Roman mille passuum or mile of a thousand paces. (Matt. v. 41.) The Roman mile was 1,618 yards; and only differed from the English mile by being 1-10th or 142 yards less. The number of Roman miles in a degree is very little more than seventy-five.

MILETUM. — See Miletus.

MILETUS = crimson, scarlet? A city and seaport of Ionia in Asia Minor. It was about thirty-six miles south of Ephesus, and was second only to that city in wealth, commerce, and luxury. It was celebrated for a magnificent temple of Apollo; and as the birthplace of Thales and Anaximander. Here Paul received the elders of Ephesus; (Acts xx. 15—38;) and here, on a subsequent visit, he left Trophimus sick. (2 Tim. iv. 20.) The town of Melas, and a few rains, now marks its site, near where the Meander falls into the sea.

MILK. Among the pastoral tribes of western Asia, milk, not only of cows, but of goats, sheep, and camels, has always formed an important part of diet. (Deut. xxxii. 14; Prov. xxi. 27; Gen. xxxii. 15, xlix. 12; Isa. vii. 22.) The Hebrew word, hehemah, usually rendered “butter,” also signifies, like halad, milk in general; (Job xx. 17; Isa. vii. 15;) and especially curdled milk. (Gen. xviii. 8; Judg. v. 25.) Soured milk or lebbas, usually acquires a slightly inebriating power, if kept long enough. (2 Sam. xxvii. 29.) It is usually poured, with melted butter, upon the bread, in a bowl, for the breakfast; and is taken with avidity. “Milk and honey” are the emblems of fertility and abundance; (Ex. iii. 8, 17; Gen. xlix. 12; Num. xvi. 18, 14; Josh. vi. 6; Isa. lx. 16; Ezek. xxv. 4; Joel iii. 8;) also used as a sign of scarcity of other food. (Isa. vii. 22.) Milk sometimes denotes the truths of the Gospel. (1 Pet. ii. 9; Isa. lv. 1; 1 Cor. iii. 2; Heb. v. 22, 13.) —See Butters.

MILL. The mill common among the Hebrews and ancient Egyptians differed little, if any, from that which is in use to this day throughout western Asia. It was doubtless similar to the Scottish quern; and consisted of two stones, about eighteen inches or two feet in diameter, lying one upon the other, with a slight convexity between them, and a hole through the upper to receive the grain. The lower stone is fixed, sometimes in a sort of cement, which rises around it like a bowl and receives the meal as it falls from the stones. The upper stone is turned upon the lower, by means of an upright stick fixed in it as a handle. The females usually grind, and kneel or sit to their task, occasionally feeding the mill with one hand. The labour is evidently hard; and the grating sound of the mill is heard at a distance. (Matt. xxiv. 41; Luke xvii. 35; Ex. xi. 5; Jer. xxv. 10; Rev. xviii. 22, 28.) Enemies taken in war were often condemned to grind at the mill. (Judg. xvi. 21; Lam. v. 13.) The manna was “ground in mills, or beat in a mortar.” (Num. xi. 8.) As fine flour was used, it would appear that sieves were known at an early period. (Gen. xviii. 6.) As each family possessed a mill, and it was in daily use, it was enacted in the Mosaic laws, “No man shall take the nether or the upper millstone to pledge; for he taketh a man’s life to pledge.” (Deut. xxiv. 6; Job xxxi. 10, 11; xiii. 24; Judg. ix. 53; 2 Sam. xi. 21; Isa. xlvi. 2.)
MIL

MILLET. The Hebrew word dochan, rendered “millet,” denotes the holcus dochna, a species of millet, of which several kinds, especially the durum, are cultivated in Egypt and Syria; and used partly as green fodder, and partly for the grain; also for bread, pottage, etc. The bread is made with camel’s milk, oil, butter, etc.; and though disagreeable, is almost the only food eaten by the common people of Arabia Felix. (Ezek. iv. 9.)

MILLO = a mound, rampart, hence fortress, castle. The “house of Millo,” ought to have been rendered, that “dwelt in the castle.” (Judg. ix. 6, 20.) “Millo” is also used for a part of the citadel of Jerusalem, probably the rampart, entrenchment. (2 Sam. v. 9; 1 Kings ix. 15, 24; xi. 27; 1 Chron. xi. 8.) The same, or part of it, was probably the “house of Millo,” margin “Beth Millo.” (2 Kings xii. 20; 2 Chron. xxxii. 5.)

MIN. The Greek word mna, rendered “pound,” in the margin mna, designates a Grecian silver coin, containing 100 drachmas. According to Bœckh, the drachma was equal to tenpence of our money; hence the mna would be equal to £4, 3s. 4d. It is not unlikely, however, that its value varied in different countries. (Luke xix. 13, 16, 18, 20, 24, 25.)

MINCING. This word is used for short and quick steps, to trip, spoken of the affected gait of the coquettish daughters of Jerusalem. (Isa. iii. 16.)

MIND. The intellectual and immaterial, in opposition to the material nature; (Isa. xxvi. 3; Matt. xxii. 37; Ezek. xxiv. 23; Eph. ii. 3; Phil. iv. 7;) also mode of thinking and feeling, disposition; (Prov. xxvii. 27; Rom. i. 28; xii. 2; 1 Cor. i. 10; Eph. iv. 17, 23; Col. ii. 18; 1 Tim. vi. 5; 2 Tim. iii. 8; Tit. i. 15;) understanding, intellect; (Luke xxiv. 45; 1 Cor. xiv. 14;) memory, (Isa. xlvi. 8; lxv. 17; Ps. xxxii. 12; Mark xiv. 72;) firmness, or presence of mind; (2 Thess. ii. 2;) also reason, conscience, in opposition to fleshly appetites. (Rom. vii. 23, 25;) In reference to God or Christ, it signifies His will, counsel, or purpose. (Rom. viii. 27; xi. 34; 1 Cor. ii. 16.)

MINIAMIN.—See Miaamin.

MINISTER. One who acts in subservience to another. (Ex. xxiv. 13; xxxiii. 11; 1 Kings xix. 21; 2 Kings iii. 11; Acts xiii. 5.) The term is also applied to the angels; (Ps. ciii. 21; civ. 4; Dan. vii. 10; Heb. i. 7, 14;) to the Hebrews; (Isa. lxi. 6;) to the priests; (Jer. xxxiii. 21; Ezek. xlv. 11; xlv. 4; Joel i. 9; Luke i. 23; iv. 20;) to magistrates; (Rom. xiii. 4, 6;) and to Christian teachers or ministers; (Acts xiii. 2; Rom. xv. 16; 1 Cor. iii. 6; iv. 1; 2 Cor. iii. 6; vi. 4; xi. 13; 1 Thes. ii. 2; 1 Tim. iv. 6;) also to false teachers. (2 Cor. xi. 21; 15.) When applied to Christ as the “Minister of the sanctuary,” it denotes His official character as our High Priest. (Heb. viii. 2.)

MINNI = divisions, portions. An Armenian province mentioned with Ararat; not improbably Minyas. (Jer. li. 27.)

MINNITH = divisions, portions. An Ammonish territory, whence wheat was brought to Tyre. (Judg. xi. 33; Ezek. xxvii. 17.)

MINSTREL. A musician who accompanied his pipe, or lute, with song. (2 Kings iii. 15; Matt. ix. 23; Mark v. 38; Luke viii. 52.) The ancient custom of employing minstrels, and hired mourners, to sing elegiac airs, in the house of mourning, is still common in the East.

MIN. A well known garden-herb, largely cultivated by the ancient gardener, and much used in domestic economy. It is mentioned as one of those herbs, of which the Pharisees, from an overstrained zeal in things not touching the essence of religion, paid tithes, without being bound to do so by the law. (Matt. xxii. 23; Luke xi. 42.)

MIPIRKAD = appointed place. The name of a gate of Jerusalem. (Neh. iii. 31.)

MIRACLE. Miracles are supernatural operations, signal demonstrations of the illimitable power of Jehovah. They are supernatural operations, superinduced upon the known and ordinary principles of the Divine administration; hence above the reach of any regular causes, or combination of such causes as are known to operate in the usual mechanism of nature. A miracle is not, philosophically speaking, a violation of the ordinary laws of nature, nor does it necessarily require a suspension of those laws, as some have imagined; but is either an increase of the action of some existing law or means; a bringing into visible operation some latent or more distant or quiescent law; or a new result from the introduction into the particular locality of some superior law. Though miracles are supernatural facts; in one sense they are also natural facts. They belong to a superior order of things, to a superior world; and they are perfectly conformed with the supreme law which governs them. In that world miracles are not miracles; they belong to the course of nature, and are connected with the universal order of things. They belong to the vast plan of Jehovah, which contains at once both the natural course of events and these supernatural manifestations. And when, on remarkable occasions, His plans and purposes have required preternatural interposition of His power, it has always been exerted; but, with the usual occasion, the unusual agency has ceased, and the extraordinary result has no longer occurred. Such interferences are not wanted in the established course and usual sequences of nature, and are no part of the general plan of its regular phenomena. They come into it, like the comets into our solar area, only when they have specific purposes to fulfill, different from the daily state of things, and which the ordinary agencies and movements are incompetent to effect. Hence, Jehovah wrought no miracles for ostentation; none were wasted to gratify curiosity. All His supernatural operations, mentioned in the Scriptures, were done with a moral purpose and for a moral end, and guided by an accurate judgment. He did not effect these by violating the subsisting laws of nature, but by enlarging the agency of such as were in operation, or by introducing among these, others which were then dormant, or of greater power. Thus He employed a “strong east wind” to divide the waters of the Red sea, to make a path for the Hebrews. When they were safe, the extraordinary action of the wind ceased, “and the sea returned to her strength.” (Ex. xiv. 21, 27, 28; xv. 5.) So, when Elijah in competition with the priests of Baal, left the decision of the moral contest to Jehovah, a local direction was given by the Almighty to a sufficient body of electric fluid, not at that moment there in an accumulated state; and the fiery stream came instantly from the parts where it was in quiescence or diffusion, and was darted down, in obedience to the Divine mandate, upon the altar which it was commissioned to inflame. (1 Kings xviii. 38.) In those cases, no law of nature known to us was violated; but, as in all miracles, other exertions of the Divine power, by which everything is constantly governed, were applied in perfect harmony with those laws. It is when laws of nature are used and directed to do, what a superhuman and supernatural power and intelligence can alone move and guide them to effectuate, that the miraculous phenomenon appears, and by appearing, bears in its result, as it were, the inscription upon it, "This is the finger of God." No miracle is to be regarded as an isolated fact; inasmuch as each miracle is a member of a vast whole, and is a part of the union of the various manifestations of the Divine Creator. Miracles were the necessary accompaniments of revelation from God to man, in order to attest its Divine character and authority. The constitution of the human mind required miraculous manifestations. Hence, the inspired history of the church is studded, as it were, with miracles, more or less thickly set, at different intervals; the whole forming a pretty regular chain, extending to the time when the canon of the new Testament, being written and collected, went forth into the world, as "the sword of the Spirit," to achieve, unaided by further demonstration to the senses, its own glorious and consummate victories. The fulfilment of the ancient prophecies attests the Divine character and authority of revelation; so that we, who have not actually seen the miracles which the ancients saw, have an advantage over them in seeing such an extraordinary fulfilment of prophecy, in what has happened since their time.
MIR

MIT

MIRIAM = rebellion. 1. The sister of Moses and Aaron. She is called "a prophetess." (Ex. ii. 4—10; xv. 20—22; Mic. vi. 4.) At Hazereth she joined with Aaron in "saying against Moses," for which she was smitten with leprosy, but was healed upon the intercession of her brother. (Num. xii. 1—15; Deut. xxxiv. 9.) She died at Kadesh, in the fortieth year after the Exodus. (Num. xx. 1.) 2. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 17.)

MIRMA = deceit, fraud. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 10.)

MISGAH = height. A town in Moab. (Jer. xlviii. 1.)

MISHAEL = who is that God is? 1. The name of two Levites. (Ex. vi. 22; Lev. x. 4; Neh. viii. 4. 2.—See MISHAC.

MISHAL. — See MASHAL.

MISHAM = their cleansing, or their beholding. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 12.)

MISHEAL. — See MASHAL.

MISHMA = hearing. 1. A descendant of Ishmael. (Gen. xxv. 14.) 2. A descendant of Simeon. (1 Chron. iv. 25.)

MISIMANNAH = fatness. A descendant of Gad. (1 Chron. xii. 10.)

MISIRAITES. The inhabitants of a place called Mishra = slippery place, elsewhere unknown. (1 Chron. ii. 53.)

MISPERETH. — See Mizpah.

MISREPHOTH-MAIM = burning with water. A place or district near Sidon. (Josh. xi. 8; xii. 6.)

MIST. — See DEW.

MITE. The Greek word lepton, rendered "mite," designates the smallest Greek copper coin current among the Jews. (Mark xii. 42; Luke xii. 59; xxi. 2.) In value it was about three-eighths of an English farthing.

MITHCAH = sweetness. A station of the Hebrews in the desert. (Num. xxxii. 28, 29.)

MITHNITE. Joshaphat, one of David's distinguished warriors, is called the “Mithnite,” from Mathan = strong, firm, a place, elsewhere unknown. (1 Chron. xi. 43.)

MITRED ATH = given by Mithra. 1. A treasurer of Cyrus the king. (Ezra i. 7.) 2. An officer of king Artaxerxes, in Samaria. (Ezra iv. 7.)

MITRE. The Hebrew word mitznepeh, rendered “mitre,” designates the head-dress of the Hebrew priests. It appears to have been a tiara, or turban, of fine linen, of a triangular form, somewhat high, and pointed at the top. It had a plate of gold bound upon the front, with the inscription: “Holiness, i.e., consecrated to Jehovah.” (Ex. xxviii. 4, 37; xxix. 6; xxxix. 31; Lev. viii. 9; xvi. 4; Ezek. xxi. 28.) The Hebrew word migbaah, rendered “bonnet,” designates the caps or tiaras of the ordinary priests. (Ex. xxviii. 14; xxix. 9; xxxix. 28.) The tiaras of princes and illustrious men, were probably of the same general form with those of the priests and high priests, as would appear from the head-dresses on the Assyrian monuments.—See TURBAN.

MITYLENE = curtailed or hornless. The capital of the island of Lesbos, in the Egean sea. (Acts xx. 14.) Some remains of the ancient city still exist near Castra, the chief town of the island. The island is now called Mytilini. The inhabitants are principally Greeks and Turks.

MIZAR = smallness. A summit on the eastern ridge of Lebanon. (Ps. xliii. 6.)

MIZPAH = watch-tower, lofty place. 1. A town of Gilead, near where Laban set up the heap of stones. (Gen. xxxi. 49; Hos. v. 1.) In Judg. x. 17; xi. 11, 34, it is written “Mizpeh.” 2. A city of Benjamin, also written “Mispeh.” (Judg. xx. 1—3; xxii. 1; Josh. xviii. 20; 1 Sam. vii. 5—16; x. 17.) It was fortified by Asa; (1 Kings xv. 22; 2 Chron. xvi. 6.) and in later times was the residence of Gedaliah. (2 Kings xxv. 22—23; Jer. xl. 6—16; xii. 1—18; xil. 7, 15, 19.) Dr. Robinson fixes the probable site of Mizpah at Nebi Samwil, the high point two hours north-west of Jerusalem, on which there are traces of an ancient town.

MIZPAR = number. One who returned from the Exile; (Ezra ii. 2;) also called “Misparah.” (Neh. vii. 7.)

MIZPEH = watch-tower. 1. A town in the plain of Judah. (Josh. xv. 38.) 2. A town of Moab. (1 Sam. xxii. 3.) 3. A town in Gilead; (Judg. xi. 29; probably the same with “Ramath-Mizpeh.” (Josh. xii. 20.) 4. A valley in the high region of Lebanon. (Josh. xi. 3, 8.) 5. See MIZPAH.

MIZRAIM = limits, borders. The name by which the Hebrews generally designated Egypt, apparently from Misraim, the son of Ham. (Gen. x. 6, 13.) This name is in the dual form, and seems to have originally denoted lower and upper Egypt. (Gen. xlv. 20; xlvii. 34; xlvii. 6, 13.) Sometimes it seems to be employed to designate lower Egypt, to the exclusion of Pathros or upper Egypt. (Isa. xi. 1; Jer. xlv. 13.)—See Egypt.

MIZZAH = fear. A descendant of Esau. (Gen. xxxvi. 13, 17.)

MINAS = betrothing, affianceing. An “old disciple,” with whom Paul lodged when at Jerusalem. (Acts xxii. 10.)

MOAB = seed of the father. The son of Lot and his eldest daughter, and founder of the Moabite people. (Gen. xix. 30—38.) Moab is also used for the Moabites; and also for their territory. (Num. xxii. 3—14; Judg. iii. 30; 2 Sam. viii. 2; 2 Kings i. 1; Jer. xlvii. 4.) The territory of the Moabites, originally inhabited by the Emims, (Deut. ii. 10.) lay on the east of the Dead sea and the Jordan, strictly on the south of the torrent Arnon; (Num. xxii. 13; Rth. i. 1, 2; ii. 6;) but in a wider sense it included also the region anciently occupied by the Amorites, over against Jericho, usually called the “Plains of Moab.” (Num. xxxii. 39; xxii. 1; xxvi. 3; xxxiiii. 48; Deut. xxxiv. 1.) When the Hebrews advanced to Canaan, they did not enter the proper territory of the Moabites; (Deut. ii. 9; Judg.
MOA

xi. 18;) but there was always a great antipathy between the two peoples, which arose from Balaam having sed ced the Hebrews to sin by means of the daughters of Moab. (Num.
xxv. i. 2; Deut. xxxii. 3—6.) After the death of Joshua, the Moabites oppressed the Hebrews, but they were delivered by Ehud. (Judg. iii. 21.)
David subdued Moab and Ammon, and made them tributary. (2 Sam. viii. 2—12; xxii. 20.) Soon after the death of Ahab they began to revolt; (2 Kings iii. 4, 5; Isa. xvi. 1;) and were subsequently engaged in wars with the Hebrews. (2 Chron. xxvi.
7, 8; xxvii. 5.) Under Nebuchadnezzer, the Moabites acted as the auxiliaries of the Chaldeans; (2 Kings xxiv. 2; Ezek. xxv. 8—11;) and during the Exile they took possession once more of their ancient territory, vacated by the tribes of Reuben and Gad; as did the Ammonites also.
(Jer. xlix. 1—5.) Some time after the Exile, their name was lost under that of the Arabians, as was also the case with the Ammonites and Edomites.
MOADIAH.—See MAADIAH.

MOLADAH = birth, lineage. A town in the extreme south of Judah, towards Edom. (Josh. xv. 26; xix.
2; 1 Chron. iv. 28; Neh. xi. 26.)
Dr. Robinson is disposed to regard the ruins at el-Milh, nine hours south of Hebron, as marking the site of Moladah.

MOLE. The Hebrew word
'tisheemoth, rendered "mole," (Lev. xi. 29), designates the cameline. And the Hebrew word
'holot, rendered "weasel,"
(Lev. xi. 29), designates the mole.
Moles are extremely abundant in the fields and gardens of Palestine. The Hebrew word
lakshapharphiroth, rendered "to the moles," (Isa. ii. 20), signifies, to the rats, or moles.

MOLECH.—See MOLOCH.

MOLID = genitor. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. ii. 29.)

MON

MOLOCH = king. An idol of the Ammonites, the same as Baal, to whom human victims were offered. (Am.
v. 26; Acts vii. 43.) The name is sometimes written "Molech," (Lev.
xviii. 21; xx. 2—5; 1 Kings xi. 7;
2 Kings xxiii. 10;) "Milcom;" (1
Kings xi. 5, 33; 2 Kings xxiii. 13;)
"Malcam;" (Zeph. i. 5;) and "their king," margin, "Melcom." (Jer. xlix. 1—3.) To this idol the Hebrews, even while in the wilderness, occasionally sacrificed their children by fire. (Lev. xx. 2—5; Ezek. xx.
26, 31.) In later times the worship of this idol was celebrated upon the high places erected in the valley of Hinnom. (Jer. xix. 5; xxxii. 35.)
According to the Rabbins, the statue of Molech was of brass, with the members of the human body, but the head of an ox; it was hollow within, was heated from below, and the children of the human body, but the head of an ox; it was hollow within, was heated from below, and the children to be immolated were placed in its arms, while drums were beaten to drown their cries.

MOLTEN SEA.—See LAVER.

MONEY. The most ancient commerce was conducted by barter, or exchanging one sort of merchandise for another. Even among the Romans, the very name of money—pecunia, from pecus, i.e. a sheep—affords sufficient evidence that cattle constituted the medium of exchange. But the inconvenience of trading only by barter, necessarily led to the introduction of a fixed medium of exchange, in order to facilitate commerce. Hence, bars, rings, or pieces of gold, silver, or copper, of a properly regulated weight, and an acknowledged value, were used as the circulating medium, and also as weights. (Gen. xiii. 2; xx.
16; xxiii. 16; xxv. 22; xxxlli. 8; xxxvii. 28; xlii. 21; xlv. 22.) In all payments, the money was counted over and accurately weighed. (Deut.
xxv. 13; Job xlii. 11; Jer. xxxii. 9; Am. viii. 5.) The ancient custom of weighing money is general in Syria, Egypt, and throughout Turkey. It is somewhat remarkable, that no ancient coins have been hitherto found among the monuments of Egypt, nor in the recent extensive excavations among the ruins of Nineveh. Whether the Hebrews had coined money before the Exile is not known. The Egyptians appear to have had no coinage of their own before the age of the Ptolemies. The earliest coins extant, having the stamp of any individual, are those of Alexander I., of Macedon, about 500 B.C. During the Exile, and after their return from it, the Jews made use of the Persian, Greek, and Roman money. The Asmonean princes struck off a copper currency, as the Syrian kings seem to have reserved to themselves the right of coining the precious metals. Some of them, probably, struck off a silver currency; but most of the shekels, half-shelks, and copper pieces, attributed to Simon Maccabaeus, are now known to have been struck by Simon Barcocba upon Roman money, after the overthrow of Jerusalem. The Herodian kings issued a silver and a copper currency. The legends are nearly similar on all the Jewish coins which have descended to us, but the symbols are somewhat varied, all having reference to the ceremonies prescribed in the religious ritual of the Jews; but on no Jewish coin do we ever meet with figures of men and animals. The Hebrew word koveleth, and the Greek word argurion, properly signify "silver," and are used for money in general. (Gen. xxiii. 13; Ex. xxii. 7; Num. iii. 49, 51; Deut. xxxii. 19; Matt. xxv. 18, 27; Mark xiv. 11; Luke ix. 3; Acts viii. 20.) As the value of ancient coins differed at different periods, and in different countries, we give the following, only as a probable approximation of the value of ancient money:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Hebrew and Persian Money</th>
<th>£</th>
<th>s.</th>
<th>d.</th>
<th>far.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Kesitha, 4 Shekels........</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>10</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marash, daric, or dram...</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>2</td>
<td>6</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Golden daric or stater...</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maneh, 60 shekels.........</td>
<td>7</td>
<td>10</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Talent, 50 manehs, or 3750 shekels.</td>
<td>375</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Greek and Roman Money:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>E.</th>
<th>s.</th>
<th>d.</th>
<th>far.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Lepton, or &quot;Mite&quot;..........</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prorantes or &quot;Farthing&quot;...</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Assarion, 4 koreantes.....</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Denarien, 10 Assarions.....</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Drachmas..................</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Didrachm, 2 drachmas.......</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>8</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stater, 4 drachmas..........</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mina, or Mina, 100 drachmas</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Talent, 60 minas...........</td>
<td>250</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The references to the various kinds of money, afford remarkable evidence of the accuracy of the inspired writers. The ancient taxes are estimated in Greek money, as the temple tribute in the didrachm; (Matt. xxvii. 24;) and the offerings in the lepton, two of which made a koreantes. (Mark xii. 42; Luke xxi. 2.) A payment from the temple treasury, is made in shekels, or "pieces of silver." (Matt. xxvi. 13.) But in business, trade, wages, and the government taxes, the denarius, asarius, and other Roman coins, are usually employed. (Matt. xix. 29; xxii. 19; Mark xii. 11; xiv. 5; Luke xii. 6; xx. 24; John vii. 7; xii. 5.)

MONEY-CHANGERS. A kind of money brokers in Judea, who made a trade of exchanging Jewish money for the Roman currency, or the Roman for the Jewish, for the accommodation of such strangers who came up to Jerusalem, who might have Roman taxes to pay, or the half-shekel tribute for the service of the sanctuary. They were also accustomed to pay and receive interest for loans. The money changers, who were not free from oppressive and fraudulent practices, stationed their "banks" or "tables" in public places, and even in the courts of the temple. (Matt. xxi. 12; xxv. 16, 27; Luke xix. 23; John ii. 14, 15.)

MONTH. This term was originally applied to the time from one new moon to the next. The Hebrew word
MON

 Hodgsh, designates the day of the new moon, hence a "month," i.e. a lunar month, beginning at the new moon. (Gen. viii. 5; Ex. xiii. 4.) So also, the term yerah, denotes "a month," i.e. a lunar month, which, among the Hebrews, was regulated by the appearance of the lunar light. (Ex. ii. 2; Job iii. 6.) Hence their months could not have exceeded thirty days, between which period and twenty-nine days, they must have varied, according to the somewhat irregular phases of the moon. If the new moon was seen on the 30th day of the current month, that month was considered to have ended on the preceding 29th day; but, if no announcement was made on the 30th day, they concluded that the appearance was obstructed by the clouds, and without watching any longer, made the next day the first day of the following month. In order to secure the proper adjustment of the lunar to the solar year, for the due solemnization of the Hebrew annual festivals, Moses ordered the priests to present at the altar, on the second day of the Passover, or the sixteenth day after the first new moon in Abib = April, a sheaf or handful of ripe corn. For if they saw, towards the end of the twelfth month Adar, that the grain, in the warmer districts of the country, would not be ripe, as expected, they were compelled to lengthen the year by the addition of a thirteenth month, which commonly happened on the third year. The intercalated month, called Veadar, compensated for the neglected days, hours, and minutes, in the foregoing years, and duly adjusted the lunar to the solar year. Originally the Hebrews had no particular names for their months, but called them the "first," "second," etc. (Gen. vii. 11; viii. 4, 5, 13, 14.) Afterwards the months acquired distinct names. (Ex. xii. 2; xiii. 4.) During the Captivity the Hebrews appear to have adopted the names of the months they had found among the Chaldeans and Persians. Moses reckoned the first month of the year Abib or Nisan, from the vernal equinox, which answered to the first new moon in April; because the Hebrews departed from Egypt on the fifteenth day of that month. (Ex. xii. 2.) The Rabbins say that Abib answered to March, instead of April, and was the initial month of the year. That it was so at a later period is admitted; but the change was probably owing to the example of the Romans, who began their year with the month of March. Indeed the prescribed observances of the three great Hebrew festivals will not agree with the months of March, May, and September. In the time of Moses, the month Abib = of green corn, could not have commenced before the first days of our April, which was then the period of the vernal equinox. For if the first month, i.e. Abib or Nisan, anciently begun with the new moon of March, the climate of Palestine would not, on the sixteenth day of that month, permit the offering of the handful of ripe years, as the First Fruits of the harvest. Seven weeks after the sixteenth of the first month, and consequently the fifth or sixth day of the third month, Sivan = June, was the feast of Weeks or Pentecost. Thanks were offered to God, for finishing the harvest. But this festival would disturb the middle of the harvest, if it was celebrated in the beginning of May—and then it must have been celebrated if the Hebrew year began in our March. So also, the feast of Tabernacles, or of the Ingathering, was ordered to be held on the fifteen day of the seventh month, called Ethanim, or Tisri = October, after the gathering of all the fruits of the land. (Ex. xxiii. 16; Lev. xxiii. 39; 1 Kings vii. 2.) But if this festival was celebrated in September, the vintage then had either just begun, or was busily carried on all over the land. The three great festivals depended on certain stages in the agricultural year, the periods of which, as all recent travellers have shown, solely coincide with the states of vegetation which are found in that climate, in the months of April, June, and October. Hence, the climate of Palestine and the laws of Moses, can only stand in perfect agreement with each other by arranging the Hebrew months with ours, in the following order,—observing, that while Abib is said to begin with the new moon of April, yet if the new moon be somewhat late, it will take in part of May, and so with all the other months.

1. Abib or Nisan ................. April.
2. Zif or Yiyar .................. May.
3. Sivan ........................ June.
4. Tammuz ........................ July.
5. Ab ............................ August.
7. Ethanim or Tisri ............. October.
8. Bul or Marheshvan ......... November.
10. Tebeth ........................ January.
11. Shebat ........................ February.
13. Veadar ........................ April.

MOON. The nearest of all the planets; being only 2,180 miles in diameter, and about 240,000 miles distance from the earth. As the sun presides over the day, so the moon presides over the night: the sun regulates the length of the year, the moon the length of the month. (Gen. i. 14—19; Ps. civ. 19.) The moon revolves round the earth in 27 days, 8 hours; and always presents the same face to us. It performs a luniary, or synodic revolution—that is, from new moon to new moon again, in 29 days, 12 hours, 44 minutes, and 3 seconds. Her surface seems to be diversified with mountains, valleys, rocks, and plains, in every variety of form. As this orb derives its light from the sun, and reflects a portion of it upon the earth, the illuminating power of its light is less than the 150,000th part of the illuminating power of the sun. The Feast of the New Moon was celebrated by the Hebrews on the first appearance of the moon. (Ex. xii. 2; Isa. i. 13, 14.) It was proclaimed by the sound of the silver trumpets; (Num. x. 10; Ps. lxxxii. 3;) and additional sacrifices were offered. (Num. xxviii. 11—15; xxxix. 1—6; 1 Sam. xx. 5, 24—27; 2 Kings iv. 23; Lev. xxiii. 24, 25.)

The idolatrous worship of the moon was co-extensive with that of the sun. (Deut. iv. 19; xvii. 3; Job xxxi. 26, 27.) The “queen of heaven,” worshipped by the Hebrew women, was the moon, also called “Astarte.” (Jer. vii. 18; xlvii. 17—25.) The oriental custom of occasionally sleeping out of doors, on the flat roofs of the houses, etc., if due precaution is not used, is said to be detrimental to health, on account of the beams of the moon. (Ps. cxvii.) Even fish, when exposed to the light of the moon, acquires a deleterious quality.

MOPH.—See MEMPHIS.

MORASTHITÉ.—See MORESHETH-GATH.

MORDECAI = little-man, or perhaps worshipper of Mars. 1. A Benjaminite, descended from one of the captives, and a resident at Shushan. He was the foster father of Esther, who afterwards became the queen of Persia. (Est. ii. 5—23.) Mordecai fell under the displeasure of Haman, an officer of state, who laid a plan for the extermination of the whole body of the Jews. His purpose, was, however, defeated by the interposition of the queen. Mordecai’s great service in having once detected a conspiracy against the life of the king, was now remembered. (Est. ii. 5—23; iii. 1—15; v. 1—14; vi. 1—14.) Haman lost his life; and Mordecai was elevated to great power in the court of the Persian monarch. (Est. vii. 9, 10; viii. 2, 15; x. 3.) 2. One who returned from the Exile. (Ezra ii. 2; Neh. vii. 7.)

MOREH = teacher. 1. Probably a Canaanite, who gave name to the “plains,” properly, “the oaks of Moreh,” not far from Shechem. (Gen. xii. 6; Deut. xi. 30.) 2. A hill in the valley of Jezreel. (Judg. vii. 1.)

MORESHETH-GATH = possession of Gath. A town near Eleutheropolis, the birth-place of Micah; (Mic. i. 14;) hence he is called the “Moraithite.” (Mic. i. 1; Jer. xxvi. 18.)
MOR

MORIAH = chosen of Jehovah, or the shown, i.e., appearance of Jehovah. A hill on the eastern part of the city of Jerusalem, overlooking the valley of the Kidron; (2 Chron. iii. 1;) on which was the threshing floor of Araunah. (2 Sam. xxiv. 24; 1 Chron. xx. 25.) It lay north-east of Zion, from which it was separated by the valley Tyropoön. Solomon erected the temple upon the levelled summit of this rock; and then immense walls were erected from its base on the four sides; and the interval between them and the sides filled in with earth, or built up with vaults; so as to form on the top a large area on a level with the temple. The “land of Moriah,” whither Abraham went to offer up Isaac, is supposed to denote the same as Mount Moriah, and its vicinity. (Gen. xxii. 2–14; Ex. xv. 17.)

MORNING.—See DAY.

MORTAR.—See MILL.

MORTAR.—See LIME, and SLIME.

MOSERA = bands, bonds. A station of the Hebrews, close by Mount Hor. (Num. xxii. 22; xxxiii. 37; Deut. x. 6.) Dr. Robinson says, the small fountain et-Taiyibeh, at the bottom of the pass er-Ruba'y, may have been either the wells of Bene-Jaaskan, or Mosera.

MOSEROTH = bands, bonds. A station of the Hebrews in the wilderness. (Num. xxxiii. 38.)

MOSES = from the water, i.e., drawn from the water. The illustrious prophet and legislator of the Hebrews, called the “servant of God,” the “servant of Jehovah,” and the “man of God,” was the son of Amram and Jochebed, and great grandson of Levi, the son of Jacob. (Ex. ii. 1, 10; vi. 16–20; Josh. i. 1, 2, 15; 1 Kings viii. 53, 56; 2 Chron. i. 3; Dan. ix. 11; Deut. xxxiv. 5; Ps. xc. title; Ezra iii. 2.) He was born in Egypt about B.C. 1571. In his infancy, through the cruel edict of Pharaoh, he was exposed in the Nile; but was found and adopted by the daughter of Pharaoh. He was educated at the Egyptian court, and “was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and was mighty in words and in deeds.” (Ex. ii. 1–10; Acts vii. 20–22.) When Moses had grown up, he sympathized with his own people, and resolved upon their deliverance. Having slain an Egyptian, he was induced to flee into the land of Midian, where he sustained the character of a shepherd chief, like the Bedowin sheikhs of the present day. In the Arabian wilderness, God further prepared him to be the instrument of deliverance to His chosen people. At length, the Divine Majesty appeared to him, and announced, in an extraordinary manner, his important mission to redeem the Hebrews. By a succession of miracles, which God wrought by his hand, Moses brought the Hebrews out of Egypt, and through the wilderness, unto the borders of Canaan. But, on account of the transgression at Kadesh, Moses was not permitted to conduct them into it; he was only allowed to behold, not to enter the Promised Land. Having accomplished his mission, and attained to the age of 120 years, with the faculties of mind and body unimpaired, the illustrious legislator transferred his authority to Joshua; and, ascending the summit of Pisgah, he gazed on the magnificent prospect of the “goodly land.” He then breathed his last, and “the Lord buried him in a valley in the land of Moab, over against Beth-peor: but no man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day.” (Deut. xxxiv. 1–7.) By the institutes, Divinely communicated unto him, Moses changed the whole character of the Hebrews, and transformed them from shepherds into a people of fixed residence and agricultural habits. From the Hebrews, and through the Bible, the influence of these institutions has been extended over the world; and often where the letter has not been observed the spirit of them has been adopted. Moses is the only historian of the ages and events of remote antiquity. The undivided and uncontradicted testimony of antiquity ascribes the Pentateuch, or first five books of the Bible—Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy—to the great lawgiver of the Hebrew nation. The attempts of the pseudo-critics of the present age, to fix the composition of the Pentateuch in a period, later by some centuries, than the time of Moses, have proved miserable failures. The internal and external evidences of the high antiquity and authenticity of the books of Moses are such as can never be overthrown or gainsaid. The nineteenth Psalm is ascribed to Moses, in the title.

MOTII. The Hebrew words ἀσχ, (Job iv. 19; xiii. 28; xxvii. 18) and σας, (Isa. li. 8.) and the Greek word σες, (Matt. vi. 19, 20; Luke xii. 33,) translated “moth,” designate an insect of the phalaena species, which, in its caterpillar-state, is very destructive to “treasures” of furs, cloths, etc. Some of the species of moths feed on the leaves of plants. This frail but destructive insect is referred to as an emblem of man’s weakness and defenseless condition. (Ps. xxxix. 11; Hos. v. 12; Isa. i. 9; James v. 2.)

MOTHERER. The Hebrew word אֹמות, rendered “mother,” was not only used in the exact sense, (Gen. xl. 29) but also for a stepp-mother; (Gen. xxxvii. 10; a grandmother; (1 Kings xx. 10;) or any female ancestor; (Gen. xxx. 20;) and even for a benefactress. (Judg. v. 7:) So also as expressing intimate relationship. (Job. i. 21; xvii. 14.) The term “mother” is also used of a nation, mother-country; (Isa. l. 1, 2; Jer. l. 12; Ezek. xix. 2; Hos. ii. 4; iv. 5;) also of a metropolis, i.e. mother city; (2 Sam. xx. 19;) so also a city, as the source of wickedness and abominations. (Rev. xvii. 5.) The affection of a mother to her child, is often employed to illustrate the love of God to His people. (Isa. xlv. 14—22; lv. 6—14; 1 Cor. ill. 1, 2; 1 Thess. ii. 7; 2 Cor. xi. 2.)

MOULDY. The Hebrew word נִכְּנָד, rendered “mouldy,” (Josh. ix. 5—12,) properly signifies “dry crumbs” of bread. It is also translated “cracknels.” (1 Kings xiv. 3.)

MOUNTAINS. The Hebrew word הָרָה, denotes a mountain, a chain or ridge of mountains. (Isa. xiv. 25; xlv. 11; lxv. 9.) So also the words אֶרֶץ = the “high places,” or heights of the earth, is another name for mountains. (Am. iv. 13; Mic. i. 3.) The earth presents everywhere an undulating surface, consisting of mountains and valleys, the whole having a greater or less elevation above the level of the sea. The mountain ranges not only serve to direct the currents of clouds in discharging their treasures on the earth, and then drain off the moisture by innumerable rills and streams which flow into the plains; but they also afford a range for the habitats of animals and plants whose natures are adapted for existence in elevated situations. Mountain chains extend much further in length than in breadth, and thus give form and character to a country. They are the centres of elevation whence the rivers derive their origin; and by whose declivities their waters are conducted in winding courses to the ocean. Limestone is the prevalent constituent of the mountains of Syria; and is frequently surmounted by rocks of a soft chalky substance, abounding in corals, shells, etc. Sandstone is very common southward from the Dead sea to Sinai. In the region of Sinai, the granite appears with its customary companions, porphyry, greenstone, etc., under various circumstance of association. The mountain framework of Syria is the Anti-Lebannon chain, which begins on the south of Antioch, by the huge peak of Mount Cassius; and extending southward to the sources of the Jordan, where it separates into two branches; which stretch beyond the southern extremity of the Dead sea, so as to enclose, as in a basin, this river and its three lakes. These two branches, with their numerous ramifications, constitute the mountains of Palestine on both sides of the Jordan. From the Dead sea, the two ranges continue to run parallel to each other to the Gulf of Akabah, where they separate; the one taking the eastern coast, terminates at the Red sea, at the point where that Gulf opens. The other, the western side of the Gulf, entering the peninsula of Sinai, which divides this Gulf from that of Suez, and terminates in the Red sea, near the point of the peninsula. The two ranges enclose not only the basin of the Jordan and Dead sea, but that of the broad valley which extends from that sea to the Elanitic Gulf, and the Gulf itself, the whole extent being not less than 400 English miles.
MOU

In the symbolic language of Scripture, the Hebrew kingdom is called a "mountain" (Ps. xxx. 7) so also the Chaldean monarchy; (Jer. li. 25; Zech. iv. 7) and the kingdom of the Messiah. (Isa. ii. 2; xi. 9; Dan. ii. 33.) The moving of mountains indicate great revolutions in kingdoms and states. (Ps. xlvi. 2; Rev. vi. 14; xv. 20.)

MOURNING. The Hebrews expressed their grief, at the death of their relatives, and at other times of great calamity, by weeping, rending their clothes, striking and lifting up their hands, smiting their thighs and breasts, fasting, and lying upon the ground; going barefooted, pulling their hair and beards, or cutting them, and making incisions on their breasts, or tearing them with their nails. Some of these excesses were forbidden. (Gen. xxiii. 2; xxxvii. 8; 1. 1; Lev. x. 6; xiii. 27, 28; xxxi. 5; Deut. xiv. 1; Ezra x. 5; Jer. xvi. 6.) Sometimes they girded themselves with sackcloth, and even threw dust upon their heads. (2 Sam. iii. 31, 33; Josh. vii. 6.) The time of mourning was from seven to thirty days. (Num. xx. 29; Deut. xxxiv. 8.) The priests mourned only for near relatives; but the high priest, and the Nazarite, for none. ( Lev. xxvi. 1—12; Num. vi. 7.) Like the Orientals of the present day, the Hebrews hired women to weep and mourn, and also minstrels to play, at the funerals. (Jer. ix. 17; Matt. ix. 23.) Among the early Christians, all immoderate grief or mourning for the dead, was regarded as inconsistent with the Christian faith and hope. (1 Thess. iv. 13—18.)

MOUSE. The Hebrew word achbar, rendered "mouse," denotes a field-mouse. Moses declared it to be unclean; (Lev. xi. 29;) still it was sometimes eaten by the idolatrous Hebrews. (Isa. lxvi. 17.) Multitudes of mice made great havoc in the fields of the Philistines; (1 Sam. iv. 18;) and they are equally prevalent in some parts of Syria at the present day, and are very destructive to the fruits of the field.

MOLT. In Hebrew phraseology, to be "heavy mouthed," denoted slow of speech; (Ex. iv. 10;) "a smooth mouth," a flatterer, also "a mouth of deceit." (Prov. xxxv. 28; Ps. cix. 2.) "With one mouth," i. e. with one voice or accord; (Josh. ix. 2; 1 Kings xi. 13; 2 Chron. xvii. 12;) "with my whole mouth," i. e. with all my strength of voice. (Job xix. 16; Ps. lxvi. 17; lxxxvii. 1; cix. 30.) To lay the hand upon the mouth," i. e. to be silent. (Judg. xviii. 19; Job xxi. 5; xl. 4; Prov. xxx. 32; Mic. vii. 16.)

IN "inquire at the mouth of the Lord," is to consult Him. (Josh. xii. 14.) To set their mouth against the heavens," is to speak arrogantly, and blasphemously of God. (Ps. lxvii. 9.) The "rod," and the "two edged sword, of His mouth," denote the sovereign authority and absolute power of the Messiah. (Isa. x. 4; Rev. i. 16; ii. 16; ix. 19; xi. 5; xii. 15; xvi. 13.)

MOZA = a going out, exit. 1. A son of Caleb. (1 Chron. ii. 46.) 2. A descendant of Saul. (1 Chron. viii. 36, 37; ix. 42, 43.)

MOZAH = fountain. A place in Benjamin. ( Josh. xviii. 26.)

MUFFLERS. The Hebrew word realoth, rendered "mufflers," probably designates celes. (Isa. iii. 19.) Some suppose the term denotes a pendant ornament for the neck or breast, worn by females.

MULBERRY-TREE. The Hebrew word baca, rendered "mulberry-tree," (2 Sam. v. 23, 24; 1 Chron. xiv.
14, 15,) may designate the Arabic bâk-tree, a kind of poplar, which grows in various parts of Palestine. The mulberry-tree, however, is much cultivated in Lebanon, by the Druses and Maronites, on account of the quantities of silk which it enables them to produce.

MULE. An hybrid animal, the offspring of a horse and an ass. It is smaller than the horse, and is a remarkably hardy, patient, obstinate, and sure-footed animal. Hybrid animals do not propagate their kind, beyond at most a very few generations; and no real hybrid races are perpetuated. The Hebrews were expressly forbidden to couple animals of different species. (Lev. xix. 19.) The Hebrew kings and nobles procured mules from the neighboring nations. (2 Sam. xiii. 29; xviii. 9; 1 Kings i. 33, 34, 44; x. 25; xviii. 5; 2 Kings v. 17; 2 Chron. ix. 24; Ps. xxxii. 9.) In later times they obtained them from Armenia, Assyria, and Persia. (Isa. lxvi. 20; Ezek. xxvii. 14; Est. viii. 10, 14.)

Mules are represented on some of the ancient Assyrian bas-reliefs. In Syria, domestic trade, with the maritime towns and the mountains, is carried on chiefly by mule caravans. In Gen. xxxvi. 24, Anah is said to have "founded mules in the desert;" but the Hebrew word yemim, rendered "mules," probably signifies "warm springs." The springs may have been at the same place which was afterwards called Callirhoe = beautiful fountains.—See LASHA.

MUPPIM.—See SHUPHAM.

MURDER. This crime was a subject of early and severe legislation. (Gen. iv. 8—6; ix. 6.) A murderer by the Mosaic law was one who slew a person premeditatively; (Ex. xxi. 14;) from hatred or enmity; (Num. xxxv. 20, 21; Deut. xix. 11;) or revenge; (Num. xxxv. 20;) or by lying in wait for him. (Deut. xix. 11; Num. xxxv. 16—21.) For this crime there was no pardon; the city of refuge, and even the altar, furnished no asylum, nor might money be accepted as a commutation or satisfaction. (Ex. xxi. 14; Num. xxxv. 18, 31, 32.) The mode of putting the murderer to death, was probably left, in a great degree, to the option of the goel or avenger of blood. (Num. xxxv. 21, 27.) Involuntary homicide, or manslaughter, is the killing a person without premeditated enmity; (Num. xxxv. 22; Deut. xix. 4—6;) without thirst for revenge; (Ex. xxi. 13;) or when it happened by mistake or accident. (Ex. xxi. 20, 21; Deut. xix. 5; Num. xxxv. 11, 15.) However, if the avenger of blood overtook the unintentional homicide before he reached a city of refuge, or even found him without the limits of his asylum and slew him, he was not punishable. (Deut. xix. 6; Num. xxxv. 26, 27.) If a man slew a thief while breaking into his house by night, it was considered justifiable homicide; but if the sun was up, he was guilty of blood, inasmuch as the person robbed might have had it in his power to obtain legal restitution. (Ex. xxxii. 2, 3.) When murder had been perpetrated by some person unknown, the elders of the city nearest to which the corpse was found, were required by certain ceremonies, to declare their utter ignorance of the affair. (Deut. xxxi. 1—9.)

MURRAIN. The Hebrew word deber, rendered "murrain," signifies destruction, mortality; and may mean death by any contagious disease. It designates the fifth plague, by which the Egyptians were visited, in the sudden mortality among their cattle, including horses, asses, camels, oxen, and sheep, which were "in the field." The Egyptian cattle that survived in the sheds, and were afterwards sent into the fields, were destroyed by the succeeding storm of fire and hail. (Ex. ix. 8—20.) In the plagues of murrain and hail, many of the war horses must have escaped, as they were not "in the field," but in the "stables or houses." (Ex. xiv. 27, 28; xv. 21.)

MUSHI = felt out by Jechorah. A son of Merari, and ancestor of the "Mushitea." (Ex. vi. 19; Num. iii. 20, 33; xxxvi. 58; 1 Chron. vi. 19.)

MUSIC. As musical intonation is the natural result of joyous emotions, it is not improbable that music is the oldest of the liberal arts. The invention of instrumental music is assigned to Jubal, a descendant of Cain. (Gen. iv. 21.) Music was early employed in religious exercises; and important events were often celebrated "with mirth and with songs, with tabret and with harp." (Gen. xxxi. 27.) On the shores of the Red sea, the choral hymn of praise was sung antiphonally, by Moses and the men on the one hand, and by Miriam and the women on the other, accompanied with instruments and the dance, according to the usage of the Egyptians. (Ex. xv. 1-21.) We know from the ancient monuments, that the Egyptians possessed a variety of musical instruments; and, undoubtedly, the Hebrews, while sojourning among them, profited by their musical science. In the Hebrew tabernacle service, even in the desert, music formed an important part. (Num. x. 1-10.) In the times of David and Solomon, the musical service of the Hebrews reached the height of grandeur. (1 Chron. xxiii. 5; xxvi. 1-31.) The Hebrew choirs, which were very large, appear to have answered each other in that kind of alternate singing which is called antiphonal, or responsive; the priests, in the meantime, performed upon the silver trumpets. (2 Chron. v. 11-14.) Under the impious reigns of some of the kings, the musical solemnities fell into disuse, but they were revived by Hezekiah and Josiah. Two hundred musicians returned from the Exile, with Ezra, to the Holy Land. (Ps. cxxxvii. 1-4; Ezra ii. 65.)

In the annual festival journeys to Jerusalem, the march of the people was enlivened by the sound of music. (Isa. xxx. 20.) The practice of music was not restricted to any one class of persons. (1 Sam. xvi. 14-23; 1 Chron. xiii. 8; xv. 16.) Sacred music was practised by the prophets; and Saul is said to have prophesied among them, because he united in their music. (1 Sam. x. 5-12; xix. 20-24.) Some of the Hebrew women appear to have attained to eminent skill in music. (1 Chron. xxv. 5, 6; 2 Sam. xix. 35; Ezra ii. 65; Neh. vii. 76.) The magnificence of the Hebrew music consisted, not so much in harmony, as in unison or melody. The sacred musicians appear to have sung or played in unison, each according to his strength and skill; without musical counterpoint, or those different parts, and that combination of several voices and tones, which constitute harmony in our concerts. Respecting the base, treble, etc. but a very few discriminating remarks had then been made; the lord, the young, and maidens, etc. appear to have sung one part. The instruments, by which, in singing, this melody was accompanied, occupied the place of a continued base. Such is the nature of Oriental music at the present day. In order to ensure harmony, or rather unison, from such a number of voices and instruments, in the temple service, it is not improbable that some kind of musical notes were used. They may have been somewhat analogous to the accents of our Hebrew Bibles, by which the modern Jews cantillate the Scriptures, as the Muslims do their Koran. Undoubtedly, the various instruments of music, whether stringed, percussion, or wind, used by the Egyptians and Assyrians, were also known to the Hebrews. The "instruments of music," mentioned in 1 Sam. xviii. 6, are properly triangles, or bars of iron, i.e. instruments of music struck in concert with drums, as in modern military music.—See HARP.

MUSTARD. The tree known in the East, by the name of khardal, and by botanists, saltrado persica, is, now generally identified with the "mustard tree" of Scripture. It is abundant in Palestine, Syria, Arabia, and India; and bears fruit in bunches, resembling the currant, with the color of the plum. The taste is pleasant, though strongly aromatic, exactly resembling mustard; and, if taken in any quantity, produces a similar irritability of the nose and eyes, to that which is caused by taking mustard. The leaves of the tree have the same pungent flavour as the fruit, although not so strong. The Jewish Rabbins often use the phrase, "a grain of hharadla"; i.e. a mustard seed, for anything extremely small. (Matt. xiii. 31, 32; xvi. 30-32; Luke xiii. 18, 19; xvi. 6.)
MUT

MUTH-LABBEN. The phrase al-nuth-labben, which occurs in the superscription to Psalm ix., probably ought to read alnuth labben, as in many manuscripts, signifying with virgins' voice for the boys, i.e. to be sung by them.

MUZZLE.—See THRESHING.

MYRA = flowing, weeping. An ancient port in Lycaia, on the southwest coast of Asia Minor. (Acts xxvii. 5.) The magnificent ruins of the city stand upon a hill, about a league from the sea.

MYRRH = a drop, i.e. flowing, distilling. An aromatic gum, distilling in tears from a species of Balsamodendron, a tree growing in Arabia, where it forms stunted groves. This resin has always been reckoned one of the most precious productions of the East. (Matt. ii. 11.) It was used in incense; (Ex. xxx. 23;) in perfumes; (Is. xlv. 8; Prov. vii. 17; Sol. Song i. 13; ii. 6; Isa. iii. 20;) in unguents; (Est. ii. 12; Sol. Song v. 5;) and also with "aloes," as a perfume at funerals. (John xix. 39, 40.) Myrrh was sometimes mingled with wine; (Prov. xxxi. 6.) The "wine mingled with myrrh," (Mark xv. 23,) also called "vinegar mingled with gall," (Matt. xxvii. 34,) was probably the sour wine which the Roman soldiers used to drink, mingled with myrrh and other bitter substances, hence called "gall," on account of its extreme bitterness. The Hebrew word lot, also rendered "myrrh," properly designates ladanum, a fragrant resinous gum, used in medicine, which is gathered from the leaves of the cistus ladanifer, a shrub much resembling the sage, which grows in the island of Crete, also in Arabia, and Africa. (Gen. xliii. 11.) The words "spicery, balm, and myrrh," ought to read "gum tragacanth, and balsam of Gilead, and ladanum." (Gen. xxxvii. 25.)

MYRTLE. The Hebrew word hadas designates the myrtle tree, which sometimes reaches in the East the height of twenty feet. Both the leaves and flowers have a mild and pleasant aromatic taste and flavour; hence the myrtle was a tree in high esteem among the ancients. Groves of the myrtle are still found of spontaneous growth, in Palestine. This tree, on account of the rich hue of its green polished leaves, agreeable fragrance, and beautiful flowers, of a snowy whiteness, which hang in clusters, is used by the sacred writers, in contrast with the brier or nettle, to illustrate the prosperity and glory of the church. (Isa. xi. 19; lv. 13; Zech. i. 8-11.) Its branches were used in the construction of booths at the feast of Tabernacles. (Neh. viii. 15; Lev. xxiii. 40.)

MYSIA = heech region? A province occupying the north-west angle of Asia Minor, and separated from Europe only by the Propontis and Hellespont; having Lydia on the south, Bythnia on the east, and including the Troad. Mysia was anciently celebrated for its fertility; and it is at this day a beautiful and fertile country, but poorly tilled. (Acts xvi. 7, 8; xx. 5, 6.)

MYSTERY. This term means something secret, hidden, into which one must be initiated, instructed, before it can be known. In the new Testament the term "mystery" is used in reference to facts, doctrines, principles, etc., Divinely revealed, and explained to the faithful. (Matt. xiii. 11, 16; xvi. 17; Mark iv. 11; Luke x. 21-24; 1 Tim. iii. 16; 1 Cor. xii. 3; xv. 51.) So "the mystery of Christ," is the Gospel dispensation, which had been long hidden in Judaism, like the flower in the bud, and now first revealed and unfolded by the Apostles. (1 Cor. ii. 7; iv. 1; Col. ii. 2.) So also the Apostle styles the calling of the Gentiles “a mystery which, in other ages was not made known,” but is now fully revealed, that Gentiles are fellow heirs, have equal rights to the gospel, with the Jews. (Eph. iii. 3—9; vi. 19; Col. i. 26, 27; Rom. xvi. 25.) Mystery is also used in the sense of symbol. So the “mystery of the seven stars,” and the “seven golden lamps,” is explained as being a symbolical representation of the seven angels or ministers, and the seven Asiatic churches. (Rev. i. 20.) And the mystery, “Babylon the Great,” is a symbolical designation of the spiritual Babylon, i.e. idolatry, oppression, etc.; and to this agrees the expression afterwards, “I will tell the mystery of the woman;” that is, I will explain to thee the symbolism, i.e. that which is apparently obscure. (Rev. xvii. 5, 7.)

NAAM = pleasantness. A son of Caleb. (1 Chron. iv. 15.)

NAAMAH = pleasant. 1. The daughter of Lamech. (Gen. iv. 22.) 2. An Ammonitess, one of the wives of Solomon, and mother of Jehobeam. (1 Kings xiv. 21, 31; 2 Chron. xii. 13.) 3. A place in the tribe of Judah. (Josh. xv. 4.)

NAAMAN = pleasantness. 1. A general of valour and distinction in the army of Benhadad, king of Syria. He was afflicted with leprosy; and, in order to be healed, he was induced to make application to the prophet Elisha, in consequence of what was said to his wife, about the prophet, by a little Hebrew girl, who had been taken captive from among the Israelites, and was living in the general’s family. Accordingly Naaman, while visiting Joram, king of Israel, in Samaria, applied to Elisha to be healed. The prophet merely directed him to wash seven times in the river Jordan. This simple remedy seemed to Naaman altogether inadequate. Naaman was about to leave the place in indignation, when some of his retinue very wisely persuaded him to try the prophet’s prescription; and, upon washing in the Jordan seven times, his flesh and health were perfectly restored. Deeply impressed with the power of the God of Israel, Naaman asked for a quantity of earth, for the erection of an altar in Damascus. He also consulted Elisha on the propriety of attending his master, the king, in his idolatrous services in the temple of Rimmon, as his official duty required. In this matter, the prophet was disposed to trust him to the dictates of his own conscience, which was evidently under Divine influence. (2 Kings v. 1—27.) 2. A son of Benjamin. (Gen. xlvi. 21.) 3. A descendant of Benjamin; whose descendants are called “Naamites.” (1 Chron. xxiv. 7; Num. xxvi. 40.)

NABOTH = fruit, produce. An Israelite of the town of Jezreel, who owned a fine vineyard adjoining the garden of the palace of Ahab. Anxious to secure the vineyard for “a garden of herbs,” the king proposed to give an equivalent for it, but Naboth declined to alienate the property which he had derived from his fathers. However, through the arts of Jezabel, Naboth was accused of blasphemy; and being condemned through the testimony of false witnesses, was stoned to death. (Lev. xxiv. 16.) Ahab then obtained possession of Naamah's inheritance. The perpetration of this crime, speedily brought upon Ahab and Jezebel the severest maleficences. (1 Kings xxi. 1—29; xxii. 37, 38; 2 Kings ix. 25—37.)

NACHON.—See CHidon.

NACHOR.—See Nahor.

NADAB = spontaneus, liberal. 1. The eldest son of Aaron, who was slain with his brother Abihu. (Ex. vi. 23; xxv. 1, 9; xxviii. 1; Lev. x. 1, 2; Num. iii. 2—4; xxvi. 60, 61.) 2. The son of Jeroboam, king of Israel. After a corrupt reign of two years, he was assassinated by Baasha, one of his officers. (1 Kings xiv. 20; xv. 25—32.) 3. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. ii. 28—30.) 4. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 30; ix. 36.)

NAI;GE = splendour. An ancestor of Mary, the mother of Jesus. (Luke iii. 25.)

NAHALAI = pasture. A city of Zebulan, afterwards assigned to the Levites; (Josh. xxi. 35;) also written "Nahalal," (Josh. xix. 15,) and "Nahalol." (Judg. i. 30.)

NAHALIEL = valley of God. A station of the Hebrews in the wilderness. (Num. xxi. 19.)

NAHAN = consolation. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 19.)

NAHAMANI = repenting. One who returned from the Exile. (Neh. vii. 7.)

NAHARI = snorer. One of David's distinguished officers; (2 Sam. xxiii. 37;) also written "Naharai." (1 Chron. xi. 39.)

NAHASH = a serpent. 1. Some suppose this to have been another name for Jesse; while others suppose the wife of Jesse, and mother of David, is intended. (2 Sam. xvii. 25; 1 Chron. ii. 13—17.) 2. A king of the Ammonites, who, besieging Jabesh Gilead, was defeated by Saul. (1 Sam. xi. 1—11.) He is supposed to have been the same who, long afterwards, showed kindness to David. (2 reign, the government exhibits the final struggles of the empire to recover its former glory. The prophet does not name the enemies of Assyria, who are commissioned to effect her overthrow. (Nah. ii. 4, sq.) He refers to Nabi-Naboth, the Egyptian Thebes—as already destroyed, perhaps by Sargon—a city stronger and more affluent than Nineveh. (Nah. iii. 8; Isa. xx. 1—5.) The city of Nineveh was destroyed about 606 or 607 B.C., and about a century after the prophecy of Nahum was uttered.—See Nineveh.
NAI

NAIL. The Hebrew word yated, signifies a peg, pin, nail, as driven or built into the wall; (Isa. xxii. 23—25; Ezek. xv. 3;) specially a tent-pin, or stake, with which the cords of the tent are fixed to the ground. (Judg. iv. 21; xvi. 14; Ex. xxvii. 19; xxxv. 18; xxxviii. 31; Isa. xxxiii. 20; liv. 2.) Hence, to drive a pin, to fasten a nail, is a symbol of a fixed dwelling. (Isa. xxii. 23.) So also, a nail, or pin, is put metaphorically for a prince, on whom the care and welfare of the state depends. (Zech. x. 4.) The Hebrew words masmeric and masmeroth, denote nails made of iron; (1 Chron. xxii. 3; Isa. xlii. 7;) or of gold. (2 Chron. iii. 9; Jer. x. 4.) “The words of the wise are as nails fastened, i.e., they sink deep into the heart.” (Eccl. xii. 11.)

NAI = pleasant. A town of Palestine, situated on the northern slope of the mountain Duhy, about three miles S. by W. from mount Tabor. It is now a small hamlet, called Nais. (Luke vii. 11—17.)

NAIOTH = habitations. A place in or near Ramah, where Samuel abode with his disciples. (1 Sam. xix. 18, 22, 23; xx. 1.)—See Ramah.

NAKED. In addition to the ordinary meaning, as in Job i. 21; Ecc. v. 16; Mic. i. 8; Am. ii. 16, the term “naked,” sometimes denotes partly undressed, having only the under garment on; (1 Sam. xix. 24; Isa. xx. 2; John xxi. 7;) also ragged, or poorly clad. (Isa. lvi. 7; James ii. 18; 2 Cor. xi. 27.) “Naked” is also put for that which is exposed, discovered; “they knew that they were naked,” i.e. stripped of the Divine image, and discovered. (Gen. iii. 7.) “Hell is naked,” i.e. exposed before God; (Job xxvi. 6;) and all “things are naked and open,” i.e. exposed, to the eyes of Him with whom we have to do. (Heb. iv. 13.) The “nakedness of the land,” signifies the parts of the country which lie most exposed to danger. (Gen. xlix. 9; Jer. xlix. 10.) “Nakedness” is also used for idolatry, and all kinds of vice. (Ex. xxii. 25; 2 Chron. xxviii. 19; Ezek. xvi. 36; Rev. xvi. 5.)

NAME. A name among the Hebrews, was usually given to the male child at the time of circumcision. In many instances, the names of children were significant, from some circumstances in the birth, or from some peculiarities in the history of the family: as Moab = seed of the father; (Gen. xix. 37;) Esau = hairy; (Gen. xxv. 25;) Jacob = heel-catcher, supplanter; (Gen. xxv. 26;) Benoni = son of my sorrow; (Gen. xxvi. 18;) Barjona = son of Jona; (Matt. xvi. 17;) Bathsheba = daughter of the oath; (1 Chron. iii. 5;) Moses = drawn from the water; (Ex. ii. 10;) Jabez = he causes pain. (1 Chron. iv. 9.) Frequently the name was compounded with the name of Jehovah or God, as Joshua = salvation of Jehovah; (Num. xiv. 6; Matt. ii. 11;) Isaiah = help of Jehovah; (Isa. i. 1;) Ishmael = whom God heareth; (Gen. xvi. 11;) Samuel = heard of God. (1 Sam. i. 20.) So other nations sometimes compounded the name of an idol, with that of a child: as Echbaal = with Baal; (1 Kings xvi. 31;) Belshazzar = prince of Bel; (Dan. vii. 1;) Benhadad = son or worshipper of Hadad; (1 Kings v. 18;) Nebuzaradan = worshipper of Neba. (Jer. xxxix. 13.) Kings and princes sometimes changed the names of those who stood high in their favour, as a token of distinction and honour. (Isa. lxi. 2; Phil. ii. 9; Heb. i. 4; Rev. ii. 17.) Jehovah changed the patriarch's name from Abram to Abraham; Sarai to Sarah; (Gen. xvii. 5, 15;) Jacob to Israel. (Gen. xxxii. 28; xxxv. 10.) Moses changed Oseas to Joshua; (Num. xiii. 16;) Pharaoh changed Joseph to Zaphnath-panasheh; (Gen. xii. 46;) the king of Egypt changed Elaikim to Jehoiakim; (2 King xxiii. 34;) and the king of Babylon changed Mattaniah to Zedekiah. (2 Kings xxiv. 17.) So also Daniel was changed to Belteshazzar; Hananiah to Shadrach; Michael to Meshach; and Assiriah to Abednego. (Dan. i. 7.) In later times, the Jews sometimes gave Greek or Roman names to their children; and occasionally the Hebrew or Chaldee name was transformed into a Greek shape; hence, Peter is called Cephas; (John i. 42;) Tabitha is called Dorcas; (Acts ix. 36;) Levi is called Matthew; (Mark ii. 14; Matt. ix. 9;) and Sain is called Paul. (Acts xiii. 9.) Some of the proper names were adopted from the ancient sources in the book of Genesis, without being translated into Hebrew; while others lost their original form, but retained their ancient signification. In ancient times, appellations were sometimes given to men, expressive of character and office; which would tend to supplant the original personal names. In this way, the Rabbins suppose that the personal name, Shem, was changed into the appellation Melchizedek = the Righteous king. The term "name," sometimes signifies "person;" it also denotes God Himself, with all His attributes and perfections; (Gen. iv. 26; Ex. iii. 15; xx. 24; xxiii. 13; Lev. xxiv. 11; Ps. xx. 1, 5, 7; Prov. xviii. 10;) Christ, the object of worship, and His character, faith, or doctrine. (Matt. vii. 22; x. 41; Mark ix. 41; Acts iv. 12; v. 41; viii. 12; ix. 15; xxvi. 9; Phil. ii. 9--11; Rev. xix. 16; Isa. xliv. 6.)
NAO

NAOMI = my pleasantness. The wife of Elimelech, and mother-in-law of Ruth; also called "Mara" = sad. (Ruth i. 1--22.)

NAPHISH = re-created. A son of Ishmael; (Gen. xxv. 15; 1 Chron. i. 486;)

31;) his descendants are called "Nephihah." (1 Chron. v. 19.)

NAPHTALI = my wrestling. One of the sons of Jacob, by Bilhah, Rachel's handmaid. (Gen. xxx. 7, 8.) The tribe of Naphtali occupied the northern part of the Promised Land, extending from the lake of Gennesaret, and the border of Zebulun, to the sources of the Jordan. (Josh. xix. 32--39; xxi. 32; Judg. iv. 10; v. 16; vi. 55; vii. 23; Num. xiv. 3; xxvi. 50.) In this district, also called "the land of Nephtalim," the fertile region of upper Galilee was situated. (Isa. i. 1; Matt. iv. 13--15.) This tribe was peculiarly blessed; (Deut. xxxiii. 23;) and the benediction of Jacob was prophetic of the increase, power, and prosperity of the family. (Gen. xlii. 21.)

NAPHTUHIM = border-people. The descendants of a son of Miriam, an Egyptian people, dwelling probably on the Red sea. (Gen. x. 13; 1 Chron. i. 11.) Some suppose that the Niphath of the Egyptian monuments, probably a Libyan nation, are the Naphthuhim.

NAPKIN.—See HANDKERCHIEF.

NARCISSUS = a flower, or the daffodil. A man at Rome, in whose household were some Christians whom Paul salutes. (Rom. xvi. 11.) Some suppose that he was the freedman and favourite of the emperor Claudius.

NARD.—See SPIKENARD.

NATHAN = giften. 1. A prophet, to whom David first intimated his design to build the temple. (2 Sam. vii. 1--13.) Nathan delivered the Divine message to David, in the matter of Uriah, under a significant allegory. (2 Sam. xii. 1--16.) Nathan is supposed to have been the preceptor of Solomon. (1 Kings iv. 5.) He wrote annals of the times of David, and of Solomon, which are probably incorporated in the other historical books. (1 Chron. xxix. 29; 2 Chron. xix. 29.) 2. A son of David, from whom the Evangelist Luke has reckoned the genealogy of Mary, the mother of Jesus. (2 Sam. v. 14; 1 Chron. xiv. 4; Luke iii. 31.) In 1 Chron. iii. 5,
NAT

Nathan is said to have been "the son of David, by Bathsheba." But, as in the other passages cited, he is not called the son of Bathsheba, he was not improbably the son of David by another wife. (Zech. xii. 12.) 4. The father of Igal. (2 Sam. xxiii. 36.) 5. One who returned from the exile. (Ezra viii. 16.) 6. A descendant of Bani. (Ezra x. 39.)

NATHANIEL = given of God. A disciple of Christ, supposed to be the same person as the apostle Bartholomew = son of Thadmai. He is called "an Israelite indeed, in whom there is no guile." (John i. 46—50; xxii. 2.)

NATHAN-MELECH = appointed by the king. A court officer of Josiah.

(2 Kings xxiii. 11.)

NATION.—See GENTILES.

NATIONS, DISPERSION OF. That all the families of man descended from the first human pair, and were by degrees—after the confusion of the Babel-builders, and the division of the earth in the days of Peleg—dispersed over the several countries of the earth, are facts declared by the sacred writers. (Gen. xi. 9; x. 25.) That the several nations are the descendants of Adam, is clearly stated in Deut. xxxii. 8:

When the Most High—apportioning nations—
In His dispersing the sons of Adam,
He fixed boundaries to the peoples,
Until the enumeration of the sons of Israel,
The same statement is made in Acts xvii. 26: "God hath made of one blood, all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth; and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation." The object of Moses, in the fifth chapter of Genesis, was to furnish, from the ancient documents which had descended to his time, a brief, but authentic genealogical table of the descendants of Adam, in the line of Seth, unto the time of the Flood, in the days of Noah and his sons.

ADAM created about 4004 B.C.; he lived 930 years.

Cain. Abel. Seth, lived 912 years.

Methuselah, lived 969 years.

Noah, lived 950 years.

So also, in the tenth chapter of Genesis, the object of the sacred historian was to furnish a brief but authentic record of the principal nations of the earth, in their emigrations from the common centre of residence, after the Flood. In the form of a genealogical table, or roll, of the descendants of Noah, it contains a view of the pedigree of nations in the time of Moses, in the then known world. As such, it is a record of inestimable value, being the most ancient ethnographical document which we possess. The names of individuals are, for the most part, names of the nations descended from them. Undoubtedly, some of the names, by which tribes or nations were originally called, have become so altered by time, or so distorted in being transferred into other tongues, as to make it difficult for us now, to trace their relation to those here given. And many other nations have been since formed by the union or division of some of those enumerated. Still, the results of recent ethnographical researches have shown, that nearly all the leading nations of ancient and modern times, can be distinctly traced up to their patriarchal progenitors, recited in this venerable chart. The assertion of some critics, that the genealogical table, recorded in Gen. x., cannot be from Moses; since such an extended knowledge of nations lies far beyond the geographical horizon of the Mosaic age, is scarcely worth noticing. On the ancient Egyptian and Assyrian monuments, not a few names have been found, which correspond with those in this table. And it is not improbable that Moses, in drawing up this genealogical table, had access to the archives kept by the priests, among the Egyptians, Edomites, Phenicians, and other surrounding nations. Speaking in general terms, it may be said, that the three sons of Noah—Shem, Ham, and Japheth—are exhibited in this genealogical chart, as the representatives of the three grand divisions of the earth, Asia, Africa, and Europe, although not precisely according to the boundaries of modern times.

SHEM.

| Elam, Asshur, Arphaxad, Lud, Aram |
| some of the the the Persian tribes. Assyrians. Abraham, Lydians. Syrians. |
| Isaac, Ishmael, |
| Jacob, Esau, the Ishmaelites, who mingled with the Arab tribes descended from Joktan, in the line of Eber, from Arphaxad. |
| the Hebrews. the Edomites. |

HAM.

| Cush, Misraim, Phut, Canaan, |
| the the the Ethiopians, Egyptians, Libyans, Canaanites, and the Phenicians, Mauritanians, and their colonies. |
| the their colonies. and their colonies. |

JAPETH.

| Gomer, Magog, Madai, Javan, Tubal, Meshech, Tiras, |
| the the the Cimmerians, Caucasians, Medes, and the Armenians. Scythians. |
| the the the Cimmerians, Caucasians, Medes, and some of the Persian tribes. |
| Elishah, Tarshish, Chittim, Dodanim. |
| the the the Cyprians, the Greeks. Etruscans, and the Rhodians. and the Macedonians. Romans. |
NAT

NATURE. This word denotes the composition and order of God established in the laws of the material and moral world. (Rom. i. 26; ii. 14; xi. 31, 24.) Also the state, condition, and position of unfallen men; "children of wrath," i.e. condemned, exposed to perdition; (Eph. ii. 8; 1 Cor. ii. 14,) as opposed to those who are regenerated and made partakers of the Divine or spiritual nature. (2 Pet. i. 4; Rom. viii. 9.) Nature also denotes common sense, or the native sense of propriety and decorum. (1 Cor. xi. 14.)

NAUM = comfort. An ancestor of Jesus. (Luke iii. 25.)

NAZARENE. This term designates an inhabitant of Nazareth; and is specially applied as an epithet to Christ. (Matt. ii. 23; xxvi. 11; xxxvi. 71; Mark i. 24; Luke iv. 34; John xvii. 5, 7; Acts ii. 22; iii. 6.) The Hebrew term "Naser" = a shoot, sprout, branch, is the original name of the unimportant village of Nazareth; and in allusion to its etymology, is applied to our Lord, who was brought up in that city. (John i. 46.) The prophets had announced that the Messiah, who is also called the "Branch," should spring from the sunken and decayed family of David, like a branch sprouting from the root which had been left in the ground, after the tree had been removed; and should at first appear without external rank or dignity, but should also arrive at the splendour of regal majesty. (Isa. xi. 1; liii. 2; Ezek. xvii. 24, 25; Jer. xxviiii. 5; xxxiii. 15; Zech. iii. 8; vi. 12.) The term "Nazarenes," was early applied to Christians, the followers of Jesus of Nazareth, not merely as an epithet of description, but also as a contemptuous designation and a term of reproach. (Acts xxiv. 5.) And it is somewhat remarkable, that the Arabic name for Christians, Naazra, has continued current throughout the East to the present day, wherever that language is spoken.

489

NAZ

NAZARETH = place of the sprout or branch. A small town or city in lower Galilee, where Joseph and Mary resided, and where Jesus lived till the commencement of his ministry. (Luke i. 26, 27; ii. 39; Matt. ii. 23; iii. 13; xxxi. 11.) In the old Testament Nazareth is never mentioned, perhaps because it may have been first founded after the Exile. It would seem that there rested upon Nazareth a special disgrace, in addition to the general contempt in which the whole of Galilee stood; just as almost every land has its place or city to which some peculiar reproach attaches, often from accidental circumstances. (John i. 46.) Nazareth, now called cun. Nasara, is situated upon the western side of the narrow oblong basin, just north of the great plain of Esdraelon, and about midway between the lake of Tiberias and the Mediterranean. The houses are in general well built of stone, and have only flat terraced roofs, without the domes so common in Jerusalem and the south of Palestine. The population is about 8,000 souls. Dr. Robinson noticed several precipices in the western hill, among the village. Some one of these, perhaps that by the Maronite Church, may well have been the spot—rather than the traditional Mount of Precipitation, two miles from Nazareth—whither the Jew cast Jesus, unto the brow of the hill whereon their city was built, that they might cast Him down headlong; but He, passing through the midst of them, went His way. (Luke iv. 28-30.)

NAZARITE = one consecrated, devoted, separated. The name of certain ascetics among the Hebrews, who bound themselves by a vow to abstain from certain things, according to the law laid down in Num. vi. 1—21. The Nazarite, whether male or female, during the period of the vow of separation to Jehovah, was considered as dead to the world, and belonging to God alone. This vow generally lasted eight days, sometimes a month, and sometimes during the whole life. Perpetual Nazarites were consecrated as such, by their parents, from their birth, and continued all their lives in this state, neither drinking wine nor cutting their hair. (Judg. xiii. 4, 5; 1 Sam. i. 11, 22, 28; ii. 11; Luke i. 15; vii. 33.) When the period of the vow had expired, the Nazarite presented the required offering, and was released from his vow. (Acts xviii. 18.) In some instances, other persons became parties to the vow, by sharing the expense of the offerings. (Acts xxii. 23, 24.) From Num. vi. 2, it appears that females might undertake the vow of separation to Jehovah. And this Nazaritic institution, for females, was also of a strictly ascetic character. It consisted of holy women, who were unmarried, either young women or widows; who were engaged in spiritual service at the gate of the tabernacle. These females consecrated their mirrors, for the construction of the brazen laver, in the tabernacle service. (Ex. xxxix. 8; compare Lev. xxvii. 4; Isa. iii. 23.) In this institution, Jephthah, in accordance with his vow, dedicated his daughter unto the Lord. (Judg. xi. 30—40.) And among the great crimes of the sons of Eli, it is mentioned that they “defiled the women which assembled, i.e. served, at the gate of the tabernacle.” (1 Sam. ii. 22.) This Hebrew institution was very different from the analogous institute among the ancient Egyptians. Of these holy women, Aben Ezra says, “They came daily to the tabernacle to pray, and to hear the words of the law.” So in later times, it is said of Anna: “She departed not from the temple, but served God with fastings and prayers night and day.” (Luke ii. 37; 1 Tim. v. 5.)

NEAH = motion, perhaps earthquake. A place in Zebulun. (Josh. xix. 18.)

NEAPOLIS = new city. A city and port of Macedonia, on the confines of Thrace; now called Napoli. (Acts xvi. 11.)

NEARIAH = servant of Jehovah.
1. A descendant of Simeon. (1 Chron. iv. 42.) 2. A son of Shemaiah. (1 Chron. iii. 22, 23.)

NEBAI = fruit-bearer. One who sealed the covenant. (Neh. x. 19.)

NEBAIOTH = heights. The eldest son of Ishmael. (1 Chron. i. 29.) In Gen. xxv. 13; xxviii. 9; xxxvi. 3, he is called “Nebajoth.” In Isa. ix. 7, Nebajoth occurs as the name of his descendants, a powerful people, who early supplanted the Edomites in the southern portion of their possessions, took their chief city, Petra, and spread themselves over the whole desert of Arabia, from the Euphrates to the borders of Palestine, and finally to the Elamite Gulf of the Red sea. The Nabataeans were rich in flocks and herds; and lived by traffic and plunder. (1 Mac. v. 25.)

NEBAJOTH.—See NEBAIOTH.

NEBALLAT = folly-hidden. A town in Benjamin; (Neh. xi. 34;) perhaps the same as Beit-Nebus, north-east of Lydda.

NEBAT = beholding. The father of king Jeroboam. (1 Kings xi. 26.)

1. NEBO = prophet. An Assyrian idol, supposed to be the symbol of the planet Mercury, which the Assyrians and Chaldeans worshipped as the celestial scribe or interpreter of the Divine will. (Isa. xlvi. 1.) The worship paid to Nebo is attested by the frequent occurrence of this name on the ancient Assyrian monuments; also by the proper names of which Nebo and Nabu form a part, as Nebuchadnezzar, and Nebuzaradan. In the British Museum, there is a statue of Nebo, brought from Nineveh, for which we give a copy—with a cuneiform inscription of twelve lines across the front, stating that it was dedicated to Phalatkus = Pul, king of Assyria, and to his lady Sammuramit = Semiramis, queen of the palace.

2. NEBO = prominent, high. A mountain on the confines of Moab; (Deut. xxxii. 49; xxxiv. 1.) and also a town near it. (Num. xxxii. 3, 38; xxxii. 47; Isa. xvi. 2; Jer. xlviii. 1.) The mountain from which the Hebrew legislator was permitted to behold the Land of Promise, and where he yielded up the ghost, has yet scarcely been recognised. Neither es-Salt, i.e. Jebel-el-Jilad = Mount Gilad, the highest point in all the eastern mountains; nor Jebel Atturus, a high mountain south of the Zurka Ma'in, can be said to answer to the position and character of Mount Nebo. The town Nebo may be the Nebaasmis (Nebasamis) apparently some distance N. of Jebel Atturus. 3. A town in the tribe of Judah. (Ex. ii. 29; Neh. vii. 38.) 4. One whose sons had taken strange wives. (Exra x. 43.)

NEBUCHADNEZZAR = Nebo, i.e., Mercury, the divine prince. The Chaldean monarch of Babylon, by whom the kingdom of Judah was conquered, and the Hebrews led into their seventy years’ captivity. (2 Kings xxiv. 1, 10; xxx. 22; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 6, 7, 10, 15, 17; Dan. i. 1, 18; ii. 1, 28, 46; iii. 1, 4; Est. ii. 6; Exra ii. 1.) The name is also written "Nebuchadrezzar." (Jer. xxxix. 1, 11; xlil. 10; xlix. 28; Ezek. xxix. 18.) This name repeatedly occurs in the cuneiform inscriptions, and on the bricks belonging to different ancient towns in Babylonia. This monarch was the son and successor of Nabopolassar, governor of Babylon, under the Assyrian monarch; who had disunited Babylonia, and in B.C. 606, in conjunction with Cyaxares, king of Media, overthrew the Assyrian empire; and became the first Chaldean monarch of Babylon. In about two years after the overthrow of Nineveh, Nebuchadnezzar succeeded his father. Hence the first year of the reign of Nebuchadnezzar fell partly in the third and partly in the fourth year of the reign of Jehoiakim. (Jer. xxv. 1; xlvi. 2; Dan. i. 11.) The short, but brilliant, and, for a time, all subduing Babylonian monarchy, like Napoleon’s empire, seems to have been created by the military genius, activity, and resolution of Nebuchadnezzar; who was elevated to execute the Divine purposes in the destruction of Jerusalem, and in the overthrow of the surrounding nations. Hence he is called by Jehovah, “my servant;” (Jer. xxv. 9; xxxv. 5—8: xliii. 10;) and Babylon is called “my battle-axe and weapons of war;” (Jer. i. 20;) and from its sudden and overpowering operations, the “hammer of the whole earth.” (Jer. i. 25.) Pharaoh Necho, king of Egypt, having subjugated the Hebrews, and seeming inclined to extend his conquests to the Euphrates, Nebuchadnezzar not only checked his advance, but also re-submitted Jerusalem. (2 Kings xxiii. 29; 2 Chron. xxxv. 20; 2 Kings xxiv. 1; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 6.) In the reign of Jehoiachin, Nebuchadnezzar again invaded Judea; (2 Kings xxiv. 10—16; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 9—10;) and again, when the Hebrews attempted to throw off the yoke, in the ninth year of the reign of Zedekiah, Nebuchadnezzar captured Jerusalem, and completed the subjugation of the Hebrews. (2 Kings xxv. 1—2; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 1—32.) Nebuchadnezzar also carried his conquests into Arabia and Syria; (Jer. xlix. 9—11;) and after a siege of thirteen years, reduced the celebrated Tyre. (Ezek. xxxvii. 7; xxxvi. 1—36; xxix. 18—19.) He next proceeded to Egypt, now distracted by internal commotions, and devastated or made himself master of the whole country from Migdol to Syene. (Jer. xliii. 10, 12; xliv. 3; Ezek. xxix. 10; xxx. 6—19.) He also extended the commerce of Babylon, which thence became “a land of traffic, and a city of merchants.” (Ezek. xvii. 4.) Berosus also describes Nebuchadnezzar as conquering Egypt, Syria, Phenicia, and Arabia; and afterwards erecting a splendid palace. As Nebuchadnezzar, in his expeditions, had enriched himself with the spoil of his enemies, he employed his wealth in building cities and temples, and in rebuilding and otherwise adding to the splendour of Babylon. From the inscriptions recently brought to light, we learn that he rebuilt the splendid temple, the ruin of which is called Birs-Nimrud. It was constructed of seven receding stages, each, with one exception, 27 feet in height; and each stage was of seven different colours, in harmony with the Sabean planetary system: it appears to have borne the name of the “Temple of the Seven Spheres.” In the second year of his reign, Nebuchadnezzar had the dream of the statue, consisting of four different metals, which left a profound impression upon his mind. Daniel, who was found superior in wisdom to the Chaldean magi, was enabled not only to interpret, but to reveal the dream, the very subject of which the monarch had forgotten. (Dan. ii.
1—45.) The image was symbolical of four kingdoms—the Babylonian, the Medo-Persian, that of Alexander, and that of Alexander’s successors—the same which are described under different imagery, in Dan. vii. 27; which were to be succeeded by the reign of the Messiah. Daniel was elevated to be first minister of state. (Dan. ii. 1—49.)
Afterwards Nebuchadnezzar erected a golden statue in the plain of Dura, including the pedestal, 60 cubits = 105 feet high; and 6 cubits = 10½ feet wide; and for refusing to worship the statue, Daniel’s three friends were thrown into a burning furnace, but were miraculously preserved. (Dan.
iii. 1–3.) Daniel himself may have been absent from Babylon, at the time the statue was erected. The Chaldean monarch, in another dream, was forewarned of the consequences of his excessive pride; this dream also Daniel unfinchingly interpreted.
(Dan. iv. 1–27.) Twelve months after this dream, while walking in his palace, and glorying in his magnificent works, the king’s pride was suddenly humbled by the visitation of God’s hand. His nerves were instantly shattered, and he fell into a state of delirium or madness—probably a species of hypochondriacal monomania, in which he fancied himself changed into an animal, whose habits he adopted—in which he continued “till seven times had passed over him.” (Dan. iv. 28–37.) The inscription on the black slab, brought from Babylon, now in the East India House, describing the various architectural works of Nebuchadnezzar, at Babylon and Borsippa, breaking off abruptly, denounces the Chaldean astrologers, and states that the king’s heart was hardened against them; he would grant no benefactions for religious purposes. He intermitted the worship of Merodach, and put an end to the sacrifice of victims. He laboured under the effects of enchantment.
From the cuneiform inscriptions, it appears that the insanity, or as it is called, the “enchantment,” with which Nebuchadnezzar was afflicted, happened after all his military expeditions, and after he had enlarged and adorned Babylon. After his recovery, Nebuchadnezzar announced, in the form of a royal proclamation, and consequently in public documents, that he had resumed the reins of government. He also referred to the signs and wonders that the Most High God had wrought towards him: “Now I, Nebuchadnezzar, praise and extol and honour the king of heaven, all whose works are truth, and His ways judgment: and those that walk in pride
He is able to abase.” (Dan. iv. 8, 37.)
Nebuchadnezzar probably reigned two or three years after his recovery. He died in the forty-third year of his reign, about B.C. 562.

NEBUCHADREZZAR.—See Nebuchadnezzar.

NEBUSHASBAN = adorer of Nebu. A Babylonian officer sent to take Jeremiah out of prison. (Jer. xxxix. 13.)

NEBUZARADAN = prince favoured by Nebu. Nebuchadnezzar’s general, who effected the ruin of Jerusalem. (2 Kings xxv. 8; Jer. xxxix. 9—13; xl. 1; lli. 12, 15, 16, 26.)

NECHO = the striker. A king of Egypt, son of Psammeticus. He was the sixth king in the twenty-sixth dynasty, and was called Necho the Second, to distinguish him from his grandfather of the like name. Manetho says he reigned six, but Herodotus says sixteen years. His name occurs in hieroglyphics, and reads,

The expeditions of Pharaoh Necho, mentioned in sacred history, are also noticed by profane writers. (2 Kings xxii. 29—35; 2 Chron. xxxv. 20; xxxvi. 4; Jer. xlv. 2.) Necho partly executed the scheme of a canal, which was to unite the Nile and the Red sea, the course of which is still well marked, and traceable for several leagues. He had a fleet on the Mediterranean and Red seas; and under his orders, the circumnavigation of Africa is supposed to have been first effected. (Herod.iv. 42.) Thus, without compass or chart, it appears that the Cape of Good Hope was passed about 2,100 years before it was discovered by Diaz, in 1487, or doubled by Vasco de Gama, in 1497. Necho, fearing lest the growing power of the Babylonians should endanger the territories acquired by the Egyptians in Asia, determined to check their progress; and with a powerful army, he advanced towards Carchemish, on the Euphrates. He passed through the possessions of the king of Judah.

Josiah being a tributary to the king of Babylon, prepared to resist the progress of Necho. The battle was fought at Megiddo, and Josiah lost his life. (Herod. ii. 159.) Necho then advanced upon Carchemish; and, after the defeat of the Chaldeans, he put the land of Judah under a heavy tribute, sent Jehoahaz into Egypt, and made Jehoiakim king. Shortly afterwards Necho’s army was completely routed by Nebuchadnezzar, and the Egyptians lost all the territory from the Euphrates to the southern extremity of Syria. Necho does not appear to have long survived this defeat.

NECK. Putting the feet on the neck, has always been considered, in the East, a favourite way of triumphing over a fallen foe. In the numerous battle-scenes depicted on the monuments of ancient Egypt, we see the Egyptian monarchs frequently represented treading on the necks of their enemies; and a similar practice obtained among the Hebrews. (Josh. x. 24; 2 Sam. xxii. 41.)

NECROMANCER.—See Divination.

NEDABIAH = whom Jehovah impels. A descendant of David. (1 Chron. iii. 18.)

NEEDLE. That the females of Egypt and Assyria excelled in various kinds of needle work, is evident from the ancient monuments. And the Hebrew females also acquired great perfection in the use of the needle, as they embroidered the sacerdotal robes and curtains of the tabernacle. (Ex. xxviii. 39; xxxvi. 36; Judg. v. 30; Matt. xix. 24.) In the British Museum may be seen ancient Egyptian needles, for sewing, made of bronze, three inches to three inches and a quarter in length; there are likewise some spindles and knitting-needles made of wood, nine inches to nine inches and a half in length; and also some skeins of thread, a portion of which is dyed of a reddish colour.

NEEDLEWORK.—See Embroidery.

NEGINAH.—See Negoinoth.
NEG

NEGINOTH = stringed instruments. This Hebrew word occurs in the titles of Psalms iv., vi., li., li., lxvii., lxxvi., and in Hab. iii. 19; and indicates that the words were to be sung with the accompaniment of stringed instruments.

NEHEMIAHITE.—See SHEMAIAH.

NEHEMIAH = comforted of Jehovah. 1. A Jew of distinguished piety and zeal, born during the Exile; but his family and tribe are not known. Raised to the distinguished office of cup-bearer to the Persian monarch, Nehemiah forgot not his desolated country, but used his influence with the king, and was commissioned, at his own request, to visit Jerusalem, and rebuild the city; which he accomplished under the most perplexing difficulties. The 20th year of Artaxerxes, when Nehemiah went to Jerusalem, is usually fixed in B.C. 444; others, with some degree of probability, fix it in B.C. 454. (Neh. i. 1; vii. 2.) Nehemiah was made tirshatha = "governor" of Judea, under Artaxerxes Longimanus. (Neh. viii. 9; x. 1; xii. 26.) He is also called the pekah, whence the modern pesha, a governor of a province. (Neh. xii. 26.) Nehemiah administered the government of Jerusalem twelve years; (Neh. v. 14—19;) and then returned to the Persian court, where he remained "certain days." (Neh. xiii. 6.) After some nine or ten years, he returned to Jerusalem, as governor, the second time; and corrected the abuses which had crept in during his absence. (Neh. xiii. 5—31; Mal. ii. 15—17; iii. 5—12.) He remained in power till the restoration of affairs in Jerusalem, probably about ten years; and died at an advanced age, probably in that city. The book of Nehemiah may be regarded as a continuation or supplement to the book of Ezra. As the two books contain the history of the Jewish commonwealth, after the Exile, they are closely connected with the end of the second book of Chronicles. The book of Nehemiah follows the register of the names, as given by Ezra, of those who came up with the first colony to Jerusalem; but between the two there are some discrepancies as to numbers and names, which are evidently the mistakes of transcribers in times long posterior to the original writers. (Ezra ii. 1—64; Neh. vii. 6—63.) The book of Nehemiah contains a narrative of transactions, in which Nehemiah bore a principal part, relative to the rebuilding of Jerusalem, and the reform of the people; and embraces the history of the Jews from about B.C. 444—418, or perhaps from B.C. 454—423, near the close of the reign of Darius Nothus. The book appears to have been written by Nehemiah; though the sequel, containing the genealogy of the high priests, nearly to the time of Alexander the Great, is evidently from a later hand. (Neh. xii. 10, 11, 22.) 2. One who returned from the Exile. (Ezra ii. 2; Neh. vii. 7.) 3. The son of Asbuk. (Neh. iii. 18.)

NEHILOTH = perforated. This word, denoting a pipe or flute, occurs in the title of Ps. v.; and may signify, that the voice was to be accompanied with such instruments.

NEHUM = consolation.—See Rx-Hum.

NEHUSHTA = copper. The mother of king Jehoiachin. (2 Kings xxiv. 8.)

NEHUSHTAN = a piece of brass, i.e. copper. The serpent of copper, which Moses erected in the wilderness. (Num. xxix. 8, 9.) appears to have been long preserved; and when the superstitious Hebrews made an idol of it, Hezekiah caused it to be broken in pieces, and in derision gave it this name. (2 Kings xviii. 4.)

NEIL = moved by God. A place in the tribe of Asher. (Josh. xix. 27.)

NEIGHBOUR. From Luke x. 29—37, we learn that the Pharisees restrained the meaning of the word "neighbour" to those of their own nation, or to their own friends. But our Saviour informed them that all the people of the world were neighbours to each other; and that they ought not to do to another what they would not have done to themselves, and that this charity extended even to enemies. (Deut. v. 20; Matt. v. 43.)
NEK

NEKED = a cavern. A place in the tribe of Naphtali. (Josh. ix. 33.)

NEKOTA = distinguished. One of the Nethinim. (Ezra ii. 48, 60; Neh. vii. 50, 62.)

NEMUEL = day of God? 1. A son of Eliah. (Num. xxvi. 9.) 2. — See JEMUEL.

NEMUELITES. —See JEMUEL.

NEPHES = sprout. 1. A descendant of Levi. (Ex. vi. 21.) 2. A son of king David. (2 Sam. v. 15; 1 Chron. iii. 7; xiv. 6.)

NEPHISH. —See NAPHISH.

NEPHISHESIM. —See NAPHUSIM.

NEPHTHALIM. —See NAPHTALI.

NEPHTOAH = opening. A fountain in the tribe of Judah, south-west of Jerusalem; (Josh. xv. 9; xviii. 15;) probably now the fountain Ain Yalo, in the Wady el-Werd.

NEPHUSIM = expansions. One whose posterity returned from the Exile; (Ezra ii. 50;) also written "Nephishesim." (Neh. vii. 52.)

NER = a light or lamp. The uncle of king Saul. (1 Sam. xiv. 50, 51.)

NERUS = the sea. The name of a Christian at Rome. (Rom. xvi. 15.)

NERGAL = man-devourer, or the shining one. An idol of the Cubites; (2 Kings xvii. 50;) corresponding to Merodach, probably the planet Mars, as the god of blood and slaughter. The Rabbins say this idol had the form of a cock; and such a figure has been found upon gems and cylinders from Babylon.

NERGAL-SHAREZER = Nergal, prince of fire. 1. A military chief-tain under Nebuchadnezzar. (Jer. xxxix. 3.) 2. The Rabmag or chief of the Magi. (Jer. xxxix. 3, 18.)

NERI = lamp of Jehorah. An ancestor of Mary, the mother of Jesus. (Luke iii. 27.)

NERIAH = lamp of Jehorah. 1. The father of Baruch. (Jer. xxxii. 48.)

NER

12—16; xxxvi. 4—32.) 2. The father of Seraiah. (Jer. li. 59.)

NERO = bright, shining? Domitius Nero was the sixth emperor of Rome. He succeeded Claudius A.D. 54, and was assassinated by the partizans of Galba, A.D. 68. In his reign, the war between the Jews and Romans commenced, which ultimately terminated in the overthrow of Jerusalem, and the destruction of the Jewish State. In A.D. 64, Nero began the severe and unrelenting persecution against the Christian church, which continued three years and a half, and was terminated only by the monster’s death. The apostle Paul is supposed to have suffered martyrdom in this persecution; and John was exiled to Patmos, and wrote his Revelation during the same period. Nero is not named in the New Testament; but he is indicated by his title of “Caesar;” (Acts xxv. 8—25; xxxvi. 32; xxvii. 19; Phil. iv. 22;) and by that of Sebastes = “Augustus.” (Acts xxv. 21, 25.) He is also indicated by various symbols; as “the lion,” so our translators, who have given in the margin, “Caesar Nero, or the emperor Nero.” (1 Tim. iv. 17.) The “beast rising out of the sea, having ten horns and seven heads,” is a symbol of the heathen Roman government. The seven heads symbolize seven kings or emperors of Rome; and Nero is spoken of as the sixth head or reigning king. So also the term “beast” is used in a specific sense for Nero, who blasphemously claimed divine honours: “And they worshipped the dragon = Satan, because he gave authority to the beast = Nero; and they worshipped the beast = the emperor.” (Rev. xiii. 4.) Again, the first beast, i.e. Nero, is referred to by the number of his name, “and its amount is six hundred and sixty-six.” (Rev. xiii. 17, 18.) This was in accordance with the usage of the Hebrews, who ordinarily used the letters of the alphabet to designate numbers. In the Rabbinical writings, the name of Nero, in the form of Neron Ksr = Nero Caesar, often occurs; and the letters amount to the number of the beast: \(200 + 0 + 6 + 50 + 100 + 60 + 200 = 666\). Another form, was Nao Kain = Nero Caesar, which amounts to 616, in harmony with a diverse reading which Irenæus found in some Codices. In this case, John was obliged to refer to Nero enigmatically, for partial concealment; inasmuch as he could not openly have named the emperor, for that would have been construed by the magistracy as treasonable.

NEST.—See BRD.

NET.—See HUNTING.

NETHANIEL = given of God. 1. A chief of the tribe of Issachar. (Num. i. 8; ii. 5; vii. 18.) 2. The fourth son of Jesse. (1 Chron. ii. 14.) 3. Two of the priests. (1 Chron. xv. 24; Neh. xii. 21.) 4. A son of Obed-Edom. (1 Chron. xxvi. 4.) 5. Three of the Levites. (1 Chron. xxvii. 6; 2 Chron. xxxiv. 9; Neh. xii. 36.) 6. A prince under Jehoshaphat. (2 Chron. xvi. 7.) 7. One of the sons of Pashur. (Ezra x. 22.)

NETHANIAH = given of Jehovah. 1. A son of Asaph. (1 Chron. xxv. 2, 12.) 2. The father of Ishmael. (2 Kings xxv. 28, 25; Jer. vii. 8, 14; xii. 1, 2, 18.) 3. The father of Jehudi. (Jer. xxxvi. 14.) 4. One of the Levites. (2 Chron. xxvii. 8.)

NETHINIM = the given, the devoted. The name of the Hebrew temple servants, under the Levites. The whole of the Nethinim do not appear to have been, in their origin, Gibeonites, or foreigners; (Josh. ix. 3—27; Num. xvii. 19; Ezra viii. 20;) and their employment, though the lowest in the service of the sanctuary, was not regarded as degrading, but rather as a sort of honourable servitude. (1 Chron. ix. 2; Ezra ii. 43—58, 70; Neh. iii. 51; vii. 46—60, 73; xi. 3, 21.)

NETOPHATH = distillation. A place between Bethlehem and Anathoth; (Ezra ii. 22; Neh. vii. 26;) probably the small village Beit Netif, the site. The inhabitants are called “Netophathites;” (2 Sam. xxiii. 28, 29; 2 Kings xxv. 23; 1 Chron. ix. 16; Jer. xi. 8;) and “Netophathi.” (Neh. xii. 28.)

NETOPHATHL.—See NETOPHATH.

NETTLE. A well-known plant, the leaves of which are armed with sharp pointed tubes, connected with a small bag of poison; and when slightly pressed by the hand, the points penetrate the flesh, force in the poison, and produce a burning pain. The Hebrew word kamosh, rendered “nettle,” signifies a prickly weed, e.g. nettle, thistle. (Isa. xxxiv. 13; Hos. ix. 6.) The same word is rendered “thorns.” (Prov. xxi. 31.) Hassequist, when at Jerusalem, noticed the Roman nettle, i.e. urtica pilifera. The Hebrew word kharul, rendered “nettle,” designates a large plant or shrub, perhaps a thorn-bush, thistle, or bramble. (Job xxx. 7; Prov. xxi. 31; Zeph. ii. 9.)—See THORNS.

NEW MOON.—See Moon.

NEW TESTAMENT.—See Scripture.

NEZIAH = illustrious. One of the Nethinim. (Ezra ii. 54; Neh. vii. 56.)

NEZIB = a statue, idol. A place in the plain of Judah. (Josh. xv. 43.) Perhaps the place marked with ruins, called Beit Nusib, on the rising ground on the right, not far from the Wady es-Sur, may indicate the site of Nusib.

NIBHAZ = barker? An idol of the Avites; (2 Kings xvi. 31;) which some interpreters identify with the ancient Egyptian dog-headed deity Anou, or Anoua, called by the Greeks Anubis.

NIBSHAN = light soil. A town in the desert of Judah. (Josh. xv. 62.)

NICANOR = a conqueror. One of the seven deacons chosen by the church, at Jerusalem. (Acts vi. 5.)

NICODEMUS = conqueror of the people. A Pharisee and member of the Jewish Sanhedrin, who came to Jesus by night, probably as a serious, though timid, inquirer. (John iii. 1, 4, 9.) Like most men not characterized by firmness, when the proceedings of Jesus were in question, Nicodemus tried to steer a middle course. He ventured to speak in the council, but as one neither justifying nor condemning Jesus, but only objecting to his being condemned unheard. (John vii. 45—53.) He took part in the sepulchral rites of Jesus, but be does not seem to have joined Joseph in his application to Pilate for the body of his crucified Lord. (John xix. 38—42.)

NICOLAITANS. The designation of a party in the churches at Ephesus and Pergamus, whose deeds are strongly reprobed. (Rev. ii. 6, 14, 15.) The vices of the Nicolaitans seem to have been the same as those into which the Hebrews fell, through the devices of Balaam; hence they were also called “Balaamites;” the two designations—the one Hebrew and the other Greek—in this case, having apparently the same meaning, lords or conquerors of the people, i.e. seducing them to commit iniquity. (Num. xxv. 1—8; 1 Cor. x. 7.) So also in the church of Thyatira, Jezabel,—an allusion to Ahab’s idolatrous wife,—seduced the people to the same vices by which Balaam overcame the Hebrews. (Rev. ii. 20.)

NICOLAS = conqueror of the people. One of the seven deacons in the church at Jerusalem. (Acts vi. 5.)

NICOPOLIS = city of victory. A city of Thrace, situated upon the river Nessus, the modern Karasu. It is now called Nikopi. Some writers assume that Nicopolis, in Epirus, is intended. (Tit. iii. 12.)

NIGER. See SIMEON.

NIGHT. The ancient Hebrews began their artificial day at evening, and ended it the next evening, so that the night preceded the day. (Gen. i. 5.) The term “night” is used symbolically for the darkness that preceded the light of the gospel dispensation; (Rom. xiii. 12;) also for the exile of the Hebrews under the Chaldeans. (Isa. xxxi. 11—12.) Night also signifies a time of adversity and affliction; (Ps. xlviii. 3; Rev. xx. 25; xxii. 5;) and the absence of night implies a state of happiness and undisturbed repose. (Zech. xiv. 7, 6; Isa. lx. 20; Rev. xx. 25; xxii. 5.) Night is sometimes put for a time of ignorance and helplessness; (Mic. iii. 6;) also for death. (John ix. 4.) “Children of the day” denote those who walk in the light of truth; while the “children of the night” are those who walk in the darkness of ignorance and infidelity. (1 Thess. v. 5.)

NIGHT-HAWK. See HAWK.

NIGHT-MONSTER. The Hebrew word liftath, rendered “screech owl,” in the margin, “night monster,” designates one of the creatures—the Rabbins say a night-spectre—represented as inhabiting the old ruins, in the prophetic description of the utter ruin and perpetual desolation of the cities of Idumea. (Isa. xxxiv. 14.)

NILE. See SHIAR.

NIMRAH. See BETH-NIMRAH.

NIMRIM. See BETH-NIMRIM.

NIMROD = rebel. A son of Cush, the beginning of whose sovereignty was Babel, Erech, Accad, and Calneh, in the land of Shinar; whence Assur appears to have retired before the power of his arms to Assyria, and Babylonia is called “the land of Nimrod.” He is said to have been a mighty hunter before the Lord.”
(Gen. x. 8—12; Mic. v. 6.) The designation "Nimrod," was probably not the proper name of this powerful chieftain, but an appellation imposed upon him in after times. The phrase "mighty hunter" was applied to him, probably in consequence of the protection which he afforded to the people against wild beasts. Yet his bold and aspiring spirit rested not content with this mode of displaying his prowess; as he ultimately turned his weapons of hunting against his neighbours, and thereby compelled them to submit to his dominion. The ancient testimonies uniformly represent him, not only as the first of tyrannical oppressors of their kind, but also as the prominent instigator of a widespread apostasy from the faith and worship of his patriarchal ancestors. The wood-cut, from the Nineveh monuments, is supposed to be a representation of the Assyrian Hercules, not unlikely the "mighty hunter," Nimrod himself, strangling a young lion; while his right hand holds an instrument analogous to the Bomburang of the Australians, which possesses, when dexterously thrown, the singular property of returning to within a few yards of the thrower.

NIMSHI = drawn out, sowed. The grandfather of Jehu. (1 Kings xix. 16; 2 Kings x. 27.)

NINEVEH = Nin's abode. The ancient capital of Assyria, situated on the eastern bank of the Tigris. Nineveh was founded by Ashur: "Out of that land—Shinar—went forth Ashur, and built Nineveh, and the city Bebop, and Calah, and Resin, between Nineveh and Calah: the same is a great city." (Gen. x. 11, 12.) Some critics prefer the marginal reading, "Out of that land—Shinar—he, i.e. Nimrod, went out into Assyria, and built Nineveh, etc." However, in either case, Ashur must have preceded Nimrod, as we find the country already called by his name. The sacred writer represents Ashur as retiring from his former possessions in Babylonia, before the progress of Nimrod's arms, and seeking a country for himself on the upward course of the Tigris, where he fixed himself on the site of Nineveh, which he built, and which subsequently became the seat of the Assyrian empire. As there is some uncertainty, after all the recent researches, in regard to the site of the most ancient Nineveh, it is not unlikely that the remark, "the same is a great city," does not refer to Nineveh, or to Bessen particularly, but to all the cities here mentioned, which were situated somewhat near together; and, in the time of the sacred writer, were united under one social polity, so as in some sense to be denominated "That Great City." Indeed the plain, on the east of the Tigris, whereon the ancient cities stood, and which contains the most of the Assyrian sites yet carefully examined, is of a somewhat irregular parallelogram in shape, extending about twenty-five miles by fifteen. On this plain, the many large mounds show, that Diodorus Siculus was correct when he said the great city was 150 stadia in length, 90 stadia in breadth, and 480 stadia or 60 miles in circuit; corresponding to the statement of the Hebrew prophet, a "city three days journey in circumference." (Jon. i. 2; ii. 3; iv. 11.) In the time of Jonah, Nineveh must have contained more than 600,000 persons; and as a commercial centre, it was very flourishing, being a convenient entrepot for a vast region east and west. About B.C. 606, Cyaxares, the Median, with his ally, Nabopolassar, regent of Babylon, at the head of a vast army of Medes, Persians, and Babylonians, captured Nineveh after a short siege, and destroyed its walls and palaces. From that time Nineveh ceased to be a city, and Assyria an empire. Though Nineveh, or the several cities which, during the empire, constituted the Assyrian metropolis, was "an exceeding great city," still it is doubtful whether the whole was enclosed by one great wall. As the great city appears to have been made up of several distinct walled quarters, distant from one another, and divided by cultivated lands, it would seem that each quarter only, including its gardens and fields, was so fortified and protected. (Nah. iii. 12—14.) In this way, the city, with its extensive cultivated lands, might easily extend over the vast area inhabited by the prophet Jonah, and the Greek geographer. Within this space are the great mounds of Nimrud, Kouyunjik, Khorsabad, and Karamles, and other Assyrian ruins, such as Karakukh, Bash- sheikha, Basazani, Husseini, Tel Yara, etc.; and the large part of the country is strewed with the remains of pottery, bricks, and other fragments. The Assyrian buildings were constructed almost entirely of bricks made of clay mixed with chopped straw, and merely dried in the sun. In their principal edifices they used marble, alabaster, and kiln-burnt bricks generally painted or glazed, but to a limited extent, and only for casing, or by way of ornament. Hence, when the buildings were once deserted the upper walls and stories soon fell in, the bricks of clay became earth again, and the ruins assumed the appearance of mere natural heaps and mounds rising in the plain. Recently several of the mounds and ruins have been examined by Messrs. Layard, Botta, Loftus, Rawlinson, Jones, and Rassam; and many ancient monuments have been exhumed, which illustrate and corroborate the statements in the inspired records. In the recent researches on the site of Nineveh no one has more distinguished himself than our enterprising countryman, A. H. Layard, Esq., the results of which are given in his works, “Nineveh and its Remains,” 2 vols., 1845, and “Discoveries in the ruins of Babylon and Nineveh,” 1863. The principal mounds which have been examined, whence enormous masses of sculptures have been exhumed, and are now deposited in the British Museum, are the following:—

Kouyunjik.—This portion of the great city stood on the eastern banks of the Tigris, opposite Musul; and, according to Captain Jones' recent survey, embraced about 1,500 acres of land. The great mound covers about 100 acres, and the neighbouring one called Nebi Yussuf, about forty. This large ruin is generally supposed to have been the site of the most ancient Nineveh, and to have given its name to the whole city. Not only are the bricks from this ruin inscribed with the name “Nineveh,” but the cuneiform inscriptions, describing the great works of Sennacherib, term this place “the middle city of Nineveh.” On this site Sennacherib, the son of Sargon, erected a vast and magnificent palace, on the site of a more ancient one, about B.C. 712. The ruins were buried beneath a vast accumulation of rubbish; the chambers were filled with charcoal, and many of the alabaster slabs were reduced to lime, showing that the building had been destroyed by fire. In this ruin Mr. Layard explored no less than 71 halls, chambers, and passages, whose walls were panelled with sculptured alabaster. And since then, Mr. Rassam, who was engaged by the trustees of the British Museum, has explored several halls and chambers—probably an enlargement of the palace by the son of Esarhaddon—the walls of which are panelled with bas-reliefs; and made other interesting and remarkable discoveries. On the slabs, colossal winged-bulls, lion-sphinxes, etc., of the great palace, are inscribed the wars, the triumphs, and other great deeds of the Assyrian kings. The monuments repeatedly exhibit the name of Sennacherib, that of his father, Sargon, and of his son Esarhaddon. They also distinctly notice the wars waged by Sennacherib against Merodach Baladan, king of Babylon; (Isa. xxxix. 1;) Lulugamash; Elulseus, king of Tyre and Sidon; (Isa. xxxii. 1;) the Egyptians; (2 Kings xix. 9; Isa. xxxvii. 8, 9;) and against Hesekiah, king of Judah.
very curious geographical details of the countries conquered by this monarch, including the names of tribes, cities, mountains, and rivers, with the amount of captives and plunder carried away from each people. They also mention several earlier kings of Assyria, one of whom appears to have lived about B.C. 1,200.

The Centre Palace was founded by the son of Assur-akh-pul, to whose name, though variously read, Mr. Layard gives Divanubar; who reigned about B.C. 686. At the entrance to this edifice were remains of human-headed bulls and lions, containing inscriptions of the highest interest. But the most remarkable discovery was that of the black obelisk, exhibiting the tribute of conquered nations; and inscribed with the names of tributary monarchs, among which are Jehu, king of Samaria, and Hazael, king of Syria. (2 Kings viii. 7–15; ix. 1–15.) This palace appears to have been completed or rebuilt by Shalmaneser, i.e. Pul, probably the husband of Semiramis; to whom Menahem, king of Israel, was tributary, about B.C. 771. Menahem's name occurs on an inscription brought from this ruin.

The South-west Palace was built by Esarhaddon, the son of Sennacherib, about B.C. 700. (2 Kings xix. 37.) Few of the sculptures in this edifice were executed by this king. The human-headed bulls and lions bore the name of Esarhaddon, but some of the sculptures were evidently taken from the north-west palace, and others from the centre. Several of the inscriptions were of great interest and value, as containing the records of Pul and Tiglath-Pileser; and also the name of Menahem, king of Israel.

The South-east Palace was a small edifice, undecorated by sculpture, erected by the grandson of Esarhaddon. Though this is the most recent building hitherto discovered in Assyria, and its founder was nearly the last, or perhaps the last of the royal dynasty, an obelisk, with a bas-relief of an earlier king, containing his annals, have been discovered in the ruins. And in 1854, the workmen employed in the service of the trustees of the British Museum, disinterred a perfect statue of the god Nebo, containing an inscription with the name of Pul; and that of his wife and queen, who appears to have been the celebrated Semiramis of the Greeks, the supposed conqueror of Asia, and the greatest heroine of ancient history.

Kalah-Sherghat.—The remains of a great edifice on the Tigris, about forty miles to the south of Nimrud; built by the founder of the Nimrud centre palace. This very ancient Assyrian site is said to have been called Assur; some identify it with Ellasar or Telassar, others with Calah, and say that it was the capital of the country many centuries before Nineveh was built. The mutilated sitting figure, in black basalt, now in the Museum, also the bricks from this ruin, bear the name of the monarch. Cylinders of terracotta have been found here, containing the records of Tiglath-Pileser L, who reigned about B.C. 1,132; they also commemorate the restoration of a temple which had been pulled down some sixty years before, and 641 years after its original foundation; thus carrying back the Assyrian monarchy to nearly a.C. 1,840. Mr. Layard examined the mound at Tel Athur, and found several sculptures; also the ruins of Tel Kef, Basheika, Basanini, Karamles, Karakush, Yara, and Jerrib; but he found nothing of moment, except fragments of pottery.—See CALAH.

The edifices hitherto explored, in the different quarters of Nineveh, and also that at Kalah-Sherghat, appear to have been palace-temples—they served both for the residence of the king, who was the high priest as well as the political ruler of the nation, and for the celebration of great religious ceremonies; such was also the case in Egypt. Among the illustrations of the Scriptures, exhibited on the exhumed monuments, many of which are copied in the valuable works of

301
AMON = moiety, portion, or part.

The ancient or capital city of the interior of Egypt was called Karnak, and was known by the Greeks and Romans as Heliopolis or Alexandria. It was the seat of the worship of Ammon, who was also called Min, and was the principal god of the Egyptians. The temple of Ammon was one of the most magnificent and splendid buildings in the world, and was the center of the religious life of the Egyptians. It was dedicated to the worship of the god Ammon, who was regarded as the patron deity of the city and the protector of the Pharaohs. The temple was surrounded by a wall of stone, and was divided into several sections, each of which was dedicated to a different aspect of the god's worship. The most important of these sections was the temple proper, which contained the statue of Ammon and was the place where the Pharaohs were worshipped. The temple was also the site of a number of important religious ceremonies, including the annual festival of the god, which was celebrated with great pomp and ceremony. The temple of Ammon was one of the most important religious centers of ancient Egypt, and was the site of some of the most important events in the history of the country. It was also the place where the Pharaohs were buried, and was the setting for many of the most important events in the history of the country.
threatened calamity, which Noah’s degenerate contemporaries had despised, came upon them with all its terrors; and as they sank in the mighty waters, their last breath must have sighed out a mournful condemnation of their folly. When the waters had subsided, and a sacrifice had been offered, God entered into a covenant with Noah; (Gen. vii. 1—22; Isa. liv. 9;) and also enacted some general laws for his government. (Gen. ix. 1—29; x. 1, 32.) Among other agricultural operations, Noah planted a vineyard: “And he drank of the wine, and was drunken.” This was probably a fault of inadvertence, one in which he was overtaken, and of which he afterwards bitterly repented. While in this state he was treated indecorously by one of his sons, which appears to have been the occasion of Noah’s remarkable prediction against Canaan. (Gen. ix. 20—27.) After the deluge, Noah lived 350 years, and died at the advanced age of 950 years.

2. Noah = motion. A daughter of Zelophehad. (Num. xxvi. 38.)

NOB = height. A city of the priests, in Benjamin, within sight of Jerusalem, on the north-east, where the tabernacle was stationed in the time of Saul. (1 Sam. xxxi. 1; Neh. xi. 32; Isa. x. 32.) On account of the kindness shown to David, by Ahimelech, the high priest, Saul caused the city to be smitten with the edge of the sword. (1 Sam. xxii. 9—19.)

NOBAH.—See Kenath.

NOBLEMAN. The Greek word basilikos, rendered “nobleman,” margin, “courtier,” or “ruler,” signifies a minister, or servant of the king; probably one who was then attached to the court of Herod Antipas. (John iv. 46, 49.)

NOD = flight, wandering. The region of exile, on the eastward of Eden, to which the fratricide Cain withdrew “from the presence of Jehovah.” The Chaldee interpreters apply Arm Nod to Cain himself, rather to a region—“He dwelt a fugitive in the land.” (Gen. iv. 14, 16.)

NODAB = nobili’y. A son of Ishmael, whose descendants were known by the same name. (1 Chron. v. 19.)

NOE.—See Noah.

NOGAH = a shining, splendour. A son of David. (1 Chron. iii. 7; xiv. 6.)

NOHAB = rest. A son of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 2.)

NOON. The Hebrew word tzakarim signifies double light, i.e. strongest, brightest, hence called “mid-day,” when the sun is highest in his daily course, being direct south, or on the meridian of any place. (Gen. xxxi. 16; Dent. xxviii. 29; Ps. lv. 17; 1 Kings xviii. 29, comp. 26, 27; Acts xxvi. 13.) The terms “noon,” and “noon-day,” sometimes designate prosperity, happiness. (Job xi. 17; Ps. xxxviii. 6; Isa. lviii. 10; Am. viii. 9.)

NOPH.—See Memphis.

NOPHAN = blast, or windy place. A town of the Moabites. (Num. xxxi. 30.)

NORTH. The Hebrews considered the cardinal points of the heavens in reference to a man whose face was turned toward the east, the north was consequently on his left hand; (Gen. xiii. 14; Josh. xv. 10; Judg. xxi. 19; Jer. i. 13;) hence “the left hand” designates the north. (Gen. xiv. 15; Job xxiii. 9.) They also regarded what lay to the north as higher, and what lay to the south as lower; hence they who travelled from south to north were said to “go up;” (Gen. xlv. 25; Hos. viii. 9; Acts xviii. 3; xix. 1;) whilst they who went from north to south were said to “go down.” (Gen. xii. 10; xxxvi. 2; xxxvii. 1; 1 Sam. xxx. 15, 16; xxxv. 1; xxi. 2.) By the “land of the north,” Assyria is understood; (Jer. iii. 12, 18; Zech. ii. 6;) and Babylonia. (Jer. vi. 22; x. 22; xxxi. 8; l. 3; Zech. ii. 6, 7; vi. 6, 8.) But the “king of the north” is the king of Syria, opposed to the king of the south, i.e. Egypt. (Dan. xi. 6—15, 40.)

NOSE. The Hebrews commonly placed the seat of anger in the nostrils; since the effect of anger is often hard breathing, and in animals, anortig-
NOS

(Jer.viii.16; Job xii.20.) Even Jehovah is occasionally represented to us as being, in this way, extraordinarily moved. (2 Sam. xxii. 9; Ps. xviii. 8; Job iv. 9.)

Syrian lady, with the nose-ring.

NOSE-JEWEL. The Hebrew word nēcem, rendered “ear-ring,” margin, “jewel for the forehead”; (Gen. xxiv. 22, 47;) “nose-jewels;” (Isa. iii. 21;) and “jewel thy forehead,” margin, “nose,” (Ezek. xvi. 12,) properly signifies a nose-ring, a female ornament, common in Syria. (Prov. xi. 22.) The nose-ring is also worn by many of the females in Egypt and other parts of the East. It is sometimes made of gold, but most commonly of brass; is from an inch to an inch and a half in diameter; and has usually three or more coloured glass beads, generally red and blue, attached to it. It is sometimes passed through the right and sometimes through the left ala of the nose; and hangs partly before the mouth; so that the wearer is obliged to hold it up with one hand when she puts anything into her mouth. In some parts of the East the females wear a pendant from the septum or middle filament of the nose, which is often exceedingly beautiful and of great value.

NOVICE. The Greek word neophytos, rendered “novice,” (1 Tim. iii. 6,) signifies newly-planted; and is tropically used of one newly converted, and not yet matured in Christian knowledge and experience. In later periods the neophytes were usually distinguished by the general term Catechumens = learners.

505

NUMBERS. The fourth Book of Moses, which obtains its name from the title of the Greek version, Αριθμοι = Numbers; because the book contains an account of the numbering and ordering of the Hebrews and Levites, after the consecration of the tabernacle. The rest of the book contains an account of the breaking up of the Hebrews from Sinai, and their subsequent wanderings in the wilderness; and of the wonderful dealings of God with them, until their arrival on the borders of Moab, a period of something more than thirty-eight years. This book, like the rest of the books of the Pentateuch, does not seem to have been written in one continuous succession, like a continuous piece of history, as it wears the air of a historic journal, as well as a record of legislation, in which Moses was engaged as often as circumstances called for it. Throughout the book the author proves himself to be intimately acquainted with Egypt, and the circumstances of that period. The list of stations, in the route of the Hebrews, not only exhibits an equal knowledge of the desert, but also shows that the document is the production of the reputed author of the book. The author frequently quotes other documents of value, as the Book of the Wars of the Lord; (Num. xxxi. 14, 15;) and in verses 17, 18, from a joyous song of the Hebrews, on the discovery of a well in the desert; and in verses 27, 30, from an ancient war-song of the Amorites on occasion of their victory over Moab. There are also some highly-finished and magnificent passages of poetry ascribed to Balaam. (Num. xxiii. 7—10, 18—24; xxiv. 3—9, 15—24.)

NUN = a fish. The father of Joshua, who is hence called “Joshua the son of Nun.” (Ex. xxxiii. 11; Num. xi. 26; xiii. 8, 10; Josh. i. 1.) In 1 Chron. vii. 27, the name is written “Non.”

NURSE. The nurse in an Eastern family is always a person of some importance. She always accompanies the bride to her husband's house, where she becomes her confidant and chief adviser, and ever remaining there an honoured guest. (Gen. xxiv. 59.) Deborah, Rebecah's nurse, died in the family of Jacob, and was buried in the vicinity of Bethel, with much lamentation. (Gen. xxxv. 8.) The tenderness and affection of a nurse gives force to several figurative expressions in the Scriptures. (Isa. xlix. 28; 1 Thes. ii. 7.)

NUTS. The Hebrew word bataim, rendered "nuts," (Gen. xlii. 11,) is generally supposed to designate pistacia vera, the fruit of the Pistacia vera, a tree which is found growing wild in some parts of Palestine, and resembles the Pistacia terebinthus, i.e. the butm, or terebinth. The tree, when laden with clusters of ripe nuts, makes a fine appearance, but at other times, on account of its crooked branches, is far from being handsome. The Hebrew word agoz, rendered "nut," (Sol. Song. vi. 11,) is supposed to designate the walnut. Walnut-trees are abundant in Syria; and many of them are very large. Some of them yield large quantities of nuts; but it is said that the vicinity of walnut-trees is unhealthy.

NYMPTHAS = bridegroom. A Christian mentioned by Paul as having a church in his house. (Col. iv. 16.)

O

OAK. The Hebrew word ail, rendered "oak;" (Isa. i. 29; vii. 5, margin;) "trees;" (Isa. ixi. 8,) and "El," margin the plain, i.e. of Paran; (Gen. xiv. 6,) properly designates the terebinth. The Hebrew word alaq, rendered "oak;" (Gen. xxxv. 4; Josh. xxix. 26; Judg. vi. 11, 19; 2 Sam. xvii. 9, 10, 14; 1 Kings xiii. 14; 1 Chron. x. 12; Isa. i. 80;) "teal tree;" (Isa. vi. 15;) and "elms;" (Hos. iv. 13;) seems to have been used for any large and durable tree, especially the Pistacia terebinthus. The terebinth, called by the Arab butm, is common in Palestine. It spreads its boughs far and wide like a noble oak; and under the shade of such a tree, Abraham might well have pitched his tent at Mamre. This tree is not an evergreen. From incisions in the trunk there flows a sort of turpentine, which gradually hardens into a transparent gum. The Hebrew words ailon, ailon, and ailon, also designate any strong durable tree, and are used specially of the "oak;" (Gen. xxxv. 8; Isa. ii. 13; vi. 13; xlv. 15; Hos. iv. 13; Am. ii. 9; Ezek. xxvii. 6; Zech. xi. 2;) also rendered "plain," but ought to be "oak, as "oaks of Moreh;" (Gen. xii. 6; Deut. xi. 30;) "oaks of Mamre;" (Gen. xiii. 18; xiv. 13; xviii. 1;) "oak of Tabor;" (1 Sam. x. 5;) and "Magician's oak." (Judg. ix. 37.) There are several species of oaks in Palestine, among which the evergreen and prickly oaks occur frequently, yielding in several places extensive and beautiful park scenery; but the Quercus robur, which grows to so large a size in our own country is not to be met with. The hills of Bashan are richly wooded to their summits with noble prickly oaks, and a few pines towering over them. Groves of the evergreen shrub, Quercus cistifolia, or harmelia, from which the small gall-shaped masses of insects, essentially yielding the scarlet dye, were gathered, occur in the valleys beyond the plain of Acre. (Isa. i. 18; Lam. iv. 5.)

OATH. A solemn appeal to God in attestation of the truth of what is affirmed. Among the Hebrews, a voluntary oath was sometimes confirmed by elevating the right hand towards heaven. (Gen. xiv. 22; xxvi. 28; Ex. vi. 8; Deut. xxxii. 40; Ps. cxliv. 8; Ezek. xvii. 18; Rev. x. 5.) Jacob swore "by the fear of his father Isaac." (Gen. xxxi. 53.) Sometimes the awerner said, "God do so to me, and more also;" (Ruth i. 17; 2 Sam. iii. 9, 35; 1 Kings ii. 23; 2 Kings vi. 31;) "God be witness between me and thee;" (Gen. xxxi. 58; Jer. xliii. 5;) "As the Lord liveth;" (Ruth iii. 18; 1 Sam. iv. 45; xx. 21; 1 Kings xxi. 14;) "As thy soul liveth;" (1, OAT

Sam. i. 26; xvii. 55; 2 Sam. xi. 11.

"As the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth;" (1 Sam. xx. 3; xxv. 26; 2 Kings ii. 2.) or "our life for yours." (Josh. ii. 14.) The Egyptians swore by "the life of Pharaoh;" (Gen. xiiii. 16.) as did the Hebrews "by the life of the king;" (2 Sam. xi. 11; Ps. lxxxii. 11.) and even by Baal and other idols. (Jer. v. 7; xiiii. 16; Am. viii. 14; Zeph. i. 5.) The Jews, in the time of Christ, were accustomed to swear "by their heads," "by heaven," "by the earth," "by Jerusalem," "by the temple," "by the gold of the temple," "by the altar," and by the gift or sacrifice upon the altar." (Matt. v. 34—37; xxii. 16—22.) The Most High is occasionally presented to our apprehensive capacity, by representations drawn from the conduct and circumstances of man—as uttering an oath-form, "For I lift up my hand to heaven, and say, I live for ever;" (Deut. xxxii. 40.) or "As truly as I live;" (Num. xiv. 21.) and even as coming under the obligation of an oath. (Ex. vi. 8; Gen. xv. 18—21; xxv. 3; xxxv. 12; Isa. xlv. 23; liii. 8; Ezek. xx. 5; xxxiii. 11; Heb. vi. 13—18.) Though judicial oaths were used in times long antecedent to Moses, still they do not appear to have originated in any Divine command. The inspired lawgiver could not wisely dispense with them altogether, he therefore made use of the sanction which they gave in sundry judicial cases. (Lev. vi. 3—5; Ex. xxii. 11.) When an oath was exacted, whether by a judge or another, the oath was put in form, as "I adjure thee that thou tell me nothing but that which is true in the name of the Lord;" (1 Kings xxii. 16; or, "I adjure thee by the living God;" (Matt. xxvi. 63.) and the person responded, "Amen, Amen," or "Thou hast said," or in other expressions of like import. (Num. v. 19—22; Deut. xxvi. 15—26; Matt. xxvi. 64.) Among the early Hebrews, an oath of fidelity was usually taken by "putting the hand under the thigh"—a reference to the seal of the Divine promise in circumcision—of the person who administered the oath. (Gen. xxii. 2; 3; xxxvi. 29.) The taking of a false oath was deemed a heinous crime. (Lev. viii. 12; Deut. vi. 13; Zech. vi. 4; Mal. iii. 5; Matt. v. 33.) The frequency of voluntary oaths must have fearfully tended to weaken the moral character, (Matt. xxvi. 74,) by diminishing confidence between man and man; hence they are expressly forbidden by our Lord. Indeed, it has long been held by some Christians, that the practice of taking an oath on any occasion is a violation of the express command of our Lord, "But I say unto you, swear not at all;" and there is great force in the arguments which are used in support of this opinion. (Matt. v. 34; Jam. v. 12.)

OBA

OBADIAH = servant or worshipper of Jehovah. 1. A prophet who appears to have been contemporary with Jeremiah. From the fragment of a prophecy left by Obadiah, verses 20, it seems that Jerusalem was then subject to the Chaldeans, and that many of the citizens had been carried into Exile; so that he must have prophesied after the removal of Jehoiachin, that is, subsequently to the year 599 B.C. (2 Kings xxiv. 8—17.) That Jerusalem was not then destroyed, appears from verses 12—14, where he admonishes the Edomites not to continue their hostilities against the Hebrews. His prophecy relates to the judgments impending over Edom; and announces that Zion will be hereafter restored, and the Hebrews, even the ten tribes, will again receive their country, and take possession of Edom and also Phœnicia. This took place about B.C. 125, under John Hyrcanus. The similarity of a portion of Jeremiah's prophecy with that of Obadiah, is striking. (Jer. xlix. 7—16; compare Obad. verses 1—9.) The style of Obadiah shines with various beauties, yet it does not equal that of the more ancient prophets. 2. The principal officer in Ahab's household, by whose interposition one hundred of the Lord's prophets were preserved, in a cave, from the murderous persecution raised by Jesse and supplied with food during the famine. (1 Kings xviii. 3—16.) He is also called “Obadiah.” (1 Kings xviii. 3, margin.) 3. A descendant of David. (1 Chron. iii. 21.) 4. A descendant of Issachar. (1 Chron. vii. 8.) 5. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 38; ix. 44.) 6. Two of the Levites. (1 Chron. ix. 16; 2 Chron. xxxiv. 12.) 7. One of David’s distinguished captains. (1 Chron. xii. 9.) 8. A descendant of Zebulun. (1 Chron. xxvii. 19.) 9. One of king Jehoshaphat’s nobles. (2 Chron. xvii. 7.) 10. One of the priests. (Neh. x. 5.) 11. One who returned from the Exile. (Ezra viii. 9.)

OBA = stone. The name of a tribe, and also a region in that part of Arabia peopled by the descendants of Joktan; (Gen. x. 28;) for which, in the Samaritan, and in 1 Chron. i. 22, is read “Ebal.”

OBED = serving. 1. The son of Boas and Ruth, and father of Jesse. (Ruth iv. 17—22; 1 Chron. ii. 12; Matt. i. 6; Luke iii. 32.) 2. One of David’s distinguished captains. (1 Chron. xi. 47.) 3. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. ii. 37, 38.) 4. A son of Obed-edom. (1 Chron. xxvi. 7.) 5. The father of Azariah. (2 Chron. xxxiii. 1.)

OBed-EDOM = serving Edom. 1. A Gittite who lived in David’s time, and at whose house the ark was deposited after the death of Uzziah. The Divine blessing which rested on the house of Obed-edom for the ark’s sake, encouraged David to remove it to Jerusalem. (2 Sam. vi. 10—12; 1 Chron. xiii. 13, 14.) Obed-edom and his sons were appointed keepers of the doors of the sanctuary. (1 Chron. xv. 18, 24; xvi. 38.) 2. Two of the Levites. (1 Chron. xv. 21; xvi. 38; xxxvi. 4, 8, 15; 2 Chron. xxiv.)

OBEDIENCE. By the obedience of Christ, we understand the entire work of the Redeemer—including what some writers call His active and passive obedience or righteousness—in which He voluntarily subjected Himself to the Divine law, and did not decline to do anything, either in the way of action or suffering, which was necessary to be done or suffered, in order that the salvation of men might be accomplished. By His obedience, even unto death, He has not only magnified the law, and made it honourable, but secured the happiness of all who exercise faith in Him; just as all men were rendered miserable by the disobedience of Adam, because all have sinned. (Rom. viii. 2—4.) The perfect obedience or righteousness of the Saviour stands intimately connected with His mediatorial work; and is founded in the dignity of His person—being God and man—which gave effect to all He did and suffered. (Phil. ii. 8; Heb. ii. 10; v. 8, 9; x. 10; Matt. iii. 15; Gal. iv. 4, 5.) And that Christ has suffered in the room and stead of sinners; that His obedience unto death is a moral equivalent for the sin of the world; and that His entire work is considered a good and glorious reason for the exercise of pardoning mercy and gracious reception to the Divine favour, is, indeed, the fundamental truth of the gospel scheme of salvation. Yet the obedience of Christ unto death has not in any measure abated from the claims of the law as a rule of moral action; it has rather shown that the law may be fully obeyed in our nature; and that we are, therefore, deserving of its penalty when we disobey it. Yet when we have transgressed it, the way is now open for pardon and peace, in case of penitence and faith; inasmuch as all hope for us on the ground of legal merit is for ever excluded, after one transgression.—See IMPUT.

OBIEL = chief of the camels. An Ishmaelite, who had charge of the camels of David. (1 Chron. xxxvii. 30.)

OBLATION.—See OFFERINGS.

OBOTH = water-skins. A station of the Hebrews in the desert, on the eastern skirts of Edom. (Num. xxxi. 10, 11; xxxiii. 43, 44.)

OCHIM.—See Owl.

OCRAN = afflicted. The father of Pagiel. (Num. i. 18; ii. 27.)
ODE

ODED = Oceeding. 1. The father of the prophet Azariah. (2 Chron. xv. 1-8.) In verse 8, by a mistake of the copyists, “Oded” is read, instead of “Azariah.” 2. A prophet who persuaded the Israelites to return to their own country the captives of Judah, which they had taken in the war. (2 Chron. xxviii. 9-15.)

OFFENCE. The Greek word skandalon, rendered “offence,” designates any thing one strikes or stumbles against; a cause of falling; hence morally, that which gives occasion, or is likely to cause, us to sin. Thus, in Matt. v. 29, the right eye which would allure to sin, is said to offend; so in Matt. xvi. 23; xviii. 7-9, causes of sin and suffering are called offences. Our Saviour is called “a stumbling stone and rock of offence;” the Jews were offended with the Messiah as He appeared among them; they stumbled at His character and claims, and were disobedient. (Isa. viii. 14; Luke ii. 34; Rom. ix. 32, 33.)

OFFERINGS. The general view with which the various offerings or sacrifices were presented, by the Hebrews, was either to express gratitude to God, for favours received, or to make expiation for sins committed. The place, in which alone the oblations could be legally presented, was the front court of the national sanctuary; (Lev. xvii. 1-9; Deut. xii. 5-7; 1 Kings vii. 29; 2 Chron. vii. 12; Ps. lxviii. 67, 69;) though in some instances sacrifices were offered elsewhere, without any reprehension. (Judg. ii. 5; 1 Sam. vii. 17; ix. 12; 1 Kings xviii. 19-38;) In the performance of the sacrifice, the person whose property it was, being himself first legally purified, brought the animal—which was to be without blemish—to the altar, at the same time turned himself so as to have his face towards the door of the sanctuary, and laid his hand upon the head of the animal; the last act to signify, that the punishment due to him should fall upon the victim. (Deut. xxi. 18; Mal. i. 7, 8; 1 Sam. xvi. 5; Ex. xix. 14; Lev. i. 4; ii. 3, 4; iii. 1, 2; iv. 38; xvii. 4.) Then he slew it, which, however, the priest might also do, and in later times actually did. (Lev. i. 5; 2 Chron. xxxix. 24; Ezra vi. 24.) In the act of slaying, the priest received the blood in brassen bowls, and sprinkled or poured it near the different offerings, yet apart from them. The offerer then took the skin of the victim, and cut it into pieces. (Lev. i. 6; compare 2 Chron. xxxix. 34.) The burning of the proper parts of the sacrifice, as the omentum, the fat covering the intestines, the kidneys, the lobes of the liver, and in sheep, the fat of the tail, was attended to by the priest.

The Thank-Offering, consisted in the presentation of a bull, sheep, or goat, of either sex; which was brought and slain on the south side of the altar. The pieces of fat only were burned. The breast and shoulder, the former of which the offerer was to have and the latter to wave, belonged to the priest. The heaving and the waving—hence called “an heave-offering,” and “a wave-offering”—were manifest symbols of presentation to Jehovah, the Lord of heaven and of the whole earth. (Ex. xxix. 24-28; Lev. ix. 21; Num. xxxi. 52.) The rest was applied to the use of a sacrificial feast. (Ps. cxviii. 27; 1 Cor. x. 18.) This offering was presented on account of a particular blessing received from Jehovah, hence called “a sacrifice of thanks-giving;” (Ps. cxvi. 17;) also “a peace-offering;” (Lev. iii. 1-11;)—also in connection with the passover, as the khag or festive thank-offering; (Lev. vii. 16-18;)—or on the satisfaction of a vow; (Num. vi. 14; Lev. vii. 16;)—or merely from the general feeling of pious inclination, in which case it was called “a free-will-offering;” (Deut. xii. 17;)—also “a voluntary-offering.” (Lev. vii. 16.) The meat-offerings were united with “thank-offerings,” consisting of unleavened cakes mingled with oil, and a leavened loaf, which went to the priest. The “drink-offerings,” consisting of wine poured out all round the altar. were also an addition to the thank-offerings made by fire. (Num. xv. 5—10; xxviii. 7—14; Lev. ii. 1; iii. 1; vii. 11—88; xiv. 10—21.) Among thank-offerings, in the most extensive sense, might be reckoned the presentation of the first born; (Ex. xiii. 12—15;) the first fruits, including the fruit of all manner of trees, honey, oil, and unfermented wine; (Lev. xxiii. 10—13; Num. xxvii. 12; 1 Chron. ix. 29; Neh. x. 37; 2 Chron. xxx. 6;) and the second tithe. (Deut. xii. 17, 18; xiv. 28.) Leaven and honey were excluded from all offerings made by fire; (Lev. ii. 11;) and salt was required in all. (Lev. ii. 13; Mark ix. 49; Col. iv. 6.) So also the Hebrews were forbidden to offer anything vile and contemptible. (Deut. xxii. 18; Mal. i. 7, 8.)

The Burnt-Offering was a free-will offering, which consisted in the immolation of a male animal victim, which was sometimes a bull of three years’ age, sometimes a heifer or sheep of one year, or else a young lamb or turtle-dove. In “a whole burnt-offering” the victim was entirely consumed in the fire; but in some burnt-offerings, only parts of the victim were consumed. (Gen. xxii. 13; Job i. 5; 1 Sam. vi. 14; 1 Pet. iii. 18; 19; Luke ii. 24.) The sacrifice was slain on the north side of the altar, and deprived of the skin; the skin belonged to the priests, and was cut up into proper pieces by the offerer himself. (Lev. vii. 8.) All the parts of the victim were laid separately upon the fire. Of doves, the priest was to nip off the head with his finger-nails, squeeze out the blood on the edge of the altar, pluck off the feathers and throw them with the crop into the ash-pit, divide it down to the wings, and then completely burn it. (Lev. i. 1—17; vi. 1—6.) The design of the burnt offerings was to make atonement with God for sins committed, in general. They were presented in the name of the whole nation, every morning and evening; also in connexion with a sin-offering on the great day of atonement, also on the other principal an-was a ram. (Lev. v. 17, 18.) When a man had a criminal connexion with a betrothed female slave; (Lev. xix. 20—22;)—or had, in later times, contracted an idolatrous marriage, the victim was a ram. (Exod. xix. 10.) So also, a Nazarite, who had contracted defilement by touching a dead body; (Num. vi. 9—12;)—and a leper who had been healed, were to bring a lamb for a trespass offering. (Lev. xiv. 12; 24.)

In this offering the victim was slain on the north side of the altar, the blood sprinkled round it, and the pieces of fat burned upon it.

The Sin-Offerings were offered occasionally for individuals, but generally for the congregation. A sin-offering was offered on the great day of atonement, for the high priest and the nation. (Lev. xvi. 1—34; xxiii. 26—32; Num. xxix. 7—11.) When the high priest had committed an offence, and thereby had brought guilt upon the whole nation, he laid his hand on the head of a young bull, and acknowledged his sin; then he slew the animal on the north side of the altar, sprinkled the blood, and burned the fat and the abdominal pieces upon the altar; all the rest was burned without the gates of the city. (Lev. iv. 2—12.) When the whole nation had committed an offence, through ignorance, and afterwards repented, the same offering was made as in the preceding case. (Lev. iv. 18—21.)

When a magistrate committed an offence through error, the sacrifice was a kid; the fat pieces only came to the altar; the rest fell to the priest. (Lev. iv. 22—26.) When a person sinned through ignorance, the sacrifice was a ewe, or a female kid. (Lev. iv. 27—35.) When a woman was purified from haemorrhage, or, after child-birth; (Lev. xv. 25—30; xii. 6—8;)—when a man was personally unclean; (Lev. xv. 2, 14, 15; comp. xiv. 21, 22;)—or a Nazarite had touched a corpse, or the time of his vow was completed; (Num. vi. 10—14;)—or on the purification of a leper; the victim in these cases was usually a sheep or a dove. (Lev. xiv. 19—31.)

On the consecration of a priest, or Levite, the victim was an ox or a goat. (Ex. xx. 1—14; Lev. ix. 23; Num. vii. 8—12.)—See Sacrifice.

Among the Hebrews, expiatory sacrifices were symbolical representations of the great work, for the effecting of which the Messiah was promised to fallen man. (Ps. xi. 5, 8; Heb. x. 10; viii. 3; ix. 14, 26, 28.) As it was the design of the Mosaic law to remind the Hebrews that they were guilty of sin and liable to death, so every sacrificer was a memorial of this mournful truth, as well as a type of the work of our Redeemer. When a Hebrew had committed a trespass against the Divine law, providing the trespass was such as admitted an expiation, he had to offer the requisite sacrifices before he could be restored to his civil privileges. With this, a mere worldly-minded Hebrew was content; but, as no mere animal sacrifice could make atonement for sin, to the sincere believer the sacrifice was only the symbol and type of something spiritual. It reminded him that his sins had not only excluded him from the Divine favour, but that he deserved death and subsequent agony; it directed him to the need of a sacrifice for sin where God would forgive his transgression; and it assured him, that just as by sacrifice he had been restored to his civil and political rights; so by faith in the great sacrifice for sin on the part of the Lamb of God, might he be restored to the Divine favour, and to a place in that spiritual kingdom of which the Hebrew nation was the type.

OG = long-necked? An Amorite king of Bashan, famous for his gigantic stature. He was defeated by the Hebrews under Moses, and his country was assigned to the tribe of Manasseh. (Num. xxxi. 32; xxxii. 33; Deut. i. 4; iii. 8; iv. 47; xxxii. 4; Josh. xiii. 30.) His bedstead of iron, which was fifteen feet nine inches in length, and seven feet in width, was preserved as a memorial. (Deut. iii. 11; Josh. xiii. 12.)
OLI

Wild describes the largest of the old olive-trees, in the garden of Gethsemane, as being twenty-four feet in girth above the roots, though its topmost branch is not thirty feet from the ground. As the olive-tree is always green, it was employed as a symbol of uninterrupted prosperity; (Ps. lii. 8; Jer. xi. 16;) and abundant fruitfulness. (Judg. ix. 8, 9; Ps. cxxxviii. 3; Hos. xiv. 6; Zech. iv. 8, 11, 14; Rom. xi. 17; Rev. xi. 4.) The fruit of the olive-tree is sometimes plucked in its green unripe state, and preserved in pickle, or a solution of salt, and exported. For the most part, however, the fruit is valuable on account of the oil it produces, which is expressed from it in various ways. (Job xxiv. 11; Mic. vi. 15.) The best oil was that which came from the fruit, by being beaten, or with very light pressure. This was termed “pure olive oil beaten.” (Ex. xxvii. 20.) The first expression of the oil was better than the second, and the second than the third. Ripe olives yielded oil of a less valuable kind. The worst sort is much used in making soap. The oil was one of the productions the Hebrews carried to the markets of Tyre. (Ezek. xxviii. 17.) The Hebrew words aitz-shemen, rendered “pine branches;” (Neh. viii. 13;) “olive trees,” margin, “trees of oil;” (1 Kings vi. 23;) and “oil-tree;” (Isa. xlii. 19;) properly signify oil-tree. By this designation is probably intended the agrileaeos, (Rom. xi. 17;) i.e. the oleaster or olea Europea, in a wild state, the “wild olive,” which was grafted upon the cultivated olive-tree. The oil of the oleaster is chiefly used as a healing ointment. The wood was used for making the cherubim in the temple, and for doors and posts “for the entering of the oracle.” (1 Kings vi. 23–33.)

OLIVES, MOUNT OF. This mountain, also called “Olivet;” (2 Sam. xv. 30; Acts i. 12;) and by the Arabs, Jebel-et-Tur, lies on the east of Jerusalem, from which it is separated only by the narrow valley of Jehoshaphat. (Zech. xiv. 4.) It is usually said to have three summits; the middle and apparently the highest of which is directly opposite the city, having an elevation, as given by Lieut. Symonds, of 2,837 English feet above the level of the sea. The sides of the mountain are sprinkled with olive-trees, and wheat-fields. From the middle summit there is a commanding prospect of the northern end and portion of the Dead sea, and also of the adjacent country, including a large part of the valley of the Jordan, as well as of the naked dreary region lying between Jerusalem and Jericho, and between Bethlehem and the Dead sea, and also of the castle of Kerak, perched high up in the country of Moab. As Bethany was connected with, or a part of, the Mount of Olives, the two names are used interchangeably, and almost as synonymous, (Matt. xxi. 17; xxiv. 3; xxvi. 30; Mark, xi. 1–20; xii. 38; xiv. 26; Luke xix. 29; xxi. 37; xxii. 39; xxiv. 50; John viii. 1.)

OLYMPAS = hrevent. A Christian at Rome, whom Paul salutes. (Rom. xvi. 15.)

OMAR = eloquent. A son of Elisaphaz. (Gen. xxxvi. 11; 1 Chron. i. 86.)

OMEGA.——See Alpha.

OMB.——See Alpha.

OMER. A measure of things dry, equal to the tenth part of an ephah, or 5. 1 English pints. (Ex. xvi. 16–36.)

OMRI = pupil of Jehoram. 1. A king of Israel, who was general of the Israelitish army, and was raised to the throne during the siege of Gibbethon. The army had heard that Zimri had assassinated Elah the king, and had usurped the throne; instantly the siege was raised, they forthwith marched to Tirzah, where Zimri resided, and captured it. The Israelites were then divided into two parties, one of which had made Tibni king; but after a struggle of about six years, Omri prevailed, and took the throne, which he disgraced, from 929–917 B.C. Omri, on an Assyrian monument called Khumri, founded Samaria, which thenceforth became the capital of the ten tribes. (1 Kings xvi. 16—30; Mic. vi. 6.) 2. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. vii. 8.) 3. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. ix. 4.) 4. A descendant of Issachar. (1 Chron. xxvii. 18.) made him "learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians." (Acts vii. 22.) According to Josephus, in after ages, and with the consent of Ptolemy Philometer, king of Egypt, a temple was built here, or within the district of Heliopolis, for the Jews, by Onias, the son of the Jewish high priest. This temple, which was in great repute among the Hellenistic Jews, continued for two hundred and twenty years, when, on account of the rebellions of the Jews, it was shut up and finally demolished by the emperor Vespasian. The city suffered greatly from the invasion of Cambyses; and in Strabo's time it was a mass of splendid ruins, among which the spacious halls of the college were to be seen, in which Plato, Eudoxus, and other Greek sages, had studied the wisdom of the Egyptians under the direction of the priests of Heliopolis. The site of this once famed city is now marked by low mounds, enclosing a space about three-quarters of a mile in length, by half a mile in breadth; which was once occupied partly by houses, and partly by the celebrated temple of the sun. This area is now a ploughed field, a garden of herbs; and a solitary magnificent obelisk, of red granite, made in the reign of Osirteesen I., 67 feet high—a copy of which we give—which still rises in the midst, is the sole remnant of the former splendours of the place.

2. On = wealth, substance. A descendant of Reuben. (Num. xvi. 1.)

ONAM = strong, stout. 1. A descendant of Seir. (Gen. xxxvi. 23.)

ONAN = strong, stout. The second son of Judah, who was given in marriage to Tamar, his elder brother's widow, but was destroyed by the Lord for the criminal manner in which he evaded compliance with the ancient Levirate law. (Gen. xxxviii. 8, 9; xlvi. 12; Num. xxvi. 19.)

ONESIMUS = profitable. A servant belonging to Philemon of Colosse, who fled from his master to ONE

Rome, where he was converted under Paul. The Apostle sent him back, with the beautiful Epistle to Philemon; and the master received his servant as a brother. (Col. iv. 9, 19; Phil. 10.)

ONESIPHORUS = profit-bringing. A Christian of Ephesus, who ministered to Paul, when a prisoner at Rome, at a time when almost all the rest of his friends had forsaken him and fled. (2 Tim. i. 16–18; iv. 18.)

ONION. The onions of Egypt have from antiquity been far renowned. (Num. xi. 5.) Their large size and exquisite flavor, it is said, differ from the onions of our country, as much as a bad turnip differs in palatableness from a good apple. As all the common species of allium grow in Palestine, it is probable that the Hebrews, in their own land, consumed them largely.

ONO = strong. A city of Benjamin; (Ezra ii. 33; Neh. vii. 37; xi. 35; 1 Chron. viii. 12;) with a valley or plain of the same name. (Neh. vi. 2.)

ONYCHA. The Hebrew word shch kloth, rendered "onycha," is supposed to denote the shell of a species of mussel, the blatta Byzantine, found in the lakes of India; when burned it emits a musky odor. As one of the ingredients of the sacred perfume, others think it may have been a kind of gum. (Ex. xxx. 34.)

ONYX. The Hebrew word jahalom, rendered "diamond," (Ex. xxviii. 18; xxxix. 11; Ezek. xxviii. 13,) probably designates the onyx, a kind of chalcedony, which approaches the color of the flesh as it appears through the nail. The Hebrew word shokham, rendered "onyx," properly designates the "beryl."—See BERYL.

OPHEL = a hill, tumulus. A hill or ridge on the east of Mount Zion, anciently surrounded and fortified by a separate wall. (2 Chron. xxxvii. 3; xxxiii. 14; Neh. iii. 26, 27; xi. 21.)

In the margin of these passages, Ophel is generally rendered "the tower." Dr. Robinson identifies it with the ridge extending south from Moriah to Siloam, between the deep valley of Jehoshaphat on the east, and the steep, but shallower, Tyropoeon on the west. The breadth of the ridge is 290 feet, or about 96 yards, from brow to brow. The ground is tilled and planted with olive and other fruit trees.

OPHIR = the upper or distant region. A son of Joktan, the son of Eber, a great-grandson of Shem. (Gen. x. 29.) His descendants are supposed to have given name to "Ophir," a celebrated region, abounding in gold, which the seamen of Solomon, in company with the Phenicians, were accustomed to visit, taking their departure from the ports of the Eolian gulf, and bringing back, every three years, gold, precious stones, sandal-wood, silver, ivory, apes, and peacocks. (1 Kings ix. 28; x. 11, 22; 2 Chron. viii. 18; ix. 10.) The "gold of Ophir" is frequently mentioned. (Job xxii. 24; xxxviii. 16; Ps. xliv. 9; Isa. xiii. 12; 1 Chron. xxxix. 4.) The word "Uphaz," (Jer. x. 9; Dan. x. 5,) and also "Parvaim," (2 Chron. iii. 6,) mentioned as gold regions, are supposed to be the same with Ophir.

As to the geographical situation of Ophir—the El-Dorado of Solomon—there is a diversity of opinion; yet the best interpreters hesitate only between three regions—India, and some part of Arabia, and the coast of Eastern Africa. That Ophir is to be sought in India, was the opinion of Josephus; (Ant. 8. 6. 4;) and certainly, several of the articles of traffic, as ivory and sandal-wood, are found in India; also the original words for "apes" and "peacocks" are the Indian words still used on the coast of Malabar. So also, the Seventy have everywhere, except in Gen. x. 29, for "Ophir" put Sophir, the Egyptian name for India. And in India there is a district called Sespara, probably the same as Sophir, situated where is now the emporium of Goa. Those who prefer Arabia, observe that Ophir, in Gen. x. 29, is enumerated among other regions inhabited by the descendants of Joktan; all of which, so far as known to us, are to be sought in the southern part of Arabia; although it cannot be denied that Ophir, even if more remote and situated in India, might have been peopled by colonies of the Joktanites. Of the articles of traffic above mentioned, "gems" and "apes" are still found in Arabia; and, though no gold may be now found there, it formerly abounded in that region. (Num. xxxi. 22, 50; Judg. viii. 24, 26; Ps. lxxii. 15.) Even at the present day there exists a place called el-Ophir, in the district of Oman, a few miles from the city Sohar. The opinion that the gold region was on the coast of Eastern Africa, has been supported, not only from the name Ophir, whence it is supposed the term Africa is derived; but from the fact that Eastern Africa was a region that produced gold in abundance, and indeed all the articles enumerated in the account of the commerce of Solomon. Hence, Ophir is made to comprise Nigris and the Sefala of Arabian writers, now Zanguebar and Mozambique. According to this view, Solomon's fleet coming down the Red sea, from Ezion-geber, coasted along the shore of Africa, doubled the Cape of Good Hope, and came to Tarshish, in Spain, and thence back again the same way; thus making the three years' voyage out and home. Some distinguished scholars suppose that no particular country is designated by Ophir, but that the term is used, like the word Thule in the classics, to denote some indefinite, distant region, or a certain region of the world, like the East or West Indies. However, so much is certain, that Tarshish and Ophir—whether the latter were India, Arabia, or the coast of Eastern Africa, or a general name for the rich South—were the two boundaries of the combined fleets of Hiram and Solomon.

515
oph

OphiNi = mouldy. A town of Benjamin; probably the same as the Gophnas of Josephus, and the modern village Jufna.

Ophrah = fawn, fawn-like. 1.
hand;" or, "Go up, for the Lord will deliver it—Ramoth-Gilead—into the hand of the king’s hand," that is, into the hand of the king of Assyria. Relying upon this ambiguous reply, the kings of Judah and Israel engaged the Syrians, and were utterly discomfited. (1 Kings xxi. 6.) So also when Saul visited the oracle at Endor, the response, delivered by the sorceress—imitating Samuel through the power of "contulgamum"—is quite in character with the ambiguity and equivocation of the heathen oracles, as the words might either be interpreted, "To-morrow shalt thou and thy sons be with me," i.e. with the sorceress at Endor; or thus, "To-morrow shalt thou and thy sons be with me," i.e. with Samuel in the state of the dead. (1 Sam. xxviii. 7—19.) All the heathen oracles were mere impostures and "lying wonders," either calculated to serve the avaricious ends of the heathen priests, or the political views of the princes. The word "oracles" is also used to designate the sacred writings, which were entrusted to the Hebrew nation. (Acts vii. 38; Rom. iii. 2; 1 Pet. iv. 11.)

ORCHARD.—See GARDEN.

ORDINANCES. This word frequently denotes the established laws, rules, or appointments of Jehovah’s government; (Ex. xviii. 20; Lev. xviii. 3; Luke i. 6;) sometimes it designates particular religious ceremonies in Hebrew worship. (Num. ix. 12, 14; Eph. ii. 15; Col. ii. 20; Heb. ix. 1, 10.)

ORDAIN. The Greek word cheiro-tomos, rendered "ordained," properly signifies to hold up the hand, hence to vote, to choose by vote, to appoint by the votes of the people. (Acts xiv. 23; 2 Tim. iv. 23; Tit. iii. 16.) The term is also rendered "chosen." (2 Cor. viii. 19.) It would thus appear that the most ancient form of ordination to the Christian ministry, consisted, "not in laying on the hands" of the bishop, or the presbytery, but in the appointment by the votes of the people, with fasting and prayers. The "laying on of hands," so frequently mentioned, refers to the charisma or miraculous gifts, imparted by the Holy Spirit. This conferring miraculous powers, by the Holy Spirit, through the laying on of hands, belonged peculiarly to the Apostles as a proof of their apostleship; but this was a distinct matter from the appointment of a Christian teacher to his office. (Acts vii. 17, 19; vi. 6, 8; iii. 3; ix. 17; 1 Cor. xii. 4—11; 1 Tim. iv. 14; v. 22; 2 Tim. i. 6.) In the appointment of the seven deacons at Jerusalem, they were chosen, i.e. "elected," by the church, and set apart by prayer; the Apostles also "laid their hands on them," and they received power to do great wonders and miracles among the people. (Acts vi. 5, 8.) Here, ordination to office was the election by the church; while the laying on of hands was the communication of miraculous gifts. But if the laying on of hands was properly the act of ordination, how is it that those Christian teachers, who are now ordained by the laying on of hands, and who profess to have derived their ordination in an unbroken succession from the Apostles, are not "full of faith and power, doing great wonders and miracles among the people?" The Greek word tetagenos, is sometimes rendered "appointed;" (Matt. xxviii. 16; Acts xii. 10; xxviii. 28;) "set," i.e. appointed; (Luke vii. 8;) "determined;" (Acts xv. 2;) "ordained," i.e. constituted, or arranged. (Rom. xiii. 1.) It never signifies foreordained, or pre-destined, by God’s decree; and the Gentiles, who were "ordained," i.e. "disposed for eternal life, are not represented as believing under such a decree. (Acts xiii. 48.)

OREB = a raven. A prince of the Midianites; also the name of a rock beyond the Jordan. (Judg. vii. 26; viii. 3; Ps. lxxxiii. 11; Isa. x. 26.)

OREN = the pine. A son of Jerahmeel. (1 Chron. ii. 25.)

ORGAN. The Hebrew word ugab rendered "organ," properly denotes a pipe, reed, syinx. (Gen. iv. 21; Job xxii. 12; xxx. 31; Ps. cl. 4.) The Greek word organ was anciently the general appellation for all instruments. The σαβ appears to have been what the ancient Greeks called the pipe or flute of Pan, the mouth-organ; which was made of from seven to fourteen or fifteen reeds. The syinx, or Pan's-pipe, is still a common pastoral instrument in the East.

ORION. The Hebrew word "resil"—impious, is supposed to designate the large and brilliant constellation "orion," situated in the southern hemisphere with respect to the ecliptic, but the equinoctial passes nearly across its middle. It is known by the three bright stars in its belt. (Job ix. 9; xxxvii. 31; Am. v. 8.) In Isa. xiii. 10, the word "resilim" is rendered "constellations," designating the greater constellations similar to orion.

ORNAMENTS.—See JEWELS.
ORNAN.—See Aramaiah.
ORPAH = mahep, forelock, or perhaps taken. A daughter-in-law of Naomi. (Ruth i. 4, 14.)
OSEED.—See Hosea.
OSEIAH.—See Joshua.
OSPRAY. The Hebrew word azan-iah, rendered "ospray," (Lev. xi. 13; Deut. xiv. 12,) is supposed to designate the black eagle; perhaps the nisir tookoor described by Bruce. Some think the fish-hawk is intended by this unclean bird.

OSISIPRAGE. The Hebrew word peros, rendered "ossifrage," (Lev. xi. 13; Deut. xiv. 12,) appears to denote a species of eagle. Some understand the vulture, others the falcon, and others the sea-eagle, which breaks the bones of its prey, after it has eaten the flesh. This bird was unclean to the Hebrews.

OSTRICH. The Hebrew words yasam and yaanah, properly denote the male and female ostrich. (Lam. iv. 3.) The Hebrew term bath-hayaanah, rendered "owl," (Lev. xi. 16; Deut. xiv. 16; Job xxx. 29; Isa. xiii. 21; xxxiv. 18; xliii. 20; Jer. i. 59; Mic. i. 8,) is generally rendered in the margin, "ostriches," or "daughter of the owl," probably the female ostrich. So also the Hebrew word remaiuth is poetically used for the female ostrich: "The wing of the ostrich exultingly vibrates, but are her pinions and feathers the pious?" i.e. she is not, like the stork, affectionate towards her young, but treats them with apparent cruelty. (Job xxxix. 13—18.) The ostrich, whose principal characteristics are beautifully and strikingly detailed in this passage of Job, is a native of the torrid regions of Arabia and Africa. It is the largest of the feathered tribes, and is the connecting link between quadrupeds and fowls. There are two varieties of the ostrich; one with a glossy black plumage, and sometimes growing to more than ten feet in height; the other covered chiefly with grey and dingy feathers, but seldom attaining seven feet in height. The ostrich is rendered incapable of flight by the peculiar structure of her wings; but she runs with such rapidity that the fleetest horse cannot equal. The ostrich was aptly called by the ancients "a lover of the deserts." In those dreary wastes its subsistence is the few tufts of coarse grass which are scattered here and there; but when nutritious substances do not occur, it would seem, that in order to be at ease, it is obliged to fill up the great capacity of its stomach, by pouring in whatever incoherent materials are at hand, to supply the void. The Arabs assert that the ostrich never drinks; and the chosen place of its habitation—the waste sandy desert—seems to confirm the assertion. Job says, the ostrich "leaveth her eggs in the earth, and warmeth them in dust." But this merely signifies that she does not build a nest, as most birds do, but deposits her eggs in a basin scraped out of the sand. The eggs, however, are deposited with great care; and are hatched, as the eggs of other birds are, in a great measure by the heat imparted by the incubation of the parent birds. The OSTH - ostrich still inhabits the great Syrian desert, especially the plains extending from the Hauran towards the Jobil Shammar and Nejd. Some are found in the Hauran; and a few are occasionally taken within two days journey of Damascus. The Arabs reckon the eggs delicious food, and occasionally sell them for about a shilling each. The principal value of the ostrich is in its feathers, which are extensively used for ornaments; they are sold at Aleppo and Damascus. The flesh of the ostrich was forbidden by the Mosaic law to be eaten (Lev. xi. 13), but it is eaten by some of the nations of Africa.

OTTHNI = lion of Jahovah. A son of Shemaiah. (1 Chron. xxvi. 7.)

OTTHIEL = lion of God. The first judge or regent of the Hebrews after the death of Joshua. He was the son of Kenaz, the brother of Caleb, of the tribe of Judah; and for his valour in seizing the city of Debir, he was rewarded by the gift of Achshah, the daughter of Caleb, in marriage. He delivered the Hebrews from the bondage, in which they had been held for eight years, by the Mesopotamians; and during the forty years of his administration the Hebrews remained faithful to Jehovah. (Josh. xv. 16—19; Judg. i. 11—15; iii. 8—11; 1 Chron. iv. 13.)

OUCHES. The Hebrew word mishkethzoth, rendered “ouches,” signifies setting, bezez, in which gems are set, hence the sockets for fastening the precious stones in the shoulder-pieces of the high priest’s ephod. (Ex. xxvii. 11, 14, 25; xxxix. 13—16.)

OVEN. See BREAD.

OWL. The numerous family of rapacious birds styled strixidae, are all, or with few exceptions, “birds of darkness,” of which several well-known species are found in Syria and Egypt. The following Hebrew words have been supposed to designate this unclean bird. 1. Cox, rendered “owl” (Ps. xii. 6); and “the little owl” (Lev. xi. 17; Deut. xiv. 16), which may designate the strix flammea, the white or common barn owl; others think a kind of pelican is intended. 2. Yansaph, rendered “owl;” (Isa. xxxiv. 11) and “the great owl;” (Lev. xi. 17; Deut. xiv. 16) probably a water or marsh fowl is intended, as in the Septuagint and Vulgate, “the Ibis,” i.e. the Egyptian arzou. 3. Kippoz, rendered “the great owl;” (Isa. xxxiv. 15) is supposed to designate a species of serpent, serpens jactus, i.e. the arrow-snake. 4. Ochim, rendered “doleful creatures,” margin, “Ochim;” (Isa. xiii. 21) properly howlings, shrieks; hence howling animals, probably hootlets, owls. 5. Yaanah, rendered “owl;” (Lev. xi. 16; Deut. xiv. 15; Job xxx. 20; Isa. xxxiv. 13; xxxix. 13; Jer. l. 39; Mic. l. 8) properly the ostrich, as in the margin. 6. Lillith, rendered “screech-owl;” (Isa. xxxiv. 14) supposed to designate the strix bubo or great-eared owl; or the strix coromanda or night-hawk. Several mummies of owls have been found in the necropolis of Thebes.—See Night-Monster.

OX. As the Hebrews did not cast their bulls, it is not improbable that the climate sufficiently enervated them as to render them generally tractable. The nostrils of unruly cattle were perforated, and a ring put through and fastened to a rope, which rendered the most turbulent manageable. (2 Kings xix. 28; Job x. 24; Isa. xxxvii. 29.) Bulls not only formed a large item of the wealth of the patriarchs, (Gen. xxiv. 35; xxx. 43; Job i. 3,) but were used for ploughing, (Deut. xxii. 10; 1 Kings xix. 19; Job l. 14; Prov. iv. 4; Isa. xxx. 24,) for drawing carts, (Num. vii. 3, 7, 8,) and for threshing or treading out grain, (Deut. xxv. 4; 1 Cor. ix. 9,) and for food. (1 Kings xix. 21; 1 Chron. xiii. 39, 40; Matt. xxii. 4,) We know little of the various breeds of cattle among the Hebrews, but the Egyptian monuments exhibit the three principal distinctions of short-horned, long-horned, and one with the Indian hump. The viour miraculously cured several paralytics. (Matt. iv. 24; viii. 13; ix. 2, 6; Mark ii. 3, 4; Luke v. 18; John v. 5.)
PAL

PALTI = deliverance of Jehovah.
One of the spies sent out by Joshua.
(Num. xiii. 9.)

PALTIEL = deliverance of God.
A descendant of Issachar. (Num.
xxxiv. 26.)

PALTITE.—See Pelontite.

PAMPHYLIA = region of every tribe. A district in the southern part of Asia Minor, bounded on the east by Cilicia; north, by Pisidia; west, by Lycia; and south, by a part of the Mediterranean, here called the sea of Pamphylia. (Acts ii. 10; xiii. 13;
xiv. 24; xv. 38; xvii. 5.)

PAN. The Hebrew word, sir, rendered "pan," (Ex. xxvii. 3) and "flesh-pot," (Ex. xvi. 3) signifies a pot, pan, or cauldron for kitchen boiling.
In Ps. ix. 8, it is rendered "wash-pot," i.e. the meanest vessel. It is probable that the Hebrew kitchen utensils were similar to those exhibited in the Egyptian monuments; or like those copper cauldrons brought from Nineveh, and now deposited in the British Museum. (Lev. vi. 22.)

PANNAG. So much uncertainty exists concerning the meaning of this word, that our translators have retained it in our version, without trans-slating it. In the account of the commerce of Tyre, (Ezek. xxvii. 17,) it is said, "Judah, and the land of Israel, they were thy merchants: they traded in thy market wheat of Minnith, and Pannag, and honey, and oil, and balm." The Septuagint translates the term "pannag," cassia; the Vulgate, balsam; the Syriac, millet; and the Targum, sweet-pastry. If Pannag is not the name of a place, like Min-nith, we suggest that it denoted fruit cake, i.e. made of figs, raisins, or dates, ranking with honey, oil, and balm, as productions of Palestine, or, at least, of Syria. Lady Calcott's view is, at least, singular; she believes it to be panax quinquefolium, which the nts considered to be a medi-

PAR

cine so powerful and efficacious for the cure of a variety of distempers, that our word panacea, "a universal remedy," was derived from it.
PAPER.—See Boox.
PAPER-REEDS.—See Reem.
PAPHOS. A celebrated maritime city, lying at the western extremity of the island of Cyprus; now an inconsiderable place, called Bafso. Not far from the city was a celebrated temple of Venus, the Paphian goddess; here also, Sergius Paulus was proconsul. (Acts xiii. 6—13.)

PARABLE. The Greek word parabole, rendered "parable," signifies comparation, similitude. But the Hebrew term mashal, like the Greek parable, was also used in a wider sense, to designate any discourse expressed in figurative, poetical, or sententious language, hence a parable;
(Num. xxiii. 7; Job xxvii. 1:) a dark saying, i.e. full of hidden meaning; (Ps. xlii. 4; ixxviii. 2; Matt. xiii.
33; Prov. i. 6; Eccl. xii. 9:) a proverb, adage; (1 Sam. x. 12; Ezek. xviii.
2; Luke iv. 23;) also image, figure, symbol, or type. (Heb. ix. 9, 11; xi. 19.)

But, specially, a parable denoted a short discourse, usually a narrative, so constructed as to set forth a truth spiritual and heavenly. Trench has well observed, "The parable differs from the fable, moving as it does in a spiritual world, and never transgressning the actual order of things natural;—from the mythus, there being in the latter an unconscious blending of the deeper meaning with the outward symbol, the two remaining separate and separable in the parable; —from the proverb, inasmuch as it is longer carried out, and not merely accidentally and occasionally, but necessarily figurative;—from the alegory, comparing as it does one thing with another, but, at the same time, preserving them apart as an inner and an outer, and not transferring, as does the allegory, the properties and qualtities and relations of one to the other."

Instruction by figurative speeches was a favourite mode of Oriental.
teaching, and was much employed by the ancient sages. Even the Hebrew prophets employed it, the more strongly to impress their hearers with their threatenings or their promises. Thus Nathan reproved David under the story of the rich man who had taken away and killed the one ewelamb of the poor man. (2 Sam. xi. 1—18.) Thus, too, the prophet sung to his well-beloved, the people, a song concerning another well-beloved, the sentiment of which is simply that the former is an unfruitful and unprofitable vineyard, which the latter, the lord of the vineyard, threatens with immediate destruction. (Isa. v. 1—7.) When the people did not comprehend the figurative story, the speaker sometimes explained its pregnant import. (Judg. ix. 7—20; 2 Kings xiv. 9, 10; Ezek. xvii. 2—21; xviii. 2, 3; xix. 1—9.) The parables of our Saviour are remarkable for clearness, force, simplicity, and appropriateness. They relate to daily objects; (Matt. xx. 1—16; Mark iv. 26—34; to domestic labours; (Matt. xiii. 38—39; to common occurrences; (Luke vii. 36—50; x. 25—37) and to the scenery by which He and His audience were surrounded. (Matt. xiii. 47—53; Luke xii. 6—9; John iv. 35—38; Isa. vi. 9.) They were especially adapted to His unlearned and prejudiced hearers; and, being generally easily apprehended, the force of them was instantly felt and acknowledged. In the interpretation of a parable, we must be careful not to press too closely all the points of the parabolical narrative, nor to interpret them too minutely with a reference to the general purpose. If there be a resemblance in the principal incidents that is, all that is required. In the parable of the Prodigal son, we need not inquire what is meant by the robe, the calf, and the ring; (Luke xv. 11—32;) as such adjuncts are necessarily assumed, in order to complete the narrative, and adapt it to the customs of human life. But the existence of an elder brother and his envy are substantial facts, not illustrative of any other, and for such we must seek an interpretation. As an example of laborious trifling and incorrect interpretation, arising from the exposition of the adjuncts or mere drapery, the parable of the good Samaritan was thus explained as early as the fifth century: The man going down to Jericho was Adam; the thieves were the devil and his angels, who robbed him of immortality, and left him all but dead; the priest and Levite represented the Mosaic dispensation; the good Samaritan is Christ; the oil and wine are the comforts and blessings of the gospel; the beast on which he rode is Christ’s humanity; the setting of the wounded man on the beast is vicarious salvation; the inn is the church; and the two-pence, the life that now is, and that which is to come. All this laborious trifling would have been avoided, by simply attending to the context, which shows that the parable is a beautiful answer to the question, “Who is my neighbour?” (Luke x. 29—37.) No article of faith should be established from parables, allegories, or single figurative passages; such passages may, however, be used in illustration or confirmation of doctrinal statements.

PARACLETE. See COMPANION.

PARADISE. The original word pardes, rendered “orchard;” (Sol. Song iv. 13; Eccl. ii. 5;) “forest,” (Neh. ii. 8,) is from the Sanscrit paradesha = a region of surpassing beauty; and was used by the Hebrews, and also by the Persians, from whom they derived it, for a park, pleasure ground, place planted with trees, the king’s gardens. (Jos. Ant. vii. 4. 14; viii. 7. 3.) Hence the Seventy employ paradiseos = paradise, as a translation of the Hebrew gan, the garden of Eden. (Gen. ii. 8, 9, etc.) So John, drawing the imagery from the purity and holy enjoyment of Eden, applies the term to denote the Christian church, in which Jesus is designated “the Tree of Life.”
PAR

(Rev. ii. 7; xxii. ii. 14; compare Gen. iii. 22—24.) So also, in accordance with later Jewish usage, "paradise" is put for the abode of the blessed after death, Abraham’s bosom, heaven, where the spirits of the just dwell with God. (Luke xxiii. 43; 2 Cor. xii. 4; v. 8.)

PARAH = heifer-town. A place in the tribe of Benjamin. (Josh. xviii. 23.)

PARAN = region with caserns. An extensive desert region lying west of the Elanitic gulf or eastern arm of the Red sea, and the Arabah. This mountainous tract is composed of steep ridges running mostly from east to west, and is inhabited by nomadic tribes. (1 Kings xi. 18.) "The wilderness of Paran," in its widest sense, included also that of Zin, the Ghor, and the Arabah, south of the Dead Sea, between Mount Sinai, Idumea, and Palestine, extending not far distant from Carmel and Maon. (Gen. xxii. 11; Num. x. 12; xiii. 3, 26; xx. 1; Dent. i. 1; 1 Sam. xxv. 1.) The broad tract of mountains, on the eastern part next to the Arabah, is probably the ancient "Mount Paran." (Deut. xxxiii. 2; Hab. iii. 3.) This Paran has no connexion with the Faran or Feiran in the peninsula of Sinai. The "El-paran," margin, "plain of Paran," (Gen. xiv. 6,) was probably a noted terebinth tree on the borders of Edom.

—See ARABAH.

PARBAR. This Hebrew word designates the open porticos surrounding the courts of the temple, from which was the entrance to the chambers; (1 Chron. xxvi. 18;) it is also rendered "suburbo." (2 Kings xxiii. 11.)

PARCHED GROUND. The Hebrew word shurab, rendered "parched ground," signifies heat, and properly designates the sorab or mirage, an optical illusion which is common in the deserts of the East. This phenomenon, which presents the appearance of extensive lakes of pure water, is most tantalizing to the heated and thirsty traveller; and sometimes those who are acquainted with desert life have been painfully deceived by "the waters that fail" or "are not sure." The Hebrew prophet, referring to the blessings of Messiah’s reign, says, "And the shurab shall become a pool," i.e. the heated desert which presents only the appearance of a lake, shall be changed into real water—thirst instead of deception and mockery, there shall be peace and comfort to the disquieted soul. (Isa. xxxv. 7.) M. Monge, describing the mirage, as he saw it in Egypt, says: "Nothing could be conceived more lovely or picturesque than the landscape. In the tranquil surface of the lake, the trees and houses with which the islands were covered were strongly reflected with vivid and varied hues, and the party hastened forward to enjoy the refreshments apparently proffered them. But when they arrived, the lake on whose bosom they floated, the trees among whose foliage they arose, and the people who stood on the shore inviting their approach, had all vanished; and nothing remained but the uniform and irksome view of sand and sky, with a few naked huts and ragged Arabs. But for being undeceived by an actual prospect to the spot, one and all would have remained firm in the conviction that these visionary trees and lake had a real existence in the desert." The vapour of the atmosphere, and a rapid diminution in the temperature of the air above the highly-heated surface, combine to produce the illusion; stratum of air, of very different densities, intermingling, causing very irregular refraction. M. Monge attributed the liquid expanse, tantalizing the eye with an unfaithful representation of what was earnestly desired, to an inserted image of the cerulean sky, intermingled with the ground scenery. A phenomenon, in one respect analogous to the mirage, is occasionally seen in the air at sea. A remarkable instance was witnessed in the Baltic, where the English fleet, of nineteen sail, cruising off Gothland, was seen inserted in the air one foggy night. early in May, 1854, from the quarter-deck of H.M. screw-steamer Archer, Captain Heathcote, his officers and ship's company, stationed off the Isle of Osel, Gulf of Riga, distance from the fleet twenty-five or thirty miles.

PARCHEMENT.—See Book.

PARDON.—See Forgiveness, and JUSTIFICATION.

PARMASHTA = superior. One of the sons of Haman. (Est. ix. 9.)

PARMENOS = permanent. One of the deacons of the church of Jerusalem. (Acts vi. 5.)

PARNACH = to leap up, or delicate. A descendant of Zebulun. (Num. xxxiv. 25.)

PAROSH = a fowl. One whose descendants returned from Exile. ( Ezra ii. 8; x. 25; Neh. iii. 25.)

PARSHANDATHA = interpreter of the law? One of the sons of Haman. (Est. ix. 7.)

PARTHIANS. The inhabitants of Parthia, a part of the Scythian horse which settled in that part of Persia contiguous to Media. Parthia was raised into a distinct kingdom by Arsaces, r.c. 256. It soon extended itself over a great part of the ancient Persian empire; including the region east and south of the Caspian sea. (Acts ii. 9.) The Parthians long disputed with Rome for the dominion of the East; but were never subjugated by the Romans. The Parthians were esteemed the most expert horsemen and archers in the world; and the custom of discharging their arrows while in full flight, is frequently celebrated by the Roman poets. In a.d. 226, Artaxerxes founded a new dynasty, and united Parthia to his empire, and Persia resumed its former name and dynasty. The Persian language was spoken in Parthia.

PARTITION. In Eph. ii. 14, the "middle wall of partition," is a figurative reference to the wall in the temple which separated the court of Israel from the court of the Gentiles; denoting whatever in their laws and customs separated the Jews from the Gentiles, and rendered the former any more the objects of Divine favour than the latter, is now removed.

PARTRIDGE. The Hebrew word kara, rendered "partridge," is supposed to designate the Tetrao alector or Pterocles alector, the Arabic kabta, sometimes called "the pin-tailed grouse," which is very common in Palestine, and innumerable in Arabia. This large species of grouse fly in such large flocks that the Arab boys often kill two or three of them at a time, merely by throwing a stick among them. (1 Sam. xxvi. 20; Jer. xvii. 11.)

PARUAH = blossoming. The father of Jehoshaphat. (1 Kings iv. 17.)

PARVAIN = oriental regions. A country producing gold; which some regard as the same with Ophir. (2 Chron. iii. 6.)—See OPHIR.

PASACH = cut-off. A descendant of Asher. (1 Chron. vii. 33.)

PASDAMMIM.—See EPHRES-DAMMIM.

PASEAH = lame. 1. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 12.) 2. The father of Jehoiada. (Neh. iii. 6.) 3. One of the Nethinim. (Ezra ii. 49.) also called "Phaseah." (Neh. vii. 51.)

PASHUR = prosperity round about. 1. A son of Immer. (Jer. xx. 1, 2, 3.) 2. The son of Melchiah. (Jer. xxii. 1; xxxviii. 1.) 3. One whose posterity returned from the Exile. (Ezra ii. 88; x. 22; Neh. vii. 41; x. 8.)

PASSENGERS, VALLEY OF. A valley on the east of the sea of Galilee. (Ezek. xxxix. 11.)

PASSION. This word, in Acts i. 3, denotes the consummation of Christ's sufferings in His death. But the term "passions," in Acts xiv. 15; James v. 17, is used for the propensities, feelings, or susceptibilities of men.

PASSOVER. The Hebrew word pesahh, in Greek pascha, rendered "passover," properly signifies a passing over, sparing, deliverance from punishment and calamity; hence the name "passover," for the great sacrifice and festival instituted in commemortion of the immunity of the Hebrews when Jehovah destroyed the first-born of the Egyptians. (Ex. xii. 29.) The term “passover” is found in no less than three main significations:

1. The Paschal-lamb, or kid, which was to be selected on the tenth day of the first month, Abib or Nisan = April, and was to be a male, of the first year, without blemish. (Ex. xii. 3, 5, 21; Deut. xvi. 1, 2; Esth. iii. 7.) On the fourteenth day of the same month, the victim was to be killed, at a point of time designated “between the two evenings;” (Ex. xii. 6; Lev. xxii. 5; Num. ix. 3, 5;) or, “at evening about the going down of the sun;” (Deut. xvi. 6;) about the time of the daily evening sacrifice, (Ex. xxix. 39, 41; Num. xxviii. 4;) that is, in the interval between the ninth and eleventh hour, equivalent to between three and five o’clock in the afternoon, just before the fifteenth day of the month commenced. (2 Chron. xxx. 15, 17; xxxv. 1, 6, 7; Mark xiv. 12; Luke xxii. 7; 1 Chron. v. 7; Jos. Wars, vi. 9, 3; Ant. xiv. 4, 3.)

2. The Paschal, or Passover-meal was eaten the same evening, i.e. on the evening of the fourteenth day of Nisan, which was, according to the Hebrew mode of reckoning, the same evening after the fifteenth day had begun. The blood having been struck upon the door-posts; the flesh was to be eaten roasted, not raw nor sodden, with unleavened bread and bitter herbs. None of it was to remain until the morning, or to be carried out of the house; and not a bone was to be broken. It was to be eaten in haste, apparently standing, with the loins girded as for a journey, the shoes on the feet, and staff in hand; and no one was to go out of the door of the house until the morning. (Ex. xii. 1 -51; xxiv. 26; Num. xxviii. 3; Lev. xxiii. 5; Matt. xxvi. 17—19; Heb. xi. 28.) Some of these particulars were necessarily peculiar to the first passover as celebrated in Egypt. In our Saviour’s time the passover was eaten at leisure, each guest reclining at table in the Roman manner. (Mark xiv. 12—18; Luke xxi. 8—15; John xiii. 12.)

According to the Rabbins, four cups of red wine, usually mingled with one-fourth part of water, were drunk during the meal, and served to mark its progress. At the first cup, the master of the family opened the meal with a blessing. (Luke xxii. 17.) Then bitter herbs were brought in, dipped in vinegar or salt water, of which they tasted, until the proper paschal dishes were served. After this, the son inquired of the father the meaning of this celebration; the first part of the Hallel or song of praise was repeated, (Ps. cxiii.—cxiv.,) and the second cup was drunk. Then followed the blessing upon the khagigah = thank-offering or peace-offering; and finally the blessing upon the paschal lamb, which began the actual meal, in which they eat this or that, as they pleased, and at their leisure; partaking of the herbs, of the unleavened bread dipped in the sauce, of the flesh of the khagigah, and lastly of the paschal lamb; after which they eat nothing more. Next followed the giving of thanks over the third cup, called “the cup of blessing.” (Matt. xxvi. 27; 1 Cor. x. 16.) Upon this, the remainder of the Hallel was repeated; (Ps. cxv.—cxviii.;) and the fourth cup was drunk. The institution of the Lord’s supper seems to have taken place at the close of the proper meal, immediately before the third cup. (1 Cor. x. 16.)

3. The Paschal festival, comprising the whole period of the seven days of Unleavened bread. From Ex. xii. 17, 18; xxxiv. 25; Deut. xvi. 3, 4; Lev. xxiii. 6; Num. xxviii. 16, 17, it appears that the festival of unleavened bread began strictly with the passover-meal, at, or after, sunset, following the fourteenth day, and continued until sunset at the end of the twenty-first day. On the fourteenth day of Nisan, the Jews ceased from labour at or before mid-day; and had to put away all leaven, including, of course, fermented bread.
wine, out of their houses before noon.
(Ex. xii. 16; 1 Cor. v. 4—5.) Hence, in popular usage, the fourteenth day very naturally came to be reckoned as the beginning, or first day of the festival; (Matt. xxvi. 17; Mark xiv. 12; Jas. Ant. iii. 10; xi. 8; Wars, v. iii. 1.) and the passover thus often included the whole festival, both the paschal supper and the seven days of unleavened bread. (Num. xxxiii. 3; Josh. vi. 10, 11; 2 Chron. xxx. 22; John ii. 13; vi. 4; xi. 56; xiii. 1; xviii. 28; xix. 14; Luke xxii. 1; Acts xii. 3, 4; Jas. Ant. ii. i. 3; Wars v. iii. 1.)—See LEAVEN.

From Num. xxviii. 18—29, it appears, that on each of the seven days, besides the ordinary daily sacrifices, other sacrifices were offered; and that the first and last days of the festival were each a day of convocation and of rest; and hence were strictly Sabbaths, distinct from the weekly Sabbath, except when one of them happened to fall upon this latter. So also the morrow after this first day of rest, or Sabbath, that is, on the sixteenth day of Nisan—April, the first fruits of the harvest were offered, together with a lamb as a burnt-offering. (Lev. ii. 14—16; xxiii. 10—14.)

Another sacrifice, connected with the passover, was the _khagigah_—a festive thank-offering, or “peace-offering.” It was a voluntary sacrifice or “free-will offering,” made by private individuals, or families, in connection with the passover, but distinct from the appointed public offerings of the temple. The fat only was burned on the altar; (Lev. iii. 3, 9, 14;) the priest had for his portion the breast and right shoulder; (Lev. vii. 29—34; x. 14;) and the remainder was eaten by the bringer with his family and friends, in a festive manner, on the same or the next day. (Lev. vii. 16—18; xxii. 29—30; Deut. xii. 17, 18, 27; xxvii. 7.)

It is obvious that the passover, like the Sabbath, and other institutions, had a twofold reference—historical and typical. As a commemorative institution it was well designed to preserve, among the Hebrews, a grateful sense of their redemption from Egyptian bondage. As a typical institute, its object was to shadow forth the Divine sacrifice—“the Lamb of God.”—“even Christ, our Passover-lamb, who was sacrificed for us,” and thus obtained eternal redemption for us, (Ex. xii. 27; John i. 29; 1 Cor. v. 7; Heb. ix. 12; Rom. v. 8—11.)

On the question, whether our Lord did, on the evening before His crucifixion, partake of the ordinary and legal passover-meal, with his disciples, the testimony of the Evangelists seems decisive. Mark says expressly, “When they killed the passover,” (xiv. 12; compare Luke xxi. 7, 8, 15;) which marks the fourteenth day of Nisan, or Thursday, the ordinary time of killing the paschal-lamb, and shows that Jesus not only partook of the legal passover-meal, on the evening _after_ the fourteenth of Nisan, at the same time with all the Jews, but that He was crucified on the Friday, the fifteenth of the same month, the day before the Jewish weekly Sabbath. John does not expressly name the paschal supper of our Lord, yet he narrates His last meal with His disciples; which the attendant and subsequent circumstances show to have been the same with that which the other Evangelists describe as the passover. (John xiii. 1—30.) The early churches of Asia Minor, gathered chiefly from Jewish converts, continued the keeping of the passover on the evening after the fourteenth of Nisan, simultaneously with the Jews; and made this the central point of their celebration of our Lord’s passion and resurrection, on whatever day of the week it might occur. But the Western churches, formed mostly from Gentile converts, discarded the passover; and celebrated annually the resurrection of our Lord on a Sunday, and observed the preceding Friday as a day of penitence and fasting. These churches, took the ground, that the last meal of Jesus with His disciples was not the passover; since, as they supposed, according to John’s Gospel, Christ partook of it on the thirteenth of Nisan; while on the following day, which was the appointed time for the Jewish passover, He offered up Himself as the true sacrifice for mankind, of which the passover was the type. However, there is ample evidence that the churches of Asia Minor, among whom John had lived and taught, had no belief that his Gospel contained any thing respecting the last passover at variance with the testimony of the other Evangelists.

PASTOR: a shepherd. One who watches, defends, and feeds a flock. The term is also employed to denote a minister of God’s word, a pastor or shepherd appointed to watch over and feed the church of God. (Jer. ii. 8; iii. 15; x. 21; xii. 10; xxii. 29; xxxii. 1-3; Eph. iv. 11; 1 Pet. v. 1-4.) —See SHEPHERD.

PASTURE. The places of pasture, frequented by the early Hebrews, were chiefly uninhabited deserts or wildernesses; which were sometimes hilly ranges, abounding in herbage and shrubbery; sometimes sandy plains, in which were found rich and juicy pasturage during the moist seasons of the year. (1 Sam. xvii. 26; xxv. 4-15.) Such pasturage is better for sheep, goats, and camels, than rich meadows, which are necessary for kine. These tracts were waste lands or commons, which all had a right to use; though sometimes they were, as now, appropriated by certain tribes. The whole Land of Canaan was occupied as pasture ground, by Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; and their descendants, while in Egypt, do not appear to have relinquished their right. (Gen. xxii. 22; xxvi. 17-25; xxxvii. 1, 2, 18, 14; 1 Chron. iv. 22, 39, 40.) When the country became settled by the Hebrews, they had particular pastures connected with their farms. (1 Chron. xxvii. 29; Isa. lxv. 10; Mic. vii. 14.) The shepherds and herdsmen, in summer, migrated northward, to the hill country; in winter, southward, to the plains; thus not only avoiding the winter’s cold and the heat of summer, but finding ample sustenance for their cattle at both seasons.

PATARA = path of prayer. A large maritime city of Lycia, lying over against Rhodes; and celebrated for an oracle of Apollo. (Acts xxii. 1.) The ancient port of Patara is now entirely choked up; but extensive ruins mark the former magnificence of the place.

PATHROS = southern region. The domestic name for upper Egypt, distinguished from Mut or lower Egypt; and the same as the Thesaurus of the Greeks, and the Sa'id of the Arabs. Pathros is called the native land of the Egyptians; (Exod. xxxvii. 14; xxx. 14; Isa. xi. 11;) and the "Pathrusim" were descendants of Misraim. (Gen. x. 14; Jer. xliv. 1, 15.)

PATHRUSIM.—See PATHROS.

PATIENCE. When spoken of God, patience denotes His long-suffering and forbearance; (Rom. ii. 4; xv. 5;) it springs from His goodness and mercy. (Isa. xxx. 18; Hos. vi. 5; Rom. iii. 26; 2 Pet. iii. 9.) Patience, as a fruit of the Spirit, is enjoined upon us; and the practice of it, in our present state, is absolutely necessary. (Rom. xii. 12; Heb. x. 36.) Eminent examples of patience are presented for our encouragement; (Job. i. 22; Heb. xii. 1, 2;) and we are to remember, that all our our trials, from whatever source they may arise, are under the control of our heavenly Father, and, if borne with patience, will ultimately terminate in triumph. (Rom. ii. 7; James v. 7, 8, 11.)

PATMOS. A small sterile island in the Egean sea, forming one of the cluster of the Sporades; and situated about forty miles west from Ephesus. This island is about eighteen miles in circumference; and consists wholly of a huge conical rock, which appears to be of volcanic origin, thinly covered by a barren soil. It has neither trees nor rivers, but abounds in shrubs and flowering-plants; and a few walnuts and other fruit trees are grown in the orchards. Here the banished from the Roman provinces of Asia appear to have been sent; just as those from the Grecian provinces in Europe were sent to Gyarus or Gyara, which is in the midst of the Cyclades, and of the same character as Patmos. (Juven. Sat. x. 170.) And here, in the reign of Nero, about A.D. 66, John was exiled, "because of the word of God, and on account of the testimony of Jesus;" and here he wrote the book of Revelation. (Rev. i. 9.) The island is now called Patina and Patmos; and the population is estimated at about four thousand, who are all Greeks.

Patriarch. The father and founder of a family. (Heb. vii. 4.) The term is applied chiefly to the sons of Jacob, the heads of the twelve tribes; (Acts vii. 8, 9;) the "chief of the fathers," i.e. the patriarchs. (1 Chron. ix. 9; xxiv. 31; xxvii. 22; 2 Chron. xix. 9.) Also to David, as the head of a family, or founder of a dynasty. (Luke ii. 4; Acts ii. 29.)

Paterbas = foundation from the father. A Christian who dwelt at Rome. (Rom. xvi. 14.)

Pau = a beating, loving. A place in Idumea; (Gen. xxxvi. 39;) also written "Pal." (1 Chron. i. 50.)

Paul = asked for, desired. The Greek form of the Hebrew name, Saul, which the Apostle appears to have assumed, in accordance with the custom of the Jews. He was of the tribe of Benjamin, and of purely Hebrew descent; (Phil. iii. 5;) but was born at Tarsus, the capital of Cilicia, where his father, who belonged to the sect of the Pharisees, enjoyed the rights of Roman citizenship; (Acts xxii. 39; xxiii. 3; xxiii. 6;) a privilege which Paul inherited, and of which he several times availed himself during his ministerial career. (Acts xvi. 37; xxii. 27—29.) In Tarsus, Paul probably gained that general acquaintance with the national peculiarities of the Greeks, and with their literature, which appears in his writings, and which was so important to him as a teacher of the Gentiles. His Jewish education was completed at Jerusalem, where he devoted himself to the severest discipline of the Pharisaic school, under the instructions of the celebrated Rabbi Gamaliel. (Acts v. 34; xxii. 3.) According to Jewish custom, Paul acquired a trade, by which he afterwards often supported himself. The trade which Paul acquired, is called in Greek, skenopiois, which has been variously translated, a mechanist, a leather manufacturer, a tent-maker, and a tent-cloth-maker; perhaps the last answers best to the original word. (Acts xviii. 3; xx. 34.) Paul, in the fierceness of his Jewish zeal, was, at first, a bitter adversary of the Christians. When, through the views of Stephen, the eloquent and powerful advocate of the new religion, Christianity seemed to take a more hostile turn against the Pharisaic theology, Paul persecuted the advocates of the new faith with a degree of zeal bordering on madness. He was present at the stoning of Stephen, and consented to his death; (Acts vi. 9; vii. 58; xxii. 20;) and afterwards, armed with power from the Sanhedrin, he pursued the friends of Jesus to other cities, where he scourged them in the synagogues, and threatened them with death. (Acts viii. 1, 3; ix. 1, 2; xxii. 4, 19; xxvi. 10—12.) However, while on his way to Damascus, in A.D. 38, Paul perceived himself to be suddenly enveloped with a flaming light, which struck him so powerfully that, in terror, he fell to the ground. This supernatural revelation terminated in his conversion to the Christian faith, and from this period he became a new man. (Acts ix. 1—19; xxii. 5—16;) Being endowed with the gifts of the Holy Spirit; and having received from the lips of Christ himself his commission as an Apostle to the Gentiles, he now devoted all the powers of his ardent and energetic mind to the propagation of that gospel.
which he had so vehemently opposed, (Acts xxvi. 16; Gal. i. 1—16; 1 Cor. ix. 1; xv. 3—8.) After having obtained edification and strength in the society of the Christians at Damascus, he felt himself impelled to stand forth in the synagogues, and bear his testimony to the cause of Christ. (Acts ix. 19—22.) He then took a journey into the adjacent part of Arabia, and, after a stay of nearly two years, he returned to Damascus. When the Jews heard of his arrival in the city, they sought immediately to secure the man who could be so dangerous to Judaism; but through the kindness of friends he was enabled to elude their vigilance. This was in A.D. 41, three years after his conversion. (Gal. i. 18, 19; Acts ix. 23—25; 2 Cor. xi. 32, 33.) He then went up to Jerusalem, the first time after his conversion, where Barnabas introduced him to Peter and James, and other Christians. (Gal. i. 18, 19.) After a sojourn of about a fortnight in the Holy City, he was compelled, by the machinations of the Hellenistic Jews, with whom he had disputed, to fly to Cæsarea. He now returned to Tarsus, and spent some time in Cilicia. (Acts ix. 26—30; Gal. i. 21.) From Cilicia, in A.D. 43, Paul was summoned by Barnabas to co-operate with him in Antioch. After labouring a year in Antioch, Paul and Barnabas were sent to Jerusalem with contributions for the brethren who were suffering from the effects of a dearth. This was the Apostle’s second visit to Jerusalem, A.D. 44. (Acts xi. 25—30; Gal. ii. 2—10.) Having discharged this commission, they returned to Antioch; and afterwards were dispatched on the first great missionary tour, A.D. 45—49. (Acts xii. 25; xiii. 1—52; xiv. 1—28.) After some time, Paul and Barnabas were again deputed to visit Jerusalem, to consult the Apostles respecting circumcision. This was the Apostle’s third visit to Jerusalem, A.D. 51. The Apostle returned to Antioch. (Acts xv. 1—38; Gal. ii. 1.) Paul, accompanied by Silas, then entered upon a second missionary tour, A.D. 51. (Acts xv. 36—41.) After passing through Syria and Cilicia, he revisited Lystra, and was joined by Timothy. After passing through several regions; they came to Philippi in Macedonia; (Acts xvi. 1—40;) and finally to Berea, thence Paul retired to Athens, where he was soon afterwards joined by Timothy. (Acts xvii. 1—3; 1 Thess. iii. 1.) Afterwards Paul journeyed alone to Corinth, A.D. 52, whither Silas and Timothy, after a short visit to Macedonia, rejoined him. Here he abode for a year and a half, preaching the gospel, and supporting himself by his trade. (Acts xviii. 1—17.) Embarking at Cenchrea for Syria, Paul appears to have visited Crete, and left Titus behind him. Whether the ship, in which he embarked, purposely made this circuit, or whether he was cast upon the island of Crete, it is impossible to say. (Tit. i. 5.) The Apostle came to Ephesus, where he met with Apollos, who was on his way to Corinth, perhaps by way of Crete. (Acts xviii. 24—27; Tit. iii. 13.) Passing on to Cæsarea, Paul came the fourth time to Jerusalem, A.D. 58; and after a short stay, he went down to Antioch. (Acts xviii. 18—22.) After some time Paul entered upon a third missionary tour; and, passing through Phrygia and Galatia, he revisited Ephesus, A.D. 54. (Acts xviii. 23; xix. 1—41.) After spending three years in Ephesus, Paul then went into Macedonia, probably to Philippi, A.D. 57; whence he appears to have visited Illyricum. (Acts xx. 1—3; Rom. xiii. 19.) He then came to Greece, perhaps to Corinth; and after three months returned to Philippi. (Acts xx. 2, 3; 1 Cor. xvi. 5, 6.) Sailing from Philippi, he came to Troas; thence journeying to Assos, he proceeded by sea, and after calling at several intermediate ports, he landed at Tyre, and travelling by way of Ptolemais and Cæsarea, he arrived the fifth and the last time at Jerusalem, A.D. 58. (Acts xx. 6—38; xxii.
1-17.) As Paul regarded Christianity in its true light, as a universal religion, he endeavoured to break down the middle wall of separation between Jews and Gentiles, and to show that they were all “one in Christ;” in ardently pursuing this object, he exposed his own life to the prejudices of his countrymen. Hence, while in Jerusalem, he was seized by the Jews, and on their accusation was put in confinement by the Roman officers; and after being sent to Cesarea, where he was detained for two years or more, having himself appealed to the emperor, he was sent to Rome for trial, A.D. 61. (Acts xxvi. 26-40; xxii.-xxvi.) The voyage to Rome was long and disastrous, extending to nearly half a year. The ship was wrecked upon the coast of Malta; but no lives were lost. (Acts xxvii. 1-44; xxviii. 1-14.) Paul ultimately arrived in Rome in the spring of A.D. 62; where he remained in partial imprisonment two whole years. (Acts xxviii. 15-31.) Later writers have supposed that Paul was released from the two years’ imprisonment; and that, after other labours in the gospel, he visited Rome the second time, and being incarcerated again, was put to death, along with Peter, by order of Nero, about A.D. 66 or 67. But this view is merely an historical hypothesis, originally assumed for the purpose of explaining apparent difficulties in the Second Epistle of Timothy. However, of a second imprisonment of the Apostle at Rome authentic history knows nothing. The better opinion is that Paul was put to death in A.D. 64; at the close of his two years’ imprisonment. The confiscation of Rome commenced on the 19th of July; and it is not improbable that, in the terrible circumstances that followed, Paul suffered martyrdom. There is no evidence that Peter suffered with Paul in the Neronian persecution. Indeed, from the testimony of 1 Pet. iv. 16, 17, and 2 Pet. iii. 15, 16, it is evident that Peter wrote his Epistles some time after the death of Paul. There are fourteen Epistles in the New Testament ascribed to Paul, beginning with that to the Romans, and ending with that to the Hebrews. Though these Epistles often refer to transient circumstances and temporary relations, yet they everywhere bear the stamp of the richly furnished and cultivated mind of the Apostle, as purified, elevated, and sustained, by the influences of the Holy Spirit. Though these primitive documents of the Christian religion may contain “some things hard to be understood,” and some things, too, at which modern sceptics have taken objection; yet there is point in the shrewd remark of Arch. Whately: “There is good reason to believe that the chief objection to St. Paul’s writings is not from the things hard to be understood which they contain, but from the things easy to be understood, the doctrines so plainly taught by him.” Though several ancient Apocryphal productions are ascribed to Paul, several of which are still extant; yet we have no evidence that the Apostle wrote any Epistles, but those which are contained in the Canon.

PAVEMENT.—See GABBATHA.

PAVILION. The Hebrew word sukkah, signifies a hut, formed of green branches interwoven. It is rendered “booth;” (Gen. xxxiii. 17; Jon. iv. 5; Lev. xxiii. 40-48; Neh. viii. 16, 17;) “tabernacle;” (Lev. xxiii. 24; Deut. xvi. 18, 16; Isa. iv. 6;) “tent;” (2 Sam. xi. 11;) “pavilion,” margin, “tent;” (1 Kings xx. 12, 16;) also used poetically for the dwelling of Jehovah, His “pavilion” or “tabernacle.” (Ps. xviii. 11; Job xxxvi. 29.) The Hebrew word shappir, rendered “royal pavilion,” (Jer. xiii. 10,) is properly throne-ornament, tapestry, with which a throne is hung.

PEACE. Spiritual peace is the immediate fruit of justification; (Rom. v. i;) and is the gift of God through Christ. (2 Thess. iii. 16; Job xxxiv. 28.) “Perfect peace” is the privilege of the faithful. (Isa. xxvi. 8; xxxii. 581
PEA

17; lvii. 19; Pa. cxxix. 165; Prov. iii. 2; Phil. iv. 7; John xiv. 27; xvi. 38; Col. iii. 15.) The word “peace” is used generally for prosperity and happiness; as to “go in peace;” (Ex. iv. 18; Judg. xviii. 6; Mark v. 34; Luke vii. 50;) and to “die in peace.” (Gen. xv. 16; Isa. vii. 2; Luke ii. 29.) Also, “Grace to you and peace from God.” (Rom. i. 7; 1 Cor. i. 8; 2 Cor. i. 2; Gal. i. 3; Eph. i. 8; Phil. i. 2.) “Peace be with thee,” is still one of the most common forms of Oriental salutation. (Gen. xliii. 23; Judg. vi. 23; xix. 20; Ps. cxxii. 6, 7; Luke x. 5.)

PEACE-OFFERING. — See OFFERINGS.

PEACOCK. The Hebrew word tsukiyyim, corresponds to the Malabaric togei, the domestic name of peacocks in India. (1 Kings x. 22; 2 Chron. ix. 21.) The peacock is abundant in the jungles of India, and would be met with by navigators to the coasts, from Camboge to Ceylon, and could well bear a long sea voyage in the crowded ships of Solomon’s fleet. These elegant birds bear the cold of the Himalayas; they run with great swiftness, and where they are, serpents do not abound, as they devour the young with great avidity, and attack with spirit, and dispatch even serpents of considerable size. In Job xxxix. 13, the Hebrew word rendered “peacocks,” denotes the ostrich.

PEARLS. The Hebrew word qashîa, rendered “pearls,” denotes crystal; (Job xxvii. 18;) the word dar, rendered “white,” i.e. white marble, denotes a species of marble resembling pearl. (Est. i. 6.) Perhaps the reason why the pearl is not mentioned among the sacred ornaments was because it was not a gem, but an animal excrescence. (Ex. xxviii. 9—21.) In the new Testament maravrites is the Greek name for pearl. (Matt. xiii. 45, 46; 1 Tim. ii. 9; Rev. xvii. 4; xviii. 12, 16; xxii. 21.) In Matt. vii. 6, the term is used in a general sense for jewels, or anything precious and valuable. The Avicula, commonly termed the pearl oysters, furnish the pearls so highly prized as ornaments. It is supposed that the pearl is the result of some irritation, or malady, in the oyster, which causes it to excrete an unusual quantity of pearly matter—the same as the mother of pearl, which lines the shell—at one spot, with regularity in form, and occasionally of large size. The finest pearls are fished up in the Persian Gulf, and on the western coast of Ceylon, by a class of persons trained to the business of diving.—See BULLUM.

PEL

PEDAHEL = whom God preserves. A prince of the tribe of Naphthali. (Num. xxxiv. 28.)

PEDAHZIP = whom the rock preserves. A descendant of Manasseh. (Num. i. 10; ii. 20.)

PEDAIAH = whom Jehovah preserves. 1. The father-in-law of King Josiah. (2 Kings xxiii. 37.) 2. The father of Zerubbabel. (1 Chron. iii. 18.) 3. A descendant of Manasseh. (1 Chron. xxvii. 20.) 4. A son of Parosh. (Neh. iii. 25.) 5. A descendant of Benjamin. (Neh. xi. 7.) 6. A Levite who stood by the side of Ezra when he read the law. (Neh. viii. 4; xiii. 13.)

PEDIGREE. — See GENEALOGY.

PEKA = open-eyed. The officer who slew Pekah, king of Israel, and succeeded him on the throne. His reign, which lasted twenty years, B.C. 758—738, was highly insidious; the country was invaded by the Assyrians, and Pekah himself was assassinated by Hoshea. (2 Kings xv. 25—37; xvi. 1—5; 2 Chron. xxvii. 5, 6; Isa. vii. 1—9; viii. 6.)

PEKAIAH = Jehovah opened the eyes. The son and successor of Menahem, king of Israel. This idolatrous monarch was assassinated by Pekah, one of his officers, in his own palace at Samaria, after an undistinguished reign of about two years. B.C. 760—758.

PEKOD = visitation, i.e. punishment. This term is used allegorically as a name for Babylon. (Jer. 1. 21.)

PELAIAH = whom Jehovah dis-
PEL

1. A distinguished Levite. (Neh. viii. 7; x. 10.)
2. A son of Elinoeemi. (1 Chron. iii. 24.)

PELALIAH = whom Jehovah protects. One of the priests. (Neh. xi. 12.)

PELALIAH = whom Jehovah delivers. 1. A son of Hanani. (1 Chron. iii. 21.)
2. A son of Ishi. (1 Chron. iv. 42.)
3. The son of Benaiah. (Ezek. xi. 1-13.)

PELEL = division, part. The son of Eber, and fourth in descent from Shem. "In his days was the earth divided;" (Gen. x. 25; xi. 16-19; 1 Chron. i. 19.) whether this was an actual division of some parts of the earth by volcanic agency; or a political division of the earth, after the confusion at Babel, in which Peleg took an active part, we know not. (Gen. ix. 19; x. 22; Deut. xxxii. 8, 9.) Peleg is also called "Phalek." (Luke iii. 35.)

PELETH = deliverance. 1. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. ii. 47.)
2. One of David's distinguished officers. (1 Chron. xii. 3.)

PELETH = swiftness. 1. A descendant of Reuben. (Num. xvi. 1.)
2. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. ii. 33.)

PELETHITES = See Chere-thites, and Footmen.

PELICAN. The Hebrew word zôoah, rendered "pelican," (Isa. xi. 18; Deut. xiv. 7; Ps. ci. 6.) and "cormorant;" (Isa. xxxiv. 11; Zeph. i. 14, margin, "pelican") evidently refers to a water-fowl, also inhabiting deserts and ruined places. The pelican is a water-bird of singular construction and habits; living for the most part on the ocean, and seldom approaching land but at the season of incubation. As soon as this voracious bird perceives a fish, sufficiently near the surface, it darts down upon it with the swiftness of an arrow, seizes it with unerring certainty, and stores it up in the extensible pouch, which hangs from the lower jaw; it then rises again, though not without great labour, and continues hovering and fishing till its bag is filled, when it retires to land and greedily devours the fruits of its industry. Buckingham, when in the north of Syria, saw, floating silently down a stream, one of the largest pelicans he had ever beheld; when roused to fly, it displayed a breadth of wing which appeared at least nine feet across.

PELONITE. Apparently a native of a place called Pelon; (1 Chron. xi. 27, 36;) also read "Paltite." (2 Sam. xxiii. 28.)

PELUSIUM = See Sinn.

PEN. The ordinary pen, for writing on soft materials, was made of reed, calamus, hence a reed pen; (Judg. v. 14; Ps. cxxvi. 1; Jer. viii. 8; 3 John 13;) which is still used by the Orientals. The reed was split, and the point sharpened with a knife for the purpose. (Jer. xxxvi. 28.) Upon tablets of wax a metallic pen or stylus was employed. In engraving upon hard substances, such as stone, wood, or metallic plates, "an iron pen," or graver of iron or copper, or some other hard pointed instrument was employed. (Job xix. 24; Jer. xvii. 1. — See Ink.

PENIEL = face of God. A place on the north bank of the Jabbok, on the east of the Jordan, where Jacob wrestled with the angel on his return from Mesopotamia. (Gen. xxxiii. 30, 31.) Afterwards a town, called "Penuel," appears to have been built in this neighbourhood. (Judg. viii. 17; 1 Kings xii. 25.)

PENINNAH = coral. One of the wives of Elkanah. (1 Sam. i. 2, 4.)

PENNY. The term denarius, translated "penny," designates the principal silver coin among the Romans; called denarius, because it was equal to ten asses or assarions. At one period the value of the denarius was equal to eightpence halfpenny; but in later times it was reduced to seven pence halfpenny. The earlier denarius bore the symbols of the republic; the later, the image of the emperor—on the reverse, a chariot drawn by two or four horses, or other symbols. We give a copy of a denarius of Caesar Augustus. (Matt. xviii. 28; xx. 2, 9, 10, 18; xxii. 19—21; Mark vi. 37; xii. 15; xiv. 5; Luke vii. 41; x. 35; xii. 24; John vi. 7; xii. 5; Rev. vi. 6.)

PENTECOST = fiftieth. The Greek name of one of the three great Hebrew festivals; (Ex. xxxiv. 22;) so called because it occurred on the fiftieth day, or seven entire weeks, from the second day of the Passover. From this cycle of weeks—a week of weeks—the festival was called the "feast of weeks." (Ex. xxxiv. 22; Lev. xxiii. 15, 16; Deut. vi. 9, 10.) It was the festival of thanksgiving for the harvest. The harvest began directly after the Passover, and was now, on "the day of the first fruits," completed. (Num. xxviii. 26.) In later times it was also made to commemorate the giving of the law on Mount Sinai, on the fiftieth day after their coming out of Egypt. On the day of Pentecost, fifty days after the resurrection of our Lord, and ten days after His ascension, the Holy Spirit descended upon the Apostles and the Christian church. (Acts ii. 1—21; xx. 16; 1 Cor. xvi. 8.)

PENUELI.—See PENUELI.

PEOR = hibbitus, cleft. A mountain of the Moabites, near Beth-Peor. (Num. xxiii. 28; xxxv. 5; xxxi. 16; Deut. iv. 46; Josh. xiii. 17.)

PERAZIM.—See Ball-Peraizim.

PERES.—See Menah.

PERESH = excrement. A descendant of Manasseh. (1 Chron. v. 16.)

Perez = breach. One whose children were officers under David. (1 Chron. xxvii. 8.)

Perez-UzZah = breach of Uzzah. A place in the neighbourhood of Jerusalem, where Uzzah was visited for rashly handling the ark. (2 Sam. vi. 8; 1 Chron. iii. 11.)

PERF. PERFECTION. We are exhorted to acquire the perfection of Christianity, both in theory and practice. We are to be thoroughly instructed and experienced in divine principles; to be adults and not children in Christian knowledge. (1 Cor. ii. 6; xiv. 20; 2 Cor. iii. 9; Eph. iv. 18; Phil. iii. 15; Heb. v. 14.) We are to press onward to the attainment of the perfection of Christian life, by submission to the reign of the Holy Spirit, which brings the entire man into complete submission to the Divine will. (Rom. viii. 28.) In this sense the faithful may be said to "stand perfect and complete in all the will of God." (Col. ii. 10; iv. 12.) Having experienced that "the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth from all sin," they love the Lord their God supremely, and their neighbours as themselves. (1 John i. 7; Luke x. 27.) This is perfect love. (1 John ii. 5; iv. 17, 18.) The Saviour says to His disciples, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." (Matt. v. 48.) Not that we can ever attain to an equality, but taking Him as the only pattern of perfection we can advance towards a constancy. Just as it is said in the parallel passage, "Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father also is merciful." (Luke vi. 40.) So we are to be merciful in the same manner, though in the same degree it is utterly impossible, as we are but finite creatures, while he is the Infinite and Eternal. As creatures, we cannot reach any state that precludes the possibility of further improvement; inasmuch as we may love God supremely, yet that love may become stronger, and that delight increase for ever. The perfection of a Christian, considered in relation to that of His heavenly Father, may be likened to one of those mathematical lines that may draw nearer and nearer to another for all eternity, still remaining as infinite in their mutual distance as they are endless in their mutual approach, and everlasting in their asymptotic relation to one another. Our continual advancement towards Him may be illustrated by the recurring decimal fraction. Though we add figure after figure, in a continuing and never-ending series, and every additional figure brings it nearer to a certain value; and yet there is no possibility of its ever reaching that value. So the happy and the holy may continue to grow more like God, without the most distant possibility of attaining His glorious perfections. Nay, they may grow more like God throughout eternity, and, throughout eternity, remain at an infinite distance from the absolutely perfect object which he thus increasingly resembles. (Phil. iii. 12—16.) The ancient worthies, in the simplicity of their faith, were "perfect in their generation." (Gen. vi. 9; Job i. 1;) they followed the Lord fully.” (Num. xiv. 24.) As the term “perfect” is frequently applied to different individuals in the Scriptures, and the possession of the character so frequently enjoined, there can be no doubt, among those who know the Scriptures and the power of God, that perfection in the Scriptural sense of the term, is actually attainable, and ought to be an object of more anxious solicitude among Christians than it usually is. (Gen. xviii. 1; Luke vi. 40; Heb. vi. 1.)

PERFUME.—See INCENSE, and OINTMENT.

PERGA = lands end, extremity.
A city of Pamphylia, situated on the river Cestus, west of Staros. Col. Leake has established the site of Perga, at the spot called by the Turks Eski-Kalesi, where are extensive remains of vaulted and ruined buildings. Paul and Barnabas visited Perga. (Acts xiii. 13; xiv. 25.)

PERGAMOS = place of nuptials.
A celebrated city of Mysia, and capital of the once powerful kingdom of Pergamus; situated on the north bank of the river Caicus, about fifty miles northward of Smyrna. The kings of Pergamos, who were of the family of Attalus, collected here a noble library of 200,000 volumes, which, after the subjection of the kingdom to the Romans, was given by M. Antony to Cleopatra, and added to the library at Alexandria. Here also, the art of preparing skins for manuscripts was brought to perfection; hence the Latin name pergamentus for parchment. At Pergamos was also a temple of Asclepius, and the city was characterized as the place “where Satan’s seat is.” And here also was slain Antipas, the “faithful martyr.” (Rev. ii. 12—17.) The modern town, called Bergamo, consists of small and mean wooden houses, among which appear the remains of early Christian churches; also splendid Corinthian and Ionic columns and capitals, the cornices and pediments, all in the highest style of ornament, thrown into unsightly heaps. The population, Turks and Christians, is generally estimated at about fifteen thousand.

PERIDA.—See PERUDA.

PERIZZITES = countrymen, rustics. A Canaanish tribe, living in the mountainous regions, which they afterwards yielded to Ephraim and Judah. (Josh. xi. 3; xvii. 15; Ex. xxxii. 23.) The remains of those tribes which the Hebrews had not subdued, were rendered tributary by Solomon. (1 Kings xix. 20, 21; 2 Chron. viii. 7; Ezra ix. 1.)

PERJURY.—See OATH.

PERSECUTION. The Greek word dioko, rendered persecute, signifies to cause to flee, hence to pursue with malignity, to persecute by the infliction of pain or penalty on account of religion. (Matt. v. 10—12; x. 23; xiii. 21; xxiii. 34; Mark iv. 17; Acts vii. 52; viii. 1; xiii. 50; Gal. i. 13.) Hence the term “persecution” is generally used to signify the sufferings of Christians on account of their religion. (Mark x. 80; Rom. viii. 35; 2 Thess. i. 4; 1 Pet. iii. 14.) Persecution generally has its origin in a mistake as to the limits of human responsibility. We can scarcely believe that persecution has never germinated except in the corrupt soil of fanaticism, which has been defined "enthusiasm inflamed by hatred." It arises from the absurd supposition that one man has a right to judge for another in religious matters. While persecution has been practised by Pagans; (1 Kings xviii. 18; Dan. vi. 12—17;) and Jews; (Acts iv. 3; viii. 58;) it has occasionally tarnished the Christian name; and has, if we mistake not, sometimes taken root by the side of many of the best attributes of human nature. It has been the error, not only of gloomy monks, and sour ascetics, but also of men of sincere piety, and even of general philanthropy. So Paul was zealous towards God; yet he persecuted the Christians even unto the death, thinking within himself that he was doing God service. (John xvi. 2; Acts xxii. 3, 5; xxvi. 9.) When individuals had once taken it for granted, that they were responsible for the correctness of the religious or political opinions of their fellow-men—that is, that God would hold them guilty if their fellow men believed error, and that, therefore, they were at liberty to use all the physical power which God had placed in their hands, to propagate truth, and to arrest the progress of error, persecution followed of course. It would then require no exercise of the malignant emotions, to kindle the fire or erect the gibbet. Persecution unto death would be the calm dictate of religious duty; nay, it might, in such circumstances, co-exist with genuine benevolence. And to the sufferer himself, it would be an additional aggravation, to reflect that the sacrifice of his inalienable rights, was justified on the ground of eternal justice and illimitable love. But, blessed be God, we are not responsible for the opinions of our fellow-men. We are responsible only for the setting before their understanding and conscience what we believe to be the truth. The responsibility then rests solely with themselves. Whatever be our physical power, we are for-hidden to use it in such a manner as to infringe the smallest right of our neighbour, for the purpose of accomplishing either this or any other good whatsoever. God has made known His will to men, and He has commanded them as ambassadors not as executioners, to make it known to each other. If they obey His commands, well. If they obey not, He reserves to Himself the right of trying the offender, of passing sentence upon him, and of executing judgment. This, and all of this, is, solely, His prerogative. The moment we assume it, we usurp His authority, and while we profess to obey Him, are claiming for ourselves dominion over the universe. "Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? To his own master he standeth or falleth." (Rom. xiv. 4.)

PERSEVERANCE. Whether true believers necessarily persevere to the end of life, or whether they may fall from their faith, and forfeit their state of grace, is a question in which we are not left in doubt. The Scriptures decidedly teach, that the regenerate may lose true justifying faith, forfeit the state of grace, in which they are placed by the operation of the Holy Spirit, and die in their sins. Indeed, the nature of the present state of man, which is a state of probation or trial, must necessarily imply it. The Scriptures, in the various exhortations to faithful perseverance, and in the multiplied warnings against defection from the faith, evidently teach that apostacy from the highest degrees of grace is possible; and that those who stand high in the favour of God may sin against Him, lose His favour, and perish everlastingly. "Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." (Ezek. xxxiii. 13; Matt. 1. 22; xxiv. 42, 46; Luke xii. 48; I Cor. x. 11, 12; Eph. vi. 18; Heb. vi. 5, 6; x. 29; Rev. ii. 10.)

PERSIA = SPlendid or pure region. A region of middle Asia, which still lies within the boundaries which we find assigned to it by the ancients.
On the east it adjoins Karamania; on the north Mount Apriasis separates it from Irak-Adjem, or southern Media; on the south it is bounded by Laristan and the Persian Gulf; and on the west it is divided by the Baktiara mountains from Khusistan, the ancient Susiana. (2 Chron. xxxvi.
20, 22, 23; Ezra i. 1, 2; Neh. xii. 22; Dan. vi. 12, 15.) In the plain of Merdusht, or Persepolis, which is eighteen or nineteen leagues in length, and from three to six in breadth, there reigns a perpetual spring. It nourishes the finest horses and cattle in Persia, and the fruits which it produces are exceeded only by those of the valley of Shiraz. In the northern part of Persistan, the mountains, which are a branch of the chain of Taurus, are higher and more rugged, and clothed with snow; though they comprise several fertile valleys, yet, being on the whole ill adapted for tillage, they are generally inhabited by nomadic tribes. This mountain territory was the original seat of some of the Persian tribes, perhaps a branch of the Median family; while the Elamites, other Persian tribes descended from Elam, and incorporated with them, inhabited the modern Khusistan.
The nature of the country, the mountains of Elam, the sandy plains of Eastern Persia, and the fertile banks of the Elwend, suggest the probability that this country would be occupied by tribes of different habits and characters from a very early period of history. (Gen. xiv. 1; Jer. xlix. 34, 39.) These several tribes appear to have finally merged into the ancient Persian empire; which, after a while, was subjected by the Medes. After the Persians had been in subjection to the Medes for a num-mer of years, Cyrus elevated the Persian dynasty, and finally united the kingdoms of the Medes and Persians about B.C. 536, and the whole country, from Egypt to the Ganges, became incorporated in what was called the Persian empire. The kings after Cyrus were Cambyses, B.C. 529;
Smerdis, the magian, B.C. 522; Darius
Hystaspis, B.C. 521; Xerxes, B.C. 485;
Artaxerxes Longimanus, B.C. 464;
Xerxes II., B.C. 424; Sogdianus, B.C.
423; Darius Nothus, B.C. 423; Artaxerxes Memon, B.C. 404; Artaxer-exes Ochus, B.C. 364; Arsaces, B.C. 338; and Darius Codomanus, B.C. 335.
After the Persian empire had existed upwards of two centuries it shared the fate that befell the surrounding nations, being swallowed up in the conquests of Alexander the Great, B.C. 336, and its numerous provinces were afterwards shared among his generals.
After some time the Parthians revolted, and established a powerful empire. Of the monuments and remains of ancient Persia, none can at all compare in extent with the ruins of Persepolis, in the plain of Mer-dusht, about thirty-five miles north-ext to Shiraz. The modern name of the ruins is Taht-i-Jemshid = Structure of Jemshid; or Chehil Minar =
Forty Pillars. According to Mr.
Layard, the style of the Persepolitan monuments is manifestly a descendant of the later Assyrian. There is a great similarity of shape in the ornaments, and in the costume of many of the figures. The head-dress of the winged monsters is squared and richly ornamented at the top, and is all but identical with that in the later monuments at Khorsabad and Kouyunjik, while it differs from the round unorn-amented cap of the older Assyrian sculpture of Nimrud. M. Lassen and Col. Rawlinson have been able to read many of the cuneiform inscriptions on the monuments. The sum of the evidence seems to be that all the most important works, now remaining at Persepolis, are due to Darius Hystaspis and Xerxes. It is not too much to expect that excavations on the site of Pasargada, or around and within the terraced buildings of Perse-polis, may some day supply us with fresh tablets, extending our acquaintance, both with the ancient lan-and the history of Persia.—F RUS.
PERSIS = pure, splendid. A Christian at Rome, whom Paul salutes. (Rom. xvi. 12.)

PERUDA = kernel. One whose posterity returned from the Exile, (Ezra ii. 55;) also called "Perida. (Neh. vii. 57.)

PESTILENCE.—See Plague.

PETE = a rock, a projecting rock, cliff. The Greek form or translation of the Syro-Chaldaic "Cephas," the surname given by our Lord to Simon, one of His Apostles. (Matt. xvi. 16; Luke vi. 14; John i. 42; 1 Cor. i. xii.; iii. 22; ix. 5; xv. 5; Gal. ii. 9.) Simon, also called Bar-jona = son of Jona. (Matt. xvi. 17; John i. 42.) was a resident of Bethsaida; (John i. 44;) and he with his brother, Andrew, followed the occupation of fishermen on the Lake of Galilee. (Matt. iv. 18 —20; Mark i. 16—18; Luke v. 1—11.) The brothers, before our Lord called them to be "fishers of men," were probably disciples of John the Baptist. (John i. 35—42.) At the time when Peter was called to the Apostleship, he was married, and seems to have removed, in consequence, to Ca- pernaum. (Matt. viii. 14; Mark i. 21, 29, 30; Luke iv. 38.) Peter, though specially honoured with his Master's intimacy, (Mark v. 37; Luke viii. 51; ix. 28; Matt. xxvi. 36—56,) was evidently a man of ardent but unequal temperament, which is evinced by his expressing at one time unbounded devotedness to Jesus, and then denying Him, and his subsequent penitence and grief. (Matt. xxvi. 33—55.) Peter was honoured in being the first to preach the gospel directly to the Gentiles. (Acts x. 34, 45; xv. 7, 14.) When put in prison by Herod Agrippa, he was miraculously delivered by an angel. (Acts xii. 1 —19.) Some time afterwards, when Peter was at Antioch, through fear of the Christians from Jerusalem, he wavered in respect to the introduction of Jewish ceremonies among the Gentiles, for which he was openly reproved by Paul. (Gal. ii. 7—21.) If Peter ever visited any of the provinces of Asia Minor, it was probably about the same time that he visited Antioch. Afterwards Peter met the Apostles and elders at Jerusalem; (Acts xv. 7—11;) henceforward his name appears no further in the Acts of the Apostles, as he appears to have gone abroad, probably into the Parthian empire; and his first Epistle was written from Babylon, at that period a principal city of the Parthians. (1 Pet. v. 13.) From John xxi. 17—19, we have reason to infer that Peter died a martyr for the sake of Christ; probably in Babylon, about A.D. 68.

The assertion of the Romanists that Peter was constituted by Jesus to be the official head of the church universal, is not supported by the passage in Matt. xvi. 16—18: "And Simon Peter said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou Simon, son of Jona; for flesh and blood hath not revealed this truth unto thee, but my Father who is in heaven. Moreover, I also say to thee, as certainly as thou art Peter, so, upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." It is to be observed that the Greek name, "Petos = Peter," is in the masculine, while the words τάστε πέτρα = "this rock," are in the feminine gender. Now this is decisive against the "rock" designating Peter. It can only designate the glorious truth revealed unto Peter by the Father. Here, then, in the fact—that Christ is God incarnate—which is the doctrine of Peter's confession, we have the "rock" whereon the church is founded. This glorious truth was Divinely revealed to Peter, as it is to all believers; for "no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." (1 Cor. xii. 3; 1 Pet. ii. 4, 6, 8; Dan. ii. 34, 35; Ps. cxviii. 22; Is. xxviii. 16; Eph. ii. 20.) The Deity of Christ is also called the "Rock," the true foundation; and His humanity may be called the foundation-stone—the chief corner stone—based upon the rock of His Divine supremacy, on which rests the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets. Against the church, which is "God's building," built upon the "rock," of Christ's supremacy, (1 Cor. x. 4,) the gates of hell, whether designating death itself; or the hosts of Satan, i.e., Jewish and Pagan, or Arian and Romish adversaries—who alike trample upon Christ's supremacy—shall not prevail.

We have no evidence whatever that Peter, in his character as one of the disciples of Christ, was superior to any other disciple. He was no more "a foundation of the church" than the rest of his brethren. (Gal. ii. 9; Rev. xxi. 14.) Even "the keys of the kingdom of heaven" being given to Peter merely signify that he should be the first instrument of opening the door of the gospel to Jew and to Gentile, and of binding or closing up the ancient dispensation. (Acts ii. 41; x. 44—47; xi. 1; xv. 7.) Indeed, the power of binding and loosing is conferred equally upon all the disciples. (Matt. xxviii. 18; compare Matt. xvii. 18; John xx. 23; 1 Cor. v. 4, 5.) Peter even calls himself "an elder," properly "a co-elder," (1 Pet. v. 1,) and writes of himself as "one of the Apostles." (2 Pet. i. 23.) And as "a servant of God" he was required to "feed the lambs," for so the Greek word bothe signified, not to rule, as some suppose. (John xxli. 15; 1 Pet. v. 2, 3.)

We have no evidence from Scripture that Peter ever visited Rome; and the tradition of his journey to that city, and of his being put to death with Paul in the Neroian persecution, is destitute of historical foundation. From the Acts of the Apostles we learn that Peter had not left Judea previously to his imprisonment by order of Herod Agrippa, after the martyrdom of James; (Gal. i. 18; ii. 9,) at the Passover in A.D. 44. (Acts xii. 8; Jos. Ant. xviii. 6; xix. 8. 2.) After his deliverance from prison, he went into another place; but was at Jerusalem towards the latter end of A.D. 46; and at Antioch, in all probability, at the beginning of A.D. 46. (Gal. ii. 11.) Peter probably visited some of the provinces of Asia, during the years A.D. 46 and 47, for at the commencement of A.D. 49, he was again at Jerusalem. (Acts xv. 7.) As Peter during the years 44—49, was preaching the gospel in Palestine and Asia Minor, he had not yet visited Rome. Even so late as A.D. 58 or A.D. 59, when the Epistle to the Romans was written, it is certain that Peter had never been at Rome; for if Peter was at Rome when Paul wrote, how could the latter fail to send a salutation to him as well as to others? (Rom. i. 11—16; xx. 20—24.) A considerable portion of the church in the imperial city consisted of Jewish converts, (Rom. ii. 17—29,) gathered, perhaps, by Aquila and Priscilla; (Acts xviii. 1—4;) also by Andronicus and Junia. (Rom. xvi. 3—11.) And when Paul came as a prisoner to Rome, about A.D. 62, Peter had not as yet visited that city, inasmuch as there seems among the faithful to have been no knowledge of Peter. (Acts xxvii. 17—22.) Paul, while suffering imprisonment in Rome, wrote several Epistles to other churches, but never hints that Peter was in the imperial city. Hence, if Peter was never at Rome, and such a visit is destitute of historical evidence, the assertion of the Romanists for his supremacy falls to the ground. Yet, as there are several years of Peter's life, concerning which we have no information; and, as we have seen, he could not have spent them in Rome, he must have spent them in the East, mainly among the Parthians in Babylonia, whence he addressed his Epistles. As Peter's Epistles are addressed to Gentile churches, chiefly founded by Paul and his companions, it would appear that Paul had already suffered martyrdom. (1 Pet. i. 1—18; ii. 9; iv. 8.) Indeed, the second Epistle plainly assumes the death of Paul, anti the collection of his Epistles. (2 Pet. iii. 14—16.) It may be remarked that Cyprian is the first Father who designates the Roman chair the "Chair of Peter." (Ep. 55. A.D. 258.) But the first Pope whose arrogance prompted him to claim the distinction of being the successor of Peter, was Stephen, A.D. 258—259. (Epist. Cypr. 75.)
PET

PETE, Epistles of. We have two Epistles attributed to Peter by the common consent of the Christian church. The genuineness of the First is firmly established; and is referred to by Irenaeus, Clement of Alexandria, Tertullian, Origen, and Eusebius. It was written in a time of violent persecution; and was addressed to the churches, consisting principally of Gentiles, resident in the province, enumerated in the introductory verses, which had been chiefly founded by Paul and his companions. (1 Pet. i. 1, 12, 14, 18; ii. 10—13; iii. 18—17; iv. 3, 17.)

It was written from Babylon, which at that time belonged to the Parthians, and contained an extensive colony of Jews. (Jos. Ant. xx. 3, 3, 1; xviii. 9, 1.) about A.D. 65, about a year after the conflagration of Rome; and consequently after the death of Paul. That it cannot have been written before that period, is proved by a comparison of 1 Pet. i. 3, with Eph. i. 8; of 1 Pet. i. 1, with Col. iii. 8; of 1 Pet. ii. 13, with Rom. xiii. 1—4; of 1 Pet. iv. 9, with Phil. ii. 14, etc.; showing that Peter, when he wrote it, was already acquainted with the Epistles of Paul to the Romans, Colossians, Ephesians, and Philippians.

The Second Epistle of Peter has been classed among the antilegomena, or books whose authority was for some time disputed; but since the fourth century it has been generally received. Writers like Olahausen are mistaken, who conclude that the Second Epistle of Peter was unknown to the teachers of the primitive church, because they do not make quotations from it in their writings. We know that certain teachers in the early churches were led by various considerations to attack the authority of a Book or an Epistle. However, this Epistle was recognised by the council of Hippo, A.D. 383; and is quoted as genuine by Firmianus, bishop of Cesarea in Cappadocia; by Hippolytus, Bishop of Pontus; and by Methodius, bishop of Tyre. It is not improbable that Peter had read the Epistle of Jude when he wrote this Epistle; and that the thoughts and dictions had made a strong impression upon his mind. This Epistle was also written from Babylon, probably in A.D. 66; evidently when Peter expected his approaching death. (2 Pet. i. 14, 15.) It was evidently written some time after the death of Paul; as 2 Peter ii. 15, 16, attributes a collection of the Pauline Epistles, applying to them the term "Scriptures," even when Peter wrote. This Epistle was addressed to the same churches as the former one; its general design being to confirm the doctrines which had been delivered in that, and to exalt the Christian converts to a course of conduct becoming in every respect their high profession of attachment to Christ. Several Apocryphal documents are ascribed to Peter, some of which are extant; but we have no evidence of anything authentic but the two canonical Epistles.

PETAHIAH = whom Jehovah sets free. 1. The head of the nineteenth course in David's division of the priests. (1 Chron. xxiv. 16.) 2. One of the Levites. ( Ezra x. 28; Neh. ix. 5.) 3. A descendant of Judah. (Neh. xi. 24.)

PETHOR = table? A place in Mesopotamia, where Balaam dwelt. (Num. xxii. 5; Deut. xxiii. 4.)

PETHUEL = engraving of God. The father of the prophet Joel. (Joel i. 1.)

PETRA.—See SHEA.

PEULTHAI = wages of Jehovah. A son of Obededom. (1 Chron. xxvi. 5.)

PHALEC.—See PLING.

PHALLU.—See PALLU.

PHALTI.—See PALTIEL.
PHALTIEL = deliverance of God. A son of Leish; (2 Sam. iii. 16) also called “Phalit”; (1 Sam. xxv. 44.)

PHANUEL = face of God. The father of Anna. (Luke ii. 36.)

PHARAOH = the king. The common title of the ancient Egyptian kings in the old Testament, and also on the ancient monuments, down to the conquest of the country by the Persians; after which the name Ptolemy was used. (Jos. Ant. viii. 6. 2.) In the old Testament Pharaoh is often used as if it were a proper name; sometimes with the words, “king of Egypt,” added; (Gen. xii. 15; xxxvii. 36; xl. 1; xli. 1; Isa. xix. 11; xxx. 2; Sol. Song i. 9; 1 Kings iii. 1; 2 Kings xvii. 7; xviii. 21;) occasionally the more specific name of the monarch is subjoined, as Pharaoh Necho, Pharaoh Hophra. (2 Kings xxii. 29—34; Jer. xlv. 30.) The Egyptian title Pharaoh = Pharaoh, is simply the word ra with the article p or ph prefixed, signifying the sun. And as the Pharaohs, in their arrogance, claimed divine honours, each monarch was designated the incarnation of the sun. On the ancient monuments, the name and inaugural titles of each monarch are generally represented in two cartouches or ovals, surmounted by hieroglyphic symbols. Over the name of the king is often found the annexed symbols—a goose, called se, and a disc, representing the sun, called ra, signifying “son of the sun.” The practice of the Oriental kings, associating the idea of their own dignity with the splendour of the sun, appears to have been derived from the custom of each of the Pharaohs calling himself “son of the sun.” Over the cartel or oval containing the pronomen or title the annexed symbols frequently occur—a bee and a reed, signifying king, sovereign, or majesty; while the two characters underneath designate upper and lower Egypt. The following are the Pharaohs mentioned in the Scriptures; and we give, what we suppose to be, the approximate date of the reign of each; observing that the latest scholars, as Osburn, Lepsius, and Bunsen, differ, in some cases centuries, from each other.

1. Pharaoh, in the time of Abraham; (Gen. xii. 14—20;) perhaps the same as Osirteesen I., who reigned about B.C. 1920. We give at the head of the article the cartels containing his name and title, as they stand upon the monuments. We also arrange the cartels or cartouches with the English letters under the hieroglyphics:

\[\text{Osirtesen}\]

The pronomen or title of Osirteesen is \[\text{Ra to ka;}\]

the first character is the symbol of the sun, the second of the world; and the third of offerings, signifying sun, i.e. Pharaoh offering the world.

2. Pharaoh, in the time of Jacob and Joseph; (Gen. xxxvii. 8; xli. 1—46; xlii. 15; Acts vii. 10—18;) probably Amunmai-Thor III., who reigned about B.C. 1715. His name, thus written on the monuments, signifies beloved of Amun, victorious.

\[\text{Aumma t e r,}\]

3. Pharaoh, of the dynasty which knew not Joseph. (Ex. i. 8; Acts vii. 18.) He was probably the same. as Amosis or Amon, the founder of the eighteenth dynasty. He reigned about B.C. 1630. This name is written and it is surmounted by the hieroglyphic symbols which read "\text{r\^\text{n} n\^\text{t} n\^\text{t} \,}" signifying "sun," i.e. Amon, existing lord of upper and lower Egypt.

\[ \text{Amos} \]

This is surmounted with the hieroglyphs which read "n\^\text{t} n\^\text{t} \," lord of the countries.

4. \text{Pharaoh}, under whom Moses was born, appears to have been either Amonophis I., or Thothmosis I.; probably the Hebrew legislator was born in the early part of the reign of the latter, about B.C. 1671. (Ex. ii. 5—10; Acts vii. 20, 21; Heb. xi. 23.)

5. \text{Pharaoh}, who reigned when Moses fled from Egypt; probably Thothmosis or Thothmosis II., about B.C. 1531. (Ex. ii. 11, 16; Acts vii. 23—29; Heb. xi. 24—27.) Under the succeeding reign of Thothmosis III., the Hebrews continued to be sorely oppressed.

6. \text{Pharaoh}, in whose reign the Hebrews left Egypt, appears to have been Amonophis or Amunhotph II., who reigned B.C. 1491. His name is written and signifies dedicated to Amon. (Ex. iii. 10; xv. 28; Rom. ix. 17; Ps. cxxxvi. 15.) Bunsen and Lepsius place the Exodus about B.C. 1210; and the former scholar, strangely enough, allows an interval of 1440 years to elapse between the descent of the Hebrews into Egypt and the Exodus.

\[ \text{Amonhotph} \]

7. \text{Pharaoh}, in the time of David, probably Amonophthis; (1 Kings xi. 19—21;) who reigned about B.C. 1060.

8. \text{Pharaoh}, the father-in-law of Solomon; probably Oschor, who reigned about B.C. 1013. (1 Kings iii. 1; viii. 8; ix. 16, 24.) The other Egyptian Pharaohs, mentioned in the Scriptures, are referred to in this work under their proper names.—See \text{Shishak}.

\text{PHAREZ} = \text{a branch.} A son of Judah and Tamar; (Gen. xxxviii. 29; xlvii. 12;) also written "Phares." (Matt. i. 3; Luke iii. 33.) His descendants were called "Pharzites." (Num. xxxvi. 26, 27.)

\text{PHARISEES} = \text{the Separate.} A powerful sect which arose among the Jews after the Exile. (Jos. Ant. xiii. 10, 5, 6.) The Pharisees were in general opposed to the Sadducees. They were rigid interpreters of the Mosaic law; but often violated the spirit of it by their traditions. (Matt. v. 20 sq.; xii. 2; xix. 3; xxii. 13 sq.) They also attributed equal authority to the traditional law; (Matt. ix. 11; xii. 2; Mark, vi. 8; Luke, xviii. 11; Jos. Ant. xvii. 2. 4; b.) and professed sanctity and adherence to the external ascetic forms of piety. (Jos. Ant. xiii. 10, 5, 6; xvi. 2. 4; Wars, i. 5, 2.) They believed with the Stoics, that all events were controlled by fate; but yet did not fully exclude the liberty of the human will. They held to the separate existence of spirits and of the soul, and believed in the resurrection of the body; (Acts xxiii. 8;) and some of them held that the soul of the just pass into other human bodies. (Jos. Wars ii. 8, 14; Ant. 8. 1. 2.) Jesus frequently denounced the Pharisees for their hypocrisy and profligacy; (Matt. xxiii. 13; Luke xvi. 14;) hence they became almost universally His bitter enemies. Yet there were doubtless men of probity and even of piety amongst them; e.g. Gamaliel; (Acts v. 34;) Simeon; (Luke ii. 25;) Joseph of Arimathea; (Luke xxii. 51;) Nicodemus (John vii. 50; xix. 38.) The two leading parties of the Pharisees were the followers of the celebrated Rabbins Hil-
PHA

Iel and Shammai, the former representing a moderate Pharisaism, the latter "the straitest sect." (Acts xxvi. 5.)

PHAROSH.—See Parosh.

PHARPAR = swift. A stream which rises on the eastern slope of Hermon, and waters the plain or territory of Damascus, but does not come near the city. (2 Kings v. 12.) The stream called the Awaj = the crooked, is now generally identified with the Pharpar, the second river of the plain of Damascus. In 1852, the sources of this river were carefully examined by the Rev. J. L. Porter. He says the sources of the north and principal branch is a number of small fountains, in the bosom of a valley on the eastern slope of Hermon, whose waters unite beside the valley of Aurneh, about half a mile below, and form a considerable stream called the nahr or river Aurneh, which, flowing in an easterly direction, enters the plain, and winding like a serpent, crosses it to Sara. The second great tributary of the river Awaj is a stream which rises at Beit Jenn, at the southeastern end of Hermon, at an elevation of only a few feet from the plain. The Wady Beit Jenn is separated from the Wady Aurneh by a lofty spur of the mountain. The fine stream rushes down the Wady Beit Jenn, whose banks are lined with walnut and poplar trees. Fifteen minutes below Beit Jenn, a fountain springs up on the right bank of the rivulet, whose waters about equal those that flow down from the village. The two streams form the nahr Jennany. Twenty minutes below the fountain the river enters the plain, running in a deep channel; and being joined by the stream from the fountain of Menbej, pursues its winding course across the plain to Sara, where it is joined by the river Aurneh, sometimes called the Sabirany. Sara, a fortified town, nearly thirty miles from Damascus, may be regarded as the point of union for all the tributaries of the Awaj. The river, full grown, begins its meanderings across the vast plain, in a general direction north-east towards Damascus; then turning and flowing in a serpentine course to Keseweh, which it approaches from the west, where, flowing in a deep and tortuous channel, fringed with willows and poplars, it makes a graceful curve northward round the base of the hill, pursuing its course through the meadows of the vale to Nejha. After flowing through the low parallel ranges of Jebel-Aswad and Jebel Mania it bends towards the north-east, and meanders across the plain on its way to the marshy lake Hijaneh, which it enters at its north-eastern angle. The lake Hijaneh is one of the three Lakes, some sixteen or eighteen miles east of Damascus. This Lake rarely dries up completely; and it never meets the south Lake, for there is high ground between them at least an hour in breadth. Though the east and south Lakes, into which the Barada = "Abana" flows, occasionally communicate, yet they never unite so as to form one. Mr. Porter estimated the circumference of Lake Hijaneh at about ten miles. From the foot of Hermon to Keseweh is about sixteen miles; and the district watered by the Awaj is not on an average more than an hour in width. From Keseweh to Hijaneh is about fourteen miles; but the river is closely confined between two mountain ranges nearly the whole way. The entire arable ground, therefore, watered by this river, may be estimated at about sixty-five to seventy square miles.—See Abana.

PHARZITES.—See Pharez.

PHASEAH.—See Paseah.

PHEBE = fear. A deaconess in the church at Cenchrea. (Rom. xvi. 1, 2.)

PHENICIA = region of palm-trees. A narrow tract of country, embracing a beautiful and fertile plain, situated between the western declivity of Mount Lebanon and the Mediterraranian; and called by the Hebrews "Canaan," i.e. the lowland, in contradistinction to the highland of Syria. The inhabitants, who were descendants of Ham, were the most celebrated commercial nation of antiquity. Their chief cities were Tyre and Sidon, and they planted colonies at Carthage, Cadiz, Malaga, and other places. Only those Canaanitish tribes, residing on the Phenician coast, preserved their independence under the Hebrews; afterwards they successively obeyed the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Persians, Greeks, and Romans. Phenicia is evidently to be understood in Isa. xxiii. 11, where the "merchant city" should be "Canaan," as in the margin. So also "Phenice," in Acts, xi. 19; xv. 8, should be "Phenicia," as in Acts xxii. 2. The person called "a woman of Canaan," (Matt. xv. 22,) is also called "a Greek," i.e. Gentile, "a Syro-Phenician by nation," i.e. a Phenician of Syria, in distinction from the Phenicians of Libya, or the Carthaginians. (Mark vii. 26.)—See Tyre.
PHI

PHICOL = all-commanding. The commander of Abimelech's troops. (Gen. xxii. 22; xxvi. 26.)

PHILAELPHIA = region of brotherly-love. A city of Lydia, situated in the plain of Hermus; about thirty miles south-east from Sardis. It derived its name from Attalus Philadelphia, king of Pergamus; and with the kingdom came under the power of the Romans, about B.C. 183. It was destroyed by an earthquake, with the adjacent cities, in the reign of Tiberius, A.D. 17. It is a considerable town, but the streets are filthy and the houses are mean; now called by the Turks "Allah-Shehr" = city of God, and has some 12,000 or 14,000 inhabitants. The remains of antiquity are not numerous; the most remarkable is a solitary pillar. The view of the country, from the hill on which the town is situated, is magnificent in the extreme. Whilst the other Apocalyptic churches have fallen into decay, the church at Philadelphia still survives. Even Gibbon could say, "Among the Greek colonies of Asia, Philadelphia is still erect—a column in a scene of ruins." (Rev. i. 11; iii. 7.)

PHILEMON = affectionate. A Christian of some distinction at Colosse. (Philem. i. 5, 10, 19; Col. iv. 9.)

PHILEMON, Epistle to. This Epistle, which was written by Paul from Rome, probably near the close of A.D. 62, is cited by Tertullian, Origem, and Eusebius. Onesimus, a servant of Philemon, had fled to that city, and was there converted to the faith of the gospel. After serving Paul for a season, Onesimus was sent back to his former master, and Paul wrote this Epistle, chiefly with a design to conciliate the feelings of Philemon towards his penitent servant, and now fellow disciple. This Epistle is a voucher for the Apostle's urbanity, politeness, and knowledge of the world; and the writer seems to be consulting for the whole church, rather than managing the business of a private individual. (Philem. I.)—See ONESIMUS.

PHILETUS = amiable. An apostate Christian, mentioned in connection with Hymeneus. (2 Tim. ii. 17.)

PHILIP = horse-lover, i.e. horseman. 1. One of the Apostles, a native of Bethsaida; he had been a disciple of John the Baptist. (John i. 45—48; vi. 5—7; xii. 21, 22; xiv. 8, 9; Matt. x. 3; Mark iii. 18; Luke vi. 14.) He was with the rest of the Apostles and disciples who assembled for prayer in the upper room in Jerusalem, after the ascension of our Lord. (Acts i. 13, 14.) 2. One of the seven deacons of the church at Jerusalem; also called "the Evangelist." (Acts vi. 5; xxii. 8.) He preached the gospel in Samaria with great success. (Acts viii. 5—18.) He was divinely directed to proceed towards Gaza, where he was the means of converting to the Christian faith the treasurer of Candace, queen of Ethiopia. After a short stay at Asotus, Philip preached the gospel from town to town till he came to Cæsarea, where he probably settled. (Acts viii. 26-40. He had four daughters who were endowed with the gifts of prophecy. (Acts xxii. 8, 9.) A tetrarch of Trachonitis, and Iturea. (Luke iii. 1.) He was the son of Herod the Great, by his wife Cleopatra; and at his death his tetrarchy was annexed to Syria. (Matt. xvi. 18; Mark vii. 27.) 4. A son of Herod the Great by Mariamne the daughter of Simon the high priest. He was the first husband of Herodias, who was taken from him by his brother Herod Antipas. (Matt. xiv. 3; Mark vi. 17; Luke iii. 19.)

PHILIPPI = horse-lovers, i.e. horsemens. A city of proconsular Macedonia, situated within the limits of ancient Thrace. (Acts xx. 6; Phil. i. 1; 1 Thess. ii. 2.) It was taken from the Thracians, and fortified by Philip of Macedon, who named it after himself, Philippi, B.C. 358. In its vicinity was fought the last battle of the republicans of Rome, in which Brutus and Cassius were defeated by Antony and Augustus. Philippi was the first town on the continent of Europe in which the gospel was preached by Paul; and here, when cast into prison, he converted also the gaoler and his household. (Acts xvi. 12-40.) Philippi, as a Roman, “colony,” received from Julius Caesar the Italian rights, which were, however, inferior to the Roman; and Augustus may have added the honourable appellation “chief city”—a title which did not convey much real advantage. The place is now called Philica; and many splendid fragments of the city are still in existence.

PHILIPPANS, EPISTLE TO. This Epistle appears to have been written by Paul early in A.D. 63, when he was a prisoner at Rome. (Phil. iv. 22.) It is quoted as the work of Paul, by Polycarp, Ireneaus, Clement of Alexandria, Tertullian, Origen, Cyprian, and Eusebius. From this Epistle, it appears that, while a prisoner in Rome, Paul was in great want of necessaries; and the Philippians kindly sent Epaphroditus to him with the fruits of their benevolence. On the return of Epaphroditus, Paul wrote this Epistle, acknowledging their kindness in grateful and affectionate terms; and mingled with his thanks some of the most sublime and animating exhibitions of divine truth that are to be found in the sacred pages. This Epistle is the only one of Paul’s letters to the churches, in which not one censure is expressed; which implies that the members of the church at Philippi had always walked in the spirit of the gospel.

PHILISTIA = land of strangers, sojourners. The southern coast and plain of Canaan, along the Mediterranean, from Ekron to the border of Egypt. (Ex. xxiii. 31; Ps. lx. 7; lxxxvii. 4; cviii. 10; 1 Sam. xxxi. 8; 1 Kings xv. 27; Ps. lxxxiii. 7.) Hence is derived the Greek form of the name Palestine, which was applied to the whole land of the Hebrews. (Jos. Ant. i. 6, 2; ii. 15, 2; viii. 10, 8.) It is also called “Palestina.” (Ex. xv. 14; Is. xiv. 29, 31; Zeph. ii. 4–7.)

PHILISTIM.—See PHILISTINES.

PHILISTINES = strangers, sojourners. The “Philistim,” i.e. Philistines, like the Caphtorim or Cretans, were of Egyptian origin; they subdued the Avims, and settled in their country, hence the name Philistia.
(Gen. x. 14; Deut. ii. 23; Jer. xlvii. 4; Am. ix. 7.) Before Abraham came to Canaan they had already established a Philistine kingdom, whose capital was at Gera. (Gen. xx. 2; xxxvi. 1.) In the time of Joshua they were divided into five states or principalities; (Ex. xiii. 17; Josh. xiii. 2, 3;) he extended his conquests to Gaza, but did not vanquish them. The Philistines were the inimicable enemies of the Hebrews; and after alternate victories and defeats, they were subdued under David, and still later by Hezekiah. This warlike people finally amalgamated with the neighbouring tribes. Their soldiers are frequently represented on the Egyptian monuments. (Judg. iii. 31; x. 6; xiii. 1; 1 Sam. iv. 2; vii. 13; xiv. 52; xxiii. 5, 28; xxxi. 1; 2 Sam. xxiii. 8; 2 Chron. xxii. 16; 2 Kings xxii. 5.)

PHILOGUS = loving learning. A Christian at Rome. (Rom. xvi. 15.)

PHILOSOPHY. This term signifies love of wisdom, then knowledge natural and moral, knowledge of things human and divine. The "philosophers" who encountered Paul at Athens, were the Epicureans and the Stoics. (Acts xvii. 18.) The individuals who taught "vain deceit," of whom Paul speaks, in Col. ii. 8; 1 Tim. vi. 20; Tit. i. 14; iii. 9, though pretending to be Christians, appear to have maintained doctrines compounded of the Oriental emanation philosophy, and some of the speculative part of Platonism, a kind of theosophic-ascetic philosophy. This philosophy, which taught the derivation of many orders of beings of different rank, first from the great Supreme, and then in succession from each other, found adherents among Jews as well as Gentiles. Both retained their previous speculative opinions when they adopted Christianity, and endeavoured to combine or reconcile them with it, as well as they were able. By this means their Christianity became mixed up with philosophical vagaries, and they eventually formed that sect which assumed the name of Gnostics, and which history accuses of having been, under all the various modifications of one and the same system, invariably addicted to magic arts: they were the rationalists of early Christianity.

PHINEHAS = mouth of brass. 1. A son of Eleazar and grandson of Aaron. Phinehas was the third high priest of the Hebrews. His zeal and promptitude in punishing the sin of Zimri, turned away the anger of the Lord from the nation, and secured to him and his family the right of perpetual succession to the Hebrew high priesthood. The priesthood continued in the family of Phinehas—excepting the interval from Eli to Zadok—until the Exile of the nation. (Ex. vi. 28; Num. xxv. 7—13; Josh. xxii. 13; Judg. xx. 28; 1 Chron. vi. 4; ix. 20; Ps. cxi. 30.) 2. A son of Eli. (1 Sam. i. 3; ii. 34; iv. 19—21; xiv. 13.) 8. One of the Levites. (Ex. viii. 33.)

PHLEGON = burning. A Christian at Rome. (Rom. xvi. 14.)

PHYRGIA = burnt-region. An inland province of Asia Minor, bounded on the north by Bithynia and Galatia; on the east by Cappadocia and Lycocnia; on the south by Lydia, Pisidia, and Isauria; and on the west by Caria, Lydia, and Myisia. Phrygia was differently divided at different periods. It was, for the most part, a level country, and celebrated for its fertility and abundance of cattle. The middle part, however, in the region of Sardis and Philadelphia, yields evidence of volcanic agency and presents a strong resemblance to the volcanic district of Central France. The cities of Laodicea, Hierapolis, Colosse, and Antioch, in Pisidia, were within the limits of Phrygia. (Acts ii. 10; xvi. 6; xviii. 28; 1 Tim. vi. 22.)

PHURAH = bough. The servant of Gideon. (Judg. vii. 10, 11.)

PHUT = afflicted, despised. An African people descended from Phut. (Gen. x. 6.) According to the Septuagint and Vulgate versions, they were the "Libyans;" but according to Josephus they were the "Mauran-PI-B

PHU

PHUVAH = mouth. 1. A son of Issachar; (Gen. xli. 13;) also written "Pua;" (Num. xxvi. 28;) and "Puah." (1 Chron. vi. 1.) His descendants are called "Funites." (Num. xxvi. 23.)

PHYGELLUS = a fugitive. A Christian of Asia, who deserted Paul during his imprisonment at Rome. (2 Tim. i. 5.)

PHYLACTERIES. The Hebrew word "tephit," rendered "frontlets," (Ex. xiii. 16; Deut. vi. 8; xii. 18,) signifies "bands, fillets." In Rabbinical Hebrew they were called "tophilis" = prayers; and in Greek "phylacteries" = "safe-guards," hence "amulets." (Matt. xxv. 6.) The prayer fillets or phylacteries of the Jews are strips of parchment or vellum, on which are written the sentences in Deut. vi. 4-9; xi. 18-21; Ex. xiii. 1-19; xiii. 11-16; and inclosed in cases of parchment, or black calf skin, and bound in different ways around the forehead and left arm while at prayer. The Jews derive their use from an erroneous interpretation of Ex. xii. 16, where it is said of the law, "And it shall be for a token upon thine hand, and for frontlets between thine eyes." Dr. Lightfoot thinks it not unlikely, that our Saviour Himself wore the Jewish phylacteries, as well as the "tevse," or "fringe," (Num. xv. 38, 39;) also called "hem" or "border;" (Matt. ix. 20; xiii. 5;) and that He condemned the Pharisees for making them broad and visible, to obtain fame and esteem for their devotion and piety. The "mezuzah" = "door-posts," (Ex. xii. 7; Deut. vi. 9,) are also the sentences in Deut. vi. 4-9; xi. 18-21, written with great care upon strips of vellum, then rolled up, and the name Shaddai = "Almighty," inscribed upon them, and inclosed in tubes of lead, tin, cane, or wood, and nailed to the door-posts of Jewish houses.—See FRINGE.

PHYSICIAN. From what Homer tells us of "the infinity of drugs produced in Egypt," and "the use of many medicines," mentioned in Jer. xlv. 11, as well as from the accurate diagnosis or indications concerning diseases, given by Moses, there is ample evidence that the ancient Egyptians were celebrated for their skill in surgery and medicine. Some of the physicians were employed in embalming the dead; (Gen. i. 2;) and each disease is said to have had its proper medical man. (Ex. i. 15-21.) The Hebrews, undoubtedly, brought an amount of medical knowledge with them from Egypt. As the priests were obliged to take cognizance of leprosies, it would appear that the medical art, at least for a time, was in the hands of the Levitical body. (Lev. xiii. 1-53; xiv. 1-57; xv. 1-38; Deut. xxvii. 4, 9.) Reference is frequently made to physicians who were not priests, and to instances of sickness, disease, healing, etc. (Job x. 8-11; 1 Kings xv. 23; 2 Kings viii. 29; ix. 16; 2 Chron. xvi. 12; Isa. i. 6; Jer. viii. 22; Ezek. xxx. 21; Prov. iii. 18; xi. 30; xxix. 1; 1 Kings i. 2-4.) The physicians appear to have exercised their skill in removing nervous disorders by music. (1 Sam. xvi. 16.) At a later period the Hebrew physicians advanced in science, and increased in numbers. (Col. iv. 14; Mark v. 26; Luke iv. 23; v. 31; viii. 43; Jas. Ant. xvii. 6. 5.)—See DISEASES.

PI-BAESETH = the Pashir, i.e. Dia- na. A city in lower Egypt, on the east side of the Pelusian branch of the Nile. By the Greeks it was called Bubastis i.e. "Bubastum." (Ezek. xxx. 17, margin.) Here was a temple of the Egyptian Diana; and the goddess is generally represented with the head of a lioness or a cat. The site of the ancient city, now called Tbi Basta, is occupied by mounds of great extent; but there is no portion of any standing edifice, all is overthrown, and the wide-spread rubbish, with occasional stones of the finest red granite, afford the only remaining evidence of the ancient splendour of Bubastos.

PIECE OF MONEY.—See Stater.

PIGEON.—See Dove.

PI-HAIROTH = the place of grass or ridge. A place near the northern end of the Gulf of Suez, eastward of Baal Zephon. (Ex. xiv. 2, 9.) It was the third station of the Hebrews when leaving Egypt. (Num. xxxiii. 7, 8.)

PILATE, PONTIUS. The Roman procurator of Judea, who succeeded Valerius Gratus, about a.d. 26. He was in office at the time of the trial and execution of Jesus. His residence was at Cesarea, but he went up to Jerusalem at stated periods; and though his chief duty respected revenues, he exercised judicial authority there in a palace or government house provided for the purpose. (Matt. xxvii. 27; John xviii. 28; xix. 10.) His administration was exceedingly offensive in Judea; as he had directed his soldiers to carry the images of Caesar, which were on their standards, into Jerusalem by night; the people regarded this as a violation of their law. (Jos. Ant. xviii. 3. 1; Wars, ii. 9. 2. 3.) His excessive cruelty provoked frequent commotions, specially in Galilee; and Pilate sought revenge upon the people of that province, by putting to death some of them while sacrificing at Jerusalem. (Luke xiii. 1–5.) Notwithstanding his cruelty, at the trial of Jesus Pilate was actuated by a sense of justice, as he once and again, in the most solemn and impressive manner, even in the presence of His malicious and blood-thirsty persecutors, declared his conviction of His perfect innocence. (Matt. xxvi. 57–73; Luke xxiii. 1–7.) Even Pilate’s wife, who was with him in Jerusalem, appears to have had an intuition in a dream, that Jesus was maliciously accused.

(Matt. xxvii. 11–19; Luke xxiii. 6–15.) Pilate, moved by the fear of being accused to the emperor, scourged Jesus, and then resigned Him to the hands of the enraged multitude, to be crucified. He directed the form of inscription which was placed on the cross, “Jesus of Nazareth, the king of the Jews;” and when the Jews would persuade him to alter the phraseology, so as to represent Him claiming to be the king of the Jews, and not as being so in fact, Pilate, conscious, probably, of having sacrificed justice to expediency or popularity, peremptorily refused to do it. Pilate gave Joseph the privilege of removing the body from the cross, and placing it in his own tomb. (Matt. xxvii. 56–59; Mark xv. 1–40; Luke xxii. 36–52; John xix. 28–40; xix. 1–38; Acts iii. 13; iv. 27; xiii. 28; 1 Tim. vi. 13.) Pilate was deposed by Vitellius, then Governor of Syria, and sent to Rome to answer to certain accusations before the emperor. Tiberias was dead before the arrival of Pilate; (Jos. Ant. xviii. 4. 1. 2; and the latter is said to have been banished by Caligula to Vienna in Gaul, and there to have died by his own hand about a.d. 41. (Euseb. Hist. Eccl. ii. 7, 8.)

PILDASH = extraordinary herbage. A son of Nahor. (Gen. xxii. 22.)

PILEHA = a slice. One who signed the covenant. (Neh. x. 24.)

PILLAR OF SALT.—See Lot.

PILTAI = whom Jehovah delivers. One of the priests. (Neh. xii. 17.)

PIN.—See Nail.

PINE. The Hebrew word tisbeh, rendered “the pine;” (Isa. xii. 19;) “the pine tree,” (Isa. lx. 18;) may designate the hard oak, holm, ilex. The Hebrew aitz-shemen, rendered “pine branches,” (Neh. viii. 15;) signifies “oil-tree,” i.e. the wild olive tree. The Hebrew word oron, rendered “an ash,” (Isa. xlviii. 14;) designates the pine tree, a beautiful high tree, with its branches at the top, bearing large hard cones, in which are embedded the pleasant kernels.
called pignola nuts by the Italians. The timber is of a fine grain, easily wrought and durable.

PINNACLE. The Greek word πτερογέμον, rendered “pinnacle,” does not signify a summit, or steeple, but literally the wing. When the devil had tempted Jesus in the desert, “he then took Him up into the holy city, and set Him on the wing of the temple; and said unto Him, If thou be the Son of God cast thyself down, etc.” Matt. iv. 5, 6.) This language does not imply that the person of Jesus was carried through the air by the power of the devil. The wing of the temple may have been the same as “Solomon's porch; (John x. 23; Acts iii. 11; v. 12;) and probably the same which Josephus calls “the royal cloister,” or “gallery,” (Ant. xv. 11. 5.) a sort of portico which rose to an immense height from the walls of the temple area. The middle portico stood on the wall above the adjacent valley of the Kidron; so that the total elevation of the wall and portico would be about 310 feet above the bottom of the valley—an elevation sufficient to excuse the somewhat hyperbolical language of the Jewish historian—if from its roof one attempted to look down into the gulf below, his eyes became dark and dizzy before they could penetrate to the immense depth.

PINON.—See P eru.

PIPE.—See Ela te.

PIRAM—wild-ass-like, i.e. indomitable. A Canaanish king of Jarmuth. (Josh. x. 3.)

PIRATHON = chief? A city of Ephraim, now called Per 'ata; the inhabitants were called “Pirathities.” (Judg. xii. 18—15.)

PISGAH = part, piece. A ridge in the mountain of Abarim, in the land of Moab, on which was Mount Nebo. (Num. xx. 20; xxxii. 14; Deut. iii. 27; xxxiv. 1.)—See Nebo, and Abarim.

PIS DIA = pitchy region. A rough and mountainous district of Asia Minor, lying mostly on Mount Taurus, between Pamphylia, Phrygia, and Lycaonia. Its chief city was Antioch. (Acts xiii. 14; xiv. 24.)

PISON = overflowing. One of the four rivers issuing from the garden of Eden. It is said to have flown around the land of Havilah.” (Gen. ii. 11, 12.) The Samaritan translators hold Pison to mean the Nile; while Josephus (Ant. i. 1. 3) understands the Ganges. Others understand the Indus, which actually flows around Havilah, i.e. India, on the west, and was nearer to the Hebrews. —See Eden.

PISPAH = open-mouth. A descendant of Asher. (1 Chron. vii. 38.)

PIT. The Hebrew word shekhah, rendered “pit,” denotes a sort of pitfall, in which traps are laid for wild beasts; (Exek. xi. 4, 8; Ps. vii. 15; ix. 15; Prov. xxiii. 14;) a cistern having mire at the bottom; (Job ix. 31;) a subterranean prison; (Isa. ii. 14;) also the Septuagint, the grace, corruption. (Job xvii. 14; xxxii. 18, 24, 28, 30; Ps. xvi. 10; xxx. 9; xlix. 9; lv. 23.) The term mahmoroth, rendered “pits,” signifies streams, whirlpools, abysses of water. (Ps. cxl. 10.) The word bor, also rendered “pit;” (Gen. xxxvi. 20; 1 Sam. xiii. 6;) “well,” (Deut. vi. 11;) designates a cistern hewn out in stone, a reservoir for preserving rain water. (Jer. ii. 18.) Such cisterns, when without water, were often used in the East for prisons; (Zech. ix. 13; Gen. xvii. 29; 29;) hence the term is often used for prison, dungeon. (Ex. xx. 29; Isa. xxxiv. 22; Jer. xxxvii. 16; xxxviii. 6—13.) The word is also used for the grace, the sepulchre. (Isa. xiv. 15, 19; xxxviii. 18; Prov. xviii. 17; Ps. xlviii. 1; xxxv. 3; lix. viii. 4; cx. vii. 9.)—See CISTERN.

PITCH. The Hebrew word apheph, rendered “pitch,” (Gen. vi. 14;) denotes some kind of bituminous substance, which was well adapted to smearing over the ark and closing every chasm and crevice. It is not unlike that it was the same as the Ammon, rendered “slime.” (Gen. II. 2; II.)
3; xiv. 10; Ex. ii. 3; the mineral pitch *asphaltum, or bitumen, which boils up from subterranean fountains near to Babylon, also from the bottom of the Dead sea. It was used for ancient buildings, also in embalming the dead. The Hebrew word *sepæ, also rendered “pitch,” (Ex. ii. 3; Isa. xxxiv. 9), signifies to flow, to become liquid, hence pitch, bitumen.

PITCHEr. Though skins, or leathern bottles, are usually employed for carrying water in the East, still the custom of drawing water in earthen pitchers extensively prevails. (Gen. xxiv. 14—18.) Some of the Egyptian and Assyrian jars and pitchers were remarkable for the elegance of their form and beauty of workmanship. (Judg. vii. 16—20; Eccl. xii. 6; Lam. iv. 2; Mark xiv. 13; Luke xxii. 10.)

PITHOM = the narrow place. A city of lower Egypt on the eastern bank of the Nile. Pithom and Raamses, the treasure cities which the Hebrews built and fortified for Pharaoh, (Ex. i. 11), were situated in the land of Goshen, and were probably designed to guard the ancient ports of Egypt against irruptions from Asia. The Egyptian Them or Thous is identical with Patmus and Pithom— the Pi is merely the Egyptian article—situated on the east side of the Pelusiac arm of the Nile; apparently on the site of the present village Abshaq, at the entrance of the Wady Tumilat, where there was at all times a strong military post.—See RAAMSES.

PITHON. A descendant of Saul. (1 Chron. viii. 25; ix. 41.)

PITY. This Christian grace is usually defined to be the unsiness we feel at the unhappiness of others, prompting us to compassionately them, with a desire for their relief. God is said to pity them that fear Him, as a father pitieth his children. (Ps. ciii. 18; Mal. iii. 17.) We are exhorted to “love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous.” (1 Pet. iii. 8.)

PLA

18; xxx. 12; Num. viii. 19.) properly signifies to smite, hence generally a fatal disease. So also the Hebrew word deber, translated “pestilence.” (Lev. xxvi. 25; Deut. xxviii. 21; 2 Sam. xxiv. 13; 1 Kings viii. 37; Ps. xci. 6; “plague,” (Hos. xiii. 14), properly signifies destruction, any severe epidemic or contagious disease. The sword, the pestilence, and the famine, are three evils which are usually represented as accompanying each other. (Jer. xiv. 12; xxix. 18; Matt. xxiv. 7; Luke xxi. 11.) Either of the terms may designate the glandular plague, now so prevalent in the East, which doubtless existed in ancient times. The plague is a virulent disease, and, like the small pox, is an eruptive fever, characterized by a contagious typhus, and entire prostration of the strength, and certain local symptoms, such as buboes, carbuncles, and livid spots. The whole glandular system seems to be the seat of the disease. The symptoms, from the first, are general debility, congestion about the heart, not depending on inflammation, but on the putrescent state of the circulation. It differs little from putrid typhus, except in its duration and eruptions; it commonly runs its course in about three days. Dr. Madden says this contagious and infectious disease originates in the putrefaction of animal matter. Malaria originates in the decomposition of vegetable matter. The production of both, of course, depends on certain states of moisture and heat, which in other places, of even a damper climate and higher temperature, are wanting to the generation of these diseases.

PLA

PLA

PLAGUES OF EGYPT. Though the supernatural events narrated in Ex. vii.—xii. stand in close connection with the natural phenomena of Egypt, still they maintain their character as miracles, from the fact, that they are introduced and performed by Moses, that they cease at his request, and a part of them at a time fixed upon even by Pharaoh himself. (Ex. viii.
PLA

GLE.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.

PLA.
areas was early known to the Egyptians. (Am. vii. 7; Isa. xxviii. 17; 2 Kings xxi. 13.) See Line.

POCHERETH = snaring, or getting ahead. One whose descendants returned from the Exile. (Neh. vii. 59; Ezra ii. 57.)

POETS. The words, “For we are also his offspring,” (Acts xvii. 28,) are supposed to be quoted by Paul from Aratus, a Cilician poet. (Phenomena, 23.) So also the words, “Evil communications corrupt good manners,” (1 Cor. xv. 33,) are by some supposed to be quoted from Euripides; by others from Menander. They occur in both. So also the passage in Tit. i. 12, “The Cretians are always liars, evil beasts, slow bellies,” are said to be taken from Epimenides, who is called a “prophet.” The words were borrowed by Callimachus. (Hymn on Jove, v. 8.) When Paul quotes those works, and vouchers for the truth of the sentiments quoted, this does not authenticate the whole works of these three Greek poets, as they might contain many other things for which he would by no means vouch.

POETRY OF THE HEBREWS. The poetry of this people, whether didactic, sententious, or prophetic, was almost wholly lyric. As the essence of the lyric poetry is the vivid expression of internal emotions, it was, therefore, subjective; in opposition to epic poetry, which treats of external objects, and is, therefore, objective. The chief subject of Hebrew poetry was religion, and then patriotism; which, under theocracy, was very nearly allied to religion. That the Hebrew poets composed in prescribed forms, is evident from those poems whose external form is distinguished by the alphabetic arrangement regularly appearing at the beginning of each verse or group of verses. The poems possessing this peculiar acrostic arrangement, are Psalms ix., x., xxv., xxxiv., xxxvii., cxxi., cxxii., cxxix., cxxxiv.; Prov. xxxi. 10—31; Lam. i.—iv.; which may be divided into six classes:

1. Those where every line of a verse begins with a new letter in alphabetic order.
2. Where the beginning of every other line follows the alphabetic arrangement. (Prov. xxxi. 10—13.)
3. Where every fourth line begins with the letter. (Ps. xxxvii. 4.)
4. This is seen in the structure of Psalm cxix., where the letter returns eight times, and denotes the beginning of every first, third, fifth, etc., line.
5. Where this is found in the first two chapters of Lamentations. Each strophe has three verses, which a caesura for the most part divides into two unequal parts, and at the beginning of the strophe stands the letter. 6. This is found in Lam. iii. The form of the verses and strophes is like that of the preceding, but the letter stands at the beginning of each of the three verses.

Rhyme often appears in the ancient poetical fragments and proverbs. (Gen. iv. 23, 24; v. 29; Num. xxxi. 18; Prov. xxii. 10; xxiv. 29; xxxv. 17.)

That kind of rhyme which consists in the parallelism of the members, exhibits every verse as consisting of at least two corresponding parts or members. This parallelism occurs either in the thought, or solely in the form. Of the former there are three kinds. The first is the synonymous, or cognate parallelism; where tho-two numbers express the same idea in different, but closely, and often literally, corresponding words. (Ps. viii. 4; ii. 4; xix. 1.)

What is man that Thou art mindful of him, And the son of man that Thou dost visit him?

He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh; The Lord shall have them in derision.

The heavens relate the glory of God, And the firmament declares His handiwork.

The second is the antithetic parallelism, in which an antithesis of thought is expressed by corresponding members. (Prov. xiv. 11; xv. 1.)

The house of the wicked shall be overthrown; But the tabernacle of the upright shall flourish. A soft answer turneth away wrath: But grievous words stir up anger.

The third kind is called the synthetic or constructive parallelism, which is a mere juxtaposition; rather, the thought is carried forward in the second member with some addition; the correspondence of words and construction being as before. (Ps. xix. 7—9.)

The law of Jehovah is perfect, converting the soul; The precepts of Jehovah are sure, making wise the simple; The statutes of Jehovah are right, rejoicing the heart; The commandments of Jehovah are pure, enlightening the eyes. The fear of Jehovah is clean, enduring for ever; The judgments of Jehovah are true, and righteous altogether.

Other less perfect species of rhetorical parallelism frequently occur; and occasionally the several kinds are found together in one composition, so as to give ease, freedom, and capability to the style, as in Psalms ii. and xiv. The form of Hebrew poetry, as well as its spirit, prevails to a great extent throughout the Revelation of John. Many parts are professedly songs, formal expressions of praise, triumph, or mourning. The language is not only highly figurative, but it everywhere abounds with the most poetical images and modes of expression. Indeed, this book not only possesses the form and the spirit of Hebrew poetry, but it exhibits as much regularity in its parallelisms as any Hebrew poetry with which it can be justly compared. We give the following passages: (Rev. i. 5, 6; xxi. 23:)

To Him who loveth us, and washed us From our sins, in His own blood; And constituted us a kingdom, Priests unto God, even His Father, To Him be glory and dominion, For ever and ever, Amen!

And the city has no need of the sun Nor of the moon to shine in it; For the glory of God illuminates it, And the light thereof is the Lamb.

POISON. The Hebrew words khimaḥ, rendered "poison," (Deut. xxxii. 24, 33; Ps. lxvii. 4) and rosk, rendered "venom," (Deut. xxxii. 33) "poison," (Job xx. 16,) designate the poison of serpents, or any substance which violently deranges the healthful functions of the animal system. Wicked language and false doctrine are compared to poison or venom. (James iii. 8; Rom. iii. 13.)

POLLUX.—See CASTOR.

POMEGRANATE. The Hebrew word rimmon denotes the pomum granatum = grained apple, i.e. pomegranate. This beautiful tree, which is common in Syria, Arabia, Persia, and Egypt, rises to the height of twenty feet; the branches are very thick, and armed with thorns. The leaves, which are of a livid green, hang upon crimson stalks; and the flowers are large, of a stellated form and crimson colour. The interior of the fruit is divided into several compartments, like those of the orange, and contains a number of purple seeds, with a juice or liquor of an acid sweetness. The fruit of the sweet variety is cut open when served up to table; or the grains taken out and besprinkled with sugar or rose-water, then brought to table in sauceers. The grains, likewise, fresh as well as dried, make a considerable ingredient in cookery. (Num. xili. 23; xx. 5; Deut.
viii. 8; 1 Sam. xiv. 2; Joel i. 12;
Hagg. ii. 19; Sol. Song iv. 8, 13; vi.
7; viii. 2.) The figure of the pomegranate was used in architectural ornaments; (1 Kings vii. 18, 20, 42; 2 Kings xxv. 17;) also on the tassel of the high priest's robe. (Ex. xxviii.
33, 34.)

PONTIUS PILATE.—See Pilate.
PONTUS = the sea. The northeastern province of Asia Minor, bounded north by the Euxine sea; west by Paphlagonia and Galatia; south by Cappadocia, and part of Armenia; and east by Colchis. The kingdom of Pontus, celebrated under Mithridates the Great, became a province of the Roman empire. (Acts ii. 9; xvii.
2; 1 Pet. i. 1; 2 Pet. iii. 1.)

POOLS. Among the pools which supplied water to Jerusalem are the pools of Solomon, supposed to have been erected by the Hebrew monarch, on the road to Hebron, in a narrow sloping valley, about three miles south-west of Bethlehem. There are three immensely large reservoirs, built of squared stones and bearing marks of the highest antiquity. (Eccl. ii. 6.) The water is conveyed by an aqueduct to the area of the great moat in Jerusalem.
The Upper and Lower Pool also conveyed water to the holy city.
(2 Kings xviii. 17; Isa. vii. 3; xxxvi.
1; xxii. 9.) Dr. Robinson, in his later Biblical Researches, places the fountain of Gihon, often called the Upper Gihon, or Upper Pool of Gihon, west or north-west of the city;
from this he supposes that Hezekiah conducted the water into a pool or reservoir within the city, now called the Pool of Hezekiah. The Lower Pool he places south of the Upper Pool, also west of the city. (2 Kings xx. 20; 2 Chron. xxxii. 30.)—See Gihon.

POOR. Under the Mosaic law, the gleanings of the fields and vineyards specially belonged to the poor; (Lev. xix. 9, 10; Deut. xxiv. 19—22;)
also the produce of the sabbatical year.
(Ex. xxii. 11.) The Hebrews were bound to invite the stranger, the widow, and the orphan, to the sacrificial feasts. (Deut. xiv. 28, 29; xvi.
10, 11; xxvi. 12, 13.) They were to be aided in all they needed. (Deut.
xx. 7—14;) and no usury was to be taken of them. (Lev. xxv. 35—38.)
The possession of the poor, which he thad sold in a time of need, was to be restored to him at the Jubilee. (Lev.
xxv. 25—28.) The oppression of the poor is denounced; (Prov. xiv. 31; Am. viii. 6, 7;) judges are to do them justice, but not unjustly to favour them. (Ex. xxix. 5; Lev. xix. 13; Ps. lxxii. 4.) Christians are charged to provide for the poor; (Ps. xii. 1—8; Gal. ii. 10; 1 John iii. 17;) they are also forbidden to esteem a rich man merely on account of his worldly advantages. (Prov. xxii. 2; xxix. 13; James i. 1—9.)

POPLAR. The Hebrew word lībḥaḏ, rendered "poplar," (Gen. xxx.
37; Hos. iv. 13;) like the Arabic ṭawā. na, designates the storax tree, which grows wild in Syria, Arabia, and Asia Minor. It resembles the quince-tree, is about twelve feet high; and yields, by incisions on the stem, an aromatic gum. This gum was called, in Hebrew, nataf, rendered "stacte." (Ex.
xxx. 84.)—See Stacte.

PORATHA = lot girem. One of the sons of Haman. (Est. ix. 6.)

PORCH.—See House.

PORCIUS FESTUS.—See Festus.

PORTERS. In the division of the Levites into four classes, the office of one class called "porters" was in some respects military. They were the soldiers of Jehovah, and the guards of His temple. They attended at the gates by night and day; and were relied every sabbath day. (2 Kings
xi. 5; 1 Chron. ix. 17—29; xvi. 43;
xxii. 5; xxvi. 1—19; 2 Chron. viii.
14; xxiii. 4; xxxi. 5; xxxv. 14.) The guards of cities are also called "porters." (2 Sam. xviii. 26; 2 Kings vi.
10, 11.)

PORPHYRE.—See Marble.

POST.—See Footman.

POTENTATE.—See Prince.

POTHIPHAR = consecrated to the-POT

The chief of Pharaoh's bodyguard, who purchased Joseph of the Midianite merchants, and committed to him the charge of his household. (Gen. xxxvii. 36; xxxix. 1; xl. 3, 4.)

POTIPHERAH = consecrated to the sun. The priest of On, whose daughter Asenath became the wife of Joseph. (Gen. xlii. 45—50; xlv. 20.)

POTTAGE—See LENTILS.

POTTER. In the manufacture of earthenware the Egyptians, the Assyrians, the Hebrews, and the Etruscans early acquired great perfection. (1 Chron. iv. 23.) The “potter's wheel,” and the simple cylindrical furnace in which the pottery was baked, are often depicted on the Egyptian monuments. (Jer. xviii. 3.) The processes in the manufacture of pottery by the Hebrews were undoubtedly the same as among the Egyptians. (Gen. xxiv. 14, 15; Ex. xvi. 33; Judg. vii. 16—19; Lev. vi. 28.) In the British Museum may be seen a profuse variety of banquetting cups, tureens, and vases in porcelain and earthenware, of tasteful form and varied hues, evincing the great skill of the Egyptian manufacturers. Many beautiful specimens from the ruins of Nimrud also exhibit the skill of the ancient Assyrians in the manufacture of pottery. The freedom of the potter to make of the clay what sort of vessel he chooses, and to mould or mar it at his pleasure, is used as an illustration of God's dominion over the works of His hands; (Isa. xiv. 9; xxxix. 6; Jer. xviii. 16; Rom. ix. 21;) and the fragility of his wares supply an apt emblem of the facility with which human life and power may be broken and destroyed. (Ps. li. 9; Isa. xxx. 14; Jer. x. 11; Rev. ii. 27.)

POTTER'S FIELD.—See ACRU.

POUND. The Greek word litra, generally supposed to be the same as the Roman libra, properly signifies a pound in weight. The libra or pound was equivalent to about 11½ ounces avoirdupois. (John xii. 3; xix. 83.)

—See MARKH, and MINA.

555

PRA

POWHER. The ability of doing. Power signifies sometimes a right, privilege, or dignity; (John i. 12;) sometimes absolute authority; (Matt. xxviii. 18;) sometimes the exertion of Divine power; (Eph. i. 19;) hence, as power generally includes the idea of dignity and superiority, magistrates are called the “higher powers.” (Rom. xiii. 1.)

PRETORIUM. This word is applied to the palace of Herod at Jerusalem; in which the Roman procurators, whose head quarters were properly at Cesarea, took up their residence when they visited Jerusalem; (Acts xxiii. 28 seq., xxv. 1;) their tribunal being set up in the open court or area before it. (Jos. War. ii. 14. 8.) The term “ pretorium” occurs in Mark xv. 16; but in Matt. xxvii. 27, it is rendered the “ common hall,” margin, “ governor's house;” and in John xviii. 28, 33; xix. 9, the “ judgment hall,” margin, “ Pilate's house.” The palace of Herod at Cesarea is also called the “ pretorium,” rendered “ judgment hall;” (Acts xxiii. 35;) and in Phil. i. 18, the term denotes the pretorium camp of Rome; rendered “ the palace,” margin, “ Caesar's court.”

PRAISE. The praise of God is the acknowledging His perfections, works, and benefits; hence it is an act of worship, and is often used as synonymous with thanksgiving. It is called forth by the contemplation of the character and attributes of the Most High, however they are displayed; and it implies a grateful sense and acknowledgement of past services, and for all His glorious acts of every kind. Expressions of praise, in almost every variety of force and beauty, abound in the Psalms.—See Halleluiah.

PRAYER. The expression of our desires unto God for things agreeable to His will, in the name of Jesus Christ. (John xiv. 6, 13, 14.) Prayer is not only a privilege with which we are favoured; but the appointed medium for obtaining both temporal and spiritual blessings. (2 Sam. vii. 27; Ezek. xxxvi. 37; Luke ix. 3; xviii. 1; Eph. vi. 18; Phil. iv. 6; 1 Thess. v. 17.) As a duty of worship, prayer may be regarded as consisting of invocation; (Ps. v. 2;) adoration; (2 Chron. xxv. 6;) confession; (Ezra ix. 6;) supplication or petition; (Ps. vii. 1;) pleading; (Jer. xil. 1;) profession or self-dedication; (Ps. lxiii. 25;) thanksgiving; (Ps. cxlvii. 1—20;) and blessing; (Ps. ciii. 20—22.) All acceptable prayer must be offered in faith, by the assistance of the Holy Spirit; (James I. 5—7; Heb. xi. 6; Zech. xii. 10; Rom. viii. 26;) and must be regulated by the revealed will of God, and come within the compass of the promises. (Ps. lxv. 2; 1 John v. 14, 15.) What God has not particularly promised, He may nevertheless possibly bestow; but what He has promised, He will most assuredly perform. (Ps. ciii. 17—20; Heb. iv. 16.) It has been asked, supposing, then, that our prayers are heard, and that the events prayed for are actually brought about, are we to conclude, that, in all such instances, there has been a special interposition on the part of God, modifying or suspending the laws and elements of material nature, or controlling the conduct of voluntary agents? To this question we may reply, that, supposing our prayers to be heard, and the blessings prayed for granted, it does not necessarily follow, that there has been a deviation from any of the laws either of the physical or the moral world. He who is the "hearer of prayer," is also the author and ruler of nature. In His vast plan for the governing of the universe, He has, from the first constitution of things, taken account of all the revolutions of the material world, and all the movements of the capricious wills of men, and made provision for every particular emergency. Hence, His plan must include an answer to every earnest supplication, not by contravening or violating, but in perfect harmony with, and even by means of, the laws of nature. As it regards the mode of the Divine answer, we may suppose that the history of men and of society is made of innumerable progressions, or lines, which perpetually cross each other, and which, at their point of intersection, receive a new direction in virtue of the lateral impulse that has come upon them. When an individual receives an answer to prayer, the interposition may be made not in the line which he was himself describing, but in one of those which are to meet him in his path; and at a point, therefore, where even though the visible constancy of nature may seem to have been violated, yet in reality it was in perfect harmony with the established laws of nature. The prayers of the saints ascend before God like the smoke of the incense. (Rev. v. 8; viii. 3, 4.) Among the Jews, the stated hours of prayer were the third and ninth hours; (Acts ii. 15; iii. 1;) sometimes more frequently. (Ps. lv. 17; Dan. vi. 10; x. 3.) Prayers were offered either standing, (1 Sam. i. 10; Luke xviii. 11, 13;) or kneeling; (2 Chron. vi. 13; Ezra x. 5; Acts vii. 60;) sometimes bowing the head towards the earth; (Ex. ix. 29; xxxiv. 8;) and at other times with the whole body prostrate on the ground. (Matt. xxvi. 39.) Against the formal spirit of prayer, so characteristic of the Pharisees, our Lord cautions His disciples.

PREACHING. Public discoursing on religious subjects. From the earliest period, preaching has been the means by which the knowledge of the truth has been spread. Esocah prophesied, or preached; (Gen. v. 24; Heb. xi. 5, 6; Jude xiv. 15;) Noah was a preacher of righteousness; (1 Pet. iii. 19, 20; 2 Pet. ii. 5;) Abraham instructed his family; (Gen. xviii. 19;) and Moses was an eminent prophet and preacher. (John i. 17.) Public preaching does not appear to have been generally attached to the Hebrew priesthood. The prophets were the ancient preachers—the inspired teachers of the world. (Deut. xxxiv. 9; 1 Sam. xix. 20; 2 Kings ii. 3, 4; 2 Chron. xii. 5; xv. 1; xvi. 7; xxxiv. 22.) The first Christian teachers were prophets; but when inspiration and prophetic vision had done their work, they were no longer prophets. The Christian preacher is not a priest, inasmuch as all the faithful are priests to God. (Rev. i. 6; 1 Pet. v. 2.) In the early churches, those among the faithful, who, in consequence of their former culture, were qualified, were accustomed to stand forth as teachers in the church assemblies. Even females occasionally prayed or prophesied in the Christian assemblies, as we learn from 1 Cor. xi. 5—18, compared with 1 Cor. xiv. 34, 35; 1 Tim. ii. 11, 12, where the Apostle corrects sundry abuses, and so limits the public speaking of women, that, if done at all, it should be done with entire decorum. (Gal. vi. 6; 1 Tim. iv. 14—16.) At an early period, presbyters were appointed by the churches, who received from them voluntary aids of Christian kindness. (Gal. vi. 6; 1 Tim. iv. 14—16.) The preachers of the gospel, generally, are called "presbyters," or "elders," on account of the gravity and dignity of their office; also "overseers" or "bishops," because their duty is to watch over the church. They are also called "servants" or "ministers," because they are God's servants, doing His work. Among the Christian preachers there was evidently no difference of rank. Even the formal distinction between the clergy and laity was not introduced into the Christian church till after the beginning of the third century.

PREDETERMINATION. The Greek word προφορίζω, variously translated, "determined before;" (Acts iv. 28;) "ordained;" (1 Cor. ii. 7;) and "predestinated;" (Rom. viii. 29, 33; Eph. i. 5, 11;) is used by the Apostle to designate the determination of God to communicate the privileges of the gospel to the Gentiles as well as to the Jews. The term has no allusion to an eternal purpose to communicate eternal salvation to any one; inasmuch as such a purpose or decree does not seem to be within the reach of possibility. An eternal purpose or decree could have no author. Though God knows who will be eternally saved, yet this foreknowledge has no influence in effectuating or making certain that event. Predestination merely designates God's determination to communicate to the Gentiles, as freely as to the Jewish nation, the gospel of his salvation; and freely, by faith, without conformity to any Mosaic rite, to admit them to the adoption of sons, and to all the privileges of His church and people. Though the Jews considered themselves the chosen or elect people, (Acts x. 26, 36; Gal. ii. 11—21,) yet, in this matter, they had no reason to complain; for God had formed this purpose "before the foundation of the world," that is, before the establishment of the Jewish economy or dispensation. (Eph. i. 4; 1 Cor. x. 11.) The "end of the world," when Christ offered himself a sacrifice for our sins, was the end of the Jewish dispensation. (Heb. ix. 26.) From Gal. iii. 8, 17, 18, we learn, that, in the covenant made with Abraham, four hundred and thirty years before the foundation of the Jewish dispensation, or the giving of the law, God determined to justify the Gentiles through faith in the Messiah. The "revelation of the mystery of His will" was in accordance with His plan or original design, in the disposition of the dispensations of the law and gospel; that henceforward, in the church of God, there should be neither Jew nor Greek, neither bond nor free, neither male nor female; for all are one in Christ, and heirs according to the promise. (Eph. i. 5, 9, 10; Rom. iii. 9, 29, 30; ix. 24—30.—See Election.

PREPARATION.—See PASSOVER.

PRESBYTERS.—See Bishop, and Elders.
PRESIDENT.—See Governor.
PRESS.—See Wine-Press.
PRIDE.—Inordinate and unreasonable self-esteem, not unfrequently attended with insolence towards others. It has been well said, that "pride is sometimes confounded with vanity, and sometimes with dignity; but to the former passion it has no resemblance, and in many circumstances it differs from the latter. Vanity is the parent of boisterous boasting; and the person subject to it, if his pretences be admitted, has no inclination to offer insult. The proud man, on the other hand, is naturally silent, and wrapped up in his own importance, seldom speaks but to make the audience feel their insufficiency. Pride is the high opinion that a poor, little, contracted soul entertains of itself, whilst dignity consis-tits in just, great, and uniform actions, and is the opposite to meanness." Pride is not only fruitful of discord, but it precludes usefulness, and makes its possessor really miserable and contemptible. Many have been fearfully punished on account of this sin. (Est. v. 18; Prov. xvi. 18; Rom. xi. 20; James iv. 16.)

PRIEST.—The Hebrew word cozen, and the Greek ιερεύς, rendered "priest," properly designate a sacred person, one who intervenes with God.
(Gen. xiv. 18; Heb. ix. 6; v. 1; Matt. viii. 4.) In the early times, the heads of families, as Adam, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Job, were priests to their own households. (Gen. iii. 21; iv. 2—5; viii. 20; xii. 17; xv, 9, 21; xxvi. 36; xxxi. 54; xxxv. 1—7; Job i. 5; xii. 8.) Afterwards, the importance of the office led it to be combined with the highest social dignity; hence Melchisedec, king of Salem, was "the priest of the Most High God." (Gen. xiv. 18.) On the establishment of the Hebrew commonwealth a particular order of men, the descendants of Aaron, in the tribe of Levi, were appointed to the priestly office.
(Ex. xxviii. 1—8; 2 Chron. xxvi. 18.) To the rest of the tribe of Levi was entrusted the duty of keeping the sacred books, and of performing the office of judges and of religious and civil monitors to the nation at large.
At the head of this priestly family stood Aaron the high priest; and the first-born of every family of his lineal descendants successively sustained the same dignified and important office. The high priest was the prime minister of Jehovah the invisible king; he, alone, annually entered the most holy place to make atonement for the people. Every man who aspired to the priestly office was required to establish his descent from the family of Aaron. The duties attached to the priestly office required so much bodily vigour and activity, that they were to those who were between the ages of thirty and fifty. (Num. iv. 3—47.) The priests were divided by David into twenty-four classes; and each class served in turn a week in the temple. (1 Chron. xxiii. 3, 6; xxiv. 3—19; 2 Chron. xxxi. 3; xxxv.
4, 5.) The priests served immediately at the altar, prepared the victims, and offered the sacrifices; they kept up a perpetual fire on the altar of burnt offering, and also attended to the golden lamps in the sanctuary; they prepared and offered the leaves of shew-bread, and changed them every Sabbath-day. They also administered the rites in the purifications from the various legal uncleanesses; and were also the judges in legal controversies.
Thirteen Levitical cities, with their suburbs, were assigned to the residence of the priests. (Josh. xxxi. 4.)
The maintenance of the priests was derived from the tithes; portions of various offering; (Lev. vii. 6—34;) the skins of the sacrifices; the firstfruits of trees; as well as a share of the spoils taken in war. (Lev. xix. xxiii. 24; Num. xxxi. 28, 41.) They appear to have shared in other occasional donations and dedications.
Many of the dues were paid in money.
(Num. xviii. 15, 16; xxxi. 25—54; 3
Sam. viii. 11, 12; 1 Chron. xxvii. 27, 28.) The priests of the Mosaic dis-PERS.

Pensions were not a national establishment of preachers. A priest’s business was to prepare and present offerings and sacrifices; to solve doubts and difficulties about ritual observances, and concerning clean and unclean; but he was no religious teacher in the higher sense, no preacher, no public guide or exemplar in prayer, no minister of instruction with regard to the spiritual duties of devotion and piety in general. The prophets were the only order of men, in ancient times, who can be compared with the ministers of the gospel. Christianity knows nothing of a priesthood, except in a figurative sense; all the faithful are priests as well as kings. (1 Pet. ii. 9; Rev. i. 6.) Jesus, our Great High Priest, has made an end for ever of all the rites of the priesthood, by offering up a sacrifice, in which all of this nature that could be needed was consummated and fulfilled.

PRINCE. The Hebrew word sar properly signifies leader, master, chief; and is also used for prefect, noble, potentate, one who holds the power over a whole people, although less than a king; (1 Sam. xxix. 3; Isa. xlix. 7;) also of the chief officers of State. (1 Kings iv. 2; Isa. xix. 11, 18; xxx. 4; Jer. xxxvi. 11.) The term sar is applied to captains; (2 Sam. xviii. 5; 2 Kings i. 9;) to rulers; (Ez xviii. 21; Judg. ix. 30; Neh. iii. 14;) also to the general of the army. (1 Chron. xxvii. 34.) So the word sarah, i.e. a princess, noble lady, is used to signify the king’s wife or daughter, lady of noble birth. (Judg. v. 29; Est. i. 18; 1 Kings xi. 8; Isa. xlix. 38; Gen. xvii. 15.) Merchants are called princes, i.e. in wealth; (Isa. xxxii. 8;) and the priests are called princes of the sanctuary. (Isa. xxxiii. 28.) In Dan. x. 18, 20, 21, the archangels are called chief princes, i.e. princes of the angels. (Rev. viii. 2.) Satan is called the prince of this world. (John xii. 31.) God is called the Prince of princes. (Dan. viii. 25.) And Christ is called the Prince of peace; (Isa. ix. 6;) the

PRO

"Prince of life;" (Acts iii. 15;) and the "Prince of the kings of the earth." (Rev. i. 5.)

PRINCIPALITIES.—See Magistrate.

PRINTED.—See Writing.

PRISCA.—See Priscilla.

PRISCILLA = ancient. The wife of Aquila; a remarkable woman who shared the travels, labours, and dangers of her husband. (Acts xviii. 2, 18, 26; Rom. xvi. 3; 1 Cor. xvi. 19;) She is also called "Prisca." (2 Tim. iv. 19.)

PRISON. Imprisonment was a punishment among the Egyptians; (Gen. xxxix. 20, 21; xl. 4;) but among the Hebrews, as execution immediately followed the sentence, the prison was chiefly used for the detention of criminals. (Lev. xxiv. 12;) In later times prisons were used as a means of punishment and correction. (2 Chron. xiv. 10; 1 Kings xxii. 27; 2 Kings xxv. 29; Jer. xxxviii. 6; lii. 31; Isa. xxiv. 22; xlii. 7; Matt. iv. 12; Acts xii. 4.) Prisoners were often confined in stocks, or with chains. (Job xii. 27; xxxviii. 11; Jer. xli. 4.) The Jews confined those in prison who failed in the payment of their debts; and the debtor was sometimes punished with stripes. (Wind. ii. 19; Matt. v. 26; xviii. 28—34.) The criminal was sometimes secured to a soldier; (Acts xxviii. 16;) and not unfrequently when a prisoner escaped the guard was punished for the crime of the prisoner. (Acts xix. 19; xvi. 27.)

PRIZE. The Greek word ἀμπελιαίρημα rendered "prize," designates the reward bestowed upon victors in the public games of the Greeks. The games principally consisted in running, wrestling, the chariot race, leaping, and throwing the dart and discus. The prize was a wreath, chaplet, or crown. In 1 Cor. ix. 24, the term is used metaphorically of the honours of the future life. —See Crown.

PROCHORUS = chief of the dance or chorus. One of the deacons of the church at Jerusalem. (Acts vi. 5.)
PROGNOSTICATORS.—See Divination.

PROMISE. A declaration of God's will, in which He signifies what particular good things He will bestow, or what evils He will remove. On the other hand, a "threatening" is a declaration of the Divine displeasure. The "exceeding great and precious promises" are applicable to all believers; they appertain to the present and the future life. (2 Pet. i. 4.) Some particular promises are predictions, as the promise of the Messiah, and the blessings of the gospel. (Rom. iv. 13, 14; Gal. iii. 14—29.) Hence the Hebrews were called the "children of the promise." (Rom. ix. 8.) So all the true believers in the Lord Jesus Christ are called "children" and "heirs of the promise." (Gal. iv. 20; Heb. vi. 12, 17.

PROPHECY. The Hebrew word נביא, rendered "prophet," signifies a speaker from inspiration. (Deut. xviii. 1; Judg. vi. 8.) The terms הביא, a "seer," and רַב, a "beholder," designate a person who sees future events and the like. (1 Chron. xxii. 9; xxv. 5; 1 Sam. ix. 9; vii. 14.) Sometimes the prophets are called תָוֹּת, i.e. those who see, explore for the people, a "watchman." (Jer. vi. 17; Ezek. iii. 17; xxxiii. 7.) Such also is the usage of שִׁמֵר, i.e. "a watchman;" (Isa. xxii. 11; lixii. 6); and וָתַיִם, i.e. shepherds; (Zech. xi. 5; viii. 16); in reference to the spiritual care and religious nurture of the people. A prophet is also occasionally named "a man of God," "servant of Jehovah," and now and then "angel," or "messenger of Jehovah." From these various appellations, it will be seen that the duty of the Hebrew prophet was not ritualism, like that of the priests; although occasionally some of the prophets superintended sacrifices, and other parts of the ritual. The prophets were the messengers of God to His people and to the world; they were appointed to make known His will—to denounce His judgments— to rebuke the crimes of kings, rulers, and nations—to instruct in the doctrines of religion, and generally to promulgate the will of God in every appointed way. They frequently interposed in matters that concerned the political weal of the State; and to give counsel to magistrates, on occasions, was regarded as one of their appropriate duties. It thus appears that the office of prediction comprised but a small portion of their public duties. The prophet was God's direct ambassador to men. (2 Pet. i. 21.) He was not merely trained for this office; inasmuch as his divine qualification depended wholly on the direct inspirations of God. Prophets were called to the work from every and any rank of life; Elisha was a ploughman; Amos a herdsman; Isaiah and Daniel were of elevated rank in society. Some of them were taken from the schools of the prophets, which were probably designed to train those educated there for the functions of public teachers, or for the stations of learning under the theocracy. (1 Sam. x. 5; xix. 20.) The spirit of prophecy was also given to prophetesses, as Deborah, Hannah, and Huldah. The modes by which the Divine Spirit communicated the knowledge of His will to the prophets, were, sometimes by an articulate voice, as to Adam, Noah, Abraham, and Moses; and sometimes objects and symbols were presented to the prophetic eye, in dreams and in visions. (Gen. xxxvii. 4—6; 1 Kings iii. 5; Dan. vii. 1; Joel ii. 28.) The pictorial scenery, which passed in vision before the mental gaze of the prophets, is frequently referred to by them when announcing their oracles: "I looked and beheld;" "I lifted up my eyes and saw;" "There was showed unto me." (Gen. xv. 12; Num. xxiv. 3, 4, 17; Isa. i. 1; Ezek. i. 1; Dan. viii. 2; Rev. i. 13, 17; iv. 1; v. 1; etc.) The scenery passed before their mind, something like a panoramic view of a landscape, gradually unfolding, in symbolical imagery, forms of glory or of gloom; accompanied with actions of a corresponding character, not unfrequently exhibiting, as in actual occurrence, the future and distant events. The prophets occasionally beheld themselves as actors in the symbolical scenery. In the visionary pageant many objects would appear to be grouped, or lying near together, which were in fact separated by considerable intervals of time; so that it is not to be expected that the prophets would describe what they saw in their connections and relations. As the prophets described objects and events as they appeared to them on the pictures, they would speak of them, not so much in the future, as actually present, or passing before their eyes; or they would describe them as being what they had seen, and would thus throw them into the past tense, just as we describe what we have seen in a landscape, and speak of what we saw. So the prophets write, "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given;" (Isa. ix. 6;) "He is despised;" "He hath no form;" "He hath borne our griefs;" etc. (Isa. lii. 1—12.) While the prophets were under the influence of inspiration, the scenery might produce deep, absorbing, or elevated emotion, which would sometimes greatly affect their physical system. (Gen. xv. 12; Num. xxiv. 16; Dan. x. 8; Ezek. i. 28; Rev. i. 17.) Still they had an intelligent consciousness of what they were describing; they retained their distinct mental faculties; they did not utter frantic ravings like the prophets of Baal. Undoubtedly, as the prophecies are a revelation from God, the prophets understood the predictions they uttered; but they did not necessarily testify or know any thing respecting the time when the events predicted should happen. (Dan. xii. 8, 9; 1 Pet. i. 10—12.) Occasionally even this was revealed unto them. (Jer. ii. 10.) The symbols which were often exhibited to the prophets, they described as they came before them in succession, and in some instances they were subsequently favoured with a more full and particular explanation of the scenery which passed before them. (Ezek. xxxvii. 11.) Though the prophetic office was generally permanent, it need not, and should not, be supposed, that at all times, and on all occasions, the prophets spoke and acted under the special aid and guidance of the Holy Spirit. So much was not true of even the Apostles of Christ. Enough that at all due times, and in appropriate circumstances, they were specially guided and aided by the Spirit of God. Nor is it necessary to assume that all the prophets were endowed with miraculous powers. Such was not the case even with Christian prophets. (1 Cor. xii. 10.) Some interpreters have asserted that all the prophecies were conditional; imagining that if the moral freedom of human actions be allowed, absolute prophecy is impossible, inasmuch as certain foreknowledge is contrary to human freedom, and fixes and renders the event predicted necessary. To this assertion it has been well replied, "That the objection is founded on a false assumption, the Divine foreknowledge having no more influence in effectuating or making certain any event than human foreknowledge in the degree in which it may exist, there being no moral casualty at all in knowledge. This is in the will, which is the determining acting principle in every agent." In the interpretation of the prophecies, some writers incautiously admit what is called a Double Sense; explained as the primary and secondary, the literal and spiritual, the historical and mystical; evidently forgetting that there can be only one, true, proper sense, in the Divine predictions. Indeed, a double sense in the prophecies is unnecessary; inasmuch as it frequently happens, that the so-called spiritual, deeper, or higher sense of the allegorical interpreters, is nothing more than the one real and proper sense, and the assumption of a double or threefold sense rests entirely on misapprehension. So also, the so-called Accommodation exegesis, embraced by the rationalist interinterpreters, in which it is pretended that Jesus and his followers were in the habit of accommodating their teaching to the prevailing opinions and habits of the Jews. This theory is plainly inconsistent with the Divine inspiration of the first teachers of Christianity; inasmuch as it cannot be reconciled with the acknowledgment of the Divine veracity, and integrity and correctness of the Scriptures. This theory must be carefully distinguished from that occasional accommodation of words which had been once used to express one thing, in the manner of type or figure, to the expression of another, no less true and important than the former. But in this case truth itself was not sacrificed, or its integrity tampered with.—See Fulfilled.

PROPHET.—See Prophecy.

PROPHECTS, FALSE. According to Deut. xxvii. 20—22, a false prophet was to be stoned to death. The two cases, in which a person was held convicted of the crime, were, 1. If a prophet merely spoke in the name of Jehovah, he was tolerated; (Jer. xxvi. 8—16; 1 Kings xxii. 1—28;) but if a prediction of his failed of accomplishment, then he was regarded as an impostor. 2. If a person prophesied in the name of any other god, whether his prediction was accomplished or not, he was, at all events, considered a false prophet, and, as such, capital punishment. In later times false prophets abounded, as Moses had foretold. (Deut. xiii. 1—5; Jer. xiv. 14—16; xxiii. 9—27; 1 Kings xxii. 6; Matt. vii. 15.)

PROPHETESS.—Among the remarkable women, who appear to have exercised the gift of prophecy, we find Miriam; (Ex. xv. 20;) Deborah; (Judg. iv. 4;) Hannah; (1 Sam. ii. 1;) Huldah; (2 Kings ii. 14;) the wife of Isaiah; (Isa. viii. 3;) Anna; (Luke ii. 36;) and the four daughters of Philip. (Acts xx. 8, 9.)—See Prophecy.

PROPITIATION.—The Greek word ῥασόμενος, rendered "propitiation" (Rom. iii. 25,) and "mercy seat" (Heb. ix. 5,) designates the covering the propitiatory, i.e. the propitiatory victim, hence propitiation. The Greek word ῥασόμενος, is properly rendered "propitiation." (1 John ii. 2; iv. 10.) Both the terms refer to Christ, who is represented as the propitiatory sacrifice for the sin of the world. His blood alone atones for and covers the guilt of the earnest believer. The propitiatory effect, i.e. covering sin, pardon, is produced on such, and only such, as trust or put confidence in His atoning blood. The immutability of the Most High is not affected by the propitiation of the cross. His moral principles—rectitude, wisdom, and goodness, can undergo no alteration; for to admit such a supposition would imply either an improvement or a deterioration in Him. Moreover, He who is gracious and merciful wants no extraneous motive to induce him to pity and relieve our miserable world. In this sense nothing is needed to render Him propitious. Hence no change in God is necessary or desirable, even if it were possible. (Ex. xxxiv. 6, 7; John iii. 16; iv. 39; x. 17; Eph. i. 3—10; 2 Cor. v. 18, 19.) Nor is His anger a commotion or a mutable passion: it is the calm, dignified, unchangeable, and eternal majesty of the Judge—His necessary love of righteousness and hatred of iniquity. Pardon, under any consideration, brings the true and just idea of a change; but that change, in this case, is not in the mind or character of the Supreme Ruler; but in the administration of His government, and in those outward acts by which that administration is indicated. This change is, in the order of moral right, the effect of an adequate cause. This cause lies in the whole Mediatorial work of the Lord Jesus Christ, but most particularly and essentially in his sufferings and death; and these have constituted the expiation.

PROSELYTE.—A stranger, sojourner. In the later Jewish sense, this term designates a convert from Paganism to Judaism. (Matt. xxiii. 15; Acts ii. 11; vi. 5; xiii. 43.) The Rabbins distinguish two kinds of proselytes; 1. Perfect proselytes, who submitting to circumcision, embraced the Jewish religion in its full extent, and enjoyed all the rights and privileges of Jewish citizenship. (Ex. xii. 48; xx. 10; Jos. Ant. xx. 2, 5.)

2. Proselytes of the gate, i.e. foreigners dwelling among the Jews, who, without being circumcised, conformed to certain Jewish laws and customs. Proselytes were found in great numbers, not only in Judea, but in all the principal cities of the empire. Acts xiii. 15, 60; xvi. 14; xvii. 4, 17; xviii. 7.

PROSEUCHA. This Greek word, properly translated "prayer," (Luke vi. 12; Matt. xvii. 21; Acts xii. 5; Rom. xvi. 30,) is also applied by metonymy to a house, or place of prayer, an oratory. (Acts xvi. 13, 16.) These Jewish proseschae were the houses of individuals, or even some retired place in the open air, for the purposes of devotion, about those towns where they were unable to have a synagogue. The Apostle also preached the gospel in the proseschae and synagogues.

PROVERB. A short moral sentence, expressing an important principle in a forcible manner. (1 Sam. x. 12; Prov. i. 1, 17; Jer. xiii. 28; Mic. vii. 5, 6; Matt. xix, 24; xxiii. 24.) Short and pithy sentences have been employed, among Oriental nations, from the most remote antiquity, as the vehicle of ethical instruction. They were frequently expressed in poetical numbers, as being more easily remembered, and more useful to the great mass of the people, than abstruse arguments, and methodical discourses.

The term is sometimes used as synonymous with "parable." (John xvi. 29.)—See PARABLE.

PROVERBS, THE BOOK OF. The Hebrew title of this book, Mesha\-\-ti\-\-m, designates similitudes, parables, also sententious sayings, apothegms, such as consist in the ingenious comparison of two things; which often pass into proverbs. (Prov. i. 1, 6; x. 1; 1 Sam. x. 12.) This book, of which Solomon is the author, is the code of the old Testament morality. It consists of five principal parts: The first part, containing chapters i.—ix., contains a commendation of wisdom, written in the highest style of poetry, and accompanied by those eternal truths, which can never be uttered too frequently nor with sufficient earnestness. The second part, containing chapters x.—xxii. 16, contains short, sententious maxims, generally unconnected, and applicable to the most diverse situations. The third part, from chapters xxii. 17.—xxxv., containing another commendation of wisdom, with moral declarations, chiefly relating to rish men and nobles. The fourth part comprehends chapters xxxv.—xxix., containing a collection of proverbs, copied and arranged by the learned men under Hesekiah, king of Judah. The fifth part, containing chapters xxx. and xxxi., compose the remainder of the book. The thirtieth chapter is ascribed to Agur, an unknown person. And the thirty-first contains the instruction given to king Lemuel by his mother. The last portion of the chapter contains a description of a virtuous woman, in the original of which the initial letters of the verses follow the order of the alphabet. Of the Hebrew monarch it is said that "he spake three thousand proverbs." (1 Kings v. 12.) As it regards their collection, it is not unlikely that on various occasions he uttered wis ece those and many other sayings, and that the royal notary entered them in the royal annals.

But be this as it may, the entire book is exceedingly weighty, particularly on the score of morals and circum-spect and prudential conduct; it presents the piety developed in the ancient dispensation in a practical and comprehensive aspect; and must have afforded substantial aid to the prophets.

"PROVIDENCE.—The Latin word providentia, means foresight; the corresponding Greek word pronoia, signifies forethought. The term is translated "provision;" (Rom. xiii. 14;) and "providence;" (Acts xxiv. 2;) yet it is not used in reference to the Divine government in the Scriptures. The term Providence is used to signify, in general, the care which God takes of the entire material and intellectual creation. Indeed, if we allow the existence of a Supreme Being who formed all things by His creative energy, we must necessarily allow that He has a perfect foresight of every event which at any time takes place in the natural or moral world. (Acts xv. 18.) The providence of God is generally represented, as not only general, but particular—referring not only to a whole class of objects, but also to the individuals of which it is composed. Indeed, a particular providence is nothing different, except in extent, from a general providence. In the first constitution of things, the Sovereign Ruler of the universe, in His vast plan, took account of all the revolutions of the material world, and all the movements of the capricious wills of men, and undubtedly arranged for every emergency. Everywhere, the phenomena of the material universe display a wisdom and goodness, the most stupendous and astonishing, which must be in harmony with the Creator's plan. And though natural laws and causes have been perfectly adapted and adjusted, and even combined skilfully, to produce the phenomena; yet this is not the mere result of the active powers or forces of nature, but the power of God—the efficient cause—by which effects are produced in the system of nature. Every one knows that the term law, in its proper acceptation, refers to intelligent and voluntary agents; but lifeless and inert substances are incapable of obedience, hence the term, when applied to them, is descriptive, not of a cause or agent, but of a mode of action, and can only mean the order or manner in which effects are produced. Whether the varied phenomena of material nature are regarded as the effects of a single act of God at the beginning, or of His continued agency; in either case the doctrine of Providence, in accordance with His plan, is sustained. In the one case, we conceive of the incalculable multiplicity of antecedents and consequents, which we behold around us as so many distinct chains, all dependent on one vast link or chain attached to the throne of the Eternal; in the other, we conceive of His hand as preserving and connecting every link of every chain in this immense assemblage. So also, the providential government of God over mankind is conducted in a manner suited to their rational natures; without infringing on their free agency. His control over them is complete and unlimited, reaching not only to all the occurrences which befall them, but to all their emotions, volitions, and actions. The incidents which befall ourselves and others often seem to be determined by accident; but what is contingent or casual to us, is not so to God. "With him all discord is harmony—all chance direction." Every circumstance is controlled by sovereign power and infinite wisdom. He so overrules the passions of men, and conforms the agencies of the moral world to His purposes, that the wrath of man praises him. Even our foes of more than mortal might, who are striving with envenomed malignity to accomplish our eternal ruin, would infallibly succeed, unless they were controlled or restrained by that Saviour whose hand holds the chain which circumscribes their movements. However, the various interpositions of Divine Providence are not what we call miraculous interpositions, or the suspension or alteration of the laws of nature; but rather parts of His plan from the first constitution of things, and perfectly in harmony with the course of human affairs. Mr. Taylor has well observed: "This is in fact the great miracle of Providence—that no miracles are needed to accomplish.
its purposes. Countless series of events are travelling on from remote quarters towards the same point; and each series moves in the beaten track of natural occurrences; but their intersection, at the very moment in which they meet, shall serve, perhaps, to give a new direction to the affairs of an empire. The materials of the machinery of Providence are all of common quality; but their combination displays nothing less than infinite skill." The humble believer knows that there is not anything, on the one hand, too vast for the power of God, or too insignificant, on the other, to escape His notice; hence he knows that his concerns are the object of His particular care: "All things work together for good to those that love God."

PRUNING-HOOK. The Hebrew word masmirah, designates the pruning-knife used by the vine dresser; which was no doubt similar to those employed by the Egyptians. (Lev.
xxv. 3, 4; Isa. xviii. 5.) In Isa. ii. 4; Joel iv. 10; Mic. iv. 3, the margin reads "scythe."

PSALMS, BOOK OF. The Hebrew title of this book, tehillim, properly signifies praises, hence psalms, hyms, or songs of praise; an appellation which is strictly applicable to a part only of the Psalms, as many of them are elegies and prayers. The Psalms are lyric compositions in the proper sense, for with the Hebrews song and music were connected; and the book may with much propriety be called the Hebrew Anthology, as it is a collection of the inspired poetry of the nation, containing the productions of different authors belonging to different periods. Many of these ancient poems were consecrated to a religious use; and a few others are simply forms of prayer. The contents and character of the Psalms are divided, by De Wette, into six classes.

I. Hymns in praise of Jehovah, from various motives and views, e.g. as the Creator of the universe and Lord of all; (Ps. viii. xix. lxv. xcvii. cxiv. cxvii.,;) as the Protector and Helper of Israel; (Ps. xx. xxix.

xxxii. xlvi. xlvii. lxvi. lxvii. lixv. lxvi. cxxv. cxxvi. cxxvii.) or as the Helper of individuals, with thank-giving for deliverance; (Ps. xlvii. xxx.
xxxiv. xl. cxxxvii.) while others refer to the more special attributes of Jehovah. (Ps. xc. cxcv.)

II. Temple Hymns, sung in the temple service. (Ps. xv. xxiv. lxviii. lxax. lxxxvii. cxxxv. cxxxiv. cxxxv.)
So also pilgrim songs.—See Degrees.

III. Religious and moral Psalms of a general character; (Ps. xxix. xlii.
xlvi. xcvi. cxxv. cxxvii. cxxviii.) longing for the sanctuary;
(Ps. xlii. xliii.) and prayers for the forgiveness of sin. (Ps. li.) So also, didactic songs relating to religion.
(Ps. i. xv. xxxii. xxxiv. l. cxxxviii. cxxxviii.)

IV. Elegiac Psalms, containing complaints under affliction, etc. This class has several subdivisions: 1. The complaints of particular individuals.
(Ps. vii. xvi. lii. lv. lvi. cx.)
2. National laments. (Ps. xliiv. lxxiv. xxxiv. xxxv. cxxvi.) Some are both individual and national lamentations.
(Ps. lxix. lxxvii. cxxi.)
3. General Psalms of complaint. (Ps. x. xiv. xxxvi.) Didactic Psalms, respecting the goodness of God, etc. (Ps. xxxvii.
xli. lxiii.)

V. Psalms relating to the king, patriotic hymns, etc. (Ps. xx. xxxi. xlv. cx.)

VI. National Psalms, containing allusions to the history of the He-brows, and of their relation to Jehovah.
(Ps. lxxxvii. cv. cvi. cxiv.)

The Messianic Psalms ought to constitute a separate class. (Ps. ii. xvi. xxxii. lxxii. cx.) Many of the prophetic Psalms are distributed among the other classes. All the Psalms, with the exception of thirty-four, have titles or superscriptions, which designate either their supposed authors, or the music to be employed, or the historical occasion, or some special use of the Psalm. In the Hebrew they are united with the Psalms, and generally form the first verse. Many of them are evidently from the hands of redactors, and are of later date; for this reason our English translators have very properly separated them from the Psalms, and given them merely as superscriptions. Those without superscriptions are generally called Orphan Psalms. Seventy-four Psalms are ascribed to David in the Hebrew; to these the Septuagint adds eleven more. To Moses is assigned Ps. xc. Twelve are ascribed to Asaph; two to Solomon; one to Heman; and one to Ethan. Eleven Psalms are assigned to the sons of Korah; but many scholars imagine they were only committed to the Korahites for the purpose of being set to music. Many of the anonymous Psalms were written later than the time of David, probably by pious, persecuted prophets and others in the time of the kings; some were composed at the period of the Exile, or even later, containing recollections of the Exile; (Ps. xlv. ii. lx. lxxiv. lxxxvi. lxxix. lxxxii. lxxxv. cxvi. cxxi. cxxvi. cxxvii. cxxxiv.) but none so late as the period of the Maccabees. The book of Psalms would seem to have comprised six divisions, each closing with a doxology.

Book I. comprises Psalms i.—xli.

II. " xlii.—lxii.

III. " lxiii.—lxxxix.

IV. " xc—cxi.

V. " cxi—cl.

As to the arrangement, perhaps it may be best explained by the hypothesis of a gradual origin of each book or division, from the time of David, B.C. 1050, to the time of Ezra, B.C. 458—when, most likely, the several books were arranged and published in one volume. It is quite manifest, that in general the Psalms of David's time were collected first; and so in succession, as Psalms worthy of introduction were composed. Now and then some more ancient compositions make their appearance in the later books, which had been overlooked in the former compilations; and occasionally later Psalms find a place in the first book. The character and value of the Psalms, so far as they contain the expressions of religious and moral affections, are, perhaps, higher than those of any other book of the old Testament. They exhibit the sublimest conceptions of God, as the Creator, Preserver, and Governor of the universe—to say nothing of the prophetic character of many of them, and their relation to the Messiah, and the great plan of human redemption. They present us, too, with the most perfect models of child-like resignation and devotedness, of unwavering faith, and confidence in God. Every variety of religious emotion and experience is expressed with unmistakable exactness in this venerable treasure-house of devotion. In later times the Scriptures were divided into three distinctive portions, "the Law, the Prophets, and the Psalms." (Luke xxiv. 44.) For the imprecatory Psalms.—See CURSE.

Psaltery.—See Harp.

Ptolemais.—See Accho.

Pua.—See Phuvah.

Puah = mouth. 1. One of the Hebrew midwives living in Egypt. (Ex. i. 15.) 2. A descendant of Issachar. (Judg. xxi.) 8.—See Phuvah.

Pubastum.—See Pi-bezeeth.

Publican. The Greek word telones, rendered "publican," designates a farmer of the taxes or customs. The public revenues of the Greeks and Romans were usually farmed out. The purchaser paid to the government a certain sum for the privilege of collecting the taxes and customs of a district. Zacchaeus is called "the chief man among the publicans." (Luke xix. 2.) The chief collector also employed agents as under-collectors, who were excessively odious, because they frequently extorted more than the legal tribute. Matthew was a deputy-publican. (Matt. x. 3; Luke v. 27.) The publicans of the lower orders were looked upon as so many thieves and pickpockets. Some of the Jews, as the Galileans, or Herodians, especially, submitted with the greatest impatience to pay tribute to foreigners—the Romans—and thought it even unlawful. Those of their own nation, who undertook this office of publican, they looked upon as heathen. (Matt. vi. 46; ix. 10; Luke iii. 12; v. 29; vii. 29, 34; xviii. 10-13; Mark ii. 15, 16.)

PUBLIUS = common. The governor of Melita at the time of Paul’s shipwreck. (Acts xxviii. 1-8.)

PUDENS = bashful. A Christian residing at Rome. (2 Tim. iv. 21.)

dynasty at Nineveh, Semiramis descended upon Babylon, either as a refugee or as a conqueror, and there erected many public works, and instituted the Atra of Nabonassar in B.C. 747. Among the ruins of the northwest palace at Nimrud, Mr Layard exhumed six elaborately-executed slabs, representing the king among his attendants. All the figures are sumptuously attired. We give a copy of the figure of the king, whom we suppose to be the Pul of the Scriptures. 2. A people and region, probably on the coast of Africa. (Isa. lxvi. 19.)

PULPIT. The Hebrew word migdol, rendered “pulpit,” (Neh. viii. 4.) signifies a tower; also an elevated stage, whence Ezra read the law unto the people. (Neh. viii. 4; ix. 4.)

PULSE. A general term, applied to those grains or seeds which grow in pods, as beans, peas, vetches, etc. (2 Sam. xvii. 28.) The term is used for seed-herbs, i.e. vegetable food, as opposed to the more delicate kinds of food. (Dan. i. 12-16.)

PUNISHMENT. The penalty imposed on the violator of law. (Gen. iv. 13; Lev. xxvi. 43; Heb. x. 28, 29.) The different sorts of capital punishment alluded to in the Scriptures are:

1. Stoning. (Deut. xiii. 10.)

2. Hanging alive; (2 Sam. xxi. 9;) hanging or burning the body was a posthumous insult. (Gen. xi. 19; Josh. viii. 29.)

3. Decapitation, or slaying with the sword. (2 Sam. iv. 7; Matt. xiv. 10.)

4. Precipitation, or throwing from a rock. (2 Chron. xxv. 12.)

5. Drowning. (Matt. xiv. 6.)

6. Cutting, or sawing asunder. (Dan. ii. 5; Heb. xi. 37.)

7. Burning alive. (Jer. xxix. 22.)

8. Beaten, or drummed to death—“tortured.” (Heb. xiii. 35.)

9. Bruising, or pounding to death. (Prov. xxvi. 22.)

10. Exposing to wild beasts. (Dan. vi. 16; 1 Cor. xv. 32.)

11. Crucifixion. (Matt. xxvii. 35.)

Other punishments were:

1. Scourging with a rod or whip. (Deut. xix. 8.)

2. Cutting or plucking off the hair. (Isa. i. 6; Neh. xiii. 25.)

3. Blinding. (2 Kings xxv
PUN

7.) 4. Banishment. (Rev. i. 9.) 5. Imprisonment. (2 Chron. xvi. 10.)
6. Retaliation was acknowledged in its fullest extent; (Ex. xxi. 23—25; Lev.
xxiv. 19—22;) and restitution or compensation was strictly enjoined in the Mosaic institutes. (Ex. xxi. 1—36; xxii. 1—17.) Among the ecclesiastical punishments was excommunication, wherein the offender was looked upon as a heathen. (John ix. 22, 34.)
Generally, ordinary transgressions were stoned for by specified offerings.
—See OFFERINGS.

PUNISHMENT, EVERLASTING.—
As human government, in relation to offenders, is simply a rule of terror, its aim in retribution is not reformation, insomuch as its one object is to deter from offence by punishing for offences. A criminal may be reformed, but his reformation must be the result of moral influences rather than the penal awards of law. It belongs not to the functions of the magistrate—whose sole vocation is, for the weal of society, to wield the “terror” against the evil-doer—to concern himself with the reformation of criminals, any further than the penalties of the law may tend to reform them. When the penalty is capital, the reformatory principle is, of course, utterly precluded; and when not capital, the principle is the same. And though the foremost feature in retribution be the punishment of the delinquent, yet the basis of that feature is rather an awakened feeling in favour of those who have suffered from his hand, than a feeling of hate aroused against the transgressor. So the Divine government, in its relation to men—though its great aim in the dispensation of grace and mercy is to reform and save them—has its dispensation of pure law, when it will by no means clear the guilty. Often in this world the stroke comes upon the guilty, not to reform, but simply to destroy, that others may be warned against transgression. But, as in the present life, retributive punishment is imperfect, hereafter, such as have finally resisted all reformatory tendencies will be dealt with on grounds embracing nothing reformatory. And this arrangement in the government of Him who is “Judge of all the earth,” resolves itself, not so much into the hate of one man, as in the love of many. Indeed, it is not improbable that future punishment may follow an impious life in the way of natural consequence, in accordance with the established laws of the Divine government, just as poverty, sickness, infamy, or untimely death may attend a career of wickedness in the present life. And who shall say that the domains of the Infinite can have no place for the infliction of penalty on the guilty, purely for the sake of the not guilty? The magnitude of that misery which the finally impenitent entail upon themselves, and which awaits a raised body and a physical restoration in the future place of punishment, is frequently described as the action of elemental fire—“hell fire,” “the lake of fire.” The sinner is “cast into it;” he is “tormented in it for ever.” Some of these expressions, so dreadfully recurrent, may be figurative, because the naked reality of the retribution cannot be set before our mind. But future retribution is not confined to inflictions from without, and the painful fellowship of wicked spirits. The Divine wrath afflicts their souls, in that deep and unabating remorse—“the worm that shall not die”—as well as in “the fire which shall not be quenched.” In the present life, as the result of folly or transgression, the retrospective, retributive power of conscience is occasionally seen, felt, and known, in that dreadful remorse which compels the sinner to say, “My sin is ever before me.” And in the future life, when the mind will be imbued with finer feelings, the power of conscience will be no less, as memory, that treacherous friend but faithful monitor, recalls, unbidden and unchanged, the existence of the follies of the past, to claim their condemnation from a sterner sense of justice, and punish by their recollection. The finally impenitent will be “punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of His power.” If the righteous will be elevated, with “bodies fashioned like unto His glorious body,” and on the plains of light be permitted to see God, and to gaze upon the ever-unfolding glory of His power, it is not improbable, that those who have to the last rejected every overture of mercy and of grace, will be doomed not only to the destruction of the very appearance of humanity, but to sink in the lowest depth of misery and woe—everlasting exile from “His presence,” and from every existing object that yields evidence of the glory of His power—whence the mind will prey on the recollections, thoughts, feelings, and scenes of departed folly, in blackness and darkness for ever. (Matt. xiii. 40—50; xxv. 32—46; Mark ix. 44—48; Luke. xiii. 28; xvi. 22—25; Rom. i. 5—9; 2 Cor. v. 10; 2 Thess. i. 9.) See Everlasting.

PUNITES.—See PhuvaH.

PUNON = darkness. A city of Edom, not far from Mount Hor, and a station of the Hebrews. (Num. xxxiii. 42, 43.) It is also called “Pinon.” (Gen. xxxvi. 41; 1 Chron. i. 52.)

PUR.—See Purim.

PURIFICATION. A ceremony for the purpose of cleansing from legal impurities, or defilements; (Num. xix. 9;) mostly performed with water, sometimes with blood, and with oil. (Heb. ix. 21, 22; Ex. xxvi. 26—29; Lev. viii. 10, 11.) Occasionally fire was used for the purpose of purging or purifying. (Isa. i. 25; x. 26; Zech. xiii. 9; Mal. iii. 3.) By purifications the spreading of contagious diseases would be effectually prevented, which, in hot climates, are peculiarly rapid and fatal. (Ex. xix. 10—13; xxiv. 5—8; xxx. 26—28; Num. xix. 20; 1 Sam. xvi. 5; Lev. xii. 1—15; xiii. 1—59; xiv. 1, 57; xv. 1—33; Deut. xiv. 8.) The Mosaic purifications were typical of the pardon and sanctification of believers. (Heb. ix. 13, 14; Tit. ii. 14.)—See Heifer.

PURIM = lots. A festival celebrated by the Jews on the fourteenth and fifteenth days of the month Adar, in memory of their deliverance from the cruel designs of Haman. (Est. ix. 24—32; iii. 7.)

PURPLE. The Hebrew word aregaman, rendered “purple,” (Ex. xxv. 4; xxvi. 1, 31, 36; xxvii. 16; Num. iv. 13; Ezek. xxvii. 16; Prov. xxxi. 22; Jer. x. 9,) appears to designate the whole class of dyes of a bright red colour, specially purple, reddish purple. The Egyptians used the carthamus tinctorius for red; and from them the Hebrews acquired the art of dyeing the curtains for the tabernacle, and also the sacred vestments. Some understand the aregaman to designate the celebrated purple dye, obtained from the juice of the Purpura, or Murex, a species of univalve shell-animal, found on the coasts of the Mediterranean. The Greek word porphura is generally understood to designate a garment of the same costly dye; (Mark xv. 17, 20; Luke xvi. 19; John xix. 2; Rev. xvii. 4;) though occasionally the Greek word kokkinos, i.e. coccus-dyed, scarlet, or rather crimson, seems to be nearly synonymous, just as in English purple-red and crimson are often interchanged. (Matt. xxvii. 28.) The murex trunculus, which yielded the celebrated Tyrian purple, is still abundant in the neighbourhood of Tyre. Mr. Wilde, when examining the remains of ancient floors and foundations along the southern coast of the former island of Tyre, found a number of round holes cut in the solid sandstone rock, varying in size from that of an ordinary metal pot to that of a great boiler. Many of these reservoirs were filled with a brecia of shells, which showed that these apertures were the vats or mortars in which the shells were pounded, for the purpose of extracting from them the juice which the animal contained. Pliny says, "when the Tyrians light upon any great purples, they take the fish out of the shells to get the blood; but the lesser they press and grind in certain mills, and so gather the rich humour which issueth from them. Thysitata was also a noted place for dyeing purple.
(Acts xvi. 14.)—See SCARLET.
PURSE.—See GIRDLE.
PUT.—See Phut.
PUTEOLI = the wells or baths.
A maritime town of Campania, in Italy, about eight miles north-west of Naples; now called Pozzuolo. On account of its numerous hot springs and baths, it was a favourite place of resort for the Romans. (Acts xxviii.
13.) PUTIEL = afflicted of God. The father-in-law of Eleazar. (Ex. vi. 25.)
PYGARG. The name of a species of eagle. But the Hebrew word dishon, translated "pygarg," in the margin bison, is properly the name of a species of gazelle, or mountain goat.
(Deut. xiv. 5.)
PYTHON. This word, in Greek mythology, is the name of a serpent slain by Apollo, then transferred to Apollo himself; in later times used for diviners, soothsayers, held to be inspired of the Pythian Apollo. The Pythones, like the oboth = "familiar spirits," among the idolatrous Hebrews, were centriologistes; the god or spirit that possessed them was supposed to speak from their bellies without any motion of the lips. (Lev.
xix. 21; 1 Sam. xxviii. 3, 7, 8, 9.)
The damsel at Philippi is said to have been "possessed with a spirit of dimagination," a "spirit of Python," i.e. of a diviner, a soothsay-ing Demon. (Acts xvi. 16.)—See DI-VINATION.

QUEEN. Though the Hebrew kings practised polygamy, there was always one chief wife at the head of the harem, under the name of gebirah = mistress, lady. The term is applied to Tahpenes, the wife of Pharaoh; (1 Kings xi. 19) and to Jezebel, the wife of Ahab; (2 Kings x. 18;) and to the king’s mother. (1 Kings xv.
13; 2 Chron. xv. 16.) Indeed, throughout the East, the king’s mother has always approached the nearest in state to that of a European queen.
(1 Kings i. 28; ii. 18; xv. 13;
2 Kings ix. 7–37; x. 13.) The Hebrew word shegal also designates the king’s consort, the "queen;"
(Ps. xlv. 9; Neh. ii. 6;) also the king’s wives, as distinguished from his con-cubines. (Dan. v. 2, 8, 23.) So also the word malakah is used for "queen,"
i.e. the wife of the Persian king; (Est. i. 9–18; vii. 1–8;) also for the wives of Solomon, in opposition to

QUAIL. The Hebrew word selar, like the Arabic selwa, denotes the "quail," a bird belonging to a subdivision of the grouse family. It is somewhat smaller than the partridge, and differs from it in the absence of the red naked eye-brows and of spurs on the legs. The common quail is found throughout the whole of southern and temperate Europe and western Asia, but is everywhere migratory.
The flights of quails, which were providentially brought by a wind from the sea, on two occasions, in the spring of the year, in order to supply the murmuring Hebrews with meat in the desert, were evidently directing their course northwards from Africa and southern Arabia.
(Ex. xvi. 13; Num. xi. 31, 32; Ps.
v. 40.)
QUARRIES. The Hebrew word
Penilim, rendered "quarries," signiifies images, perhaps horn-stones, and is supposed to have been the name of a place not far from Gilgal. (Judg. iii.
19, 26.)
QUARTUS = the fourth. A Christian resident at Corinth. (Rom. xvi.
23.)
QUATERNION. A detachment of four soldiers, the usual number of a Roman night-guard, which was relieved every three hours by four others.
(Acts xii. 4, 6.)
QUE

his concubines. (Sol. Song vi. 8, 9.) The same term is used of the queen of Sheba, a queen reigning in her own right. (1 Kings, x. 1—4; x. 13.)

QUEEN OF HEAVEN. See ASHTORETH.

QUICKSANDS. The Greek word syrtis, rendered "quicksands," designates a sand-bank, or shoal, dangerous to navigation. (Acts xxvii. 17.) Two dangerous sandbanks on the northern coast of Africa were well known to the ancient mariners; one called Syrtes Major, between Cyrene and Leptis; and the other Syrtes Minor, farther to the west. The Syrtes Major was the object of alarm to the mariners of the ship in which Paul had embarked. See MELITA.

QUIVER. A case for arrows. (Isa. xlix. 2; Jer. v. 16.) The Assyrians richly decorated their quivers with fanciful designs. "Quiver" is also used figuratively for house, and arrows for children. (Ps. cxxvii. 5.)

R

RAAMAH=a trembling. A city supposed to have been settled by the descendants of Raamah, the son of Cush. (1 Chron. i. 9; Ezek. xxvii. 22.) The Septuagint, in Gen. x. 7, identifies this city with Regma, on the Persian Gulf.

RAAMIAH=thunder of Jehovah. One who returned from the Exile. (Neh. vii. 7.)—See REELAIASH.

RAAMSES=Ra, i.e. sun approves. A city of Egypt, in the land of Goshen, where the Hebrews lived and were fortified by Pharaoh. The name is sometimes written "Rameses," and appears to have been derived from that of one of the kings. But as the name, in this form, does not seem to have been borne by any Pharaoh until considerably subsequent to the time of Moses, some have supposed that the exodus of the Hebrews occurred many years later than the period usually assigned for that event. We are inclined to think that the city was built for the Egyptian monarch, Amos, or Amosis, the first oppressor of the Hebrews; and was named after him, with Ra=sun, prefixed, as it was probably dedicated to that luminary. A similar compound to Rameses occurs in the Egyptian name Thothmose= Thoth approves, and with moses or moses in the same hieroglyphs. (Gen. xlvi. 11; Ex. i. 11.) In later times, several of the Egyptian monarchs bore the name Ramessu, Rams, or Rameses. The hieroglyphs of the first Pharaoh of this name read—

RAB

Ra m s t w.

The region or "land of Goshen" is also designated "the land of Rameses," that is, "the land whose chief city is Rameses." (Ex. xii. 37; Num. xxxiiii. 3, 5.) The translators of the Septuagint have justly identified the Hecopolis=city of heroes, of their time with the ancient Rameses. (Gen. xlvii. 28, 29.) This ancient city was situated between the Pelusiac arm of the Nile and the Bitter Lakes to the north-west of these lakes, at a place in the valley now called Abu Keisheid, where there is an extensive heap of ruins, and a great granite block, upon which, in relief, are hewn out three figures, representing the deities Ra and Tum, with Rameses II. between them.

RABBAN=great city, metropolis. 1. The capital of the Ammonites; (Josh. xiii. 25;) also called "Rabbath." (Deut. iii. 11; Jer. xxii. 20.) This city was captured by David; (2 Sam. xi. 1—17; xii. 26; 1 Chron. xx. 1—3;) and included in the tribe of Gad. During the Assyrian captivity, the Ammonites recovered Rabbah. (Jer. xlix. 1—6; Ezek. xxi. 1—7; Am. i. 14.) It was subsequently subject to Egypt, and called Philadelphia. The extensive ruins of this ancient city, now called Amman, are situated in a valley, but still very elevated, traversed by the stream Mojet Amman, and are about twenty miles south-east of Es-Salt. Heaps of various ruins are scattered around in bewildering confusion; among them are seen large blocks of stones, Corinthian pediments, cornices, capitals, pilasters, and magnificent columns, some of them partly buried in the earth.
RAB

2. A city in the tribe of Judah. (Jos. xv. 60.)

RABBATH.—See RABBAN.

RABBI=teacher, doctor, master. A title of honour in the Jewish schools. (Matt. xxiii. 7, 8; xxvi. 25, 40; Mark ix. 6; xi. 21; xiv. 45; John i. 38, 47; iii. 2, 26; iv. 31; vi. 25; ix. 2; xi. 8.) Jesus was so called by His disciples, and also by the people. The terms Rab, Rabbi, and Rabboni, were probably used interchangeably. (John xx. 16.) In Mark x. 51 Rabboni is translated "Lord."

RABRITH=multitude. A city in Issachar. (Josh. xix. 20.)

RABBONI.—See RABBI.

RAB-MAG.—See MAGI.

RAB-SARIS=chief-eunuch. One of the Assyrian generals. (2 Kings xvii. 17.)

RAB-SHAKEH=chief-cup-bearer. One of the Assyrian generals. (2 Kings xvii. 17—37; xix. 4, 8; Isa. xxxvi. 1—22; xxxvii. 4, 8.)

RACA=empty, worthless. Whoever applied this term of contempt to his brother was liable to punishment by the Sanhedrin. (Matt. v. 22.)

RACE. Races were evidently known to the Hebrews. (Eccl. ix. 11.) And in the new Testament there are allusions to the various gymnastic games celebrated by the Greeks. Comparisons are sometimes drawn from the public races, as expressing strenuous and persevering effort in the Christian life and cause. (1 Cor. ix. 24—27; 2 Tim. ii. 5; iv. 6—8; Heb. xii. 1.)

RACHAB.—See RABAH.

RACHAL=traffic. A city in the tribe of Judah. (1 Sam. xxx. 29.)

RACHEL=a cre. The youngest of the two daughters of Laban, whom Jacob married. Rahel or Rachel was the mother of Joseph and Benjamin.

RAI

(Gen. xxxix. 18; xxx. 25.) In giving birth to Benjamin she died near Bethlehem, where her sepulchre, a small square building of stone, with a dome, evidently modern, is shown to this day. (Gen. xxxvi. 16—20; 1 Sam. x. 2; Matt. ii. 16—18; Jer. xxxxi. 15.)—See RAMAH.

RADDAI=treading down. A son of Jesse. (1 Chron. ii. 14.)

RAGAU.—See REU.

RAGUEL=friend of God. The father of Jethro; (Num. x. 29;) also written "Reuel." (Ex. ii. 18.)—See JETHRO.

1. RAHAB=large. A woman of Jericho, who received into her house and afterwards concealed the two Hebrew spies. In the siege of the city, Rahab and her family were protected by the Hebrews from the general massacre of the inhabitants. (Josh. ii. 1—24; vi. 17—27.) She is called "a harlot;" but the proof of her reformation is found in the evidence of her faith. (Heb. xi. 31; Jas. ii. 25.) She subsequently married Salmon, a prince of Judah, and became an ancestress of David. (Ruth iv. 20; Matt. i. 5.)

2. RAHAB=violence, pride, also an aquatic monster. An appellation for Egypt, designating the insolence and violence of its princes and inhabitants. (Ps. lxxxvii. 4; lxxxix. 10; Isa. ii. 9.)

RAHAM=bilicy. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. ii. 44.)

RAHEL.—See RACHEL.

RAIMENT.—See GARMENTS.

RAIN. As the heated atmosphere rises, it becomes cooler, and the aqueous vapour exhaled from the land and the ocean, which it contains, is partly or wholly condensed, thus forming a cloud or mist, which, by the action of the electric fluid, forms an aggregation of small drops, it is then precipitated to the earth as rain. In Palestine, Dr. Robinson observes, the whole period from October to March now constitutes only one continual season of rain, without any regularly intervening term of prolonged fair weather. Unless, therefore, there has been some change in the climate since the times of the new Testament, the "early rain" seems rather to have implied the first showers in October, which revived the parched and thirsty earth and prepared it for the seed; and the "latter rain" the showers of March, which continued to refresh and forward both the ripening crops and the normal products of the fields. (Deut. xi. 14; Hos. vi. 3; Prov. xvi. 15; Luke xii. 54; James v. 7.) Showers occur occasionally in April and May, but they are mild and refreshing.
RAI

RAINBOW. A natural phenomenon which is formed by rays of light, from the sun or moon, striking drops of falling rain, being refracted in entering them, reflected back, in part, from the opposite side of the drops, and refracted again on leaving them, so as to produce prismatic colours, some of which meet the eye. As the same laws by which the celestial arch is produced exist from the beginning, the bow undoubtedly appeared in the interval between the creation and the deluge; so that the language of the covenant to Noah and his sons may merely signify, "the preservation of the earth from a deluge shall be as necessary an effect of my promise as that bow is the necessary effect of the shining of the sun upon the falling drops of rain." (Gen. ix. 8—15; Isa. liv. 9, 10; Ezek. i. 28; Rev. iv. 3; x. 1.)

RAISINS. The Hebrew word tsimmukim signifies dried grapes, bunches or cakes of raisins, called by the Italians simmuki. (Num. vi. 3; 1 Sam. xxv. 18; xxx. 12; 2 Sam. xvi. 1; 1 Chron. xii. 40.)

RAKEM—variegation, flower gardening. A descendant of Manasseh. (1 Chron. vili. 16.)

RAKKATH = shore. A city of Naphtali. (Josh. xiri. 35.)

RAKKON = thinness. A city of Dan, lying on the sea coast. (Josh. xiri. 46.)

RAM.—See SHERR.

RAM = high. 1. A descendant of RAMAH = a high place, height.

1. A town of Benjamin, situated on a hill in the vicinity of Gibeah and Geba. (Josh. xvii. 25; Judg. iv. 6; xix. 13; 1 Kings xv. 17, 21, 22.) Here the king of Assyria appears to have disposed of his prisoners, after the overthrow of the kingdom of Israel, which occasioned such great lamentation, that the prophet introduces Rahel or Rachel, the maternal ancestor of the tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh, as bewailing the captivity of her descendants. (2 Kings xvii. 6, 20; Isa. x. 29; Jer. xxxxi. 15.) This lamentation adumbrated the great lamentation at Bethlehem, when the infants were massacred, under the edict of Herod. (Matt. ii. 18.) Here the Chaldean general, in the overthrow of the kingdom of Judah, appears also to have disposed of his captives. (Jer. xl. 1; Ezr. li. 26; Neh. vii. 30; xii. 33.) Ramah, or "Rama," (Matt. ii. 18.) is now a miserable village, called er-Ramah, about six miles north of Jerusalem. Several large squared stones, and also columns, lie scattered about in the fields. 2. A city of Asher, not far from Hazry, where are several ancient sarcophagi. (Josh. xiri. 29.) 3. A city of Naphtali, with an extensive fertile plain. (Josh. xiri. 36.) 4. See RAMATHAIM-ZOPHIM, and RAmOTH.

RAMATH = heights. A city in Simeon; properly "Ramath-Negeb," i.e. Ramath, or Ramoth, of the south. (Josh. xiri. 8; 1 Sam. xxx. 27.)

RAMATHAIM-ZOPHIM = Ramah of the Zophites. A city in the land of Zuph, in the mountains of Ephraim; where Samuel, the prophet, lived, died, and was buried. (1 Sam. i. 1; ix. 5.) This place is also called "Ramah." (1 Sam. i. 19; vii. 17; vili. 4; xv. 34; xvi. 13; xix. 18—24; xx. 1:
RAM

xxv. 1; xxviii. 3.) This Ramah has been identified, by some writers, with Arimatheae; and even Gesenius locates it near the Frank Mountain. Schwartz, the Jewish rabbi, places it to the north-west of the ancient Samaria. Dr. Robinson thinks that a reminiscence of Ramatham-Zophim, and of the land of Zuph, may be contained in the name Soba, a place with ruins, situated on a lofty hill, which forms a part of the ridge of Nebi Samwil, about five miles west of Jerusalem.

RAMATHITE. An inhabitant of Ramah. (1 Chron. xxvii. 27.)

RAMATH-LEHI.—See LEHI.

RAMATH-MIZPEH.—See Mizpeh.

RAMESSES.—See RAAMESSES.

RAMIAH = whom Jehovah hath set. One who had taken a strange wife. (Ex. x. 25.)

RAMOTH = heights. 1. A city in Gilead, within the limits of the tribe of Gad; (Josh. xxx. 32;) called also "Ramah," and "Ramoth-Gilead." (2 Kings viii. 28, 29; 1 Kings iv. 13; xxii. 1-37; 2 Chron. xviii. 1-34; xxii. 5, 6.) It was one of the cities of refuge. (Deut. iv. 43; Josh. xx. 8; 1 Chron. vi. 80.) During the reigns of the later kings of Israel, Ramah was the occasion of several wars between them and the kings of Syria. (2 Kings ix. 1-14.) 2. See RAMATH, and REMETH.

RAM'S HORN.—See TRUMPET.

RAM'S SKINS.—See LEATHER.

RANSOM. The price paid to liberate a captive; also a commutation for certain offences, and even for life. (1 Cor. vi. 19, 20; Ex. xxi. 30; Job xxxiii. 24; xxxvi. 18; Ps. lxi. 7.) The poll-tax of half a shekel for every Hebrew, was called "the ransom" or "atonement money." (Ex. xxx. 12-16.) Some of the sacrifices were commutations or ransoms; (Lev. iv. 1-35; v. 1-19;) hence our Lord is said to have "given Himself a ransom for all." (1 Tim. ii. 6; Matt. xx. 28; Mark x. 45; Tit. ii. 14; 1 Pet. i. 18.)—See REDEMPTION.

REC

RAPHA = high, tall. 1. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. vii. 2.)

2. A descendant of Ner; (1 Chron. viii. 37;) also called "Rephaiah." (1 Chron. ix. 43.) 3. See GIANT.

RAPHU = healed. A descendant of Benjamin. (Num. ix. 9.)

RAVEN. The Hebrew word orach designates the birds belonging to the genus corvus, especially the crow, the raven, which are common in the East; (Gen. viii. 7;) and were regarded as unclean. (Lev. xi. 15; Deut. xiv. 14.)

The blackness of the raven was proverbial; (Sol. Song v. 11;) it delights in solitary places; (Isa. xxxiv. 11; Prov. xxx. 17;) and compels its young to leave the nest as soon as they can supply themselves with food. (Job xxxviii. 41; Ps. cxlvii. 19; Luke xii. 24.) The orachim, not a people residing at a neighbouring village, but rachim, were Divinely commissioned to supply the prophet Elijah with food, while hidden in the neighbourhood of the brook Cherith. (1 Kings xvii. 1-7.)

RAZOR.—See Hair.

REALIA = whom Jehovah cares for. A descendant of Reuben. (1 Chr. v. 5.)

REALIAH = whom Jehovah cares for. 1. A descendant of Judah; (1 Chron. iv. 2;) also called "Haroech." (1 Chron. ii. 52.) 2. One whose posterity returned from the Exile. (Est. ii. 47; Neh. vii. 50.)

REAPING.—See Harvest.

REBA = four. A king of the Midianites. (Num. xxxi. 8; Josh. xiii. 21.)

REBEKAH = a noosed cord, snare. The daughter of Bethuel and sister of Laban, who became the wife of Isaac. (Gen. xxv. 15-57.) She received a Divine intimation concerning the future destiny of her infants, Jacob and Esau. (Gen. xxv. 20-36; xlix. 31; Rom. ix. 10.)—See Isaac.

RECEIPT OF CUSTOM.—See Publican.

RECHAB = a rider. 1. The son of Hemath the Kenite, and probably a descendant of Jethro. (1 Chron. ii. 55; 2 Kings x. 15, 28.) 2. One of the assassins of Ishboseth. (2 Sam.
iv. 2.) 3. The father of Malchiah. (Neh. iii. 14.)

RECHABITES. A tribe of Kenites, descended from Rechab, the son of Hemath. (1 Chron. ii. 56.) Jondadab, the son or descendant of Rechab, was associated with Jehu in the destruction of the idolatrous house of Ahab. (2 Kings x. 16—27.) He laid an injunction on his posterity not to drink wine, nor to build houses, but to dwell in tents all their lives. This injunction they continued to observe for above three hundred years. (Jer. xxxv. 1—19.) During the siege of Jerusalem, under Nebuchadnezzar, the Rechabites probably withdrew into the desert, and maintained their independent existence as a pastoral people. A tribe of Arabs, in the neighbourhood of Mecca and Medina, still boast of their descent from Rechab, and profess a kind of Judaism.

RECHAH=the side, hinder part. A place mentioned in 1 Chron. iv. 12.

RECONCILIATION.—See ATONEMENT.

RECRDAR. The Hebrew word mazzar signifies a recorder, or, as in the margin, remembrancer or writer of chronicles, i.e. the king's secretary or historiographer. Many of the records or annals written by the recorders are, under Divine guidance, wrought up in sacred history. (2 Sam. viii. 16; 2 Kings xviii. 18; 2 Chron. xxxiv. 8; Isa. xxxvi. 8.) The royal annals of Egypt and Assyria were sometimes recorded on the obelisks and slabs, and some of them have contributed to the illustration of the inspired Records.

REDEEMER. The Hebrew word goel, rendered "redeemer," denotes the nearest kinsman, the avenger of the blood of the slain; (Num. xxxv. 19; Deut. xix. 6, 12;) whose right was to redeem the family inheritance when alienated; (Num. v. 8; Lev. xxv. 25; Jer. xxxii. 7, 8;) and to redeem his brother from servitude; (Lev. xxv. 47—55;) and also, if his brother died without issue, his duty was to fulfill the kinsman's part. (Ruth iii. 12, 13; iv. 1—12.) The term goel, i.e. "Redeemer," is spoken of the Most High as interposing His mercy and power in redeeming His people; (Job xix. 25;) especially the Hebrews from Egypt; (Ex. vi. 6;) and from the Exile; (Isa. xiii. 1; xiv. 22; xlviii. 20;) and also of Christ, the "Redeemer," the "Deliverer;" (Isa. lix. 20; Rom. xi. 26;) inasmuch as He is our kinsman, the avenger of man upon his spiritual foe; (Heb. ii. 14—18; 1 Cor. xv. 45—57;) who redeemed by His own blood the heavenly inheritance, which the human family had forfeited by transgression. (Rom. viii. 17; John x. 10; Eph. i. 7; Rev. v. 9.)

REDEMPTION. This term is generally used to designate the sacrificial work of our Divine Redeemer, and our consequent deliverance from the penal evils of transgression. The Greek word lutron, rendered "ransom," denotes the price of ransom, rather than the effect of the ransom or the redemption which follows it. (Matt. xx. 28; Mark x. 45; 1 Tim. ii. 6.) So also the Greek word agonazo, to redeem, to acquire by a ransom or price, "bought," "redeemed," designates the ransom or price of redemption, and is used also for redemption itself. (1 Cor. vi. 20; Gal. iii. 13; iv. 5; Rev. v. 9; xiv. 3, 4.) These terms, so expressive of the sacrifice of the Redeemer, are evidently borrowed from pecuniary transactions among men, and are used metaphorically; still, the leading idea of relief from a state of ruin by means of a commutation is evident. While the sacrifice of Christ is represented as the redemption price for all men without exception, and all may receive it by faith, (John iii. 16; 1 Tim. ii. 6; Heb. ii. 9; 1 John ii. 2,) it does not follow that His death is literally a satisfaction, as the law has still demands upon us. Though Christ has not, in the literal and proper sense, paid the debt of sinners, nor borne their punishment, nor satisfied the justice of God in any such sense or degree as to make it obliger to Him to save sinners, yet His death as our substitute, has so vindicated the moral government of God, as to make it consistent with the honour of His justice to offer salvation to all men, and to bestow it upon all who will accept it. The Greek word iatropos designates the "redemption" which is the result of the ransom or price, the actual deliverance from evils, received by faith in Him who gave Himself a ransom for all. It is inseparably connected with "forgiveness of sins." (Col. i. 14.) Everywhere our redemption from the power and consequences of sin is attributed to the death of Christ; and by that redemption, which is available for all who believe in Him, we receive justification, sanctification, union to Christ, and, with the witness of the Holy Spirit, a prospect of everlasting glory. (1 Tim. ii. 6; Eph. i. 7; 1 Pet. i. 18, 19; Rom. iii. 24; 1 Cor. i. 30; Heb. ix. 12.)—See RANSOM.

RED SEA.—See SEA.

REED. The Hebrew word kanach, denotes a reid or canr, growing in wet or marshy ground. Several species of tall and thick reeds or canes abound on the banks of the Jordan. (1 Kings xiv. 15; Job xli. 21; Isa. xix. 6; xxxv. 7; Ps. lxviii. 30, margin.) Reeds or canes were used as staffs for walking; (Isa. xxxvi. 6; Ezek. xxix. 6; Matt. xxvii. 29, 30, 48; Mark xv. 19,) for measuring rods; (Ezek. xl. 3, 5; xlii. 16, 19; Rev. xi. 1; xxi. 15,) and one species of reed or "calamus," rendered "pen," was used as a substitute for writing-quills. (3 John 13.)

A "reed shaken with the wind," designates a "wretched man," enduring hardships and privations. (Matt. xi. 7; Luke vii. 24.) Such is the gentleness of Christ, that He will not "break the bruised reed," i.e. the penitent. (Isa. xlii. 3; Matt. xii. 20.)

REELAH—who fears Jehovah. One who returned from exile; (Ezr. ii. 2;) probably the same as "Ramesh." (Neh. vii. 7.)

REFINER. The Hebrews evidently understood the process of melting metals, not only to make them fluid for the purpose of casting, but for separating them from the mixed minerals. (Ezek. xxii. 18—22; xxiv. 11.) In the process of refining, the dross was separated from the metals by strong acids, as acid; (Isa. i. 25;) perhaps, also, borax and lead were used, to make them flow more readily. (Jer. vi. 29, 30; Mal. iii. 2, 3.) On the Egyptian monuments almost every process of metallurgy is found depicted. (Gen. iv. 22.)

REG. REFUGE. To provide security for any one who should undesignedly kill a man, the Mosaic law appointed six cities of refuge, to any one of which the man-slayer might retire from the pursuit of the avenger of blood, and have time to prepare his defence before the judges. Of those cities, Bezer, Golan, and Ramoth-Gilead, were on the eastern side of the Jordan; and on the western side were Hebron, Shechem, and Kadesh-Naphthali. If, on examination, the man-slayer was found guilty of murder, he was put to death; but if the taking of life was involuntary, he dwelt safely in the city of refuge, which he might quit at the death of the high priest. (Ex. xxvi. 13; Num. xxxv. 4—28; Deut. xix. 7—13; Josh. xx. 2—8.)—See AVENGER OF BLOOD.

REGEM—a friend. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. ii. 47.)

REGEM-MELECH—a friend of the king. One of a deputation to the priests and prophets. (Zech. vii. 2.)

REGENERATION. That work of the Holy Spirit by which we experience the new birth. It is sometimes termed "a new creation;" (2 Cor. v. 17;) a "renewing of the mind;" (Rom. xii. 2;) the "washing, i.e. the purifying of regeneration;" (Tit. iii. 5;) a "resurrection from the dead;" (Eph. ii. 6;) a "being quickened;" (Eph. ii. 1—5;) a "putting off the old man;" and a "putting on the new man;" (Eph. iv. 22—24;) and the subjects of this change are represented as "begotten of God;" (John i. 19; 1 Pet. i. 3;) "begotten of the Spirit;"
REG

(John iii. 8;) “begotten of water, even of the Spirit;” (John iii. 5;)
“new creatures;” (Gal. vi. 15;)
and “partakers of the Divine nature.” (2. Pet. i. 4.) Regeneration, then, is the recovery of the moral image of God, and consequently of spiritual life, to a soul previously dead in trespasses and sins. It is the work of the Holy Spirit, opening the eyes of the mind, and enabling the sincere penitent to believe the Gospel, and receive Christ as his only Saviour.
This gracious work is in accordance both with the character of the Holy Spirit, and with the constitution of man; hence, by it no violence is done to any physical, intellectual, or moral law or mode of action, in human nature. The change is produced in the will, or heart, that is, in the moral, and not the natural faculties of the soul. As depravity is wholly in the will, or heart, the source and seat of all moral action, the Divine operation consists in renewing the heart, and communicating a change of views, with a relish for the things of the Spirit. As justification places us in a new relation to God, so regeneration produces in us a new state of mind. In the case of children dying in infancy, they of course need regeneration to fit them for the eternal world. And there can be no difficulty in conceiving that they are regenerated by the Holy Spirit, in virtue of Christ’s death, in the same sense in which they are depraved, in consequence of Adam’s transgression;—
the disposition to sin is removed—the disposition to holiness is implanted, and thus their salvation is secured.

REGISTER.—See Genealogy.

REHABIAH = whom Jehovah enlarges. The son of Eber. (1 Chron. xxiii. 17; xxiv. 25.)

REHOBOAM = street, wide place. 1. A city in Asher, in the valley of Lebanon. (Num. xiii. 21; Josh. xix. 28, 30;
xxi. 31; Judg. i. 31,) probably in the district of “Beth-rehob.” (Judg. xviii.
28; 2 Sam. x. 6.) 2. The father of Hadadezer, king of Syria. (2 Sam. viii. 3.)

REH

REHOBOAM = he enlarges the people. The son and successor of Solomon, born of Naamah the Am-monitess. He ascended the throne and reigned seventeen years, B.C.
975—938. His insolent conduct hastened the political crisis which resulted in the division of the Hebrew kingdom into the two kingdoms of Judah and Israel. (1 Kings xii. 24;
xiv. 21, 31; 2 Chron. x. 1—14.)
Within five years of Rehoboam’s accession to the throne, the kingdom of Judah was invaded by Shishak, king of Egypt, who desolated the country, and made it tributary to Egypt. On the wall of one of the ancient palace-temples at Thebes, are several turreted cartouches or ovals, each surmounted by the figure of a captive, the symbol of vassalage, and containing in hieroglyphics the name of the subjugated country. Among these Champollion discovered the one of which we have given a copy, containing the characters—

Judah malekkah,
constituting the words Judah Malekkah, signifying the “kingdom of Judah,” as the final character kah, denoting region or country, intimates.
The figure surmounting the oval is the symbol of Rehoboam’s vassalage to Shishak. This ancient monument contains an indubitable record of a fact chronicled in the Scriptures. (2 Chron. xii. 1—16.)

REHOBOOTH = streets, or wide places. 1. A city of Assyria, in the neighbourhood of Nineveh, which appears in later times to have been included within the compass of “that great city, Nineveh.” (Gen. x. 11.)
2. A city on the Euphrates; (Gen. xxxvi. 87;) supposed to be represented by the modern Rachabah, about three and a half miles south-west of Mayadin, where are extensive ruins around a castle. 3. The name of one of Isaac’s wells; (Gen. xxvi. 22;) in the margin rendered “Room.”

REINS. The Hebrews regarded the “reins,” i.e. the loins, or region of the kidneys, as the seat or source of the affections and dispositions. (Job. xvi. 13; xiii. 27; Ps. vii. 9; Jer. xvii. 10; xx. 12;)—See Heart.

REJUM = compassionate. 1. A Persian governor in Samaria. (Ezr. iv. 8, 9, 17, 23.) 2. One of the Levites. (Neh. iii. 17.) 3. One who returned from the Exile (Ezr. ii; Neh. x. 25;) also called “Nehum.” (Neh. vii. 7.) 4. One of the priests; (Neh. xii. 3;) also called “Harim.” (Neh. xii. 15.)

REJ = friendly, social. An officer under David. (1 Kings i. 8.)

REKEM = carefree, floriform, floriformering. 1. A city in Benjamin. (Josh. xviii. 27.) 2. A king of the Midianites. (Num. xxxi. 8; Josh. xxiii. 21.) 3. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. ii. 43, 44.)

RELIGION. The Greek word theoskhoia, rendered “religion,” also “worshiping,” properly signifies worshiping, worship, often with the idea of superstition; (Acts xxvii. 2; Col. ii. 18;) it is also used of the worship of God, religion, piety. (James i. 26, 27.) True religion, in the objective sense, is the whole system of doctrines and precepts for worship, which are founded on Divine revelation. In the subjective sense, religion is the reference of our life to God; first and immediately in our feelings, then and mediately in our knowledge and volition. In every country, the family of man—moved by an inward impulse, and guided by revelation or tradition—worships something which is believed to be endowed with the attributes of a superior being. Whilst other religions had been variously accommodated to the peculiar countries in which they flourished, Christianity alone was so framed as to be adapted to the whole human family. It is the one thing needful for the elevation of our race, and is destined alike to universality and perpetuity.

REMALIAH = whom Jehovah decks. The father of Pekah, king of Israel; (2 Kings xv. 25;) probably a man of no character, whence his son is called in contempt “the son of Remaliah.” (Isa. vii. 4, 5; viii. 6.)

REMETH = height. A city in Issachar; (Josh. xix. 21;) also called “Ramoth.” (1 Chron. vi. 73.)

REMMON.—See Rimmon.

REMMON-METHOAR.—See Rimmon.

REMPHAN = an image, probably of Saturn. The Hebrew word “Chun” =statues, (Am. v. 26;) is rendered “Remphan,” (Acts vii. 42;) and in the Septuagint “Raiphan,” and “Remphan,” and was probably understood of the statues of the planets, specially of Saturn, carried about by the idolatrous Hebrews in the wilderness.

REPENTANCE. The Greek word metametemps, rendered “repentance,” signifies change of mind or purpose; (Matt. xxi. 20; Heb. vii. 21;) with the idea of regret, sorrow for what is done. (Matt. xxi. 32; xxvii. 3; 2 Cor. vii. 8.) So also the word metanoia, rendered “repentance,” denotes a change of purpose, implying regret, sorrow; (Luke xvii. 3; 2 Cor. xii. 21; Heb. xii. 17;) in a religious sense, repentance, penitence, implying earnest sorrow on account of sin, and a turning from it unto God. (Matt. iii. 2; 8, 11; iv. 17; ix. 13; xi. 20; Mark i.)
REP

4, 15; ii. 17; vi. 12; Luke iii. 3, 8; v. 32; xiii. 3, 5; xv. 7, 10; xvi. 30; xxiv. 47; Acts ii. 38; viii. 22; xxi. 20; 2 Cor. vii. 9, 10; Heb. vi. 1, 6.) Dread of the consequences of guilt is not to be confounded with sorrow for sin. True repentance is undoubtedly the work of the Spirit of God, and is connected with our salvation; but it is not salvation itself. Repentance towards God is the first step which leads on to another, even to faith in Christ, to which the promise of forgiveness and salvation is directly given. When God is said to repent, it does not imply any change in His feelings and purposes, but simply such a direction of His dispensions towards His creatures, in accordance with their altered conduct, as to what among us indicates a change of mind or purpose. (Num. xxii. 19; Gen. vi. 6; 1 Sam. xv. 10, 11, 29; Rom. xi. 29.)

REPHAEL = whom God heals. One of the Levites. (1 Chron. xxvii. 7.)

REPHAH = riches. A descendant of Ephraim. (1 Chron. vii. 20.)

REPHAIM = the high, the tall. An ancient Canaanitish people, descended from Rapha, celebrated for their gigantic stature. (Gen. xiv. 5; Deut. iii. 11; Josh. xii. 4; xiii. 12.) They appear to have given name to a fertile valley or plain, between Bethlehem and Jerusalem. (Jos. Ant. vii. 4, 1; xii. 4.) called the "valley of Raphaím," or "valley of the Giants." (Josh. xv. 8; xviii. 16; 2 Sam. v. 18, 22; xxiii. 13, 14; 1 Chron. xi. 15; xiv. 9; Isa. xvii. 5.)

REPHIDIM = proper, stay, perhaps resting-place. A station of the Hebrews; (Num. xxxiii. 14, 15;) in the neighbourhood of which was the fountain which flowed from the rock in Horeb, called "Meribah," and "Massah," whence they were miraculously supplied with water. (Ex. xvii. 1—15; xix. 2.) The granite rock, shown by the monks of Mount Sinai, can scarcely be the rock struck by the rod of Moses. Dr. Robinson says, the fissures upon its surface, through which the water is said to have burst out, bear the marks of the chisel, and are evidently the work of art.—See Meribah.

REPROBATION. This term is equivalent to being "rejected," or "cast away." Rejection always implies a cause: "Reprobate silver shall men call them, because the Lord hath rejected them;" (Jer. vi. 30; 2 Cor. iii. 5—7; Tit. i. 16;) that is, they are base metal, which will not bear the proof. Conditional reprobation, or the rejection of men from the Divine favour because of their impenitence and refusal of salvation, is a Scriptural doctrine; (Rom. i. 28; 2 Tim. iii. 8;) but the notion of unconditional, absolute reprobation, is altogether inconsistent with the glorious perfections of the Most High.

RESEN = the Jews. An ancient city in Assyria, situated "between Nineveh and Calah," by some identified with Nimrud. (Gen. x. 12.) In later times it probably formed a part of "Nineveh, that great city."—See Nineveh.

RESHEPH = flame. A descendant of Ephraim. (1 Chron. vii. 25.)

RESTITUTION. That act of justice by which we restore to our neighbour that of which we have unjustly deprived him. A man is not only bound to make restitution for the injury he did, but for all that directly follows from the injurious act; for the first injury being wilful, we are supposed to will all that which follows upon it. (Ex. xxii. 1—12; Luke iv. 8.) See Fines.

RESURRECTION OF CHRIST. On the great fact of the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, is grounded the doctrine of the general resurrection. (Rom. i. 2; Acts iii. 32, 33; 1 Cor. xv. 3—15.) The notion that the identical natural body of 579
RES

Christ did not rise, but another and spiritual body, is opposed to the inspired narrative. The disciples were assured, by the testimony of their senses, that the body of Christ, after His resurrection, was the same identical body of human flesh and bones which had been crucified and laid in the sepulchre. (Matt. xvi. 21; xxvii. 63; xxviii. 5—18; Mark xvi. 6—19; Luke xxiv. 5—51; John xx. 9—26; Acts i. 1—11.) Our Lord Himself took special pains to make the impression upon the minds of His disciples, that in His crucified body He was actually raised to life. He showed them His hands and His feet; He also called for food, and He took and did eat before them. (Luke xxiv. 39—43; John xxiv. 27.) His appearance in the room to His disciples, “the doors being shut,” evidently means nothing more than their eyes were supernaturally “holden,” so that they did not perceive His entrance. (Luke xxiv. 16, 31; John xx. 14—19; xxii. 4.) In the same body our Lord continued forty days upon earth after His resurrection; and, when He ascended to Heaven, it would appear that His body assumed its glorified form in the act of His ascension. (Acts i. 9; Phil. iii. 21.)

RESURRECTION OF THE BODY.
The doctrine of the general resurrection of the dead is alluded to in Isa. xxvi. 19; Ezek. lxvii. 1—14; Dan. xii. 2, 3. Even supposing that some of these passages refer to the restoration of the Hebrews from Exile, yet, in this figurative representation there must be reference to the real occurrence, at some future period, of the thing from which the figure is borrowed. In the time of Christ the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead was held by the great body of the Jewish people; the Sadducees alone rejecting the anastasis, i.e. the future life. (Matt. xxii. 23—31; Luke xx. 27—38; Acts xxiii. 8.) Christ not only gave the doctrine of the resurrection the sanction of His authority, but also freed it from many erroneous notions which the Jews had acquired. (John v. 25—29; xi. 23, 24.) So, also, Paul speaks of a general resurrection of the dead, and refutes those who denied or opposed it. (Acts xvii. 18, 32; xxiii. 6; xxiv. 15; xxv. 19; xxvi. 8, 23; Rom. vi. 5; Phil. iii. 10, 21; Col. i. 18; 1 Thess. iv. 13—17; 2 Cor. v. 4; 2 Tim. iii. 18.) But whether the soul, between the death and the resurrection of the present body, exists independent of an ethereal, material envelope, we know not. Though it may be that a union of spirit with body is the general law of all created spiritual life, still, this view gives no countenance to the notions of those who have attempted to prove, from certain physiological opinions respecting the renewal—every few years—of the human frame during life, and the final transmission of its decomposed elements into other forms of being, that the resurrection of the body is impossible. The Apostle asserts the fact, that the “dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed; for this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality.” (1 Cor. xv. 35—53.) While this passage affirms the identity of the body before and after the resurrection, it by no means affirms the identity of the constituent particles of which the body is, at different periods, supposed to be made up. The particles of a man’s body may change several times between infancy and old age; and yet, according to our ideas of bodily identity, the man has had all the time “the same body.” So, also, all the particles may be changed again between the process of death and the resurrection, and the body yet retain its identity. As there must also be a writing power, combining the several parts into a unity, it is not improbable that the identity of a body may be found in the identity of that writing power, and not in the continuous presence of the same particles. Questions, therefore, of the presence or absence of certain particles which once belonged to the body, are altogether irrelevant. The uniting power, which is not necessarily vital, though it ceased at death to hold together the visible constituent particles of the body, may be dormant for a time, and again at the proper and appointed time resume its empire over matter, and thus preserve the identity of the body. The difference between the future body and that which we resign to the grave, will be as great as that which exists between the seed deposits in the earth and the beautiful plant which springs from it. That Divine Power which hath formed, of the same matter, “one star different from another in glory,” will give an analogous difference to our future bodies from those of flesh and blood. The future body will be spiritual, not immaterial, but adapted for a spiritual mode of existence—not “earthy,” but aerial, or gaseous. Indeed, it is supposed that all matter is capable of assuming the gaseous form; and it is certain that nearly the whole substance of our bodies—the hydrogen, the nitrogen, the carbon, the phosphorous, the oxygen of the lime, are frequently found in that form. The material elements—the constituent particles, if such there be—that now compose our bodies, may exist in other forms, besides those of “flesh and blood.” That very matter, or so much of it as may be needed, may form the spiritual bodies in which we are to live hereafter; and the chemical decomposition of the body may be only a part of the process by which the form is changed, while the identity is preserved. Doubtless, the future body will be incorruptible, infrangible, and capable of being moved at will to any part of the universe. No longer will it need the refreshment of food or of sleep; no longer will it have appetites and propensities of its own; nor will the highest and most lengthened exercises of thought and feeling occasion exhaustion or languor, so as to divert in any way the intellect and the affections from the engagements suited to their strength and perfection.

REU = friend. The son of Peleg; (Gen. xi. 18—21;) also called “Ragan.” (Luke iii. 35.)

REUBEN = provided for my affliction. The eldest son of Jacob and Leah. (Gen. xxxix. 32; Deut. xxxiii. 6.) He was deprived of the privileges of his birth-right, in consequence of his improper intercourse with Bilhah, his father’s concubine. (Gen. xxxv. 22; xl ix. 3, 4.) The portion of the Promised Land assigned to the tribe of Reuben lay on the east of the Jordan, in the district now called el-Beika, and is still famous for its fine pasture land. (Num. xxxii. 1—38; xxxiv. 14; Josh. i. 12—18; Deut. iii. 12—16; xxxii. 1—34.)

REUEL = friend of God. 1. A son of Esau. (Gen. xxxvi. 4, 10.) 2. A descendant of Zerah. (1 Chron. ix. 6.) 3.—See Raguel, and Deuel.

REUMAH = raised high. A concubine of Nahor. (Gen. xxii. 24.)

REVELATION. — See INSPIRATION.

REVELATION, Book of. This book, frequently called by its Greek name, the Apocalypse, i.e. the Revelation, was written by John the Divine, the same as John the Apostle and the Evangelist, about A. D. 66. That John received the Revelation in the Isle of Patmos, whither he was exiled, in the time of Nero, is certified by Clement of Alexandria and Tertullian; by the title to the Syriac version of the Revelation; the fragment on the canon published by Muratori; also by Andreas and Arethas, bishops of Cæsarea. Theophylact, an archbishop of Bulgaria, says of the Apostle: “He lived an exile in the island of Patmos thirty-two years after the death of Christ.” This places his banishment before the destruction of Jerusalem, and in the reign of Nero, who began to persecute Christians in A. D. 64. Even the statement of Ireneaus, who lived at the close of the second century, that “the Apocalypse was seen not long ago, but almost in our generation, near the end of the reign of Domitius,” seems not to refer to Domitian, which is the name of a later emperor, but to Nero, whose name was Domitius Nero.

The Apocalypse has been called an Apocalypse, because it has all the leading qualities of an Oriental epic poem. Though written originally in the Greek language, the form of Hebrew poetry, as well as its spirit, prevails to a great extent throughout the work. As a Hebrew, and thoroughly imbued as the writer was with the knowledge of the Hebrew prophets, he has often adopted from their writings images, sentiments, and expressions, and applied them to analogous subjects. The symbolic representations, or pictorial sketches, described in the Apocalypse, were seen in vision. Some of the symbols are evidently from Hebrew sources—the temple, the altar, and the holy services; and others, apparently, from the sculptured temples and statues of monstrous size and form, wherewith the ancient Assyrians and other Eastern nations used to adorn their palaces and temples. Throughout the book there is much in the drapery or costume which is used for embellishment, and yet tends to give definiteness to the representation of the subject. Even the numbers occurring so frequently as seven, ten, twelve, etc. are rarely to be taken arithmetically, unless when there are special reasons for so doing.

The three schemes of Apocalyptic interpretation, held by different expositors, with some diversity in the several details, are First, the Futurist, according to which the book, after the first three chapters, refers to events yet future. Second, the Continuous, which represents the book as a progressive history. Third, the Preterist, which regards the book as having to do with events long since fulfilled.

To the Preterist scheme of interpretation we incline, regarding the predictions of the book as having been fully accomplished before the close of A.D. 135, within less than seventy years from the time when the book was written. The Apocalypse was evidently written to the Asiatic churches during a period of furious persecution, when the Christians greatly needed encouragement, consolation, and admonition. The writer has made a full disclosure of the persecuting powers of the Jews and Romans, and declared that their respective fall and ruin “must shortly come to pass.” The fearful destruction of these persecuting powers is, to the faithful, in all times and places, a type of the destruction of anti-Christianism, and a pledge of the final and universal triumph of Christianity.

The prologue to the first part—chapters i.—iii.—represents Christianity throughout the empire in a state of suffering; the Epistles admonish and exhort the several churches to faithfulness. The first part of the book, including chapters iv.—xii, is a variety of symbols, portraying the Divine judgments upon Jerusalem, the representative of Judaism, the destruction of the Jewish persecuting power, and the ascendancy of the doctrines of Jesus. The seven seals and the seven trumpets relate ostensibly to Jerusalem, “spiritually called Sodom and Egypt, where our Lord was crucified.” So also, Josephus compares Jerusalem to Sodom (Wars, v. 10.) The correspondence of some of the predictions in this book with those of our Lord, respecting the fall of the Holy City—Rev. i. 7, as compared with Matt. xxvii. 50; and Rev. vi. 12, 13, with Matt. xxiv. 29; and also Rev. vii. 16, with Luke xxi. 30—shows that both in respect to words and things, they have the same reference. The Jewish war, so plainly and definitely predicted by our Lord, commenced early in the spring of A.D. 67, when Vespasian marched his overwhelming army into the region of Galilee; and the fall of Jerusalem was in August, A.D. 70. The war, therefore, lasted about three years and a half. (Rev. xi. 1-3.) After some further struggles, in the 18th year of Hadrian, A.D. 135, the Jews were utterly driven out of the land of their fathers. Thus ends the first catastrophe, in the overthrow of Jerusalem, and the utter extinction of the Jewish polity; and after this we hear no more of Jewish persecutors. The woman, after her child is taken up to the throne of God, henceforth wanders in the desert and in pathless regions—a beautiful image of the wandering condition of the Jews.

Evidently the prologue to the second part—chapter xii.—is regressive, and comprises events coeval with the first rise of Christianity. A woman appears in heaven, clothed with the sun, with the moon under her feet, and a crown of stars upon her head; her hour of delivery approaches, and a great red dragon, i.e. Satan, lies in wait for her child, who is to rule the nations with a rod of iron. Here the Jewish church is symbolized as the mother of the Man-child who is to rule the nations. Satan stands ready to devour the child at his birth; but Christianity, the child of Judaism, is caught up unto God, and to His throne, i.e. taken under the Divine protection; while Satan, now discomfited, turns his enmity against the other children of the woman, i.e. the members of the Christian church throughout the empire. In the second part, including chapters xii.—xx., we have, in a series of symbols, the vengeance of heaven hurled upon the city Babylon, i.e. Rome, the representative of heathenism. The beast rising from the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, emblems of great power, designates the imperial power of Rome, i.e. Nero Caesar. The second beast, rising from the land, with two horns like a lamb, symbolizes the heathen priesthood, armed with craftiness and superstition. Thus we have the red dragon, i.e. Satan, instigating the civil and sacerdotal powers of the earth in their malignant efforts against the infant cause of Christianity. But the redeemed are safe in the midst of the most dangerous and powerful enemies. When the Roman army advanced upon Palestine in A.D. 67, the great body of the early Christians, called “the first fruits unto God and the Lamb,” fled beyond the Jordan to Pella; (Matt. xxiv. 17;) and their safety was a symbol or pledge of the Divine protection of Christianity everywhere. Through mid-heaven a herald angel flies, proclaiming that the gospel will of a certainty be preached to every creature. Then follows a series of symbolic actions, representing the fearful overthrow of Babylon, i.e. the heathenism of Rome; and of the scarlet beast, the symbol of the bloody and persecuting power that reigns over the nations, the imperial power of Rome, specifically Nero, the then reigning emperor. The power of Jesus is now supreme. He is proclaimed “King of Kings, and Lord of Lords.” Satan is apprehended by a mighty angel, and shut up in prison for a thousand years, i.e. his power is diminished. He may vex and annoy the church, but he cannot hinder her onward march to supremacy. As the consummation of the second catastrophe, the Head of the church is represented as pronouncing the final doom of His enemies; while Christianity revives and flourishes, and finally triumphs universally.

The epilogue—chapters xxii.—xxx., beautifully depicts the flourishing state of Christianity, under the symbols of “a new heaven and a new earth,” designating the altered state of affairs. The new Jerusalem, i.e. the Christian church, also called the Bride, the Lamb’s wife, comes forth in all the splendour of the heavenly world. Her towers, her walls, and her palaces are described, after the style of the Hebrew prophet, as ornamented with characters relating to Christianity. (Ezek. xi.—xlviii.) And now, in the church of God is consolation, quiet, peace, perpetual light; and there God reigns for ever. Thus Jerusalem and Rome, two cities whose destruction was here seen in the spirit, are the symbols of Judaism and Heathenism, the two dominant religions of the ancient world, whose downfall was predicted. The new Jerusalem, which was to take their place, under the representation of the reign of the blessed, can be no other than the supremacy of Christianity among men on earth. It is no objection to this opinion, that the graces are first opened and the dead restored to life. The resurrection was also employed by the prophets, as a strong figure, to denote a total change of affairs, the revival of national and religious prosperity, (Ezek. xxxvii. 1-14; Isa. xxvi. 19.) And even the day of judgment was also used to denote the execution of punishment upon those who oppressed the people of God, or to express God's purpose of bringing about a new epoch for His religion and His people. (Joel iii. 1-21; Zeph. iii. 8-20.) This being admitted, the predictions of the book relate to events with which the first readers were immediately concerned—the dissolution of Judaism, the abolition of Heathenism, and the ascendency of the doctrines of Jesus; events which the writer declared "must shortly come to pass."

REVENUE. The revenues of the Hebrew kings were derived from voluntary offerings; (1 Sam. x. 27; xvi. 20;) from dues in kind, and imposts; (1 Kings xii. 1-19; compare Neh. v. 18; Mal. i. 8;) from the produce of the royal flocks; (1 Sam. xiii. 23; 1 Chron. xxviii. 29, 31; 2 Chron. xxxii. 28, 29;) from the royal demesnes; (1 Sam. vii. 14; xxii. 7; 1 Chron. xxvi. 31;) from the tenth part of the produce of the fields and vineyards; (1 Kings iv. 7; 1 Chron. xxvii. 25;) from the plunder of conquered nations; (2 Sam. viii. 2-13;) and the tribute imposed on them; (1 Kings iv. 21; 1 Chron. xxvii. 25, 31; Ps. lxxii. 10;) also from lucrative traffic; (1 Kings. x. 11, 14, 15, 28, 29.)

REZEPH = a hard stone. A city subdued by the Assyrians; (Isa. xxxvii. 12;) perhaps Rasapha, west of the Euphrates.

REZIA = delight. A descendant of Asher. (1 Chron. vii. 39.)
RID

—a noble camp-ground for great armies—having boundless space for tents, and vast pastures for the foraging of cavalry. (2 Kings xxii. 33; xxv. 6; Jer. xxxix. 5; lvi. 9, 10, 26, 27.) It is also called “Dibath.” (Ezek. vi. 14.)

RIDDLE. The Hebrew word khitdah, rendered “riddle,” (Judg. xiv. 14.) signifies entangled, intricate speech, enigma, a riddle. The Orientals, as a kind of amusement, especially at entertainments, have always exhibited a strong partiality for these mental puzzles; and remarkable ingenuity is often displayed in their solution, at the present day, both in Persia and Arabia. (Judg. xiv. 12—19; 1 Kings x. 1; Prov. xxx. 12—19; Isa. xxi. 12; Rev. xiii. 18.)

RIGHTEOUSNESS. The righteousness of God is the essential perfection of His nature; and is frequently used to designate His holiness, justice, and faithfulness. (Gen. xviii. 26; Deut. vi. 25; Ps. xxxi. 1; cxix. 137, 142; Isa. xlv. 13; li. 5—8; lvi. 1.) The righteousness of Christ denotes not only His absolute perfection, (Isa. li. 11; 1 John ii. 1; Acts iii. 14,) but is taken for His perfect obedience unto death as the sacrifice for the sin of the world. (Dan. ix. 24; Rom. iii. 25, 26; v. 18, 19; Jer. xxii. 6; John i. 29.) The righteousness of the law is that obedience which the law requires. (Rom. iii. 10, 20; viii. 4.) The righteousness of faith is the justification which is received by faith. (Rom. iii. 21—28; iv. 3—25; v. 1—11; x. 6—11; 2 Cor. v. 21; Gal. ii. 21.) Righteousness is sometimes used for uprightness and just dealing between man and man; (Isa. lx. 17;) also for holiness of life and conversation. (Dan. iv. 27; Luke i. 6; Rom. xiv. 17; Eph. v. 9.)

1. RIMMON = a pomegranate. A city of Simeon in the southern part of Palestine; (Josh. xv. 32; 1 Chron. iv. 32; Zech. xiv. 10;) also written “Remmon.” (Josh. xix. 7.) 2. A town situated north-east of Geba and Michmash. It is now called Rummon.

RIN

Some suppose that Rimmon, rendered “pomegranate tree,” (1 Sam. xiv. 2,) designates the same place. This place, also called the “rock Rimmon,” forms a remarkable object in the landscape, being situated on and around the summit of a conical chalky hill, and visible in all directions. (Judg. xx. 45; xxi. 13.) 3. A city of Zebulun; perhaps the village Rummaneh, east of Kana el-Jelil. (1 Chron. vi. 77.) In Josh. xix. 13 it is written “Remmon-methoar,” i.e. “Rimmon marked off or pertaining to Nea.” 4. A descendant of Benjamin. (2 Sam. iv. 2.)

2. RIMMON = the exalted. An idol worshipped by the Syrians. Perhaps the sun, whose temple was at Damascus. (2 Kings v. 18.)

RIMMON-PAREZ = breach of Rimmon. A station of the Hebrews in the desert. (Num. xxxiii. 19, 20.)

RINGS. The Hebrew word tabaath, signifies a ring of any kind; (Ex. xxvi. 12; xxvi. 24; xxviii. 23;) a finger-ring; (Ex. xxxv. 23; Isa. iii. 21;) comp. Luke xv. 22; James ii. 2; specially a seal or signet ring, usually set with an engraved gem for sealing. (Ex. xxviii. 11, 21; Gen. xli. 42; Est. iii. 10; viii. 2, 8; Jer. xxii. 24.) So also, the Hebrew word khotam properly signifies a seal or signet ring. (Gen. xxxviii. 18; Job xxxviii. 14; Dan. vi. 17; Hag. ii. 23; Sol. Song viii. 6.) In the British Museum there are several rings, ear-rings, nose-rings, pendants, signets, beads, necklaces, bracelets, and other ornaments, from the tombs of Egypt. They are of gold, silver, bronze, iron, electrum, cornelian, jasper, porcelain, ivory, glass, emerald, etc. We give the figure of a signet ring of solid gold, which was found in the Necropolis at Thebes. The hieroglyphics engraved on the cornelian show that it belonged to an officer of Thothmosis III., during the time the Hebrews were in Egypt.

RIMAH = shout or cry. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 20.)

RIPHATH = moved, shaken? A people sprung from Gomer, who may have given name to the Riphath Mountains, in what was, to the Hebrews, the remotest northern regions. (Gen. x. 3.) The name is also written “Diphath.” (1 Chron. i. 6, margin.)

RISSAH = a ruin. A station of the Hebrews in the desert. (Num. xxxiii. 21, 22.)

RITHMAH = heath, broom. A station of the Hebrews in the desert. (Num. xxxii. 18, 19.)

RIVER. The Hebrew word nahar signifies a river or perennial stream; (Gen. ii. 10, 14;) the Euphrates; (Gen. xxxii. 21;) the Chebar; (Ezek. i. 1, 8;) the Abana and Parbar; (2 Kings v. 12;) the Nile; (Gen. xv. 18; Isa. xix. 5.) The Egyptian word jor also signifies a river, specially the Sihor, i.e. the Nile. (Gen. xii. 1; Ex. i. 22; vii. 18—20; Isa. xix. 6; Jer. xlvii. 7, 8; Am. ix. 5.)

RIZPAH = a coal. One of Saul’s concubines. (2 Sam. iii. 7; xxii. 8—10.)

ROADS. —See HIGHWAY.

ROBE. —See GARMENTS.

ROCK. This term is used in a metaphorical sense of God, as the “Rock,” i.e. the strength and refuge of His people; (Deut. xxxii. 4; 2 Sam. xxiii. 3; Ps. xviii. 2;) and of Christ, who is their support; (Isa. xxxii. 2; 1 Cor. x. 4;) also for the doctrine of Christ’s eternal supremacy, which is the foundation of the Christian system. (Matt. xvi. 18.) It is also used for the ancestor of a nation or people. (Isa. li. 1, 2.)

ROD. This word is used for a wand or walking staff; as the rod of Moses, sometimes called “the rod of God.” (Ex. iv. 2, 4, 20; vii. 9—20;

vii. 5, 17; ix. 23; x. 13;) Aaron’s rod, which miraculously blossomed and brought forth almonds; (Num. iv. 7, 9; xvii. 8, 10; Heb. ix. 4;) Jonathan’s rod; (1 Sam. xiv. 27;) also the shepherd’s staff, the symbol of the shepherd’s care. (Lev. xxvii. 32; Ezek. xx. 37; Mic. vii. 14.) The term “rod,” as a shoot of a tree, designates Christ as a descendant of Jesse; (Isa. xi. 1;) also used of the tribes of Israel, as springing from one root. (Ps. lxxiv. 2; Jer. x. 16.) It is used as the symbol of authority; (Ps. ii. 9; cxv. 2; cxv. 3; Jer. xlviii. 17; Ezek. xix. 11; Rev. ii. 27;) of that which supports and strengthens; (Ps. xxii. 4; Isa. iii. 1; Ezek. xxix. 6;) and of the afflictions with which God disciplines His people. (Job. ix. 34; Heb. xii. 6, 7.)

RODANIM. —See DODANIM.

ROE. The Hebrew word tzebi, rendered “roe,” refers to the whole genus of the roe, antelope, and gazelle. (2 Sam. ii. 18; 1 Chron. xii. 8; Sol. Song ii. 7; iii. 5.) These elegant animals were abundant in Palestine; (2 Sam. i. 19;) they are very timid; (Isa. xiii. 14;) and fleet; (2 Sam. ii. 18; 1 Chron. xii. 8; Prov. vi. 5; Sol. Song, ii. 9;) and their flesh was, and is still regarded as a delicacy. (Deut. xii. 15, 22; xiv. 5; xv. 22; 1 Kings iv. 28.)

ROGEL. —See ENROGEL.

ROGELIM = fuller’s place. A town in Gilead. (2 Sam. xvii. 27; xix. 31.)

ROHGAH = outery, clamour. A descendant of Asher. (1 Chron. vii. 34.)

ROLL. —See BOOK.

ROMANS, EPISTLE TO. This Epistle was written in Greek, by Paul, at Corinth, near the close of A.D. 57, or, as Alford supposes, at the beginning of 58. (Rom. xv. 25; xvi. 12, 22.) It is attested as the work of the Apostle of the Gentiles by Irenæus, Theophilus of Antioch, Clement of Alexandria, Tertullian, and Origen. From this Epistle we learn that Christianity was early introduced to the imperial city; (Rom.
i. 8; xvi. 19;) yet we have no evidence that the Roman church was founded by an Apostle. Had Peter ever visited Rome, even so late as A.D. 57 or 58, surely Paul would have adverted to him and his labours in the course of this Epistle. As many Jews resided in the metropolis of the empire, it is not improbable that the flourishing church in that city was planted by the "strangers of Rome, Jews and proselytes," who were converted at Jerusalem on the notable day of Pentecost. (Acts ii. 10.) Nor is it unlikely that those may have been aided by some of the Jewish Christians "scattered abroad" by the persecution after Stephen's death. (Acts viii. 1, 4; xi. 19.) Aquila and Priscilla, Andronicus and Junia, with others, with whom the Apostle seems to have been acquainted, are specially mentioned as sharing in the labour of establishing the infant cause in the imperial city. (Acts xviii. 2; xvi. 3—16.) When this Epistle was written, the apparently numerous church consisted of both Jews and Gentiles who had embraced the new religion. Unhappily, the Jewish Christians were attached to the Mosaic institutes—were prone to feel indignant at the government of the heathen magistrates over them—and were unwilling to believe that the Gentiles could be admitted to equal privileges with them in the kingdom of the Messiah, especially without becoming proselytes to the Jewish religion. On the other hand, the Gentiles disregarded the prejudices of the Jews, especially about circumcision, and meats and drinks, and holidays. While the Apostle advocates equal rights and privileges, both for Jews and Gentiles, he shows that all mankind were equally "under sin," and liable to the wrath of God; that the deeds of the law were wholly incompetent to procure justification; and that faith in Jesus Christ, the universal Redeemer, was the only means of obtaining the eternal salvation, which was now offered by the mercy of God alike to Jews and Gentiles, without any preference or exception whatever.

ROME = strength, i.e. a strong place, fortress. The capital of the Roman empire, and once the metropolis of the world, is situated on the river Tiber, in Italy. The earliest settlers in Italy appear to have been the Etruscans or Etrurians, probably a tribe from Tarshish, many centuries previous to the rise of the Roman power. The Etruscans, who have left traces of civilization inferior in grandeur perhaps to the monuments of Egypt, in beauty to those of Greece, finally fell before the power of the Romans. Romulus, who is said to have founded Rome 753 B.C., was probably an Etruscan lucumio or chief, who, with a horde collected from the neighbouring tribes, laid the foundation of the future imperial city, in a fortress on Mount Palatine, which was afterwards extended over the seven hills. The second king, Numa Pompilius, is said to have founded the religious system of the Romans. The advancing power of the Romans gradually overwhelmed the Albans, the Sabines, the Etruscans, the Latins; and finally, the subjugation of the Tarentines and Samnites made Rome the mistress of Italy. The growth of the Roman power, which was destined to bring the nations beneath its iron rule, was for some time very slow. But when Carthage was crushed, B.C. 146, the Roman arms spread over the earth like a whirlwind; and in little more than a century they erected upon the overthrow of earlier thrones the most unbending tyranny the world had yet seen. It was not till times posterior to the closing of the canon of the Old Testament that the Romans came in contact with the Jews. The first alliance between the Jews and Romans was made by Judas Maccabeus, B.C. 162. This was renewed by his brother Jonathan, B.C. 144. (1 Mace, viii. 1, etc.) After this time the Romans had enough to do with the Jews, not only under the Herods, but also when Judea was reduced to the form of a Roman province, until at last they were driven utterly to exterminate them from the country, under Hadrian, A.D. 135. (Luke xxiv. 38; John xi. 48; xix. 20; Acts ii. 10; xvi. 21, 97, 38; xviii. 2; xix. 21; Rom. i. 7, 15; 2 Tim. i. 17.) In the Augustan age, while Rome was mistress of the world, literature and art made great progress. But the succeeding emperors were mostly distinguished only for their cruelties and licentiousness, until Constantine embraced Christianity and made it the religion of his empire. He made Constantinople the Roman capital A.D. 330, and thus gave a fatal blow to the power and influence of old Rome. The ancient empire was finally overthrown by Odosce, king of the Huns, who assumed the title of king of Italy, A.D. 476, nearly 1230 years after the foundation of Rome. Since then Rome has continued to be only the ecclesiastical metropolis of the Roman community. Rome is now celebrated not only for its own splendour, but for the magnificent ruins of its former greatness. The most interesting monument which has survived the ravages of time is the triumphal arch, erected by Titus, to commemorate the conquest and overthrow of Jerusalem, which yields many valuable illustrations of the Jewish and Roman costumes and manners in the apostolic age. The city of Rome, according to the official census, reported in the Augsburg Zeit., 1847, had 54 parishes, 27,532 families, 39 bishops, 1514 priests, 2471 monks, 1754 nuns, 521 seminaries, and a population of 175,883. The great mass of the population, as in all Romish countries, is indescribably poor and miserable, and the state of morals is deplorably low. The Romish religion is an extraordinary mixture of Roman polytheism and Christianity. The contradictions and absurdities to which relic worship leads, show that even the chair of Peter hardly escapes from baptized paganism. It is said that in the 18th of January 1688, while the identical chair used by Peter was being cleaned, in order to be set up in some conspicuous place in the Vatican, there unluckily appeared carved upon it the twelve labours of Hercules,—the evidence of its pagan origin. Another chair, in St. Peter's church, in which it is affirmed that Apostle exercised his office, is said to have been examined by the profane French soldiers, in the time of the first Napoleon, when they had possession of Rome, who copied the Arabic inscription, namely, "There is but one God, and Mohammed is his prophet." This chair was probably among the spoils of the Crusaders.

ROMANTIEZER—I have exerted his help. A son of Heman. (1 Chron. xxv. 4, 31.)

ROOF.—See HOUSE.

ROOM.—See KEHOROTH.

ROOT. That part of the plant which extends into the earth. (Matt. xiii. 6, 21.) The Hebrew word shorash, i.e. "root," also signifies a shoot, sprout, "sprout of Jesse;" (Isa. xi. 10;) "a shoot out of a dry soil;" (Isa. lli. 2; compare Rev. v. 5; xxii. 16;) and is used metaphorically of the Messiah, who should proceed from the ancient and decayed family of Jesse. So also, the term "root" designates Hezekiah, a descendant of king Uziah; (Isa. xiv. 29; 2 Chron.
XXVI. 6, 7;) and is also used for the power of the Philistines. (Isa. xiv. 80.)

ROSE. The Hebrew word ḥhabazzeleth, rendered "rose," (Isa. xxxv. 1; Sol. Song ii. 1,) properly designates a flower, growing in meadows and pastures. In the Apocryphal books the Greek word ῥόδον, i.e. "a rose," frequently occurs. (Eccles. xxiv. 14; xxxix. 13; l. 8; Wisd. 2. 8,) White and pink roses are abundant in some parts of Palestine.

ROSH=heat, summit. 1. A son of Benjamin. (Gen. xli. 21.) 2. The Hebrew word rosh, rendered "prince," (Ezek. xxxvii. 2, 3; xxxix. 1,) ought to be read Rosh, as the name of a northern nation, probably the Russians, along with Meshech and Tubal.

ROSIN.—See Balm.

RUBY. The Hebrew word peninim, rendered "rubies," properly designates red corals. (Prov. iii. 15; viii. 11; xx. 15; xxxii. 10; Job xxxvii. 18; Lam. iv. 7;) And the word kadkdod, rendered "agate," (Isa. liv. 12; Ezek. xxvii. 16, margin "chrysoprase,") is now understood to designate the oriental ruby, a valuable gem of a vivid red colour. The word odenem, rendered "sardius," is in the margin rendered "ruby." (Ex. xxxix. 10.)

RUDIMENTS.—See Elements.

RUE. One of the garden plants of which the hypocritical Pharisees used to pay tithe, though uncommanded. The strong scented and bitter leaves of this plant were used as medicine, and also as a spice for meat. In Luke xi. 42, it is mentioned instead of "dill" in the parallel passage. (Matt. xxiii. 23, margin.)

RUFUS=red. A son of Simon the Cyrenian, (Mark xv. 21,) whom Paul salutes. (Rom. xvi. 13.)

RUHAMAH=compassioned. A symbolical name given to the house of Israel. (Hos. ii. 1.)

RULER.—See Prince.

RUMAH.—See ARMAM.

RUSH.—See Flag.

RUTH=female friend, companion. A Moabitess who married into a Hebrew family which had emigrated into the land of Moab during the famine. (Judg. vi. 3-6.) On the death of Eilemelech and his two sons, Ruth, who was now a widow, and had doubtless become a proselyte to Judaism, resolved to accompany her widowed mother-in-law to Bethlehem in Judaea. The young widow was soon married to Boaz, her wealthy kinsman, by whom she became the ancestress of king David. Though Ruth was a Gentile woman, that was no objection to her position as an ancestress of the Messiah. (Ruth i. 1-22; ii. 1; iv. 10-22; Matt. i. 5, 6.)

RUTH, Book of. This book appears as the work of an unknown author of the time of David, or soon after; it was evidently taken from more ancient records, as its history belongs to the period of the Judges. (Ruth i. 1.) The object of the writer was to trace the genealogy of David to a source which is honourable; at the same time, he does not flatter the royal family, but candidly relates its descent from a Moabitish mother, who had been reduced to extreme poverty. The simplicity, integrity, and kind feelings of the principal persons exhibited are altogether remarkable; and the narrative shows that David had at least some ancestors who were nature's noblemen. (1 Chron. ii. 11, 12.)

RYE. The Hebrew cussameth rendered "rye," (Ex. ix. 32; Isa. xxviii. 25,) and "fitches." (Ezek. iv. 9,) designates a species of grain, the triticum spelta of Linnaeus, the modern spelt. The Hebrews appear to have occasionally used the meal of this grain for bread.

S

SABACHTHANI.—See ELI, ELI, LAMA SABACHTHANI.

SABAOTH.—See HOST OF HEAVEN.

SABBATH. The Hebrew word Sabbath properly signifies a cessation, rest, a return, from labour, hence day of rest, or restitution; and it was used by the Hebrews as the designation of the seventh day, the day of return from toil to repose. The most ancient Record says: “And on the seventh day God had ended His work which He had made; and He rested on the seventh day from all His work which He had made. And God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it: because that in it He had rested from all His work which God had created and made.” (Gen. ii, 2, 3.) Here the term “rest,” as spoken of God, is not opposed to weariness, but to action; it is merely a cessation from labour. On this day, the work of creation being finished, the Most High entered into His rest—His Sabbath—which still continues, and in which He is now, by the elevatory process of Redemption, educating mankind for the glories of the future, and for partnership with Himself in His ever-enduring rest in heaven. (Heb. iv. 9, 10; Lev. xiv. 18.) Then also was the Sabbath day blessed and sanctified for man, not only as the appointed time for cessation from labour, but for the enjoyment of special blessings arising from the devout contemplation of the Divine perfections, as manifested in the Creator’s works—a happy symbol of that perpetual “Sabbath which remaineth to the people of God.”

This primeval institution is not to be considered as an arbitrary enactment, but as an appointment in perfect harmony with what are called the laws of nature; and is found to be absolutely necessary to the well-being of man, and the labouring animals. Physiological considerations show that, beside the alternation of day and night, the human constitution requires the repose of one day in seven in order to restore the equilibrium; and that it is as essential to our intellectual and physical as to our moral and spiritual nature. Hence “the Sabbath was made for man—for the benefit of the race—and not man for the Sabbath.” (Mark ii. 27.)

Traces of the original appointment of the Sabbath have been found in the sacredness of the number seven, so frequently used by the Hebrews as the symbol of perfection and completeness, and also in the permanent division of time into weeks or periods of seven days, which has prevailed among most nations, from the shores of Europe to the plains of Hindostan.

Though the creation Sabbath was the seventh day in the order of the inspired Record, yet, in point of fact, it was the first day of man’s week—the first evening and morning which he ever saw; hence he must have commenced the computation of his time with the Sabbath, which was really to him the first day of the week, as it was the first complete day of his existence. The seventh day, then, being the first day of Adam’s life, was consecrated by way of first fruits to God, and was held as the sacred day by the patriarchs until the return of the Hebrews from Egypt. The earliest recorded instance of the presentation of sacrifice is connected with the observance of this day: “at the end of days,” i.e. at the termination of the week—not on the last, but the first day—Cain and Abel brought each their offerings to the Lord. (Gen. iv. 3, 4.) So also, in Gen. viii. 8—12, it is stated that Noah sent forth the dove three successive times from the ark, and waited seven days between each, evidently in deference to the Sabbath day. This day, which may be considered as identical with our Lord’s day, was not totally neglected by the Hebrews while in Egypt, inasmuch as it was the universal Sabbath of the early nations, and by idolaters was devoted to the worship of the sun; hence called Sun-day.

But though the most ancient Sabbath, the sacred day of the patriarchs, was the first day of the week, it appears that the weekly Sabbath of the Hebrews was altered, as well as the commencement of their year, at their exodus from Egypt. (Ex. xii. 2.) In commemoration of their deliverance the month Abib or Nisan—April was made the first month of the year, and to this the Mosaic chronology is conformed. Already had many of the Hebrews assembled on the fifteenth day of the first month, on the morrow after the passover, waiting the return of Moses and Aaron from the court of Pharaoh, with permission to depart. As there must have been an interval of several hours ere their leaders returned, during which the people acquired the wealth of the Egyptians, and “all the hosts” prepared for the march, it must have been near the close of the day when they broke up from their rendezvous. Hence it would appear that it was not till the same evening, after sunset, which, according to the Hebrew reckoning, commenced the sixteenth day of Nisan, that the Hebrews were fairly on their journey out of Egypt. This day, then, apparently the seventh day of the week, i.e. Saturday, was, by Divine appointment, constituted the Sabbath of the Hebrews, in order to perpetuate their deliverance from Egyptian slavery. (Ex. xii. 33—51; xiii. 3, 4; xxxiv. 18; Deut. xvi. 1—3.) Indeed, in Deut. v. 15, Moses does not enforce the observance of this day, as in Ex. xx. 11, by the consideration of God’s resting on the seventh day, which was the Sabbath of the Patriarchs; but binds it upon them by saying—“Remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched out arm; therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath-day.” And, as the Hebrews were about to be constituted the depositories of Divine truth—the conservators of a holy worship—until the coming of the Messiah, it was necessary that they should have not only a different ritual, but a different weekly Sabbath peculiar to themselves, lest they should be carried away by idolatry, or in any way become mingled with surrounding nations. This Sabbath, which was to be observed by the Hebrews in all their generations, is also calculated from the first day in which the manna fell: on the sixth day there fell a double quantity of manna, and the people gathered twice as much as on other days; thus anticipating the Sabbath, and preparing for it. (Ex. xvi. 22—30.) And afterwards, when the Hebrews arrived at Mount Sinai, the law of the Sabbath was most distinctly and fully laid down in the decalogue, in language which recognizes the existence of a primitive Sabbath. It begins with the word “Remember,” and concludes with an allusion to the institution at the creation,—showing, that though the peculiar Sabbath of the Hebrews, like other institutions connected with their dispensation, was merely introduced until “the fulness of time,” yet the principle was the same in each case, that one day in seven should be consecrated to the service of God. (Ex. xx. 8—11.)

The Christian Sabbath, called the “Lord’s day,” and the “first day of the week,” evidently a different day from the Hebrew seventh day Sabbath, but identical with the primitive Sabbath instituted at the creation. Though we have no record stating that either Christ or His apostles changed the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week, yet we have every requisite evidence that this change was accomplished in the apostolic age, by the abrogation of the Hebrew polity and the establishment of Christianity. Christ honoured the first day of the week by rising from the dead; (Matt. xxviii. 1—10;) appearing to His disciples; (John xx. 19—29;) and sending the Holy Spirit. (Acts ii. 1—4.) On this day all Christians meet for public worship; and to keep holy the day on which the Saviour rose from the dead, was to acknowledge Him as Lord and Christ. (Acts xx. 7; 1 Cor. xvi. 2; Rev. i. 10.) The resurrection of Christ on this day was symbolized in the Hebrew ritual by the offering of the “sheaf of first fruits” on the sixteenth day of Nisan, the third day after the Passover: “He was the first fruits of them that slept.” (Lev. xxiii. 10, 11; 1 Cor. xv. 20; Acts xxvi. 23.) It is true that Christ, while under the law, religiously obeyed the spirit and letter of the fourth commandment, though far from conforming to the requirements of Pharisaical austerity. And while the Jewish polity subsisted, the political law of the Mosaic Sabbath would still be in force in Judea; hence, neither our Lord nor His Apostles ever claimed the exercise of any authority to change the day, inasmuch as that would have been a direct interference with the political institutions of the country, and with the province of the magistrate. An obvious reason presents itself why the Mosaic Sabbath was not abrogated by any express command,—the Jewish economy had now served its purpose; Christianity, the spiritual principle in that dispensation, was now evolved; and, in the overthrow of the old nationality, the Jewish ritual and its sacred days were for ever abrogated, while the Sabbath naturally reverted to the primitive Sunday, or creation Sabbath. And it is somewhat remarkable, that in all the missionary labours of the Apostles in the different regions of the empire, we never read of them authoritatively instituting the Lord’s day to be observed as the Sabbath, simply because that day being the first day of the week,—the same as the primitive Sabbath,—was already instituted, having been held as the sacred day by the Gentile nations from the remotest times. Hence we see, that the Apostles had not the serious difficulty to encounter of instituting a Sabbath on a different day to that which was generally observed as sacred. In several of those regions where the primitive Sabbath was still observed, though consecrated to idolatrous worship, the Jews, both before and after the extinction of their own nationality, had synagogues where the law and the prophets were read on the Mosaic Sabbath. And, in deed, in some of the Oriental churches, where the Jewish element was predominant, religious services were long held both on the seventh and on the first day of the week; but as the observance of the Lord’s day for the commemoration of the birth-day of a better creation, by the redemption of the world, became the badge and test of a Christian profession, the observance of the seventh day gradually fell into disuse.

Though, as we have seen, the reason of the change of the Sabbath from the first day of the week to the seventh, was in the establishment of the Mosaic economy; and, with the expiration of that economy, the Sabbath reverted to its original position; still, it must be obvious that neither of those days could have been observed for sacred worship in all parts of the earth at the same time. The original institute required that one day in seven—not every seventh day, but every Sabbath day—should be appropriated as the Sabbath of the Lord. But, as among different nations there have been different methods of reckoning days—some reckoning from sun-rise to sun-rise, some from sun-set to sun-set, and others from midnight to midnight—it could never have been designed that every hour of the same Sabbath should be held at the same time universally. Moreover, if every nation commenced the day at the same hour, still, the differences of latitude and longitude would prevent every portion of the original Sabbath being consecrated at the same time; as it is known to every one that while it is noon on one part of the earth’s surface, it is midnight at the antipodes. The circumstance of the possibility of three Sundays occurring in one week, shows, very clearly, that the same hours could never have been intended to be observed as the Sabbath in all parts of the earth at the same time. Suppose two persons were to start from London at the same time, in opposite directions, the one travelling eastward, in the direction of the earth’s motion, and the other westward, in the contrary direction, both making the tour of the globe; on their return they would differ two whole days in their reckoning, although arriving at the same hour at the point from which they set out. Should the day of return to the one who travelled eastwardly be Monday, to the one who travelled westwardly it would be Saturday, while to those who had remained in London it would be Sunday. This contingency has actually happened to some of the earlier circumnavigators, who were unacquainted with the method of setting down the same nominal day a second time when crossing the meridian of the 180th degree of longitude eastward; and of cancelling a day when crossing the same meridian westward. From this circumstance we see, that while every hour of the same Sabbath could not be held sacred universally, at the same time, without attention to difficulties, and sometimes doubtful astronomical calculations; yet we learn that some portion of the Sabbath of Eden, and even of that of the Hebrews, according to the different modes of reckoning the day, is held by Christians on Sunday on every part of the earth’s surface at the present time. While, however, the point of commencing the enumeration of the hebdomadal cycle may be different on every meridian of the earth, still it is not left to every individual to determine which day should be his Sabbath, though he should even abstract the seventh part of his time from labour. The Sabbath was ordained for worship, for public worship; hence it is necessary that the day should be uniformly observed by a whole community at the same time. The Sabbath is not only con-ected with religious duty, but with religious freedom. The only ground of religious duty is the Divine command; the freedom and opportunity of performing religious duties are civil rights, and, as such, the matter of legislation. The Mosaic statutes secured the Sabbath to the Hebrew countries; and the political law of Christian countries, which protects the labouring classes in the enjoyment of this primeval boon, is not an interference with religion, but simply a recognition of the rights of conscience, and of men’s duty to be religious. The Apostle, when adjudi-cating on Jewish festival observances, does not intimate that the weekly Sabbath was no better than any other day; indeed, he does not refer to the Sabbath day at all, but merely to the Jewish holidays—held on the working days—of which no one could be holier than another. (Rom. xiv. 5, 6; Col. ii. 16, 17.) However, let us who regard the Sabbath day, regard it to the Lord; and as to those who disregard it, or would teach others so, let them remember that while they are loosening the bonds of Christian morality, it becomes them seriously to ponder the words of our Lord: “Whosoever shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven.” Among the Hebrews, no sin, except perhaps idolatry, is threatened with heavier penalties than Sabbath-breaking.
According to the Mosaic law, the penalty awarded to the Sabbath-breaker was death. (Ex. xxxv. 2; Num. xv. 32—36.) The term “Sabbthas” is frequently used to designate the Hebrew festivals, which were determined by the number seven. Thus, not only the seventh day of the week, but the seventh month, the seventh year, and the year after seven times seven years, i. e. the fiftieth year, were also Sabbaths, or seasons of rest and renovation. (Lev. xvi. 31;
xxiii. 24; xxxv. 4—12; 2 Chron. xxxvi.
21; Col. ii. 16.)—See FALLOW YEAR.
SABBATH DAY’S JOURNEY.
—See JOURNEY.
SABEANS. See SHEBA.
SABTAH. A son of Cush, whose descendants appear to have given to the Ethiopian city Saba, or Sabat, situated on the coast of the Arabian Gulf, not far from the present Arkiko. (Gen. x. 7; 1 Chron. i. 3.)

SABTECHAH. A son of Cush, whose descendants appear to have given name to a region in Ethiopia. (Gen. x. 7; 1 Chron. i. 9.)

SACAR=reward. 1. A son of Obed-edom. (1 Chron. xxvi. 4.) 2. See SHARAH.

SACKBUT.—See HARP.

SACKCLOTH. The Hebrew word ask, rendered “sackcloth,” denotes a coarse cloth made of goat’s hair, camel’s hair, or other materials, and used for strainers; (Matt. xxiii. 24;) for sacks; (Gen. xlii. 25, 27, 35; Josh. iv. 4;) for the garments of prophets; (Isa. xx. 2; Zechar. xiii. 4; Matt. iii. 4;) and for a mourning garment. (2 Sam. iii. 31; 1 Kings xxi. 27; 2 Kings vi. 20; Est. iv. 1, 2.) “Sackcloth and ashes” denoted sorrow and repentance. (Job xvi. 15; Ps. xxx. 11; Isa. iii. 24; xxxviii. 5; Joel i. 8; Matt. xi. 21; Rev. vi. 12.)

SACRIFICE. The solemn infliction of death on a living creature, in a way of religious worship. Sacrifice undoubtedly originated in the Divine authority and injunction, immediately after the first transgression; for it must have been from the sacrificial victims that “coats of skins” were made for the first human pair. (Gen. iii. 21.) So, also, the Divine acceptance of Abel’s sacrifice, furnishes evidences that sacrifices originated in the will and appointment of God. (Gen. iv. 3—7; Heb. xi. 4.) The victims in this ancient rite were generally such animals as were of the most utility to man; though among the heathen, where idolatry and superstition became predominant, it was not uncommon for bewildered mortals to offer human victims, in the hope of atoning for their past transgressions. (2 Kings iii. 27.) Among the Hebrews, the rite of sacrifice was evidently a symbolical action, adapted and intended to remind the offerer that he was guilty in the sight of God. As it is certain that sin could not be taken away by the blood of bullocks or of goats, this solemnity was subjectively, to the sinner, a memorial that his sin deserved death. On this account the Apostle says, “In the sacrifices—there is a remembrance of sins made every year.” (Heb. x. 4.) And, as the sacrifices effected only what the lawyers call an abatement of the nuisance, they were regarded objectively as prefigurative representations of a better sacrifice in the person of the Messiah; inasmuch as what they could only represent and teach, His sacrifice would truly and actually effect. Here rested the faith of the ancients, and here they found acceptance with God. (Ps. xl. 6—9; Heb. ix. 11—28; x. 1—26; Eph. v. 2.) The term “sacrifice” is sometimes used figuratively for repentance; (Ps. li. 17;) for the good works of believers; (Phil. iv. 18; Heb. xiii. 16;) and for the duties of prayer and praise. (Rom. xii. 1; Heb. xiii. 15; 1 Pet. ii. 5.)—See OBEDIENCE.

SACRILEGE. The crime of profaning which is sacred. (Rom. ii. 22.) Occasionally the Jews were eminently guilty of this crime; as they withheld the tithes and offerings: (Mal. iii. 8—10;) and even converted the temple into a market. (Matt. xxvi. 12, 13.) The hearts of believers are called “the temple of God,” and they must not be defiled or profaned. (1 Cor. iii. 17.)

SADDUCEES=judases. A Jewish sect, in opposition to the Pharisees and Essenes; said to have been founded by a certain Zadok, who lived about three centuries before Christ. The Sadducees rejected all traditions and unwritten laws, and held the Scriptures to be the only rule of the Jewish religion. As professors of materialism, they denied the existence of angels and spirits, the resurrection of the dead, as well as an overruling Providence. (Matt. xxii. 23—32; Luke xx. 27—38; Acts xxiii. 6—8.) In their lives and morals the Sadducees were more strict than the Pharisees; and although their tenets were not generally acceptable among the common people, yet they were adopted by many of the higher ranks. The modern Karaiteis are apparently followers of the ancient Sadducees. (Matt. iii. 7; xvi. 1—12; Mark xii. 18; Acts iv. 1; xv. 17.)

SADDLE. The Hebrew word kha-bash signifies “saddle” or panniers. (Gen. xxii. 3; Num. xxii. 21; Judg. xix. 10; 2 Sam. xvii. 28.) The ancient Eastern saddles were probably nothing more than a skin girded to the beast. The pack-saddles of the camels were high, and made of wood, with cloths heaped upon them. At the end of the day’s journey, the saddlecloths being laid on the ground, formed a sort of mattress in the tent. (Gen. xxxi. 34.)

SADOC = just. One of Joseph’s ancestors. (Matt. i. 14.)

SAFFRON. The Hebrew word, carcom, rendered “saffron,” designates the crocus or saffron plant, which grows wild in every Eastern country. The ancients frequently made use of this purple-coloured fragrant flower in costly perfumes. (Sol. Song iv. 14.)

SAINT.—See SANCIFICATION.

SALAH = a shoot, sprout. A son, or grandson of Arphaxad; (Gen. x. 24; xi. 12—15;) also written “Sala.” (Luke iii. 35.)

SALAMIS = pacific? A city of Cyprus, on the S. E. coast of the island. (Acts xiii. 5.) This ancient city, of which few remains now exist, was afterwards called Constantia, and still later Farmagusta.

SALATHIEL = asked of God. 1. A son of Jeconiah, and father, or grandfather of Zerubbabel; (1 Chron. iii. 17; Matt. i. 12;) also called “Shealtiel.” (Ezr. iii. 2; Neh. xii. 1; Hagg. i. 12, 14; ii. 2.) 2. The son of Neri, and father of Zorobabel. (Luke iii. 27.)

SALCAH = way, tract. A town of Gad, or Manasseh, in the eastern limits of Bashan. (1 Chron. v. 11; Josh. xii. 5; xiii. 11.) It is also written “Salchah.” (Deut. iii. 10.) It is now called Salkhah; and is described as a place with ruins on the southern spur of Jebel Harar, and aboundings in vineyards. It was the eastern boundary of the territory of the Hebrews.

SALEM.—See JERUSALEM.

SALIM = peace. A place near Ænon, where John baptised. (John iii. 23.)—See ÆNON.

SALLAI = basket-maker? 1. A descendant of Benjamin. (Neh. xi. 8.) 2.—See SALLU.

SALLU = weighed. 1. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. ix. 7; Neh. xi. 7.) 2. One of the priests; (Neh. xii. 7;) also called “Sallai.” (Neh. xii. 20.)

SALMA = garment. 1. A son of Caleb. (1 Chron. ii. 51—54.) 2.—See SALMON.

SALMAH = See SALMON.

SALMON = clothed. 1. The father of Boaz; (Ruth iv. 20, 21; Matt. i. 4, 5;) also called “Salmah;” (Ruth iv. 20, margin;) and “Salma.” (1 Chron. ii. 11.) 2.—See ZALMON.

SALMONE = clothed. A promontory forming the eastern extremity of the island of Crete. (Acts xxvii. 7.)

SALOME = pacific. The wife of Zebedee, and mother of James and John. (Matt. xx. 20, 21.) She was one of the devout women who ministered unto Christ. (Matt. xxvii. 55; Mark xv. 40; xvi. 1.)

SALT. The existence of abundance of rock salt, in the hills and along the coasts of the southern extremity of the Dead sea, which is the result of volcanic action, may account for the excessive saltiness of the waters. Masses of rock salt, broken from the hills, are scattered along the shore. The waters of the sea, annually overflowing the banks, and filling the hollows and pits on the shore, and being exhaled by the sun and heat, leave behind them an abundance of excellent salt, (Zeph. ii. 9; Ezek. xlvii. 11,) with which the Arabs carry on a considerable trade throughout Syria and Egypt. (Job vi. 6; Isa. xxx. 24, margin; Ezek. xviii. 4.) As salt was the symbol of incorruption and perpetuity, it always constituted a part of the offerings to God. (Ex. xxx. 32; Lev. ii. 13; Ezek. xliii. 24; Mark iv. 4; Col. iv. 6; 1 Cor. v. 8.) The allowance received by one in the service of another is called “salt;” (Exx. iv. 14, margin) hence the Latin salarium, from sal, i.e. salt, denotes salary. Break bread and eat salt with an Arab, i.e. partake of his hospitality, and you have his pledge of safety and protection. (Mark ix. 50.) Salt, as the symbol of permanency, was eaten by the contracting parties in covenant engagements, to signify that an “irrevocable covenant” had now been ratified. (Num. xviii. 19; 2 Chron. xiii. 5.) Salt appears to have been used as a manure; and when used in proper proportions it enriches the soil; (Luke xv. 3, 5;) hence Christ calls His disciples “the salt of the earth,” because mankind were to be preserved from ruin, and rendered fruitful unto every good word and work, by the savour of the truth, and their holy instruction and example. (Matt. v. 13—16; Col. iv. 6; James v. 20.) A “salt land” is an unfruitful land. (Job xxxix. 6; Ps. civ. 34, margin; Jer. xvii. 6; Zeph. ii. 9.) And to “sow” a place with “salt” was a symbol of perpetual desolation. (Judg. xix. 45.)

SALT, CITY OF.—See SALT, VALLEY OF.

SALT, PILAR OF.—See LOT.

SALT SEA.—See SEA.

SALT, VALLEY OF. Apparently the Ghorr south of the Dead sea, adjacent to the mountain of Salt; where the Hebrews gained two decisive victories over the Edomites. (2 Sam. viii. 13; 1 Chron. xviii. 12; 2 Kings xiv. 7; 2 Chron. xxv. 11.) In this neighbourhood lay also the “City of Salt.” (Josh. xvi. 61, 62.)

SALU = wegen. A descendant of Simeon. (Num. xxxv. 14.)

SALUTATION. Various forms of salutation prevailed among the Hebrews; as “Blessed be thou of Jehovah.”—“Jehovah be with thee.”—“May peace be thine.” (Judg. xix. 596)

SAL, S. Ruth ii. 4; 1 Sam. xxv. 6; 2 Sam. xx. 9; Ps. cxix. 8.)—“Let my Lord live,” i.e. enjoy every blessing of a long life. (1 Kings i. 31; Neh. ii. 3; Dan. ii. 4; iii. 9; v. 10; vi. 16, 21.)—“Hail,” i.e. joy to thee. (Matt. xxvi. 49; xxviii. 9; Mark xv. 18; Luke i. 28; John xix. 3.) The Hebrew word barak—“to bless,” was also used in the sense of salute or welcome, and to bid adieu. (Gen. xlvi. 7, 10; 2 Kings iv. 29; x. 13; 1 Chron. xviii. 10, margin.) The Arabs generally salute each other with Salam aleikum, i.e. Peace be with you. (Matt. x. 12; Luke x. 5, 6.) Though Christ dissuaded His disciples from imitating the moroseness of the Jews, in saluting their brethren only, (Matt. v. 47,) nevertheless, they were forbidden to salute an heretic, as such a course might have carried a deceitful appearance. (2 John 10, 11; Rom. xvi. 17; 1 Cor. v. 11.) In the presence of kings and princes the Hebrews prostrated themselves upon the ground while pronouncing the form of salutation. (Ex. iv. 31; 1 Kings i. 53; ii. 19; 1 Sam. xxiv. 8; Matt. ii. 11.) As an act of courteous demeanour they “bowed” repeatedly to a superior. (Gen. xxiii. 7; xxxiii. 3; xlii. 28.) As a token of affectionate respect they sometimes kissed each other’s beard; (2 Sam. xx. 9;) or each other’s lips, or even the cheeks; (Gen. xxxiii. 4; Luke xv. 20;) at the same time wishing each other every kind of prosperity. (Gen. xxxix. 6, 11, 13; xlii. 27; xviii. 10—12; Ex. iv. 27; xviii. 7.) The Scribes were fond of public salutations and greetings. (Mark xii. 38.) Our Lord commanded His disciples to avoid the customary salutations on the way, in order to prevent the loss of time in mere matters of form and ceremony. (Luke x. 4; 2 Kings iv. 29.)

SALVATION. Deliverance from danger or evil of any kind. Of every deliverance, whether personal or national, it is said “salvation is of the Lord.” (Ex. xiv. 13; Ps. iii. 8; Prov. xxx. 31; Jon. ii. 9; Rev. vii. 10; 1 Sam.
Generally, the term salvation denotes the deliverance of sinners from their sins by Jesus Christ, the only Saviour. So fearful is the guilt of sin, that till the sinner appropriates the atonement of Christ, legally he abides in condemnation. And as salvation, full and free, is provided, this condemnation can be removed; hence, every sinner is exhorted now to believe in Christ—to come to Christ, and take of Him—that he may have life eternal. (Matt. xi. 28, 29; Rev. xxii. 14.) And while the penitent, thus earnestly and expectingly relies on the mercy and power of the Saviour, self and doubt alike give way, pardon is received, and from his heart he can say, “Christ loved me, and gave Himself for me.” He is instantly assured, by the Holy Spirit given unto him, that the blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin. Thus is salvation obtained only by the mercy of God in Christ, apprehended by a faith which passes through all, puts by all, and comes to Christ, and trusts in Him alone. The earnest believer is now enabled to walk in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, to advance in the spiritual life, perfecting holiness in the fear of God, until he arrive in the kingdom of glory for ever. All the mystery of human happiness, for time and eternity, is comprehended in the blessings of “the common salvation.” (2 Cor. vi. 2; Eph. i. 13; Matt. i. 21; Tit. iii. 13; 1 Thess. i. 10; Heb. ii. 13; v. 9; Jude 3.)

SAMARIA = watch-post, watch-height. A hill with a city built upon it by Omri, king of Israel, about 924 B.C., and named by him Samaria, after Shemer, the former owner of the soil. (1 Kings xvi. 24; 2 Kings iii. 1–13.) In a wider sense “Samaria” designated the kingdom of Samaria, i.e. of Israel, or the ten tribes, of which the city of Samaria was the capital. (1 Kings xiii. 32; 2 Kings xvii. 26; xxiii. 19; Jer. xxxi. 51; xli. 5; Ezk. iv. 10, 17; Neh. iv. 2.) Samaria continued to be the capital of Israel until the carrying away of the ten tribes by Shalmaneser, under king Hoshea, about 721 B.C. (2 Kings xvii. 3, 5.)

During all this time Samaria was the seat of idolatry; and is often denounced by the prophets. (1 Kings vii. 32, 33; 2 Kings x. 18–28; Isa. ix. 8; Jer. xxiii. 13, 14; Ezek. xvi. 45–50; Am. vi. 1; Mic. i. 1.) Augustus bestowed Samaria upon Herod the Great; who ultimately rebuilt the city with great magnificence and strength; and called it Sebaste in honour of Augustus. (Jos. Antiq. xv. 8, 5; Wars, i. 21, 2; Acts viii. 5–9.) The present place is a small village called Sebaste, but the ancient site is now cultivated ground, which has been ploughed for centuries; and has upon it many olive and fig trees. There are few foundations and stones of the ancient city, with the exception of several magnificent colonnades, which stand solitary and mournful in the midst of ploughed fields, the skeletons as it were of departed glory.—See Shechem.

Samaritans. The inhabitants of Samaria, after the Israelites were carried into exile. They were the foreigners brought from Babylon, Cuthah, Ava, Hamath, Sepharvaim, and other eastern countries, by the Assyrian king, Shalmaneser. They subsequently applied to Esarhaddon for one of the Israelish priests; and one took up his abode in Bethel, and appears to have introduced the five books of Moses among them. So “they feared the Lord, and served their own gods,” each his own national idola. (2 Kings xvii. 1–41; xviii. 34; Ezra iv. 2.) When the Jews returned from the Exile, and began to rebuild Jerusalem and the temple, the Samaritans also desired to aid them in the work. The refusal of the Jews to admit them to this privilege, gave rise to the subsequent hatred between the two races. (Ezra iv. 1–24; Neh. iv. 1–23; vi. 1–19; xiii. 28.) Shechem, at the foot of Gerizim, now became the metropolis of the Samaritans; they built a temple on the Mount, where they clung to their worship, and lived in expectation of a Messiah. The name “Samaritan” then became, among the Jews, a byword and term of reproach, and all intercourse with them was avoided. Yet many of the Samaritans believed on Christ. (Matt. x. 5; Luke xvi. 16—18; John iv. 4—42; Acts vii. 16; viii. 5—25; ix. 31; v. 8.) The Samaritans at Nabalus, the ancient Shechem, are now reduced to a very small community; and still retain their ancient hatred against the Jews. They form the last isolated remnant of a remarkable people, clinging now for more than two thousand years around this central spot of their religion and history, and lingering slowly to decay. Several manuscripts of the Samaritan pentateuch have been obtained from this remarkable people.

SAMAR-CWERBO=sword of Neboi. A Babylonian military commander. (Jer. xxxix. 3.) SAMLAH=garment. A king of the Edomites. (Gen. xxxvi. 36; 1 Chron. i. 47.) SAMOS=renowned. An island in the Ægean sea, near the coast of Asia Minor. The island produces oil, wine, oranges, and silk, and is capable of much higher cultivation. (Acts xx. 15.)

SAMOTHIRACIA=Thracian Samos. An island in the north-east part of the Ægean sea, above the Hellespont. The island is inhabited principally by fishermen; and is in many parts covered with forests. It is now called Samandrachi. (Acts xvi. 11.)

SAMSON=man-like. The son of Manoab, of the tribe of Dan. As the regent of the Hebrews, he judged them twenty years. He was remarkable for his vast physical strength, and was a Nazarite from his birth. (Judg. xiii. 2—24.) At an early age Samson began to put forth his superhuman strength in bold exploits. (Judg. xiii. 25; xiv. 5, 6.) Samson married a woman of Timnath, assigning as a reason for his choice, "for she pleaseth me well," properly, according to the Hebrew, "she is right mine eyes," i.e. right in reference to end, or purpose—"properly adapted to the end which I have in view." Samson may have entertained genuine affection for the Philistine woman, but his ulterior policy was doubtless, to make this alliance subservient to the great purpose he had in view—the deliverance of his country from the dominion of the Philistines. In this affair Samson was evidently under the control of the Most High. (Judg. xiv. 1—4.) An opportunity soon occurred, when the Hebrew Hercules, unaided by his degraded and cowardly countrymen, commenced his series of tremendous retributions upon the enemies of his country. (Judg. xiv. 5—20; xv. 9—19.) After several successful exploits, Samson permitted a mercenary and perfidious courtezan to worm him from the secret of his great strength; and, while asleep on her lap, the locks of his hair were shaved off, and he was no more than an ordinary man. The loss of his hair did not in itself deprive him of strength; but it involved the loss of his strength, because it took from him the condition of a Nazarite, with which his extraordinary strength was inseparably connected. The Philistines came upon him, and having put out his eyes, they bound him in fetters, and compelled him to grind in the prison like a slave. (Judg. xvi. 1—21. However, while immured in the prison-house, Samson appears to have repented of his past misconduct; and God reinvigorated him, as his hair grew, with his former extraordinary strength. Of this fact his enemies were not aware. The lords of the Philistines having assembled in the temple to celebrate the festival of Dagon, Samson was brought out and exhibited, as a butt for their scoffs and insolence. But being conducted to the two middle pillars, which were the main support of the building, he grasped them, and bending himself forward with all his force, the building rushed down; and the assembly, including Samson himself, were crushed under the load. (Judg. xvi. 22—31.) It is a melancholy fact that the champion of Israel was not without great faults; but he had some conspicuous virtues. His zeal against idolatry was prominent. Samson is ranked with such worthies as Barak and Jephthah, and David and Samuel.
(Heb. xi. 32.)

SAMUEL—heard of God. The prophet, and the last judge or regent of the Hebrews. He was the son of Elkanah, a Levite, in the birth of Samuel, the Divine promise to Hannah, one of the wives of Elkanah, was accomplished. His mother, in accordance with her vow, consecrated him to the service of Jehovah; and while he was yet a child he officiated, in some form, in the house of the Lord in Shiloh. (1 Sam. i. 1—28; ii. 1—18; 1 Chron. vi. 27—28.) Here Samuel was favoured with remarkable revelations of the Divine will; and it soon became known that "Samuel was established to be a prophet of the Lord." (1 Sam. iii. 1—21.) After the death of Eli, with whom he was trained, Samuel was publicly recognized as the judge of the nation; and he frequently acted as a priest. (1 Sam. vii. 1—17; ix. 22; x. 8; xi. 10; xvi. 1; Ps. xciv. 6; Jer. xv. 1.) With Samuel commenced a new and splendid era, both as to the civil and religious affairs of the Hebrews. He made annual circuits through the country to administer justice, until his infirmities were too many to permit it. His sons, who were deputed to execute this duty, proved themselves unworthy of the trust, and the people determined on a change of government. Samuel anointed Saul to be their king, and he resigned his authority to him. (1 Sam. xii. 1—25.) When Saul was rejected, Samuel anointed David to succeed as king. After Samuel had nobly attended to the affairs of the Hebrews, until pressed by the infirmities of age, he retired to Ramah, where he died. (1 Sam. xv. 1—35; xvi. 1—13; xxv. 1.) In 1 Chron. vi. 33, he is called "Shemuel."

SAMUEL, Books of. The first and second books of Samuel, also called the First and Second Books of Kings, are but one work, severed into two parts. They contain the history of Samuel's administration; (1 Sam. i.—xxv.;) the partly contemporaneous history of Saul; and the history of David's government. In 1 Chron. xxix. 29, it is said, that "the acts of David, first and last, are written in the book of Samuel the seer; and in the book of Nathan the prophet, and in the book of Gad the seer." From this passage, it would seem that the books of Samuel are the work of an unknown author, who, under Divine guidance, made use of the three works in question, in their composition—the documents of Samuel supplying the author with the largest amount of necessary history. The work was evidently written before the death of David, as that event is not mentioned. As for the difficulties in the books of Samuel, they are more apparent than real; and they speedily vanish before an enlightened criticism.

SANBALLAT—giving strength to the army, or landed by the army. A satrap of the king of Persia, in Samaria. He was a native of Horonaim, a town of Moab. He endeavoured by every means to hinder Nehemiah in the work of rebuilding Jerusalem. (Neh. ii. 10; iv. 1; vi. 1—14; xiii. 28.)

SANCHIFICATION. Separation from ordinary use to a sacred purpose. The Hebrew word kadosh, and the Greek word agios, rendered "holy," "hallowed," and "sanctified," are applied to certain times which were hallowed—as the Sabbath, and the Hebrew festivals; (Gen. ii. 3; Ex. xx. 8, 11; Lev. xxiii. 37; 2 Kings x. 20;) to the things said to be hallowed, as the sacred incense or perfume; (Ex. xxx. 36; Matt. vii. 6;) the sacred vestments; (Ex. xxviii. 2, 4;) the sacred vessels; (Ex. xxx. 29; 1 Chron. xxii. 10; 2 Tim. ii. 21;) the holy bread; (Lev. xxix. 22; 1 Sam. xxii. 5;) the altar; (Ex. xxix. 37; xxx. 1, 10; Matt. xxiii. 13;) and portions of the sacrifices. (Lev. ii. 3, 10.) So also, of places said to have been hallowed;
(Ex. iii. 5; Acts vii. 33.) as the Holy City, i.e. Jerusalem; (Neh. xi. 1; Isa. xxviii. 2; Matt. iv. 6; xxiv. 15; xviii. 53; Acts vi. 13; xxii. 28;) the holy Mountain, i.e. Zion; (Ps. ii. 6;) the tabernacle; (Num. xviii. 10;) the temple; (Ps. cxxxviii. 2;) the most holy place, the oracle. (Ex. xxxvi. 33; xxviii. 43; Heb. ix. 2; 3, 12; 1 Kings vi. 16; viii. 6; Ezek. xii. 23.) So also men are said to be hallowed, as Aaron and his sons; (1 Chron. xxiii. 19; xxiv. 5; Isa. xlili. 28;) the first-born; (Ex. xiii. 2;) and the Hebrew people; (Ex. xix. 10, 14; Dan. xii. 1;) also the people Hebrews, the "saints," (Deut. xxix. 3; Ps. xvi. 3; Dan. vii. 18;) like the word ἱερουσαλήμ, rendered "saints," (Ps. xxx. 4; xxxii. 28; xxxvii. 28; 1 Pet. i. 6; Rev. i. 18;) ἱεροσόλυμα, rendered "saintly." (Ps. iv. 3.) The terms are also used of those who were ceremonially purified under the Mosaic law. (Num. vi. 20; Lev. xxii. 16, 32; Heb. ix. 13.) But, though the external purifications of the Hebrews, when any one had transgressed, had to do with restoration to civil and national privileges, they could not necessarily induce moral and spiritual holiness. They, however, reminded the sincere Hebrew that he was "unclean" in the sight of God; and that the ceremonial cleansing, by which he had been restored to his civil and political rights, were symbols of those "good things" that were to come—spiritual and eternal salvation—which should accrue through the sprinkling of the blood of Christ, and the gift of the Holy Spirit. He was thus assured, that "without holiness no man shall see the Lord." (Heb. ix. 14; xii. 14.) Hence, sanctification is used to designate that state of mind induced by the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, thus producing internal and external holiness. (John iii. 5; 1 Cor. vi. 11; Eph. v. 26; 1 Thess. iv. 3, 4, 7.) It is true, sanctification is sometimes spoken of as the work of man himself. (Ex. xix. 22; Lev. xi. 44; xx. 7, 8; 1 Pet. iii. 16.) When a person solemnly and unreservedly gives himself to God, he then may be said to sanctify himself. He is then enabled to believe in Christ with his heart unto righteousness, and God instantly, by the communication of His Holy Spirit, sanctifies the believer. Thus the believer gives himself to God, and God in return gives Himself to the believer. (Ezek. xxxvi. 25—29; 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17; vi. 19; 2 Cor. vi. 15—18; Eph. ii. 22.) This sanctification, which is received by faith, is the work of God within us, and purifies from all unrighteousness. And, as ample provision is made for our sanctification, they who know the Scriptures and the power of God, know that it is attainable now, and that it is our business to claim it now, in order to "perfect holiness in the fear of God." (John xvii. 17; 2 Cor. xiii. 1; 2 Thess. ii. 13; 1 Pet. i. 2; 1 Thess. iii. 13; Heb. xi. 11; Rev. xxii. 11.) Though sanctification is assumed of all Christians, who are hence called "saints," (Acts ix. 10—41; xxvi. 10; Rom. i. 7; viii. 27;) yet, while on earth, they are in a state of spiritual warfare with Satan and his temptations, with the world and its influence. (Rom. viii. 13; 2 Cor. ii. 11; Gal. v. 16, 17, 24; 1 John ii. 15, 16.) And while of the faithful it can be said, "they are clean every whit," yet—as the traveler, though bodily clean, whose sandals did not exclude the dust of the road, required his feet to be again washed before he could with propriety take his place on the couch surrounding the table—they still need the application of the blood of Christ by the Holy Spirit, to remove those pollutions—which even the renewed nature is sure to contract in passing through the present evil world. (John xiii. 4—10.) They overcome by faith in the blood of the Lamb. (Rev. xii. 11; 1 John v. 4.) In a general sense, "sanctification" comprehends the whole Christian life. (Gal. v. 22, 23; 1 Pet. i. 3, 16, 22; Heb. xii. 10; James i. 8.) In 1 Thess. v. 23, the Apostle prays for the sanctification of the entire church, in all its various departments. In 1
Cor. vii. 14, it is said, the unbelieving husband, or wife, is “sanctified”—that is, to be regarded not as unclean, but as specially claiming the attention of the Christian community. The term “sanctified” is also used in the sense of expiation. (Heb. x. 10, 14, 29.)—See Holiness.

SANCTUARY. This term designates the tabernacle or temple; (Josh. xxiv. 26; Ps. iii. 17; Dan. xi. 31;) also the outer sanctuary, where was the altar of incense, etc., (2 Chron. xxvi. 18; Heb. ix. 1, 6;) and specially the “holy of holies,” behind the veil, in which was the mercy-seat, etc. (Lev. iv. 6; Heb. ix. 7, 8.) Also a place of refuge. (Isa. viii. 14; Ezek. xi. 16.)

SAND. The sand of the sea is used as the symbol of an innumerable multitude; (Gen. xxii. 17; xxxii. 12;) of abundance; (Gen. xlii. 49;) also of weight. (Job vi. 3; Prov. xxvii. 3.) In Job xxix. 18, the Rabbins understand by the Hebrew word ḫōl, rendered “sand,” the fabulous bird φήνης; but there is no reason to depart from ordinary usage of the term, as the emblem of numerous days.—See Dust.

SANDALS. The ancient sandals or shoes were mere soles of hide, leather, or wood, covering the bottom of the foot, and bound on with thongs. (Ex. iii. 5; Deut. xxix. 4; Josh. v. 15; ix. 5; Mark vi. 9; Acts xi. 8.) The woodcut represents the right sandal of a pair found in a tomb at Thebes, and now in the Museum at Turin. They consist of a double sole, firmly and neatly sewn together. The latches or loops, just wide enough to admit the great toe, are firmly sewn on the corresponding place of the sandal. To the uppermost of these are attached the two ends of a thong, which passes round the heel of the wearer, and is also sewn to two pieces of leather which come up on each side of the foot. The two ends of the thong are then enclosed in a leather tube, which, when worn, would rest upon the instep. Before putting on the sandal, this tube was drawn down towards the toes, when there was no difficulty in passing the thong over the heel, and then by drawing upwards toward the instep, the sandal was fitted firmly and tightly to the foot. Sometimes they were highly ornamented, and some of them resembled Oriental slippers, which cover also the upper part of the foot. The Assyrian sandals usually had quarters. (Ezek. xvi. 10; Judith x. 4; xvi. 9.) On the Egyptian monuments shoes or half boots of leather, are represented as worn by the upper classes; and the shoemaker or sandal-maker is exhibited at his work. In later usage the Greek ὑπόδημα, or sandal, designated the Roman calcēsus or shoe which covered the whole foot. (Matt. x. 10; Luke x. 4; xv. 22; xxii. 35; Acts vii. 33.) To “bear,” or to “unbind one’s sandals,” are expressions implying inferiority. (Matt. iii. 11; Mark i. 7; Luke iii. 16; John i. 27; Acts xiii. 25.) The Orientals usually lay aside their sandals or shoes on entering the sanctuary. (Ex. iii. 5; Josh. v. 15.) In transferring a possession, it was customary to deliver a shoe, as in the middle ages a glove; (Ruth iv. 7;) hence the action of throwing down a shoe upon a territory was a symbol of occupancy. (Ps. lix. 8.) The loosing of the shoe was also a ceremony when a man refused to fulfill the sacred obligation to the widow of his deceased brother. (Deut. xxv. 9, 10.)

SANHEDRIM.—See Council.

SANSANNAH = palm branch. A town in the south of Judah. (Josh. xv. 31.)

SAPH = threshold. A Philistine giant; also called “Sippai” = fortress. (2 Sam. xxi. 18; 1 Chron. xx. 14.)

SAPHR = far. A place in Judaea; perhaps one of the villages called SAP

Sapphire, between Eleutheropolis and Askelon. (Mic. i. 11.)

Sapphire = a sapphire. The wife of Ananias, and his accomplice in the sin for which they died. (Acts v. 1—10.)

SAPPHIRE. The Hebrew word sapphire, designates the "sapphire," (Job xxviii. 6, 16,) a precious stone, next in hardness and value to the diamond, which was frequently engraved by the ancients. (Ex. xxviii. 18, 21; xxxix. 11; Rev. xxi. 19.) This gem was pellucid, of a beautiful sky-blue colour; hence the floor on which is placed Jehovah's throne is compared with the sapphire. (Ex. xxi. 10; Ezek. i. 26.)

SARA. — See Sarai.

SARAH = a princess; noble lady. 1. The wife of Abraham and mother of Isaac. She was at first called Sarai = contentious, or perhaps, noble, generous. (Gen. xvii. 15; xxii. 3.) Some say that she was the grand-daughter of Terah, the daughter of Haran, consequently the sister of Lot, the nurse of Abraham, and the same with Ischah. (Gen. xi. 29.) But Abraham asserts that Sarah was his sister, that she was the daughter of his father, but not of his mother. (Gen. xii. 13; xx. 12.) Terah, it seems, had two wives, by one of whom he had Haran and Abraham; and by the other Sarah, who was thus the step-sister of Abraham. (Gen. xi. 27—31.) That Sarah was remarkable for her beauty, is evident from the precautions which Abraham took to prevent the dangers it was likely to occasion. (Gen. xii. 11—20.) Sarah was the subject of special promises as well as her husband; (Gen. xvii. 16; Rom. iv. 19; ix. 9;) and though she occasionally exhibited a degree of weakness, (Gen. xii. 13; xvi. 6; xviii. 15,) still her exemplary faith is commended. (Heb. xi. 11.) She is represented as the pattern of conjugal fidelity and love, and her example is held forth as the highest model for Christian women, and the title of her "daughters," as their most honourable distinction. (Isa. li. 2; 1 Pet. iii. 6; Gal. iv. 22—31.)

SARAH. — See Sarai.

SARD. — See Sarath.

SARDIUS = prince or royal city. The metropolis of the ancient kingdom of Lydia, in Asia Minor, situated at the foot of Mount Tmolus, on the banks of the river Pactolus, about fifty miles eastward of Smyrna. (Rev. i. 11; iii. 1.) The city was plundered by Cyrus, under Croesus its last king; and in the time of Tiberius it was destroyed by an earthquake. Sardis has long been reduced to a heap of ruins. Two remarkable pillars, supposed to have belonged to the ancient temple of Cybele, still remain to tell the tale of departed greatness. The place is now called Sart, and has a few miserable mud huts, inhabited by Turks.

SARDITES. — See Seres.

SARDIUS. The Hebrew word adam designates the "sardius," a precious stone of the flint family—a kind of chalcedony—now called carnelian or cornelian, from its blood-red or raw flesh colour. (Ex. xxviii. 17; xxxix. 10; Ezek. xxviii. 13; Rev. xxi. 20.) The margin of some of these passages has "ruby;" and in Rev. iv. 3, it is called a "sardine stone."

SARDONYX. A precious stone exhibiting a milk-white variety of the onyx or chalcedony, alternating with shades or stripes of sardius, whence its name. (Rev. xxi. 20.) — See Onyx.

SAREPTA = smelting-house. A Phoenician town, lying on the shores of the Mediterranean, between Tyre and Sidon. (Lake iv. 26.) It was anciently called "Zarephath." (1 Kings xvii. 9, 10; Obad. 20.) It is now represented by the neighbouring large village called Sarefend.
SARGON = prince of the sun. A king of Assyria, who succeeded Shalmaneser, about B.C. 718-714. (Isa. xx. 1.) It is supposed that Sargon, or Sargina, as he is called on the monuments, was not of the royal family of Assyria; but, being a man of great capacity and courage, he usurped the government, probably immediately on the death of Shalmaneser, and conducted it very successfully through a short but brilliant reign. According to the cuneiform inscriptions, Sargon erected the royal palace, and built or beautified the city of Khorsabad "after the manner of Egypt." He was succeeded by his son, Sennacherib. The woodcut, from the Khorsabad monuments in the Louvre at Paris, probably represents this Assyrian monarch. It is worthy of remark, that as late as the Arab conquest the site of Khorsabad actually retained in the country the old Assyrian title of Sargina. — See NINEVEH.

SARID = a survivor. A town in Zebulun. (Josh. xix. 10, 12.)

SARON. — See SHARON.

SARSECHIM = prince of the booths, or tents. The chief of the eunuchs in the army of Nebuchadnezzar. (Jer. xxxix. 8.)

SARUCH. — See SHERIG.

SATAN. — See DEVIL.

SATYRS. The Hebrew word seeritse, rendered "satyrs," properly signifies ke-goats; and is used to designate the creatures — the Rabbins say the satyrs, wood-demons — represented as inhabiting desert places, particularly the ruins of Babylon and Petra. (Isa. xiii. 21; xxxiv. 14.)

SAUL = asked for, desired. 1. The first king of the Hebrews. He was the son of Kish, of the tribe of Benjamin. (1 Sam. ix. 1, 2; x. 1, 21, 23, 24.) His personal appearance was remarkably fine and noble, yet when anointed king he affected no exterior splendor, but returned to the plough among his father's family at Gibeah. After his signal defeat of the Ammonites, Saul was confirmed on the throne by the whole army at Gilgal, (1 Sam. xi. 1—15.) when the continuance of the theocracy was earnestly insisted on by Samuel. (1 Sam. xii. 1—25.) He carried on successful wars against the Ammonites, the Philistines, the Moabites, and the Amalekites. (1 Sam. xiii. 19—21; xiv. 46—52.) Saul, however, in two instances, forgot that he was a vassal of Jehovah, the invisible king, in not executing His orders; and thus rendered himself unfit to be the founder of a royal house. (1 Sam. xiii. 11—14; xv. 1—35.) Hence Jehovah commanded Samuel to anoint David privately, as Saul's successor to the kingdom. (1 Sam. xvi. 1—13.) From this time Saul is exhibited as the slave of jealousy, duplicity, and malice; he fell at last into a deep melancholy. David was introduced to the court as a private musician, where he became acquainted with the manners of the court, and the business of government. (1 Sam. xvi. 14—23.) The Philistines now mustered an army so formidable, that Saul, finding himself abandoned of God, applied in his emergency to the oracle at Endor. Disheartened by the ambiguous answer of the wily sorceress, Saul advanced against the Philistines. The Hebrews were routed, and Saul, finding himself wounded, fell upon his own sword, B.C. 1056, after a reign of forty years. (1 Sam. xxvii. 1—25; xxxi. 1—13.) 2. A king of the Edomites; (Gen. xxxvi. 37, 38;) also called "Shaul." (1 Chron. i. 46, 49.) 3. See PAUL.

SAVIOUR. The Hebrew word moshi'a, and the Greek soter, alike signify a deliverer, preserver, saviour, one who saves from danger or destruction and brings into a state of prosperity and happiness. (Judg. iii. 9—15; 2 Kings
The terms are specially applied to God as the Deliverer and Saviour of His people. (1 Sam. x. 19; Isa. xiv. 13, 21; xlix. 26; ix. 16; Luke i. 47; 1 Tim. i. 1; ii. 3.) The term Saviour is also applied to Jesus as the Messiah, the Saviour of men, who saves His people from sin and death, unto eternal life and happiness in His kingdom. (Matt. i. 21; Luke ii. 11; John iv. 42; Acts v. 31; xiii. 28; Phil. iii. 20; 2 Pet. i. 1—11; i. 20; iii. 2, 18; 2 Tim. i. 10; Tit. i. 4; ii. 13; iii. 6.) God Himself says, "I, even I, am Jehovah; and besides me there is no Saviour." (Isa. xiii. 11.) But, as it is the work of our Lord Jesus Christ, to "Save to the uttermost," i.e. in the highest sense, He must be God Himself. (Heb. vii. 25.) The new Testament writers constantly represent Jesus by the term "Saviour," a term, which not only Jewish but Gentile usage considered as breathing the grandeur of Divinity. See JUSTICE, and ATONEMENT.

SCAPE-GOAT. The Hebrew word azazel, rendered "scape-goat," properly signifies the averter, the remover. (Lev. xvi. 7—26.) Among the ceremonies of the great atonement day, the high priest was to take two he-goats for a sin-offering. Having placed them before the Lord, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, he cast lots upon them; one lot for Jehovah, and one lot for Azazel. The goat upon which the lot for Jehovah fell, was offered as a sin-offering, and the blood was sprinkled within the vail. Then the second goat, on which the lot for Azazel fell, was brought forward, and the high priest laid both his hands upon its head, and confessed over it the iniquities of the people, after which he sent it away by the hand of a "fit man," in order that it might bear away the sins of the people into a solitary land—for Azazel. While, in this typical institution, the two goats presented before Jehovah, constituted in fact but one sin-offering, we are inclined to consider that offering as having a direct typical reference to the two-fold phase of the work of Christ. In the death of the first goat and the sprinkling of its blood in the holy place, we have symbolised the death of Christ, and His intercession for us. In the character of a sacrificial victim He laid down His life, and became the propitiation for the sins of the world. "Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by His own blood He entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us." (1 John ii. 2; Heb. ix. 12.) In the second goat bearing away the sins of the people for Azazel, in the desert, we have symbolized the work of Christ, who, in virtue of His sacrificial death, "takes away the sin of the world." "So Christ was once offered to bear the sin of many." (John i. 29; Heb. ix. 28.) By the words "bearing sin," and "taking away sin," we understand not the imputation of our sins to Christ, nor merely His suffering on account of our sins, but the positive pardon or forgiveness of sin, which every penitent receives, by accepting Christ as his only atoning sacrifice. (Isa. lii. 12; 1 Pet. ii. 24; 1 John iii. 5.) Thus, in the two-fold symbol of the slain and the emissary goat, the one symbolized the Redeemer's vicarious sacrifice for sin—His work for God; the other the pardon of sin—His work for man, by which the sins of believers are removed from them as far as the East is from the West.

SCARLET. The Hebrew word tolaath, like the Arabic kermes, signifies a worm, specially the coccus ilicis, i.e. the coccus worm or insect, which adheres with its eggs to the twigs of the kermes oak, and is related to the coccus casti, or cochineal. The term is also used for crimson or deep scarlet colour. (Isa. i. 18; Lam. iv. 3.) So also, the Hebrew word shew, properly a red or bright colour, is used to denote the crimson or deep scarlet colour obtained from the insect; (Gen. xxxviii. 28, 30; Jer. iv. 30;) and the two terms united, tolaath shani, designate the worm-dyed crimson, or worm scarlet. (Ex. xxv. 4; Lev. xiv. 4, 6.) The term shani is also used for scarlet or crimson cloths. (Isa. i. 18; Prov. xxxi. 21.)—See PURPLE.

SCEPTRE. A staff or wand of wood, usually overlaid with gold, and terminating at the top with some peculiar symbol. On the Assyrian monuments, the sceptres borne in the hands of the kings, as the symbol of authority, were often richly decorated. The sceptre may have originated in the shepherd’s staff, as the patriarchal chiefs were shepherds as well as princes. Holding out the sceptre was a mark of royal favour. (Gen. xxxix. 10; Num. xxiv. 17; Ps. xlv. 6; Heb. i. 8; Isa. xv. 5; Ezek. xix. 11; Am. i. 5; Est. iv. 11, 52.)

SCева = left-handed. A Jew, residing at Ephesus, whose sons professed to practice exorcism. (Acts xix. 14.)

SCHISM. A rent or fissure; (Matt. ix. 15; Mark ii. 21;) used also tropically for a division, dissension; (John vii. 43; ix. 16; x. 18;) hence, also used to designate such alienation of feeling among Christians as violates the spiritual union which ought to exist among them, though there be no doctrinal error or separate communion. (1 Cor. i. 10; xi. 18, margin; xii. 23.)

SCHOOL. Though we have nothing indicative of any place of public instruction in the early periods of Hebrew history, yet, doubtless, the Hebrews would adopt, in some sort, the mode of elementary education practised by their Egyptian neighbours. Indeed, the acknowledged ability of the men appointed to assist Moses in the administration of justice, yields evident traces of previous education. (Ex. xviii. 25, 26; Num. xi. 25—29.) Moses commanded Hebrew parents “to teach his statutes diligently to their children;” (Deut. vi. 6;) but it does not follow that this instruction was all oral, or that the mass of the people were ignorant of letters. But in the matter of education the Hebrews advanced with the times; and “schools of the prophets,” i.e. superintended by the prophets, were established in several places. In Samuel’s time there were large companies of prophetic pupils in Gibeah; (1 Sam. x. 5;) and at Naioth; (1 Sam. xix. 20;) and in the time of Elijah and Elisha there were schools at Bethel; (2 Kings ii. 3;) at Jericho; (2 Kings ii. 5;) at Gilgal; (2 Kings iv. 38; vi. 1;) and probably on Mounts Carmel and Ephraim. (2 Kings ii. 25; v. 22.) It does not follow, however, that those who attended the schools of the prophets, did so in the expectation of assuming the prophetic office. Though sacred history gives us no minute particulars as to the manner of their education, they were doubtless instructed in the Mosaic law, and the literature of the times. These schools, in later times, may have been known under the name of “assemblies;” and the instructor was probably the “Master of assemblies.” (Eccl. i. 2; vii. 27; xii. 8—12; Prov. i. 2, 6; xxv. 1; Isa. viii. 16—20; xxxix. 12; Ex. vii. 10, 12.) As the Apostles, some of whom were fishermen, and called “unlearned and ignorant men,” could read and write, we may assume that others of the same class of life could generally do the same. (Luke iv. 16—20; 8 John 13; Acts iv. 13; xix. 9; Jude 3.) In Gal. iii. 24, it is said, “the law was our pedagogue—schoolmaster, to bring us to Christ,” i.e. the law, in its multifarious symbols, prepared the way for the brighter revelation in the gospel of Christ.

SCIENCE.—See PHILOSOPHY.

SCORPION. A venomous insect allied to the spider, but in form not unlike the lobster. There are few animals more formidable, and none more erasable, than the scorpion; but happily for mankind, they are equally destructive to their own species, as to other animals. In tropical climates they are occasionally found twelve inches long; and their sting is attended with excruciating pain, sometimes terminating in violent convulsions and death. (Rev. ix. 3—10.) The scorpion conceals itself in crevices and under stones; and when coiled up, especially the white species found in Judea, resembles an egg in size and appearance. (Luke x. 19; xi. 12.) The term “scorpion” is also used for a kind of scouge. (1 Kings xii. 11.)

SCOURGE. The punishment of scourging on the back was common among the Hebrews, as it was among the ancient Egyptians. The number of stripes was limited by Moses to forty; which the Jews, in later times, were so careful not to exceed, that they inflicted only thirty-nine. (Deut. xxv. 3; 2 Cor. xi. 24.) There were two ways of scourging; one with thongs or whips; the other with rods or twigs. The punishment was inflicted on the offender lying on the ground; (Ex. xxvi. 20; Lev. xix. 20; Deut. xxii. 18; Prov. x. 13; xiii. 24; xx. 30; xxiii. 13, 14; Ps. lxxxix. 32; 1 Kings xi. 12;) in later times the offender was tied by his arms to a pillar, and his back laid bare to the virga or rods of the lictor. To this degrading punishment no Roman citizen could be subjected. (Matt. x. 17; xxvii. 26; John ii. 15; Acts xvi. 28; xxii. 25; xxvi. 11; Heb. xi. 35.)

SCRIBE. The Hebrew word, sopher, rendered “officer,” signifies a writer, a scribe; (Ex. v. 6—19; Num. xi. 16; Deut. xx. 9; Josh. i. 10;) also an officer, a prefect, overseer, or a magistrate. (Deut. xvi. 18; 1 Chron. xxiii. 4; xxvi. 29; 2 Chron. xix. 11; xxvi. 11; Prov. vi. 7.) Such scribes are often seen on the monuments of Egypt, and also on the Assyrian bas-reliefs. So also the Hebrew word sopher signifies a writer, a scribe, a secretary; (2 Kings xviii. 18; xix. 2; Isa. xxxvi. 3;) and is used of the “king’s scribe” or secretary of state; (2 Kings xii. 10; 2 Chron. xxiv. 11; Ezr. iv. 8, 9, 17;) a military scribe or clerk, having charge of the conscription. (Judg. v. 14; 2 Kings xxv. 19; Isa. xxxiii. 18; Jer. xxxvii. 15.)

In later times the scribe was one skilled in the Hebrew law, an interpreter of the law, a lawyer. (1 Chron. xxvii. 32; Jer. viii. 8; Ezr. vii. 6, 11, 12, 21; Neh. vii. 1; iv. 9.) They also had the charge of transcribing the sacred books; (Ezr. vii. 6; Neh. viii. 1, 9;) and in later times they are mentioned in connexion with the elders and the chief priests. (Matt. ii. 4; v. 20; vii. 29; xii. 38; xx. 18; xxi. 15; Luke xx. 1; Acts vi. 12.) They are sometimes called “lawyers” and “doctors of the law.” (Mark xii. 28; Matt. xxii. 35.) The scribes were noted for their pride and hypocrisy, and were among the most inveterate opponents of our Lord. (Luke xx. 19—47.) The term “scribe” is also used generally for a person distinguished for learning and wisdom. (Matt. xiii. 52; xxiii. 84; 1 Cor. i. 20.)

SCRIP. A sort of bag or wallet, usually made of hair cloth, and of much greater depth than width, in which provisions and other articles likely to be useful on a journey were carried by travellers. (1 Sam. xvii. 40; Matt. x. 10.)

SCREECH-OWL.—See Owl.

SCRIPTURES. The sacred writings, comprising the inspired documents of the Old and New Testaments or Covenants, are usually called “the Scriptures,” and by way of eminence “the Bible,” i.e. The Book. (Matt. xxii. 29; John v. 39; xx. 9; Rom. i. 2; 2 Tim. iii. 15; 2 Pet. i. 20, 21.) The documentary monuments of the sacred volume, written by several different persons, and at different periods, extend from the time of the first man till near the close of the first century of the Christian era; thus covering a space of about 4000 years. This book, written under the influence of the Holy Spirit, thus stands invested with all the dignity of the parent of history, inasmuch as it contains the only remaining monuments of the primeval world. Without the early records contained in it, what could we be able to discover of the history of the creation, the fall, the deluge, the confusion of languages, the dispersion of mankind, the invention of the most necessary arts, the manners of the patriarchal ages, and the sources of pagan traditions and mythology? On all these, and kindred subjects, these records are the only sources of history. We can scarcely suppose that the world had existed for 2500 years—from Adam until Moses—without a written revelation, and historical memorials. As writing is undoubtedly a Divine gift, and coeval with language, the early revelations made to Adam, Seth, Enos, Enoch, Noah, and Shem, would not be left for transmission to the uncertainty of tradition, but would at once be chronicled, together with the history of their own times, for the permanent use of after ages. So also, the patriarchs of the Hebrew family, who were favoured with immediate intercourse with the Most High, would not only chronicle the revelations and memorials of their times, but would sacredly preserve along with them the memorials of past generations, and as carefully deposit them with their immediate descendants. Thus, the early documents—though but fragmentary—were cumulative; and from age to age they constituted the Bible of the patriarchs, containing all the information, on life and godliness, requisite for them in their several times and circumstances. About B.C. 1500, the venerable fragments were committed to the hands of Moses—who was skilled in all the learning of the Egyptians—and were by him, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, condensed and arranged in a form adapted for universal utility, in the book of Genesis. Moses also wrote the books of Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy. These several books not only contained the early history of the Hebrew people, but they were the foundation of their religious worship and civil polity. (Deut. xxxi. 24—26.) After the time of Moses, several prophets and other writers, Divinely inspired, composed either histories of their own times, or prophetical books, or psalms appropriated to the praise of God. In the composition of the historical books, the writers had free access to State papers, and other authentic records; while at the same time they were Divinely inspired in the selection of facts. Some of the books, as those of Kings and Chronicles, are evidently condensed from other more copious treatises, for the purpose of preserving, in a brief and compact form, the memorabilia of Hebrew history. Even the writings of Nathan, Gad, Iddo, and others, which in their original form have not come down to our times, are not really lost, inasmuch as they are wrought up by the sacred writers in the historical books. Having answered the purposes for which they were written, such treatises, like the national records, were allowed to perish. (Num. xxii. 14; Josh. x. 18; 2 Sam. i. 18; 1 Kings iv. 32, 33; 1 Chron. iv. 21—23; xxix. 29, 30; 2 Chron. ix. 29; xii. 15.) The several books comprised in the Old Testament were written in the Hebrew language, excepting a few portions which were written in Chaldee, as Dan. ii. 4; vii. 28; Ezra iv. 8; vi. 18; vii. 12—27; Jer. x. 11. And, as the original of the Pentateuch had been carefully preserved in the sanctuary, (Deut. xxxi. 24—26,) it is not improbable that other inspired documents were also deposited in the same place. (1 Sam. x. 25.) From the time the copy of the law was found, after having been concealed during the dangerous days of the idolatrous kings of Judah, the people's attention would be aroused, and copies were extensively multiplied. (2 Kings xxii. 8—20; xxiii. 2.) And within a few years, when the Hebrews went into exile, copies of the sacred books were carried by them into Babylonia. (Dan. ix. 2, 11, 13; Ezr. vi. 18; Neh. ix. 3.) The collecting of the sacred writings began with Moses; but it was not till after the return from the captivity that the Hebrew Scriptures were collected and combined into one whole, by Ezra and Nehemiah, aided by other competent men. (2 Macc. ii. 13.) The critical labours of Ezra the scribe, and Nehemiah the governor, may be comprised in the following particulars: They collected the several copies of the sacred books, and having compared them, out of them all they formed one complete copy, adjusted the various readings, and corrected the errors of transcribers. They likewise made additions in several parts of the different books, which appeared to be necessary for the illustration, correction, and completion of them. To this class of additions we may refer the last chapter of Deuteronomy, which gives an account of the death of Moses and the succession of Joshua. They also changed the old names of several places that had become obsolete, putting instead of them the then current names—as Dan for Laish, Hebron for Kirjath-Arba, etc. (Gen. xiv. 14; xxxv. 19, 27.) Several other passages occur, which contain difficulties that can only be solved by allowing this critical revision. (Gen. xii. 6; xxi. 14; xxxvi. 31; iv. 16—35; Deut. ii. 12; iii. 11, 14; Prov. xxv. 1.) The genealogy of David's posterity, in 1 Chron. iii. 17—24, and the few names in Neh. xii. 10, 11, 22, were probably added, about the end of the fourth century before Christ, by Simon the Just, whom the Jews invariably regarded as the successor of Ezra. Even in the time of Zechariah, a beginning, at least, had been made in combining the Scriptures into one whole, as he mentions “the law,” and “the words of the former prophets.” (Zech. vii. 12.) The thirty-nine books, according to our Bible, which constituted the canon of the Old Testament— are Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy, Joshua, Judges, Ruth, 1 and 2 Samuel, 1 and 2 Kings, 1 and 2 Chronicles, Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther, Job, Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Song of Solomon, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Lamentations, Ezekiel, Daniel, Hosea, Joel, Amos, Obadiah, Jonah, Micah, Nahum, Habakkuk, Zephaniah, Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi. These books alone constituted the Jewish canon; and among them were reckoned only as twenty-two books, as they in some cases combined two or more books in one. In the third century before Christ these books were gradually translated into Greek. Shortly after this, the collection seems to have been completed a considerable time, since it is not only mentioned in the book of Ecclesiasticalus as generally known and divided into three parts, in the year 131, B.C., but is also represented as old by the son of Sirach himself, (xl. 10,) between 130 and 180 before Christ. It is further evident, that in the time of our Saviour, the canon of the holy Scriptures was drawn up, since He cites the law of Moses, the Prophets, and the Psalms, which are the three kinds of books of which that canon is composed, and which He often styles “the Scriptures;” (Matt. xxii. 42; xxii. 29; xxvi. 54; John v. 39;) and by Him, therefore, the Jewish canon, as it existed in His day, was fully authenticated, by whomsoever or at what time it had been formed. That the writings of the Old Testament are genuine, i.e. that they are the productions of the men to whom they are ascribed, it is impossible on rational grounds to deny. And even those books, the names of whose authors are not recorded, possessed no less authority with the Jewish nation. That the several books are authentic, i.e. that their contents are historically true, has never been disproved. Even the question, whether there do occur in the books of the Old Testament any things which are irreconcilable with their alleged authors or dates, the customs or monuments of other nations, has been repeatedly examined by men of considerable abilities, occasionally with intentions invi- mical to the books; and yet, all the supposed discrepancies have vanished under a searching and enlightened criticism, and left the authenticity of the sacred books untouched. Nor have we any intimation that these books, which were written "for our learning," had ever been mutilated or corrupted to serve a purpose. Even the variations between the Hebrew documents and the Septuagint, or Greek translation, have not yet been proved to be inimical to the Hebrew text, inasmuch as we have abundant evidence that the chronology, and several passages on other matters in that translation, have been corrupted for other than Hebrew purposes.

From the time the canon of the Old Testament was completed, till the publication of the last of the books of the New Testament, about four hundred and sixty years elapsed. During the life of Jesus Christ, and for some time after His ascension, nothing on the subject of His mission seems to have been committed to writing; for the purpose of publication, by His followers. And during the period between His resurrection and the publication of the last of the books of the New Testament, the churches possessed miraculous gifts, and the apostles and disciples were enabled to explain the predictions of the Old Testament, and to show their fulfilment. After the gospel had attracted attention, and Christianity was planted, not only in Judea, but in the cities of Italy, Greece, and Asia Minor, the Scriptures of the New Testament were written by the apostles and other inspired men, and intrusted to the keeping of the churches. Already had others written narratives on the rise of the new religion, but they were not authenticated. (Luke i. 1.) And now, when authentic documents were required for the information of the churches, and for the promotion of life and godliness in every region, six of the apostles and two disciples, all of whom were contemporary with the Master, were Divinely inspired to write them. The evangelists may, under Divine guidance, have made use of the earlier narratives of others, also of public records, and even of private memoranda; but the fact must not be lost sight of, that to all the sacred writers it was Divinely revealed what they should write. They "were moved by the Holy Ghost," and their writings were given by the inspiration of God. The New Testament was written in different parts, and on various occasions. The twenty-seven books which constitute the canon of the New Testament are—the four Gospels, which bear the names of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John; the Acts of the Apostles; the Fourteen Epistles which bear the name of Paul—Romans, 1 and 2 Corinthians, Galatians, Ephesians, Philippian, Colossians, 1 and 2 Thessalonians, 1 and 2 Timothy, Titus, Philemon, and Hebrews; the Seven Catholic or General Epistles—James; 1 and 2 Peter; 1, 2, and 3 John, and Jude; also the Book of the Revelation, which bears the name of John. These several pieces which compose the Scriptures of the New Testament were written in the Greek language, which was then almost universally understood. They were not only received by the churches with the highest veneration, but were immediately copied, and handed about from one church to another, till each was in possession of the whole. From the manner in which they were at first circulated, some portions were necessarily longer in reaching certain places than others. And while copies of each book would be extensively multiplied, it is at the same time a certain fact, that no other books besides those which at present compose the volume of the New Testament, were admitted by the early churches. The original collection of the several books, for the formation of the canon of the New Testament, evidently took place in, or immediately after, the apostolic age; but it was not any council convened by any bishop or church that first ascertained and determined their canonical authority. Indeed, the books admitted into the canon were never supposed to derive their authority and validity from any council, inasmuch as the authority of the books existed before any council, and consequently prior to any official or ecclesiastical declarations concerning them. As the several books were assumed to be of complete authority as soon as they were published by their inspired authors, the churches would be eager for their possession, and had them transcribed and freely circulated everywhere. So that, even in the apostolic age, several churches would be in possession of all the writings of the New Testament, for the genuineness and authenticity of which they had all the requisite evidence from the highest sources. Though the books of the New Testament were written in the Greek language, the writers were Jews, hence, as might be expected, their compositions evidence Jewish thought, which everywhere gives a Hebrew colouring to the style of their several writings. We have no evidence that the books of the New Testament were ever corrupted; indeed, as these books were the foundation of the Christian faith, alterations were both impossible and impracticable without detection. These books are quoted or alluded to by a series of Christian writers, as well as by the adversaries of the Christian faith, who may be traced back in regular succession from the present time to the apostolic age. Some of the ancient versions, as the Syriac, and several Latin versions, were made at the close of the first, or at the commencement of the second century. Now, the New Testament must necessarily have existed previously to the making of those versions; and a book, which was so early and so universally read throughout the East in the Greek and in the Syriac languages, and throughout Europe and Africa in the Latin, must be able to lay claim to a high antiquity; while the correspondence of those versions with our copies of the original Greek, attests their genuineness and authenticity.

At the same time we have no evidence that any inspired book, either of the Old or New Testament, has been lost. Some of the sacred writers might write other treatises besides canonical books. Because Solomon was inspired to write some canonical books, it does not follow that what he wrote on natural history was also inspired, any more than his private letters to his friends. So the apostles and disciples might, and probably did write other documents, but none were designed for perpetual use but those preserved in the sacred canon. Undoubtedly, as we have seen, more copious histories, written even by prophets, that once had their day of usefulness, have perished. Had they all been preserved, how large would the Scriptures have been? The Bible would not then have been a volume, portable, procurable for all, and designed to be read by all. Whatever curiosity would relish, our religious feelings call for no more than what the canon provides. Even the apostle John, in apologising as it were for the briefness of his narrative, tells us that he has "omitted many things which Jesus said and did, because the world would not contain, i.e. the times would not bear with such copiousness, the books that must be written, if all should be narrated."

But though the ancient manuscripts of the Hebrew and Greek Scriptures, which have descended to our times, have not been wilfully altered, they have, nevertheless, been subject to the vicissitudes incident to copying in the course of transmission. Still the uniformity of the manuscripts, which are dispersed in so many countries, and in so great variety of languages, is truly astonishing. The various readings consist almost wholly in palpable errors in transcription, grammatical and verbal differences, such as the insertion or omission of a letter or article, the substitution of a word for its equivalent, or the transposition of a word or two in a sentence. Taken altogether, they neithor change nor affect a single doctrine or duty announced or enjoined in the word of God. From the recent Herculean labours, in examining the manuscripts and collecting the variations, we have for the Hebrew Scriptures the investigations of Kennicott and De Rossi, in their elaborate collation of 1,468 manuscripts, and 375 printed documents. And for the New Testament we have the investigations of Mill, Bengel, Wetstein, Griesbach, Matthei, Scholtz, Lachmann, Tischendorf, Mai, and Tregelles, who have examined several hundreds of manuscripts, and compared their differences. The old versions also, such as the several Syriac copies, the Latin, Gothic, etc., have been compared, and their supposed variations added to the lists. Even the quotations found in the Fathers have been subjected to the same ordeal, and all their discrepancies and peculiarities seized on and subjoined to the formidable catalogue. So that the various readings of Greek New Testament Scriptures, thus multiplied by the fidelity of collators, may now amount to more than a hundred thousand. This immense combination of labour has established, so convincingly, the astonishing preservation of the sacred text, copied, nevertheless, so many thousands of times—in Hebrew, during thirty-three centuries, and in Greek, during eighteen hundred years—that the hopes of the enemies of religion, in this channel, have been overwhelmed; while the faithful can rejoice in the fact, that they possess in all their purity those writings which are able to make them wise unto salvation.

SCROLL. See Book.

SCURVY. The Hebrew word garab, rendered "scurvy"; (Lev. xxii. 20; xxvii. 22;) and "scab," (Deut. xxvii. 27;) is supposed to designate a malignant scurvy. So also the word yathlepeth, rendered "scabbed," (Lev. xxii. 20; xxvii. 22;) signifies a sort of itching scab, or scurf. The disease known by the name of scurvy, in modern times, is usually caused by long confinement in cold and damp climates, without fresh provisions, and a due quantity of ascents above food.

SCYTHIAN=a wanderer, a Scot. In ancient geography this term seems to be applied, like the modern Tartar, to the nomadic tribes which roamed over the tracts to the north of the Black and Caspian Seas. To the Hebrews the Scythians were probably known by the names Gog and Magog. (2 Macc. iv. 47; Jos. Con. Ap. ii. 37; Col. iii. 11.) See Gog.

SCYTHOPOLIS.—See BETHISHAN.

SEA. The Hebrews gave the name of "Sea" to all great collections of water, such as lakes; (Gen. xiv. 3; Job xiv. 11; Matt. iv. 18;) and even to rivers, as the Nile; (Isa. xviii. 2;) the Euphrates; (Isa. xxi. 1;) as well as to "seas" properly so called. (Gen. xxxii. 12; Job xii. 8; Ps. lxvi. 6.)

1. The Mediterranean Sea. This large inland sea was called by the Hebrews the "utmost sea," properly the "hinder or western sea;" (Deut. xi. 24; Joel ii. 20;) also the sea of the Philistines; (Ex. xxiii. 31;) and the "great sea." (Num. xxxiv. 6, 7; Josh. i. 4; ix. 1; xv. 47; Ezek. xlvii. 10, 15, 20; Jon. i. 4; Acts x. 32; xvii. 14.) "From sea to sea," signifies, from the Mediterranean to the Persian Gulf or Indian Ocean. (Am. viii. 12; Zech. ix. 10; Ps. lxii. 8; Mic. vii. 12.)

2. The Red Sea. The gulf of the Indian Ocean, called by the Hebrews and Egyptians yam suph, the weedy sea, perhaps from the abundance of large plants of white coral spread everywhere over its bottom. Extensive coral reefs also occur near the coasts. The Hebrew name is translated "Red sea;" (Ex. x. 19; xiii. 18; xv. 4; Num. xiv. 25; Deut. i. 40; Ps. cvi. 7, 9, 22; cxvii. 13, 16;) except in Num. xxi. 14 and Deut. i. 1, where the Hebrew has only the words suphah and suph; rendered "Red sea," but the margin has Suphah and Zuph. It is also called the "Egyptian sea;" (Isa. xi. 15; and "the sea." (Isa. x. 26.) Its usual Greek name was Ἐρυθρὰ Θαλάσσα, whence the English translation "Red sea." (Herod. i. 1; Diod. Sic. iii. 18; 1 Macc. iv. 9; Acts vii. 36; Heb. xi. 29.) Recently, however, some travellers and naturalists have conjectured that the Red sea acquired its name from the numberless minute medusae, or purple conferta, which have frequently been observed to communicate an extreme redness to the water. According to the recent survey of Mr. R. Stephenson, the level of the nearly tideless waters of the Red sea and the Mediterranean are the same.
SEA

3. The SALT SEA. This inland lake, which is situated in the southern part of Judea, and occupies the middle point of the great valley of the Arabah and the Ghor, nearly equidistant from the foot of Mount Hermon and the Red sea, is sometimes called the sea of the Arabah, translated the "sea of the Plain;" (Deut. iv. 49;) "the salt sea;" (Gen. xiv. 3;) the "east sea;" (Joel ii. 20; Ezek. xlvii. 18;) and the "former" or "eastern sea." (Zech. xiv. 8.) It is also called the Lake Asphaltites; (Jos. Wars, iii. 10, 7,) from the large quantities of asphaltum or bitumen which floated upon its surface. And as no organic life is found within its waters, it obtained the designation of Mare Mortuum—the Dead Sea. (Jerome, on Ezek. xlvii. 8.)

It is now called by the Arabs Bahr Lut—the Sea of Lot, and sometimes Birket Lut—the Pool of Lot. The lotty cliffs on the western side of this sea are 1,500 feet high; and those of the eastern mountains lying back from the shore are from 2,000 to 2,500 feet above the water. The length of the sea from north to south is about forty-six English miles, with an average width of about nine miles. The careful observations of Dr. Robinson have rendered it probable, that the present entire bed of the Dead sea was not anciently a fertile plain, but that a lake must have existed in this place, into which the Jordan poured its waters before the catastrophe of Sodom, though that lake was not so large as it is now. At some distance north of its southern extremity, a peninsula runs out from the eastern shore, which may be said almost to divide the lake into two parts. It is probable that the lake anciently extended no farther south than the peninsula, near which were the asphaltum pits—"slime-pits," (Gen. xiv. 10;) and farther south the fertile, well-watered Plain on which Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, Zeboim, and Zoar were situated. (Gen. xiii. 10—12.) And when the doomed cities were overthrown by volcanic action, this plain was destroyed and its level lowered, so that the waters of the lake would rush in at the point marked by the peninsula, and form the present southern bay. There is a remarkable difference of depth between that portion of the sea which lies northward, and that portion which lies southward of the peninsula. Exact soundings were taken by Lieut. Lynch, of the United States Exploring Expedition, in 155 different places, in various lines across the expanse of the sea. The soundings in the northern portion of the sea gradually deepened to 218 fathoms—1308 feet; the bottom soft, brown mud, with rectangular crystals of salt. While the soundings in the southern portion presented a depth of 2, and at most only 2½ fathoms=12 to 15 feet: the bottom mostly gray and black slimy salt mud. The beach was much heated, probably by hot springs from below. The level of the surface of the Dead sea has been found to be about 1312 feet below the level of the Mediterranean. And the deepest parts of this caldron, being the greatest absolute depression on the earth's surface, has been determined at 2630 feet below the level of the Mediterranean. The waters have an annual rise of from eight to eighteen feet, in consequence of the overflows of the Jordan; but they have no outlet from their deep caldron. The immense evaporation from this sea, in consequence of its low position and expo-
SEA

Sure to the summer heats, accounts for the consumption of the quantity of water which flows into it from the Lash—Callirhoe, the Arnon, the Jordan, and other occasional rivulets. The thermometer was sometimes as low as 68° Fahr.; but it in general ranged from 85° to 106°; and at midnight it sometimes stood at 98°. Sudden winds and storms prevail much on the Dead sea, as on all inland lakes surrounded by hills. There is but little vegetation on the shores; the streams which come down from the hills are marked with more verdure. The water of the sea has a slightly greenish hue, and objects seen through it appear as if seen through oil. It is most intensely salt, leaving behind a nauseous, bitter taste, like Glauber’s salts. When applied to the skin it produced a prickly sensation, accompanied with a sort of greasy feeling. The water is exceedingly buoyant, so that even a horse or a donkey could swim in the sea without turning over. It is not improbable that the waters of the Dead sea acquire their peculiar saltness by coming into contact with immense masses of fossil salt and other substances. The density of the water is supposed to be greater than that of any other water known. In the following analyses, as given by Dr. Robinson, the standard of comparison for the specific gravity is distilled water at 1000.

Prof. Dr. Gmelin. Apjohn.
Specific gravity
1212 1153 Chloride of calcium
3.2141
2.438
Chloride of magnesium
11.7734
7.370
Sulphate of magnesium
0.4893
0.201
Chloride of potassium
1.6788
0.852 of sodium
7.9777
1.839
of manganese
0.2117
0.005 of aluminium 0.0896 of ammonium
0.0075
Saltpetre of lime
0.0927
0.075
Water
78.4602
81.220

21

Lieut. Lynch proved by the thermometer that, at the depth of 1044 feet, the temperature of the water was 62°; at the surface, immediately above it, 78°. There was an interruption to the gradual decrease of temperature, and at ten fathoms there was a stratum of cold water, the temperature, 59°. Though it be true that no trace of animal life can be found in the waters of the Dead sea, yet several kinds of birds have been repeatedly seen flying over its surface. Lieut. Mollyneaux found many shells on the beach, all of which were identified with fresh-water mollusca, which had been carried down from the Jordan, and other streams, into the sea to perish. Lieut. Lynch says, there could be nothing pestilential in the atmosphere of the sea. Still the fierce angel of disease seems to hover in its neighbourhood. In addition to the withering heat of a blazing sun, and the tropical closeness of the atmosphere, rendered most heavily oppressive at such a low absolute level as that of the surface of the Dead sea, a hot south wind, or sirocco, burning like the blast of a furnace, would spring up now and then, accompanied by the fetid sulphureous odour of the gases, proceeding from the thermal springs abounding about the lake, and others equally noxious from the stagnant pools in the marshes, and would affect the men, so that their swollen visages looked ghastly pale, as with irresistible drowsiness they lay about the boat in every attitude, sunk in a profound sleep verging more upon the death-like stillness of a torpor, than repose.—See JORDAN.

4. The Sea of Galilee. This beautiful Alpine lake, into which the Jordan enters on the north, and quits on the south, is sometimes called the “sea of Chinnereth;” (Num. xxxiv. 11;) the “lake of Gennesareth;” (Luke v. 1; Matt. xiv. 22–34; Mark vii. 45;) the “sea of Tiberias;” (John xxi. 1;) and the “sea of Galilee,” Matt. iv. 18; Mark i. 10; John vi. i, 16–25.) The length of the lake is about thirteen miles in a straight line, and its breadth about seven miles. It is one of the three lakes forming part of that hydrographic tract, that extensive crevice in the earth, which stretches from Lebanon southwards to the Dead sea. The main formation around the lake of Tiberias is everywhere limestone; yet the numerous hot springs and black basaltic stones evidence a volcanic formation. Lieut. Lynch found the level of the lake to be 652'2 feet below that of the Mediterranean, making the difference of level between the sea of Galilee and the Dead sea 662 feet. The bottom is a concave basin— the greatest depth, thus far ascertained, 165 feet. The water of the lake is cool and sweet, and produces several kinds of excellent fish. Several kinds of large water birds swim up and down in the lake, and carry on their vocation. The sea of Galilee is still subject to sudden tempests, which are said to be worse than those of the Great sea. In the time of the Romans, when several of the apostles of Jesus were fishermen on this sea, it was still ploughed by vessels with sails, though since that period it has become utterly desolate. Only within these last few years boats with sails and foreign flags, surveying its coasts and sounding its depths, have again met the eye of the wondering natives upon its blue waters; and the fishery may become as flourishing again as it was in ancient times.—See MENOM AND JORDAN.

21

SEAL. The seal with the owner's name, or some other device, engraved upon it, was usually employed to authenticate public or private documents. Seals for this purpose, made of burnt clay, or of copper, silver, gold, or precious stones set in metal, were ancienly used in the East. Sometimes the signet ring was used for this purpose. (Gen. xxxviii. 18; Jer. xxxii. 10.) If a door had to be sealed, it was fastened with some ligament, over which was placed some well compacted clay, and then impressed with the seal, so that any violation of it would be discovered at once. (Job xxxviii. 14; Sol. Song iv. 12; Matt. xxvii. 66.) Important documents were sometimes put in sealed bags, and inclosed in earthenware vessels for greater security. (Deut. xxxii. 34; Jer. xxxii. 14; Job xiv. 17.) In a room in the ruins of the palace of Sennacherib, at Kouyunjik, Mr. Layard found a large number of pieces of fine clay, bearing the impressions of seals, with various devices, which had been attached by strings to documents written on leather, papyrus, or other substances. Such documents, with seals in clay still attached, have been discovered in Egypt. But the most remarkable of the seals found in the Assyrian ruins was a piece of clay, upon which was impressed the signet of Sabak, or Sibaco, king of Egypt, called "So," in 2 Kings xvii. 4. On the same piece of clay is impressed an Assyrian seal, probably that of Sennacherib, with a device representing a priest ministering before the king, or perhaps the symbol of the high contracting parties. To the friendly courtesy of Mr. Layard we are indebted for a copy of this remarkable seal, the original of which is now deposited in the British Museum. The Egyptian portion of it represents Sabak as about to smite an enemy, perhaps in sacrifice to Amun-Ra, with a kind of mace. Above and before him are hieroglyphs, expressing Netr mfr nb ar cht Sabak— "the perfect god, the lord who produces things, Sabak." Behind him sha mank-herf— "life follows his head." On the left edge.
SEA

ma na nak=“I have given to thee.” This seal, impressed with the royal signs of the two monarchs, probably Sennacherib and Sabak, or So, appears to have been affixed to a treaty between Assyria and Egypt, and deposited among the archives of the kingdom. As the two monarchs were undoubtedly contemporary, about B.C. 714, this piece of clay furnishes remarkable confirmatory evidence of the truth of Scripture history. Cylinders were also used by the Assyrians and Babylonians as seals or signs, to be impressed on clay, and other materials on which documents were written. Several Babylonian cylinders, a copy of one we give, and many from Assyria, with inscriptions and various devices, are deposited in the Brit. Museum. They are made of rock crystal, jasper, onyx, chalcedony, cornelian, felspar, and also of vitreous substances. Most of them have been pierced, and seem to have revolved on a metal axis, like a garden rolling stone. The cylinder was rolled on the moist clay, hence Job says, “it is turned as clay to the seal;” (xxxviii. 14;) and sometimes the tablet or impression was placed in the furnace and baked. The term “sealed” is sometimes used figuratively for that which is permanent; (Isa. viii. 16;) and confirmed; (John vi. 20; Rom. iv. 11;) also for that which is to be kept secret until the appointed time. (Dan. viii. 26; xii. 4, 9.) So also, the “book or roll sealed with seven seals,” symbolized the plan of the Divine government, which is impenetrable to every creature; but fully comprehended by the Saviour, who is exalted to the throne of the universe. (Rev. v. 2–8.) The “seal of the living God,” on which is supposed to be engraved the name of “Jehovah,” which was impressed upon the foreheads of the faithful, symbolizes the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. (Rev. vii. 2–17; Eph. i. 13, 14; vi. 30; 2 Cor. i. 22; Ezek. ix. 4, 6; 2 Tim. ii. 19.)—See RTXG.

SEARED. To sear the flesh is to cauterize or burn it, and thus deprive it of the power of sensation. In 1 Tim. iv. 2, the term denotes the effect of habitual sin, by which the conscience becomes so stupid, as to be insensible to the most enormous guilt and the most fearful threatenings of punishment.

SEASONS. The general division of the year, by the Hebrews, was into two seasons, “Summer and Winter;” (Ps. lxiv. 17; Zech. xiv. 8;) but they appear also to have conveniently divided the year into six special seasons: “seed time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter.” (Gen. i. 14; viii. 22.) According to this division, the seasons would seem to have been distributed in the following order: Summer, from the middle of August to the middle of October; Seed time, from the middle of October to the middle of December; Winter, from the middle of December to the middle of February; Cold, from the middle of February to the middle of April; Heat, from the middle of June to the middle of August.

SEAT. The ancient Egyptians had elegant chairs and ottomans, much in the modern fashion; and no doubt the wealthy Hebrews imitated them. In later times, the Hebrews adopted the custom of reclining upon couches at table. (1 Sam. ix. 22; Am. vi. 4; Est. vii. 8; Matt. xxiii. 6; Luke vii. 37, 38.) The Orientals usually sit upon low sofas, or divans, and also upon mats or carpets, on the floor, with the legs bent under, and crossed in a half-kneeling posture. In some parts European influence has introduced chairs. Among the Romans, the magistrate when administering justice used a chair called “the judgment-seat.” (Matt. xxvii. 19; Acts xvii. 12, 16; Rom. xiv. 10.)
SEB

SEBA:=man. A descendant of Cush, who gave name to a country, probably Nubia, a province of Ethiopia; distinguished for its wealth and commerce, surrounded by the two arms or branches of the Nile, and with a metropolis of the same name, of which the ruins are still found not far from the town of Shendi. (Gen. x. 7; Isa. xiii. 8; Ps. lxvii. 10.) The inhabitants, called “Sabeans,” were distinguished for their tall stature, (Isa. xlv. 14; Herod. iii. 20.) The Hebrew word rendered “Sabeans” in Ezek. xxxii. 42, properly signifies “drunkards,” as in the margin.—See SHERVA.

SEBAT =a stick or rod. The eleventh month of the Hebrew year, commencing with the new moon of February, and extending to the new moon of March. (Zech. i. 7.)

SECACAH =enclosure. A town in the desert of Judah. (Josh. xv. 61.)

SECHU =watch-tower. A place near Ramah. (1 Sam. xix. 22.)

SECT.—See HEResy.

SEED. This term is frequently used to denote offspring or descendants. (Gen. xvii. 7; xxii. 17; Isa. lxi. 21; Ps. xxii. 23.) The “seed of Abraham;” (Gen. xxii. 18; Acts iii. 25; Gal. iii. 8, 16;) and the “seed of David;” (Rom. i. 4;) designate emphatically the Messiah, who, according to the Hesch, was the son or descendant of Abraham, and of David. (Matt. i. 1; xxii. 22; Luke i. 27; xvi. 29; John viii. 42.) The “seed of the woman” designates the Messiah, and all true believers with Him. (Gen. iii. 15; Isa. vii. 14; Gal. iv. 4;) The Jews vaunted themselves in being the “seed of Abraham,” and as such, heirs of special blessings; (Matt. iii. 9; John viii. 33;) but the Scriptures declare that they who are “of faith,” i.e. believers in Christ, are Abraham’s seed, and heirs according to the promise. (Gal. iii. 7, 29.)

SEED-TIME.—See SEASONS.

SEER.—See PROPHECY.

616

SEL

SEGUB =elevated. 1. A son of Hezron. (1 Chron. ii. 21, 22.) 2. See ABRAM.

SEIR =hairy, or shaggy. 1. A phylarch or chief of the Horites; (Gen. xxxvi. 20–30;) who probably gave name to a mountainous country of the Edomites, anciently called “Mount Seir,” extending from the Dead Sea to the Elanitic Gulf of the Red sea, the northern part of which is now called Jebel, and the southern, e.g.-Sherah. (Gen. xiv. 6; Deut. i. 2.) Mount Seir was first inhabited by the Horites; (Deut. ii. 12;) then by Esau and his posterity. (Gen. xxxii. 3; xxxiiii. 14, 16; 2 Chron. xx. 10.) Seir appears to be also used in a general sense of the land of Edom. (Ezek. xxvii. 8, 12; xxxvii. 7, 15.) 2. A mountain in the territory of Judah. (Josh. xii. 10.)

SEIRATH =a she-goat. A place or tract in the mountains of Ephraim. (Judg. iii. 26, 27.)

SEL =rock. The ancient capital of the Edomites, situated between the Dead Sea and the Elanitic Gulf of the Red sea, in Arabia Petraea; which was taken by Amaziah king of Judah, from the Moabites, who then held possession of it, and named by him “Tokheeh.” The name is written “Selah,” margin, the Rock; (2 Kings. xiv. 7;) and also “Sela,” (Isa. xvi. 1;)
but in the margin of this passage it is called by its Greek name Petra, also a Rock. The same Hebrew word Sela, is rendered "the rock;" (Judg. i. 36; Isa. xlii. 11,) and may perhaps designate the same city. It derived its name Sela, or Petra, i.e. the Rock, from the fact that it was situated in a valley, encompassed by almost insurmountable rocks. This ancient city, now called Wady Musa,—"the valley of Moses," was the great centre of the caravan trade throughout the East; is wholly uninhabited, except when the wandering Arab makes use of an excavated tomb to pass the night, or a caravan pauses there. This remarkable valley, shut in by sandstone rocks, resting upon lower masses of porphyry, variously and beautifully tinted with oxide of iron, towering in some places to the height of 700 feet, is entered by the course of a fine little brook, which flows down the eastern pass, through the wonderful necropolis. The tombs are isolated masses of rock, about fifteen or twenty feet square, which have been cut away from the adjacent cliffs. Further down the valley contracts, presenting on each side of the high cliffs a street of tombs. At some distance beyond is the opening of the terrific chasm, which anciently formed the only avenue to the city on this side. This is the Sik of Wady Musa. "Near the westward," says Dr. Robinson, "the Sik terminates, opening nearly at right angles into a similar though broader Wady or chasm, coming down from the south and passing off northwest. All at once the beautiful façade of the Khuzneh—"the Treasure," in the western precipice, opposite the mouth of the Sik, burst upon our view, in all the delicacy of its first chiselling, and in all the freshness and beauty of its soft colouring. The broken pediment and other ornaments are not all in a pure style; and if seen in a different land, or without the accompaniments by which it is surrounded, it would perhaps excite little admiration. An urn crowns the summit of its orna-variety of architecture which here astonishes the spectator, two styles are obviously predominant, the Egyptian and the Roman-Greek; or rather, it is the mixture and union of these two which here constitutes the prevailing style. The more classic orders of Greece and Rome are conspicuous in the columns and other ornaments. But even here all is florid and overloaded, indicating a later age and a degenerate taste. This amalgamation of style may be accounted for, by the prevalence, first of the Roman influence and then of the Roman dominion, which penetrated hither by way of Asia Minor and Syria, and also from Egypt. This took place, as we know, about the Christian era; and to that period and the subsequent centuries, are probably to be ascribed the architectural skill and monuments, on which strangers now gaze with surprise and wonder. Dr. Robinson thinks that some of the larger and more splendid excavations were temples of the gods, in later times occupied as Christian sanctuaries; while the others were sepulchral, and not intended in part as dwellings for the inhabitants of the place. The widespread ruins which are visible, attest that a large and extensive city of houses built of stone once occupied this spot; and the sepulchres round about are comparatively less numerous than those which in like manner skirt the sites of ancient Thebes and Memphis. The city which stood here, was of itself built “in the clefts of the rock”; (Jer. xxix. 16;) without the necessity of our looking for single dwellings in such a situation. This mysterious and devoted city, unknown for centuries to Europeans, was frequently the subject of prophetic denunciation, which are strikingly fulfilled in the gloomy desolations which reign over its ancient magnificence. (Isa. xxxiv. 1–17; Jer. xlix. 17, 18; Ezek. xxxv. 1–15.)—See Edom.

SELAH. This Hebrew musical term, which occurs seventy-three times in the Psalms, and elsewhere only in Hab. iii. 3, 9, 13, is supposed by Somner to be connected with the use of the trumpets in the temple-music; and the passages in which the term occurs, to be actual appeals or summonses to Jehovah—as “Hear, Jehovah!” or “Awake, Jehovah!” The term is placed by the poet at the passages where, in the temple-song, the choir of priests, standing opposite to that of the Levites, sounded the trumpets, and, with the powerful tones of this instrument, the words first spoken were marked and borne upwards to Jehovah’s ear. (Ps. iv. 2; viii. 3; xx. 3; xxxii. 4, 5, 7; lxvi. 4, 7, 15; lxvii. 7.) This intercessory music of the priests—which seems to have been the peculiar symbolical representation of an urgent appeal to Jehovah—was probably sustained on the part of the Levites by the vigorous tones of the psaltery and harp; hence the Greek translation of the term diapealma. The same appears further from the full phrase “Higgai Selah,” the first word denoting the sound of the stringed instruments, the latter the blast of the trumpets, both of which would here sound together. (Ps. ix. 16; xcvii. 3.)

SELA-HAMMAHLEKOTH—the rock of rescue. A place in the wilderness of Maon, whence Saul returned from pursuing David. (1 Sam. xxii. 27.)

SELED—excultation. A descendant of Jerahmeel. (1 Chron. ii. 30.)

SELEUCIA. A city of Syria, the port of Antioch, situated on the coast about five miles north of the mouth of the Orontes; sometimes called Scilencia Pieria, from the neighbouring Mount Pierius; and also Selencia ad Mare, in order to distinguish it from several other cities of the same name, all so called from Selucus Nicander. (1 Macc. xi. 8; Jos. Ant. xvii. 9, 8.) Paul and Barnabas embarked at this port for Cyprus. (Acts xiii. 4.)

SEM.—See SEM.

SEMACHIAH—Jehovah sustains him. A Levite. (1 Chron. xxvi. 7.)
SEMEL—renowned. An ancestor of Mary. (Luke iii. 26.)
SENAAH.—See HASSENAH.
SENEH—a thorn-bush, bramble.
A pointed rock, i.e. thorn-rock, opposite Michmash. (1 Sam. xiv. 4.)
SENOB.—See HERMON.

SEM

SEN

judgment, before the city of Lachish; I give permission for its slaughter.” At the same time, the Assyrian king amerced king Hezekiah in a tribute or indemnification of three hundred talents of silver, and thirty talents of gold. (2 Kings xviii. 14, 15.) The characteristic version of this campaign is given by the Assyrian monarch himself, in the inscriptions on one of the great bulls which stood at the entrance of the palace at Kouyunjik; and is thus translated by Col. Rawlinson: “Because Hezekiah, king of Judah, did not submit to my yoke, forty-six of his strong fenced cities, and innumerable smaller towns which depended on them, I took and plundered; but I left to him Jerusalem, his capital city, and some of the inferior towns around it. The cities which I had taken and plundered I detained from the government of Hezekiah, and distributed them between the kings of Ashdod, and Ascalon, and Ekron, and Gaza; and, having thus invaded the territory of these chief, I imposed upon them a corresponding increase of tribute, over that to which they had formerly been subjected; and, because Hezekiah still continued to refuse to pay me homage, I attacked and carried off the whole population, fixed and nomade, which dwelled around Jerusalem, with thirty talents of gold, and eight hundred talents of silver, the accumulated wealth of the nobles of Hezekiah’s court, and of their daughters, with the officers of his palace, men slaves, and women slaves. I returned to Nineveh, and I accounted their spoil for the tribute which he had refused to pay me.” The difference in the two accounts of the number of talents of silver, may be accounted for by supposing the three hundred talents to have been the tribute, and the extra five hundred talents the precious metal torn from the doors, pillars, etc., of the temple, and pillaged from the nobles of Judah, as indemnity for the past. This amount of plunder, however, did not satisfy the Assyrian monarch, who had now renewed the campaign, and laid siege to Libnah. He arrogantly summoned the Hebrew king to surrender his capital; but the angel of the Lord smote the Assyrian camp by night, and destroyed 185,000 fighting men, so that the monarch abandoned the enterprise in despair, and returned to Nineveh, where, some time afterwards, he was slain in the temple of Ninrach by his two sons. (2 Kings xviii. 13–37; xix. 1–37.) According to Herodotus, (ii. 141,) the Egyptians arrogated this miracle to themselves, declaring that Sennacherib had been compelled to raise the siege of Pelusium, by their god Ptah, who sent a multitude of mice, by night, into the enemy’s camp, which gnawed to pieces their quivers and bow-strings, as well as the straps of their shields; so that the Assyrians, in the morning, finding themselves without arms, fled in confusion, and lost great numbers of their men. Sennacherib would not be expected to publish, at Nineveh, the manner and extent of the terrible ruin inflicted on his army by the visitation of God. Still, every fact stated in the Bible, as occurring in Judea, is repeated in the inscriptions; and the ruin of his army is virtually admitted by Sennacherib, in the fact of Hezekiah’s continued possession of Jerusalem. The annals of the first two years of Sennacherib have been preserved on a cylinder; those of the first six years on the two great bulls; and those of the first eight years on the hexagonal cylinder now in the British Museum. Colonel Rawlinson thinks that he has ascertained that Sennacherib reigned twenty-two years.
SEN

SENUAH = the bristle-grass. A descendant of Benjamin. (Neh. xi. 9.)

SEORIM = barley. The chief of the fourth division of the families of the priests. (1 Chron. xxiv. 8.)

SEP = a numbering, census. An Arabian city coupled with Measa; (Iren. x. 30,) perhaps the ancient Jafar or Zafar, now called the natives Jafar; an ancient maritime city, the seat of the Himyaritic kings.

SEPCHARAD = Suhuris. A region to which some of the exiles were carried from Jerusalem; (Obad. 20,) apparently a district and people of western Asia Minor, or at least near to it.

SEPCHARVAIM = numberings. A city of the Assyrian empire, whence colonists were brought into the city of Samaria; (2 Kings xvii. 24; xviii. 34; xix. 13; Isa. xxxvi. 19; xxxvii. 13,) probably Sippa in Mesopotamia. The inhabitants were called “Sepharvites.” (1 Kings xvii. 31.)

SEPCHARVITES. — See SEPCHARVAIM.

SEPULCHRE. The Hebrews appropriated certain places for the burial of the dead; they were both public and private. (Gen. xxiii. 4; I. 13; Judg. viii. 32; xvi. 31; 2 Sam. ii. 32; xxi. 14; 2 Kings xxiii. 6; Jer. xxxvi. 28.) They were sometimes selected in gardens; (2 Kings xxii. 18–26; John xix. 41,) and in fields; (Gen. xxiii. 11,) also in caves or rocks in the sides of mountains. (2 Kings xxii. 16, 17; Isa. xxii. 16,) They were usually without the walls of the city; (Josh. xxxiv. 30–33; 1 Sam. xxv. 1; Neh. iii. 16;) and were the resort of demons. (Matt. viii. 28.) Sometimes inscriptions were placed upon them; (2 Kings xxiii. 17,) and to build a sepulchre for a man was an expression of respect and honour. (Gen. xxxv. 25; Matt. xxi. 29; Luke xi. 48.) The sepulchres near Jerusalem, called the tombs of the kings—probably the tomb of Helena—exhibit the remains of a magnificent edifice, excavated from the solid rock. So also the sides of the valley of Jehoshaphat are everywhere studded with tombs excavated in the rocks. The tombs of the Prophets, so called, situated on the western declivity of the Mount of Olives, are very large excavations, having many cells to deposit bodies in. (Isa. lxv. 4; Matt. xxiii. 27–29.) The Egyptian tombs at Thebes were extensive excavations.
in the barren mountains which skirted the city on the west. And the magnificent tombs in the necropolis of Sela, were sculptured out of the sides of the rock surrounding the ancient city. Funeral vases and glazed earthen coffins are found in the necropolis of Warka—the ancient Erech—piled up in great numbers in the mounds; they are also found on the plains and mounds in other parts of Assyria and Mesopotamia.—See BURIAL.

SEERAH.—See SARAH.

SERAIAH = warrior of Jehovah.

1. The scribe or secretary of David. (2 Sam. viii. 17.) This name is also written "Sheva." (2 Sam. xx. 25.) "Shisha" = white marble; (1 Kings iv. 3.) and "Shavsha." (1 Chron. xviii. 16.) 2. A son of Kenaz. (1 Chron. iv. 13, 14.) 3. A son of Asiel. (1 Chron. iv. 35.) 4. The high priest at the time Jerusalem was taken; he was slain by the king of Babylon at Riblah. (2 Kings xxv. 18; 1 Chron. vi. 14; Jer. lii. 24; Ezr. vii. 1.) 5. The son of Asriel. (Jer. xxxvi. 26.) 6. The son of Tahmeh. (2 Kings xxv. 23; Jer. xl. 8.) 7. The son of Neriah, an officer in the court of Zedekiah, also called "a quiet prince," margin, "prince of Menucha," or "chief chamberlain." (Jer. li. 59, 61.) 8. The father of Ezra. (Ezr. vii. 1.) 9. One of the priests who returned from exile; (Ezr. ii. 2; Neh. x. 2; xi. 11; xii. 13.) also is called "Azariah." (Neh. vii. 7.)

SERAPHIM = brilliant ones, or created ones, magnates. This Hebrew word is apparently used to designate an order of angels and ministers of God. In the pictorial scenery of the prophetic vision, symbols of the seraphim were represented as standing around His throne, each having six wings, also hands and feet, and praising God with their voice. They were, therefore, represented as of human form, and furnished with wings as the swift messengers of Jehovah, like the cherubim, though by no means identical with these. (Isa. vi. 2, 6.)—See CHERUBIM.

SERED = fear. A son of Zebulun; (Gen. xxvi. 14.) his descendants were called "Sardites." (Num. xxvi. 26.)

SERJEANT. The Greek word rhabodouchos, rendered "serjeant," properly signifies a lictor, an officer who carried the fasces or bundle of rods, with an axe in the centre, before the Roman magistrates, and executed their decrees. (Acts xvi. 35—38.)

SERGIUS PAULUS. A Roman procurator, in the island of Cyprus, converted under the preaching of Paul and Barnabas. (Acts xiii. 7.)

SERPENT. There are several species of serpents inhabiting Egypt, Arabia, and Syria, of which the greater part are innocuous, while others are venomous. Those serpents, which are furnished with moveable tubular fangs and poison bags in the upper jaw, are said to be all venomous. Even the fangs of such as have been long dried and preserved in Museums, are said to communicate venom to a wound that may be accidentally made by them. There are several Hebrew words used to designate a serpent, as "nakhash, the general term for "serpent," like the Greek opheis, noted for its cunning; (Gen. iii. 1; xlix. 17; Matt. xxi. 23.) its deadly bite; (Deut. viii. 15; Num. xxxi. 6; 7; 9; Ps. lviii. 4; Prov. xiii. 32.) and the dread which its presence inspires. (Ex. iv. 3; Matt. vii. 10; 1 Cor. x. 9; Rev. xix. 12.) Zophel, a "serpent" of the dust, a creeper. (Deut. xxxii. 24; Mic. vii. 17.) Skephoun, the venomous cerastra, or horned serpent, rendered "adder," margin, "an arrow-snake." (Gen. xlix. 17; Psal. xiv., the coluber betular or sap, or perhaps the haje, a venomous serpent common in Egypt, rendered "adder," margin, "asp." (Ps. lviii. 4; xci. 13; Isa. xi. 8; Rom. iii. 13.) Achchar, rendered "adder," probably a kind of asp. (Ps. cxl. 8.) Tzepha, rendered "cockatrice," margin, "adder," a poisonous serpent, a viper. (Isa. xi. 8; xiv. 29; lix. 5; Jer. vii. 17; Prov. xxvii. 32.) Eghesh, like the Greek echidna, a malignant and venomous serpent, rendered "vihad servants of several kinds, as hired servants, man-servants, maid-servants, bond-men, and bond-women, which were obtained in different ways, yet they had no slaves; inasmuch as the master had no property in his servants, but had merely acquired their time and labour under well-understood regulations. The wages of a servant are frequently referred to, but the price of a man never. There was no separate Hebrew word for “bondman,” different from that translated “servant;” no word to designate a slave. As “man-stealing,” which is in most cases the foundation of slavery, was punishable with death, the acquiring, the selling, or the holding of human beings in slavery was rendered impossible by the Mosaic law. (Ex. xxxi. 16; Deut. xxiv. 7.) The servants of the Hebrews were obtained not only from among their own brethren, but also from among the heathen. The different ways in which they were acquired are distinctly noticed:—1. By אָּשָּׁר, as when a person sold himself, i.e. voluntarily contracted his time and labour to a master, day by day, or year by year, for stipulated wages. Such a servant was called שָׁקִיר—an “hiring,” a “hired servant.” If the hired servant was an uncircumcised heathen he could not partake of the passover, if a Hebrew, he shared in the national privilege. (Lev. xix. 13; iv. 12, 45; Isa. xvi. 14; xxii. 16; Job vii. 2; xiv. 6.) 2. By servitude, as when a man-servant or a maid-servant voluntarily bound himself or herself to a master for a term of years. The Hebrew word שֶׁבֶד, sometimes translated “servant,” and sometimes “bond-man,” designates such a servant whose servitude was purchased at the outset for a specified sum. He was bound to serve for the term of six years; and, as the price of his servitude had been paid beforehand, he received no wages, but the term of service could not be lengthened except at the pleasure of the servant. When such a servant was set free, the master was by law enjoined to furnish him liber-
SER

SERUG = ָּשָּׁר, branch. The father of Nahor; (Gen. xi. 20—23; 1 Chron. i. 26;) also called “Saruch.” (Luke iii. 35.)

SERVANT. Though the Hebrews

622
ally, as an outfit intended in some measure to supply the absence of yearly wages. If the man-servant was married previously to his servitude his wife was dismissed with him. In case he had married a maid-servant of his master’s family, during the period of his servitude, his wife and children could not claim their freedom until she had completed her period of servitude. (Ex. xxi. 2–11; Deut. xv. 12–18; Jer. xxxiv. 9–17.) If the servant was satisfied with his position, and refused his freedom in the seventh year, the master took him before a judge, and his ears were bored in token of perpetual servitude. (Deut. xv. 16–18.) The children of such servants, whether Hebrew or heathen, though called “sons of the house” (Gen. xiv. 14.) were not born to involuntary servitude; nor had the master power to sell a servant of this description to any person living out of the Hebrew territories. (Ex. xxi. 5–8.) Moreover, after the six years’ servitude, of either the man-servant or the maid-servant, they were not to be treated as bond servants, but were to receive wages as yearly hired servants, until the jubilee, when universal freedom was proclaimed to servants, whether heathen or Hebrew-born. A servant, if he were able, might redeem himself, or his friends might redeem him, at any time, by paying the price adequate to the remaining years of his service. (Lev. xxv. 39, 40, 47–54.) As the jubilee brought freedom to all servants, with their wives and children, it will be evident that many servants would have acquired a competency, by their wages and privileges, during the period of their servitude. 3. By insolvency, as when a person was unable to meet the demands of his creditors, he was sold or engaged for a term that would be sufficient, by the ordinary legal wages, to pay the legal claim. (2 Kings iv. 1; Isa. l. 1; Matt. xviii. 25.) 4. For theft, as when an offender was not able to make restitution he was sold, i.e. put to compulsory service for such a period as his labour, according to the customary wages, amounted to the legal equivalent. (Ex. xxii. 1–4.) When any city of the heathen was conquered by the Hebrews, the people became tributaries and servants. (Deut. xx. 11; Josh. xvi. 10.) Hence, those Canaanitish nations which had not been exterminated, were to be bond-men and tributaries. The tributary service was probably a tax of service to a certain amount levied according to fixed rules, so that these foreigners must supply a sufficient number of labourers to work out that tax. (Josh. xv. 63; Judg. iii. 5; 1 Kings ix. 20, 21; 2 Chron. viii. 7.) But this tributary service did not make them all hereditary bond-men; as Araunah, a Jebusite, is represented as a respectable freeman, dwelling on his own possessions. (2 Sam. xxiv. 16–25.) From the heathen round about them, and from the strangers among them, the Hebrews might buy, i.e. purchase the time and labour of bond-men and bond-maids, and “for ever,” i.e. at all times they were to have a supply from them; but as we have seen, the service of the individual was regulated by specific laws. (Lev. xxv. 44–46.) As the country of the Hebrews was free, it became an asylum for the oppressed; hence a Hebrew could not return a fugitive slave to his master in a heathen country. (Deut. xxiii. 15, 16.) The penalties against the master for oppressive treatment of his servants were the same, whether the servants were Hebrews or of heathen extraction. (Ex. xx. 20, 21, 26, 27, 32; Lev. xxiv. 22; Job. xxxi. 13.) Among the Hebrews, the servant, of whatever nation, was not only treated with humanity, but brought within the pale of the covenant, circumcised, and religiously educated; (Gen. xvii. 12–14; Ex. xii. 38.) he was also admitted to the festivals, and shared with the nation the reposes of the Sabbath and holy days. (Ex. xx. 10; xxi. 20; Deut. v. 14; xii. 18; xvi. 11.) Among the Greeks and Romans, the condition of a slave was dreadful beyond description. He was not known in law, and was entirely at the disposal of his master. After the religion of Christ had penetrated into these nations, the state of things was changed; and slaves in the Christian church not only enjoyed equal privileges with their masters, as far as the church was concerned, but slavery was soon felt to be incompatible with the rights of humanity, and with the genius and precepts of our glorious Christianity. (1 Cor. xii. 13; Gal. iii. 28; Col. ii. 11; Phil. 16.)

SETH=compensation. The third son of Adam; (Gen. iv. 25, 26; v. 3–8; Luke iii. 38;) also called “Sheth.” (1 Chron. i. 1.)

SETHUR=hidden. A phylarch or chief of the tribe of Asher. (Num. xiii. 13.)

SEVEN. This term not only denotes the particular number seven, (Gen. ii. 2; viii. 10; xlii. 27, 29, 30, 47, 54; Num. xxiii. 1, 2; Matt. xv. 34; xxiii. 25,) but is also used in the sense of abundant, complete; as, “The barren hath born seven,” i.e. an ample family. (1 Sam. ii. 5.) “There are seven abominations in the heart,” i.e. completely depraved. (Prov. xxvi. 25.) “Silver purified seven times, i.e. perfectly purified. (Ps. xiii. 6.) “The seven spirits before the throne,” i.e. the complete operations of the Spirit; or, as some suppose, the seven archangels before the throne of God. (Rev. i. 4.) So also we have seven round numbers, seven candlesticks; (Rev. i. 20;) seven trumpets, etc. (Rev. vii. 2; xv. 7; Isa. iv. 1; Prov. vi. 31; Ex. xxiii. 1–4; Ps. cxix. 164.) Multiples of seven are also used, as “sevenfold,” abundantly; (Gen. iv. 24;) “seven times seven,” frequently. (Matt. xvii. 21, 22.)

SIALPH=division. The name of two of the descendants of Caleb. (1 Chron. ii. 47, 49.)

SILAAHIM=<two gates. A city in the tribe of Judah; (1 Sam. xvii. 52; 1 Chron. iv. 31;) also written “Sharaim.” (Josh. xv. 36.)

SIAASHGAZ=servant of the beautiful. A eunuch, the keeper of the women in the Persian court. (Est. ii. 14.)

SHABBETHAI = sabbath-born. A chief of the Levites; (Est. x. 15; Neh. vii. 17; xi. 16.)

SHACHA=roaming? A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 10.)

SHADDAI—See God.

SHADOW. The privation of light by an opaque body interposing between a luminous point and the surface on which the shadow of the body appears. A shadow falling on a plane follows the course of the body which causes it; and, as it is often extremely rapid, the fleetingness of human life is often compared to it. (Job. xiv. 2.) The light of the sun may be obscured; but “with the Father of light there is no parallax, nor tropical shadow.” No interposing bodies can change His purposes, or for a moment intercept and turn aside His truth, because He is equally present everywhere. (James i. 17.) Shadow is also used for darkness, gloom,—“the shadow of death,” i.e. death-shade, a season of severe trial; (Ps. xxiii. 4:) also a state of ignorance and wretchedness. (Matt. iv. 16; Luke i. 73.) Shadow also designates protection; hence the presence of the Messiah is represented to His people “as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land.” (Isa. xxxii. 2; xlix. 2; Sol. Song ii. 8; Ps. xvii. 8; lxiii. 7; lxvi. 1.) Shadow is also used to indicate the Jewish economy, which was an adumbration or a shadowing forth of the things future and more perfect, in the Christian dispensation. (Heb. vii. 6; x. 1; Col. ii. 17.)—See Type.

SHADRACH = rejoicing in the way, or perhaps, royal. The name given to Hannah, one of Daniel’s companions in the court of Babylon.

(Dan. i. 7; ii. 49; iii. 12.)

SHAGE—erring. One of David's distinguished officers. (1 Chron. xi. 34.)

SHAHARAIM—the two daughters. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 8.)

SHAHAZIMAH—heights. A place in the tribe of Issachar. (Josh. xix. 22.)

SHALIM—wholesome, safe, unharmed. A city of Shechem; (Gen. xxxiii. 18;) not improbably the modern village of Salim, not far from Nablus.

SHALLIM—foothills region. A district probably in the territory of the city of Shasbim. (1 Sam. ix. 4.)

SHALISHA—triad. A district in the vicinity of the mountains of Ephraim. (1 Sam. ix. 4.)

SHALLECHETH—a casting down, falling. The name of a gate of the temple. (1 Chron. xxvi. 16.)

SHALUM—retribution. 1. A king of Israel, who reigned only one month, b.c. 772. (2 Kings, xv. 10—15.) 2. The husband of Huldah the prophetess. (2 Kings, xxii. 14.) 3. A descendant of Sheshan. (1 Chron. ii. 40, 41.) 4. A descendant of Simeon. (1 Chron. iv. 25.) 5. One of the priests; also called “Meshullum.” (1 Chron. vi. 12, 13; ix. 11; Ezr. vii. 2.) 6. The son of Kore. (1 Chron. ix. 17, 19, 31; Ezr. ii. 42; x. 24; Neh. vii. 43.) 7. The son of Halohesh. (Neh. iii. 12.) 8. A descendant of Bani. (Ezr. x. 42.)

9. See Jehoahaz.

SHALUN—retribution. The son of Col-hozech. (Neh. iii. 15.)

SHALMAI—my thanks. A Nethinim; also called “Shalmali.” (Ezr. vi. 46, margin.)

SHALMAN.—See Shalmaneser.

SHALMANESER—respectful towards Ashur. A powerful king of Assyria, from 730 to 718 b.C. In the ninth year of his reign he led his army against the kingdom of Israel. At the end of three years he carried into exile the chief men of the ten tribes. (2 Kings xvii. 3—6; xviii. 9—12.) He also conquered Sidon and Acre, and the island of Cyprus; Tyre alone held out against a siege. Shalmaneser appears to have died, or to have been driven from his throne, before the removal of the Israelites into exile was completed. The captives were, however, sent into Assyria by his successor, Sargon, called “king Jareb,” properly “the hostile king.” Shalmaneser is also called “Shalman.” (Hos. vi. 6, 14.) Two cuneiform inscriptions have been found, though mutilated, which appear to have belonged to Shalmaneser. One of them contains a notice of an attack on the king of Samaria, probably Hoshea; the other, a campaign against the son of Rezin.—See Nineveh.

SHAMA—hearing, obedient. One of David’s distinguished officers. (1 Chron. xi. 44.)

SHAMARIAH whom Jehorham keeps. A son of Rehoboam. (2 Chron. xi. 19.)

SHAMBLES. The Greek word makellon is the same as the Latin macellum, properly a meat-market, a provision-market, where all kinds of provisions or victuals were exposed for sale. (1 Cor. x. 25.)

SHAMED—keeper. A descendant of Benjamin; in the Hebrew written Shamer. (1 Chron. viii. 12.)

SHAMER—keeper. 1. One of the Levites. (1 Chron. vi. 46.) 2. A descendant of Asher; (1 Chron. vii. 34;) also written “Shomer.” (1 Chron. vii. 32.)

SHAMGAR—sword. The third judge or regent of the Hebrews. About the end of the long period of peace which followed the deliverance under Ehud, the Philistines, in a raid upon the Hebrews, met with a severe repulse from Shamgar and other husbandmen, who fought with ox-goads, being then employed in the cultivation of the fields. (Judg. iii. 31; v. 6.)

SHAMHUTH.—See Shammah.

SHAMIR—a sharp point, thorn. 1. A city in the mountains of Judah. (Josh. xv. 48.) 2. A city in the mountains of Ephraim. (Judg. x. 1, 2.) 3. A Levite. (1 Chron. xxiv. 24.)
SHAMMAI.—See SHALMAI.
SHAMMA=desolation. A descendant of Asher. (1 Chron. vii. 37.)
SHAMMAH=astonishment. 1. A son of Reuel. (Gen. xxxvi. 13, 17.) 2. A son of Jesse; (1 Sam. xvi. 9; xvii. 13;) also called “Shimeah;” (2 Sam. xiii. 3, 32;) and “Shamma.” (1 Chron. ii. 18.) 3. One of David’s distinguished officers; (2 Sam. xxiii. 11, 17, 33;) also called “Shammoth.” (1 Chron. xi. 27.) He may be the same person mentioned in 2 Sam. xxiii. 25; also called “Shambuth.” (1 Chron. xxvii. 8.)
SHAMMAI=desolate. 1. Two descendants of Judah. (1 Chron. ii. 28, 44, 45.) 2. A descendant of Caleb. (1 Chron. iv. 17.)
SHAMMOTH.—See SHAMMAH.
SHAMMUA=rumour. 1. A chief of the tribe of Reuben. (Num. xiii. 4.) 2. See SHAMMAH.
SHAMMUAH=rumour. A son of David; (2 Sam. v. 14;) also called “Shumma;” (1 Chron. xiv. 4;) and “Shimea.” (1 Chron. iii. 5.)
SHAMSHERAL=sun-looking. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 26.)
SHAPHAM=bald, shaven. A descendant of Gad. (1 Chron. v. 12.)
SHAPHAN=hidden, covered. 1. The secretary of king Josiah. (2 Kings xxii. 3–14; Jer. xxxvi. 10; Ezech. viii. 11.) 2. The father of Ahikam. (2 Kings xxii. 12; xxv. 22; Jer. xxxvi. 24; xxxix. 14; xl. 5, 9, 11; xli. 2.)
SHAPER=beauty, beauty. A mountain in the Arabian desert; and a station of the Hebrews. (Num. xxxiii. 23, 24.)
SHARAI=beginning? A descendant of Bani. (Ex. x. 40.)
SHARAR=twisted, a cord, chain.

The father of Ahiam; (2 Sam. xxiii. 33;) also written “Sacaar.” (1 Chron. xii. 35.)
SHAREZER=prince of fire, perhaps of Ashur. A son of Sennacherib. (2 Kings xix. 37; Isa. xxxvii. 28.)
SHARON=the plain. A level tract along the Mediterranean between Mount Carmel and Joppa, celebrated for its rich fields and pastures. (1 Chron. v. 16; xxvii. 29.) This extensive plain, whose name is so frequently used metaphorically by the Hebrew writers, to designate any beautiful and fertile place, is still radiant in beauty with all its ancient fragrance and fertility. There are few villages in the plain, but the tract of hills and the mountain-side beyond, especially in the N.E., are described by Dr. Robinson as being perfectly studded with them. (Sol. Song ii. 1; Isa. xxxiii. 9; xxxv. 1, 2; iv. 10.) This name is also written “Lasharon”=the Sharon; (Josh. xii. 18;) and “Saron.” (Acts ix. 35.) The inhabitants were called “Sharonites.” (1 Chron. xxvii. 29.)
SHARHUN=painful lodging. A place in Simeon. (Josh. xix. 6.) SHASHAI=white. A descendant of Bani. (Ex. x. 40.)
SHASHAK=anger. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 25.)
SHAV=asked for, desired. A son of Simeon; (Gen. xlv. 10; 1 Chron. iv. 24;) his descendants were called “Shanites.” (Num. xxxvi. 13.) 2. See JORAJ. and SATA.
SHAVEH=plain. A valley near Jerusalem, called also “the King’s Dale.” (Gen. xiv. 17; 2 Sam. xviii. 18.)
SHAVEH-KIRIAHAIM=plain of Kirjathaim. A plain near the city Kirjathaim. (Gen. xiv. 5.)
SHAVSHA.—See SERAIAS.
SHIKAN=asking. A descendant of Bani. (Ex. x. 29.)
SHALTHIEL.—See SALTIEL.
SHEAR.—See SHEEP.
SHEARIAH=whom Jebronah animates. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. vii. 38; ix. 44.)
SHEAR-JASHUB = the remnant shall return, i.e. be converted. The symbolical name of one of the sons of Isaiah, given as being prognostic of the captivity of the Hebrews, and of the return of a part of the people to the land of their fathers. (Isa. vii. 3; x. 21, 22.)

1. SHEBA = man? A son of Ramah, whose descendants, a tribe of “Sabeans,” appear to have dwelt towards the Persian Gulf. (Gen. x. 7; 1 Chron. i. 9.) 2. A son of Joktan; (Gen. x. 28; 1 Chron. i. 22) who appears to have been the founder of the powerful tribe of “Sabeans,” and to have given his name “Sheba,” to a wealthy region in Arabia Felix. (Isa. ix. 6; Jer. vi. 20; Ps. lxxvii. 15.) From this region, also called “the South,” came the queen to see and converse with Solomon. (1 Kings x. 1–13; 2 Chron. ix. 1–12; Matt. xii. 42; Luke xi. 31.) The Sabeans were celebrated for their great traffic; (Ps. lxxvii. 10; Ezek. xxvii. 22; Joel iii. 8;) and for driving off plunder as Bedawin marauders in the vicinity of Us. (Job i. 15; vi. 19.) The chief city of the Sabeans is supposed to have been the present Ma'rib, three or four days’ journey distant from Sana’a. 3. A son of Jokshan and grandson of Abraham and Keturah. (Gen. xxv. 3; 1 Chron. i. 32.)

2. SHEBA = seven. 1. A descendant of Benjamin. (2 Sam. xx. 1–22.) 2. A descendant of Gad. (1 Chron. v. 13.) 3. A town in Simeon. Perhaps the words should be read “Beer-sheba” even Sheba;” otherwise fourteen cities are enumerated, instead of “thirteen.” (Josh. xix. 2, 6.)—See BEER-SHEBA.

SHEBAM.—See SIRMAH.

SHEBANAH = whom Jehorah has made grow up? 1. One of the priests. (1 Chron. xv. 24.) 2. Three of the Levites. (Neh. ix. 4, 5; x. 10, 12.) 3. See SHECANAH.

SHEBARAM = breaches, ruins. If not a place, perhaps this term designates some noted “ruins,” between Ai and Jericho. (Josh. vii. 5.)

SHEBER = grain, corn. A descendant of Caleb. (1 Chron. ii. 48.)

SHEBNAH = youth? The prefect of the palace; (Isa. xxii. 15;) afterwards the secretary to king Hezekiah. (Isa. xxxvi. 3; 2 Kings xviii. 18, 26, 37; xix. 2.)

SHEBUEL = captivity of God. 1. A descendant of Moses; (1 Chron. xxiii. 16; xxxvi. 24;) also called “Shubael;” (1 Chron. xxiv. 20.) 2. A son of Heman; (1 Chron. xxv. 4;) also called “Shubael.” (1 Chron. xxv. 20.)

SHECANIAH = familiar with Jehorah. The chief of the tenth division of the priests; (1 Chron. xxiv. 11;) also called “Shecaniah;” (Neh. iv. 4; xii. 14;) and “Shechaniah.” (Neh. xii. 3.) 2. One of the priests. (2 Chron. xxxi. 15.)

SHECANIAH = familiar with Jehorah. 1. A descendant of king David. (1 Chron. iii. 21, 22; Ezr. vii. 3.) 2. One whose sons returned from the Exile. (Ezr. viii. 5.) 3. The son of Jehiel. (Ezr. x. 4.) 4. The father of Shemaiah. (Neh. iii. 29.) 5. The son of Arah. (Neh. vi. 18.) 6.—See SHECANIAH.

SHECHEM = the shoulder-blades. 1. A city among the mountains of Ephraim, situated in the narrow valley between Mount Ebal and Mount Gerizim, about seven miles south of Samaria, and thirty-four miles north of Jerusalem. (Gen. xxxiii. 18, 19; xxxiv. 12–14; Josh. xiv. 1, 25; Ps. lx. 6; Jer. xii. 5.) It is also written “Sichem;” (Gen. xii. 6;) “Sychem;” (Acts vii. 16;) corrupted into “Sychar;” (falsehood. (John iv. 5.) In Hos. vi. 9, the words rendered “in the way by consent,” should be “in the way to Shechem,” as in the margin. Shechem was given to the Levites, and was one of the cities of refuge. (Josh. xx. 7; xxxi. 21.) It was destroyed by Abimelech; (Judg. ix. 1–49;) and rebuilt by Jeroboam, who made it for a while the capital of his kingdom. (1 Kings xii. 25.) After the Exile, Shechem became the metropolis of the Samaritans, and the chief seat of their worship. This city was called by the Romans Neapolis, whence the present Arabic name Nablus. Dr. Robinson says the streets of the city are narrow, the houses high, and in general well built, all of stone, with domes upon the roofs as at Jerusalem. The population—Greek Christians, Samaritans, Jews, and Mohammedans—is estimated at about 8,000 souls. 2. The son of Hamor, the prince of the Hivites. (Gen. xxxiii. 19; xxxiv. 2—26.) 3. A descendant of Gilead, and father of the Shechemites. (Num. xxv. 21; Josh. xvi. 2; 1 Chron. vii. 19.)
SHE

SHEDEUR=darting of fire. A descendant of Reuben. (Num. i. 5; ii. 10.)

SHEEP. The Hebrew word שׁוּעַ, rendered "lamb," (Ex. xii. 3—5; xxxiv. 20;) and "sheep," (Ex. xxii. 1; xxxiv. 10; Deut. xiv. 4;) signifies a sheep or goat. So also the word כֶּבֵּר, signifies a he-lamb, a young ram, from one to three years old. (Num. xvii. 15—35; Job xxxi. 20; Isa. v. 17; Hos. iv. 16.) And the word תַּנָּן, rendered "sheep," (Gen. iv. 2; xxix. 7—10;) and flock; (Gen. iv. 4; xxix. 10; Ex. ii. 16, 17, 19;) properly signifies a flock, comprehending both sheep and goats, usually intermingled in the same flock. Large flocks often constituted the wealth of patriarchal times. (Job i. 3; 1 Sam. xxv. 2; Gen. xxv. 35.) In one Arab encampment Dr. Robinson saw about six hundred sheep and goats, the latter being the most numerous. There are two varieties of sheep in Syria; the first, the Bedawin, or common horned white variety, which differs but little from our ordinary sheep, except that the tail is rather longer and thicker. The second, and more common, is the broad-tailed variety; the broad part being a mere excrecence of fat, with the proper tail hanging out of it. The tails are not unfrequently one-fourth of the weight of the carcass. In order to preserve the tails from being torn by the bushes, etc., a piece of thin board is sometimes fixed under part; and some have small wheels to facilitate the dragging of the board after them. In the sacrifices the rump or tail was laid whole on the fire of the altar. (Ex. xxix. 22; Lev. iii. 9; vii. 3; viii. 25; ix. 19.) The time of sheep-shearing was, among the Hebrews, a season of great festivity. (Gen. xxxi. 19; 1 Sam. xxv. 4, 8, 36; 2 Sam. xiii. 23—28; 2 Kings x. 12, 14; Isa. lxi. 7.)

SHEHARIAH—Jehoah ech him. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 26.)

SHEKEL—weighed. A definite weight of gold or silver, in bars or rings, equal in value to twenty gerahs. (Ex. xxx. 13; Num. viii. 14; Ezek. xiv. 12;) and this being weighed out passed as current money among the Hebrews. (Gen. xiii. 15, 16; Ex. xii. 32; Lev. v. 15; xxvii. 3, 6, 16; Josh. vii. 21; 1 Sam. xvii. 5.) The shekel is sometimes called the "shekel of the sanctuary," and "the king's shekel." (Ex. xxx. 13; 2 Sam. xiv. 26;) merely designating the sacred and the royal standard of weight. Though the shekel, among the ancient Hebrews, was properly a definite weight, in later times the term was used as the name of a silver coin. Some suppose that shekels and half-shekels were first struck by the Maccabees. (1 Macc. vi. 11;) but those which are exhibited as of that and of earlier periods are certainly not genuine. It is well known that such shekels have been skillfully manufactured in recent times; and whether Simon Maccabaeus issued a silver currency or not, there can be little doubt with exact numismatists, but that the shekels usually ascribed to him are spurious. Certainly the oldest genuine shekels. which have come down to us are those struck by Simon Barcochba, when he had possession of Jerusalem, about 132 A.D. They are generally Roman coins of Trajan and Hadrian, stamped over again, with inscriptions in the Samaritan character. The fac-simile of what some suppose to be a genuine shekel, we give. On the obverse is the rodd of Aaron which blossomed, with the inscription J r u s h l i m H q d o s h a-"Jerusalem the Holy;" and on the reverse the golden urn in which the manna was preserved, or perhaps the golden censer, with the inscription Sh k l I s h a r a l-"Shekel of Israel." Over the censer are two letters, which some read Sh D, designating Shaddai, a name of God; others Shekel of David; others again read the letters Sh M, and understood Solomon the King. We read the letters Sh B, and simply understand them to designate Simon Bar-cochba. This shekel is evidently an earlier, probably a Greek or Roman, coin, that had been restamped by Simon at Jerusalem. As the shekel was much thicker than modern coins of the same size, its weight originally would be about half an ounce; hence of the value of two shillings and sixpence. Long before the birth of Christ, the coins in circulation among the Jews, Samaritans, and neighbouring States, bore Greek inscriptions. And the new Testament writers give Greek names to their moneys, as drachma, didrachma, and stater. Even the Roman denarius is called by its Greek form, denarion; and no coin with a Hebrew name is mentioned. As the Septuagint sometimes renders shekel by didrachma, perhaps the weight of the one accorded with the value of the other, when that version was made.
It would seem that the definite weight of silver amounting to a shekel var-ed in different times. Even Josephus speaks of the shekel having been equal to four Attic drachmae, i.e. as answering nearest in value to that sum.
(\textit{Ant.} iii. 8. 2)—See Money.

SHELAH—petition. A son of Judah; (Gen. xxxviii. 5;) his decendants were called "Shelanites."
(Num. xxxvi. 20; 1 Chron. ii. 3.)

SHELEMIAH—friend of Jehorah.
1. A descendant of Bani. (Ezr. x. 39.)
2. One of the priests. (Neh. xiii. 13.)
3. See Meshelemiah.

SHELEPH—drama, plucked. A son of Joktan, and founder of a tribe in Arabia Felix; (Gen. x. 26; 1 Chron. i. 20;) perhaps the Salapenoi mentioned by Ptolemy.

SHELESH—triad. A descendant of Asher. (1 Chron. vii. 35.)

SHELOMIAH—friend of God. A descendant of Simeon. (Num. i. 6;
ii. 12; vii. 86.)

SHEM—name. The oldest son of Noah, (Gen. v. 32,) from whom are derived the Semitic nations, i.e. the nations of western Asia, the Hebrews, Persians, Assyrians, Aramaeans, part of the Arabs, and some of the Ethiopians. (Gen. ix. 18—27; x. 1, 21—24; 1 Chron. i. 4, 17, 18.) The most ancient Jewish commentators hold Shem and Melchizedek to have been the same person. (Gen. xiv. 18.)
Shem lived till he was 600 years of age; and was contemporary with Abraham about 150 years. (Gen. xi. 10—11.) In Luke iii. 36, he is called "Sem."

SHEMA—rumour. 1. A city in the south of Judah. (Josh. xx. 26.)
2. A descendant of Caleb. (1 Chron.
ii. 43, 44.) 3. One of the Levites.
(Neh. viii. 4.) 4. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 13.) 5.—
See Shemaiah.

SHEMAH—rumour. The father of Abiezer and Joash. (1 Chr. xii. 8.)
SHEMAIAH = Jehovah heareth him. 1. A prophet and historiographer in the time of Rehoboam. (1 Kings xii. 22—24; 2 Chron. xii. 15.) 2. The Nebuamite, a false prophet in the time of Jeremiah. (Jer. xxix. 24, 31, 32.) 3. A descendant of Simeon. (1 Chron. iv. 37.) 4. A descendant of Reuben. (1 Chron. v. 4.) Also called "Shema." (1 Chron. v. 8.) 5. The father of Delaiah. (Jer. xxxvi. 12.) 6. A son of Shecaniah. (1 Chron. iii. 22.) 7. One who returned from Exile. (Ezr. viii. 16.) 8. The son of Delaiah. (Neh. vi. 10.) 9. The name of eight Levites. (1 Chron. ix. 14, 16; xv. 8, 11; xxiv. 6; 2 Chron. xvii. 8; xxix. 14; xxxi. 15; xxxv. 9.)

SHEMARJAIL = whom Jehovah keeps. 1. One who went over to David at Ziklag. (1 Chron. xiii. 5.) 2. A son of Harim. (Ezr. x. 32.) 3. A son of Bani. (Ezr. x. 41.)

SHEMER = lofty flight. A king of Zobaim. (Gen. xiv. 2.)

SHEMER = watchman, keeper. The person who sold Omri, the king of Israel, the hill on which Samaria was built, for two talents of silver; and the city derived its name from him. (1 Kings xvi. 23, 24.)

SHEMIDA =fame of wisdom. A son of Gilead; also written "Shemidah." (1 Chron. vii. 19.) His descendants were called "Shemidates." (Num. xxvi. 32; Josh. xvii. 2.)

SHEMINITH = an octave. A musical term denoting the lowest and gravest notes of the scale, sung by men, the modern bass, opposed to the alamoth or treble. (1 Chron. xv. 21; also Ps. vi. and xii. in the title.)

SHEMIRAMOTH = name most high, or heaven most high. 1. A sacred musician. (1 Chron. xv. 18, 20; xvi. 5.) 2. A Levite. (2 Chron. xvii. 8.)

SHEMUEL = heard of God. 1. A prince of the tribe of Simeon. (Num. xxxiv. 20.) 2. The grandfather of Elkanah, the singer. (1 Chron. vi. 33.) 3. Descendant of Issachar. (1 Chron. vii. 2.)

SHEN = a tooth. A place, probably a rock or peak. (1 Sam. vii. 12.)

SHENAZAR = tooth or peak of rock. A descendant of Solomon. (1 Chron. iii. 18.)

SHENIR = See HERMON.

SHEPHAM = barrenness, place of naked trees. A place on the northeast border of Palestine, north of Riblah. (Num. xxxiv. 10, 11.)

SHEPHATIAH = whom Jehovah defends. 1. A son of king David. (2 Sam. iii. 4.) 2. A son of king Jehoshaphat. (2 Chron. xxi. 2.) 3. One of David's distinguished officers. (1 Chron. xii. 5.) 4. A descendant of Simeon. (1 Chron. xxvii. 16.) 5. The son of Mattan. (Jer. xxxviii. 1.) 6. A descendant of Judah. (Neh. xi. 4.) 7. Two persons whom the descendants returned from Exile. (Ezr. ii. 4, 57; Neh. vii. 9, 59.)

SHEPHATHIAH = whom Jehovah defends. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. ix. 8.)

SHEPHERD. The care of sheep was among the earliest and most respectable employments. Most of the ancient patriarchs were keepers of sheep; (Gen. iv. 2; xlii. 16; xlii. 5—8; xxix. 1—10; xlv. 32; Ex. iii. 1; ix. 3;) and the sons and daughters of powerful chiefs did not disdain such employment. (1 Sam. xvi. 11.) Though among the Egyptians, among whom high notions of caste prevailed, the idea of coarseness and barbarism was associated with a shepherd, (Gen. xlv. 34;) as is evident from the monuments. Among the Hebrews, the office of chief shepherd was one of great trust and responsibility, as well as of distinguished honour. (Gen. xxxi. 36—41; 1 Sam. xvi. 20; xxi. 7; 1 Chron. xxvii. 31; 2 Kings iii. 4.)

The shepherd was constantly with his flock, by night and by day, to gather, feed, conduct, and guard them; (Gen. xxxi. 39, 40; Jer. xxxiii. 13; Luke ii. 8;) he was often attended by a dog; (Job. xxx. 1; Isa. liv. 10, 11;) and his power over his sheep was very great. (Isa. xi. 11; John x. 1—16.) "The Kurdish shepherd," says a recent traveller in Mesopotamia and Syria, “pastures his flocks on the cold mountains of Kurdistan. His custom, at certain seasons, of separating the sheep from the goats, would give to that illustration of the judgment all the force of a familiar scene. (Matt. xxv. 3–34.) He seeks a market for his sheep among the silk growers of Syria. He goes before his flock and they follow him, for they know his voice. (John x. 4, 16.) Is the region about him sterile and bare? Driving his donkey before him and his flock running behind him, he hurries forward to more fruitful scenes; perhaps carrying some weakling in his bosom, or less scripturally fastening it on the donkey amid the stuff. Between the Euphrates and the plains of the Orontes, he lifts the stone from the well’s mouth, draws the water with such a leathern bucket as the daughters of Jethro used before him; pours it into such rude stone troughs as might have received it from the hands of Moses and David; and perhaps quarrels with other shepherds, who in modern as well as in ancient times, seek to monopolise the precious element. (Gen. xxii. 25; xxvi. 14–22; Ex. ii. 16–19.) So also the Arab herdsman may dispute his title to the pastures through which he passes, as the herdsmen of Lot sought to deal with those of Abraham. (Gen. xiii. 7–11.) Having arrived at the city, the shepherd stalks on before along the narrow streets of the bazaar which are full of confusion, while the sheep, stunned and bewildered by the strange sights and sounds, are intent only on one object—that of keeping near their master, they seem to tell him of their troubles, and claim his protection.” Jehovah is sometimes figuratively called a “Shepherd;” (Ps. xxxii. 1; lxxx. 1; Isa. xl. 11;) and His people the “sheep of His pasture.” (Ps. lxxiv. 1; xcv. 7; c. 8; Ezek. xxxiv. 31.) So also, Christ is often called “a Shepherd”—“the good Shepherd who gives His life for the sheep.” (Ezek. xxxiv. 23; Zech. xiii. 7; John x. 11; Heb. 6:11) grain; on which they were slain without mercy. In this way there fell 12,000 Ephraimites at the fords of the Jordan. (Judg. xii. 6.) The inability of the Ephraimites to pronounce the sh, shows that dialectical variations had early obtained among the Hebrew tribes.
SHI

SHIBMAH—See Shibmah.

SHICHON=drunkeness. A place on the northern border of Judah. (Josh. xv. 11.)

SHELM. A piece of defensive armour. There are four Hebrew words which appear to designate different kinds of shields:—1. Shelar/*designates the ornamented shield of a distinguished warrior. (2 Sam. viii. 7; 2 Kings xi. 10; 2 Chron. xxii. 9; Sol. Song iv. 1; Jer. li. 11; Ezek. xxvii. 11.)—2. Zizimak/*designated the "target." (1 Kings x. 16.) designates the largest kind of shield, which covered the whole body. (1 Sam. xvii. 7, 41; 2 Chron. xi. 12; Ps. xcv. 4; 1 Kings x. 16.) properly "buckler." (Ezek. xxvii. 24; xxxviii. 4; Ps. xc. 13; xxxv. 2.)—3. Shishar/*signifies a buckler, as surrounding the whole body. (Ps. xcv. 4.)—4. Magan, a smaller and lighter kind of shield, answering to the Roman scutum, borne by the soldiers, and made of wood, covered with leather, and studded with metal; (Judg. v. 8; 2 Sam. i. 21; Ezek. xxxix. 9; Job xv. 26; Isa. xxi. 5.) The shields of the Assyrians and Egyptians, as exhibited on the monuments, were made of wood, leather, copper, and even of iron; and frequently ornamented with the precious metals. (1 Kings x. 17; 2 Kings xix. 32; Ezek xxiii. 34; Ps. xxxv. 2.) Jehovah is called the "shield," or "buckler," i.e. the protector of His people. (Gen. xv. 1; Deut. xxxii. 29; Ps. iii. 3; v. 12; xviii. 2, 30; cxxiv. 2.) The same term is applied to Christ our Saviour. (Ps. lxxxiv. 9, 11.) The "shields of the earth," designate princes, chiefs, protecting the people. (Ps. lxxvii. 9; Hos. iv. 18.)

SHIGGAION. This Hebrew word signifies a song, psalm, or hymn. (Ps. vii. title.) It also occurs in the plural form "Shigiooath"—songs, psalms. (Hab. iii. 1.)

SHIHTUN=destruction. A city in the tribe of Issachar. (Josh. xix. 19.)

SHIHIOR.—See Sion.

SHIHIOR-LIBNATH.—See Libnath.

SHILH=armed. The grandfather of Jehoshaphat. (1 Kings xxii. 42; 2 Chron. xx. 31.)

SHILHIM=armed men. A city in the tribe of Judah. (Josh. xv. 32.)

SHILLEM=requital. A son of Naphtali; (Gen. xvi. 24) also called "shallum." (1 Chron. vii. 13.) His descendants are called "Shillemites." (Num. xxvi. 49.)

SHILOAH.—See Siloam.

1. SHILOH=Resident. A title of the Messiah, in the remarkable prediction uttered by the patriarch Jacob—"The sceptre shall not pass from Judah; nor a ruler from his posterity, until Shiloh shall arrive, and Him shall nations obey." (Gen. xlix. 10.) The Jewish Targums agree in expounding the word Shiloh of "the King Messiah, whose is the kingdom." And, in accordance with the ancient prediction, the tribe of Judah retained its supremacy, even under the Roman dominion, and the civil and ecclesiastical polity of the Jewish nation continued undestroyed, until the Messiah, the Lion of the tribe of Judah, made His appearance, and, as the King of the Jews, ascended the throne of David His father, i.e. the theocratic throne of which the kingdom of David had been considered an illustrious type. Then the outward and limited supremacy of Judah's tribe passed into the spiritual and universal reign of Christ, and that government of peace and rest was established of which there shall be no end.

2. SHILOH=place of peace. A city in the tribe of Ephraim, situated to the north of Bethel. (Josh. xviii. 1, 8, 10; xix. 51; xxiv. 2; xxii. 3; Judg. xxi. 19; 1 Sam. i. 8, 9, 24; iii. 21; 1 Kings ii. 27; Jer. vii. 12.) The in-Habitants were called "Shilonites." (1 Kings xi. 29; xii. 15; 1 Chron. ix. 5.) Dr. Robinson says the main site of Shiloh, now called Seilun, consists of the ruins of a comparatively modern village, covering a small Tel. Among the ruins of modern houses are very large stones, and some fragments of columns; and in the sides of the narrow valley towards the east are many excavated tombs, now much broken away.

SHILONITE.—See Shiloh.

SHILONI=pacific. A descendant of Perez. (Neh. xi. 5.)

SHILOSHAH=triad. A descendant of Asaher. (1 Chron. vii. 37.)

SHIMEA=rumour. 1. One of the Levites. (1 Chron. vi. 39.) 2. See Shammua.

SHIMEAHH=rumour. 1. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 33;) also written "Shimeam." (1 Chron. ix. 38.) 2. See Shammua.

SHIMEAM.—See Shimeah.

SHIMEATH=rumour. The mother of Jozachar, an Ammonite. (2 Kings xii. 21; 2 Chron. xxiv. 26.)

SHIMEATHITES. A family of Kenites. (1 Chron. ii. 55.)

SHIMEI=renowned. 1. A son of Gerahon; (Num. iii. 18; 1 Chron. vi. 17, 42; xxiii. 7—10;) also called "Shimi;" (Ex. vi. 17;) his descendants are called "Shimites." (Num. iii. 21.) 2. The son of Gera, of the house of Saul, who insulted David when he fled from Absalom. (2 Sam. xvi. 5—13; xix. 16—23; 1 Kings ii. 8, 36—46.) 3. The superintendent of David's vineyards. (1 Chron. xxvii. 27.) 4. One of Solomon's officers. (1 Kings i. 8; iv. 18.) 5. A descendant of Benjamin. (Est. ii. 5.) 6. A descendant of Hashum. (1 Kings x. 18.) 7. A son of Pedalai. (1 Chron. iii. 19; Zech. xii. 13.) 8. A descendant of Simeon. (1 Chron. iv. 26, 27.) 9. A descendant of Reuben. (1 Chron. v. 4.) 10. The name of six Levites. (1 Chron. vi. 29, 30; xxv. 17; 2 Chron. xxix. 14; xiii. 12, 13; Ezra x. 23.)

SHIMEON=a hearkening. A son of Harim. (Ezr. x. 31.)

SHIMHL=rumour. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 21.)

SHIM.—See Shime.

SHIMITES.—See Shim.

SHIMMA.—See Shammah.

SHIMON=desert. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 20.)

SHIMRAH=watch, guard. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 21.)

SHIMRI=watchful. 1. A descendant of Simeon. (1 Chron. iv. 37.) 2. The father of Jedias. (1 Chron. xii. 45.) 3. One of the Levites. (2 Chron. xxix. 13.)

SHIMRITH=watchful. The mother of Jehozabad, a Monibezz. (2 Chron. xxiv. 26;) also called "Shomer." (2 Kings xii. 21.)

SHIMRON=watch, guard. 1. A son of Issacher; (Gen. xli. 13;) also written "Shimrom." (1 Chron. vii. 1.) His descendants are called "Shimronites." (Num. xxxvi. 24.) 2. A Canaanitish city appropriated to Zebulun; (Josh. xi. 1; xix. 15;) apparently the same as "Shimron-Meron"=watch-height. (Josh. xii. 20.) Jewish writers say that Meiron, near Safed, where are the tombs of some of their Rabbins, is the representative of this place.

SHIMRON-MERON.—See Shimron.

SHIMSHAI=shiny. A Samaritan secretary who opposed the rebuilding of Jerusalem. (Ezr. iv. 8, 9, 17.)

SHINAB=father's tooth. A Canaanitish king. (Gen. xiv. 2.)

SHINAR=ejected, dispersed, or perhaps a rushing sound as of waters. The ancient name of Babylonia. (Gen. x. 10; xiv. 1; Isa. xi. 11; Zech. v. 11; Dan. i. 1.) Col. Rawlinson has observed, that in the cuneiform inscriptions Babylonia is known by no other name than Shinar, but that it has no connection with the hilly and stony district of the modern Sinjar. The "plain in the land of Shinar" appears to have been the first fixed residence of the progenitors of the human race after the flood. (Gen. xi. 2.)
SHIP. The ships of the ancients, judging from the Egyptian and Assyrian monuments, were very imperfect in comparison with modern ones; and, the use of the compass being unknown, navigation was but little understood. The ancients had ships of burden of one, two, and three mast; and when laden they were impelled by sails rather than by oars. (Isa. xxxviii. 28; Acts xxvii. 17.) They carried several anchors, and could anchor either by the prow or the stern. Sometimes they had two rudders, one attached to each quarter. (Acts xxvii. 29, 30, 40.) The merchant ships appear to have been called ships of Tarshish. (Isa. ix. 9; Jon. i. 1–3.) Some of the ships employed in the transportation of corn to Rome were very large, and were able to accommodate, in addition to their own crews and lading, from two hundred to six hundred persons. (Acts xxvii. 11, 37; Jos. Life, 3.)

The voyages of the ancients were very tedious, mostly along the coasts. They also waited for favourable winds; and not unfrequently wintered on the way. (Acts xxvii. 12; xxviii. 11.) The Greeks and the Romans considered the period of safe navigation as closing in October, and re-commencing about the middle of March; as their mariners dreaded a voyage in the winter, when the rains prevailed, and the clouds obscured the sun and stars, on which they were so dependant for the direction of their course. In ancient times it was common for the larger ships, on their more extended voyages, to carry with them ropes for under-girding or frapping the ship, to support her when it was apprehended that she might not be able to resist the violent efforts of the sea. (Acts xxvii. 17.) This mode of strengthening a ship at sea is not unknown in the experience of modern navigation. The “galley” was a low, flat-built vessel, navigated with oars and sails, and used particularly in the Mediterranean. (Isa. xxxviii. 29–21.) He “war-galley with oars, and a gallant ship,” designate the Assyrian forces, which, in the contemplated attack upon Jerusalem, were rendered unmanageable and unserviceable, as in a tempest, by the blast of Jehovah. (Isa. xxxvii. 33–38.) The Hebrews were never a maritime nation; and their foreign trade from the ports of the Red sea appears to have been carried on through the Phenicians. (Gen. xlix. 13; 1 Kings ix. 26, 27; x. 22; xxii. 48, 49; 2 Chron. xx. 35–37.) The ancient Egyptians and the Assyrians carried on commerce by sea; but the maritime trade, till the rise of the Roman power, was principally in the hands of the Phenicians, at Tyre and Sidon. (Ezek. xxvii. 1–26; xxviii. 1–19; Isa. xlii. 2–6.)

SHIP—abundant. A descendant of Simeon. (1 Chron. iv. 37.)

SHIPMITE.—See SIPHERMITE.

SHIPRAH—brightness, beauty. One of the Hebrew midwives residing in Egypt. (Ex. i. 15.)

SHIPHTAN—judicial. A descendant of Ephraim. (Num. xxxiv. 24.)

SHISHA.—See SHISAH.

SHISHAK—cagerness, longing. A king of Egypt, contemporary with Rehoboam. (1 Kings xi. 40.) He is probably the same with Shechem, or Sacocheis, the first king in the twenty-second dynasty of Manetho. Several Egyptian monuments have been discovered bearing the name of this king. The hieroglyphs of which read

!Hieroglyph

Aunn sacred to Sheshonk. This monarch is the first Pharaoh who is mentioned by name in the Scriptures. In the fifth year of the reign of Rehoboam, b.c. 971, he invaded Judea with an overwhelming force of chariots and horsemen, and an auxiliary body composed of Libyans, Ethiopians, and the Troglodyte tribes who dwelt on the western shore of the Red sea and Ethiopia. Notwithstanding the preparations of Rehoboam, Shishak... the name of a people; (Ezek. xxiii. 28;) but the words “Pekod, and Shoa, and Kos,” are rendered by others “the prefect, and noble, and prince.”

SHOBAB = apostate, rebellious. 1. A son of David. (2 Sam. v. 14; 1 Chron. iii. 5; xiv. 4.) 2. A son of Caleb. (1 Chron. ii. 18.)

SHOBACH = poured. A general of Hadarezer, king of Zobah; (2 Sam. x. 16, 18;) also called “Shophach.” (1 Chron. xix. 16, 18.)

SHOBAY = taking captive. One whose posterity returned from exile. (Est. ii. 42; Neh. vii. 45.)

SHOBAL = flowing, or a shoot. 1. A son of Seir. (Gen. xxxvi. 20, 23, 29; 1 Chron. i. 38, 40.) 2. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 1, 2.) 3. A son of Caleb. (1 Chron. ii. 50, 52.)

SHOBUK = forsaking. One who sealed the covenant. (Neh. x. 24.)

SHOBI = taking captive. A distinguished Ammonite. (2 Sam. xviii. 27.)

SHOCHO. — See Socoh.

SHOCOH. — See Socoh.

SHOCO. — See Socoh.

SHOES. — See Sandals.

SHOHAM = onyx. One of the Levites. (1 Chron. xxiv. 27.)

SHUMER. — See Shamer, and SHIMRITH.

SHOPACH. — See Shobach.

SHOPAN. — See Araboth.

SHOSHANNIM = lilies. Instruments of music resembling lilies; perhaps the cymbals. (Ps. xlv., lix., titlea.) So also “Shoshannim-Eduth” probably signifies cymbals or trumpets of song. (Ps. lxxx. title.)

SHRINES. — See Diana.

SHUAH = riches. 1. The daughter of Heber. (1 Chron. vii. 32.) 2. The Canaanitish father-in-law of Judah; (1 Chron. ii. 3;) also written “Shuah.” (Gen. xxvii. 2, 12.)

SHUH = pit. 1. A son of Abraham and Keturah, who gave name to the “Shuithes,” an Arabian tribe, probably inhabiting Sakkaia, eastward of Bashan. (Gen. xxv. 2; Job ii. 11; viii. 1; xxv. 1.)—2. See Shua, and Hushah.

SHUAL = a fox or jackal. 1. A dis-

---

HASTREDLY reduced all the fenced cities of Judah and Benjamin. Jerusalem appears to have made no resistance, and thus escaped the sufferings of a siege and a storm; but the treasures both of the temple and the royal palace were carried off, and the country was rendered tributary. (2 Chron. xii. 1–12.) Among the several cartouches representing nations tributary to Shishak, on the walls of the palace-temple at Karnak, is that of the kingdom of Judah.—See Rehoboam.

SHITRAI = official. A superintendent of king David’s herds. (1 Chron. xxvii. 28.)

SHITTAAH TREE. The Hebrew name of the Acacia cera, a large tree, growing on the arid plains of upper Egypt, and in the Arabian desert. (Isa. iv. 1, 19.) The bark is covered with large prickly thorns, the wood is very durable, and not liable to injury from water; it is exceedingly hard, and susceptible of a fine polish, and when old resembles ebony. It is also extremely light, and hence it was admirably adapted for a moveable and portable structure like the Mosaic tabernacle. It is the only tree in the Arabian desert from which boards could have been made. The kernel of its fruit is used in dying leather a red colour. This tree is called sunit by the Arabs, and “shittim wood” in several passages. (Ex. xxxv. 10, 13, 28; xxxvi. 31, 36; xxxvii. 1, 4, 10, 15, 25, 28.) The sunit or shittah tree is not to be confounded with the Acacia gummifera, another thorny tree, called by the Arabs tulk, or seyal, which yields the gum Arabic of commerce. The abundance of the shittah trees gave name to the Valley of Shittim, in Moab, on the borders of Palestine. (Num. xxv. 1; Josh. iii. 1; Mic. vi. 5; Joel iii. 18.)—See Abel-Shittim.

SHITTIM. — See Abel-Shittim.

SHITTIM WOOD. — See Shittah Tree.

SHIZA. The father of Adina. (1 Chron. xi. 42.)

SHOA = rich, opulent. Apparently 635 strict in the tribe of Benjamin. (1 Sam. xiii. 17.)—2. A descendant of Asher. (1 Chron. vii. 36.)
SHU

SHUBAEL.—See SHEBAEL.

SHUBIAM—pit-digger? A son of Dan; also called “Hushim”—the hast- ing. (Gen. xlii. 23.) His descend- ants were called “Shuhamites.” (Num. xxvi. 42, 43.)

SHUITE.—See SHEAH.

SHUHAMITE=purific. The name of the symbolic maiden celebrated in Sol. Song vi. 13. Others understand a native of Shunem, a “Shunammite.”

SHUMATHITES. A patronymic apparently derived from Shumah=garlic? (1 Chron. ii. 53.)

SHUNAMMITE.—See SHUNEM.

SHUNEM=two resting-places? A city of Issachar. (Josh. xix. 18; 1 Sam. xxvii. 4; 2 Kings iv. 3.) The inhabitants were called “Shunam- mites;” (1 Kings i. 3; ii. 17; 2 Kings iv. 8—12; viii. 1—6) and perhaps “Shulamites.” (Sol. Song vi. 13.) It is now a small dirty village called Solam or Sawlam, lying on the declivity at the western end of the mountain of Duby, over against Zer’in, but higher.

SHUNI=quite. A son of Gad; (Gen. xlii. 16;) his descendants are called “Shunites.” (Num. xxvi. 15.)

SHUPHAM=serpent? A son of Benjamin; and father of the “Shupham- mites.” (Num. xxvi. 39.) This name ought to be written “Shepuham.” In Gen. xlii. 21, it is written “Muppim.”

SHUPPIM=serpents? 1. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. vii. 12, 15.) 2. One of the Levites. (1 Chron. xxvi. 16.)

SHUR.—See ETHAM.

SHUSHAN=lily, or perhaps pure, pleasant. The ancient capital of Susiana or Elamis, and at one period the capital of all Persia. (Dan. viii. 2; Est. i. 2, 5; Neh. i. 1.) It was situated between two rivers—the smaller stream called the Shapour; and the larger the river of Difil, called the “Ula,” in Dan. viii. 2, and by the Greeks the Eulkn, which enters the Karun, thence flowing into the Shat el Arab, the united stream of the Euphrates and the Tigrit. The mound called Shush, traditionally the site of the ancient Susa or Shushan, are situated about fourteen miles S.W. of Difil. The ruins have been recently examined by Mr. Loftus, who states, that the little stream, called the Shapour, flows close to the base of the principal mound. In one mound the remains of six columns were found, placed in a row at intervals of twenty-seven feet, which had evidently formed part of a magnificent colonnade. A trilingual cuneiform inscription was found, recording that the palace was commenced by Darius, and completed by Artaxerxes Mennon. The central platform measured in length 3,000 feet on one side, and in height from 50 to 70 feet; and wherever the ground was opened, baked clay vessels, with cylindrical urns, and fragments of glass were turned up. In another excavation, Mr. Loftus came upon a small pavement, once apparently composed of blue and yellow marble blocks. As the fragments were of all shapes and sizes, it is probable that this pavement had been constructed from the debris of some more ancient palace. The few existing remains evidence that these mounds were once occupied by the magnificent buildings of a beautiful city.

SHUSHAN-EDUTH=cymbal or trumpet of song. A musical instrument, a kind of trumpet, probably so called from its resemblance to a large lily. (Ps. lx. title.)

SHUTHELAL=noise of breaking.

1. A son of Ephraim; his descendants were called “Shuthalites.” (Num. xxvi. 35, 36; 1 Chron. vii. 20.) 2. A descendant of Ephraim. (1 Chron. vii. 21.)

SHUTTLE.—See WEAVING.

SIA=congregation. One of the Nethinim; (Neh. vii. 47;) also written “Siha.” (Ezr. ii. 44.)

SIAHA.—See SIA.

SIBBECHAI=ticket of Jochab. i.e. Jochab’s crown. One of David’s.
SIB

distinguished captains; (2 Sam. xxi. 18; 1 Chron. xx. 4;) also written "Sibbecai;" (1 Chron. xi. 29; xxvii. 11;) and by a corruption of the scribes, "Mebunnai" = building of Jehovah. (2 Sam. xxiii. 27.)

SIBBOLETH.—See SHIBBOLETH.

SIBMAH = coolness, or fragrance. A city of Judah, celebrated for its vineyards; (Josh. xii. 19; Isa. xvi. 8, 9; Jer. xlviii. 32;) also written "Shebam," and "Shibmah." (Num. xxxii. 3, 38.)—See JAAZER.

SIBRAIM = two-fold hope. A Syrian city between Damascus and Hamath. (Ezek. xlvii. 16.)

SICCUTH = a tent or tabernacle. The tent or tabernacle which the idolatrous Hebrews constructed in the desert in honour of an idol. (Am. v. 26 margin.)—See REMPHAN.

SICHEM.—See SHECHEM.

SICKLE.—See HARVEST.

SIDDIM = a depression. The valley of Siddim is the plain whereon stood the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, now partly occupied by the Dead seas. (Gen. xiv. 3; viii. 10.)

SIDON = a fishery. A very ancient and opulent city of Phenicia, situated on the sea-coast northward of Tyre; which was founded by Sidon the eldest son of Canaan. (Gen. x. 15, 19; xliii. 13;) In the division of the Promised Land by Joshua, "Sidon" or "Zidon," was assigned to Asher; but the Hebrews never subdued it. (Josh. xi. 8; xix. 28; Judg. i. 31; ii. 3; x. 12.) In later ages, the younger and neighbouring city Tyre, outstripped Sidon in the career of prosperity and power; but both were equally renowned for their commerce, their manufactures, and the cultivation of the fine arts, as well as for the luxury and vices usually attendant upon commercial prosperity. (1 Kings v. 6; xi. 33; xxii. 2; 1 Chron. xxii. 4; Ezr. iii. 7; Ezek. xxvii. 8; Joel iv. 4; Jer. xxv. 22; xxvii. 3; Zech. ix. 2; Matt. xi. 21, 22; xv. 21; Mark iii. 8; Luke xvi. 17.) The name "Sidonians" is often applied to all the inhabitants of the northern parts of Canaan, dwelling around the skirts of Mount Lebanon, and called by the Greeks Phœnicians, comprehending also the Tyrians, a name used in the same extent. (Isa. xxiii. 2, 4, 12; Deut. iii. 9; Ezek. xxxii. 30; Josh. xiii. 6; 1 Kings xvi. 13; 2 Kings xxviii. 13.) When the Assyrian Shalmaneser entered Phenicia, about 720 B.C., Sidon and all the rest of Phenicia, except insular Tyre, submitted to the conqueror. After continuing long under the dominion of the Assyrians and Persians, Sidon revolted, and was destroyed by Artaxerxes Ochus, about 350 B.C. It was again rebuilt, and not long after was taken by Alexander the Great, before the siege of Tyre. (Jos. Ant. xi. 8. 3;) After his death it was subject alternately to the kings of Syria and Egypt, and then to the Romans. (Luke iv. 26; Acts xxvii. 3.) Sidon is now called Saida, and still continues a town of some importance, having a population of some 6000 souls. The streets are narrow, crooked, and dirty, like those of most Oriental cities. The beauty of Saida consists in its gardens and orchards of fruit trees, which fill the plain and extend to the foot of the mountains. The ancient harbour, formed by a long low ridge of rocks, was partly filled up with stones and earth by Fakr-ed-Din; so that now only boats can enter it, while larger vessels lie without the entrance, on the north of the ledge of rocks. Within the last few years, the tide of European commerce has turned to Beirut; and the port of Saida is rarely visited by foreign vessels. On September 26th, 1840, Saida was stormed by the squadron of the five United Powers, and amidst much bloodshed and ruin was wrested from the government of Muhammad Aly, and brought again under the execrable rule of the Sultan.

—See TYRE.

SIEGE.—See WAR.

SIGNET.—See SEAL.

SIGN. Signs and wonders, as they are usually connected, sometimes denote those proofs or demonstrations of power and authority which were furnished by miracles, and by other tokens of the Divine presence; (John iv. 48; Matt. xii. 38; Acts ii. 22;) sometimes those unusual appearances which betoken the approach of great events; (Luke xxii. 11, 25;) and at other times tokens or pledges as evidences of fulfilment. Isa. vii. 11; Luke ii. 12; 1 Cor. i. 22.)—See Miracles.

SIHON—sweeping away. A king of the Amorites at Heshbon, who was slain, and his kingdom taken by the Hebrews. (Num. xxxi. 21—31; Deut. ii. 26; Ps. cxxxv. 11, 12; cxxxvi. 19; Jer. xviii. 45.)

SIHON—black, turbid. The Hebrew name for the river Nile, so called from its muddy and turbid waters. (Josh. xiii. 3; Is. xxiii. 3; Jer. ii. 18.) In 1 Chron. xiii. 5, it is properly written “Shihor.” Some suppose it to be the same as the “Gihon.” (Gen. ii. 13.) The Hebrew word nehar—a river, was sometimes used to designate the Nile. (Gen. xv. 18; Is. xlvii. 1; Zeph. iii. 10.) The ancient Egyptian name, often used by the Hebrews, was jear; the Coptic jars—“the river.” (Gen. xii. 1, 3; Ex. i. 22; ii. 3; vi. 15, 18.) On the monuments it is called “Hapi-Moon”—the Numerous Waters; which may imply the stream inundating the country. And the Greek name Nilos, the Latin Niles, whence the Nile, may be the same as the Hebrew nahal—“a stream, torrent.” The Nile is called in Egypt el-Bahr—“the river;” also Bahr el Neel—“the river Nile;” and Neel Masr—“the Nile of Egypt.” Though the true sources of this mighty river, in the equatorial districts of Africa, have yet to be explored, Dr. Livingstone, in his researches in South Africa, has contributed something towards solving the problem. He thinks that the head waters of the Nile and of the Zambesi are between the latitudes, say 6 deg. and 12 deg. S., in a sort of elevated partition in the great longitudinal valley; whence these rivers diverge, the former in a northern direction, and the latter south and then eastward. When this enterprising traveller was in the parts of Londa, he was on the watershed, or highest point of the two great river systems—4,000 feet above the level of the sea—whence the waters from the lake Dilolo are distributed northward by the Kasai, hence to the Congo, westward to the Atlantic; and a portion southward by the Lueba, hence eastward by the Zambesi to the Indian Ocean. There were no lofty snow-clad mountains, but extensive plains over which one might travel a month. From this elevated trough-form of the centre of Africa, some 150 miles to the northeast of Shinta, a large shallow lake was pointed out, named Tanganyenka, between latitudes 6 deg. and 9 deg. S., which is connected with another named Kalagwe. Probably this lake is the watershed between the Zambesi and the Nile, as the lake Dilolo is that between the Lueba and the Kasai.

The characteristics of the rainy season, in February, March, and April, in this wonderfully humid region, may account in some measure for the periodical floods of the Zambesi, and perhaps the Nile. The plains, which in October and November had imbibed rain like sponges now become super-saturated, and pour forth their floods of clear water which inundate the banks of the Zambesi. Somewhat of the same phenomenon probably causes the periodical inundations of the Nile. However, the phenomena of the rainy season show that it is not necessary to assume the existence of high snowy mountains causing the inundations, until we get reliable information.

From this region the Nile pursues its course in a northerly direction, crossing the equator, and coming to the arid region about Darfur, where it is called Bahr el-Abiad—White River, but receives remarkably few branches. Pursuing its course to near Khartum, in latitude 15 deg. 38 min. N., the Nile receives from the east the Bahr-el-
A:rok = Blue River, the Nile of Bruce, which rises in Abyssinia. The last affluent of the Nile is the pecaze = the Terrible, likewise an Abyssinian river, which falls into the united stream at Ilak, in southern Nubia. Thence to its mouths in the Mediterranean, a distance of 1500 miles, the Nile rolls on its course in solitary grandeur—an unexampled instance in the hydrographic history of the globe—receiving no supplies, while, having its waters largely drawn off for irrigation, and flowing through a burning desert, the river consequently diminishes on its passage northward. The cataracts, except that at Aswan, are merely a succession of rapids. At its entrance into the valley of Egypt at Aswan, the Nile is about 3,500 feet wide; at Oudi above Cairo the width is 2,900 feet; at Rosetta, it is 1,800 feet; and at Diametta only 800 feet. As the tropical rains seem to follow the course of the sun, though the two great rivers—the Zambezi and the Nile—rise in the same region, there is a difference in the period of their flood; possibly from their being on opposite sides of the equator. Hence, in June, towards the summer solstice, the Nile begins to rise, from the periodical rains which fall on the south of latitude 12 deg. which marks the northern limit of the tropical rains. The flood attains its greatest height in August and September, about the autumnal equinox. At Thebes the Nile rises about thirty-six feet; at Cairo, about twenty-three; in the north part of the Delta, owing to the large surface over which the inundation spreads, it rises only to the height of about three feet and a half. The amount of the rise is a matter of extreme solicitude to the people, for should it pass its customary bounds, a few feet, cattle are drowned, mud-built houses are swept away, many lives are lost, and immense injury ensues. A falling short of the ordinary height, on the other hand, causes dearth and famine according to its extent. The Nile generally remains not longer than three or four days at its maximum, and the same length of time at its minimum: it may therefore be said to be three months on the increase, and nine months gradually falling. By the close of November most of the fields have been left dry; and in April the river is at its lowest ebb. The Nile becomes turbid a little before its rise is apparent, and soon after it assumes a green hue; it then changes to a muddy red, probably from the earthy particles mingled with the flood. Still the Nile water is the only drinkable water in Egypt; it is said to be extremely delicious. The Egyptians, even in the most ancient times, paid divine honours to the Nile. (Ex. vii. 15; viii. 20.) The first plague with which Jehovah afflicted the Egyptians consisted in changing the waters of Egypt into blood, i.e. into the colour of blood. (Ex. vii. 17—25; Ps. lxxxviii. 44; cv. 29; compare 2 Kings iii. 22; Joel ii. 31.) Sometimes, in years of great heat, the loathsome thickness of the water becomes a great calamity; so that there is still something analogous to this plague in the natural phenomena of Egypt.

SIHOR-LIBNATH.—See LIBNATH.

SILAS.—See SILVANUS.

SILLA = twig, basket. A place near Jerusalem. (2 Kings xii. 20.)

SILK. A fabric manufactured from the cocoons spun by the silk-worm. The Hebrew word mesı̂k, rendered "silk," (Ezck. xvi. 63,) according to the Hebrew interpreters, signifies silk, a garment of silk. The Hebrew word shešh, rendered "silk," (Gen. xii. 42, margin; Prov. xxxi. 22,) properly denotes fine cotton. The Greek word σηκ之人 is rightly rendered "silk," i.e. silken stuffs. (Rev. xviii. 12.) Silk was for a long time obtained from China, and as Professor Neumann conjectures, was probably introduced into Europe by the name "seris," as the same root sir is used to signify that article in the countries around the original localities of the silk-worm; and even China itself appears to have obtained among the Romans the name Seres. Silk constituted an important item in the commerce that was carried on by the great caravan traffic through western Asia.
SIL

SILOAH.—See SILOAM.

SILOAM = a sending of water, i.e. a conduit. An aqueduct at the foot of Zion, on the south-eastern part of Jerusalem. The Hebrew name “Shiloah;” (Isa. viii. 6;) also “Siloah;” (Neh. iii. 15;) and the later or Greek form “Siloam,” is interpreted “sent.” (John ix. 7, 11; Luke xiii. 4.) This fountain, called by the Arabs Silwan, is described as a small deep reservoir in the form of a parallelogram, into which the water flows from under the rocks, out of a smaller basin hewn in the solid rock a few feet farther up. The smaller basin forms the termination of the long and narrow subterranean passage, by which the water comes from the Fountain of the Virgin, or of Mary. Dr. Robinson thinks the Fountain of Mary may be the same as the “King’s Pool,” (Neh. ii. 14,) and the “Fool of Solomon;” (Jos. Wars, v. 4. 2;) or even Bethesda. It is situated on the west side of the valley of Jehoshaphat, and 1,100 feet from Siloam. Dr. Robinson, with his companion, had the courage to explore the subterranean passage between the upper and the lower fountains—that of Mary and of Siloam. The passage is wholly cut through the solid rock, everywhere about two feet wide, having many turns and zig-zags; and most of the way they had to advance on their hands and knees; the water was low, for the most part not more than three or four inches in depth, flowing through gently and with little current. They came out again at the fountain of Siloam. The whole length of the passage was found to be 1750 feet; or 650 feet longer than the direct distance measured upon the surface; the difference being the result of the sinuosities of the passage. The water at the basin of the upper fountain rapidly bubbles up from under the lower step, at irregular intervals; sometimes two or three times a day, and sometimes in summer once in two or three days. It is not improbable that the waters of Siloam issue from the well or fountain which is under or near to the Harem of the Grand Mosque; and that both may not improbably be dependant upon the concealed sources introduced into the city by Hezekiah. When Mr. Wallcott examined the fountain near the Harem, having been let down eighty-one feet by a rope and pulley, he observed four arched recesses in the rock, opposite one another, each about two feet deep, six high and four wide. On one side he entered the passage for the water, and came to a well or basin in the passage, and could proceed no farther for the water. This passage may be a mere descent to a lower gallery extending farther. The distance from this point back to the well was eighty feet. It was commonly reported in Jerusalem that there is a spot near the Damascus gate, without the city, when in a still time, by putting the ear near to the ground, the trickling or murmur of a subterranean water course can be heard. Now this spot is in the depression which extends down from the Damascus gate along the west side of the Harem; in or near which same hollow is also the fountain entered by Mr. Walcott. The taste of the water is the same as the waters of Siloam and the Fountain of the Virgin, sweetish and very slightly brackish, but not at all disagreeable. The waters of Siloam seem to flow off into the garden.

SILVANUS = a wood or forest. A distinguished Christian teacher, the companion of Paul in his journeys in Asia Minor and Greece; (2 Cor. i. 19; 1 Thess. i. 1; 2 Thess. i. 1; 1 Pet. v. 12;) also written “Silas.” (Acts xx. 24-40; xvi. 19-29; xvii. 4-15; xviii. 3.)

SILVER. This well-known metal, which, in respect of value, is nearest to that of gold, was obtained by the Hebrews from Tarshish; (Jer. x. 9; Ezek. xxvii. 12;) and probably from the frontiers of Assyria. (Job xxviii. 1.) Silver was purged from the dross; (Ps. xii. 6; Prov. xvii. 3; xxvii. 21; Ezek. xxii. 22; Zech. xiii. 9; Mal. iii. 3;) hence called “purified” or “refined silver.” (1 Chron. xxxix. 4; Ps. xii. 6; Prov. x. 20.) Silver was manufactured into all kinds of utensils; (Gen. xii. 2; xlvii. 2; xii. 85;) articles of ornament; (Ex. xii. 40;) and vessels for the sanctuary. (Num. vii. 13; x. 2; 1 Chron. xxviii. 14.) This metal was abundant in the days of Solomon. (1 Kings x. 21; 2 Chron. ix. 20.) Bars or pieces of silver weighed out but not coined, were long used for money, the principal medium of exchange. (Gen. xxii. 13; xxvii. 28; xliii. 15, 21; Ex. xvi. 6; Deut. xxii. 19; Hos. iii. 2.) The Greek word ἀργυρίον, i.e. “silver,” is used for “a piece of silver,” a silver coin. (Matt. xxvi. 15; xxvii. 5—9; Acts xix. 19.)

SIMON=similarity. 1. The second son of Jacob, born of Leah. (Gen. xxix. 33.) He participated in the revenge of Levi against the Shechemites for the outrage upon Dinah. (Gen. xxxiv. 25, 30; xlii. 5—7.) Before entering Canaan, the tribe of Simeon had become the lowest in all points of number. (Num. i. 23; xxvi. 14.) The Simeonites occupied cities within the territories of Judah. (Josh. xix. 1—9.) An emigration from this tribe took place, at an early period, towards Gedor, and afterwards to Mount Seir. (1 Chron. iv. 24—43; Ezek. xlviii. 24; Rev. vii. 7.) 2. One of the ancestors of Mary. (Luke iii. 30.) 3. An aged Jew residing at Jerusalem, who had been favoured with a Divine intimacy that he should live to see the Lord’s Christ. And being led by the Spirit, at the time when Jesus was presented by His mother at the temple, he recognised the infant as the expected Messiah, and took Him in his arms and blessed Him, glorifying God. (Luke ii. 25—35.) 4. A Christian teacher at Antioch, surnamed Niger—Black, evidently from his dark complexion. (Acts xiii. 1.) 5.—See Simon.

SIMON=similarity. 1. One of the twelve Apostles, surnamed the “Cananite,” or “Zelotes,” probably from having been one of the Zealots. (Matt. x. 4; Mark iii. 18; Luke vi. 15; Acts i. 13.) He is probably to be identified with Simon the son of Alphæus and Mary, brother of James the Less and Jude, and a kinsman of Jesus. (Matt. xiii. 55; Mark vi. 3.) 2. The father of Judas Iscariot. (John vii. 51; xii. 4; xiii. 2, 26.) 3. A Pharisee, who invited Jesus to his house. (Luke vii. 40—44.) 4. The “Leper,” probably so called from his having been afflicted with the leprosy, who, after the raising of Lazarus, entertained Jesus at his house in Bethany. (Matt. xxvi. 6; Mark xiv. 3; John xii. 1—3.) 5. The “Cyrenian,” who was compelled to aid in bearing the cross of Jesus. (Matt. xxvii. 32; Mark xv. 21; Luke xxiii. 26.) His two sons were disciples of Jesus. (Mark xv. 21.) The family of Simon seems to have resided afterwards at Rome. (Rom. xvi. 13.) 6. The “Tanner,” in whose house Peter lodged in Joppa. (Acts ix. 45; x. 17, 32.) 7. The “Magician,” a famous sorcerer in Samaria, who professed to be a convert to the Christian faith, and was baptised as such by Philip; but was severely rebuked by Peter as a hypocrite, because, under the influence of mercenary motives, he desired apostolic gifts. (Acts viii. 9—24.) He may have been the same with the Simon Magus, who was a dependant of Felix; (Jos. Ant. xx. 7; 2;) and probably the leader of a large division of the Gnostics. 8.—See Peter.

SIMRI=similarity. A chief of the Levites. (1 Chron. xxvi. 10.)

SIN. The voluntary transgression of a law of God. (Rom. iii. 20; iv. 15; vii. 7; James iv. 17.) Whether such a law be revealed in the holy Oracles, or in the constitution of our nature, the violation constitutes the transgressor a sinner. (Rom. i. 19—22; ii. 11—15.) What divines call "Original Sin," is usually defined as "that whereby man is very far gone from original righteousness, and is of his own nature inclined to evil." This absence of original righteousness is a deprivation rather than a deprivation; but a deprivation invariably leading, unless the grace of God interpose, to a deprivation, to the total estrangement of the heart from God, and to the consequent defiance of His authority and law. Hence native depravity consists, not so much of what is in the mind, as in what is not in it, in the absence of the Spirit of God, and consequently in the lack of the controlling principle—love to God, which Adam lost in the first transgression. Original sin, then, which is not a creature of God, is in its essential nature privative, not positive—not a thing, but the lack of a thing; it is the universal absence of original righteousness, and not the hereditary transmission of a quality positively vicios throughout the race. But original sin, or this tendency of the mind to evil, is by no means to be regarded in the same sense as guilt; inasmuch as involuntary developments of natural susceptibilities have no moral character. No natural propensity leads to action without the interposition of volition; and a mere desire, growing out of the natural constitution of the mind, excited by the temptation of Satan—to take some forbidden thing—may be perfectly innocent; but moral evil only commences when the desire or temptation is followed by the determination or volition to take it. Hence it appears, that actual transgression of the Divine Law—either by external actions, or by the voluntary internal desires of the soul—is that which can alone, with strict propriety, be called sin. The result, however, of this deprivation of primitive holiness, in consequence of the first transgression, is, that Satan now reigns in the children of disobedience, and the tendency or propension to evil is the controlling principle. (Eph. ii. 1—3; 2 Tim. ii. 26; 1 John iii. 4.) And, while it is the inexhaustible source of all actual sins, it is no less true that all men sin actually, and universally, and continually, and thus remain under condemnation until renewed by the Holy Spirit of God. (Rom. v. 12—19; vi. 22; John iii. 5; Col. i. 13.) The word "sin" is sometimes used for "sin-offering." (Hos. iv. 8; Rom. viii. 3, margin; 2 Cor. v. 21; Heb. ix. 28.) See Grace.

SIN-OFFERING.—See Offerings.

SIN=mire. An Egyptian city situated among the marshes, on the most easterly estuary of the Nile. It was called by the Greeks Pelusium, and by the Arabs Parama—a miry place. (Ezek. xxx. 15, 16.) The remains consist only of mounds and a few fallen columns, which can only be approached by boats during a high Nile, or by land when the summer has dried the mud left by the inundation.

SIN, WILDERNESS OF. The desert westward of Mount Sinai, on the coast of the Gulf of Suez; (Ex. xvi. 1; xvii. 1;) now identified with the great plain beginning near el-Murkah, and extending with a greater or less breadth almost to the extremity of the peninsula. It was one of the stations of the Hebrews. (Num. xxxiii. 11, 12.)

SINAI=(broken or cleft rocks.) A particular summit in the mountain range of Horeb—now called Jebel-el-Tur—near the head of the Red sea, in the peninsula lying between the Gulf of Suez and the Gulf of Akaba, and celebrated as the place where the Mosaic law was given. (Ex. xvi. 1; xix. 2—25; xxiv. 12, 18; xxv. 40; xxxiv. 2—35; Lev. vii. 38; xxv. 1; xxvi. 46; xxvii. 34; Deut. xxxiii. 2; Judg. v. 5; Heb. viii. 5; xii. 18—21.) The notion of Leipsius, that Jebel Serbal is the true Sinai; and that of Ruppell, which identifies Jebel Katherin, must be excluded by the utter want of adaptedness of these mountains to the several particulars noticed by the sacred historian. Dr. Robinson, who examined the region, says, the proper Sinai, so called at the present day, is a lofty isolated ridge between two deep and very narrow valleys; the northern end, called es-Suafaeh, impends perpendicularly over the narrow plain er-Rahah; the southern rises into the higher summit, the modern Jebel Musa. In the S. W. beyond the deep valley is another ridge, on which is the summit St. Katherin. The place of the giving of the law was probably the north end of the first ridge—the lower summit es-Suafaeh—impending over the plain er-Rahah. On this summit the Divine glory was probably manifested, and on the plain below, where was ample room, the people appear to have stood. "The naked and perpendicular mountain of Sinai, impending over the plain er-Rahah, at the height of 1200 or 1500 feet, and rising abruptly from its base, so that one may approach and touch it; the plain itself, shut in like an adytum by stern mountains, and enlarged by a recess on the west and by the opening of Wady esh Sheikh on the east, appeared to satisfy all the conditions of the question; and the language of Scripture, as applied to them, became singularly descriptive and beautiful." (Ex. xix. 10–24; xx. 15, 18.) The desert of Sinai, i.e. the plain at the foot of the mountain, was one of the stations of the Hebrews. (Ex. xix. 1, 2; Num. i. 1, 19; ix. 1, x. 12; xxxiii. 15, 16.)—See Horab.

SINCERITY. This term stands opposed to dissimulation or hypocrisy, and implies the entire correspondence of the heart with the expression of the lips. The Greek word ἱσικρινεία rendered "sincerity," signifies judged of in the sun-light, and denotes such things as, on being examined in the clearest light, are found genuine and unadulterated; hence pureness, sincerity. (1 Cor. v. 8; 2 Cor. i. 12; ii. 17; Phil. i. 10; 2 Pet. iii. 1.)

SINGING.—See Music.

SINIM. A people mentioned only in Isa. xli. 12; supposed by some writers to designate the inhabitants of Sin, a city of the Egyptians; while others understand the inhabitants of Syene, a city of the Ethiopians. The context implies that "the land of Sinim" is a remote country, situated in the southern or eastern extremity of the earth; hence recent commentators are disposed to identify the Sinim with the Sinenses, i.e. the Chinese. The Arabs designated this celebrated people Sin, and the Syrians called them Tsim. Prof. Neumann has shown that as early as the ninth century before our era, Tsim was the name of a great tributary kingdom in one of the western provinces of the present country of China. Active commercial intercourse existed between the remote east and west of Asia long previous to the eighth century before our era, which was probably the time at which the prophet Isaiah lived; hence we can easily understand how the name Sin, or Tsim, spread over the rest of Asia, as the designation of the Chinese people. Even to the Greeks and Romans, the Chinese were first known under the name of Thina, or Sina. And the name Seres, used by the Romans to designate silk, was subsequently applied to the Chinese, from whose country the article came. The recent events, which have thrown open the cities of China to commerce, and the unrestricted profession of Christianity, seem to be hastening the fulfilment of the prediction of the Hebrew prophet, when the millions of that vast empire shall be the converts of the Messiah.

SINITE. A people probably near Mount Lebanon; (Gen. x. 17; 1 Chron. i. 15,) probably the inhabitants of Sinai, not far from Arca.

SION.—See Zion, and Hermon.

SIPMOTH = bare places. A place in the south of Judah; (1 Sam. xxx. 28;) the inhabitants were called "Shipnites." (1 Chron. xxvii. 27.)

SIPPAI.—See Saph.
SIR

SIRAH—a retiring. The name of a cistern or well. (2 Sam. iii. 26.)

SIRMION. See HERMON.

SISAMAIA—leapers? A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. ii. 40.)

SISERA—battle array. 1. The general in command of the army of the Canaanish king Jabin, who was defeated by Barak, and slain by Jael, the wife of Heber. (Judg. iv. 2—22; v. 24—31; Ps. lxxviii. 9.) 2. One of the Nethinim. (Est. ii. 58; Neh. vii. 55.)

SISTER. This term is used not only for a sister in the proper sense, (Lev. xviii. 18,) but also for a stepsister; (Gen. xii. 13; xx. 12;) and also for a kinswoman. The cousins of our Lord are called his "brethren and sisters." (Matt. xxii. 55—56; Mark vi. 3.) The faithful servant of God is called by our Lord His brother, and sister, and mother. (Matt. xix. 47—50.)

SITHRI. See ZITHRI.

SITNAH—accusation. A well, so called from the opposition and strife of the Philistines against Isaac. (Gen. xxxvi. 21.)

SIVAN = brightness, splendour. The third month of the Hebrew year. (Est. viii. 9.) It commenced with the first new moon in June, and answered to that month; but if the new moon was somewhat late it would take in part of July.

SKINS. See LEATHER.

SLEEP. This word is taken either for the repose of the body, (Jon. i. 6; 6; Ps. iv. 8;) or the sleep of the soul, i.e. supineness, indolence or stupid inactivity of the wicked, whose "damnation slumbereth not" (Rom. xiii. 11, 12; Eph. v. 14; 1 Cor. xv. 34; 2 Pet. ii. 3;) also for the sleep of death. (Jer. li. 39; Dan. xii. 2; John xii. 11; 1 Cor. xv. 51; 1 Thess. iv. 13, 14.) The early Christians looked upon the death of the body as a sleep, from which they should awake to inherit everlasting glory. In the Greek word "cemetry", i.e. a sleeping place, applied by them to the tomb, there is a manifest sense of hope and immortality, the result of Christianity.

SNA. And in the catacombs of Rome, where multitudes of the early Christians rest in hope, among the inscriptions may be read, in a Latin dress: "Victoria S. Sleeps; "Zoticus laid here to Sleep;" "The sleeping place of Elpis;" "Gemilla sleeps in peace." And emblems of their sure and certain hope of a resurrection abound; such as a vessel supporting a burning flame, and the palm branch and wreath, signifying victory over death.

SLIME. See TRENCH.

SLING. An ancient instrument of warfare, which, among the Egyptians, was a thong of leather, or string plaited broad in the middle, and having a loop at one end, by which it was firmly held with the hand; the other extremity terminating in a lash, which escaped from the finger as the stone was thrown; and when used the slinger whirled it two or three times over his head, to steady it, and to increase the impetus. Among the Hebrews the slingers were enrolled among the light-armed troops; and some of them, like the Benjamites, were able in slinging to use equally the right hand or the left. (Judg. xx. 16; 1 Sam. xvii. 40—50; 2 Chron. xxvi. 14; Zech. ix. 15.)

SMITH. See IRON.

SMYRNA = myrrh. An ancient Ionian city, situated near the bottom of the Gulf of Smyrna, on the western coast of Asia Minor. (Rev. i. 11; ii. 8.) It is still the most important city of Asia Minor, and the centre of the Levantine trade. The modern city, called Izmir, with its domes and minarets, has a fine appearance in approaching from the sea. It has a population of about 130,000 souls. The harbour is capacious and affords the finest anchorage for ships of the largest class. Smyrna has been repeatedly overwhelmed by earthquakes. Some few of the ruins of ancient Smyrna are still visible to the south of the modern city.

SNAIL. The Hebrew word "shabili" signifies a snail, especially without the shell, a slug. The word occurs in Ps. lviii. 8, spoken of the wicked: “let them melt away as the snail which melteth as it goeth;” i.e. which leaves a slimy trail as it goes.

SNOW. The vapour of which the clouds are formed, frozen or crystallized. A quantity of very minute crystals of ice having been formed, they are enlarged by the condensation and freezing of vapour, and merging together constitute flakes, which increase in size during their descent. In equatorial regions snow is unknown at the ocean level, and in all latitudes less than thirty-five degrees it is rare; but it is found in all latitudes in the higher regions of the atmosphere. Flakes of snow are perfectly-formed collections of crystals, delicate in their structure, and regular in their measurement; they are understood to belong to the hexagonal system of crystals. The minute crystals exhibit an endless diversity of regular and beautiful forms, which are doubtless influenced by the temperature and density of the atmosphere. Snow is often found on Mount Lebanon several feet thick; and in Jerusalem snow often falls in January and February to the depth of a foot or more, but does not usually lie long. (Ex. iv. 6; Num. xii. 10; Job ix. 30; 2 Sam. xxiii. 20; 2 Kings v. 27; Ps. li. 7; Isa. i. 18; Prov. xxv. 13.) The substance which has received the name of red snow, which has been observed by Ross, Parry, and others, in the Arctic regions, is a very minute red or crimson coloured plant, sometimes called the palmetto incarnis. This microscopic plant, which, in its primitive state is said to be red, and afterwards becomes green, finds nourishment on the surface of the snow within the limits of perpetual congelation; it is also found covering long patches of snow in other Alpine districts.

SNO—tanhishor, or destroyer. A king of Egypt, with whom Hosesa, the last king of Israel, attempted to negotiate a defensive alliance against Shalmaneser, king of Assyria. (2 Kings xvii. 4.) So is generally identified with Sebecos or Serekos, the second king of Manetho’s twenty-fifth dynasty, i.e. the Ethiopian, in upper Egypt. His name on the ancient Egyptian monuments is written Shabak, also read Shabaka, and Sevek. This monarch was the predecessor of Tirhakah; and reigned twelve, some say fourteen years. The name Sabakor Serek also denotes an Egyptian deity, the same as the Chronos or Saturn of the Greeks, represented with the head of a crocodile.—See Sea

SOAP. The Hebrew word borith, rendered “sope,” (Jer. ii. 22; Mal. iii. 2,) designates a vegetable alkali, an impure carbonate of potash, or barilla; obtained from the ashes of various plants, usually from those growing on the sea-shore. The ancients made use of this vegetable alkali, along with oil, for washing and scouring garments, instead of soap. It was also used in the manufacture of glass; and for refining metals. The mineral alkali niter or natron, i.e. carbonate of soda, was also used as soap for washing linen; and combined with oil, it makes a harder and firmer soap than the vegetable alkali. It is still used for soap in the East.—See Nitre.

SOCHO.—See Socho.

SOCHOH=branches. 1. A city in the plain of Judah; (Josh. xv. 35;) also written “Shochoh;” (1 Sam xviii. 1;) “Socho;” (1 Chron. iv. 18;) “Shoco;” (1 Chron. xi. 7;) and “Shocho.” (2 Chron. xxviii. 18.) The ruins of Shureikeh mark the Socho of the plain of Judah. 2. A city in the mountains of Judah; (Josh. xv. 48;) also represented by a place called Shureikeh.

SOCHI=confident of Jehovah. A prince of the tribe of Zebulun. (Num. xiii. 10)

SODOM=foul, vineyard, or perhaps burning, conflagration. A city of the Pentapolis, in the vale of Sidon, near the south end of the Dead Sea. (Gen. x. 19; xviii. 16—22; xix. 23—29; 1 Kings xiv. 24; Isa. i. 9; Ezek. xvi. 46; Deut. xxxii. 32; Matt. x. 15; xi. 23, 24; 2 Pet. ii. 6, 8; Jude 7.) The fertile plain, where Sodom was situated, “was well watered like the land of Egypt.” (Gen. xiii. 10.) In addition to the lake which then existed, the plain abounded with “slime pits,” i.e. wells of bitumen or asphaltum. It is not improbable, that in the catastrophe which engulfed the doomed cities, on account of the almost universal corruption of its inhabitants, the bitumen was kindled by lightning—“fire from the Lord, out of heaven”—attended with volcanic action, by which the plain was submerged, and the sea rushing in, received a permanent enlargement of its basin. (Gen. xix. 24, 28.) Even now the plain exhibits frequent traces of volcanic action. (Gen. xiv. 10.) The subsequent barrenness of the remaining portion of the plain is readily accounted for by the presence of such masses of fossil salt, which perhaps were brought to light only at the same time. Mons. De Sauley recently imagined that he had found the ruins of Sodom on the eastern shore of the Dead sea, near its south-western angle, at the northern extremity of Jebel Usdum—Mountain of Sodom. However, Lieut. Van De Velde has shown, that there are no such ruins on the west side of the Dead sea; and that De Sauley’s vivid imagination had actually transformed the rows of large stones, which mark the course of winter torrents, into the ruins of the ancient city. At the same time, the credulousness of De Sauley seems to have been imposed on by his Arab guides. Undoubtedly the doomed cities were submerged in what is now the shallow southern bay, or that portion of the sea lying south of the peninsula. And, as the houses of the doomed city were probably built of mud, and of other materials equally frail, it can scarcely be expected that the ruins, which sleep in their ashes at unknown depths, will ever be discovered.

SOLDIERS.—See ARMIES, and WAR.

SOLomon. The son of David by Bathsheba, and the third king of the Hebrew nation. He ascended the throne c. 1016. (2 Sam. xii. 24; 1 Chron. xxii. 9; Matt. i. 6; 1 Kings ii. 12.) He was also called Jedidiah=friend of Jehovah. (2 Sam. xii. 1, 6; xxiv. 25; 1 Kings iv. 29, 30; vii. 51; x. 1; xi. 41—43; 2 Chron. ix. 1—31.) About six months before his death, David voluntarily resigned the government to Solomon, giving him at the same time a solemn charge respecting the administration of it. (1 Kings i. 53; ii. 1—11.) Solomon was celebrated throughout the world for his wealth, splendour, and wisdom. Through the conquests of David, the arms of the Hebrews were feared by the neighbouring nations, and consequently the reign of Solomon was peaceable. The great event of his reign, however, was the erection of the temple at Jerusalem. (1 Kings v. 1—18.) Solomon also turned his attention to naval affairs; and for the purposes of trade in the Arabian and Indian seas, he established a navy of ships at the port of Ezion Geber, on the Red sea. (1 Kings ix. 26—28.) Jerusalem, the capital of his vast dominions, became renowned for wealth and splendour. (Matt. vi. 29; xii. 42; Acts vii. 47.) But in the midst of all this splendour, Solomon—the viceroy of Jehovah—fell short of the virtues of his father. His arbitrary exercise of the royal power, his numerous harem, the introduction of cavalry, the expenditure of the royal house, and his toleration of idolatry in the land of Jehovah, show that Solomon, as he grew older, conformed himself less to the theocracy of the Hebrew State. (1 Sam. viii. 9—18; 1 Kings xi. 1—11, xii. 1—4.) Hence the prosperity of his reign was interrupted by disquiets in Edom and Syria; and he was foretold of the revolt of the ten tribes from the kingdom of his heirs. Solomon died in the year B.C. 975, after a reign of forty years; and, notwithstanding his glory, was little lamented. (1 Kings xi. 11—43.) Solomon is said to have written three thousand Proverbs, and a thousand and five Songs; also, a work on Natural History. (2 Kings iv. 32, 33.) Some of his Proverbs and Songs probably exist in the Book of Proverbs, in Solomon's Song, and in the Psalms. The Acts of Solomon appears to have been a copious history of his reign. (1 Kings xi. 41; 2 Chron. ix. 29.)

SONG.—See Psalms.

SONG OF SOLOMON. The Hebrews name this book Song of Songs, i.e. the Most Excellent Song. (Sol. Song. i. 1.) And by theological writers it is often called Canticles or Songs. Most students of Hebrew literature ascribe this beautiful poem to Solomon the King, nearly as far back as 1000 B.C.; hence it is several centuries anterior to Hesiod or Homer. (Sol. Song i. 1.) The objections which have been made against this book, in order to exclude it from the canon of the old Testament, are wholly arbitrary; inasmuch as the Jews, without exception, regarded it as a sacred book; and it was included by them in the sacred canon whenever the same was completed. It is recognised as a part of the Hebrew canon by Josephus, by the authors of the Jewish Talmud, and the Targum, and by all the early Christian writers. One thing seems quite clear, that when this book was inserted in the canon it was regarded as of a religious cast. The literal costume of the book is indeed that of a marriage song; but the more sober critics, with all the Jewish writers from the earliest times, as well as most Christian writers, uniformly give to the poem an allegorical interpretation. Its strains, so imbued with Orientalism, will not be objected to on the ground of indelicacy, when understood as describing, not common earthly love, but as symbolising the love of Jehovah towards His people, and His people's love towards Him. Throughout the book two characters are represented: the one a king named "Shelomoh"—the Peaceful; the other a female named "Shulamith"—the Peaceful, who from a rustic shepherdess becomes a queen. (Sol. Song i. 6; iii. 11; vi. 13; viii. 12.) The spiritual character of the representations will give the careful reader no difficulty, inasmuch as he knows that the same sort of sentiment and imagery frequently occur in other portions of the Scriptures. Frequently does Jehovah call Himself "the husband" of the Hebrew people, and that people "His bride," espoused to Him while young in the wilderness. (Isa. liv. 5—8; lix. 4, 5; Jer. ii. 2, 3.) The Hebrews are frequently represented as incurring the guilt of adultery, in forsaking Jehovah to whom they were affianced, and seeking after idols. (Ex. xxxiv. 15, 16; Ps. lxxiii. 27; Ezek. vi. 9; xvi. 1—63; xxiii. 1—49; Isa. i. 1.) So also in Ps. xlv. 1—17, the Mediator, the King of Zion, is presented in the attitude of a husband to the church. In the new Testament this imagery is very familiar. (Matt. ix. 15; John iii. 29; 2 Cor. xi. 2; Eph. v. 22—32; Rev. xix. 7; xxxi. 2.) Thus, in harmony with other portions of the inspired volume, this remarkable poem expresses the warm and earnest desire of the souls of the faithful after God, in language borrowed from that which characterises chaste affection between the sexes. It is the universal custom in the Oriental world, and always has been, to represent spiritual subjects under these peculiar representations. They abound not only in the Scriptures, but in the literature of the Hindoos, the Persians, the Turks, and the Arabians; yet with the understanding, in all cases, that the personages are mere allegorical characters—mere personifications of religious affection. And Mr. Lane, in his "Modern Egyptians," has give specimens of the religious songs of the Muslims, as sung by them in their most sublimated devotions, and on occasions the most solemn. They generally allude to Muhammed as the object of love and praise. Mr. Lane also observes, "Finding that songs of this description are extremely numerous, and almost the only poems sung at Zikr; that they are composed for this purpose, and intended only to have a spiritual sense, though certainly not understood in such a sense by the generality of the vulgar; I cannot entertain any doubt as to the design of Solomon’s Song." If the Oriental Muslims, through the force of education, appropriate to themselves religious nourishment from such poetic elements, why may not the people of Jehovah, who are redeemed by the blood of Christ, even in Occidental lands, derive religious nourishment from this inspired poem, which represents the mutual love of the Redeemer and His people. The spiritual exegesis which applies the mellow and glowing language of this poem to the converse of the soul with God, and the delight of communion with Him, will also apply it to the entire church, inasmuch as Christ’s love to His "spouse"—the church—belongs severally, as well as conjointly, to all His faithful people, whether in Hebrew or Christian times.

SON. Beside the ordinary signification, the Hebrews employed this term to designate descendant, however remote; so the Messiah is called "the son of David." (Ps. cxxxii. 11; Matt. i. 1; Luke iii. 28, 31.) So also in the plural, "sons" or "children," i.e. descendants of the prophets; (Acts iii. 25;) sons or children of Israel, i.e. Israelites. (Gen. xlii. 8; Ex. i. 1; Matt. xxvii. 9.) A disciple, or follower of any one is called a son; as the sons, i.e. disciples of the prophets; (1 Kings xx. 35; 2 Kings ii. 3—7; Am. vii. 14;) also a spiritual child or son. (1 Pet. v. 13; Heb. xii. 5.) A person connected with, partaking of, or exposed to anything, is called a son, as sons of the East, i.e. the Arabians; (Job i. 3, margin;) sons of the bridal chamber, i.e. bridesmen; (Luke v. 34;) sons of the kingdom, i.e. subjects of the kingdom; (Matt. viii. 12;) sons of the wicked one, i.e. subjects of Satan; (Matt. xiii. 38;) sons of thunder, i.e. ferd, impetuous; (Mark iii. 17;) sons of the day, or of light, i.e. enlightened with true knowledge; (1 Thes. v. 5; John xii. 36; Luke xvi. 8;) sons of this world, i.e. devoted to this world, disobedient to Divine law. (Luke xvi. 8; xx. 34; Eph. ii. 2; v. 6; Col. iii. 6.) Sons of the resurrection, i.e. partakers of the future life; (Luke xx. 36;) sons of the mighty, i.e. mighty men, heroes; (Ps. xxxix. 1, margin;) sons of Belial, i.e. wicked men; (Judg. xix. 22;) sons of pride, i.e. wild beasts; (Job xlii. 34;) son of death, i.e. condemned to death; (1 Sam. xx. 31; 2 Sam. xii. 5, margin;) son of perdition, i.e. devoted to destruction; (John xvii. 12;) son or child of hell, i.e. deserving everlasting punishment. (Matt. xxiii. 13.) That is also called son of anything which is like, or proceeds from anything, as sons of the burning coal, i.e. sparks; (Job v. 7, margin;) sons of the floor, i.e. threshed corn; (Isa. xxxi. 10;) sons of oil, i.e. the anointed; (Zech. iv. 14, margin;) son of oil, i.e. fat, fertile. (Isa. v. 1, margin.)

SON OF GOD. One who derives his human nature directly from God, and not by ordinary generation; hence the appellation is applied to Jesus the Messiah, as being God incarnate, the God-man, in whom "dwell all the fulness of the Godhead bodily." (Col. i. 19; ii. 9; John i. 1, 14.) He is called "Son," in the way of anticipation, by the ancient prophets; (Ps. ii. 7; lxxxix. 27;) and by the angel, when the miraculous generation by the Holy Spirit was announced to Mary. "He shall be called the Son of the Highest"—"that Holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God." (Luke i. 32, 35.) He is called "His own Son," the "Beloved Son," and the "Only Begotten Son;” also the “First Begotten,” “First Born,” i.e. the “Heir,” or Lord. (Heb. i. 3; John i. 18; Matt. xi. 27; 2 Cor. iv. 4; Col. i. 15.) The appellation “Son of God,” is never applied to Christ considered simply as Divine, or as the Logos or eternal Word; as it properly designates the God-man, i.e. the complex person of the Messiah. The apparent exceptions to this view merely show that the term “Son” became, by usage, a kind of proper name, which might be applied either to His human or Divine nature, as well as to His complex person,—just as we say, the “Son of God was crucified,” and “God sent His Son.” If we affirm, with some, that Christ is called “Son,” in order to designate His originating from the Father in His Divine nature, how shall we construe such texts as the following:—“What if ye shall call the Son of man ascended up where He was before?” (John vi. 52.) “No man hath ascended to heaven, but He that came down from heaven, even the Son of man who is in heaven.” (John iii. 13.) These texts do not prove that the human nature of Christ had a prior existence in heaven; neither will the other texts cited prove that the appellation, “Son of God,” designates the Divine nature of Christ as begotten of God. If the Divine nature of Christ be derived or begotten, then it must follow, that as God He is neither self-existent nor independent. It is of no avail to say that His generation is eternal, and that the method of it is mysterious, inasmuch as the word generation, let the manner of the thing be what it may, necessarily implies dependence, and therefore negates the idea of self-existence. If the Son, in His Divine nature—the Logos or Word—be derived or begotten, how, then, is He not a different—yes, an immeasurably different—being from the Father? The doctrine of the eternal generation of the Son, like that of the procession of the Spirit, took its rise, not from the Scriptures, but from the emanation philosophy of the East. And, is it not evident that these generation and procession doctrines destroy the idea of full and proper equality in the personal manifestations of the Godhead? inasmuch as they ascribe two capacities or faculties to the Father—that of generation and causing procession—which the Son and the Spirit have not. They who attend more to the Scriptures than to the theology of the ancient Fathers, will not regard Christ as a secondary or derived God, but as “He who is God over all, blessed for ever.” The Logos, “who created all things,” “by whom all things were created in heaven and earth,” bears at least the highest stamp of Divinity undervi ed. Who is self-existent if not the Creator? And who is God Supreme, if not “He who is God over all?” (John i. 3; Col. i. 16.) As the Heir and Lord of all things, unto whom all judgment is committed, high, yea, the highest honours should be paid to the Son as to the Father. (Heb. i. 2, 3, 8; Col. i. 15; John v. 22, 28; xiv. 9, 10; Phil. ii. 9—11.) In Rom. i. 3 Christ is declared to be the Son of God, agreeably to the decree in the Holy Scriptures; (Ps. ii. 7;) and Son of God endowed with power—to bring about the new creation—which He displayed by sending the Spirit in an extraordinary manner after His resurrection and glorious exaltation.—See SPIRIT, HOLY.

SON OF MAN.—See SON OF GOD.

SONS OF GOD. An appellation given to angels, as the ministers of God; (Job i. 6; ii. 1; xxxviii. 7; Dan. iii. 25;) also Adam, as proceeding directly from the hand of the Creator, is called the “son of God.” (Luke iii. 38.) The Hebrews, though often ungrateful, are called the sons of God, as His chosen people; (Ex. iv. 22, 28; Hos. xi. 1; Isa. i. 2; xxx. 1; xiii. 6;) so also, kings and magistrates, as viceroyed of God on earth. (2 Sam. vii. 14; Ps. lxxxvii. 6.) The appellation is also given to the true worshippers of God; (Gen. vii. 2, 14;) to those who are regenerated, to Christians.

(Song xii. 12; Rom. viii. 15, 17; Gal.
iii. 26, 2 Cor. xvi. 18; 1 John iii. 1, 2;
Rev. xxi. 7.)

SOOTHSEYER.—See DIVINATION.

SOP.—See MEALS.

SOPAEMON = father saved, a Christian at Berea. (Acts xx. 4.)

SOPHERETH = scribe. One of Solomon's servants. (Ex. ii. 55;
Neh. vii. 57.)

SORCERY.—See DIVINATION.

SOREK = a vine. A valley, probable so called from its choice vineyards, which, according to Von Ran-mer, has its outlet at Askelon. (Judg. xxvi. 4.)

SOSIPATER = father saved. A kinsman of Paul. (Rom. xvi. 21.)

SOSTHENES = strong son-in-law. A chief of the synagogue at Corinth; (Acts xvii. 17.) probably the same person mentioned in 1 Cor. i. 1.

SOTA = dierever. One of Soloman's servants. (Ex. ii. 54; Neh.
vi. 57.)

SOUL. The human spirit or mind.
The Hebrew word nepeh and the Greek word psyche, frequently rendered "soul," (Num. ii. 6; xxii. 5;
Job. vi. 7; x. 1; Ps. xxxi. 9; Prov.
vi. 30; x. 3; xxvii. 7; Isa. xxix. 8;
L. iv. 2; lix. 10; Matt. xvi. 26; Luke.
xi. 20; 1 Thess. v. 23,) properly designate the vital breath, i.e. the animal life, which is merely the union of the soul with the body; and are correctly rendered "life" elsewhere. (Ex. iv.
19; 1 Sam. xx. 1; Matt. iii. 20; vi.
25; xx. 28; Mark iii. 4; Luke xii.
22, 23; Rom. xi. 3.) The Hebrew word ruakh, and the Greek word pneuma, are occasionally rendered "spirit," where the animal life is alone designated; (Job vi. 4; Isa.
xxxviii. 16; Eccl. iii. 21; viii. 8; xili.
7; Luke viii. 55; James ii. 26;) and are rightly rendered "breath" or "life" elsewhere. (Job xli. 10; Eccl.
iii. 19; Ezek. xxxvii. 8; Rev. xiii. 15.)
However, the Hebrew ruakh, and the Greek pneuma, also appear to be the specific terms for soul, mind, spirit—man's rational and immortal nature; rendered "spirit." (Gen. xlii. 8; Prov.
xxv. 28; Ps. xxxiv. 18; Eccl. iii. 46;
Luke xiv. 7; xxiii. 46; Acts vii. 28;
Rom. viii. 16; Gal. vi. 18; 1 Thess.
23; "ghost;" (Matt. xxi. 50; John.
xix. 30;) and "mind." (Gen. xxi. 1.)
So also, the Hebrew nepeh, and Greek psyche, are frequently used in the same sense, and are rightly rendered "soul." (Deut. iv. 29; xii.
10; Isa. xiii. 1; Ps. lxxix. 4; Prov.
vi. 30; Job xxvii. 7; Jer. v. 9; Ex.
xxiii. 9, margin; Matt. x. 28; "Con-
i. 23; Heb. vi. 19; x. 39; xiii. 21; James i. 21; 1 Pet. i. 9.) The phrase
"every soul" is a Hebraism for every person, like the Anglicism "everybody." (Gen. xii. 5; xli. 26; Rom. xiii. 1.) Soul is also used for a living being, a creature. (Rev. xvii. 23.)
The Greek term nous is frequently used to designate the intellectual principle, "the mind." (Rom. i. 28; xi.
3; Ex. iv. 23; 1 Tim. vi. 5.) The soul or mind is rightly regarded as a simple indivisible essence endowed with certain properties, susceptible of various affections, etc., which, existing successively as momentary states of the mind, constitute all the phe-omena of thought and feeling. As the rational and immortal principle is a simple unity, what are sometimes called its faculties or powers, are not to be distinguished from the mind itself, inasmuch as they are the mind's capabilities existing in various states of thought and feeling. Of this mysterious principle, the properties are only known to us by consciousness; they are obvious to none of the senses; and we have not the slightest reason to suppose that it is either solid, extended, or divisible. The mind has nothing in common with that which we call matter; we, therefore, say that it is not matter, or, in other words, it is immaterial. Though the immateriality of the soul is intimately and indissolubly connected with its immortality, yet its immortality does not originate from its imma-teriality, as an effect from a cause.
Neither is the soul necessarily and in its own nature and essence immortal. “God only hath immortality in Himself,” because He only is self-existing, and He hath communicated immortality to the soul, not by a necessity of its peculiar nature, but by His own will, and the continuance of His sustaining power. Some have supposed that there are three distinct principles in man—the material principle, which connects him with the inanimate world—the animal principle, which is common to him with the brutes—and the spiritual principle which allies him to the Deity. However, the phraseology of the Apostle, “spirit, soul, and body,” has no reference whatever to any of the old philosophies, but to enforce holiness on the entire church in all its departments, so that ministers, elders, and people might be preserved blameless. (1 Thess. v. 23.) There are only two principles in our nature—matter and mind; the latter being the seat of all sensation and thought, and the former utterly incapable of either. The only conceivable principle of animal life is the mysterious union of mind with a certain organized bodily frame. Animal life commences with the formation of this union; it is extinguished on its dissolution. It would seem that brute animals possess mind, or an immaterial principle, vastly different, though of the same spiritual essence, with that of man. Hence, we have no right to say, that when “the spirit of a beast goeth downward,” it ceases to exist. We can discover nothing like destruction in the matter of the universe as subjected to our senses. Masses are disintegrated, forms are changed, compounds are decomposed; but not an atom is annihilated. Neither have we the shadow of reason to assert that mind, the seat of intelligence, ever was or ever will be, in a single instance, destroyed.

SOUTH. The Hebrews sometimes designated the southern quarter by the word negeb=dryness; (Ex. xxvii. 9; Isa. xxi. 1; Josh. xv. 4; Ps. cxxvi. 4,) sometimes by darom=bright, sunny region; (Ezek. xl. 24; xliii. 12; Job xxxvii. 17; Eccl. i. 6,) and sometimes by teman and yamin=on the right hand, hence the south; since, in speaking of the points of the compass, they always looked towards the east. (Josh. xii. 3; xiii. 4; Num. ii. 10; Job ix. 9; Isa. xliii. 6; Ps. lxxxix. 12; Job. xxiii. 9; 1 Sam. xxiii. 19.) The “south,” as lying on the right hand of Palestine, designates Egypt; (Isa. xxx. 6; Jer. xiii. 19; Dan. xi. 5, 15, 29;) also Arabia; (Matt. xii. 42;) but in Ezek. xx. 46, 47, it designates Judaea, from its position relative to Babylon.—See East.

SOW.—See Swine.

SOWING. In Palestine seedtime commenced early in October, and extended to the middle of December. (Gen. viii. 22; xlvii. 23.) The Hebrews were forbidden to sow their fields with mingled seed. (Lev. xix. 19.) “Cast thy bread, i.e. thy breadseed, upon the waters,” probably refers, like the “sowing beside all waters,” to the mode of sowing upon a well-irrigated soil. (Isa. xxxii. 20; Eccl. xi. 1; Matt. xiii. 1—40.)

SPAIN. Hispania was the name of the Spanish peninsula, including modern Spain and Portugal, as constituting a province of the Roman empire. It was equally celebrated for the teeming productions of its soil, as for its mineral treasures. Many Jews appear to have settled in Spain; but Paul’s intention to visit this region does not seem to have been ever executed. (Rom. xv. 24, 28.) This beautiful country, “where fruits of fragrance blush on every tree,” is now withered beneath the pestilential influence of Popery.

SPAN. A Hebrew measure of length, consisting of three handbreadths, equal to half a cubit, or ten and a half inches. (Ex. xxv. 10; xxviii. 18; xxxix. 9; 1 Sam. xvii. 4.)—See Cubit.

SPARROW. The Hebrew word tzippor and the Greek struthion, properly designate any small bird, a spararoma designated spices, spicery, as myrrh, aloe, etc. (Mark vi. 1; Luke xxiii. 56; xxiv. 1; John xix. 40.) So also the Hebrew term bezamim, rendered "spices," signifies spices, aramatica diffusing fragrance. (Ex. xxv.
SPA

6; xxx. 23; xxxv. 8; 1 Kings x. 2, 10,
25; 2 Kings xx. 13; 1 Chron. ix. 29, 30; 2 Chron. ix. 1, 9, 24; xvi. 14;
xxii. 27; Sol. Song iv. 10, 14, 16;
Isa. iii. 24; xxxix. 2; Ezek. xxvii. 22.)
The word bezam rendered "spices," designates the balsam plant. (Sol.
Song v. 18; vi. 2.) The Hebrews used spices freely, as seasoning for food, and flavouring wines; (Ezek. xxiv. 10; Sol.
Song vii. 2;) for perfuming apartments; (Prov. viii. 17;) and for funereal perfumes. (2 Chron. xvi. 14.)
They were chiefly obtained from India or Arabia. (Gen. xxxviii. 23.)

SPI

SPIDER. The Hebrew word accebish, signifies a spinner, weaver, hence the spider, a well-known insect, remarkable for the thread which it spins, and with which it forms a web of curious texture, but so frail that it is exposed to be broken and destroyed by the slightest accident. (Job viii.
14, 15; Isa. lxi. 5, 6.) The Hebrew word sememith, rendered "spider," designates a species of spotted lizard.
(Prov. xxx. 28.)

SPIKES. The Hebrew word necoth, rendered "spices," (Gen. xxxvii. 25; xiii. 11,) is used for aromatic powder;
perhaps fragacanth gum, obtained from a low shrub, with strong and wide-spreading branches, which grows in Lebanon, in the isle of Canda, and in southern Europe. It was extensively used as a medicine. The Hebraic words beith necothe rendered "a house of precious things," margin
"spicery," signifies treasurie, stor-house. (2 Kings xx. 13; Isa. xxxix.
2.) The Hebrew term sansim, rendered "spices," (Ex. xxx. 34,) and
"sweet" in connection with incense, (Ex. xxx. 7; xxxix. 38,) margin
"spices." (Lev. iv. 7; Num. iv. 16.)
tifies drugs, aromatic, such as mon, cassia, myrrh, frankincense, onycha, and galbanum. (Ex.
28, 34.)

So also the Greek word

52
SPI

SPIRIT.—See Weaving.

SPIRIT. The Hebrew word ruakh, and the Greek word pneuma, generally rendered “spirit,” primarily signify breath, a breeze, hence, the breath of life; (Gen. viii. 1; Job vi. 4; John iii. 8;) and are also used to designate the soul or spirit, both of man and beast; (Job xxvii. 3; Rom. viii. 16; Eccl. iii. 19, 21;) also of the human soul or spirit, after its departure from the body, and as existing in a separate state, in the sense of spirit, apparition, spectre. (Job iv. 15—21; Luke xxiv. 37, 39; Matt. xiv. 26; Acts xxiii. 8, 9.) The same terms are used of the holy angels, called “ministering spirits;” (Heb. i. 14; comp. Rev. i. 4;) also “evil spirits,” demons. (1 Sam. xvi. 14, 16; xvii. 9, 10; 1 Kings xxii. 21; Zech. xiii. 2; Matt. x. 1; Mark i. 23; Luke iv. 36; Acts v. 16.) The term spirit is also used in the sense of disposition, mode of feeling, or temperament. (Prov. xxv. 28; Eccl. vii. 9; Hos. vi. 12; Num. v. 14; Rom. viii. 15; xi. 8; Gal. vi. 1; Eph. i. 17; 1 John iv. 6.)

—See Soul.

SPIRIT, HOLY. The Hebrew word ruakh, and the Greek word pneuma, when applied to the Deity, are properly rendered “Spirit,” as He is the absolute, uncreated, and only pure Spirit. (Gen. i. 2; John iv. 24.) The term “Spirit” is applied to each of the personal manifestations of the Deity: 1. God is a Spirit; He pervades the world; (Ps. cxxxix. 7—17; Jer. xxxiii. 24; 1 Kings viii. 27; John iii. 8;) He animates and sustains life; (Gen. i. 2; Job xxvi. 13; xviii. 8; xxxiii. 4; Ps. civ. 29, 30;) and governs the universe. (Isa. xxxix. 12, 28; lxiii. 14; Neh. ix. 20.) This doctrine of the Divine omnipresence differs alike from what is called Pantheism, and from the Platonic notion of the soul of the world; inasmuch as it makes the Eternal Spirit the immanent Divine casualty, working by what are called the laws of nature, which are merely the expressions of His will. 2. Christ, in His Divine nature, is called the “Spirit.” (1 Cor. xv. 45; 1 Tim. iii. 16; 1 Pet. iii. 18; Heb. xii. 14; 2 Cor. iii. 17.) 3. So also the Holy Ghost or Holy Spirit is called “the Spirit,” the “Spirit of God,” and “the Spirit of Christ;” (John xiv. 26; xv. 26; 1 Cor. iii. 4; Rom. viii. 9;) and is represented as in intimate union with the Father and the Son. (Matt. xxviii. 19; 1 Cor. ii. 10; Eph. ii. 18; 2 Cor. xiii. 14; Rom. viii. 26; Acts i. 16; v. 3.) The Holy Spirit, who is truly God, is the author of all moral purity; of inspiration; (2 Pet. i. 21;) and the miraculous spiritual gifts. (1 Cor. xii. 1—31.) He is also the grand and proximate Agent in the regeneration and sanctification of men. The passage in John xv. 26, “which proceedeth from the Father,” refers to the official character and mission of the Holy Spirit in His different operations, and not to His mode of subsistence or His relationship to the Father and the Son. Hence, it would seem that the doctrine of the procession of the Spirit, like the kindred one on the eternal generation of the Son, can be regarded as little better than a gratuitous and unwarranted hypothesis; and the controversy which divided the Eastern and Western churches is not only unimportant but absurd.—See Son.

SPIRITUAL BODY.—See Resurrection.

SPIT. Among the Hebrews, when a man refusing to comply with the Levirate law, the widow might not only lose his shoe from off his foot, but also, as an expression of contempt, “spit in his face.” (Deut. xxv. 9.) Also, as an expression of rudeness and violence, spitting in one’s face was not uncommon. (Matt. xxvi. 67; Mark xiv. 65; 1 Kings xxii. 24; Isa. lvi. 4; Ezek. xxv. 6.)

SPOIL. The prey or booty taken in war, according to the Mosaic law, was to be equally divided between those who were in the battle and those who were in the camp, whatever disparity there might be in the number of each party. The law further required, that out of that part of the spoil which was assigned to the fighting men, for every five hundred men, oxen, asses, sheep, etc., one should be given to the high priest, as an offering to the Lord. And out of the other moiety assigned to the people, they were to give for every fifty men, oxen, asses, sheep, etc., one to the Levites. (Num. xxxi. 26–31.)

SPONGE. A submarine plant, composed of fibres singularly interwoven, and surrounded by thin membranes arranged in a cellular form. It grows in the Mediterranean, and many other seas, at considerable depths; and adheres in large masses to rocks and stones, sometimes to large shells, and is either round, flat, or hollow like a funnel. (Matt. xxvii. 48.)

SPRING.—See SEASONS.

SPRINGS.—See FOUNTAIN.

SPRINKLING.—See Atonement and HEAVEN.

STACHYS = an ear of grain. A Christian at Rome. (Rom. xvi. 9.)

STACTE. The Hebrew word, nataf, rendered "stacte," (Ex. xxx. 34,) properly designates a species of storax gum; which was one of the ingredients from which the perfume used for fumigations in the sanctuary was prepared.—See POPLAR.

STANDARD. The Hebrews undoubtedly had banners or standards, as rallying signals; but whether they were adorned, as some of the Rabbins suppose, with figures derived from comparisons used by Jacob in his final prophetic blessing, may be doubted. (Gen. xlix. 1–28.) Sir Thomas Brown observes, "the scutcheons of the tribes, as determined by these ingenious triflers, do not in every instance correspond with any possible interpretation of Jacob's prophecy, nor with the analogous prophecy of Moses, when about to die." Still it is not unlikely that the banner of the tribe of Judah was a lion, with the motto, "Who shall rouse him up?" This may have been an interesting prediction of the appearance and universal triumph of Christ, who is called "the lion of the tribe of Judah." (Hos. v. 14; Rev. v. 5.) The following Hebrew words are used to designate standard, ensign, etc.:

1. Degel, rendered "standard;" (Num. i. 52; ii. 2, 3, 10, 18, 25;) and "banner;" (Sol. Song ii. 4; vi. 4, 10;) designating a standard of a larger kind, serving for three of the tribes together, or one of the four general divisions.—2. Oth, rendered "ensign;" (Num. ii. 2;) and "standard;" (Num. ii. 34;) designating a smaller kind of standard, belonging to each single tribe, and perhaps to the separate classes of families.—3. Nes, rendered "banner;" (Ps. lx. 4; Isa. xiii. 2;) "ensign;" (Isa. v. 26; xi. 10, 12; xviii. 3; xxx. 17;) "standard;" (Isa. xlix. 22; lviii. 12; Jer. iv. 6, 21; li. 12, 27;) and "pole," (Num. xxxi. 8, 3;) designates a long pole, with a flag on the top, fixed in the earth, or erected on a lofty mountain as a signal of rendezvous. This term is also rendered "sail," properly the flag of a ship. (Ezek. xxvii. 7.)—4. Massaith, rendered "a sign of fire," perhaps a fire signal on a mountain, or an iron grate filled with fire and elevated on a pole. (Jer. vi. 1.) There appear to be several allusions in the Scriptures to the standards of ancient nations; a proper knowledge of their symbology would contribute to our understanding of several passages. In Daniel the symbols on several standards are probably referred to, instead of the names of the nations; as the "ram with two horns" designated the Medo-Persian kingdom; the he-goat with one horn that of Alexander; the goat with four horns the kingdoms of Alexander's successors; and the goat with the little horn the kingdom of Antiochus Epiphanes. (Dan. viii. 3—25; compare Dan. vii. 3—27.) So also the Roman standard, which was an eagle, is frequently referred to. (Deut. xxviii. 49; Matt. xxiv. 28; Luke xvii. 37.) We give a figure of an Assyrian, an Egyptian, and a Roman standard, from the ancient monuments. On the latter are the letters S. P. Q. R., signifying the "Senate and the People of Rome."

STAR. Under the name of stars, the Hebrews comprehended all constellations, planets, and heavenly bodies, with the exception of the sun and moon. (Ps. viii. 3; xix. 1.) Astronomers tell us that the nearest of the fixed stars is distant from us twenty millions of millions of miles; and to give us some idea of that mighty interval, they tell us that a cannon ball, flying at the rate of five hundred miles an hour, would not reach that star in less than four millions five hundred and ninety thousand years. They tell us further, what the reason of every man must dispose him to admit, that every fixed star is probably a sun, irradiating its own system of worlds; and that their instruments enable them to compute not less than one hundred millions of those radiant orbs; and even that number may form but an insignificant fraction of the whole. Jehovah is represented as taking a survey of the stars, as a king taking a review of his army, and knowing the name of every one of his soldiers. (Ps. cxlvii. 4.) The stars were frequently employed as symbols of persons in eminent stations. Thus "the star out of Jacob" designates king David; (Num. xxiv. 17;) the seven patriarchs are called "stars;" (Gen. xxxvii. 9;) so also "stars" denote the princes, rulers, and nobles of the earth. (Dan. viii. 10; Rev. vi. 13; viii. 10, 11; ix. 1; xii. 6—55

4.) Christ is called the "Morning Star," as He introduced the light of the gospel day. (Rev. xxii. 16.)

STAR IN THE EAST. The star which was seen by the Magi in their own country, as an indication of the birth of the Messiah, seems to have been a remarkable star which appeared for a transient period. Towards the end of the year 1603, a phenomenon in the starry heavens led the celebrated astronomer Kepler to make some astronomical and chronological investigations in respect to the year of Christ's birth. In that year, on the 17th of December, a conjunction of the two planets Jupiter and Saturn occurred. In March, 1604, Mars approached, and in the autumn a new fixed star, which stood in the vicinity of those two planets in the eastern foot of Serpens, and which, though at first a star of the first magnitude, and shining very brightly, gradually faded, till in October, 1605, it was hardly to be seen, and finally, in March, 1606, it entirely disappeared. Aware that the conjunction of the planets Jupiter and Saturn occurs about every twenty years, Kepler was led to inquire, whether such a conjunction might not have occurred shortly before the Dionysian era, and thus afford a basis for an historical calculation in respect to the birth of Jesus. He attained the remarkable result, that this conjunction actually occurred three times in the year of Rome 747. Ideler, pursuing the theory of Kepler, has given the following results in respect to the three planetary conjunctions:—The first occurred on the 29th of May, in the 21st deg. of Pisces. Before sunrise the planets in the eastern sky were visible, and Jupiter and Saturn were only one degree apart from each other; the second on the first of October, in the 18th deg. of Pisces; and the third on the 5th of December, in the 16th deg. of Pisces. Ideler accordingly places the birth of Christ in the year 747 from the foundation of Rome. While he, however, understands by "the star" the conjunction of Jupiter and Saturn, the word "East," or, still better, "the rising," he refers to their first conjunction, which occurred in the eastern sky. So also with special reference to the conjunction of Jupiter and Saturn which then occurred, Munter, Winer, Ebrard, and others, have decided in favour of the same year as the date of Christ's birth. From the statement in Matt. i. 7, 16, it would appear that the Magi did not arrive in Jerusalem till about two years after the time at which they first saw the star of the Messiah. Indeed, the entire representation of the Evangelist leaves the impression, that the Messiah was born when the Magis first saw the "star in the East," and that he must have been at least two years old in the life-time of Herod. The Magi, guided by Divine illumination, again beheld the star, which they had seen in their own country, appearing as the sign or pledge—they journeyed not to Bethlehem, but to Nazareth, the proper home of Joseph and Mary, where they saw and worshipped the infant Messiah.—See Magi.

STATER=seight. This Greek word is the name of an Attic silver coin, equal to four drachmas; and was probably current among the Jews as equivalent to three shillings and sixpence of our money. In Matt. xvii. 27, it is translated "a piece of money." Stater was also the name of a Grecian gold coin, worth about sixteen shillings and eightpence; also of a Persian gold coin.—See Dram.

STATUTE.—See Law.

STEEL.—See Iron.

STEPHANAS=a chaplet, crown. A Christian at Corinth. (1 Cor. i. 16; xvi. 15, 17.)

STEPHEN =a chaplet, crown. One of the seven primitive deacons, and the first martyr of the Christian church. (Acts vi. 5.) Stephen's earnestness and his education rendered him a valuable accession to the early church; and, as the new doctrines seemed to take a more hostile turn against the Pharisaic theology, the faith was so excited, that they suborned false witnesses against him, and dragged him before the Sanhedrin as a blasphemer. After a noble defence, he was dragged without the city, where, serene and unruffled, he surrendered his life. (Acts vi. 11-15, vii. 1-60; viii. 2; xi. 19; xxii. 20.)

STEWARD. One who superintends the affairs of another. (Gen. xv. 2; xxiv. 2.) Great confidence was reposed in those who held the office of steward; hence Christian ministers are described as the "stewards of God over His church and family;" (Tit. i. 7;) and believers are also spoken of as "good stewards of the manifold grace of God." (1 Pet. iv. 10; 1 Cor. iv. 1, 2.)

STOCKS. A wooden instrument in the form of a frame or block, in which the feet of the prisoner were inclosed, not only for greater security, but also for punishment. (Job xxxi. 27; xxxiii. 11.) The stocks were probably of Egyptian origin; they were also used by the Greeks and Romans. (Acts xvi. 24.)

STOICS =men of the porch. A sect of heathen philosophers, founded by Zeno, a native of Cyprus, who died about B. C. 264. Some of the principles which Zeno delivered in the portico or portico in Athens, had undoubtedly been taught by Socrates and Plato before him. The Stoics, according to Cudworth and Mosheim, acknowledged one independent and self-existent Deity or fiery nature, eternal, wise, and provident. He possessed, however, little of the greatness and majesty of Deity; inasmuch as he was wholly immersed in matter, and could not possibly be separated from it; being also diffused and extended throughout the whole universe. Other gods they considered merely parts of the one supreme deity diffused in various bodies, and were ultimately to return to the source whence they emanated. Though the Stoics denied the immortality of souls, they considered the minds of some men to possess so much constancy, that when freed from the bodies, they did not return to the common fountain and source of souls till the consummation of the world. The Stoics also discarded eternal rewards and punishments; and as little did their doctrine admit of rewards and punishments in the present life. They maintained that the greatest happiness consists in virtue, and the greatest misery in vice; hence the virtuous man was perfectly happy, and all external things were to him indifferent. They maintained that all things are subject to a stern and irresistible fatality. Stoicism necessarily divested men of their passions and affections; and its admirers affected the same stiffness, patience, apathy, austerity, and insensibility as the Pharisees, whom they pretty much resembled. (Acts xvii. 18.)

STONE. Elegant structures were generally built of hewn and squared stones. (1 Kings v. 17; Am. v. 11; Mark xiii. 1, 2.) Sometimes cairns or heaps of stones were raised to preserve the recollection of some signal event. (Josh. iv. 5, 7; vii. 26; 2 Sam. xviii. 17; Zech. ix. 16.) The term “stone” is also used tropically; hence Christ is called “the foundation stone,” or “chief corner stone laid in Zion,” i.e. God incarnate in Zion. (Isa. xxviii. 16; Ps. cviii. 22; Matt. xxi. 42; Acts iv. 11; Rom. ix. 33; Eph. ii. 20; 1 Pet. ii. 6.) The church is termed “the stone cut out of the mountain;” (Dan. ii. 35, 45;) believers are called “lively stones,” and “God’s building,” built up compactly upon Christ an holy temple in the Lord. (1 Cor. iii. 9—17; Eph. xx. 22.) The “white stone,” given to the Christian conqueror, (Rev. ii. 17,) does not refer to the usage among the Greeks, when a person was tried on the ground of any accusation, by throwing stones or balls together into an urn, whence they were drawn and counted; thus absolving by the number of white ones, and condemning by the black ones. The reference is undoubtedly to Hebrew sources. The “white stone,” with the mystic inscription, which no one but the recipient could read, is given to the victor himself. On the front of the mitre or turban worn by the Hebrew high priest was a plate of gold, with the inscription “Sacred to Jehovah.” (Ex. xxviii. 36.) The name Jehovah was the incommunicable and secret name, which could be pronounced only by the high priest, and was known, as the Jews say, only to him. Victors in the Christian struggle are called “kings and priests unto God.” (Rev. i. 6; v. 10; xx. 6; 1 Pet. ii. 5.) As a token of dignity, instead of a plate of gold in their mitre—externally—they have a white stone, a pellucid or splendid gem, with an inscription equivalent to Sacred to Jehovah, (Rev. i. 4,) a new name, doubtless some name of the Saviour, perhaps Sacred to the Logos or Word, i.e. the incarnate Jehovah. (John i. 1; xix. 13.) The whole probably symbolizes the assurance of the faithful by the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. This is the pellucid gem, the seal of the living God, having the inscription of Divine acceptance which no one can read but he who possesses it. See SEAL.

STONING. The capital punishment generally inflicted on notorious criminals among the Hebrews and among the Egyptians. (Ex. viii. 26; xvii. 4; Lev. xx. 2—27; xxv. 14—23; Num. xiv. 10; Josh. vii. 25.) The culprit was led out of the city to the place of execution; and the witnesses against him were required to commence the work of death. He was stoned in one of two ways; either stones were thrown upon him till he died; or he was thrown headlong down a steep place, and large stones rolled upon his body. (Acts vii. 58, 59; xiv. 19; Matt. xxi. 44.)

STORE-HOUSES. According to Gen. xii. 48, 49, Joseph “built storehouses” in Egypt, in which he laid up the superabundance of corn against the years of dearth. From the monuments we learn that such ancient granaries consisted of a double range of structures resembling ovens, built of brick, with an opening at the top and a shutter in the side. A flight of stairs gave access to the top of these receptacles, into which the grain, measured and noted, was poured till they were full. The mode of emptying them was to open the shutter in the side.

STORK. The Hebrew name of this bird of passage, khāsidah—"the pious," was supposed to indicate the affection and tenderness it manifested towards its parents and its young. The stork is of the same species as the crane; it feeds on insects, frogs, and serpents, which was probably the reason of its being classed by Moses among the unclean birds; but from the same cause it was regarded as a sacred bird in all marshy countries. (Jer. viii. 7; Lev. xi. 19; Deut. xiv. 18; Zech. v. 9; Ps. civ. 17; Job xxxix. 13, marg.)

STRANGER.—See Hospitality. STREET.—See Cities.

SUAIM.—See gayer. A descendant of Asher. (1 Chron. vii. 36.)

SUBURBS.—See Cities.

Succoth = booths. I. A town in the tribe of Gad, on the east of the Jordan; which originated from Jacob encamping here on his return from Mesopotamia; the slight remains are now called Nakht. (Gen. xxxiii. 17; Josh. xiii. 27; Judg. viii. 5; 1 Kings vii. 46.) The "valley of Succoth," where the city stood, is probably the broad low swell, extending from the western hills to the upper banks of the Jordan. (Ps. lx. 6; civii. 7.) 2. A station of the Hebrews, on the Egyptian side of the Red sea. (Ex. xii. 37; xiii. 20; Num. xxxiii. 5.)

Succoth-Benoth = booths of the daughters. Booths or tents in which the idolatrous females prostituted themselves, in the Babylonian manner, to Mylitta, the Assyrian Venus. (2 Kings xvii. 30.)

Suchathites = branches. A family of the Kenites. (1 Chron. ii. 55.)

Sukkiims = dwelling in booths.

An African people mentioned along with the Libyans and Ethiopians. The Septuagint and the Vulgate understand the "Troglydotes," who dwelt along the coast of Ethiopia. (2 Chron. xii. 3.)

SUMMER. In the Scriptures the spring and the seasons of harvest and heat, extending from the beginning of March to the beginning of September, thus including part of autumn, were called Summer; (Judg. iii. 20; Ps. xxxii. 4; Prov. xxvi. 1;) while part of autumn, and the seasons of seed-time and cold, extending from the beginning of September to the beginning of March, were called Winter; (Gen. viii. 22; Ps. lxxiv. 17; Jer. viii. 20; Zech. xiv. 8.) During Dr. Robinson's sojourn, from April 14th to May 6th, the thermometer ranged at sunrise from 44 deg. to 64 deg. F., and at 2 p.m. from 60 deg. to 79 deg. F.; from the 10th to the 13th of June, at Jerusalem, at sunrise a range from 65 deg. to 74 deg.; and at 2 p.m. once 86 deg., with a strong N.W. wind. Yet the air was fine and the heat not burdensome; the nights were uniformly cool, often with a heavy dew. Yet the total absence of rain soon destroys the verdure of the fields, and the only green thing which remains is the foliage of the scattered fruit-trees, and occasional vineyards and fields of millet.—See Seasons.

SUN. This luminary is the centre of our solar system, and the largest body that exists within its limits. This vast globe is about 885,000 miles in diameter; and though distant from the earth 93,000,000 miles, its light reaches the earth in eight minutes. The only motion which the sun is found to possess is that of rotation on its axis, which is performed in 25 days and 10 hours. Though the sun is the grand source of light and heat to all the planetary bodies of this system, yet it is not improbable, that it is a solid and opaque body, surrounded with luminous clouds which float in the solar atmosphere. (Gen. i. 16; xv. 17; Judg. v. 31; Eccl. i. 9, 9; Ps.
The Saviour, as the source of light and heat, i.e. of every blessing to His people, is called "a Sun." (Ps. xxxiv. 12; Mal. iv. 2; John i. 4; viii. 12.) The account of the sun and moon standing still, as recorded in Josh. x. 12—14, is not, as some have supposed, a statement contrary to the philosophy of nature. Though we are acquainted with the rotation of our globe, its periodical revolution, and the relative immobility of the sun, do we not still say "the sun rises" and "the sun sets"? The habitual language of astronomers is now, and ever will be, after all, but the language of appearances, and in close resemblance to that of the Scriptures. And we could not wish that the sacred writer had spoken to us in a more scientific language than that of Newton or La Place. Moreover if the rotatory motion of our globe was arrested for a short interval, such a phenomenon could have, mechanically, no very sensible effect upon the earth's surface. The rotation of the earth, at the equator, is 1426 feet, and at Jerusalem, 1212 feet per second. And, as the force of retardation necessary to overcome a given impulse, is in inverse proportion to the time it occupies, so if God had employed eighteen minutes to arrest, by brief and successive retardations, the rotation of our globe, the miracle would be accomplished, and the warring armies at Beth-horon would no more feel what was going on than do, at present, thousands of railroad travellers, when stopping at the assigned stations. Nor would this miracle interfere with the conditions of our orbit, inasmuch as it would not involve the slightest disturbance of the earth's progressive motion; but merely of its rotation: for according to the laws of celestial mechanism, the rotation of a planet on its axis is entirely independent of the movement which is imposed upon its centre of gravity, and which impels it in its elliptical course. Let us suppose, then, a double concussion communicated to the earth, above and below its centre, in two opposite and parallel directions; and it will be explained how the rotation on its axis may have been suspended, without its progressive motion being at all affected. However, it is not even necessary for us to account for this miracle, by assuming so absolute an act of Almighty power, as the suspension of the rotatory motion of the earth. To effect it God may have employed only one of those numerous causes which divert light from its course, and produce the countless illusions of optical science; some of those refractions, for instance, which daily give new aspects, in various ways, to all the stars of the celestial hemisphere. It is well known, that in the polar regions, the power of horizontal refraction causes the sun to appear to the inhabitants of those bleak countries ten days before it is really above their horizon. Such might have been the cause of the miracle, when to the eyes of the inhabitants of Palestine, "the sun stood still in Gideon, and the moon in the valley of Ajalon." Among several ancient nations the sun was an object of idolatry. The "sun-images" were probably images of Baal. (2 Chron. xiv. 3, margin.)

See AMON, and BAAL.

SUPH.—See FLAG.

SUPPER.—See LORD'S SUPPER.

SURE.—removed. A gate of the temple; (2 Kings xi. 6;) also called the "foundation gates." (2 Chron. xxiii. 5.)

SURETY. In Hebr. vii. 22, Jesus is called the "Surety of a better covenant." The hope inspired by the new dispensation is called the "better hope," inasmuch as it is superior to that which the old dispensation inspired. Hence, if it is asked, What is the ground or security that this better hope will be realized? the Apostle answers by the assurance, that Jesus is the "Surety" for the new dispensation, pleading Himself for the fulfilment of the stipulations, on both sides—for God the righteous Judge, and for man the supplicant for mercy. The danger of a man becoming surety for another is strongly reprehended. (Job xvii. 3; Prov. vi. 1;
xi. 15; xvii. 16; xx. 18; xxii. 26.)

SUSANCHITES. The inhabitants of Shushan, the Susians. (Neh. i. 1; Ezra iv. 9.)

SUSANNA = a lily. One of the women who ministered to our Lord.
(Luke viii. 2, 3.)

SUSI = horsemanto. A descendant of Manasseh. (Num. xiii. 11.)

SWALLOW The Hebrew word doror, rendered "swallow," (Ps. ixxxiv. 8; Prov. xxvi. 2,) probably designates the Egyptian dururi, the swift or black martin. The word agar designates a smaller kind of "swallow." (Jer. viii. 7)—See CRANK.

SWAN. The Hebrew word tishkemeth, rendered "swan," is rendered in the Septuagint, the crested purple heron; but Gesenius thinks the pelican is intended. (Lev. vi. 18; Deut. xxiv. 16.)

SWEARING. —See OATH.

SWEAT, BLOODY. —See AGONY.

SWINE. Perhaps the Mosaic prohibition of the flesh of this well-known animal was absolutely necessary for the health of the people in that climate.
(Lev. xi. 7; Deut. xiv. 8.)

SWINE. Wild hogs abound on the hills of Syria, as they do in the present day. And in times of idolatry, if the Hebrews did not rear swine, they were in the habit of sacrificing them to their idols, and of eating the flesh. (Isa. lv. 4; lxvi.
3, 17.) In the time of the Roman dominion, herds of swine were reared by the Jews, probably for the purpose of gain, and also for food. And it was probably in order to punish this violation of the Divine law, that our Saviour permitted the demons to enter the swine, which caused them to rush headlong into the lake of Gennesaret.
(Matt. vii. 6; viii. 32; Luke xv. 13;
2 Pet. ii. 22.) —See Boan, Wild.

SWORD. The swords in use among the Hebrews appear to have been short; (Judges iii. 16;) and sometimes two-edged. (Ps. cxlii. 6.) The Assyrian swords, as seen on the monuments, were often richly decorated.

The hilt was generally ornamented with several lions' heads, arranged to form both handle and cross bar. The scabbard or sheath was elaborately embossed or engraved. The term "sword" is used as the symbol of violence and slaughter; (Lev. xxvi. 23; Isa. xxxiv. 5; Rev. xix. 17, 18;) of Dis-judgments; (Deut. xxxii. 41; P.
xxi. 13; Jer. xii. 19; Rev. ii. 11;
and of power and authority. (Rev.
xx. 4, 5.) The word of God is called "the sword," i.e. the weapon or instrument of the Spirit. (Eph. vi. 17.)

SYCAMINETREE. It is now generally understood that the term "si-comine" designates the morus nigra, the black mulberry tree, which is common in Palestine. This tree is lofty and affords shade; and is much cultivated in the present day on account of affording food for the silk-worm.
(Luke xvii. 6.)

SYCAMORE TREE. The Hebew word satimme signifies "si-comore trees." (1 Kings x. 27; 1 Chroxxvii. 28; Lam. ix. 10; Ps. lxxxviii. 49;)
a different tree from what is called sycamore in this country. Its Greek name is from syce = a fig, and mor= = mulberry, i.e. the fig-mulberry. (Lam.
xix. 4.) It belongs to the family of fig trees, hence its fruit is called "wil-" (Am. vii. 14.) This tree is very common in Egypt, Arabia, and Palestine, growing large and to a great height; and resembles the mulberry tree in its leaves and general appearance. The tree is always green; and bears fruit several times in the year, which in appearance is similar to the fig, growing directly from the stem and larger boughs in clusters. It is used mainly by the poorer classes.
The wood, though spongy and porous, is much used in building, and is very durable.

SYCHAR. —See Shechem.

SYCHEM. —See Shechem.

SYENE. —opening, kry. l. c. of Egypt. A city in the southern extremity of Egypt, towards Ethiopia, towards Thebes and the cataracts of the Nile, the ruins of which are still to be seen near the modern town of Assuan. "From Migdol to Syene, even unto the borders of Ethiopia," designates the whole length of the land of Egypt from north to south. (Exek. xxix. 10; xxx. 6, margin.) The site of this ancient frontier city occupies a high bluff formed by a ridge of granite rock, which here comes to the Nile. There are no splendid remains of architecture to be seen. The principal Syenite quarries, whence the most, if not all, the obelisks now seen in Egypt and Europe were obtained, are situated near Syene. Several places are seen whence obelisks were taken, and the processes of quarrying, in all their stages, are exhibited as they were left thousands of years since by the workmen.

SYNAGOGUE. This Greek word properly denotes an assembly, a congregation; but, like the word church, at length was used to designate the building in which such assemblies were convened. As the tabernacle, and afterwards the temple, was the only recognized place of religious assembly, (Deut. xxv. 1, 11, 14,) though sacrifices were occasionally offered at other places, (Judg. vi. 24; xi. 11: xiii. 19: 1 Sam. vii. 5, 6,) it would appear that synagogues were not in use till after the Exile. In Ps. lxxiv. 8, we read that the invading Chaldean armies had "burned up all the synagogues of God in the land," but this can only refer to the temple, with all its courts, etc. Three times in the year, on the great festivals, all the males had to appear before the Lord at the tabernacle or temple. (Ex. xxviii. 14—17.) But we have no account of the Hebrews having any places of public social worship on the Sabbath day till after the captivity. That public and social worship in the synagogues was instituted by Ezra and Nehemiah, would seem to be indicated in Acts xx. 21, "For Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every Sabbath day." The establishment of synagogues by these enlightened and patriotic reformers, in the reading of Moses and the prophets, every Sabbath day, was evidently the substitute for the personal instruction of the inspired prophets. In the later periods of Jewish history synagogues were extensively multiplied. They were not only found in all the chief cities and lesser towns in Syria, but in the principal cities of the Roman empire. (Mark i. 21; Acts vi. 9; ix. 2—20; Luke vii. 5.) As any one who happened to be present was at liberty to read and expound the sacred books, (Acts xiii. 14, 15; xv. 21,) this privilege afforded our Lord and His disciples many opportunities for preaching the gospel of the kingdom in the various synagogues. (Isa. lxi. 4; Luke iv. 16, 28; Matt. xiii. 54; Mark vi. 2; John xviii. 20; Acts xiii. 5—44; xiv. 1; xvii. 2, 17; xviii. 4, 26; xix. 8.)

SYNYCTHE—mitis fortune. A female Christian at Philippi. (Phil. iv. 2.)

SYRACUSE. The ancient capital of the island of Sicily, once noted for its splendour and wealth. It is now called Siracusa. While under the power of its own kings it carried on an extensive trade. About 210 B.C. Syracuse was taken and sacked by the Romans; when Archimedes, a native of the city, who had sorely galled the Romans during the siege with his astonishing military engines, was slain by a common soldier while intent upon his mathematical studies. (Acts xxviii. 12.)
SYR

SYRIA. This name is probably derived from Tôr, i.e., Tyre, hence Syria is the region of Tôr or Tyre. The name Syria, is, however, unknown throughout the region at this day. The Arabs call this region Bar-'osh Sham, or simply esh-Sham, i.e. the country to the left, or towards the north, in contradistinction to southern Arabia, or Yemen, i.e. the country to the right. Ancient Syria only comprehended the region which is shut in on the north and south by the mountain ranges of Ammon and Lebanon, and on the east and west by the Euphrates and the Mediterranean. The Hebrews distinguished this country by the general name of Aram, the eastern part of which they accounted Mesopotamia. Syria Proper, or Aram on the west of the Euphrates, was early divided into the several small kingdoms—Zobah, Damascus, Hamath, Maacah, Rehob, Geshur, and Arvad. These kingdoms were rendered tributary by David, (2 Sam. x. 18, 19,) but before the death of Solomon some of them threw off the Hebrew yoke. (1 Kings xi. 23—25.) After being subjected to the Assyrians, the Chaldeans, the Persians, and the Macedonians, the Syro-Macedonian empire was formed, of which Antioch was the metropolis. About B.C. 65, Syria was made a Roman province, and governed by a pro-consul. Syria now comprehended all the countries which extend northward from the Isthmus of Suez and the Arabian Peninsula, and which are bounded on the east by the Euphrates and the desert of Arabia, and on the west by the Mediterranean. Syria finally became absorbed in the Ottoman empire. In 1832, Muhammed Aly, Pasha of Egypt, wrested Syria from the Porte to the Egyptian sway. However, in 1840, the United Powers compelled the Egyptians to evacuate Syria, and the supremacy of the Sultan was once more established over the country.

The present population of Syria, composed of Muhammedans, Yezidees, Druzes, Romanists, Jews, and Greek Christians, is estimated at 1,860,000. Most of the commercial establishments are either in the hands of the Christian or Jewish population; but commerce under the execrable Mussulman rule in this land of almost unparalleled natural resources, is in a low state. Exportation is the great desideratum for the extension of the Syrian trade. In the present state of things, Syria produces silk, cotton, and wool—three staple articles of British demand. Under a fostering government, the immense tracts of waste lands would be restored to cultivation, and the commerce of Syria would speedily advance to a high degree of prosperity. The Arabic is now the vernacular language of Syria.

SYRO-PHENICIAN. When Phenicia was included in the Roman province of Syria, its inhabitants seem to have been called Syro-Phenicians, i.e. Phenicians of Syria, in distinction from the Phenicians of Libya or the Carthaginians. The Syro-Phenician woman is also called "a Canaanitic woman," because the coasts of Tyre and Sidon were peopled by Canaanites. (Mark vii. 24—31; Matt. xvi. 21, 22.)

T

TAANACH = sandy soil. A royal Canaanitic city, in the territory of Issachar, but assigned to Manasseh. (Josh. xii. 21; xvii. 11; Judg. i. 27; v. 19; 1 Kings iv. 12;) also written "Tannach." (Josh. xxi. 25.) This city appears to have been also called "Aner." (1 Chron. vi. 70.) It is now called Ta'annuk, and is described by Waten as a mere hamlet on the western side of the plain of Esdraelon.

TAANATH-SHILOH = approach to Shiloh. A place in the confines of Ephraim. (Josh. vi. 6.)

TABBAOTH = rings. One of the Nethinim. (Ezr. ii. 48.)
TABBATH—celebrated. A place not far from Abel-meholah. (Judg. vii. 22.)

TABEL—God is good. A person whose son the Syrians and Ephraimites were about to make king in Jerusalem. (Isa. vii. 6.)

TABELL—God is good. A Persian governor in Samaria. (Ezr. iv. 7.)

TABERAH—a burning. A station of the Hebrews in the desert, where the judgment by fire came upon them for their murmuring. (Num. xi. 3; Deut. ix. 22.)

TABERNACLE. As Jehovah was the king of the Hebrews, He caused a royal tent, as a moveable palace, to be erected near the centre of the encampment, and to be fitted up with all the splendour of royalty. It was made in all things according to the pattern which Jehovah showed to Moses in the mount. (Ex. xxv. 9, 40; Heb. viii. 5.) The tabernacle was a rectangular edifice, thirty cubits =52½ feet long; ten cubits=17½ feet wide, and the same in height. The framework of the edifice was formed of perpendicular gilded boards of Shittim wood, fixed in sockets of silver. They were secured at the top by transverse bars of the same wood, passed through rings of gold. (Ex. xxv. 9; xxvi. 1, 6; xxxvi. 8; xxxix. 32; xl. 9; Num. i. 50, 53; x. 11.) The framework had a ceiling of fine cotton, magnificently embroidered with figures of cherubim, in shades of blue, purple, and scarlet. The exterior covering was of goats’ hair, rams’ skins dyed red, and badger or seal skins, for the purpose of resisting inclement weather. (Ex. xxxvi. 8—36.) The entrance to the tabernacle, towards the east, was closed by a curtain, embroidered in shades of blue, purple, and scarlet, and suspended on five richly-gilded columns. (Ex. xxxvii. 37, 38.) The interior of the tabernacle was divided into two apartments, separated from each other by four gilded columns, from which was suspended a curtain called the “vail,” richly embroidered in shades of blue, purple, and scarlet. (Ex. xxxvi. 31—36; xxxvi. 35, 36; Matt. xxvii. 51; Heb. ix. 3.) The first apartment was called “the holy place,” “the sanctuary,” or “the first tabernacle;” while the inner apartment, comprising one-third of the whole, ten cubits=17½ feet square, was called “the holy of holies,” “the most holy place,” “the holiest of all,” or “the second tabernacle.” (Ex. xxxvi. 53; Lev. xvi. 2; Heb. ix. 2—8.) In the first apartment were the altar of incense, the royal table, with the show bread, and the golden candlestick. The other apartment was the appropriate residence of Jehovah, the supreme king; hence it contained the royal throne, supported by golden cherubim; and the gilded ark, which was the footstool of the throne. And the royal palace stood in an open court-yard, of an oblong form, 100 cubits=175 feet in length, and 50 cubits=87½ feet in breadth, situated due east and west. It was surrounded by columns, from which cotton curtains were suspended; the entrance was at the east end. In the forecourt stood the altar of burnt offering, and the brazen laver; and here also the sacred music was performed. Neither of the apartments had any window; hence the need of the golden candlestick in the one for the service performed therein; the darkness of the other was occasionally illuminated by the glory of the Divine King. The tabernacle, however, was not a place of public, social, devotional worship for the nation; it was the only place of ritual worship, in which the priests and Levites were engaged. Indeed, from the time of Moses to that of Ezra, we cannot find a trace of any such thing as public social worship, either on the Sabbath or on any other day of the week. While the Sabbath was kept with the utmost strictness, yet only on the three great annual festivals were all the Hebrew males of a suitable age required to repair to the palace of Jehovah, with presents, to render homage to their king. In Palestine the tabernacle was pitched at Shiloh; (Josh. xviii. 1; 1 Sam. i. 3; iv. 3, 22;) and was afterwards removed to Gibeon. (1 Chron. xxii. 29; 2 Chron. i. 3, 13.) The ark appears to have been occasionally separated from the tabernacle, and had been located at different places, which were hence regarded as sanctuaries. (Judg. vi. 4; 1 Sam. vii. 2; xxxi. 5; 2 Sam. vi. 2, 11; 1 Chron. xiii. 6, 14.) David prepared a tabernacle for the ark at Jerusalem; (2 Sam. vi. 17; 1 Chron. xv. 1, 20, 29;) which was finally placed in the temple. (2 Chron. i. 4; v. 2, 5.)—See TEMPLE.

TABERNACLES, FEAST OF. The last of the three great annual festivals which required the attendance of all the Hebrews at the national sanctuary. During the seven days of its celebration the people dwelt in booths, constructed of the branches and leaves of trees, in commemoration of the forty years’ wandering in the wilderness. (Lev. xxiii. 34—44.) As the season of thanksgiving for the fruits of the earth, it is also called the “Feast of Ingathering.” (Ex. xxxii. 16; xxxiv. 22.) It commenced on the fifteenth day of Tisri—October; the first day and the eighth day were distinguished as Sabbaths. (Num. xxix. 12—40; Deut. xvi. 13—15; Zech. xiv. 16—19.) On every seventh year, during this festival, the law of Moses was read in the hearing of all the people. (Deut. xxxi. 10—13; Neh. viii. 14—18.) In later times, the priests went every morning during the festival, and drew water from the fountain of Siloam, and poured it out to the south-west of the altar; the Levites, in the meanwhile, playing on instruments of music, and singing the Psalms cxiii—cxxxviii. This ceremony is said to have been founded on Isa. xii. 3; and was probably a memorial of the abundant supply of water which God afforded to the Hebrews during their wanderings in the wilderness. (John vii. 2—39.)

TABLE.—See DORCAS.

TABLET.—See Mea.ii.

TAD

TAB.—See Book.

TABOR.—quarry, or height. 1. A beautiful limestone mountain on the confines of Zebulun and Naphtali. (Josh. xix. 22; Judg. iv. 6; viii. 18,) now called Jebel-s-Tur. The height is estimated by Dr. Robinson at not over 1,000 feet above the plain. The sides of the mountain are mostly covered with bushes and orchards of oak trees, which, with the abundant herbage, have made it the chosen retreat of numerous wild swine. The ruins on the summit of the mountain belong to different ages. The beauty of Tabor and its conspicuous position, rendered it a favourite object of poetic contemplation. (Ps. lxxxix. 12; Jer. xlvii. 18; Hos. v. 1.)

2. A Levitical city, situated upon Mount Tabor. (1 Chron. vi. 77; Josh. xix. 22.)

3. A grove of oaks in the territory of Benjamin. (1 Sam. x. 3.)

TABET.—See Timarri.

TABRIMON.—good & Rieumes. The father of Benhadad, king of Syria. (1 Kings xv. 18.)

TACHES. The hooks, clasps, or latches of gold and copper, used in connecting the curtains of the tabernacle. (Ex. xxvi. 6—11.)

TACHMONITE.—See JASHORRAM.

TADMON.—city of palms. An ancient city, in a fertile spot in the Syrian desert, between Damascus and the Euphrates; called by the Greeks and Romans Palmyra—“the city of palms.” It is still called by the Arabs Tadmur. This city was fortified, if not founded, by Solomon, probably with the view of placing in it a garrison, by means of which, as the northern bulwark of his kingdom, it might serve to prevent the predatory inroads of the Arabs, and at the same time facilitate his commerce with the East. (1 Kings ix. 18; 2 Chron. viii. 4.) After Aurelian had vanquished Zenobia, the queen of the East, and led her in triumph to Rome, he caused the city to be reduced to ruins. When the Saracens triumphed in the East they strongly fortified this ancient city. It is now a mere village of peasants' huts, built among the ancient ruins. The ruins consist of a range of erect columns, occupying an extent of more than 2,600 yards, and groups of ruined temples and palaces. On every side the plain is strewed with vast stones half-buried, with broken entablatures, damaged capitals, mutilated friezes, disfigured reliefs, effaced sculptures, violated tombs, and altars defiled by the dust. Of this remarkable place, Burckhardt observes: "I must confess that, at the first moment I was still more struck by the aspect of trees and verdure in the midst of a sandy sea, than by that of the proud remains of human grandeur."

TAHAN—station. 1. A son of Ephraim; his descendants were called "Tahanites." (Num. xxvi. 35.) 2. A descendant of Ephraim. (1 Chron. vii. 25.)

TAHAPANES.—See TAHANAN.

TAHAPANES = head of the world.

A city at the northern extremity of Egypt; (Jer. xliv. 3, 9; xlvi. 1; xlv. 14;) also written "Tahapanes;" (Jer. ii. 16;) and "Tahaphnes." (Jer. xxx. 18.) The mound Tel Daphne, situated nearly in a direct line between the modern Zen and Pelusium, is supposed to mark the site of the ancient Tahapanes or Daphne.

TAHANAN = head of the world.

A town of Egypt in the time of David. (1 Kings xi. 19, 20.)

TAHREA = running. A descendant of Saul; (1 Chron. ix. 4,) also written "Tarae." (1 Chron. viii. 35.)

TAHTIM-HODSHI = lower Hodshi. A place mentioned only in 2 Sam. xxiv. 6.

TALENT. The Hebrew word habah, rendered "talent," signifies a circle, hence a weight of 8,000 shekels, and is equal to 125 lbs. troy. (Ex. xxxviii. 24-26; 2 Sam. xii. 90; Zechar. v. 7; Jos. Ant. iii. 6, 7.) The talent was also used as a denomination for money, the value of which varied in proportion to its various weights. In money, the Hebrew talent of 8,000 shekels may be estimated at £275. The Greek word talanta signifies a balance, then something weighed; and hence talent, as a fixed weight for gold or silver in commerce. The talent, as a weight, appears to have varied in different countries, though everywhere containing 60 minae or 6,000 drachmae. The weight of the Attic talent, which was the most usual, was reckoned equal to 57 pounds. In money, the common Attic talent is estimated at £250. The word "talent" is also put for an indefinitely large sum of money. (Matt. xvi. 24; xx. 15, 28.)—See Money.

TALITHA CUMI. A Syro-Chaldean phrase, signifying "maiden arise." (Mark v. 41.)

TALMAI = full of frowns. 1. A descendant of Anak. (Num. xi. 22; Josh. xv. 14; Judg. i. 10.) 2. A king of Geshur. (2 Sam. iii. 3; xv. 37; 1 Chron. iii. 2.)

TALMON = oppressed. One of the Levites. (Ex. li. 42; Neh. vii. 45.)

TAMAH = daughter. One of the Nethinim; (Neh. vii. 65;) also written "Thamar." (Ex. li. 53.)

TAMAR = a palm-tree. 1. A place on the southern borders of Palestine; (Ezek. xlvi. 19; xlvii. 28;) which Dr. Robinson fixes at Kebar, a site with ruins south of Moladah, at some distance towards the pass er-Sufah. (Josh. xv. 26.) 2. The daughter-in-law of Judah; (Gen. xlviii. 6, 11, 18, 24;) also written "Thamar," (Matt. i. 3.) 3. A daughter of David. (2 Sam. xiii. 1-32; 1 Chron. iii. 9.) 4. A daughter of Absalom. (2 Sam. xiv. 27.)

TAMMUZ. 1. The fourth Hebrew month, which commenced with the new moon of July. (Ezek. viii. 14.) 2. A Syrian deity, perhaps the same as the Adonis of the Greeks, for whom the Hebrew women, in idolatrous times, were accustomed to hold an annual lamentation in the month
TAN

Tammuz. (Ezek. viii. 14.) The “image of jealousy,” or “wrath,” i.e. the idol provoking God’s wrath, is supposed to designate the same idol. (Ezek. viii. 3, 5.)

TANACH.—See TANAKH.

TANHUMETH = comfort. The father of Seraiah. (2 Kings xxv. 23; Jer. xl. 8.)

TANIS.—See ZOAN.

TAPESTRY.—See EMBROIDERY.

TAPHATH = drop. A daughter of Solomon. (1 Kings iv. 11.)

TAPPUAH = quince-apple region.
1. A city in the plain of Judah. (Josh. xiii. 17; xv. 34.)
2. A city on the confines of Ephraim and Manasseh. (Josh. xvi. 8.)
3. A descendant of Caleb. (1 Chron. ii. 43.)

TARAH = delay. A station of the Hebrews in the desert. (Num. xxxii. 27, 28.)

TARALAH = a reeling. A place in the tribe of Benjamin. (Josh. xviii. 27.)

TAREA.—See TAREEA.

TARES. The Greek word sizaris appears to be a general name for weeds infesting grain; but in Matt. xiii. 25–40, it probably denotes the noxious lotilium tremulentum, or darnel, which is common in Palestine and Syria.

TARGET.—See SHIELD.

TARETILES. A people from which the Assyrian kings sent colonists to Samaria; (Ezr. iv. 9;) perhaps the Tappri, dwelling on the east of Elamais.

TASHISH = a breaking, subjection, i.e. a subdued country. 1. An ancient commercial city, probably founded by the Canaanites, who had retired before the Hebrews in the time of Joshua, on the southern coast of Spain with the adjacent country, supposed to have been situated between the two mouths of the river Bétis, or Guadalquivir, not far from the Straits of Gibraltar. (Gen. x. 4; Ps. lxxii. 10.)

The region of Tarshish, or Tartessus, as it was called by the Greeks and Romans, was probably the original seat of the Etruscans. The Hebrews and the Phenicians imported silver, iron, tin, lead, and other articles of merchandise, from this emporium of trade. (Isa. xxiii. 1, 6, 10; lxvi. 19; Jer. x. 9; Ezek. xxvii. 12, 25; xxxviii. 13.) “Ships of Tarshish,” not only designated ships employed by the Tyrians in voyages to and from Tarshish, (Isa. lx. 9; Jon. i. 3; iv. 2,) but also generally all large merchant ships, although sailing to other and different countries, just as the English phrase East Indian man. (Isa. ii. 16; Ps. lxxiii. 8.)

TARSA. A celebrated city, the metropolis of Cilicia, in Asia Minor, situated in a fertile plain on the banks of the river Cydnus, which anciently flowed through it and divided it into two parts, but now holds its course half a mile to the east of it. Of this city, which was not only celebrated for its wealth and grandeur, but also as a seat of Greek philosophy and literature, but few ancient ruins now remain. In reward for its exertions and sacrifices during the civil wars of Rome, Tarso was made a free city by Augustus. This seems to have implied the privilege of being governed by their own laws and magistrates, with freedom from tribute; but not the right of Roman citizenship, since the Roman tribune at Jerusalem ordered Paul to be scourged though he knew him to be a citizen of Tarso, but desisted after learning that he was a Roman citizen. (Acts ix. 30; xi. 23; xxi. 39; xxii. 3, 24, 27; Jos. Ant. i. 6. 1.)—See PAUL.

TARTAK = hero of darkness. An idol of the Avites, probably Saturn or Mars, whose worship was introduced by the Assyrians into Samaria. (2 Kings xvii. 24, 31.)

TARTAN = hero, or chief. The title of the commander of the Assyrian armies, under Sargon and Sennacherib. (Isa. xx. 1; 2 Kings xvii. 17.)

TATNAI = gift. A Persian governor in Samaria. (Ezra v. 8; vi. 6.)

Taverns, the Three. A...
TAX

town, of which some ancient ruins still remain, situated on the Appian way, about thirty miles from Rome. (Acts xxviii. 15.)

TAXING.—See CYRENIUS, and TRIBUTE.

TEACHING.—See PREACHING.

TEBAH=slaughter of cattle. A son of Nahor. (Gen. xxii. 24.)

TEBALAH=whom Jehovah has immersed, i.e. purified. A descendant of Kore. (1 Chron. xxxvi. 11.)

TEBETH. The tenth month of the Hebrews, commencing with the new moon in January and terminating with the new moon in February. (Est. ii. 16; Ezek. xxix. 1.)

TEHAPHNEHES.—See TARPAH-NEHS.

TEHINNAH=cry for mercy. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 12.)

TEIL TREE.—See OAK.

TEKEL.—See MENE.

TEKO=station of tents. A fortified city, situated twelve miles south by east from Jerusalem; (1 Chron. ii. 24; Jer. vi. 1; Am. i. 1;) also written "Tekoa." (2 Sam. xiv. 2, 4, 9.) The inhabitants were called "Tekoites." (Neh. iii. 5.) Tekoa, now called Tekoa, lies on a hill, which is covered with ruins to the extent of four or five acres. Tekoa also gave name to a desert lying east of it towards the Dead sea. (2 Chron. ii. 20.)

TEL-ABIB=corr-hill. A place in Mesopotamia, on the river Chebar. (Ezek. iii. 15.)

TELAD=trum. A descendant of Ephraim. (1 Chron. vii. 25.)

TELAIM.—See TELEM.

TELASSAR = Assyrian Tel or Hill. A city or region in Mesopotamia, (Isa. xxxvii. 12,) also written "Thelasar;" (2 Kings xxix. 12;) which the Jerusalem Targum considers the same as "Ellasar," (Gen. xiv. 19,) and occurs in the same Targum and that of Jonathan in Gen. x. 12, as another name for Resen. Ellasar, however, is now generally considered to be the name of the modern Irak or Sen-kereh, in Mesopotamia, between Babylon and the juncture of the Tigris and the Euphrates. Mr. Layard, however, during his researches in Mesopotamia, visited a place with a large mound, called Tel Afer, which was once a town of some importance, and which he thinks may perhaps be identified with the Telassar of Isa. xxxvii. 12, in connection with Gozan and Haran.

TELEM=oppression. A city in the tribe of Judah; (Josh. xv. 24;) also called "Telaim." (1 Sam. xv. 4.)

TEL-HARESHA=forest-hill. A place in Babylonia; (Neh. viii. 61;) also written "Tel-Harsa." (Exr. ii. 59.)

TEL-HARSHA.—See TEL-HARESHA.

TEL-MELAH=salt-hill. A place in Babylonia. (Exr. ii. 59; Neh. vii. 61.)

TEMA=south. A son of Ishmael; (Gen. xxv. 15;) who gave name to a region in the Arabian desert, peopled by his descendants. (Isa. xxxi. 14; Jer. xxxv. 23; Job vii. 19.) Some identify Teima, about three days' journey north-west of Medina, with Tema; but Gesenius thinks that the Hebrew "Tema" is the same as "Teman," which is rendered in the Septuagint "Thaiman.

TEMAN=the south. A grandson of Esau; (Gen. xxxvi. 11, 15; 1 Chron. i. 36;) who gave name to a city and region on the east of Edom, peopled by his descendants; (Gen. xxxvi. 42; Ezek. xxv. 18; Am. i. 12; Obad. 9;) who were called "Temanites." (Job ii. 11; xxxii. 1; 1 Chron. i. 45; Jer. xliv. 7, 20;) and "Teman." (Gen. xxxvi. 34.) Eusebius places "Teman," i.e. "Thaiman," in Arabia Petraea, five miles from Petra.—See TEMAN.

TEMANI.—See TEMAN.

TEMANITES.—See TEMAN.

TEMINI=southward. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 6.)

TEMPLE. The magnificent palace of the invisible king of the Hebrews, at Jerusalem, called the "temple of Jehovah;" (2 Chron. iii. 17; 2 Kings xxiv. 13; Jer. i. 28;) the "house of Jehovah,” (1 Kings vi. 37; vii. 12; Isa. lvii. 1; Ps. cxii. 1, 9;) and the “habitation or dwelling-place of God.” (Ps. xxvi. 8; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 15.) It was erected by Solomon on Mount Moriah, a rocky eminence in the eastern part of the ancient city. (2 Chron. iii. 1.) The foundation was laid in the fourth year of Solomon’s reign, about B.C. 1012. In the preparation of the materials and its erection there were employed 183,600 Hebrews and strangers. The parts were all prepared at a distance from the site of the building, and when they were brought together, the whole immense structure was erected without the sound of hammer or any tool of iron. At the end of seven and a half years, in the eleventh year of Solomon’s reign, B.C. 1005, it stood complete in all its splendour, the glory of Jerusalem, and the most magnificent edifice in the world. It was dedicated the next year, not by the high priest, but by the king in person, with peculiar solemnity, to the worship of Jehovah. (1 Kings v. 1—18; vi. 1, 37, 38; 2 Chron. ii. 1—18.) The sacred edifice was simply rectilinear in its form, 60 cubits = 103 feet in length, 20 cubits = 35 feet in breadth, and the height thereof was 30 cubits = 52½ feet. (1 Kings vi. 2, 3.) But in 1 Kings vi. 20, the height of the oracle or holy of holies is said to be 20 cubits, the same as its length and breadth. Probably the porch was 10 cubits = 17½ feet higher than the main body of the edifice. The proportions of the temple were analogous to those of the ancient tabernacle. Its front, which faced the East, was entirely open. Before it and quite near were the two pillars, Jachin and Boaz, and the lily work upon the top of the pillars extended to the roof of the porch. To the north and south sides, and the west end, besides the two spacious courts, chambers and other apartments were attached, which were much more extensive than the temple itself. (1 Kings vi. 4, 10.) The “outward court,” also called the “great court,” and the “court of the Lord’s house,” (2 Chron. iv. 9; Ezek. xl. 17; Jer. xxix. 14; xxvi. 2,) was the court in which worshippers probably stood while their sacrifices were burning in the court of the priests. The “inner court,” also called the “court of the priests,” and the “upper court,” (1 Kings vi. 36; 2 Chron. iv. 9; Ezek. viii. 16,) was the court in which stood the altar of the burnt offering, etc. The inner court stood rather higher than the outer court, and was separated from it by a low stone balustrade. (2 Chron. iv. 9—18.) The holy place or temple stood near the centre of the inner court. The holy of holies, which was regarded as the heart of the entire sanctuary, was situated at the western extremity of the temple. (1 Kings viii. 12.) Though the temple, thus described, was the only place of ritual worship in the land, it never could have been designed, on account of its comparative smallness, as the place for public social worship for the entire nation. Three times in the year, on the great festivals, all the males had to appear before the Lord, and present their offerings and sacrifices at the temple. (Ex. xxviii. 14—17; 1 Kings ix. 25.) The Sabbath was kept sacred by the Hebrews at home, as the law did not require them to attend upon stated, social, devotional instruction every Sabbath day. (Deut. vi. 7; xxxi. 10, 11; 2 Kings xxiii. 2; Neh. viii. 18.) So also among the idolatrous nations, the temples were not designed for the assemblage of the congregations. They were the shrines of the images of their deities. The sacrifices were usually offered upon altars in the open air, in front of the temples, and the worshippers were sheltered from the sun and rain under the colonnades which surrounded the enclosures. The magnificent temple, erected by the munificence of Solomon, was frequently defaced by the impious kings of Judah. (2 Kings xvi. 10—18; xxii. 8, 7.) It was pillaged by Shishake, king of Egypt; (1 Kings xiv. 25, 26;
The second temple was completed after five years of construction. The temple was dedicated on the dedication day, which was a significant event. The dedication ceremony included the offering of sacrifices and the reading of the Law. The temple was the center of religious and political life in Jerusalem. It was the place where the Ark of the Covenant was kept. The temple was the sanctuary of the Hebrew nation. It was a symbol of the unity of the nation and the bond between the people and their God. The temple was a place of worship for the Hebrew people. It was also a place of instruction and education. The temple was a place of refuge and protection. It was a symbol of the hope and future of the Hebrew nation. The temple was a place of pilgrimage for the Hebrew people. It was a place where the Hebrew people could come together and worship their God. The temple was a place of sacrifice and offerings. It was a place where the Hebrew people could bring their offerings and sacrifices to their God. The temple was a place of prayer and meditation. It was a place where the Hebrew people could spend time in prayer and meditation. The temple was a place of joy and celebration. It was a place where the Hebrew people could celebrate their faith and their God. The temple was a place of unity and community. It was a place where the Hebrew people could come together and share their faith and their God. The temple was a place of healing and restoration. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find comfort and healing from their sins. The temple was a place of hope and promise. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find hope and promise for the future. The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could see the beauty and wonder of their God.

The temple was the center of the city of Jerusalem. It was a symbol of the strength and power of the Hebrew nation. It was a symbol of the unity and harmony of the Hebrew people. The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find comfort and healing from their sins. The temple was a place of hope and promise. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find hope and promise for the future. The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could see the beauty and wonder of their God.

The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find comfort and healing from their sins. The temple was a place of hope and promise. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find hope and promise for the future. The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could see the beauty and wonder of their God.

The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find comfort and healing from their sins. The temple was a place of hope and promise. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find hope and promise for the future. The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could see the beauty and wonder of their God.

The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find comfort and healing from their sins. The temple was a place of hope and promise. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find hope and promise for the future. The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could see the beauty and wonder of their God.

The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find comfort and healing from their sins. The temple was a place of hope and promise. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find hope and promise for the future. The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could see the beauty and wonder of their God.

The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find comfort and healing from their sins. The temple was a place of hope and promise. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find hope and promise for the future. The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could see the beauty and wonder of their God.

The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find comfort and healing from their sins. The temple was a place of hope and promise. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find hope and promise for the future. The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could see the beauty and wonder of their God.

The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find comfort and healing from their sins. The temple was a place of hope and promise. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find hope and promise for the future. The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could see the beauty and wonder of their God.

The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find comfort and healing from their sins. The temple was a place of hope and promise. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find hope and promise for the future. The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could see the beauty and wonder of their God.

The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find comfort and healing from their sins. The temple was a place of hope and promise. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find hope and promise for the future. The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could see the beauty and wonder of their God.

The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find comfort and healing from their sins. The temple was a place of hope and promise. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find hope and promise for the future. The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could see the beauty and wonder of their God.

The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find comfort and healing from their sins. The temple was a place of hope and promise. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find hope and promise for the future. The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could see the beauty and wonder of their God.

The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find comfort and healing from their sins. The temple was a place of hope and promise. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find hope and promise for the future. The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could see the beauty and wonder of their God.

The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find comfort and healing from their sins. The temple was a place of hope and promise. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find hope and promise for the future. The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could see the beauty and wonder of their God.

The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find comfort and healing from their sins. The temple was a place of hope and promise. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find hope and promise for the future. The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could see the beauty and wonder of their God.

The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find comfort and healing from their sins. The temple was a place of hope and promise. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find hope and promise for the future. The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could see the beauty and wonder of their God.

The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find comfort and healing from their sins. The temple was a place of hope and promise. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find hope and promise for the future. The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could see the beauty and wonder of their God.

The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find comfort and healing from their sins. The temple was a place of hope and promise. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find hope and promise for the future. The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could see the beauty and wonder of their God.

The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find comfort and healing from their sins. The temple was a place of hope and promise. It was a place where the Hebrew people could findhope and promise for the future. The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could see the beauty and wonder of their God.

The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find comfort and healing from their sins. The temple was a place of hope and promise. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find hope and promise for the future. The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could see the beauty and wonder of their God.

The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find comfort and healing from their sins. The temple was a place of hope and promise. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find hope and promise for the future. The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could see the beauty and wonder of their God.

The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find comfort and healing from their sins. The temple was a place of hope and promise. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find hope and promise for the future. The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could see the beauty and wonder of their God.

The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find comfort and healing from their sins. The temple was a place of hope and promise. It was a place where the Hebrew people could find hope and promise for the future. The temple was a place of beauty and wonder. It was a place where the Hebrew people could see the beauty and wonder of their God.
two parts; that next to the outer court was called the “court of the women”; and the other, the “court of the Israelites.” The court of the women was not a place exclusively devoted to women, but rather a place to which women were admitted, together with other persons who were not allowed to advance farther. In this court was the “treasury,” where our Saviour delivered His striking discourse; and where parties assembled for worship. (John vii. 14, 28, 39; viii. 2–10; Luke xviii. 10–13; Acts iii. 8; xxi. 28.) Within this second court was the third or most sacred enclosure, which none but the priests might enter; consisting of the temple itself, and the small court before it, where stood the altar. To this there was an ascent from the second court by twelve steps. This splendid building, once the admiration of the world, was burned down and razed to its foundations by the Romans, A.D. 70. (Mark xiii. 1, 2.) Its site is now occupied by the Turkish mosque of Omer, into which neither Jew nor Christian was, until lately, permitted to enter. In some of the lower parts of the wall of the enclosure of the temple area, are still to be seen several courses of large, bevelled stones, which probably belonged to the ancient temple. Several of these huge blocks vary from 20 feet to 24 feet long, by 5 feet in thickness. One block in the corner on the west side measures 30 feet 10 inches in length, by 6 feet 6 inches thick. And the subterranean vaults or passages beneath the site of the temple, which are of remote antiquity, exhibit some of the noblest arches of hewn stone existing in the country. Recently, Dr. Barclay, in his topographical researches in Jerusalem, discovered the great subterranean quarry whence the immense stones of the wall and of the ancient temple were probably quarried. This vast cavern is situated under the north eastern part of the city, and runs south and east from under the northern wall, probably quite beneath the area of the temple. In this vast quarry, extending under the city for more than a third of a mile, were many immense blocks of stone, still remaining just as the ancient workmen had left them. Here the whole secret was revealed of the noiseless construction of the temple—of the “stones squared by the stone-squarers,” before they were brought for the construction of the wonderful edifice. So also the remaining substructions of the temple seem to say that the foundations, like the everlasting hills on which they stand, were laid “for all time.”—See JERUSALEM, and SILOAM.

TEMPTATION. A trial or proof, especially for an evil purpose, wherein something is presented to the mind as an inducement to sin. Satan, having access to the sensorium, lays inducements before the minds of men to solicit them to sin. (1 Cor. vii. 5; 1 Thess. iii. 5; James i. 13, 14.) Hence Satan is called that “old serpent,” the “devil,” and the “tempter.” (Rev. xii. 9; Matt. iv. 3.) and the temptation of the first human pair to sin is expressly recognised as his work. (Gen. iii. 1–15; John viii. 41; 2 Cor. xi. 8; 1 John iii. 8.) In the figurative costume of the Mosaic narration, there is no evidence that Satan appeared to Eve, either as a serpent or as an angel of light, or in any other form, in the work of temptation. It is no more necessary to the essential verity of the narration of the temptation, to suppose that there was an actual physical form presented to view, than it is in our Saviour’s temptation, as related by the Evangelists, to suppose that there was a physical appearance of Satan, and words audible to the outward ear addressed to Him. (Gen. iii. 1–15; Matt. ii. 1–11; Luke iv. 1–13.) If Jesus was “tempted in all points as we are,” a physical appearance of the devil can hardly be supposed to have been one of the means of temptation. To suppose the devil in reality to have assumed a visible form of any kind would be attributing a miraculous power to him, to be employed for the most fatal of purposes. As to the conversation between the tempter and the woman, it may be viewed like that between the Saviour and the tempter, i.e. as mental, not with words audible to the external ear. Is not this the mode in which we ourselves are often tempted by our adversary, the devil? The Saviour was "tempted in all points like as we are, and yet without sin." (Heb. ii. 18; iv. 15.)—See Devil.

TENT. The tents of pastoral tribes are usually made of black hair cloth, generally of an oblong figure, varying in size according to the wants or rank of the owners. (Gen iv. 20; xxv. 27.) A length from twenty-five to thirty feet, by a breadth not exceeding ten feet, form the dimensions of an Arab family tent. The height in the middle is from seven to ten feet, while the sides are lower to throw off the rain. The tents are stretched in the usual way, by cords fastened one end to the poles and the other to pins driven into the ground. The interior of the tent is divided into two apartments by a curtain, one for the men and the other for the women. In the former the ground is usually covered with carpets or mats, and the wheat sacks and camel bags, etc., are heaped up in it around the middle pole like a pyramid. The women's apartment is encumbered with all the lumber of the tent, the water and butter skins, and the culinary utensils. The tents formed the common rendezvous of men, women, children, calves, lambs, and kids. In the Arab encampments, the tents are usually arranged in a sort of square; the tents being mostly open at one end and on the sides, the latter being turned up. (Gen. xviii. 4; Judg. iv. 5; Ex. xxvi. 14; Sol. Song i. 5; Hab. iii. 7.)

TENT-MAKER.—See Paul.

TENTH-DEAL. The Hebrew word isaron, rendered "tenth deal," (Lev. xvi. 10, 21; xxiii. 13, 17,) properly signifies a tenth, a tenth part; hence a measure of things dry, specially for grain and meal. It was probably the tenth part of an ephah.—See Ephah.

TERAH=delay. The father of Abraham, who, with his family, quitted the city of Ur to go to Canaan, but he died at Haran, in Mesopotamia, at the age of 205 years. (Gen. xi. 24—32; Josh. xxiv. 2, 14; Acts vii. 2—4.) He is also called "Thara." (Luke iii. 34.)

TERAPHIM=giants of prosperous life. The idolatrous images occasionally worshipped as household gods among the Hebrews; (Gen. xxx. 19, 34;) not unlike the Penates among the Romans. They seem to have had generally the human form, and not unfrequently to have been consulted as oracles. (1 Sam. xix. 13, 16; Judg. xvii. 6; xviii. 14; Hos. iii. 4.) The term is translated "images;" (Gen. xxxi. 19, 34; 2 Kings xxiii. 24; Ezek. xxii. 21; "image;" (1 Sam. xix. 13;) "idols;" (Zech. x. 2;) and "idolatry." (1 Sam. xv. 23.) M. Botta found in cavities, under the pavement of the porch of the palace at Khorsabad, several small images of baked clay, some with lynx head and human body, and others with human head and lion's body. These household gods of the ancient Assyrians, being secreted near the doors, were intended to protect the palace from the admission of evil.

TERESH=auster. A eunuch at the court of Xerxes. (Est. ii. 21.; vi. 2.)

TERTIUS=the third. The amanuensis whom Paul employed to write his Epistle to the Romans. (Rom. xvi. 22.)

TERTULLUS=little Tertius. An advocate, employed by the Jews, to sustain their accusation against Paul before the Roman governor at Cesarea. (Acts xxiv. 1—8.)

TESTAMENT.—See COVENANT.

TESTAMENT, NEW.—See Scriptures.

TESTIMONY. This term sometimes denotes the whole revelation of God's will. (Ps. cxix. 88, 89; 1 Cor. i. 6; Rev. i. 2.) It also designates the tables of stone, which contained the covenant between God and the Hebrews; hence the ark in which they were deposited is called the "ark of the testimony." (Ex. xxv. 16, 17.) and the tabernacle is called the "tabernacle of testimony." (Ex. xxxviii. 21.)

TETRARCH=ruler of the fourth part. A common title among the Romans for those who governed any part of a province or kingdom, subject only to the Roman emperor. Thus Herod the Great and his brother Phasael were at one time made tetrarchs of Judea by Antony. (Jos. Ant. xiv. 13. 1.) Herod became king of Judea; and at his death, half his kingdom was given by Augustus to his son Archelaus, with the title of ethnarch; (Matt. ii. 22.) the remaining half being divided between two of his other sons, Herod Antipas, who is sometimes called king; (Matt. xiv. 1, 9; Mark vi. 14; Luke iii. 19; ix. 7.) and Philip, with the title of tetrarch. (Luke iii. 1; Jos. Ant. xvii. 5. 1.) Lysanias was tetrarch of Abilene. (Luke iii. 1.)

THADDÆUS.—See JUDE.

THAHASH=flight. A son of Nahor. (Gen. xxii. 24.)

THAMAH.—See TAMAH.

THANK-OFFERING.—See OFFERINGS.

THARA.—See TERAH.

THARSHISH=subject. 1. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. vii. 10.) 2. See TARSHISH.

THEATRE. The Greek word theater, designates a place where dramatic and other public spectacles were exhibited, a theatre. In such places the people were accustomed to convene, to hear harangues, and to hold public consultations. (Jos. Ant. xvii. 6. 3; Acts xix. 29, 31.)

THEBEZ=brightness. A place near Shechem; (Judg. ix. 50; 2 Sam. xi. 21;) now a village called Tubas, on the way from Shechem to Nазaret.

THEOPHILUS=lover of God. A person of distinction to whom Luke inscribed his Gospel and the Acts of the Apostles. (Luke i. 3; Acts i. 1.) The title "Most excellent," is the usual title which is usually given to the Roman governor of provinces, as we say Excellency; whence it is not unlikely that he was a civil magistrate in a high office, who had embraced Christianity. (Acts xxiii. 26; xxiv. xxvi. 25.)

THESSALONIANS, EPISTLE TO. The authenticity of the twelfth Epistle is clearly attested by Irenæus, Clement of Alexandria, and Tertullian. The first Epistle is generally understood to have been the first of all the Pauline letters; it appears to have been written, not at Athens, but at Corinth, about A.D. 52. The date of the Epistle was to establish the Christian community in Thessalonica that they might be always ready. The second Epistle appears to have been written at Corinth, near the close of A.D. 53 or early in 54, and seems to have been designed to correct some misapprehensions which had occurred respecting the first Epistle. In the church at Thessalonica there appeared to have been some who made a handle of the Apostle's words, and taught that the day of the Lord was at hand. (1 Thess. v. 2-4.) So many in the present day suppose that Paul, with other Apostles and primitive Christians, expected the judgment before the close of the then present generation of men. This says little for the inspiration of the new Testament Epistles. Paul assures them that the sudden destruction which awaited the wicked was not intended for them. And that the "man of sin" or "son of perdition," that is Idolatry, must reach the highest pitch of arrogance before final ruin from the Lord be hurled upon the "mystery of iniquity," which was already working. (2 Thess. ii. 1—17.)

THESALONICA. A city of Macedonia, situated at the mouth of the river Echecorica, near the present Gulf of Saloniki. Under the Romans it was the capital of the second Macedonian district, and the largest city in the whole country. It was an important commercial city, the residence of the Roman prætor, and contained many Jews. Soon after his first entrance into Europe, Paul introduced Christianity into this city, and his labours were attended with considerable success. (Acts xvii. 2—9; Phil. iv. 16; 1 Tim. iv. 1; 1 Thess. i. 1.) Thessalonica is now called Saloniki, and is the capital of a province of the same name, which forms part of Turkey in Europe. Among the principal antiquities are the propylæa of the hippodrome, the rotunda, and the triumphal arches of Augustus and Constantine.

THEUDAS=gift of Jehovah. An insurgent who excited a tumult among the Jews in the closing part of the reign of Herod. Josephus mentions a certain Matthias, who, about that period, was put to death, for heading an insurrection in Jerusalem. The insurgents appear to have opposed the census, which was taken about the time of Christ's birth, for the purpose of raising the annual tax. (Jos. Ant. xvii. 6, 2—4; viii. 4; ix. 1; x. 4.) All the marks given by Gamaliel in reference to Theudas are found in the Matthias of Josephus, even as far as the name; for Matthias is only the Hebrew expression for the Greek Tēdōtos, or Theudas. Gamaliel also mentions the insurrection under Judas the Galilean, on account of a "taxing," or census, as occurring about nine years after that under Theudas. (Acts v. 36.)—See CYRENEUS.

THIEF. Among the Hebrews, the restitution that was required, in case of theft, was double the amount taken. (Ex. xx. 3—8.) If a sheep, however, was stolen, and had been slain or sold, fourfold was required; or if an ox, a fivefold restitution was to be made. The reason of this restitution was, that sheep were peculiarly exposed to be stolen; and oxen being so indispensably necessary in agriculture, could not be taken without great injury to their owners. (Ex. xxii. 1.) In case the thief was unable to make the restitution demanded by the law, he was scald, with his wife and children, into servitude, till the amount was paid. (Ex. xxii. 3; 2 Sam. xii. 8; 2 Kings iv. 1; Gen. xlv. 17.) In later times the fine seems to have been increased. (Prov. vi. 30, 31.) Whoever slew a thief who was attempting to break a house at night, was left unpunished, as the thief might have a design upon his life; and, owing to the darkness, it might have been difficult to identify and bring him to justice. (Ex. xxii. 2.) The Greek word ληστης, rendered "thief," signifies a robber, plunderer; (Matt. xxi. 13, 26, 55; Luke x. 30, 36; Mark xv. 27;) also rendered "robber;" (John x. 1;) but the term κλεπτης, properly signifies a thief, pilferer. (Matt. vi. 19, 20; xxiv. 43; John x. 1; xii. 6; 1 Cor. vi. 10; 1 Pet. iv. 15.)—See BARABBAS.

THIMNATHAH.—See TIMNAH.

THIRST.—See WATER.

THISTLES. There are several kinds of this well-known troublesome plant in Palestine, some of them six or eight feet high, having many fragrant purple flowers. The Hebrew word dādar, designates a thorny plant, the caltrop, thistle, tribulus terrestris of Linnaeus, growing in fields and among grain. (Gen. ii. 18; Hos. x. 8.) The Greek word tribolos, rendered "thistle;" (Matt. vii. 16;) and "brier;" (Heb. vi. 8;) properly signifies three-pronged, hence a "thistle," the land caltrop; whence the name of the military caltrop, composed of three or more radiating spikes or prongs, thrown upon the ground to annoy cavalry.—See THORNS.

THOMAS = twin. One of the twelve Apostles, also called "Didymus=twin. Nothing is known of his early history; but he is described as one who readily followed Christ, though he showed signs of incredulity when first informed of Christ's resurrection. (Matt. x. 33; Mark iii. 18; Luke vi. 16; John xx. 24; Acts x. 13.)

We have no reliable information concerning his later history.

THORNS. There are many varieties of prickly or thorny plants in Palestine, some of which grow to a very large size; and in some parts the ground is covered with almost impenetrable thickets of weeds, thorns, briars, and thistles. The most of the following Hebrew and Greek words designate thorny plants and shrubs.

1. Kof., rendered "thorns," is probably the generic name for all kinds of thorny plants. (Gen. iii. 18; Hos. x. 8.) If any particular plant be designated, it may be the Ononis spinosa, or rest-harrow, a most pernicious and prickly plant, which covers entire fields and plains in Egypt and Palestine. (Ex. xxii. 6; Judg. viii. 7, 16; Isa. xxxii. 13; xxxiii. 12; Jer. iv. 3.)

2. Atad, rendered "bramble," "margin," "thistle" (Judg. ix. 14, 15;) and "thorn" (Ps. lxvii. 1.) perhaps the Hhammus paliumus, or buck-thorn, which is common in Palestine. 3. Hedeok, rendered "thorn" (Prov. xv. 18;) and "brier." (Mic. vii. 4;) perhaps the Melangena spinosa, or prickly mad-apple, whose stem and leaves are thorny. 4. Sirim, rendered "thorns," such as spring up luxuriantly among ruins. (Isa. xxxiv. 13; Hose. ii. 6; Nah. i. 10; Eccl. vii. 6.) 5. Sallo, rendered "thorn," such as are found on the palm-tree; (Ezek. ii. 6;) also rendered "brier." (Ezek. xxxiii. 24.) 6. Hoakh, rendered "thorn." (Job. xii.

xxv. 18;) margin, "furze-bush, or thorn," perhaps the Prunus syriaca, the sloe, or black-thorn. 7. Naasycz, rendered "thorn" (Isa. vii. 19; lv. 13;) perhaps the Zizyphi vulgaris, or Jews' thorn, which grows in many parts of Palestine. 8. Sirpad, rendered "brier." (Isa. iv. 13;) probably the white mustard is to be understood; others think the wolf's milk is designated. 9. Sinnim, rendered "thorns." (Prov. xxvii. 5; Num. xxxiv. 33; Josh. xiii. 13.) 10. Shumir, rendered "briers," chiefly in the expression "briers and thorns." (Isa. v. 6; vii. 23, 24, 25; ix. 18; x. 17; xvii. 4; xxxii. 13;) perhaps the Lotus spinosa, or prickly lotus. 11. Suteh, rendered "thorns," as growing spontaneously in the fields and among ruins, usually coupled with shamir="briers," in the same passages. 12. Sikrim, rendered pricks; (Num. xxxiv. 33;) also "barbed irons," seeming to designate any kind of sharp points. (Job xii. 7.) 13. Barzamin, rendered "briers." (Judg. viii. 7, 16;) properly signifies threshing-sledges, with bottoms or rollers of jagged iron or stone. 14. Scerim, rendered "brier." (Ezek. ii. 6;) properly signifies rebellious, or as the margin, "rebels." The Septuagint translates the word, "stung by the atras or gad-fly." 15. Razes, rendered "bush." (Mark xii. 26; Luke xx. 37; Acts vii. 30, 33;) "bramble-bush." (Luke vi. 44;) any thorny bush or shrub. 16. Ahamak, rendered "thorns." (Matt. vii. 16; xiii. 7, 22; Luke vi. 44; vii. 14; Mark iv. 7, 18; Heb. vi. 8;) As so many species of thorny and ivy-like plants exist in Palestine, all conjectures as to the particular plant which afforded the crown of thorns put upon the head of Christ must necessarily remain uncertain. (Matt. xxvii. 29; John xix. 2, 5.) The term skolops, rendered "thorn," is used figuratively for the pain, trouble, i.e. the buffeting Paul received from the messenger of Satan. Lest the Apostle should have been over-elated, through the several Divine revelations with which he was favoured, the hostility of Satan, in the form of false friends or avowed foes, was permitted to meet him in every step of his career, which ultimately brought on him an infirmity, probably a nervous weakness. (2 Cor. xii. 7—10).—See THISTLE, and BUSK.

THRESHING. There were different methods of threshing among the ancient Hebrews. The staff or flail, which was used for the grain that was too tender to be treated in the other methods. (Isa. xxviii. 27.) The threshing-sledges, called by the Hebrews barganim, rendered "briers," (Judg. viii. 7, 16,) were of two kinds, the morag and the agalah. The morag, (2 Sam. xxiv. 22; 1 Chron. xxi. 23; Isa. xli. 15,) still in use in the north of Palestine, consists chiefly of two planks fastened together side by side, and bent upwards in front, with holes bored in the bottom underneath, and in which are fixed sharp fragments of hard stone. The machine is dragged by oxen as they are driven round upon the grain; sometimes a man or a boy sits upon it. The effect of it is to cut up the straw quite fine. The agalah is a sledge with wheels or rollers of wood, iron, or stone, made rough, and joined together in the form of a sledge. (Isa. xxviii. 27, 28,) This machine, which was used for separating the grain of wheat or barley, etc., and cutting the straw, which serves as fodder, was drawn in a circle by a pair of cows or bulls, over the corn. Treading out the corn by the feet of neat cattle, is perhaps the most ancient mode of threshing, and is still practised in Palestine. Dr. Robinson says, "A level spot is selected for the threshing floors, which are then constructed near each other, of a circular form, perhaps fifty feet in diameter, merely by beating down the earth hard. Upon these circles the sheaves are spread out quite thick, and the grain is trodden out by animals. Here, near Jericho, were no less than five such floors, all trodden by oxen, cows, and younger cattle, ranged in each case five abreast, and driven round in a circle, or rather in all directions over the floor. By this process the straw is broken up and becomes chaff. It is occasionally turned up with a large wooden fork, having two prongs, and when sufficiently trodden, is thrown up with the same fork against the wind, in order to separate the grain, which is then gathered up and winnowed. The whole process is exceedingly wasteful." On another occasion the same traveller saw them winnowing the grain on the floors, by tossing it up against the wind with a fork. And the owners of the crops came every night and slept upon their threshing floors to guard them. (Ruth iii. 2—14.) On one of the ancient Egyptian tombs, representing oxen treading out the corn, may still be read the song, in hieroglyphics, which the overseer sings while threshing:

    Tread ye out for yourselves,
    Tread ye out for yourselves,
      O, oxen!
    Tread ye out for yourselves.
    Tread ye out for yourselves,
      The straw.
    For men, who are your masters,
      The grain.

The Mosaic law allowed the ox, during threshing, to eat both the grain and the straw. (Deut. xxv. 4.) The monuments also show that the ancient Egyptians suffered the ox to tread out the corn unmuzzled. Dr. Robinson, when at Jericho, observed the process of threshing by oxen, cows, and younger cattle. He says, "The precept of Moses was not very well regarded by our Christian friends, many of their animals having their mouths tied up, while among the Muhammadans I do not remember to have seen an animal muzzled." This ancient custom of leaving the ox unmuzzled was designed to enforce a similar obligation in reference to man. (Hos. x. 11; 1 Cor. ix. 9—11; 1 Tim. v. 18.)

THRONЕ. A high chair with a footstool, on which kings and princes sat on state occasions. The thrones of Oriental monarchs were often mag-
The throne of Solomon was of ivory and gold. (1 Kings x. 18-20.) Mr. Layard discovered in the mound at Nimrud, among other extraordinary relics, portions of the throne on which the Assyrian monarchs sat more than 2,600 years ago. With the exception of the legs, which appear to have been partly of ivory, it was of wood, overlaid with bronze. The metal was elaborately engraved and embossed, and the ivory beautifully carved. The throne of the Egyptian monarchs is often exhibited on the ancient monuments. The term "throne" is sometimes equivalent to "kingdom." (2 Chron. ix. 8; Acts ii. 30; Heb. i. 8.) So also "thrones" designate earthly potentates, and celestial beings, archangels. (Col. i. 16.)—See Footstool.

THUMMIM.—See Urim.

THUNDER.—See Lightning.

THYATIRA. A city of Asia Minor, situated on the borders of Mysia, in Lydia, between Sardis and Pergamus. It was a Macedonian colony, and is now called Ak-Hissar —White Castle. (Rev. i. 11; ii. 18, 24.) This city was famous for the art of dyeing purple; (Acts xvi. 14;) an ancient inscription by the corporation of dyers has been found there; and it still maintains its reputation for dyeing. Thyatira teems with relics of a former splendid city, though there is not the trace of the site of any ruin or early building. Fellows saw a vast number of parts of columns, with fragments of granite, and grey, white, and red-vined marble.

THYINE-WOOD. A species of cedar growing in Spain, and on the coast of Africa, in the neighbourhood of Mount Atlas. It was the cedar or citron-wood of the Romans, the Thuja articulata of Linnaeus. The timber being highly aromatic was much employed in ornamental wood-work, for tables, statues, etc.; and it was almost indestructible. It was frequently employed to give fragrance to sacrifices. The tree grows to the height of thirty feet or even more, and resembles the cypress in its boughs, leaves, and fruit.

It produces the Sandarach resin of commerce. The wood-work of the roof of the celebrated mosque, now the cathedral of Cordova, built in the 9th century, is said to be of this wood. (Rev. xiii. 12.)

TIBERIAS. A city of Galilee built by Herod Antipas, and named in honour of the emperor Tiberius. It is situated on the western shore of the sea of Galilee, about four miles from its southern end; hence the sea of Galilee is sometimes called "the sea of Tiberias." (John vi. 1, 23; xxi. 1.) There are many traces of the city still existing, and fragments of granite columns lying about. For several centuries after the destruction of Jerusalem, Tiberias, now called Tubariyeh, was the central point of Hebrew learning; and it still retains something of its former reputation. According to the testimony of all travellers, it is a mean and miserable place; the houses are infested with swarms of fleas; it is even a current saying among the natives, "The king of the fleas has his court at Tubariyeh." The town was nearly all overthrown by an earthquake, January 1st, 1837, when about 700 persons perished in the ruins.

TIBERIAS, SEA OF.—See Sea.

TIBERIUS. Tiberius Claudius Drusus Nero, the third Roman emperor or Caesar, was the son of Livia and step-son of Augustus; and being adopted by that emperor, he was associated with him in the government probably three years before his death, when he succeeded to the throne in the year of Rome 767. John the Baptist commenced preaching in the fifteenth year of his aetate reign, and the crucifixion of Jesus took place two or four years later. Tiberius died A.D. 37, after a cruel reign of twenty-two and a half years. He is often mentioned under the title of Caesar. (Matt. xxii. 17, 21; Mark x. 14, 17; Luke x. 22-25; John xix. 12, 15.)

TIBHATH.—See Bethah.

TIBNI=building of Jehovah.
factious man who disputed the throne of Israel with Omri. (1 Kings xvi. 21-23.)

TIDAL = fear, veneration. One of the allies, who, with Chedorlaomer invaded Palestine in the time of Abraham. (Gen. xiv. 1.)

TIGLATH-PILESER = Asshur, Lord of the Tigris. The king of Assyria who was invited by Ahaz, king of Judah, to aid him against the kings of Syria and Israel, B.C. 739. This he did, but he proved a dangerous ally, and exacted a heavy tribute from Ahaz, so as to distress him without affording him permanent security. (2 Kings xvi. 7-10; 2 Chron. xxviii. 20, 21.) From the kingdom of Israel, also, he carried off the inhabitants of many cities, which was a forestalment of the captivity of that kingdom into Assyria. (2 Kings xv. 29; xvi. 3-6; 1 Chron. v. 26.) Fragments of the annals of his reign have been found on the Assyrian monuments.

TIKVAH = a cord, line. The father-in-law of Huldah; (2 Kings xxii. 14;) also written “Tikvath.” (1 Chron. xxxiv. 22.)

TIKVATH.—See TIKVAH.

TILON = gift. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 20.)

TIMBREL. The Hebrew word toph, whence the Spanish aluduña, rendered “timbrel,” denotes a musical instrument, somewhat like the modern tambourine. It was used on solemn and festive occasions. (Ex. xv. 20; Judg. xi. 34; Ps. lxviii. 25; cxli. 3.) It is rendered “tabret” (Gen. xxxi. 7; 1 Sam. xviii. 6; Job xxvii. 6; Jer. xxxi. 4.) Among the Egyptians the timbrel was of three forms; one was circular, another square or oblong, and the third consisted of two squares, separated by a bar. They were all beaten by the hand.

TIMÃOUS.—See BARTIMÆUS.

TIMNAH = portion assigned. 1. An ancient Canaanitish city, first assigned to the tribe of Judah, and afterwards to Dan. It was long in the possession of the Philistines. (Josh. xv. 10, 57; 2 Chron. xxviii. 18.) It is also written “Timnah;” (Gen. xxxviii. 12; Judg. xiv. 1, 5;) and “Timnathah.” (Josh. xix. 43.) The inhabitants were called “Timnites.” It is now called Tiba. and lies not far south-west from Zorah. (Judg. xv. 6.) 2. See TIMNA.

TIMNATH.—See TIMNA.

TIMNATHAH.—See TIMNAH.

TIMNATH-HERES. — See TIMNATH-SERAH.

TIMNATH-SERAH = remaining portion. — A town in the mountains of Ephraim, which was assigned to Joshua; and in which he was buried. (Josh. xix. 49, 50; xxv. 30.) It is also written “Timnath-heres” = portion of the sun. (Judg. ii. 9.) It is now called Tiba, and lies north-west of Gophna on the Roman road to Antipatris. The site is covered with foundations of what was once a considerable town, near which are seen several sepulchral excavations.

TIMON = honourable. One of the seven primitive deacons of the church at Jerusalem. (Acts vi. 5.)

TIMOTHEUS.—See TIMOTHY.

TIMOTHY = honoured of God. A disciple and the travelling companion of Paul. (Acts xiv. 3-5.) He was the son of a Christian Jewess, his father was a Greek. He was probably a native of Lystra, in Lycaonia. (Acts xvi. 1.) Timothy received a pious education from his mother and grandmother; (2 Tim. i. 5; iii. 14, 15;) and when Paul became acquainted with him, he was already of good report among the faithful. (Acts xvi. 2.) As the friend of the Apostle, and possessing his confidence and affection in a very high degree, he is called his “son.” (1 Tim. i. 2; 2 Tim. i. 2.) He appears to have been with Paul at Rome; but his later history is unknown. (Phil. i. 1; Heb. xiii. 23.) He is frequently called “Timotheus.”
TIM

(1 Cor. iv. 17; xvi. 10; 2 Cor. i. 19; Phil. i. 1; ii. 19; 1 Thess. i. 1.)

TIMOTHY, EPISTLES TO. The Pauline origin of these two pastoral Epistles is attested by Irenæus, Theophilus of Antioch, Clement of Alexandria, Tertullian, and Origen; and the diction everywhere evinces their Pauline authorship.

The First Epistle appears to have been written in some part of Macedonia, soon after Paul had left Ephesus the second time, about A.D. 57. After a residence of three years, Paul was unexpectedly compelled to leave Ephesus. However, before he departed by way of Macedonia to Greece, (Acts xix. 1–11; xx. 1, 2; 1 Cor. xvi. 8, 21,) he sent thither Timothy and Erastus. (Acts xix. 22.) Timothy executed his commission and returned at once to Ephesus, where Paul left him when he took his departure. (1 Cor. xvi. 8–12.) Paul wrote to Ephesus from Macedonia, giving Timothy the commissions which the Epistle contains, to appoint teachers and elders, possessing the requisite qualifications, who should conduct the affairs of the church. He also gave instruction on Christian doctrine, with warnings against heretical fables; and also counsels to Timothy himself. Timothy, however, could not long remain in Ephesus with safety; hence, as soon as the commissions were executed, he sought the Apostle, with whom he found him shortly after, when the second Epistle to the Corinthians was written. (Acts xx. 8–5; 2 Cor. i. 1–19.)

The Second Epistle appears to have been written towards the close of Paul's imprisonment at Rome, after the expiration of the "two years," mentioned in Acts xxviii. 30, and after the Epistles to Philemon, the Colossians, Ephesians, and the Philippians, but before the close of the winter of A.D. 63. (2 Tim. iv. 21.) During Paul's imprisonment, Luke and Demas were in his company; (Col. iv. 14; Phil. 24; 2 Tim. iv. 11;) Tychicus, Mark, and Timothy, were likewise with him for some time; (Col. i. 1; v. 7, 8, 10; Phil. 24;) but some of them had departed as messengers to the churches; Demas at least had forsaken him; (Col. iv. 7, 8, 14; 2 Tim. iv. 10, 11;) and Luke appears to have left Rome before the Apostle's death. (Acts xxviii. 30, 31.) Paul, having made his first defence, when he had just been delivered from imminent peril, and under the prospect of a speedy departure, wrote this Epistle to Timothy, earnestly summoned him to his side, and desired him to bring Mark with him. (2 Tim. iv. 9, 11, 21.) Among the delegates from the churches, who came with supplies to and to console and assist him on trial, (Phil. iv. 18; Col. iv. 12, 13; 2 Tim. i. 15–17,) Erastus ought to have come from Corinth, but he must have stayed. "Abode," i.e. remained, at home; and Trophimus was on his route with others, "but they left Trophimus at Miletus, sick." (2 Tim. iv. 20.) So also a cloak and certain documents seem to have been left at Troas by the Apostle by some of those delegates: "The cloak which thou broughtest me, and the books, especially the parchments." (2 Tim. iv. 13.) This Epistle was evidently the last which the Apostle wrote. It has been well called "the dying testimony of the noblest of the sons of men." It was written in order to encourage Timothy to faithfulness and perseverance in the discharge of his Christian duties, counselling him not to meddle with disputes on unprofitable topics, to be on his guard against false teachers, and to teach pure doctrine according to his early instructions.—See PAR.

TIN. The Hebrew word בֵּדִי, rendered "tin," (Isa. i. 25,) denotes an alloy of lead, tin, or other inferior metals. But in Num. xxxii. 22; Ezek. xxii. 18, 20; xxvii. 12, it seems to denote "tin." It was one of the articles of commerce which the Tyrians received from Tarshish, whether, as some suppose, it was brought from the British islands. In Zech. iv. 10, the Hebrew word rendered "plumbet," margin: "stone of tin," designates a lecithin.
TIP

Instrument of tin, as used by ancient builders.—See Lead.

TIPHASAH = passage, Ford. 1. A city situated at the lower fording place on the western bank of the Euphrates; now the village ed-Deyr. It constituted the north-eastern extremity of Solomon’s dominions. (1 Kings iv. 24.) 2. A city near Samaria. (2 Kings xvi. 16.)

TIRAS = subdued. A son of Japheth, from whom sprung a northern people, probably the Thracians. (Gen. x. 2.)

TIRATHITES = gates. Probably the name of a family of the Kenites. (1 Chron. ii. 55.)

TIRAS. The Hebrew word shaboriim, rendered “round tires like the moon,” (Isa. iii. 18.) and “ornaments like the moon,” (Judg. viii. 21, 26, margin,) denotes crescents, little moons, worn as an ornament on the necks of men and women, and also on camels. So also in Isa. iii. 18, the Hebrew word shebisiim, rendered “carnis,” margin, “network,” signifies little suns; hence an ornament with studs of precious stones, resembling suns, worn around the heads of females. The Hebrew word netipoth, rendered “collars,” margin, “sweet jewels,” (Judg. viii. 26.) and “chains,” margin, “sweetbaths,” (Isa. iii. 19.) properly signifies pendants for the ears, car-drops.—“And the sun-splangles, and the crescents; the ear-pendants and the bracelets.” (Isa. iii. 18, 19.)—See Jewels.

TIRIAKAH. A king of Ethiopia and Egypt, b.c. 714—694. The name of this Egyptian-Ethiopian monarch is written on the ancient monuments.

TIT

Lars of Hercules. He was the ally of the Hebrews; he also opposed the Assyrian power successfully, and maintained his Asiatic possessions. (2 Kings xix. 9; Isa. xviii. 1—7; xxxvii. 9.)

TIRAH = inclined. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. ii. 48.)

TIRA = fear. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 16.)

TIRSHATHA = austere, severe.

This title, borne by the Persian governor of Judea, is equivalent to Your Serenity. It is given to Zerubbabel. (Ezr. ii. 63; Neh. vii. 65, 70.) also to Nehemiah. (Neh. viii. 9; x. 1.) In the margin it is rendered “governor;” and in Neh. xii. 26, it is exchanged for pashia, i.e. pasha, or “governor.”

TIRZAH = delight. 1. A Canaan-ite, probably the present Tell elah, lying north of Mount Ebal; (Josh. xii. 24; Sol. Song vi. 4.) which Jeroboam made the capital of the kingdom of Israel, and which retained that rank till Samaria was built by Omri. (1 Kings xiv. 17; xv. 21; xvi. 6, 8, 15, 23, 24; 2 Kings xiv. 14, 16.) 2. A daughter of Zelophehad. (Num. xxvi. 33; xxvii. 1; xxxvi. 11; Josh. xvii. 3.)

TISHBITE. Elijah is called “the Tishbite,” (1 Kings xvii. 1; xxi. 17.) from a city of Naphtali called “Thisbe”—the captive.” (Tobit i. 2.)

TISRI.—See ETHANIM.

TITHES. The setting apart of the tenth of the produce, and even of the spoils of war, as a eucharistic donation for religious purposes, obtained among various nations in remote antiquity. (Gen. xiv. 16; Heb. vii. 4; compare Gen. xxviii. 22.) The ancient Egyptians devoted two-tenths of their produce for civil and religious purposes. (Gen. xlvi. 20, 26.) The custom of paying tithe was introduced into the Hebrew code. (Deut. xii. 11, 17—19; xiv. 22, 23.) The Hebrews were obliged to devote to Jehovah, as the sovereign of the State, after the payment of the first fruits of their produce, two-tenths of what remained. One-tenth of what was devoted to Jehovah, called the “first tithe,” was assigned to the Levites, as a remuneration for their services. (Num. xviii. 8—31; Lev. xxvii. 30—33.) The Levites paid a tenth of this tithe, called the “tithes of the tithes,” to the priests. (Num. xviii. 26—28; Neh. x. 37—39.) The tithes of the fruits of the earth could be redeemed or commuted, in case a fifth part of the estimated value was added to the whole amount. (Lev. xxvii. 31—33.) The Hebrew then carried the second tenth to the courts of the tabernacle or temple, as a thank-offering, in order to entertain the Levites and his own household. He was at liberty to sell it, but he was bound to carry the money to the sanctuary, to purchase what he pleased for the appointed feast. (Deut. xii. 17—19; xiv. 22, 27.) However, on every third year, called the “year of tithing,” the Hebrew celebrated the feast with the second tithe in his own house, in giving entertainments to the widow, the orphan, the stranger, and the Levites; (Deut. xiv. 28, 29; xxvi. 12—15;) which contributed to promote a kindly feeling, among all classes, throughout the nation. (Prov. iii. 9, 10; Mal. iii. 8, 9; Hos. ii. 9.) Though it does not appear that the law demanded the tithe of herbs, yet the Pharisees tithed their mint, anise, cummin, and rue; but it was not for this that our Lord condemned them, but for neglecting weightier things, as mercy, judgment, and faith, while they were so scrupulously exact in matters of inferior moment. (Matt. xxiii. 23—32.)

TITLE. The Greek word ἱεραία, rendered “tithe,” denotes the aper, point, or extremity of a letter; hence it is used to designate the least particle. (Matt. v. 18; Luke xvi. 17.)—See Jot.

TITUS=honourable. A Christian teacher, supposed to have been a native of Antioch in Syria, probably converted under the labours of Paul. (Gal ii. 1—3; Tit. i. 4.) He accompanied Paul and Barnabas from Antioch to Jerusalem, to consult the Apostles on certain Mosaic rites. (Acts xv. 2; Gal. ii. 1.) Titus appears to have accompanied Paul to Crete, where he was left to establish and regulate all the churches. (Tit. i. 5; Acts xix. 1—11; xx. 31.) Afterwards he was with Paul at Ephesus; whence he was sent by him to Corinth. (2 Cor. xii. 18; viii. 16.) When Paul departed from Ephesus he met with Titus in Macedonia. (2 Cor. ii. 12, 13; vii. 5, 6.) Titus was sent a second time to Corinth, when he took with him Paul’s second Epistle to the Corinthians. (2 Cor. viii. 6, 16, 17, 22, 23.) Titus appears to have been with Paul in Rome during his imprisonment; whence he was sent into Dalmatia. (2 Tim. iv. 10.)

TITUS, EPISTLE TO. The Pauline origin of this first of the pastoral Epistles is acknowledged in the canon of Muratori and in the Peshito; also by Irenæus, Tertullian, and Clement of Alexandria. It appears to have been written shortly after Paul’s first arrival at Ephesus, about A. D. 50. When Paul left Corinth he embarked at its eastern harbour, Cenchrea, intending to sail to Syria. (Acts xviii. 18.) In this voyage Paul appears to have visited Crete on a missionary tour, and left Titus behind him. (Tit. i. 5.) On his arrival at Ephesus, en route for Jerusalem, Paul met with Apollos, who was on his way to Corinth, apparently by way of Crete: the way by which the Apostle himself had come. (Acts xviii. 19—28; Tit. iii. 13.) Paul now wrote this Epistle, and forwarded it to Crete, by Apollos, encouraging Titus to bring to maturity the seeds which were sown among the degenerate Cretans, to establish the church; and at the same time exhorting Titus to be an example to all. —See CRETE.

TOAH. A descendant of Levi. (1 Chron. vi. 34;) also written “Tobu;” (1 Sam. i. 1;) and “Nahath.” (1 Chron. v. 26.)

TOB=good. A region beyond the Jordan; (Judg. xi. 3;) probably the same as Tobie or Tubin, in 1 Macc. v. 13. “Ishtob” is not a proper name.
but is properly rendered in the margin, “the men of Tob.” (2 Sam. x. 6.)

TOB-ADONIJJAH=good, my Lord is Jehovah. One of the Levites. (2 Chron. xvii. 8.)

TOBIAH=goodness of Jehovah. 1. An Ammonite, who became the favourite of Sennacherib, the satrap of the king of Persia in Samaria, who strenuously opposed the Jews in the rebuilding of Jerusalem. (Neh. ii. 10; iv. 3, 7; vi. 1, 17, 18, 19.) 2. One whose descendants went up from Exile. (Ezr. ii. 60; Neh. vii. 62.)

TOBIAH=goodness of Jehovah. 1. One of the Levites. (2 Chron. xvii. 8.) 2. One who went up from Exile. (Zech. vi. 10, 14.)

TOCHIEN=weighted, measured. A place in the tribe of Simeon. (1 Chron. iv. 32.)

TOGARMAH. A northern region, apparently in Aramania, peopled by the descendants of Gomer. (Gen. x. 3; 1 Chron. i. 6; Ezek. xxxviii. 6.)

Togarmah, or as it is sometimes written “Torgamah,” was celebrated for its horses and mules. (Ezek. xxxviii. 14.)

TOHU.—See TOAH.

TOL.—See TO.".

TOLA=a worm. 1. The eldest son of Issachar; (Gen. xlii. 13; 1 Chron. vii. 1.) his descendants were called “Tolaites.” (Num. xxvi. 23.) 2. The seventh judge or regent of the Hebrews. He was of the tribe of Issachar; his administration continued twenty-three years. (Judg. x. 1, 2.)

TOLAD.—See ELTOLAD.

TOMB.—See SEPULCHRE.

TONGUE. The Hebrew word ’leshon, rendered “tongue,” (Job xxxviii. 2; Ps. xiiii. 4; Prov. xv. 4.) has occasionally a remarkable usage, e.g., a “scourge of the tongue,” i.e., a tattler, a slanderer; (Job v. 21; Ezek. xxxvi. 3.; “a revolving tongue,” a froward tongue, i.e., “double tongued,” a flatterer; (Prov. x. 31; 1 Tim. iii. 8.) “tongue of the instructor,” i.e., a learned tongue. (Isa. i. 4.)

The word is also used for language, dialect, also a foreign tongue; (Deut. xxviii. 49; Isa. xxviii. 11; Ivi. 18; C81

TOPAZ. The Hebrew word ’pitdah, rendered “topaz,” (Ex. xxviii. 17; xxxix. 10; Job xxviii. 19; Ezek. xxviii. 13.) denotes a specie of gem, apparently the topaz. This transparent gem has a strong glass lustre; and its prevailing colour is golden or orange of every degree of shade. (Rev. xxiv. 20.)

TOPHEL=lime, cement. A place
TRA

in Edom, on the east of the Arabah; (Deut. i. 1) probably the place now called Tafulah, at some distance north of Bozrah.

TOPHET. — See Hinnom.

TORAH=torah, derit. This word, rendered “privily,” some suppose to be the name of a place not far from Shechem. (Judg. ix. 31.)

TORTOISE.—See LIZARD.

TOI=terror. A king of Hamath; (1 Chron. xviii. 9, 10;) also written “Toi.” (1 Sam. viii. 9, 10.)

TOWER. A fortified place, where the sentinels kept watch. (Judg. ix. 49; Isa. xxi. 8.) The monuments of Egypt and Assyria frequently exhibit fortified towers. Towers are still frequently seen in the vineyards of the East. (Isa. v. 2.) They serve as a shelter for the watchmen, and as a summer retreat for the owner. (Isa. v. 2.) Jehovah, as the protector of His people, is called “a strong tower.” (Ps. lxi. 3; Prov. xviii. 10.)

TOWN.—See CITIES.

TRACHONITIS=rough or rocky region. The north-easternmost of the districts into which the habitable region east of the Jordan was divided. It lay contiguous to Golanitis, Auranitis, and Batane, and extended from the territory of Damascus on the north, to near Bozrah on the south. The southern portion of the ancient Trachonitis, now called El-Lejah=asylum, is described by Drs. Robinson and Smith as a rocky region, lying east of the Nukrah. It is said to be almost a complete labyrinth of passages among volcanic rocks. The Lejah is the resort of several small tribes of Bedawin, who make it their home. This region was so infested with robbers that Augustus gave it to Herod the Great, on condition that he would extirpate them; and after his death it formed part of the tetrarchy of his son Philip. (Luke iii. 1; Jos. Ant. xv. 10. 1, 2.)

TRADITION. The Jews pretend, that besides the written law, God delivered to Moses an oral law, which was handed down from generation to generation. But the sources of their traditions were the various decisions of the Jewish doctors on points which the law had passed over in silence. The numerous traditions, which appear to have been a long time in accumulating, were not finally collected by the Rabbins, before their wars against the Romans, under Hadrian and Severus. Many of their traditions were in direct opposition to the law of God; hence our Saviour often reproached the Pharisees with preferring them to the law itself. (Matt. xv. 2, 3; Mark vii. 5-13.) All such traditions are not only destitute of authority, but are without value, and tend greatly to distract and mislead the minds of men. (2 Thess. ii. 15; iii. 6.)

TRANSCENDENCY. The Greek word ekelesia=ecstasy, rendered “astonishment;” (Mark v. 42;) and “amazed,” (Mark xvi. 8; Luke v. 2,) denotes astonishment, amazement, arising from any strong emotion, as admiration or fear. In Acts x. 10, the term is rendered trance," a term fell upon him." Here the word seems to denote a sort of ecstasy or rapture, in which, even though awake, the mind seems to be so wholly absorbed in the contemplation of the internal and mental images, as to be unconscious of external objects. In Num. xxiv. 4, 15, the term “trance” is supplied by the translators, no corresponding word being found in the Hebrew. The Hebrew word tardamah, rendered "deep sleep," (Gen. ii. 21,) is translated in the Septuagint, “ecstasy.” Lightfoot supposes that such was the nature of the “deep sleep” that fell upon Adam, that the whole scene of Eve’s creation was presented to his imagination as in a divinely-inspired dream; as it is evident from the context that he was fully apprised of the circumstances of her origination.

TRANSFIGURATION. The Greek word metemorphothe, rendered "was transfigured," signifies a change of form or appearance; (Matt. xvii. 2; Mark ix. 2;) and is so explained in Luke ix. 29, "the fashion of His countenance was altered." The precise mountain on which the transfiguration of our Lord occurred cannot now be ascertained. The design of His transfiguration—which in which the glory of Deity seemed to beam through the vail of His humanity—was evidently to attest, in the most impressive manner, the absolute Divinity of our Lord; (Luke ix. 35; John i. 14; 2 Pet. i. 16—18;) to furnish to His disciples evidence of the existence of a future state, by the appearance and conversation of Moses and Elias; and to show them that the new dispensation, founded by the Messiah, is not only the fulfilment of the old, but is now the only Divinely appointed means of saving instruction to the human race. (Matt. xvii. 1—9; Acts x. 43; xxvi. 22; xxvii. 23.)

Transgression.—See Sin.
Treasure City.—See Pithom.
Treasury.—See Temple.
Tree. In Eastern countries, trees are not only graceful ornaments in the landscape, but essential to the comfort and support of the inhabitants. The Hebrews were forbidden to destroy the fruit trees of their enemies in time of war, "for the tree of the field is man's life." (Deut. xx. 19, 20.) Trees of any kind are not now very abundant in Palestine. Some trees are found, by an examination of the internal zones, to attain to a very long age. There are some in existence which are stated to have attained a longevity of 3,000 years, and for some of them a still higher antiquity is claimed.

Tree of Knowledge.—See Life, Tree of, and Death.
Tree of Life.—See Life, Tree of, and Death.
Trespass.—See Offerings.
Trial. According to the Mosaic law, there were to be judges in all the cities, though weighty causes were submitted to the supreme ruler. As no mere formal or complicated method of procedure was established, trials were everywhere summary. (Ex. xxii. 21; xxiii. 1—9; Lev. xix. 15; Deut. xxiv. 14, 15.) The forum or place of trial was in the gates of cities. (Gen. xxiii. 10; Deut. xxv. 19.) In the trial, the accuser and the accused appeared before the judge; (Deut. xxv. 1;) the witnesses were sworn, and in capital cases also the parties concerned. (1 Sam. xiv. 37—40; Matt. xxvi. 63.) In order to establish the accusation, two witnesses were necessary, and, including the accuser, three; but the accused person had the liberty of being present. (Num. xxxv. 30; Deut. xvii. 1—13; Mark xvi. 59.) The sentence was pronounced; and the criminal, without any delay, even if the offence was a capital one, was taken to the place of punishment. (Josh. vii. 22; 1 Sam. xxii. 8; 1 Kings ii. 23.)

Tribe. The name of the great groups of families into which the Hebrew nation, like other Oriental races, was divided. The Hebrews are sometimes called "the twelve tribes," because the sons of Jacob, their progenitors, were twelve. (Gen. xlix. 1—28; Acts xxvi. 7; James i. 1.) The tribes were, however, in point of fact, thirteen. Instead of the tribe of Joseph there were the two tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh; (Gen. xlvi. 8—22;) but as the tribe of Levi received no inheritance, the tribes were but twelve in a geographical point of view. (Num. i. 32—35; Deut. x. 8; xviii. 1; Josh. xxi. 14; xvii. 14—18.) In the division of the promised land, the tribes of Reuben, Gad, and half of Manasseh had their lot beyond the Jordan, east; all the other tribes, and the remaining half of Manasseh, had their inheritance on this side the river, west. Each tribe was governed by its own rulers, and constituted, to a certain extent, a civil community independent of the other tribes. (Judg. i. 21—34; xx. 11—46; 2 Sam. ii. 4.) But, although in many matters each tribe existed by itself, and acted separately, yet in others they were closely united; for all the tribes were bound together, so as to form one community, and Jehovah was their King. (Josh. xxi. 9—34.) Notwithstanding occasional rivalships, the tribes continued united as one nation, till the death of Solomon, when ten of the tribes revolted from the house of David, and formed the kingdom of Israel.

TRIBUTE. Under all civil governments the subjects contribute, i.e. pay in tribute, or taxes, in support of the State, in return for the protection they receive in person and property. And, as no government can be carried on without expense, those who reap the benefits ought not to grudge the necessary expenditure, inasmuch as those who spend the time and talents in the public service have a right to a fair compensation for their labours.

The ancient Hebrews paid a tribute or capitation tax of half a shekel for the service of the sanctuary; but it is not certain that it was intend to be an annual payment. (Ex. xxx. 11—16.) This tribute, or "collection," was resumed in the time of Josiah, king of Judah. (2 Chron. xxxiv. 6.) The annual tribute established after the captivity for the service of the temple, was only the third of a shekel; (Neh. x. 32;) but it would appear, that in our Lord's time, this tribute, which was in a great measure a voluntary impost, had been raised to 20 quarters, which were taken to represent the half-shekel. (Matt. xvii. 24—27.)

The Hebrews also paid tribute in support of the civil government. (1 Sam. viii. 15; x. 27; xxvii. 27; 1 Kings x. 25; xi. 3, 4.) Extra taxes were occasionally paid; (2 Kings xvi. 29, xxvii. 37;) as were the excise on articles of consumption, (Ex. iv. 14, 19, 20,) and the transit tax imposed upon foreign merchants. (1 Kings x. 13.)

Tribute was also paid by conquered nations. (1 Kings iv. 21; 2 Chron. xxvii. 5; Dan. vi. 2, 3.) The Hebrews were at various times subjected to heavy tribute by their foreign conquerors. (Jos. Ant. x. 5, 6.) The capitation tax, established by Julius Caesar, was very high, and the oftener the Jews rebelled, the more oppressive it was made.

TRI

(TRI)

(Jos. Ant. x. 3, 6; xviii. 8, 5; xvi. 8, 1; Mark. xii. 4—17; Luke ii. 1—7; Acts v. 36, 37.) Still the Jews, even while in subjection to the Romans, seem to have boasted that they "were never in bondage to any man." (John viii. 33.) It is the duty of Christians conscientiously to pay the required tribute in support of the government under which they live. While they righteously "render unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's," they must also as conscientiously "render unto God the things that are God's." But should the government under which they live levy tribute in support of any object which they know to be directly opposed to the will of God, they are not only not bound to pay it, but bound not to pay it, inasmuch as no act of the legislature can make it right to support what God has forbidden.

Their refusal may subject them to certain legal penalties, but, while thus peaceably submitting, and respecting the authority, they commit no trespass.

(Matt. xxii. 16—22; Acts iv. 19; Rom. xiii. 1—5; 1 Pet. ii. 17.)

—See PRINTAN.

TRINITY. This term, which is not found in the Scriptures, properly denotes tri-unity, and is used to designate God revealed to us as Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. This doctrine, which is peculiar to the Christian system, cannot be said to hold a prominent place in the Old Testament, inasmuch as the great doctrine therein taught is the Unity of God, as opposed to polytheism. (Deut. iv. 35, 39; vi. 4; Isa. xliv. 6; xlv. 5.) All the efforts to prove that the Hebrews, before the coming of Christ, were fully acquainted with the doctrine of the Trinity, have ended in mere appeals to exalting Jews, who lived long after the New Testament was written. Undoubtedly there are passages in the Old Testament in which this doctrine is thought to be noticed incidentally. (Gen. xvi. 7—13; xviii. 17—38; xx. 24; xxii. 1, 12, 17, 19; xxxiii. 11—13; xxxii. 24—39; Ex. iii. 2—4, 14; xiv. 19; Num. xxii. 22—36; Judg. xiii. 3; 681 Neh. ix. 30; Ps. li. 11; Isa. xi. 2; lxiii. 9—11; lxviii. 12, 13, 16.) However, among these we do not include the passages in which plural terms for the Deity are used. (Gen. i. 26; iii. 22; xi. 7; Isa. vi. 8,) as they are susceptible of a different explanation. Without the light of the new Testament who could have found the doctrine of the Trinity noticed in the passages cited? It is the light which the new Testament casts upon many passages in the old, and that only which makes us acquainted with this doctrine in the old Testament. But it was only by the incarnation that the Trinity was fully revealed. (John i. 18.) Hence, throughout the new Testament, this doctrine stands forth as the fundamental doctrine of Christianity. (Matt. xxvii. 19; Luke iii. 22; John xiv. 9—17; 20; xv. 26; 1 Cor. xii. 3—5; 2 Cor. xiii. 13; Col. i. 15; 1 Tim. iii. 16; Tit. iii. 4—6; 1 Pet. i. 2.) The sacred writers, in all their references to the doctrine of the Trinity, uniformly ascribe the very same, and entire Divine perfection to the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit; and while the full and entire equality of each, in all essential respects, is exhibited, the Unity of the Godhead is nowhere aimed at by them. Yet, while maintaining the true and proper Divinity and perfect equality of the three personal developments of the Godhead, they nowhere represent them under the polytheistic aspect of three separate consciousnesses, wills, affections, etc. Such a view would consist with tritheism, or with all the polytheism which we can imagine to exist. Neither do the Scriptures anywhere countenance the doctrines of the eternal generation of the Son, and the eternal spiration of the Spirit from the Father. Indeed, any theory which derives the essence of Godhead of the Son and Spirit from the Father, seems to strike at the root of equal power and glory among the three manifestations of the Godhead. If, as we must believe, the Father, the Son, and the Spirit, are in all respects equal in power and glory, possessing numerically the same substance, how can the Father have the power to bestow personality on the Son and Spirit, when they have no such power in reference to Him? Though the term "person" occurs not in the Scriptures, yet personal distinctions in the Godhead are often found there. The personal developments of the Trinity necessarily presuppose some distinctions belonging to the Divine nature; but that these amount to separate persons or distinctive individualities as among men, would be a perilous position to assume. We can see no contradiction, no absurdity, nothing even incongruous, in the supposition, that the Divine nature has manifested itself as Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, while its essence and essential attributes are, and have always been, numerically one and the same. Unity, then, appears to be God concealed, and Trinity is God revealed. The Unity is God Himselves, i.e. simply in and by Himself considered, immutable, self-existent, eternal, and possessed of all possible perfection and excellence. But as to the Trinity—the Father is God as revealed in the works of creation, providence, and legislation; the Son is God in human flesh—the Divine Logos incarnate; the Holy Ghost is God the Sanctifier, who renovates the hearts of sinners, and dwells in the hearts of believers. The personal distinctions of the Godhead consist in these developments, made in time, and made to intelligent and rational beings. Strictly considered, distinctive personality, according to this view, is not eternal; and from the nature of the case it cannot be, because it consists in developments of the Godhead to intelligent beings; and those developments could not be made before those beings had existence. In the Scriptures no more than three personal developments are spoken of, because our natural and moral woes and wants require no more for their full alleviation and satisfaction. Hence, in accordance with this mode of explaining the doctrine of the Trinity, we use the beautiful language of the ancient church—"The Godhead of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, is all one; the glory equal, the majesty co-eternal. Such as the Father is, such is the Son, and such is the Holy Ghost. So the Father is God, the Son is God, and the Holy Ghost is God, and yet there are not three Gods but one God."—See Son, and Spirit, Holy.

TRIUMPH. The Hebrews, like other ancient nations, used to celebrate their victories by triumphal processions, the women and children went out to meet the returning conquerors with dancing, accompanying their steps with music, and singing hymns of triumph to Jehovah, their God and King. (Ex. xv. 1-21; Judg. xi. 34-37.) Triumphal songs were uttered for the living; (1 Sam. xviii. 6-8; Judg. v. 1-31; 2 Chron. xx. 21-24;) and eulogies for the dead. (2 Sam. i. 17-27; 2 Chron. xxxv. 25.) The conquerors were intoxicated with joy; (Isa. xliii. 11; lii. 7, 8; lxiii. 1-4; Jer. i. 2; Ezek. vii. 7; Nah. i. 15;) and the arms of the enemy were hung up as trophies in the temples. (2 Sam. viii. 13; 1 Sam. xxi. 9; xxxi. 10; 2 Kings xi. 10.) Among the Romans, a triumph was the highest honour granted by the senate to a general after having gained a signal and decisive victory. On such occasions the temples were thrown open, flowers decorated every shrine, and the altars smoked with incense. The general was accompanied in solemn procession by the senate and the magistrates, from the gate of the city, along the Via Triumphalis, and thence to the capitol. First came the musicians, followed by the spoils taken from the enemy, carried in open carriages. Next came the victims destined for sacrifice, with gilded horns, and decorated with flowers. The captive kings, princes, or generals, followed in chains, with their children and attendants. Then came the triumphal chariot, preceded by the lictors, in which stood the general, usually drawn by four white horses. The general was clad in a richly embrodered robe and tunic, with a wreath of laurel on his brow, in his right hand a laurel bough, and in his left a sceptre. His children sometimes accompanied him, or rode in a second chariot, escorted by the military tribunes who had served in the war. The rear was brought up by the victorious army, some shouting To Triumphe, others singing hymns to the gods as they passed along. The procession was closed by putting to death some of the hostile chiefs, and sacrificing victims to the gods. The Apostle alludes to the triumphs of the Saviour; (Col. ii. 15; Eph. iv. 8;) and to the triumphs of His followers in spreading abroad, in every place, the perfume of the gospel of salvation. (2 Cor. ii. 14-16.)

TROAS—penetrated. A city of Mysia, situated on the coast southwest of the strait of the Hellespont, and at some distance southward from the site of ancient Troy. The name Troas, or the Troad, strictly belonged to the whole district around Troy. Troas became one of the most flourishing of the Asiatic colonies of the Romans. Here Paul preached, and Ecichus was restored to life. (Acts xx. 8, 11; xx. 5, 6; 2 Cor. ii. 12; 2 Tim. iv. 13.) Troas is now a miserable village, called Eski Stamboul. Hundreds of columns lie scattered in all directions, and bristle among the waves of the ancient port. But the most striking ruins are about a mile from the sea; where the ground in every direction is strewn with carvings, mouldings, and pedestals, in marble, some of which have inscriptions, generally in Greek.

TRÖGYYLLIUM—a fruitery? A town and promontory on the western coast of Asia Minor, opposite to the island of Samos, on the ridge of Mount Mycale. (Acts xx. 15.)

TROPHIMUS—nourisher. A Christian of Ephesus, who was the innocent cause of Paul's imprisonment:
at Jerusalem; (Acts xx. 4; xxi. 29;) he was delegated to visit Paul at Rome, but was taken sick at Miletus. (2 Tim. iv. 20.)

TRUMPET. The Hebrew word keren, rendered "cornet," (Dan. iii. 5, 7, 10, 15,) signifies "horn;" hence keren hajobel, rendered "ram's horn," is properly the "horn of jubilee," i.e. the signal horn, with which an attack or alarm is sounded. (Josh. vi. 5.) The Hebrew word jobel is unhappily rendered "a ram," instead of alarm or signal. So also, the Hebrew sophar properly signifies "trumpet;" (Ex. xix. 16; Lev. xxv. 9; Josh. vi. 14; Job xxxix. 23; Judg. vii. 8; Joel ii. 1;) hence sophar hajobelim, rendered "trumpets of rams' horns," ought to have been trumpets of jubilee, i.e. of alarm, or signal trumpets. (Josh. vi. 4, 6, 8, 13.) These trumpets were crooked like a horn. In Ex. xix. 13, jobel is rendered "trumpet" or "cornet," by an elipsis of keren. The horns of neat cattle, as we know from the ancient monuments, were sometimes used as signal trumpets; but the passages cited do not prove that "rams' horns" were employed by the Hebrews. The Hebrew word hkatzetzerah, rendered "trumpet," (Num. xxxi. 6; Hos. vi. 8,) designates the straight trumpet, which appears to have been made of silver; (Num. x. 2; 1 Kings xii. 13;) and to have been chiefly used on military, (Num. x. 9; 2 Chron. xiii. 14,) and religious occasions. (Num. x. 10.) As the trumpet could not have been used as an appropriate accompaniment to the singing, its only office was to fall in at certain points, like our peaks, when intercession was expressed, to indicate an appeal to Jehovah for help, or to remind Him of His mercy. In the Levitical psalmody the trumpets were used by the priests, and the other instruments by the Levites. The peal of the trumpets was the appeal to heaven, the Selah—Hear, Jehovah! (1 Chron. xv. 18—24; xvi. 4—6; 2 Chron. v. 12; vii. 6; xxix. 26—28; Ezr. iii. 10; Neh. xii. 35.)—See SELAH.

687

TRUMPETS, FEAST OF. This Hebrew festival was celebrated on the first day of the seventh month called Tisri=October. The day was distinguished by the blowing of trumpets, all servile business was suspended, and particular offerings were enjoined. (Num. xxix. 1—6; Lev. xxiii. 24, 25.) The tenth day of this month was distinguished as the day of annual atonement for the sins of Israel. (Lev. xvi. 1—29.)

TRUTH. The Gospel, as being revealed by the true God, and as declaring the existence and will of the one true God, is called "the truth." (John i. 14, 18; vii. 32, 40, 45, 46; xvi. 13; xvii. 38; Rom. i. 18, 25;) It is the instrument used by the Holy Spirit in our conversion and sanctification—"the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God." (Eph. vi. 17; John xvii. 17, 19;.) So also, a lie was the instrument used by Satan to induce the first human pair to sin. (Gen. iii. 4.) The influence of the Holy Spirit is not to be identified with any supposed influence of the truth. Even Divine truth, independent of the agency of the Holy Spirit, is utterly powerless upon the human mind. There is, no doubt, says Dr. Payne, an essential tendency in the truth of the Bible to kindle holy affections and volitions; but how can it do either, before objective truth becomes subjective truth—the truth of the Bible, the truth of the mind. The truth of the Bible must enter the mind, and the mind must be enabled to perceive its meaning, previous to the purification of the affections. But how does a depraved mind come to understand and believe the gospel? "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God." He resists the entrance of the truth; he hates the truth; and, frequently, the more clearly its holy tendency is discerned, the more powerfully is his hatred elicited. If no direct influence of the Spirit be put forth, leading such a man into just views of the truth, how can we account for his first spiritual apprehensions of the gospel? To say that the Spirit is always in the word of truth, as surely and abidingly as magnetism in the lodestone, will not meet the case; for if the Spirit be in the truth, then the Spirit is not of course in the mind, and so cannot affect the mind, until the truth is in the mind, or is understood and believed. And then, how is the transition of the truth of the gospel to the mind to be explained? If it should be admitted that there is a personal agency of the Spirit at work, then what the Spirit does is either on the word, adding to its power, or in the man, leading him to attend to the truth and believe it. To the Spirit acting on the truth so as to strengthen it and make it efficacious, is to say that He makes the truth more true, which is absurd. The declarations in Scripture require a work of the holy spirit in the heart of man, inducing him, without doing violence to any law or mode of action in his nature, to attend seriously and earnestly to the things of Christ—Divine truth presented to him, in order that he may embrace it and be saved by believing it; (1 Cor. ii. 11-14; Gal. v. 7; 2 Tim. v. 10-13; 2 Tim. ii. 4; James i. 18; 1 Pet. i. 22.) Jesus Christ is called the "Truth," because He is the teacher of Divine truth; (John xv. 6.) and the Holy Spirit is called the "Spirit of truth," because He revealeth Divine truth to the mind. (John xiv. 17; xv. 26; xvi. 13; John iv. 6.)—See REGENERATION.

TRYPHENA=delicate. A female Christian who laboured to extend the Gospel at Rome. (Rom. xvi. 12.)

TRYPHENSA=delicately. A female Christian who laboured to extend the gospel at Rome. Rom. xvi. 12.)

TUBAL=metallic ore? A son of Japheth, whose descendants were called after him; supposed to be the Tibaret, a people of Asia Minor who dwelt near the Euxine, on the west of the Moschus. (Gen. x. 2; Isa. lxvi. 17; Ezek. xxvii. 13; xxxii. 26; xxxviii. 2, 3; xxxix. 1.—See MENECH.

TUBAL-CAIN=worker of metal-
TYP

The Greek word τύπος, generally signifies a resemblance, a model, however it may be produced, and is variously rendered “figure;” (Acts vii. 43;) “fashion;” (Acts vii. 44;) “form;” (Rom. vi. 17;) “ensample;” (Phil. iii. 17;) and “manner.” (Acts xxiii. 25.) The term type is also employed to designate the preordained representative relation which certain actions or objects in the institutions of the old Testament bear to corresponding actions or objects in the new Testament. In this it differs from a representation, memorial, or commemoration of an event which is past. As Adam introduced sin and misery into the world, so Christ introduced justification and happiness into the world. The work of the first Adam is typical of the work of the second Adam. (Rom. v. 14.) Melchizedeck’s priesthood was a type of Christ’s priesthood. (Heb. vii. 1—15.) Many of the institutions of Moses partook of the nature of types, and are called by the Apostle “the shadow of good things to come;” while the antitype is “the substance.” (Col. ii. 17; Heb. x. 1.) The daily and annual sacrifices of the patriarchal and Mosaic dispensations adumbrated the great sacrifice, which, in the fulness of time, was to be offered effectually, and once for all. It must be observed, that it was not the Hebrew high priest that was the type of Christ; strictly speaking, it was the office with which he was invested. It was not the animal or victim that was the type, but the symbolic act of which the animal was the object. It was not David or Solomon, or any other king, that was the type of Christ; it was the regal office with which these were invested, which was typical of our Redeemer as King of Zion. Neither was it the mingled mass of the Hebrews, pure and vile, that constituted the type of the church of Christ; it was the theocratic national institution—the symbol of the chosen and special community of which Jehovah is Head and Ruler. It is not persons so much as objects, offices, time, and actions, that really possess a typical character. The type, viewed simply in itself, is a symbolic representation of Divine truth. Its parallel is prophecy. “The difference,” says Dr. Alexander, “between a prophecy and a type is only in this, that the former teaches by words, the latter by things; the former by an artificial combination of signs; the latter, by a scenical representation of the whole truth at once. A word is the symbol of an idea; a type is the symbol of some principal or law, and the prediction of some general fact in the economy of redemption.” The ulterior and prophetic reference was not, indeed, the only purpose for which the Mosaic ordinances were appointed; as, in point of fact, they performed the two offices of symbol and of type. So far as they signified to the Hebrews any religious duties, they were symbols; and so far as they were Divinely appointed to represent things future they were types. We know of no types in the old Testament excepting those which are explained as such in the new Testament.

TYRANNUS=a tyrant. A man at Ephesus, probably a Greek sophist, in whose school Paul disputed, and thus taught the gospel, after he had withdrawn from the Jewish synagogue. (Acts xix. 9.)

TYRE=a rock. The celebrated and opulent emporium of Phenicia, situated on the coast of the Mediterranean, originally a colony of Sidon, hence called the “daughter of Sidon.” (Isa. xxxiii. 12.) Old Tyre, also written “Tzor,” (Josh. xix. 29, margin;) and “Tyrus,” (Jer. xxxv. 22; Ezek. xxvi. 23; Hos. ix. 13,) which is not mentioned by Moses or Homer, is usually held to have stood upon the mainland, and the more modern city upon a rocky island opposite. However, if the ancient city stood anywhere on the mainland, the last vestige has long since disappeared.
TYR

Hence others, from the significance of the name, Tyre=a rock, regard the insular city as the original one. Insular Tyre seems to be alone mentioned in the Scriptures, and is noticed as a strong city in the time of Joshua, when it was included in the limits of the tribe of Asher; but was never subjugated by the Hebrews. (Josh. xix. 29; Judg. xviii. 7; Jos. Ant. viii. 2, 7.) In the time of David, Tyre was a stronghold. (2 Sam. xxiv. 7.) Under the reigns of David and Solomon there was a close alliance of aid and commerce between the Hebrews and the Tyrians. The Tyrians had early become celebrated for their skill in the arts, in manufactures, in commerce, and in navigation. Their "merchants were princes." (1 Chron. xiv. 1; Isa. xxxii. 8; 2 Sam. v. 11; 1 Kings v. 1-6; vii. 13, 14; ix. 27; 2 Chron. ii. 3; Ezek. xxvii. 16.) Among the numerous colonies which the Tyrians sent out to distant regions, thus extending the benefits of civilization to remote countries, Carthage and Cadiz stand foremost in historical interest. Tyre was blockaded by Shalmanezer for five years, in vain; (Jos. Ant. ix. 14. 2;) and afterwards for thirteen years by Nebuchadnezzar. (Jos. Ant. x. 11. 1.) Tyre appears to have come under the dominion of the Babylonians; and afterwards under that of the Persians. Then came the celebrated siege by Alexander the Great, about 332 b. c., who succeeded after seven months in taking the island city, after having, with great labour, thrown up a causeway or mole, from the main land to the walls. By the erection of this causeway, which was half a mile in length, the materials of the city on the mainland would be hurled into the water; the island was turned into a peninsula, and the city rendered accessible by land forces. The mole divided the strait into two harbours. Insular Tyre afterwards came under the Romans, and for ages continued a flourishing trading city. (Matt. xi. 21; xv. 21; Mark iii. 8; vii. 1; Luke vi. 17; x. 18; Acts xxi. 3.)

ULA

The present city Sur, lies only upon the eastern part of the island, on the junction of the island and isthmus. The houses are mostly mere hovels, one story high, with flat roofs; and the streets are narrow, crooked, and filthy. Yet the numerous palm trees, and the pride of India trees, interspersed among the houses and gardens, throw over the city an Oriental charm. The population is somewhat less than 30,000 souls. The earthquake of 1837 did great injury to Tyre; and twelve persons were killed, and thirty wounded. On the 24th of September, 1840, Tyre was bombarded and captured by the allied fleet, under Admiral Stedford, and placed once more under Turkish misrule. The Hebrew prophets denounced fearful judgments against Tyre for her idolatry and wickedness. (Isa. xxiii. 1-18; Ezek. xxvii. 7-24; xxviii. 1-36; xxxvii. 1-19; xxxix. 18.) And how truthfully their predictions have been accomplished may be seen in the existing ruins scattered along the shore, and the number of splendid columns lying in heaps beneath the waves. This ancient city has indeed become like the top of a rock, "a place to spread nets upon."—See Sidon.

TYRUS.—See Tyre.

TZIDON.—See Sidon.

TZOR.—See Tyre.

U

UEL=will of God? One of the sons of Bani. (Ezr. x. 34.)

UKNAZ.—See Kenaz.

ULAI. A river flowing by the city Shushan; and one of the rivers whose waters were said to be so pure that the Persian kings would drink no other. (Dan. viii. 2.) It was the Eulaus of the Greeks, and is identified with the river of Delphus, which enters the Karun: though Mr. Layard identifies it with the Karun itself.—See Shuskan.
ULA

ULAM—a vestibule. 1. A descendant of Manasseh. (1 Chron. vii. 16.) 2. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 39, 40.)

ULLA=yoke. A descendant of Asher. (1 Chron. vii. 39.)

UMMAH=conjunction. A city in Asher. (Josh. xix. 30.)

UNCLEAN.—See CLEAN.

UNCTION.—See OINTMENT.

UNICORN. The Hebrew word reem, rendered "unicorn," furnishes no evidence that such a single-horned animal was known to the Hebrews. It is now generally understood to denote the buffalo, a wild and ferocious animal, well known to the Hebrews, bearing a similar relation to the ox as the wild ass does to the domestic one. It properly belongs to a species of ox, bos bubalis, found in India. This species, in the wild state, lives in herds of considerable numbers, frequenting moist and marshy situations. It is a different species from the bubalus giganteus, the wild buffalo of the Abyssinian forests; and also different from the buffalo—a name misapplied to the bison—which, in vast herds, roam over the western wilds of North America. The Septuagint translates the Hebrew term reem, by monokerota; the Vulgate, unicorn, an animal which most natural historians have held to be fabulous, but which a few years since was said to have been discovered in the deserts of Thibet. But this sense is inadmissible; since the unicorn, as described, resembles the horse much more than it does the ox, and is in any case an extremely rare animal; while the reem was an animal frequent and well known in Palestine and the adjacent regions. The reem doubtless existed anciently in Palestine; though probably in a wild state, and unsaddled to labour. In the Scriptures it is several times coupled with, or compared to, the ox. (Num. xxiii. 22; Deut. xxxiii. 17; Job xxxix. 3, 10; Ps. xxii. 21; xxxix. 6; xcvii. 10; Isa. xxxiv. 7.) The actual existence of the buffalo in Palestine leaves little doubt that it is the reem of the Hebrew Scriptures; for which the several versions have substituted the apparently fabulous unicorn. Dr. Robinson, when in the plain near the Jordan, saw large herds of horned cattle, among which were many buffaloes, which were returning from pasture, to pass the night near the tents of their Arab owners. They are described as a shy, ill-looking, ill-tempered animal. They are also very common in Egypt, being kept both for milk and for labour; and are mingled with the next cattle. The term "unicorn," in the margin, reads "Rhinoceros." (Isa. xxxiv. 7.)

UNITY OF THE SPIRIT.—See COMMUNION.

UNNI=dismayed. One of the Levites. (1 Chron. xv. 18, 20; Neh. xii. 3.)

UPHARSIN.—See MENE.

UPHAZ.—See ORIN.

UPPER-ROOM. A sort of guest-chamber, not in common use, in the upper part of the house, where the Orientals received company and held feasts, and where at other times they retired for prayer and meditation. (Mark xiv. 15; Luke xxii. 12.) Among the Hebrews it seems to have been on, or connected with, the flat roofs of their dwellings. Dr. Robinson describes the upper room of a respectable house at Ramleh, as a large airy hall, forming a sort of third storey upon the flat roof of the house. (1 Kings xvii. 19, 22; 2 Kings iv. 10; Acts i. 13; xi. 37, 39; x. 9; xx. 8.)

UR=light of fire, or perhaps a fortress, castle. 1. A city of the Chaldeans, and the birth-place of Abraham. (Gen. xi. 28, 31; xv. 7; Neh. ix. 7.)

Ur is supposed by some to have been also the name of a district. Recent researches have found the site of "Ur of the Chaldees" at the large ruin variously called Umqheir or Muqweyer, situated in southern Babylonia, on the right bank of the Euphrates, about sixteen miles N.W. by W. from Suk-es-Shuyukh. In 1854, this important ruin, the circumference of which is 2,946 yards, was examined by Mr. J. E. Taylor, the British Vice-Consul at Busrah. He describes the ruin as standing on but a slight elevation; and, owing to the flatness of the ground around it, the ruin forms an island in the middle, during the annual flood of the Euphrates. The principal building is a two-storied structure, the walls being a mass of partially burnt and sun-dried bricks, coated with a wall of kiln-burnt inscribed bricks, four feet thick. The bricks of the lower story are embedded in bitumen. In excavating the corners of this ruin, Mr. Taylor discovered two perfect inscribed cylinders, which contain, as Col. Rawlinson has shown, a memorial of the restoration of this structure, also the restoration of certain temples built by earlier monarchs, together with the execution of other works in southern Chaldea, by Nabonidus, probably the father of Belshazzar. Most of the mounds surrounding the principal ruin seem to have been the graves of the ancient people. One of the mounds which Mr. Taylor opened was found to be full of a kind of coffins embedded in the sun-dried bricks of which it was composed. The remains were generally dispersed under baked clay covers, and in arched brick vaults. Coffins, strictly so-called, and such as have been discovered by Mr. Loftus at Warka="Erech," were not found here. Among the remains, in some cases, inscribed and uninscribed cylinders of meteoric stones were met with. Various other articles were found in different tombs—such as copper bowls, shallow clay dishes, large and small water jars; also gold and agate beads, copper Bangies, rings for the ears and toes, small bracelets, and the remains of a gold fillet or band, formed of pure beaten metal, about an inch broad. Most of these ancient relics are now deposited in the British Museum. 2. --See Ahasbal.

URBANE = politely. A Christian at Rome. (Rom. xvi. 9.)

URI = sery. 1. The father of Belaleel. (Ex. xxxi. 2; I Chron. ii. 20.) 2. The father of Geber. (1 Kings iv. 19.) 3. One of the Levites. (Ezr. x. 24.)

URIAH = flame of Jehoram. 1. A noble-minded Hittite, and one of David's distinguished officers. He was treacherously slain according to an understanding between David and Joab, in order that David's guilt, in the case of Bathsheba, might be concealed. (2 Sam. xi. 3—27. He is also called "Urias." (Matt. i. 6.) 2. See Uriah.

URIEL = flame of God. 1. One of the Levites. (1 Chron. vi. 24; xv. 5.) 2. The father of Michael (2 Chron. xiii. 2.)

URIAH = flame of Jehoram. 1. The Hebrew high priest in the time of Ahaz and Isaiah; (2 Kings xvi. 10—16; Ex. xxvii. 1—8.) also called "Uriah." (Isa. viii. 2.) 2. A prophet who was slain by order of Jehoiakim, king of Judah. (Jer. xxvi. 20—23.)

Thummiel, the symbol of Truth and Justice.

URIM AND THUMMIM = light and truth. i.e., revelation and truth. The sacred oracle or lot of the Hebrews, worn on or in the sacred breastplate, whereby, in matters of great moment, the high priest alone discovered the will of Jehovah the invisible King. (Ex. xxvii. 21, 28, 30; 1 Sam. xxviii. 6; Lev. viii. 8; Deut. xxxiii. 8.) Josephus supposed that the Divine response was taken from the degree of splendour exhibited on the twelve gems which decorated the exterior of the breastplate. (Ant. iii. 8, 9.) But Philo says the Urim and Thummim were two small images inserted between the double folds of the breast-plate, one of which symbolically represented revelation, and the other truth. (Philo 2.152.) The Hebrews, according to this view, may have had a custom similar to the ancient Egyptians, whose high priest, as superior judge, wore, suspended from his neck, the common little symbol of the goddess Thmei, holding the sign of life, with closed eyes; showing that the chief judge must only see the truth. The monuments frequently represent Thmei—the two truths, as bearing on her head the disc of the sun, the symbol of truth, and the ostrich feather, the symbol of justice, as in the woodcut; and honoured under the double character of truth and justice. Among the Egyptians, the symbol Thmei appears to have referred merely to judging in its narrowest sense; while the Urim and Thummim was a symbol of the judicial office in a broader sense, promising generally, to the high priest, Divine assistance in difficult and important decisions. The impartiality of the Hebrew judge with the Urim and Thummim is shown in Deut. xxxiii. 8, 9: "Who says unto his father and to his mother, I saw thee not, and his brother he recognises not, and his children he does not know;" words which receive illustration in a striking manner from the Egyptian symbol of truth and justice.
USU

USURY.—See PLEDGE.

UTHAI = whom Jehovah succours. 1. The son of Ammihud. (1 Chron. ix. 4.) 2. A son of Bigvai. (Ez. viii. 14.)

UZ = light sandy soil. 1. A region and tribe in the north-eastern part of Arabia deserta, between Idumea, Palestine, and the Euphrates, adjacent to Babylon and the Euphrates; called by Ptolemy Ausitas. Job was an inhabitant of "the land of Uz," which was probably an extensive district, and subject to Idumea. (Job. i. 1; Jer. xxv. 20; Lam. iv. 21.) 2. A son of Aram. (Gen. x. 23; 1 Chron. i. 17.) 3. The son of Dishan, the Horite. (Gen. xxxvi. 28; 1 Chron. i. 42.) 4.—See Huz.

UZAH = strong, robust. The father of Pala. (Neh. iii. 25.)

UZAH. A descendant of Joktan, whose posterity peopled a city and district of the Joktanidae in Arabia, probably the same afterwards called Sanaa, the metropolis of the kingdom of Yemen. (Gen. x. 27.)

UZZA = strength. 1. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 7.) 2. One of the Nethinim. (Ezr. ii. 49; Neh. vii. 51.) 3. A son of Merari. (1 Chron. vi. 29.)

UZZAH = strength. A son of Abinadab, a Levite, who was killed by the immediate act of God, for laying his hands upon the ark, in violation of the express provisions of the Divine law. (2 Sam. vi. 1—11; Ex. xxv. 14; Num. iv. 2—15; 1 Chron. xv. 12, 15.)

UZZEN-SHERAH = corner of Sherah, or Sherah's corner. A small city founded by Sherah the daughter of Ephraim. (1 Chron. vii. 24.)

UZZI = might of Jehovah. 1. A high priest of the Hebrews, who was succeeded by Eli. (1 Chron. vi. 6, 11; Ezr. vii. 4.) 2. A descendant of Issachar. (1 Chron. vii. 2.) 3. The father of Elah. (1 Chron. ix. 8.) 4. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. vii. 7.) 5. One of the Levites. (Neh. xi. 22.) 6. One of the priests. (Neh. xii. 19, 42.)

UZZIAH = might of Jehovah. 1. A king of Judah, who was elevated to the throne at the age of sixteen, and reigned fifty-two years, from 809 to 757, B.C. Uzziah was but five years old when his father was slain; hence it is disputed by chronologers whether to count the fifty-two years of his reign from the death of his father, or, eleven years later, i.e. from the time that he ascended the throne. Uzziah's arms were successful against the Philistines, the Arabians, and the Ammonites. Though so much engaged in military operations, he found time to cultivate the arts of peace, and to advance the interests of agriculture. He was for the most part obedient to the law; though on one occasion he attempted to usurp the privileges of the priesthood. For this act of impiety, committed in the twenty-fourth year of his reign, he was smitten with leprosy. The affairs of government were administered by his son Jotham. He is also called “Azariah.” (2 Kings xiv. 21; xv. 1-27; Isa. i. 1; vii. 1; Hos. i. 1; Amos i. 1; 2 Chron. xxvi. 1-23.) 2. The father of Jehonathan. (1 Chron. xxvii. 25.) 3. A son of Harim. (Ezr. x. 21.) 4. A descendant of Judah. (Neh. xi. 4.) 5. See Azariah.

UZZIEL=might of God. 1. A son of Kohath, the Levite; his descendants were called “Uzzielites.” (Ex. vi. 18; 1 Chron. vi. 18; Num. iii. 19, 27.) 2. A descendant of Simeon. (1 Chron. iv. 42.) 3. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. vii. 7.) 4. A son of Heman. (1 Chron. xxv. 4.) Some suppose him to be also called “Azarel.” (1 Chron. xxv. 18.) 5. One of the Levites. (2 Chron. xxix. 14.) 6. The son of Harshaiah. (Neh. iii. 8.)

VED

VAIL.—See Veil.

VAILEB=gift. Apparently a place in the territory of Moab on the Arnon. The passage in Num. xxii. 14, which reads, “Wherefore, it is said in the Book of the Wars of the Lord what he did in the Red sea, and in the brooks of Arnon,” ought perhaps to read, “Hence the saying in the Book of the Wars of Jehovah, ‘At Vaheb, in Suphah, and at the streams of the Arnon, etc.’” The passage would seem to be a fragment of a triumphant song. The margin reads, “Vaheb in Suphah,” understanding by the latter term the Red sea.

VAJEZATHA=white, pure. The youngest son of Haman. (Est. ix. 9.)

VALLEY. Palestine is an uneven and irregular country, “a land of hills and valleys.” (Deut. xi. 12.) The term “valley,” which is the translation of several different Hebrew words, is not only used of the long low plain adapted to cultivation, but also of a depressed tract, called by the Arabs a wady, which may be occasionally watered by a brook or torrent, and also of a ravine. Some of the valleys are sparingly supplied with verdure, and possess the aspect of absolute sterility, while others are partly overgrown with jungle and tangled brushwood, which often make the paths through them somewhat difficult. In Scripture there are several valleys mentioned, and as they take their names generally from adjacent places, they are mentioned in this work under their appropriate names. (Ps. lxv. 13; 1 Sam. xvii. 2; Isa. xl. 4; Jer. vii. 32; Deut. viii. 7; 2 Chron. xxxv. 22; Num. xxiv. 6; xxi. 12.)

Vaniah=a wailing. A son of Bani. (Ezr. x. 36.)

VASHNI. This Hebrew word, which is given in 1 Chron. vi. 26, as the name of a son of Samuel, is probably a corrupted form of the word rehadzahni, i.e., “and the second;” the word Joel is also left out, probably by an error of the抄本. The passage should read, “the first-born Joel, and the second Abiah.” (1 Sam. vi. 2.)

VASHTI=a beauty. The queen of Xerxes, king of Persia, whose degradation led to the advancement of Esther. (Est. i. 9-19.)

VEDAN. An Arabian city, whence wrought iron, cassia, and calamus were brought to Tyre. (Ezek. xxvii. 19.) The English version of the passage reads, “Dan also and Javan;” but the Hebrew reads “Vedan and Javan.” Gesenius says, the text should probably read “Adan and Javan.” The Javan here mentioned apparently designates Javana, a town in Yemen. Vedan probably refers to the city and mart Aden, on the southern shores of Arabia, in the province of Yemen. Edrisi not only mentions Aden with its port on the Red sea, whence ships sailed to India and China, but also enumerates among its articles of merchandise the very wares mentioned by the prophet. This important place, situated on the west coast of the Strait of Babel-mandeb, became a British dependency in 1840. It commands the Red sea and the sea of Arabia, as Gibraltar does the Mediterranean and a portion of the Atlantic; hence Aden has been styled "the Gibraltar of the East." "At Gibraltar," says the Hon. C. Cushing, "England has excavated for herself a citadel in the heart of a limestone mountain; at Aden, she has planted herself in an ancient crater, and sits secure within the primeval fortress formed by the lofty sides of an extinct volcano. The neighbouring mountains appear to be wholly volcanic. The southerly parts of Arabia on the Red sea and the Indian ocean, appear to have been, at an early period, the theatre of stupendous volcanic revolutions. Aden, as a part of Arabia, partakes of the peculiar climate of the country, which is nearly destitute of rivers. The climate is clear, pure, and dry. There are no sensible dews by night, and but a few days of brief showers during the year. All the fresh water is obtained from wells, some of which yield brackish water, and others water strongly impregnated with sulphur." Since Aden became a British possession it has become a flourishing place of trade, and is well supplied with all the necessaries of life. From its advantageous position and excellent port, it has become a place of importance as a depot and halting place for the line of steamers established between Suez, Bombay, Calcutta, the Indian Archipelago, and China. Already Aden has become the rival of Mocha, and the mart of an extensive traffic; and it is expected that the whole commerce of the Red sea, and especially that of Yemen and Hadramaut, will be transferred to it. A number of Banians, Parsees, Jews, and other merchants, have settled at Aden. It now contains more than 22,000 inhabitants.

VEIL. A covering, of which there were several kinds, used by females in the East, for concealing their face and person. The different Hebrew words rendered "veil," evidently designate some exterior article of female attire. Mitpahkat, rendered "vail," margin, "sheet or apron," (Buth. iii. 695) and "wimple," (Isa. iii. 22,) properly signifies a mantle, cloak. Radid, rendered "vail," (Isa. iii. 23,) and "veil," (Sol. Song v. 7,) signifies an out-of-door veil. Tzammath, rendered "locks," (Sol. Song iv. 1, 8; vi. 7; Isa. xlvii. 2,) seems to designate a kind of close veil. Taiph, rendered "vail," signifies a large outer covering, a veil. (Gen. xxiv. 65; xxxviii. 14, 19.) Lot, rendered "covering," designates a muffer, a veil. (Isa. xxv. 7.) Masrek, rendered "vail," designates a covering, a veil. (Ex. xxxiv. 33, 34, 35.) Real, rendered "muffer," probably denotes a light, thin veil. (Isa. iii. 19.) Masak, rendered "covering," also denotes a veil; (Isa. xxii. 8; 2 Sam. xvii. 19;) the same term designates the curtain before the door and the court of the tabernacle. (Ex. xxvi. 36; xxxix. 38; xl. 5; xxxv. 17; xxxix. 40.) But the veil or curtain of separation, which separated the holy of holies from the outer sanctuary, is called paroketh. (Ex. xxxi. 31, 33, 35; Lev. xvi. 2, 12; Num. xviii. 7; Matt. xxvii. 51.) The words kesuth ainaim, rendered "a covering of the eyes," (Gen. xx. 16,) do not designate an article of female attire, but are used in the sense of a present offered as an expiation for some fault, in order that one may shut his eyes upon it—take no more notice of it—a compensation for the wrong Abimelech did to Sarah by depriving her of her liberty, and a public declaration of his honour and her innocence. From the ancient monuments it appears that the veil, for concealing the face, was not worn by the females of Egypt till the conquest of that country by the Persians. In modern times, the ideas of decency required Oriental females to be veiled with great strictness. Some of the face-veils worn by modern Syrian, Arab, and Egyptian ladies, are made of white muslin, richly embroidered with coloured silks and gold, and hanging down behind nearly to the ground. Sometimes they are made of black crepe, and often ornamented with spangles, gold coins, false pearls, etc. The ladies of Syria often have the veil gracefully thrown over the tantaour, or horn. The Greek word ouchouia, translated “power,” is generally supposed to denote a kind of head-covering for females, a veil, hence the emblem of subjection to the power of a husband. But the Apostle, in pointing out certain irregularities in the Christian assemblies, observes that “every woman that prays or prophesies with her head uncovered dishonoureth her head,” i.e. her husband. Hence, as the woman is to be in subjection to her husband, the Apostle enjoins, “For this cause ought the woman to bring honour upon her head, i.e. upon her husband, for the sake of the angels,” i.e. the ministers, that they may not be put to the trouble of adverting to any such irregularities in the assemblies of the faithful. (1 Cor. xi. 3—16.)

VIKN. The operation of mining, and the art of purifying metals, attracted attention at a very early age of the world. (Gen. iv. 22.) The passage in Job xxviii. 1—11, in which metallic veins are mentioned, is remarkable from the light it throws on the method of mining then practised, and shows that the art had been carried to a high degree of perfection. It is not probable that veins of all the metals mentioned in the passage existed in the country in which Job dwelt, but he may easily have obtained information respecting them from the Egyptian and Phoenician merchants.

VERMILLION. The Hebrew word shasher, signifies red colour, red ochre; and is supposed to denote cinnabar, vermilion, a well-known metallic paint of a bright red colour. It was imported by the Phcenicians, in the form of a reddish sand, from their colonies in northern Africa, and was used in decorating houses, temples, and idols. (Jer. xxvii. 14.) Ezekiel, reproving the idolatry of the Jews, mentions “the images of the Chaldeans portrayed with vermilion,” on the walls of Assyrian palaces. The accuracy of the prophet is corroborated by existing Assyrian monuments. M. Botta noticed several figures on the walls of Khorsabad yet retaining a portion of the vermilion. And we have seen in the British Museum, among the marbles sent from Nimrud, by Mr. Layard, a large slab, with a figure of the king standing, holding in his right hand a staff, and resting his left on the pommel of his sword, still having the soles of his sandals coloured red.

VIAL. See Censor.

VINE. The vine is a noble plant of the creeping kind, whose fruit is celebrated in Scripture as one of the representatives of the three chief blessings of the year—“The corn, the wine, and the oil.” (Deut. vii. 13; Neb. x. 39.) The vine was cultivated at an early period after the deluge by Noah. (Gen. ix. 20.) Ancient authors tell us, that from the most ancient times the vine was cultivated in Egypt; (Gen. xil. 9—11; Herod. ii. 40, 41, 144, compare 17; Diod. i. 2, 15;) and the monuments exhibit numerous representations of the culture of the vine, the vintage, the wine presses, and the putting up of the wine in bottles or jars. Vines grew plentifully in Palestine, and were particularly fine in some districts. (Gen. xiv. 18.) They were usually propagated by suckers, and were cultivated like low bushes, or trained in festoons, so as to furnish an ornamental shade. The vintage, like the harvest, was a season of rejoicing. (1 Kings iv. 25; Mic. iv. 4.) Though the vine is still extensively cultivated in Palestine, yet little wine is made from the extensive vineyards. It is not to be wondered at that the vine should be cultivated for the sake of its solid fruit merely, when we know that the luscious fruit, which can be obtained at a cheaper rate than potatoes by the poor in Ireland, should form, in some districts, with oil and bread, the chief nourishment of the people for several months in the year. The grapes are not only eaten while fresh.
but also preserved on the cluster, pickled in must, in the form of raisins, preserves, jellies, confectionery, syrup, and sugar; and may be eaten with freedom even to satiety. Even the leaves are used as a vegetable, chopped meat and rice being rolled up together in single leaves, and boiled, make a very agreeable dish. The metaphorical expression, “vine of Sodom,” (Deut. xxxii. 32;) has been supposed to refer to the tree called suter by the Arabs, which abounds in the neighbourhood of the Dead sea. The fruit hangs in clusters, and when ripe resembles a large, smooth apple or orange. It is soft to the touch, but on being pressed or struck, it explodes with a puff, like a bladder or puff-ball, leaving in the hand only the shreds of the thin rind and a few fibres. (Jos. Wars. iv. 8, 4.)The old Testament church is the vine brought out of Egypt, and watered and protected by God. (Ps. lxxx. 8; Isa. vi. 1—7; Matt. xxii. 33—46.) The new Testament church is called a “vineyard;” (Matt. xx. 1—8; xxii. 28—31;) and the faithful are represented as being united to Christ as the branch is united to the vine. (John xv. 1—8.)—See Grapes.

VINEGAR. The Hebrews under the term hommez, not only included sour wine, but vinegar obtained from various sources. (Num. vi. 3.) Perhaps the most ancient kind would be the verjuice, or juice of the green grape, which is still carefully preserved in bottles. And even the green grape is sometimes thoroughly dried and ground to powder, and the powder bottled. These preparations give a fresh tart vegetable juice for all seasons of the year, for cooking meat and vegetables for the table; and also for making refreshing drinks. Vinegar is also made by pouring water on the grape juice, and leaving it to ferment. The Muhammadans seem to have no objection to using vinegar, though it has fermented.—See Myrrh.

VINEYARD.—See Vine.

VINTAGE.—See Grapes.

VIOL.—See Harp.
VIS

habitants of Tyre; (Isa. xxiii. 12;) of Babylon; (Isa. xlvi. 1;) of Egypt; (Jer. xlvii. 12;) and of Judah and Israel, i. e. the Hebrews. (Lam. i. 16; Jer. xiv. 17; xviii. 13; xxxiv. 4, 21; Am. v. 2.)

VISION.—See PROPHET.

VOLUME.—See BOOK.

VOPHSI.—my increase? A descendant of Naphtali. (Num. xiii. 14.)

VOW. Vows were not originally of Divine appointment, but originated with men themselves. The design of them was, in some cases, to express gratitude to God; in others, to obtain favour and mercy from him. Some vows were positives, by which property of various kinds, and even men themselves, might be consecrated to God, and which were capable of redemption; (Gen. xxviii. 20—22; Lev. xxvii. 1—25; Ps. lxvi. 13; Mark vii. 11;) with the exception of what was devoted by the vow called meros or the curse, i. e. to total destruction; (Ex. xvi. 14; Num. xxi. 2; Josh. vi. 17—26;) and of animals proper for sacrifices. Money, lands, and houses, which had been made the subjects of this vow, became the property of the sanctuary; but the lands might be redeemed before the year of jubilee. Other vows were negative, by which abstinence was promised from certain things, in themselves lawful, and which might be denounced “a restraint on the appetite.” (1 Sam. xiv. 24; Acts xviii. 18.) The principal among these last class of vows was that of the Nazarites. (Num. vi. 9—12; Judg. xiii. 2—5; Luke i. 13.) Vows were uttered audibly, and sometimes confirmed by an oath. (Num. xxx. 3, 11, 14; Judg. xi. 25, 36.) Though the Mosaic law held out no encouragement to the making of vows, it insisted on a scrupulous fulfilment of them when made. (Deut. xxiii. 21—22; Eccles. v. 4; Ps. lxxxvi. 11; cxvi. 18.) It not only permitted, in certain cases, the redemption of a vow, but also conferred the power on the father and the mother of annulling the vows of a daughter or wife. ii. 16.)

WAG

VULTURE. The Hebrew words daath rendered “vulture,” (Lev. xi. 14,) the rosh, rendered “glede,” (Deut. xiv. 13,) and da’asah, rendered “vulture,” (Deut. xiv. 13; Isa. xxxiv. 15,) appear to be mere variations of the same word, designating a species of ravenous bird, having a rapid flight, inhabiting ruins; some say the kite or falcon; others the black vulture. The vulture is a large bird of prey, somewhat resembling the eagle, of which there are several kinds, differing in colour and size; yet they are easily distinguished by their bald heads and partially crooked beaks. They are common in most parts of Asia, and are noted for the extreme acuteness of their powers of vision. They are accounted unclean by the Mosaic law. —See KITE.

WAFFER.—See BREAD.

WAGES. The Mosaic law strongly inculcated the duty of paying fair wages as the price of labour, and also payment as soon as the work was performed. (Lev. xix. 3.) And the denunciations of the prophets were very severe against those who oppressed the labourer in his wages. (Jer. xxxii. 13; Mal. iii. 4.) And the new Testament writers show that equity in wages forms an important part of Christian morality. (Matt. xx. 8; Luke x. 7; James v. 4)—See Hireling.

WAGON. The Hebrew word age-lah, rendered “wagon,” designates any wheeled carriage, probably as drawn by oxen; (Gen. xlv. 19; Num.
vii. 3;) also an ox-cart. (1 Sam. vi. 7.) In Ps. xlvii. 3, the term denotes a war-chariot; and in Isa. xxviii. 27, 28, a threshing drag or sledge, drawn by oxen. (Isa. v. 18.) The Egyptian and Assyrian monuments frequently represent carts or wagons drawn by oxen. We give the figure of a Philistine wagon from the Egyptian monuments.

WAIL.—See Mourning.

WALLS. The walls of ancient cities and of houses were generally built of earth, or of bricks of clay mixed with reeds or straw, and hardened in the sun. And sometimes they were cased with stone. (Gen. xlix. 6; Ps. lxxii. 3; Isa. xxx. 13.) Such walls could be easily destroyed. (Am. i. 7,10, 14.) The existing remains of some of the walls in Mesopotamia and Assyria are of an extraordinary thickness. The thickness of the wall surrounding the palace of Khorsabad is fixed by Botta at 48 feet 9 inches; a very close approximation to the width of the wall of Nineveh, upon which three chariots could be driven abreast. The wall of Babylon was 87 feet broad, and six chariots could be driven together upon it. Not unfrequently stonewalls with towers, and a fosse, surrounded fortified cities. (Isa. xi. 16; ix. 10; xxxi. 1; Neh. iv. 3; Zeph. i. 16.)—See Cities.

WANDERING.—See Camp.

WAR. From the dissensions of individuals arose, in process of time, the strife of families, contests between tribes, and eventually the wars of nations. Hence, as the conquering parties frequently enriched themselves with plunder, every member of the community accustomed himself to arms. (Gen. x. 8—11; xiv. 1—21; xxii. 22—34; xxxiv. 20—23.) From the existing monuments of Egypt and Assyria, we learn that war was, among the ancient nations, the main business of life. The Egyptians early possessed a considerable standing army, which was probably made up by conscription. Their armies, as represented on the monuments, were composed of troops of infantry, armed with the bow or lance; and of ranks of war-chariots drawn by two horses, which formed the cavalry of the age. (Ex. xiv. 6, 7, 9, 25, 26, 28.) The Assyrian monuments also exhibit the military force of the Assyrians as composed of infantry armed with the bow and the lance; also of war-chariots and regular cavalry. (Isa. xxxvi. 8, 9; Ezek. xxxii. 12; Nah. iii. 2, 3.) The Hebrews, while sojourning in Egypt, were evidently trained to arms, as appears from the incidents narrated in 1 Chron. iv. 22; vii. 21, where they are represented as defending the frontiers of the land from the marauding tribes of Arabia and Syria. After the Exode from Egypt, the Hebrews were engaged in hostilities with nearly every nation with which they came in contact. Their troops were composed of all who were able to bear arms, i.e. of all who were between the ages of twenty and fifty. (Num. i. 1, 2, 3, 49; xxxvi. 2.) In actual service, the whole body was not expected to take the field, except on extraordinary occasions. (Ex. vii. 9; Num. xxix. 3—6; Judg. xx. 1—11.) The following persons were excused from military service: 1. Those who had built a house and had not yet inhabited it. 2. Those who had planted an orchard or a vineyard, and had not yet tasted the fruit; an exemption, consequently, which extended through the first five years of such planting. 3. Those who had bargained for a spouse, but had not celebrated the nuptials; also those who had not lived with their wife for a year. 4. The faint-hearted, who would be likely to discourage others; and who, if they had gone into battle, which in those early times depended on personal prowess, would only have fallen victims. (Deut. xx. 5—9; xxviii. 30; Lev. xix. 23, 24.) Previously to going to war the heathen nations consulted oracles; but the Hebrews inquired of God, by means of the Urim and Thummim. (1 Sam. xxviii. 6, 15; Ezek. xxi. 21; Judg. i. 1; xx. 27, 28; 1 Sam. xxii. 2; xxx. 8.) Before going against a city, war was sometimes formally declared. (Judg. xi. 12—28; 2 Kings xiv. 8.) Peace was offered to the inhabitants on condition of subjection; but if they refused, every male was to be destroyed. (Deut. xx. 10—13.) As the Hebrew soldiers, in more ancient times, did not receive wages, excepting perhaps the officers and life-guard of the commander, but furnished their own arms and paid their own expenses, or were supported by their families, they necessarily received a division of the spoils of the enemy as the reward of the toils they had endured. (Num. xxxi. 4, 8; Judg. viii. 24, 25.) The soldiers left to guard the camp and baggage were entitled to the same share of the spoil as those engaged in battle; and in order to make a fair division, the flocks, cattle, and prisoners appeared to have been publicly sold and the money divided. The priests and the Levites also received a portion of the spoil. (Num. xxxi. 23—47; Ex. xiv. 9; Judg. v. 30; 1 Sam. xxx. 29—31.) In case, however, a city was subjected to the irrevocable curse, the soldiers were forbidden to plunder, and everything, generally speaking, was destroyed. (Deut. lii. 9; Josh. vi. 24—26.) In later times provisions were laid up for the soldiers against a time of war; (2 Chron. xvii. 12; xxxii. 28;) and troops were hired from the neighbouring kings. (2 Sam. x. 6; 2 Chron. xxv. 6, 9.) The Maccabees, in imitation of other nations, allowed wages to their soldiers. (1 Macc. xiv. 32; Luke iii. 14; Rom. vi. 26; 1 Cor. ix. 7.)

The Hebrews when they departed from Egypt, marched in military order, by their "armies" or companies of fifty, or five in rank and ten in file, with a captain over them. (Ex. x. 51; xii. 18, margin.) The Egyptian system of a decimal formation in divisions, on account of its efficiency in the various evolutions, continued to be practised by them. (Num. xxxi. 8; Deut. xii. 15; Judg. vii. 12, margin; Sam. viii. 12; xviii. 13.) The various divisions ranked, in respect to each other, according to their families. (1 Chron. xxi. 1—15; 2 Chron. xxv. 5; xxvi. 12, 13.) The leaders of the whole army was denominated the "captain of the host." (2 Sam. ii. 8; x. 7.) The Hebrew army essentially consisted entirely of infantry, as cavalry and chariots could be of no use except in the plains. (Deut. xvii. 16; Josh. xi. 6.) The infantry were divided into light-armed troops, and spearmen. (1 Sam. xxx. 1, 15, 23; 2 Sam. iii. 29; xxii. 30;) and were furnished with a sling and javelin, with a bow, arrows, and quiver; and also a buckler. (1 Chron. xxiv. 24, 34; 2 Chron. xiv. 8; xvii. 17.) After the time of Solomon, chariots formed a part of the Hebrew army; (2 Sam. viii. 4; 1 Kings x. 26; xxii. 32, 38;) and in later times cavalry were introduced. (2 Kings iii. 1—25.) The army was probably divided into the centre, left, and right wings, as would appear from the reference to the "captain" or "leader of a third cart." (2 Kings ix. 25; xv. 22.) Before battle the troops were exhibited to exhibit that courage which was required by the exigency of the occasion. (Deut. xx. 1; 1 Sam. xiii. 9—12; 2 Chron. xiii. 4.) The trumpets were sounded by the priests; (Num. x. 3, 10; 2 Chron. xiii. 12—14;) the war shout was raised, and the army advanced to battle. The attack, as still usual by the Orientals where European tactics have not been introduced, was characterised by the impetuosity of the onset, and if the front of the enemy remained unbroken they retreated, but soon returned to the charge with renewed ardour. The Roman armies generally stood firm, notwithstanding the violence of the onset. (1 Cor. xvi. 13; Eph. vi. 14; Phil. i. 27.) The consequences of victory were often fearful. Sometimes all the men were slain, their wives and children sold into servitude, and their cities razed to the ground. (2 Chron. xxvii. 9—18; Isa. xx. 3, 4; Mic. i. 11.) Frequently old men and women and children were slaughtered, and thrown into heaps, and other horrid cruelties committed. (2 Kings viii. 12; Isa. xiii. 16–18; Hos. x. 14; Am. i. 13.) On one of the Egyptian monuments are seen, among other trophies delineated, large heaps of hands placed before the king; an officer notes down their number on a scroll, each heap containing 3,000. On the Assyrian sculptures are seen, among other indignities, captives having their eyes put out, and others flayed alive, by their conquerors. (1 Sam. xviii. 27; 2 Kings xxv. 7; Josh. x. 24; Judg. i. 6, 7.) In some cases the conquered nations were merely made tributary. (2 Sam. viii. 6; 2 Kings xiv. 14; xix. 8–13.) It has been questioned whether wars are, under any circumstances, justifiable in the light of Christianity. While it is certain that the practice of offensive wars cannot be defended by reference to sacred history, it is equally clear, if wars must be, that they can only be consistent with the light of that dispensation which breathes forgiveness and forbearance, on the clear and obvious ground of necessity and self-defence. When the principles of Christianity shall have illuminated the minds of all nations, wars shall cease from the ends of the earth, and peace will universally prevail. (Ps. cxvi. 9; lxxvi. 3; Isa. ii. 4; Ezek. xxxix. 9; Luke ii. 14.)

WARD. A prison, or an apartment thereof. (Gen. xl. 8; Acts xii. 10.) Also a watch post at the gates of the temple. (Neh. xii. 26; 1 Chron. ix. 23.) This term is also used to designate a class or detachment of priests or Levites. (1 Chron. xxvi. 8; Neh. xii. 24; xiii. 30.)

WARS OF THE LORD, BOOK OF. An ancient document, evidently, used by Moses in the composition of the Pentateuch. (Num. xxii. 14.) It may have contained, among other matters, the history of the expeditions occasionally made by the Hebrews, while in Egypt, among the surrounding tribes. At any rate, some such a document seems to have been used by the writer of the books of Chronicles, and its contents are characterised as “ancient things.” (1 Chron. iv. 21–3; vii. 21, 22.)—See Scriptures.

WASHING.—See Bath, Hand, and Feet.

WATCH. In very early times, watchmen were employed to perambulate the streets of cities, to announce in a loud voice, or with a trumpet, the watch or time of the night, and to warn the inhabitants of the approach of danger. (2 Sam. xviii. 24; 2 Kings ix. 17; Sol. Song iii. 7; v. 7; Isa. xxi. 5, 6, 8, 11, 12; Jer. vi. 17; Ezek. xxxiii. 2, 6.) Hence the night appears to have been divided into three watches by the ancient Egyptians and the Hebrews. (Ex. xiv. 24; Ps. xc. 4.) The first, or “beginning watch,” extended from sun-set to our ten o’clock; (Lam. ii. 19) the “middle watch,” from ten at night till two in the morning; (Judg. vii. 19) and the “morning watch,” from two o’clock till sunrise. (Ex. xiv. 24; 1 Sam. xi. 11.) In later times, the Jews adopted the custom of the Greeks and Romans of dividing the night into four watches. The first, or “even,” extended from six o’clock in the evening to nine o’clock; the second, or “midnight,” from nine to twelve o’clock; the third, or “cock-crowing,” from twelve to three o’clock; and the fourth, or “morning,” from three to six o’clock. (Mark iii. 55; Luke xii. 38; Matt. xiv. 25.)—See Cockcrowing.

WATER. In this temperate climate, favoured as we are with never-failing streams, we can scarcely conceive the importance and value of water in Palestine and other regions of the East. During summer and autumn, when the small streams are dried up through want of rain, the inhabitants are entirely dependent upon the water derived from wells, or preserved in cisterns or reservoirs, which sometimes becomes unpleasant. Hence the water of running streams, as opposed to that of stagnant cisterns or pools, is called “living water.” (Gen. xxvi.
WAV

19; Zech. xiv. 8; John iv. 10, 11; vii. 38; Rev. vii. 17.) Water is commonly drawn out of the wells or cisterns by females, and carried, upon the shoulder or head, in large leathern or earthen vessels. (Gen. xxiv. 45.) In the East, the assuaging of thirst is one of the most delightful sensations that can be felt; (Ps. cxxiii. 6; Prov. xxv. 25,) hence, in several parts of Egypt and Arabia, considerations of humanity and hospitality have provided public fountains, or reservoirs, for furnishing travellers with water. (Ps. cxliii. 6; Prov. xxv. 25; Matt. x. 42.) Water was sometimes paid for, and is now occasionally in the East. (Num. xx. 17, 19; Lam. v. 4.) Throughout the East, it is customary to irrigate their fields and gardens by means of small canals or rivulets, which intersect them, and distribute the water in every direction. (Ps. i. 3; Prov. xxii. 1.) Water was an appropriate emblem of rich blessings. (Isa. xii. 4; lv. 1; Jer. ii. 13; xvii. 13.)—See WATER.

WAVE-OFFERING.—See OFFERINGS.

WAX. A soft, yielding substance, formed by melting the combs in which bees deposit their honey. It is not known whether the Hebrews were acquainted with the art of making artificial waxes from resins. (Ps. xxii. 14; lviii. 2; xvii. 5; Mic. i. 4.)

WAY.—See HIGHWAY.

WEAN. Most Oriental mothers suckle their children much longer than is usual in Europe, and the same custom seems to have prevailed among the ancient Hebrews. When Samuel was weaned he was old enough to be left with Eli for the service of the tabernacle. (1 Sam. i. 24.) As no public provision was made for the children of priests and Levites until they were three years of age, it is probable that they were not weaned sooner. (2 Chron. xxxi. 16; 2 Macc. vii. 27.) It is still customary in the East, when a child is weaned, to celebrate the event with a feast. (Gen. xxi. 8.)

WEAPONS.—See ARMS.

WEASEL.—See MOLK.
sion of labour better than the Egyptians. Whether the question of infant labour was then mooted, or whether there were any factory bills, we must leave to the political economist’s curiosity. At one period a distinguished Hebrew was the manager of one of the large establishments for spinning and weaving. (1 Chron. iv. 24.) Hence, in the Egyptian factories, the Hebrews undoubtedly learnt the arts of spinning, weaving, and dyeing, which they practised so well in the desert. (Ex. xxv. 4; xxvi. 1, 31; xxvii. 22; Lev. xiii. 48; Isa. xix. 9; Ezek. xxvii. 7.) Among the Hebrews, however, spinning and weaving appear to have been mainly in the hands of women. (Ex. xxxv. 25; 2 Kings xxiii. 7; Prov. xxxi. 13–24.) The looms of Babylon and Assyria were also celebrated among the ancients for the fineness and beauty of their productions. “I have had occasion,” says Mr. Layard, “to allude to their skill in the manufacture of linen and woollen stuffs, which were dyed, and embroidered, not only with a variety of beautiful ornaments, but with groups of human figures and animals.

Of all Asiatic nations, the Babylonians were the most noted for the weaving of cloth of divers colours. These manufactures probably formed one of the principal branches of trade of this “land of traffic’ and city of merchants.” (Josh. xii. 21; Judg. v. 30; Ezek. xvii. 4; xxvii. 24.)—See LINEN.

WEDDING.—See MARRIAGE.

WEEDS.—See COCKLE, and THORNS.

WEEK.—See SABBATH.

WEIGHTS. Among the Hebrews the shekel, the maneh, the talent, etc., were properly the denominations of certain weights; and, as such, were also applied to their equivalent values of money—of gold and silver. “The weight of the sanctuary” was probably the standard weight, preserved in the tabernacle or temple, by which all things valued by their weight should be rated. (Ex. xxx. 13, 24; Lev. v. 15; xxvii. 25; Num. iii. 50; vii. 19; xviii. 16; Ezek. xlv. 12.) The most ancient weights in the East, by which heavy goods were sold, were often, as in the present day, made of stone, which the merchant carried in a bag. (Deut. xxv. 13, 15; Prov. xvi. 11, margin.) In later times weights were made of lead. (Zech. v. 6.) Mr. Layard found, in the Assyrian ruins, a number of bronze lions and ducks, made of greenstone and other hard materials, of different sizes, which appear to have been Assyrian weights. The two large ducks weigh 480 oz. troy. Dr. Hincks thinks they are weights of 30 manas, or half a Babylonian talent. If so, the manas would be equal to a little over 16 oz. On the tombs at Thebes are representations of weights, having the form of stages, sheep, gazelles, etc. The weights used by the Hebrews probably differed at different periods, so that we can only arrive at a probable approximation to accuracy. The following estimates will be found sufficiently correct for all the purposes for which such tables can be used:

Hebrew Weights reduced to English Troy weight.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Gr.</th>
<th>20th</th>
<th>16</th>
<th>12</th>
<th>8</th>
<th>6</th>
<th>4</th>
<th>2</th>
<th>1</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Garah, one 20th</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of a shekel</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bekah, 10 garahs</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>10</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shekel, 20 garahs</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>20</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maneh, 60 shekels</td>
<td>2</td>
<td>6</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Talent, 50 manehs</td>
<td>10</td>
<td>120</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Relative value of Hebrew weights.

Talent ... 1
Maneh ... 20 1
Shekel ... 3,000 80 1
Bekah ... 6,000 120 2 1
Garah ... 60,000 1,200 10 1

WELLS. Wells of water were indispensable in a country of flocks and herds; (Ex. xxv. 27;) they were sometimes deep, and expensive to dig; (Num. xx. 17, 19; Lam. v. 4;) and to protect them from sand, they were covered usually with a stone. (Gen. xxix. 2–8.) To stop them up was, and still is, regarded as an act of hostility; and to invade the right of property in them was often the cause of sore contention. (Gen. xxi. 25; xxvi. 15.) The water is usually raised by the hand with a rope and bucket. But for the purposes of irrigation, different mechanical contrivances have been adopted. In Egypt, the gentlemen of the Scottish Mission saw a half naked person standing by a well, into which he dipped a bucket, which was attached to a transverse pole. By means of a weight at the other end of the pole, the bucket was easily raised and emptied into the ditch, which conveyed it over the field. On another kind of machine, the labourer sits on a level with the axis of the wheel or reel, and turns it by drawing the upper part towards him with his hands, pushing the rounds of the under part at the same time with his feet one after another. (Deut. xi. 10.) Dr. Robinson observed that the wheel or reel in Palestine is more rude; and a single rope is used, which is wound up around it by the same process.—See Water.

WEN. The Hebrew word jabal, rendered "a wen," denotes pistules, running sores, ulcers. Any animal having them was strictly prohibited from being offered as a sacrifice. (Lev. xxii. 22.)

WEST. As the Hebrew, in speaking of the points of the compass, regarded himself as looking towards the East, the word akkor = the West, signifies "behind;" (Judg. xviii. 12; Isa. ix. 12;) and "backward," (Job xxiii. 8,) i.e. the western quarter. (Gen. xxvii. 14; Ex. xxii. 22; xxvii. 12; xxviii. 12.) The same Hebrew word is also rendered "uttermost," "utmost," and "hinder," designating the western sea, the Mediterranean; (Deut. xi. 24; Joel ii. 20; Zech. xiv. 8; John xxiii. 4;) hence "a west wind." (Ex. x. 19.) The Hebrew words mebo hashemesh, i.e. "the going down of the sun," denote the West. (Deut. xi. 30; Josh. i. 4.) So also the Hebrew word maarak signifies the Occident, the "West," the place of sun-set. (Ps. lxv. 6; ciii. 12; cvii. 3; Isa. xliv. 5; xlv. 6.)

See East.

WHALE. The Hebrew word tan-

WHEAT. "Corn" is, in the Scriptures, the generic name for all kinds of grain, as wheat, barley, maize, etc. (Lev. ii. 14; 2 Kings iv. 42; Josh. v. 11; Ruth ii. 2.) The wheat in Syria and Palestine was the most common kind of grain. (Deut. viii. 8; Judg. vi. 11; 2 Chron. xxvii. 5; Isa. xxvii. 25; Ruth ii. 28; 2 Sam. xvii. 28;) and was yielded abundantly. (Gen. xxvi. 12.) The finest flour is called the "fat of the wheat;" (Ps. lxxx. 16; xiv. 7, 14, margin;) and the "kinder fat of the wheat." (Deut. xxxii. 14; Num. vii. 37.) Wheat was brought to the markets of Tyre from Minneth. (Ezek. xxvii. 17.) The fertile soil and climate of Egypt were long... renowned for the production of all kinds of grain; and even now two or three crops of wheat can be produced in one season. (Gen. xii. 10; xii. 57.) In Egypt there is a kind of wheat which bears several ears upon one stalk, as described in Pharaoh's dream. (Gen. xii. 5—27.) It is the triticum compositum, or many-spiked wheat, of which we give a figure. We have seen several beautiful plants of this kind of wheat, which were raised from a few grains found in an ancient mummy case. It grows upon a very strong reed-like straw, with seven, and we have seen it with eleven, ears or spikelets, well set with corn, upon one stem; the ear is bearded like barley. Ears of corn cut off before they are ripe, dried and slightly roasted in an oven, then mashed and boiled along with meat, is a common and savoury dish in lower Egypt. And in Palestine, Dr. Robinson says, "in the season of harvest, the grains of wheat, not yet fully dry and hard, are roasted in a pan or on an iron plate, and constitute a very palatable article of food; this is eaten along with bread, or instead of it. Indeed, the use of it is so common in this season among the labouring classes, that this parched wheat is sold in the markets." It was forbidden to eat the "parched corn," or even "green ears," before an offering of them had been made to God. (Lev. xxiii. 14; Ruth ii. 14; 1 Sam. xvii. 17; 2 Sam. xvii. 28.)—See Harvest.

WHIP.—See Scourge.

WHIRLWIND.—See Wind.

WIDOW.—See Marriage.

WIFE. Though the husband and the wife with us, stand on an equal footing in the eye of the law, and in general usage, they did not stand on the same ground in respect to Hebrew law and custom. In their relative position, under the Hebrew commonwealth, there were some important points of difference. 1. The Hebrew man or his friends could alone contract a marriage; and that not with the woman herself, but with her friends. The wife was commonly bought with a price, or by presents made to her relatives; and she usually had no voice in the matter, either of consent or refusal. 2. The Hebrew husband, whether lawfully or not, might, and did, often have more than one wife; both before and after the Mosaic law. But we nowhere read of a wife having more than one husband at the same time. 3. The Hebrew husband, besides his wife or wives, might and did have concubines. (Ex. xx. 7—11.) 4. The Hebrew husband might divorce his wife at any time, on slight grounds, by merely giving her a bill of divorcement and sending her away. But the Hebrew wife could never in like manner divorce her husband, nor lawfully separate herself from him. (Deut. xxiv. 1—4.) The main pre-eminence of a wife over a concubine, appears to have been the circumstance, that her children were the husband's legal heirs; while the children of concubines were not. It follows from these considerations, that as the facility of divorce rendered the tenure of marriage on the part of the Hebrew wife exceedingly uncertain, so the number of divorced females, who might marry again, gave more occasion for the application of laws respecting forbidden degrees of kin, than could possibly arise where marriage is a permanent relation ceasing only at death. As the ancient Hebrews, like the modern Orientals, practised polygamy, the natural tendency of such a custom was to cause the several wives then, as now, to despise each other, and to spend all their thoughts in plotting for the exclusive benefit of their own children. The Mosaic laws, if they did not sanction polygamy, did at least, in some instances, regulate it. Hence it was provided, that "if a man have two wives, one beloved and one hated, and they have born him children, and the first-born be hers that was hated," then he shall in no case be postponed to the son of the beloved. (Deut. xxi. 15—17; Ex. xxi. 10.) It would thus appear that polygamy, like the custom of blood-revenge, though not directly forbidden, was hedged in by so many indirect restrictions, as ultimately to die out of itself. Though the Hebrew wives held an inferior position to their husbands in the social scale, yet, as compared with other Orientals, their condition was easy and honourable. According to the ancient monuments, the women in Egypt lived under far less social restraint than in the East generally, or even in Greece. In these matters the customs of the Hebrews were more in accordance with the customs of the Egyptians, than with those of the surrounding nations. It was nevertheless deemed improper for a Hebrew lady to go much in public, or to mingle in promiscuous company. The married women were expected to keep at home, and occupy their time in the management of their household. (Prov. vii. 11; xiv. 1; xxxi. 10—31.) To these long-established ideas of propriety, as well as to the various reciprocal duties of husbands and wives, the apostles often refer. (1 Cor. xi. 5; xiv. 34; Eph. v. 22—33; 1 Tim. v. 2—16; Tit. ii. 3—6; 1 Pet. iii. 1—7.)—See Woman.

WILDERNESS.—See DESERT.

WILL. When we speak of the will, we should recollect that it is not a distinct power or faculty of the mind, but properly a state or condition of the mind itself. Though it is of the nature of the mind to will freely whatsoever it wills; yet, the motive, or in other words, the mind's view of the benefits to be secured, causes the volition. Hence to the motive—the good presented externally—the volition may be ultimately ascribed; but to the view which the mind takes of it—a view modified by physical constitution, by moral state, by ten thousand different causes—it must be proximately ascribed. Indeed, every subject of moral government must be conscious that he possesses ability or power of volition, and that he is capable of considering and reflecting upon the motives which are presented to his mind; otherwise he cannot be responsible for his conduct. By the fall of Adam, it is true, all men have lost the in-dwelling of the Holy Spirit, and are led captive by the devil; and consequently are destitute of disposition to do what God requires; still they are no less responsible, as being endowed with the faculties of the human nature, with perception, freedom to act as they choose, etc., as having the knowledge of what God requires, and sufficient power to render to Him the full obedience which He demands. And as man, previous to conversion to God, though possessing the power, is destitute of disposition to do what God requires, he cannot turn and prepare himself by his own natural strength and good works to faith and calling upon God. Nevertheless, without destroying his character as a free and accountable being, a degree of grace to enable him to consider his ways, and to return to God, is, through the meritorious vouchsafed to every man. Hence the faithful in every age acknowledged the necessity of extraordinary assistance from God. (Ps. li. 10; cxix. 18, 32, 35; Rom. vii. 8, 14, 26; 2 Cor. iii. 5; Gal. vii. 25; John xv. 4, 5.) In reference to the varied use of the terms "will" and "shall" by our Bible translators, it has been observed, that the frequent use of "shall," where, according to the present idiom of our language, "will" would have been the right rendering, is unfavourable to free agency. If it be going too far by saying that the word "will" is never used in that translation to denote simple futurity, but always volition, at the least it may safely be asserted that such is the rule generally observed. Innumerable instances might be produced of the use of shall as a sign of the future tense merely. (1 Kings xviii. 14; Matt. x. 21, 22.) The "will of God" is taken for His absolute will or purpose, which nothing can withstand. (Rom. ix. 19; Eph. i. 11.) We cannot ascribe to the WIL

Divine will or purpose anything unworthy of the moral Governor of the universe; and, in truth, we no more comprehend how He wills than how He acts, and therefore we have no better right to assert that He wills evil than He does evil. The “will of God” also signifies His laws or commands, as revealed in the Scriptures. (Matt. vii. 21; Rom. xii. 2; 2 Tim. iii. 17.)

WILLOW. The smallest of trees, of which there are several species, growing in low wet places. The Hebrew words, zaphzaphah, rendered “willow” (Ezek. xvii. 5,) and erob, also rendered “willow,” (Lev. xxiii. 40; Isa. xliv. 4; Job xl. 22; Ps. cxxxvii. 2,) probably designate different species of salix or willow, osier, spoken of as growing by the brooks. The willow is still found upon the banks of the Euphrates and the Tigris. And groves of the low, drooping willow, and the tamarisk, with their sad and plumelike tresses, droop over the glittering waters of the Jordan. The bark of the willow is used in dressing some kinds of leather, and the tree also yields a salt called salacia, which is said to be equally efficacious with quinine for the cure of fevers and agues. “The brook of the willows” is perhaps the Wady-el-Ahsy, which enters the south end of the Dead sea. (Isa. xv. 7.)

WIMPLE.—See Veil.

WIN.

WIND. The Hebrew word ruuah, rendered “wind,” signifies air in motion, as breath, wind. (Gen. iii. 8; Job xxi. 18; Ps. i. 4; Isa. vii. 2; 1 Kings xix. 11.) The “four winds” denote the four quarters of the globe. (Ezek. xxvii. 9; xlii. 16–18, margin.) Aerial currents or winds, are principally due to the unequal and ever-changing warmth of the earth’s surface; their velocity and force being determined by the suddenness and extent under which inequalities and changes of temperature transpire. Winds and storms all move in accordance with well-understood laws. The velocity of the wind, from a brisk gale to a violent hurricane, is from ten miles to nation of the tempest, which generally lasts three days. The sirocco, or hot wind of the desert, called by the Arabs shu kiech east wind, resembles the khamaisin of Egypt. Dr. Robinson, describing a violent sirocco to which he was exposed, says, "the wind blew a perfect tempest, the atmosphere was filled with fine particles of sand, forming a bluish haze; the sun was scarcely visible, and the glow of the wind came upon our faces as from a burning oven. Often we could not see ten rods around us; and our eyes, ears, mouths, and clothes, were filled with sand. The simoon—burning or poisonous wind, differs from the sirocco only in its greater heat; the haze, and sand, and discoloration of the air being alike in both. The simoon prevails only during the season when the khamaisin blows in Egypt. Should it overtake a traveller without water, it may, in certain circumstances, prove fatal to him. Still, the fabulous horrors formerly ascribed to the hot winds of the desert alarm the Arab who has plenty of water. See Dust.

WINE. See House.

WINE. The liquor manufactured from the juice of the grape. (Gen. ix. 21; xix. 32.) The monuments of ancient Egypt show, that from the earliest times the vine was cultivated, and wine manufactured in that country. (Gen. xl. 9–11; Num. xx. 5.) But it was not for the manufacture of wine alone that the Hebrews cultivated the vine; as that people, like the modern inhabitants of the grape-growing districts of Palestine, had, as the Rev. H. Holmes has shown, a variety of solid and liquid manufactures from the fruit of the vine. (Deut. vii. 13; Neh. x. 39.) The following Hebrew words are generally translated, in our version, by the term "wine."

1. Tiros. This term, rendered "wine," (Gen. xxvii. 28, 37; Judg. ix. 18); "new wine," (Isa. xxiv. 7); and "sweet wine," (Mic. vi. 15), is a collective term comprehending all the natural products of the vine, as grapes, green or ripe, old or new, raisins, etc.; but it never designates wine at all. As tiros is ranked with corn and the fruit of the orchard, it is spoken of as a solid product; (Deut. vii. 13; xl. 14; xxviii. 51; xxxix. 28; Isa. xxxvi. 17; xi. 8, 9; lxv. 8; Joel i. 10; iii. 19, 24; Prov. iii. 9, 10; Hos. ii. 8, 9, 22; vii. 14; ix. 2; Hagg. i. 11; Zech. ix. 17; Ps. i. 24; Neh. v. 11; 2 Kings xvii. 32; 2 Chron. xxxii. 28;) also as connected with the tithes and offerings of first fruits to God. (Num. viii. 12; Deut. xii. 17; xiv. 23; xviii. 4; 2 Chron. xxxi. 5; Jer. xxxi. 12; Neh. x. 37, 39; xiii. 5, 12.) Even in Hos. iv. 11, tiros, though rendered "new wine," is not an exception; neither is intoxication the sin referred to, but rebellion and idolatry.

2. Eshshah. This term, rendered "flagon;" (Sol. Song ii. 5;) "flagon of wine;" (2 Sam. vi. 19; 1 Chron. xvi. 3;) and "flagon of grapes," (Hos. iii. 1, margin,) properly denotes a cake, cakes prepared from grapes, raisins, or perhaps from the newly expressed grape juice boiled and mixed with grains of millet, wheat, barley, rice, or almonds and nuts, and especially the starch or flour of wheat, and pressed or compacted into a certain form. There are many other similar manufactures, known each by its peculiar name, which are brought to the markets of Syria for sale.

3. Sheemrim. This Hebrew word, rendered "lees," or "dregs," (Isa. xcv. 6; Ps. lxxv. 8,) designates preserves or jelis of fruit, specially of grapes. The modern Orientals preserve or pickle clusters of the grapes, by pouring upon them fresh must boiled down to one half, so as to fill the vessels. When ready for use, the grapes and juice are offered together, to be eaten and drunk; but the liquor, though exhilarating, is too sour for unaccustomed palates. One very common mode of making grape preserves is to boil the freshly expressed juice, after having removed the acidity and checked the tendency to ferment, by throwing in calcareous earth, then to boil it with various kinds of frui as apples, quinces, plums, and peaches; and of vegetables, green tomatoes, eggplants, pumpkins, squashes, and watermelon rinds. This preparation is used for sauces and preserves during the whole year. Grape sugar is derived from the boiling of grape juice to make grape syrup or molasses. After the lime and ashes have wrought its effect, and the liquor is boiling, the scum, which rises to the top, is laded off into other boilers; when a sufficient quantity has been amassed, it is again slightly boiled, cleansed with eggs, and poured into barrels for use. In the barrels it appears as a solid, uncrystallized, yellow substance, like pasta; it is cut out for use and sale with a broad knife. It is extensively used in the manufacture of confectionery; but is said not to have as much sweetness as the grape molasses or syrup. — See Honey.

3. Tayin. This Hebrew word, rendered "wine," designates grape juice, and is a general term, including every species of wine made from grapes; like the Greek term

3 It also designates fermented incipient wine; (Gen. ix. 21, 24; xiii. 32—34; Prov. xxi. 31; Isa. vi. 12; Eph. v. 18; 1 Tim. iii. 8; Tit. ii. 3;) and mixed wine, rendered strong and incipient by drugging with stupefying ingredients. (Ps. i. 3; lxiv. 8; Prov. xxiii. 30; Isa. vi. 22; li. 17; Jer. xxvi. 10; Mark xv. 23; Rev. xiv. 10.)

5. Atsia. This word, rendered "sweet wine," and "new wine," (Isa. xlix. 26, margin; Am. ix. 13, margin; Joel i. 5; iii. 18,) properly denotes the expressed juice of the grape; also the juice of the pomegranate. (Sol. Song viii. 2.) It seems to have been called by the Greeks glukos, and by the Romans mustum, i.e. must, new or sweet wine. (Acts ii. 13.) This liquor may be the simple boiled grape juice, without the addition of any earth to neutralize the acidity, boiled from four to five hours, so as to reduce it to one fourth of the quantity put in. At Constantinople it is called nardenh, and is sold by all the grocers, at the same price, or cheaper, than wine. It is used as a syrup for a beverage, one part of the syrup to from six to fifteen parts of water. It is not unfrequently used by children to eat with their bread, as we use molasses. However, it is not all made from the grape, but some of it from apples, and some of it from the pomegranate.

6. HEMER. This word, used as a descriptive, and rendered "red wine," (Isa. xxvii. 2) "pure," (Deut. xxi. 14;) "red," (Ps. lxv. 3,) signifies to smell or to foam. In the first passage, the term designates the vine-fruit, as ripe and ready to burst; in the other, the freshness of the juice, as it flows foaming from the vat. This unfermented "wine" ranked with corn, oil, etc., and was presented as an oblation to God. (Ezr. vi. 9; vil. 22.) The Chaldee form, hemsra, rendered "wine," may signify the foaming wine made strong, perhaps incipient, by the addition of drugs. (Dan. v. 1, 2, 4, 28.)
7. Meshek. This word, rendered “mixture,” (Ps. lxxv. 8;) “mixed wine,” (Prov. xxiii. 30;) and “drink offering,” (Isa. lxv. 11,) signifies mixture, mixed wine; and may refer to wine mixed with intoxicating substances; (Isa. v. 22; Prov. xcviii. 30; Rev. xiv. 8;) and offered in idolatrous libations; (Isa. lxv. 11;) also to render criminals about to be executed less sensible to injury. (Mark xv. 23.) Jehovah is represented as giving to the impenitent the stupefying mixture of His wrath. (Ps. lxxiv. 8; Rev. xiv. 10.) The wine that Wisdom mingles for her guests is just the opposite to this; it is indeed elevating, but not inebriating; represented as diluted with water or milk, as was the custom among all sober men. (Prov. ix. 3, 5; Isa. lv. 1.) The Hebrew word meqeg, rendered “liquor, margin mixture,” (Sol. Song vii. 2,) denotes spiced wine; apparently a special delicacy, prepared from the unfermented grape-juice, the flavour being heightened by aromatics, such as myrrh, fragrant cane, etc. Some wines are mixed with common resin, in such abundance, as to make them nauseating to a stranger.

8. Hometz. This term, translated “vinegar,” (Num. vi. 3; Ruth ii. 14; Ps. lxxix. 21; Prov. x. 26,) seems to designate not only that which has undergone the vinous, but also the acetoous fermentation, i. e. vinegar, sour wine. As a general term it designated a weak acidulated beverage, made from wine or other liquor, the ozos, i.e. the “vinegar,” or “wine,” presented to Christ. (Matt. xxvii. 34, 48; Mark xv. 23, 36; Luke xxiii. 36; John xix. 29, 30.)—See Vinegar.

9. Sobera. This word, rendered “wine,” (Isa. i. 22;) “drunkards;” (Nah. i. 10;) and “drink,” (Hos. iv. 18,) signifies that which is drunk freely; hence the name of an inebriating liquor. (Nah. i. 10.) It may have corresponded with the old Roman sapa, i. e. must, or new wine, boiled down to a half or to a third, with sweet herbs and spices to make it keep. But others suppose the Hebrew sobera to designate a kind of raisin wine, called paszva, by the Romans; perhaps the modern Oriental sebeeb, which is not fermented; and is sold by the sherbet sellers.

There is another kind of raisin wine, called nebeedh, of domestic manufacture, in Constantinople. It is a mild liquor, of exhilarating qualities; and is often distilled to make brandy.

10. Shecar. This word, generally rendered “strong drink;” (Num. vi. 3; Lev. x. 9; Judg. xiii. 4, 7; Isa. xxiv. 9; Ivi. 12; Mic. ii. 11; Luke i. 15;) and “strong wine,” (Num. xxviii. 7,) is used as a generic name for all the saccharine liquors made from the juice of the palm-tree, expressed dates, and other fruits, grapes alone excepted, which could be drunk freely. It is used to designate the luscious unfermented palm wine, which was sometimes boiled down; it was employed by the Hebrews in offerings to God. (Prov. xxxi. 6; Deut. xiv. 23—26; xxix. 6; Num. xxviii. 7.) Shecar is also used to designate a fermented palm wine, consequently possessing inebriating qualities; (Num. vi. 3; Prov. xx. 1; xxxi. 4; Isa. v. 11;) and these qualities were often increased by the admixture of stupefying drugs. (Isa. v. 22; xxviii. 7; xxix. 9; Ps. lxix. 12, margin.) In Deut. xiv. 26, the words yaya and shekar, translated “wine” and “strong drink,” evidently signify wine freis and palm fruit, i. e. solid produce which might be eaten.—See Honey.

Though, as we have seen, wine is not the most important, but rather the least so, of all the products for which the vine is cultivated; still, all that is now called wine in the East is as truly wine as that which is called wine in France. Whether boiled or not, whether sweet or sour, all the known wines are more or less intoxicating. The several liquid and almost solid products of the grape, as syrop, molasses, preserves, sugar, etc., are never called wines in the East. The insipissated grape juice, which yields a syrup or molasses, should never be confounded with insipissated wine, which is an intoxicating liquor. Indeed, if the grape had been used by the Hebrews mainly for producing an intoxicating liquor, as in some of the countries of Europe, one may venture to suppose that it would never have been held in the Bible the prominent place as a precious product that it now does.

—See Grapes, and Vine.

WINE-PRESS. The Hebrew word $\text{בַּשָּׁלֵה}$, rendered "wine-press;" (Isa. lxii. 3;) and "press," (Hag. ii. 16,) designates a kind of large wine-press, or vat, in which the grapes were broken or crushed by the treading of several persons. So also, the word $\text{גָּלָה}$, rendered "press;" (Joel iii. 13;) "wine-press;" (Lam. i. 15; Neh. xiii. 15;) and "wine-fat," (Isa. lxiii. 2,) designates the vat or trough, called $\text{מַקֶּב}$, (Rev. xiv. 19, 20; xix. 15;) in which the grapes, or other fruits, were trodden or crushed, whence the juice flowed off into the yekeb, called $\text{עֲפָלָה}$, (Mark xii. 1,) or lower vat placed near. The Hebrew term yekeb, rendered "wine-press;" (Deut. xv. 14; Judg. vii. 25; 2 Kings vi. 27; Job xxiv. 11; Isa. v. 2; Zech. xiv. 10; Jer. xlviii. 33; Hos. ix. 2;) "wine-fat;" (Hos. ix. 2, margin;) "press;" (Isa. xiv. 10; Prov. iii. 10;) "press-fat;" (Hagg. ii. 16;) and "fats," (Joel ii. 24; iii. 18,) signifies an excavated place; hence the wine-vat, or receptacle into which the wine-juice flowed from the press. Sometimes this term designates the storehouse, in which the grapes were preserved and the wine-press fixed. (Deut. xvi. 13; margin; 2 Kings vi. 27.) Dr. Robinson, when in the neighborhood of Gilgal, saw an ancient wine-press hewn in the rock. He says, "It was complete, with the upper shallow vat for treading the grapes, and the lower deeper one to receive the liquid; and might still be used, were there grapes to tread." The ordinary wine-press in the East is a kind of large cistern, with apertures near the bottom, through which the expressed juice runs into a vat beneath. Sometimes as many as five men are seen, with feet and legs bare, treading the fruit in the cistern; singing and shouting as in ancient times, while the grape-juice is flowing around them. The ancient Egyptian monuments exhibit a wine-press not unlike this, having a temporary beam extended over it, with short ropes hanging down; which by its rebound, aided the treads as they held by it.

WINNOWING.—See Threshing.

WINTER. In Palestine, part of autumn and the seasons of seed-time and cold, extending from the beginning of September to the beginning of March, were called "winter." (Gen. viii. 22; Ps. lxxiv. 17; Zech. xiv. 8; Jer. xxxvi. 22.) The cold of winter is not usually very severe, though the north winds, from the middle of December to the middle of February, are exceedingly penetrating. Snow falls more or less, but seldom lies upon the ground, except in the mountains. (Ps. cxlvii. 17.) In shady places the ice will occasionally bear a man's weight, but thaws as soon as the sun rises upon it. In the plain of Jericho, the winter is more genial than the spring of northern countries; while in the mountainous country around Jerusalem, it is often more inclement than might be expected. (Matt. xxiv. 20.) In this season, the most furious storms of hail are experienced all over the land; the brooks rise, and all their streams fill their channels; and thunder and lightning are frequent. Towards the end of January the fields exhibit the approach of spring. In the early part of April it is still cold, but less so, and the spring may be said to have arrived. (Sol. Song ii. 11.)—See Seasons.

WISDOM. The wisdom of God is that attribute of the Divine Being by which, with infinite skill, He orders all things for the promotion of His glory, and the good of His creatures. (Rom. xi. 3.) This is manifested in all His works; (Ps. civ. 24;) in the dispensations of His providence; (Ps.
and in the work of redemption; (Eph. iii. 10, 11, 1 Cor. i. 21, 24; Col. ii. 3; Rev. v. 12; vii. 12.) In Prov. i. 20-33; vii. 1-36; ix. 1-12, we have a beautiful poetical personification of the lessons of Divine wisdom, which, by the constitution of nature, and the counsel of Divine Providence, and especially by God's revealed word, are perpetually insculpted on men, admonishing them to walk in the fear of God. Some, indeed, understand wisdom here to be the same as the Logos or Word. (John i. 1, 14.) The term "wisdom" is also used of the Divine wisdom as revealed in and by Christ; (Matt. vi. 19; Luke vii. 37; xxiv. 49; Mark vi. 32.) also of Christ Himself, as the author and source of wisdom. (1 Cor. i. 30.) Among the Hebrews, the term hakaham—"wisdom," comprehended a wide circle of virtues and mental endowments. (Ex. xxviii. 3; xxxix. 6; 1 Kings iii. 18; iv. 30-33.) The wisdom or philosophy of the Greeks and Romans, as it stood in contrast with the simplicity of Divine truth, is called "philosophy," (2 Cor. i. 12:) "wisdom of this world;" (1 Cor. i. 20; iii. 19;) and "wisdom of men." (1 Cor. ii. 5.) In respect to Divine things, "wisdom," or the practical application of knowledge, is represented everywhere as a Divine gift. (Acts vi. 10; 1 Cor. xii. 8; Eph. i. 17; Col. i. 9; 2 Tim. iii. 15; James i. 5; iii. 13, 15, 17.)

WISE MEN. The Hebrew word hakaham, rendered "wise men," (Gen. xii. 8; Ex. vii. 11; Exch. ix. 17; Jer. i. 25; Est. i. 13,) not only designates men celebrated for wisdom, but also the Egyptian, the Chaldean, and the Persian magicians. The same term hakahmar, is used for a "wise woman," one noted for cunning or skill. (2 Sam. xiv. 2; xx. 10.) The Hebrew word shaarim, rendered "magicians," (Gen. xii. 8; Ex. vii. 11, 18, 19; ix. 11; Dan. i. 20; ii. 24,) properly signifies sacred scribes; and is applied to a class of Egyptian priests, and also to the magi of Babylon and Persia.—See MAGIC.

WITCHCRAFT. Among the Hebrews, persons who pretended the practice of occult arts were known by different names. They were said to possess the ob, or spirit of divination; rendered "a familiar spirit" properly "one inflamed, or rendered "a centipede." (Lev. xix. 19, xx. 6, 27; Deut. xvii. 11, 13, xxviii. 14, 2 Kings xxii. 20, xxiv. 24; 2 Chron. xxxviii. 6; Is. viii. 19, ix. 3.) Such also were the pythones, among the Greeks. (Acts xv. 16.) The word necedaleph, rendered "sorcerer," (Ex. vii. 11; Jer. xvii. 9, Dan. ii. 2; Mal. iii. 7,) i.e., like the Greek pharnakes, (Rev. xx. 6; xxix. 16,) designates one who uses magic formulas, incantations, a magician, also a woman of like practice; rendered "a witch." (Ex. xxii. 18; Deut. xvii. 19.) The word rabbim, rendered "a wizard," i.e., a wise man, denotes a sorcerer. (Lev. xix. 31; xx. 27; Deut. xviii. 11; 1 Sam. xxvii. 3, 9; Is. viii. 19; ix. 3.) The term kovin, rendered a "diviner," denotes one who foretells, a false prophet; (1 Sam. vi. 2; I Sam. xiv. 25;) and "soothsayer." (Josh. xxii. 22.) The word melarim, rendered "divination." (Deut. xvii. 10; Num. xxiii. 22; Jer. xiv. 14; Ezek. xxii. 28;) signifies divination by lot, also by arrows, entrails, and taraphim. (Ezek. xxii. 21, margin.) The word bethem, rendered "enchantments," (Ex. vii. 11, 22,) denotes secret or magic arts. So also the word yshem, rendered "sorcery," signifies incantation, sorcery; (Isa. xliv. 12;) and "witchcraft." (2 Kings ix. 22; Mic. v. 12; Nah. iii. 4; 2 Chron. xxxii. 28.) This word is rendered in the Septuagint by the Greek word pharmakeia, rendered in the New Testament, "sorcery;" (Rev. xiv. 11; xvii. 28;) and "witchcraft." (Gal. v. 20.)—See DIVINATION, AND ORACLE.

WITNESS. See Trial.

WITNESS OF THE SPIRIT. The witness or testimony of the Spirit is the inward assurance that every believer has, that the Spirit of God... immediately and directly witnesses to, and with, his spirit, that he is a child of God; that through faith in Jesus Christ, who died and rose again for him, all his sins are blotted out, and he is reconciled to God. (Rom. viii. 14—17; Gal. iv. 5—7; John i. 12; 1 John v. 9—13.) Mr. Wesley, speaking of the Spirit of God bearing witness with the spirits of believers, has well observed, “I do not mean hereby, that the Spirit of God testifies this by any outward voice; no, nor always by an inward voice, although He may do this sometimes. Neither do I suppose that He always applies to the heart, though He often may, one or more texts of Scripture. But He so works upon the soul by His immediate influence, and by a strong, though inexplicable, operation, that the stormy wind and troubled waves subside, and there is a sweet calm; the heart resting as in the arms of Jesus, and the sinner being clearly satisfied that all his ‘iniquities are forgiven and his sins covered.’ The immediate result of this testimony is, “the fruit of the Spirit—love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance.” (Gal. v. 22, 23.) And without these, the testimony itself cannot continue. For it is inevitably destroyed, not only by the commission of any outward sin, or the omission of known duty, but by giving way to any inward sin: in a word, by whatever grieves the Holy Spirit of God.”—See Adoption.

WIZARD.—See Witchcraft.

WOLF. The Hebrew word zeb, designates the “wolf,” so called from its tan or yellow colour. This fierce canine animal, in size and general appearance, resembles a dog. Its habits are not only carnivorous, but it is represented as continually on the prowl, especially in the evening when sharpened by hunger; (Isa. xi. 6; lxv. 25; Jer. v. 6; Hab. i. 8;) of an unsated appetite; and often indiscriminately killing sheep and goats, apparently rather to satisfy its malignity than its hunger. (Zeph. iii. 3; Matt. vii. 15; x. 16; John x. 12; Acts xx. 29.)

The rapaciousness of the tribe of Benjamin is compared to that of a wolf. (Gen. xliv. 27.) And the cruel conduct of the Hebrew princes is compared to the mischievous inroads of the same animal. (Ezek. xxii. 27.) Wolves are still abundant in Asia Minor; and it is not unlikely that they may occasionally wander from the mountain gorges of Cilicia, as far as the forests of Lebanon.

WOMAN. The companion and helper of man, “bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh.” Adapted to the man, as a counterpart of himself, and like him in person, disposition, and affections, she was destined to be united to him in the tenderest ties, to aid, sympathise with, and comfort him; in a word, she was his second self. (Gen. ii. 21—25; iii. 16.) In those parts of the East where the hallowed influence of the Bible has not prevailed, woman has been subjected to degradation, and viewed as little better than the slave of an imperious master. Being mainly imured within the harem, and prohibited from mingling in general society, their minds are left wholly uncultivated; and what time they can spare from their household duties is principally devoted to embroidery, dress, and smoking. This universal want of education, with the influence of polygamy, naturally disqualifies them from being the proper companions of their husbands. The state of morality in the higher circles, in some of the principal Eastern cities, consequent on this condition of society, is just what might be expected. Wherever the influence of christianity prevails, woman is invariably elevated to her natural position in society—the equal and companion of man. Henceforward, where free and honoured, women exert a power and influence upon society, and give the direction to its manners. European society has left far behind it the barbarian civilization of the East, entirely from the power of the wife over the husband, and that of the mother over the child. So that it appears as if nature attached our intelligence to their dignity, just as we attach our happiness to their virtue. At the beginning, God created only one man and one woman, and ever since the two sexes have been born in about equal numbers. Thus, each man ought to have his companion— it is the law of nature; all the rest is only barbarity and corruption.

—See Wife.

WOOD OFFERING. This festival of the oblation or offering of wood, for the keeping up of the perpetual fire upon the altar of the Lord, is only mentioned in Neh. x. 34; xiii. 31. The several families appear to have been appointed by lot to bring up the wood at times appointed, year by year. This offering was probably a postexilian institution; and is said to have been celebrated, with much solemnity and rejoicing, on the twenty-second day of the month Ab = August. It is called by Josephus the festival of the Xylophoria, upon which the custom was for every one to bring wood for the altar, that there might never be a want of fuel for that fire which was unquenchable and always burning. (Wars, ii. 17. 6; Lev. vi. 12.)

WOOL—See CLOTHES, and LINEN.

WORD OF GOD. The Greek word Logos, translated “Word,” is the name given to the Divine or pre-existent nature of Christ, designating Him as the great medium of communication between God and man. (John i. 1, 14; 1 John i. 1; v. 7; Rev. xix. 13; compare Heb. iv. 12.) This remarkable usage of the term Logos or “Word,” as designating not a mere attribute, but a real hypostasis or substantial Being, in some respects diverse from God, at the same time, God Himself, does not appear to have been derived from the poetical personification of “wisdom,” in Prov. vii. 12, 22; nor from later Jewish writers. As John has united the idea of proper personality with his designation of the Logos, it is certain that he could not have derived his views from the Logos of Plato, nor from that of Philo—which is a mere abstraction or personification of Divine power, intelligence, and wisdom. Though the Evangelist does not appear to have derived his views of the Logos directly from the old Testament; yet, it is not unlikely that they resulted from the manner in which the Hebrews were accustomed to speak of the “word of Jehovah,” as the principal instrument of all the communications that have been made from above, in a manner which not unfrequently led to personification. (Gen. i. 3; xv. 1; 1 Chron. xviii. 3; Ps. xxxiii. 6; cxix. 50; cxlvii. 18; Heb. xi. 3; 2 Pet. iii. 5.) The same usage is prevalent in the Jewish Tar- guns or Chaldee Paraphrases. Still the enlightened Hebrew regarded the “word of the Lord,” in such passages, as a communication, not as a real person. And if such communications are called the “word of God,” and even vividly personified, then it is nothing strange, that He who is the author and medium of all saving communication between God and man should be called the “Word of God.” In the prologue to the Gospel of John, the original state of the Logos, and His essential nature are first described; and then the developments of Himself which had been made either in the way of creation or redemption. He is eternal; was with God; was God. As such, He was the Creator of all things without exception. In particular, He was the source of all life; and as the author of spiritual life, He was the source also of all true spiritual light. (1 Cor. viii. 6; Col. i. 17—19; Heb. i. 2, 8.) The Logos was re-created—communicating with His apostate creatures, and disclosing them the way of salvation. Through various Divine revelations to the patriarchs, and to others under the law, whether as the angel Jehovah; or otherwise in visions, voices, and symbols, were revelations by the Logos. In the shekinah, the symbol of...
WOR

Divine presence over the mercy-seat, and also in the theophany described in Isa. iv. 1—13; we learn something of the glory of the Logos before He became incarnate. (John i. 14; xii. 41; xvii. 5.) Jehovah was indeed revealed in many respects in the Old Testament; but God as Father, and Christ as Son and Redeemer, and the Holy Spirit as Sanctifier, were, to say the most, only foreshadowed in the Hebrew Scriptures. It is the Logos manifested in the flesh, Christ the Son of God, who hath exhibited the character and designs of God, in the place of our redemption, in such a way as fully to satisfy our wants and alleviate our woes. —See Sox.

WOR

WORKS. The “works, or deeds, of the law,” is equivalent to the works which the law requires, or the entire performance of these works which the moral law, whether written or unwritten, i.e. law in general, whether applicable to Gentile or Jew, demands. (Rom. ii. 15; iii. 20; x. 6; ix. 12, 32; xi. 3; Gal. ii. 16; iii. 25, 10; Eph. ii. 9.) On the ground of works, i.e. of perfect obedience, and therefore of merit, none can be justified, because “all have sinned and come short of the glory of God.” If, then, any are justified at all, it must be of grace; but this grace, although freely bestowed, and without any just claims on the part of the sinner, is still not unconditionally bestowed. Faith in Him who died to save sinners is requisite for the reception of pardon; and he who is justified in this way, as a consequence of his faith, is still justified in a manner altogether gratuitous. But “works of faith,” or “good works,” are the fruits of sanctification by the Spirit of God; the good works which Christians perform, and which are sincere, are therefore acceptable to God under a dispensation of grace, although they do not fulfil all the demands of the law. (1 Thess. i. 3; 2 Thess. ii. 11; 2 Cor. ix. 6; Eph. ii. 10; Col. i. 10; 1 Tim. vi. 10, 25; vi. 18; 2 Tim. iii. 17; Tit. i. 16; ii. 7, 14; iii. 1, 8, 14.) On the ground of “works of the law,” Paul earnestly contends, at length, in his Epistles to the Romans and Galatians, that no one can be justified. But “works of faith” he everywhere treats as indispensable to the Christian character. So also the apostle James, when disputing with those who make pretensions to Christian faith, maintains that no man has any good claim to the faith of a Christian, who does not at the same time exhibit “good works;” in other words, he avers that a mere speculative faith is not a real Christian faith. (James ii. 26.) In a word, Paul has taught us, that justification is not on the ground of merit, but of grace; James has taught us, that a faith which will entitle one to hope for justification, must be accompanied with evangelical obedience. Both are true and faithful teachers; the doctrines of both are equally the doctrines of the gospel. “Good works,” in the gospel sense of these words, are an essential condition of our acceptance with God; but on the ground of perfect obedience to the Divine law, no one ever was or ever will be accepted.

—See JUSTIFICATION

WORLD. The Hebrews had no word to designate the whole system of created things; but when they wished to speak of the universe, they used the phrase “heaven and earth;” (Gen. i. 1; Ex. xxxi. 17; Matt. xi. 25; Acts xvii. 24,) or “heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is.” (Ex. xxii. 11; Ps. cxlix. 6; Acts xiv. 15; Rev. xiv. 7.) The following Hebrew words are translated “world.” 1. 1Heled, this world, as fleeting, transient, vain. (Ps. xvii. 14; xxix. 1.) 2. 1Hebel, the lower world, place of rest, hades. (Isa. xxxvii. 11.) 3. Tbel, the whole earth, the habitable globe; (1 Sam. ii. 8; Ps. xviii. 15; Ixxxvii. 18; xclii. 1; Isa. xiv. 17, 21; xxvii. 6; Prov. viii. 26;) the inhabitants of the earth; (Ps. ix. 8; xcviii. 13; xcviii. 9;) the kingdom of Babylon; (Isa. xiii. 11;) and the kingdom of Israel. (Isa. xxiv. 4.) 4. Olam, the world, properly worldly things. (Eccl. iii. 11;
Ps. lxxiii. 12.) The following Greek words are also translated "world: 1. Kosmos, the world, universe; (Matt. xiii. 35; xxiv. 21; Luke xi. 50, John xvii. 5, 24; Acts xvii. 24; Rom. i. 20;) the inhabitants thereof; (1 Cor. i. 9.) Also the earth, as the abode of man; (Matt. xiii. 38; Mark xvi. 15; John i. 9; iii. 19; vi. 14; xvi. 21, 28; xxii. 25; Heb. x. 5; Matt. iv. 8; Rom. i. 8;) the inhabitants of the earth; (Matt. v. 14; John i. 29; iii. 16; xvii. 14, 25; Rom. iii. 6, 10; Heb. xi. 7; 2 Pet. ii. 5; 1 John iii. 2;) the multitude, as we say "every body," (John vii. 4; xii. 19; xiv. 22; xviii. 20; 2 Cor. i. 12; 2 Pet. ii. 5;) also the heather world. (Rom. xi. 12, 15.) It also designates the state of the world, as opposed to the kingdom of Christ; (Matt. xvi. 26; Mark viii. 36; John xviii. 36; 1 Cor. iii. 21; 2 Cor. v. 10; Eph. vi. 14; James iv. 4;) and men of the world, worldlings. (John xii. 31; 1 Cor. i. 2; iii. 19; 2 Cor. vi. 10; Phil. ii. 15.) Also the Jewish dispensation, founded on Sinai and ended on Calvary. (Eph. i. 4; 1 Pet. i. 20; Heb. ix. 26.) 2. Oikoumen, the inhabited earth, the world as known to the ancients; (Matt. iv. 8; xxiv. 14; Luke iv. 5; Rom. x. 18; Heb. i. 6; Rev. xvi. 14;) the inhabitants of the earth; (Acts xvii. 31; xix. 27; Rev. iii. 10; xii. 9;) the Roman empire; (Acts xvii. 6; xxiv. 5;) Palestine and the adjacent countries. (Luke ii. 1; Acts ix. 28.) 3. Aion, the world, or age, the present time, or the future, as implying duration; (Matt. xii. 32; Mark x. 50; iii. 28, 29; Luke xvii. 30;) the present world or age, with its cares, temptations, evils, etc.; (Matt. xii. 22; Luke vi. 8; xx. 34; Rom. xii. 2; 1 Cor. i. 20; 11. 6, 8; 2 Cor. iv. 4; 2 Tim. iv. 10; Tit. i. 12; Gal. i. 4;) and men of the world, wicked generation. (Eph. ii. 2; Luke vii. 8; xx. 34.) Also the world itself, as an object of creation and existence. (Matt. xii. 40; xxiv. 3; Heb. i. 2; xi. 3.) This term also denotes the age or world before the Messiah, i. e. the Jewish dispensation; (1 Cor. x. 11; Heb. ix. 26;) also, after the Messiah, i. e. the Gospel dispensation. (Heb. ii. 5; vi. 5.)

WORMS. The following Hebrew words are rendered "worm:" 1. Tola, a worm, especially such as are bred in putrid substances, as old manna; (Ex. xvi. 35;) human flesh; (Isa. xiv. 11; lxvi. 24;) and vegetation; (Deut. xxxix. 30; Jon. iv. 7;) also the rucus worm, which furnished the crimson dye. (Isa. i. 18; Lam. iv. 5.) 2. Rimma, a worm, as bred from putridity, in the old manna; (Ex. xxxi. 24;) on the human body. (Job vii. 5.) Also, as preying upon the bodies of the dead, when merely wrapped up and deposited in places having communication with the external air, as was common in the East. (Isa. xiv. 11; Job xvii. 14; xxi. 26; xxiv. 20.) The term does not occur in the Hebrew of Job xix. 26. But these passages do not apply to the ordinary modes of sepulture in this country. 3. Sat, a worm or a kind of moth, in clothing. (Isa. li. 8.) 4. Zekkali, properly crawlers, serpents. (Mic. vii. 17; Deut. xxxii. 24.) The Greek word skoloe also denotes a worm; (Mark ix. 44, 46, 48;) and the term skolektroto, i. e. worm-eaten, worm-devoured, is spoken of the diseased with which God destroyed the impious Herod. (Acts xii. 23; Joel. iv. xix. 8, 2.)

WORMWOOD. Several species of wormwood are found in Palestine. The Hebrew word launah, designates a species of this plant, which was regarded by the Hebrews as noxious or poisonous; hence used tropically for a bitter lot, calamity, or trouble. (Deut. xxix. 18; Prov. v. 4; Jer. ix. 15; xxxii. 15; Lam. iii. 15, 19; Am. v. 7; vi. 12.) The Greek term apsinthus, rendered "hemlock," denotes a species of wormwood. (Rev. viii. 7.) The star called "wormwood," which fell at the sound of the third trumpet, was a symbol of the bitter calamities and dire destruction that awaited the ancient enemies of Christianity. (Rev. viii. 11.)—See GAU.

WORSHIP. The homage paid to God, under the sense of constant obligation to Him. The homage of the progenitors of our race was the direct and simple effusion of gratitude. And there can be no doubt that the Most High, whose essence no man hath seen, or can see, was pleased to manifest Himself in Eden, by an external symbol, to the eyes of His innocent worshippers. This Divine manifestation is called the “presence of the Lord;” and may have been in connection with the tree of life in the midst of the garden. (Gen. ii. 9; iii. 8.) After the first transgression the mode of the Divine manifestation was altered; and a mediatorial economy was established. Herewith, the homage paid by man was the service of a creature conscious of crime, approaching God through the medium of sacrifice, pleading for forgiveness, and confiding in mercy. Though the Divine manifestation was no longer immediate, yet a visible symbol of Jehovah was still vouchsafed in the shekinah or visible glory of the Word, from which Cain was exiled; (Gen. iv. 16; compare 2 Thess. i. 9; Ps. xcvii. 8;) which was seen by Abraham; (Acts vii. 2;) by Moses and the people; (Ex. iii. 2—6; xiii. 21, 22; xxiv. 16—18; Num. xiv. 10; xvi. 19, 42;) by the high priest; (Ex. xxv. 22; Lev. xxvi. 2;) and in the temple; (1 Kings viii. 10—12;) and finally, in the “Word made flesh.” (John i. 14.) Since this last visible manifestation, the worship of the Most High, which is no longer external and symbolic, has not been confined to any one place. “God is a Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in Spirit and in truth.” (John iv. 21—24.) God now manifests Himself to the spirits of His faithful worshippers, helping their infirmities. Hence the presence of the Lord is in every place where Christ is active in the Spirit, and where through Him the sole Mediator, the faithful pay their homage. And as the true worship of God is only in the inward heart, and the whole life a spiritual service, every Christian in particular, and every church in general, now represent a spiritual temple of the Lord. In the assemblies of the faithful, God by His Spirit diffuses His vital and sanctifying influence, and takes His devout worshippers into fellowship with Himself, from which they derive strength to do and suffer His will in the various scenes of life, whilst He there affords them a foretaste of the deep and hallowed pleasures which are reserved for them in His immediate presence for evermore. (Matt. v. 8; Heb. xii. 14.)

WRATH.—See ANGER.

WRESTLING.—See RACE.

WRITING. The origin of the art of writing is lost in remote antiquity. In all the most ancient documents that have come down to us, writing is mentioned as in general use. (Ex. xvii. 14; xxxi. 18; Hom. Ill. vi. 168; Od. xxiv. 228; Eurip. Hec. 856; Hippol. 356.) Indeed, the most enlightened critics now maintain that the origin of the art goes beyond the Mosaic age. And the traditions of all the nations of antiquity agree in this, that the art of writing belonged to the earliest period of the human race. The Phoenicians attributed its invention to Thaaut, the Chaldeans to Oannes, the Egyptians to Thoth, or Memnon, or Hermes—all bearing witness that this invention went farther back than the beginning of history. Phoenician colonists, personified under the name of Cadmus, the Hebrew Kedem—the East, probably about the time of Moses, brought the art of writing into Greece. As we have no account of any person ever inventing an alphabet who had not previously heard or seen one, we think that the art of writing was revealed along with speech, immediately by God, to the first human pair. The oldest writing was not the Egyptian hieroglyphic, and it is certain that the oldest Assyrian and Greek inscriptions are written in alphabetic characters. Ancient writings have come down to our time, on obelisks, cylinders, and slabs, some of which may be seen in the British Museum. The black stone, now in the East India House, is a black, or rather grey marble slab, covered with columns of cuneiform inscription. This remarkable stone document, of which we give a copy, was brought from Baghdad, near Babylon, and contains an account of the various architectural works of Nebuchadnezzar. Ancient documents on papyrus have been found in Egypt.—See Inscription, and Nebuchadnezzar.

Y

YARN.—See Weaving.

YEAR. The Hebrew word shana, rendered “a year,” properly signifies repetition, i.e., of the course of the earth, or of the seasons; hence the revolution of the seasons, a year. (Gen. i. 14; v. 3; Deut. xxxii. 7.) The natural, tropical, or solar year, is the time in which the earth moves in its orbit, or apparently the sun in the ecliptic, from one equinox or tropic to the same point again; and is equal to 365 days, 6 hours, 24 minutes, and 49 seconds. The ordinary civil year must, for convenience, consist of an exact number of days; and reckoning it at 365 days, it follows that after four such periods the earth will not have performed its fourth revolution by nearly an entire day. Hence the necessity of equating the time between the civil and the natural year. From the enumeration of the days of the De-
YEAD

there would be 37 lunar months.—See Month.

YEAR, SABBATICAL.—See FALLOW YEAR.

YOEK. The curved piece of wood upon the neck of draught animals, by which they are fastened to the pole or beam. The Hebrew word od, translated “yoke,” (Num. xix. 2; Deut. xxii. 3; 1 Sam. vi. 7,) is often used as the symbol of servitude; (Deut. xxvii. 48; 1 Kings xii. 4—11; Isa. ix. 4; x. 27; xiv. 25; xlvi. 6; Jer. v. 5; xxviii. 14;) of calamity or suffering; (Lam. i. 14; iii. 27;) and to “break the yoke” is to become free. (Gen. xxvii. 40; Jer. ii. 20; v. 5; Nah. i. 13.) The Hebrew word motah also signifies a “yoke,” as worn chiefly by men across the shoulders in carrying burdens. (Jer. xxvii. 2; xxxvii. 10, 12.) The breaking or removal of this yoke is also an emblem of freedom. (Isa. lviii. 6, 9; Lev. xxvi. 13; Ezek. xxv. 18; xxxvii. 27; Nah. i. 13.) In the new Testament the term “yoke” is used as the emblem of spiritual service; (Matt. xi. 28, 30;) also of spiritual bondage. (Acts xv. 10; Gal. v. 1.) The Hebrew term tzemah, also rendered “yoke,” is used in the sense of pair, as “a yoke of oxen”; (1 Sam. xi. 7; 1 Kings xix. 19, 21;) of asses; (Judg. xix. 10;) and also as a measure of land, as much as a yoke of oxen can plough in a day. (1 Sam. xiv. 14.)

ZAANAIM.—See ZAANANNIM.

ZAANAN = place of flocks. A place in the tribe of Judah; (Mic. i. 11;) probably also called “Zenan.” (Jos. xiii. 37.)

ZAANANIM = remorals. A place in Naphta; (Jos. xiii. 33;) also written “Zaanaim.” (Judg. iv. 11.)

ZAAVAN = unquiet. A descendant of Seir; (Gen. xxxvi. 27;) also written “Zavan.” (1 Chron. i. 42.)

ZAIDA = beauty. 1. The father of Baruch; (Neh. iii. 20;) written in the margin “Zaccai.” 2. A son of Bebai. (Ezra x. 28.) 3. — See ZACCAI.

ZABBUD = bestowed. A son of Bigvai; in the margin written “Zaccur.” (Ezra viii. 14.)

ZABDI = gift of Iochorah. 1. A descendant of Judah; (Josh. vii. 1;) also written “Zimiri.” (1 Chron. ii. 6.) 2. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 19.) 3. The overseer of David’s vintage fruit. (1 Chron. xxvii. 27.) 4. A Levite. (Neh. xi. 17.)

ZABDIEL = gift of God. 1. The father of Jashobeam. (1 Chron. xxvii. 2.) 2. A priest. (Neh. xi. 14.)

ZABULON.—See ZEBULON.

ZACCAI = pure, innocent. 1. One whose descendants returned from Exile; (Ezra ii. 9;) also written “Zabbai.” (Neh. vii. 14.) 2. — See ZABBAI.

ZACHARIAS = pure, innocent. A chief of the publicans, i.e. farmer general of the revenue, at Jericho. Having heard of Christ, he greatly desired to see Him as He drew near that place, but could not, on account of the crowd, and because he was low of stature. He therefore ran before, and ascended a sycamore tree, that he might have a fair view of Him as He passed. Jesus observing him, and knowing his character and motives, proposed to become his guest. His mind was probably brought at once under Divine influence; and on that very day he and his family became interested in the salvation of that “gospel which was preached before unto Abraham.” (Luke xix. 1—9.)

ZACCHURI = mindful. A descendant of Simeon. (1 Chron. iv. 26.)

ZACCHUR = mindful. 1. A descendant of Reuben. (Num. xiii. 4.) 2.
A son of Asaph; (1 Chron. xxv. 2, 10; also written “Zicri.” (1 Chron. ix. 13.) 3. The son of Imri. (Neh. iii. 2.) 4. The name of two of the Levites. (Neh. x. 12; xiii. 13.) 5. —See Zakkun.

ZACHARIAH — whom Jehovah remembers. 1. A king of Israel who succeeded his father, Jeroboam II. b. c. 770, and reigned six months. He did evil in the sight of the Lord, and Shallum, the son of Jabesh, conspired against him, slew him in public, and reigned in his stead. He was the last of the dynasty of Jehu. Thus was fulfilled what the Lord had foretold to Jehu, that his children should sit on the throne of Israel to the fourth generation. (2 Kings xiv. 29; xv. 8 —12; x. 30; 2 Sam. vii. 9.) As Jeroboam is said to have only reigned 41 years, (1 Kings xiv. 23, 25;) some critics, including the English translators, in the margin, have supposed an interregnum of 11 years between the death of the father and the inauguration of the son. Jeroboam ascended the throne b. c. 823, and Z Zachariah b. c. 770. Others meet the difficulty by supposing that Jeroboam reigned 51 years, and that the number 41 is an error of the scribes. 2. The father of the wife of Abaz, and the grandfather of Hezekiah; (2 Kings xviii. 2;) also written “Zachariah.” (2 Chron. xxix. i.)

ZACHARIAH — whom Jehovah remembers. 1. A priest of the family of Abiah, and father of John the Baptist, who, with his wife, Elizabeth, “walked in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord, blameless.” When the promise of a son was announced to him in the temple, by the angel, it seemed so beyond the range of probability that his faith failed, and he asked for some extraordinary sign that the promise should be accomplished. He was immediately deprived of the power of speech, and remained dumb until the eighth day after the birth of the promised child; when being asked to give the infant a name, in obedience to the angelic direction he called him John, and forthwith the power of speech was restored to him, and he employed it in a strain of the most devout gratitude and praise. (Luke i. 5-79.) 2. The son of Barachiah, who was slain by the Jews “between the temple and the altar.” (Matt. xxiii. 35; Luke xi. 51.) Some expositors suppose that Zachariah, the son of Jehoiada, who was stoned by order of Joash, is the person alluded to. (2 Chron. xxiv. 20, 21.) Others refer it to Zachariah the prophet, the son of Berachiah; but history gives no account of his death. (Zech. i. 1.) Others again make the reference to Zacharias the father of John the Baptist, who, according to certain apocryphal accounts, was slain, by Herod’s order, between the altar and the temple, because he would not give an account of the abode of his son. While others think that our Lord spoke prophetically of Zacharias the son of Baruch, who was slain by the Zelotes in the temple, within a generation of the time He was speaking. (Jos. Wars. vi. 6, 4.)

ZACHER — praise. A descendant of Benjamin; (1 Chron. viii. 31;) also called “Zachariah.” (1 Chron. ix. 37.) ZADOK — just. 1. The Hebrew high priest, in the days of David and Solomon; he was the successor of Abiathar, and of the family of Eleazar. (2 Sam. viii. 17; x. 24-35; xvii. 19, 22, 27; xix. 11; xx. 25; 1 Kings i. 32-45; 1 Chron. vi. 8.) The sons of Zadok were pre-eminent in the priestly family. (Ezek. xl. 46; xliii. 19; xlv. 15; xlvi. 11.) 2. The father of Shallum, and high priest of the Hebrews. (1 Chron. vi. 12; Ezr. vii. 2.) 3. The father-in-law of king Uzziah. (1 Kings xv. 33; 2 Chron. xvii. 1.) 4. The son of Baana. (Neh. iii. 4; x. 21.) 5. The son of Immer, the scribe. (Neh. iii. 29; xiii. 13.) 6. One of the priests. (Neh. xi. 11.)

ZAILAM = nothing. A son of Rehoboam. (2 Chron. xi. 19.)

ZAIR = small. A place apparently in the vicinity of Edom. (2 Kings viii. 21.) Geocensis supposes that the ZAL

Hilg. word In-Samue', rendered, "with his princes," is another name of the same place. (2 Chron. xxvi. 3.)

ZALAPHEL = fracture, wound. The father of Hannun. (Neh. iii. 30.)

ZALMON = shady. 1. A mountain on elevated plain in Samaria, near Shechem. The only high mountains in the neighbourhood are Gerizim and Ebal. (Judg. i. 48.) Many suppose this to be the same as "Salmon." (Ps. lxxvii. 14.) "When the Almighty scattered kings in the land there was snow on Salmon," i. e., the fields were whitened with the bones of the slain. (Ps. li.)

ZALMONAH = shady. One of the stations of the Hebrews in the desert. (Num. xxxiii. 41.)

ZALMUNNAH = shelter is denied him? A prince of the Midianites. (Judg. viii. 1; Ps. lxxxii. 11.)

ZAMZUMMIM = noisy people. A race of giants, dwelling in the territory of the Ammonites. (Deut. ii. 20.)

ZANOAH = marah, bog. 1. A place in the tribe of Judah, not far from Zorra; to which, says Dr. Robinson, "the name and site of Zanna still correspond." (Josh. xvi. 34; Neh. iii. 13; xii. 30.) 2. A place in the mountain of Judah. (Josh. xv. 55.)

ZAPINATH = PAANANAH. — See Joseph.

ZAPPHON = the north. A city in the tribe of Gad. (Josh. xiii. 27.)

ZARRAH = a rising, or breaking forth. A son of Judah, by Tamar; (Gen. xxxviii. 30) also called "Zara;" (Matt. i. 3) and "Zarah;" his descendants are called "Zarchites." (Num. xxxvi. 20; Josh. vii. 1; xxii. 20; 1 Chron. ii. 4; 6.)—See Ezrama.

ZARRAH. — See Zara.

ZAREATHITES. — See Zorah.

ZARED. — See Zared.

ZAREPHATH. — See Sarepta.

ZARETH. — See Zered.

ZARETH-SHAHAR = eclipsed dawn. A city in Benjamin. (Josh. xiii. 19.)

ZARHITES. — See Zarah, and Zered.

ZARTANAH. — See Zereda.

ZEB.

ZARTHAN. — See Zereda.

ZATTU = a sprout? A chief of the people. (Neh. x. 14.)

ZAVAN. — See Zavan.

ZAZA = fulness, abundance. A son of Jonathon. (1 Chron. ii. 33.)

ZEAL. An earnestness arising from good or evil motives. (2 Sam. xxi. 2; 1 Cor. xiv. 12; Col. iv. 13.) Phinehas was commended because he was zealous for Jehovah; (Num. xxv. 11—13) but Jehu, when he slew the priests of Baal and the family of Ahab, was zealous in order to gain public applause. (2 Kings x. 16—18.) Zeal may be misdirected; or it may be honourable. (Phil. iii. 6; Gal. iv. 17, 18; Tit. ii. 14; Ps. lxix. 9; John ii. 17.) Zeal, like anger, is also attributed to God. (2 Kings xix. 31; Isa. ix. 7; Ezek. v. 13.)

ZEALOT. — See Zealotes.

ZEBADIAH = Jehovah gave. 1. Two of the descendants of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 15, 17.) 2. A son of Jehoram. (1 Chron. xii. 7. 3. The son of Asahel. (1 Chron. xxvii. 7.) 4. One of the Levites. (1 Chron. xxvi. 2.) 5. One of the Levites in the time of Jehoshaphat. (2 Chron. xvii. 8.) 6. The son of Ishmael. (2 Chron. xix. 11.) 7. The son of Michael. (Exx. viii. 8.) 8. One of the priests. (1 Chr. x. 20.)

ZEBAH. — See Zerah.

ZEBAIN = peace. A place in Palestine. (Ezra. ii. 57; Neh. vii. 59.)

ZEBEDEE = Jehovah gave. A fisherman of Galilee, the husband of Salome, and father of the apostles James and John. His employment seems to have been a lucrative one, as he had not only a boat and nets, but hired servants. (Matt. iv. 21; x. 2; xx. 20; xxvii. 37; xxviii. 66; Mark i. 19, 20; ii. 17; x. 35; Luke v. 10; John xxi. 2.)

ZEBEKA = bought. A son of Nebo. (Exx. x. 43.)
ZEBOIM = Agoras. 1. A city in the vale of Siddim, destroyed with Sodom and Gomorrah, and covered by the Dead sea. (Gen. x. 19; xix. 25; Deut. xxix. 23; Hos. xi. 8.) It is also written “Zeboilim.” (Gen. xiv. 2.) 2. A valley and town in Benjamin. (1 Sam. xiii. 18; Neh. xi. 34.)

ZEBUDAH = bestowed. The mother of Jehoiakim. (2 Kings xxvii. 36.)

ZEBUL = a dwelling. The governor of Shechem under Abimelech. (Judg. ix. 29—41.)

ZEBULUN = habitation. The tenth son of Jacob, born of Leah, in Mesopotamia. (Gen. xxx. 20; xxxv. 23; xlv. 14.) The territory of the tribe descended from him was assigned prophetically by Jacob his father; (Gen. xlii. 18;) it lay between Naphtali on the north and Issachar on the south, while one extremity bordered on the south-western side of the sea of Galilee, the other stretched along the coast of the Mediterranean. Hence the Zebulunites took part in sea-faring concerns. (Josh. xvi. 10—16; Deut. xxxii. 18; Num. i. 30; xxxvi. 26; Isa. ix. 1.) The Canaanites within the limits of this tribe who were not expelled, became tributaries. (Judg. i. 30.) In the time of David the Zebulunites were characterised as being “true hearted.” (1 Chron. xii. 33; Matt. iv. 13, 15; Rev. vii. 8.)

ZECHARIAH = whom Jehovah remember. 1. The son of Jehoiada, and high priest of the Hebrews. Zechariah, moved at the growing corruptions of the age, stood forth at one of the national festivals, and honestly expostulated with the people in the presence of the king; upon which they stoned him to death, “in the court of the house of the Lord,” by the command of Joash, who ungratefully remembered “the kindness which Jehoiada his father had done him.” (2 Chron. xxvi. 15—22.) 2. A descendant of Reuben. (1 Chron. v. 7.) 3. One of the itinerant teachers in the time of Jehoshaphat. (2 Chron. xvii. 7.) 4. A son of Jehoshaphat. (2 Chron. xxi. 2.) 5. A son of Jebediah. (Isa. viii. 2.) 6. A prophet in Jerusalem in the reign of Uzziah. (2 Chron. xxvi. 5.) 7. The name of five of the Levites. (1 Chron. ix. 21; xv. 19, 20, 24; 2 Chron. xx. 14; xxix. 13; xxxiv. 12; xxxv. 8.) 8. One who returned from Exile. (Ezra viii. 3, 16; Neh. viii. 4.) 9. A descendant of Bebai. (Ezra viii. 11.) 10. A descendant of Elam. (Ezra x. 6.) 11. Two descendants of Judah. (Neh. xi. 4, 5.) 12. Two of the priests. (Neh. xi. 12; xii. 35, 41.) 13. A prophet who flourished after the Exile, whose writings are preserved in the sacred canon. (Zech. i. 1, 7.) He was the son of Berechiah, and grandson of Iddo, one of the priests who went up from the Exile with Zerubbabel. His father being dead, Zechariah appears to have succeeded Iddo in his office under the high priest Joiakim; (Neh. xii. 16;) hence he is sometimes called “Zechariah of Iddo.” (Ezra v. 1; vi. 14.) Zechariah began to prophesy in the eighth month of the second year of Darius Hystaspes, king of Persia, n. s. 520, and but a short time later than Haggai. These two prophets, with united zeal, encouraged the people to resume the work of the temple, which had been discontinued for some years. 14. See Zachar and Zerachiah.

ZECHARIAH, BOOK OF. The longest of the twelve minor prophets. It properly consists of two parts, each evidently from the pen of one man. Zechariah the prophet, the son of Berechiah, the son of Iddo. (Zech. i. 7.) Even the much-contested passage in Matt. xxvii. 9, 10—though some copies read “Zechariah” while others leave out the name and merely read “the prophet”—is intentionally described by the Evangelist to “Jeremiah inasmuch as Zechariah’s prophecies was just a reiteration of two fear-prophecies of Jeremiah.” (Jer. xv. 2—8; xix. 1—6; Zech. xi. 12.) The grand design of the whole book was to encourage the Jews in the establishment of their national inscriptions, cheering them with predictions.
ZED

concerning the Messiah, and the approach of that universal dispensation of mercy of which their national institutions were but the type. The first part refers in general to events shortly to take place, and includes chapters i.—viii. The introduction is an exhortation to the Jews who had returned from the Exile, to guard against those sins which had drawn so much distress upon their ancestors. (i. 1—6.) This is followed by a series of eight visions, which relate to the happy completion of the temple, and to the Divine protection which the Jews were to enjoy. The second part consists of two divisions, and contains predictions of remote events. The former, extending from chapters ix.—xi., in a variety of predictions unfolding the circumstances of the Jews, in Alexander’s expedition through Syria and Palestine; and their victories, under the Maccabees, over their Syrian and Grecian enemies. The second division, consisting of chapters xii.—xiv., evidently contains several animating predictions of the Messiah and His times; the revolt against the Romans; and a glance at the gradual but universal spread of the pure religion of the Gospel. Some of the apparently obscure symbols in this book may now be happily illustrated from the mythological figures exhibited on the recently exhumed Assyrian sculptures.

ZEDAD = the averted, avoided? A town in the northern extremity of Palestine; (Num. xxxiv. 8; Ezek. xlvii. 15;) now a large village called Sudud, in the desert, east of the great road from Damascus to Hums or Emesa.

ZEDEKIAH = justice of Jehovah. 1. The last king of Judah, to whom this name was given by Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, instead of his former one, “Mattaniah,” = gift of Jehovah. He was the son of Josiah, and uncle of Jehoiachin his predecessor; and when he is called “the brother of Jehoiachin,” it is merely in the general sense of relative. (2 Kings xxiv. 17—20; 1 Chron. iii. 15; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 10—13; Jer. i. 3,) He was placed upon the throne by Nebuchadnezzar at the age of twenty-one, and reigned eleven years, from 598 to 588 B. C. Zedekiah did evil in the sight of the Lord; for which Jeremiah threatened him, and the obdurate nation, with severe punishments. (Jer. xxviii. 1—17; xxxvii. 1—21; xxxviii. 1—23.) In the ninth year of his reign he revolted against Nebuchadnezzar, in consequence of which the Chaldean army marched into Judea, and took all the fortified places. The promised aid of the Egyptians, to whom he had applied, failed; (Ezek. xvii. 12—20;) and, in the eleventh year of his reign, Jerusalem was taken. The king and his people endeavoured to escape by night; but they were captured in the plain of Jericho. Zedekiah was seized and carried to Nebuchadnezzar, then at Riblah, in Syria, who reproached him with his perfidy, caused all his sons to be slain in his presence, and his own eyes to be put out; and then loading him with chains, he sent him to Babylon, where he died. (2 Kings xxv. 1—7; Jer. xxxix. 1—7.)

2. A false prophet of Samaria, who encouraged Ahab to fight against the Syrians. (1 Kings xxii. 1, 24; 2 Chron. xviii. 10, 22.)

3. A false prophet, whom the king of Babylon put to death. (Jer. xxix. 21, 22.)

4. A son of Jeconiah; but the margin has “his uncle,” i.e. Zedekiah the king. (1 Chron. iii. 16, comp. verse 15.)

5. The son of Hannaniah. (Jer. xxxvi. 12.)

ZEEB = a wolf. A midianitish prince. (Judg. vii. 25; viii. 3; Ps. lxxxiii. 11.)

ZELAH = a rib. A city, in the tribe of Benjamin, where Saul was buried. (Josh. xvii. 28; 2 Sam. xi. 14.)

ZELEK = fir tree. One of David’s distinguished officers. (2 Sam. xxiii. 37; 1 Chron. xi. 89.)

ZELOPHEHAH = first fracture, perhaps first-born. A descendant of Manasseh, who died in the wilderness, leaving no son, but five daughters. (Num. xxvi. 33.) On the numbering of the people preparatory to the division of the Promised Land, the daughters requested to be allowed to represent their father, and to receive his inheritance, that the name of their inheritance, that the name of their father, should not be extinguished. On the division of the land, they appeared before Joshua, and Eleazar the priest, and the princes, to put in their claim, and, in accordance with an express enactment, "they obtained an inheritance among the brethren of their father." (Num. xxvii. 1–11; Josh. xvi. 3, 4.)

ZELOTES—a zealot. The Greek surname given to Simon the Canaanite, i.e.—the Ammonite—the zealot, one of the Apostles. (Luke vi. 15; Acts i. 13; Matt. x. 41) probably from the circumstance of his having been a member of the Jewish sect called "Zealots," who were zealous in behalf of the ancient Jewish law and institutions. (Num. xxvi. 6–13; Acts xxii. 20.) In the age of Christ, the name Zealot was applied to the followers of Judas, who formed an extensive association against the tax levied by Cyrenius, and publicly taught, in opposition to the Herodians, that such taxation by the Romans was repugnant to the law of Moses, according to which the Jews, they maintained, had no king but God. The Pharisees who put the captious question to Christ: "Whether it was lawful to pay tribute to Caesar," are supposed to have been Zealots; (Matt. xxii. 17–22) and the Galileans, whom Pilate slew may have been of this sect. (Luke xiii. 1, 2; Jon. Wars, iv. 3, 9; vi. 5, 1–5; vi. 1–3; vii. 8, 1.)—See HEBRIDANs.

ZELZAH—shade from the sun. A place on the border of Benjamin. (1 Sam. x. 2.)

ZEMAREM—scree or loose. A city in the tribe of Benjamin; (Josh. xvii. 22) hence, probably, the name "Zelem Remaram," in the mountains of Ephraim, which extended to the territory of Benjamin. (1 Chron. xiii. 4.)

ZEMARITE. A Canaanish tribe, (Gen. x. 18,) probably the inhabitants of Simyra, a Phoenician city, which some suppose to be the ruins called Sycor, five miles west of Arsama.

ZEMIRA—son, descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. vii. 5.)

ZENAN. —See Zenan.

ZENANIAH—seventy aides or protectors. 1. A Hebrew prophet, the son of Cushi, who exercised his office early in the reign of Josiah, probably for some time after 640 B.C. (Zeph. i. 1–9.) The first two chapters of the book of Zephaniah contain predictions of the captivity of the inhabitants of Judah, of the desolation of the country, and of the destruction of the Philistines, Moabites, Ammonites, Cushites, the ruins of Nineveh, and the overthrow of the Assyrian empire.

In chapter ii., the restoration of the Jews to their own land is touched on. In the third chapter, the prophet reproves the vices of the Jews, and promises, after the return from Exile, the propagation of the true religion, and the perseverance of the Hebrews in the worship of God. (Zeph. i, 5; comp. Jer. vii. 2; 2 Kings xxiii. 12; comp. Zeph. i. 12 with Jer. xviii. 14; Zeph. i. 13 with Ezek. vii. 19; Zeph. iii. 4 with Ezek. xxii. 20.)

2. The second priest, who, along with Seraiah, the high priest, was put to death by the king of Babylon, at Biblah. (2 Kings xxiv. 18–21; Jer. xxxix. 1, xxvii. 29; xxxvi. 8; lli. 21–27.)

3. A person of distinction, whose sons returned from Exile. (Zech. vi. 10, 14.)

4. One of the Levites. (1 Chron. vi. 36.)

ZEPHANIAH—See Zophah.

ZEPHANATH—shadow. A valley near Mareshah, in the tribe of Judah. (2 Chron. xiv. 10.)

ZEPHI. —See Zarho.

ZEPHO—watch tower. A son of Eliphaz; (Gen. xxxvi. 11, 15;) also written "Zeeh." (1 Chron. i. 36.)

ZEPHON. —See Zeruza.

ZEB—first. A place in Naphtali. (Judg. xix. 55.)
1. ZERAH = a rising or breaking forth. A grandson of Esaun. (Gen. xxxvi. 13, 17; 1 Chron. i. 37.) 2. A son of Simeon; also called “Zohar” (Gen. xli. 10); his descendants are called “Zarhites.” (Num. xxvi. 13; 1 Chron. iv. 24.) 3. One of the Levites. (1 Chron. vi. 21, 41.) 4. See Zaram.

2. Zerah. A king of Ethiopia and Egypt; probably the same as Osorkon, the second king in the twenty-second dynasty of Manetho. His name is written on the monuments.

Amun, sacred to Osorkon. This king, with an immense army, invaded the kingdom of Judah in the tenth year of the reign of Asa, b.c. 943. The king of Judah, depending on the arm of Jehovah, went out against him without fear, and obtained a signal victory, in the valley of Zephathah. (2 Chron. xiv. 9–15; xvi. 8.)

ZERAHIAH = whom Jehovah caused to be born. 1. A descendant of Eleazar, the high priest. (1 Chron. vi. 6, 51; Ez. vii. 4.) 2. A descendant of Pahath-Moab. (Ezr. viii. 4.)

ZEREA = exuberant growth. A valley, with a stream flowing through it, in the territory of Moab, on the east of the Dead sea. Zered, also written “Zared,” was one of the stations of the Hebrews in the desert. (Num. xxi. 12; Deut. ii. 13, 14.)

ZEREDAH = cooling. A city in Manasseh, near Beth-shean. (1 Kings xi. 26;) also variously written “Zaredashah;” (2 Chr. iv. 17;) “Zerethah;” (Judg. vii. 22;) “Zerethah.” (Josh. iii. 16;) “Zartheh,” (1 Kings vii. 46;) and “Zartanah.” (1 Kings iv. 12.)

ZEREDATHAH.—See Zereda.

ZERERATH.—See Zereda.

ZERESH = golden. The ambitious wife of Haman. (Est. v. 10, 14; vi. 13.)

ZERETH = splendour. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 7.)

ZERL.—See Izri.

ZEROR = a bundle, purse. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Sam. ix. 1.)

ZERUA = leprosy. The mother of Jeroboam. (1 Kings xi. 26.)

ZERUBBABEL = sown, i.e. begotten in Babylon. The son of Pedaiah, the son of Salathiel, or Shalitiel, the son of Jecoiach, of the royal house of David; (1 Chron. iii. 19;) also written “Zorobabel.” (Matt. i. 12, 13.) The Persian name of this prince of Judah was “Sheshbazzar.” (Ezr. i. 8, 11; ii. 2; iii. 2; iv. 14, 16.) He was the first “pahah,” i.e. pasha or governor, of Jerusalem, after the Exile. (Hag. i. 1, 14; ii. 2, 21, 23.) After the building of the temple had been suspended more than thirteen years, it was resumed, through the influence of Zerubbabel at the Persian court, in the second year of Darius Hystaspes, about b.c. 520. He lived to see the temple completed, n.c. 516.

ZERUIAH = left, wounded. A daughter of Jesse, and sister of David. (1 Chron. ii. 16; 2 Sam. ii. 18; iii. 39; vii. 16; xiv. 1; xvi. 9.)

ZETHAM = olive tree. One of the Levites. (1 Chron. ii. 3, 8; xxvi. 22.)

ZETHAN = olive tree. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. vii. 10.)

ZETHAK = star. A eunuch in the court of Xerxes. (Est. i. 10.)

ZIA = motion. A descendant of Gad. (1 Chron. v. 13.)

ZIBA = statue. The steward to Mephibosheth. (2 Sam. ix. 2–15; xvi. 1–4; xiv. 24–30.)

ZIBEON = dyed. A son of Seir, and a chief of the Hivites and Horites. (Gen. xxxvi. 2, 20, 24; 1 Chr. i. 38.)

ZIBIA = roe. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 9.)

ZIBIHA = roe. The mother of king Josiah. (2 Kings xii. 2; 2 Chron. xxiv. 1.)

ZICHR = removed, or renowned. 1. A descendant of Levi. This name is sometimes erroneously printed “Zithri.” (Gen. vi. 21.) 2. The name of two descendants of Benjamin. (1 Chron. vi. 19, 28.) 3. The father of Elishaphat. (2 Chron. xxiii. 1.) 4. An Ephraimite and distinguished warrior under Pekah king of Israel.
ZID

(2 Kings xvi. 5; Isa. vii. 1.) 5. The father of Joel. (Neh. xi. 9.) 6.—See Zaccan.

ZIDDIKIM=the sides. A town in Naphtali. (Josh ix. 35.)

ZIDKIJAH=justice of Jehovah. One who sealed the covenant. (Neh. x. 1.)

ZIDON.—See Sidon.

ZIF=brightness, beauty, i.e. flower-mouth. The second month of the Hebrew year, corresponding to the new moon of our May. (1 Kings xi. 37.)

ZIHA=dry, thirsty. One of the Nethinim. (Ezr. ii. 43; Neh. vii. 46; xi. 21.)

ZILIM. This Hebrew word occurs in the margin of Isa. xiii. 21; xxxiv. 14; but in the text is properly rendered “wild beasts of the desert.” (Jer. vi. 39; Ps. lxxix. 9; lxxiv. 14; Isa. xxiii. 13.)

ZIKLAG=flowing fountain. A city in the southern extremity of Judah, but afterwards allotted to Simeon. (Josh. xv. 31; xix. 5; 1 Chron. iv. 30; 1 Sam. xxx. 1, 14, 26; 2 Sam. i. 1; ii. 1-4; 1 Chron. xii. 1-22; Neh. xi. 28.)

ZILLAH=shade. One of the wives of Lamech, and the mother of Tubal Cain. (Gen. iv. 19, 23.)

ZILPAH=a dropping. The handmaid of Leah, whom she gave to Jacob, and who became the mother of Gad and Asher. (Gen. xxix. 24; xxx. 9-13; xxxiv. 26; xxxvii. 2; xlvi. 18.)

ZILTHAI=shadow, i.e. protection of Jehovah. 1. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 20.) 2. A descendant of Manasseh. (1 Chron. xii. 20.)

ZIMMAH=mischief, crime. 1. A descendant of Levi. (1 Chron. vi. 20, 42.) 2. One of the Levites. (2 Chron. xxix. 12.)

ZIMRAN=mong, i.e. celebrated in song, renowned. A son of Abraham by Keturah; who gave name to an Arabian tribe descended from him, called “Zimri,” i.e. Zimranites. (Gen. xxv. 2; 1 Chron. i. 32; Jer. xxv. 25.)

ZIMRI=mong, i.e. celebrated in song, renowned. 1. A prince or chief of the tribe of Simeon, who brought into the Hebrew camp at Shittim, a Midianitish woman; for which he was slain, and the woman also, by Phinehas. (Num. xxv. 1-18.) 2. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 36; ix. 42.) 3. A general of Elah, king of Israel, and whom he slew while intoxicated, and usurped his kingdom, about b.c. 938. (1 Kings xvi. 1-20; 2 Kings ix. 31.) 4. See Zardi, and Zimmran.

ZILN=a low palm-tree. A desert on the south of Palestine, in which was situated the city Kadeshbarnah. (Num. xiii. 21; xx. 1; xxviii. 14; xxxiv. 3, 4; Josh xv. 18.)

ZINA.—See Zikah.

ZION=zenith place, sunny mount. The southwesternmost and the highest of the hills on which Jerusalem was built. It included the most ancient part of the city, with the citadel; and as Mount Moriah on which the temple was built was reckoned to Zion, it included the temple also, and was called the “City of David.” (2 Chron. v. 2.) Dr. Robinson says—On the west and south Zion rises abruptly from the valley of Hinnom, which sweeps round its south-west corner almost at a right angle, descending very rapidly first towards the south, and then towards the east, to the valley of Jehoshaphat. This circumstance renders the south-west brow of Zion apparently more lofty than any other point connected with the city now or anciently. The same traveller’s measurements give the elevation of Zion above the valley at this point about 154 feet; at the south-west corner of the wall of the city 104 feet; that of the ground at the Yafa Gate 44 feet; while he estimates the height of the southern brow at not less than 800 feet. These differences arise at least as much from the rapid sinking of the valley as from the increased height of Zion towards the south. The summit of Zion presents a level tract of considerable extent along its western brow; the eastern side of the hill slopes down steeply, but not in general abruptly to the Tyreopon, which separates it from the narrow ridge south of the Haram; while at the extreme south-east part, below Siloam, it extends quite down to the valley of Jehoshaphat. Only the northern portion of Zion is included in the modern walls. The palaces and the bulwarks of Zion have been long swept away; and now, near the brow of the hill, is a large ploughed field, in which a crop of barley waves to the passing breeze. By the Hebrew prophets the term “Zion,” or “Sion,” is often put for Jerusalem itself; (Isa. vii. 18; x. 24; xxx. 19; xxxii. 14; Ps. lxi. 11, 12; Rev. xiv. 1; Rom. ix. 33; xi. 26; 1 Pet. ii. 6;) also for its inhabitants, who are sometimes called “sons” or “daughters of Zion.” (Isa. i. 27; xii. 6; xi. 9; xlix. 14; lvi. 1; Ps. lxii. 8; Zech. i. 7, 10; ix. 8, 13; Zaph. iii. 14, 16; Joel ii. 26; Matt. xxv. 5; John xii. 15;) and for the spiritual Zion, the church or city of the living God. (Heb. xii. 22, 28; Gal. iv. 26; Rev. iii. 12; xxxi. 2, 10.)

ZION = smallness. A place in Judah. (Josh. xv. 54.)

ZIPPorially speaking, the Tyropon, which is a large ploughed field, a crop of barley waves to the passing breeze. By the Hebrew prophets the term “Zion,” or “Sion,” is often put for Jerusalem itself; (Isa. vii. 18; x. 24; xxx. 19; xxxii. 14; Ps. lxi. 11, 12; Rev. xiv. 1; Rom. ix. 33; xi. 26; 1 Pet. ii. 6;) also for its inhabitants, who are sometimes called “sons” or “daughters of Zion.” (Isa. i. 27; xii. 6; xi. 9; xlix. 14; lvi. 1; Ps. lxii. 8; Zech. i. 7, 10; ix. 8, 13; Zaph. iii. 14, 16; Joel ii. 26; Matt. xxv. 5; John xii. 15;) and for the spiritual Zion, the church or city of the living God. (Heb. xii. 22, 28; Gal. iv. 26; Rev. iii. 12; xxxi. 2, 10.)

ZIZ = brightness. A place or pass near En-gedi, called the “cliff,” or “ascent of Ziz.” (2 Chron. xx. 16.)

ZIZAH = full breast, abundance. 1. A descendant of Simeon. (1 Chron. iv. 37.) 2. A son of Rehoboam. (2 Chron. xi. 20.)

ZOA = low region. An ancient city of lower Egypt, situated on the eastern side of the Tanitic branch of the Nile. Zoa was one of the oldest cities of the world, being built but seven years after Hebron. (Gen. xxiii. 2; Num. xxxii. 22.) It appears to have been the capital of lower Egypt, and the ancient residence of the Pharaohs; (Isa. xix. 11, 13; xxx. 4;) it lay near the Nile, contiguous to the land of Goshen. (Gen. xiv. 10; Ex. ii. 3—10.) Zoa, also called “Tanis,” (Ezek. xxx. 14, margin,) was the scene of the mighty wonders performed by Moses in the deliverance of the Hebrews. (Ps. lxxxviii. 12, 43.) This place, now called Sais, is marked by extensive remains of temples, columns, and fallen obelisks, which attest the grandeur of the ancient city of the Pharaohs. The large mounds which cover the ruins of brick and pottery, extend about two miles from east to west, and one mile and a half from north to south.

ZOAR = smallness. A place near the southern extremity of the Dead sea, on the eastern shore, originally called “Bela,” and one of the five doomed cities; but on account of its smallness and desirableness as a place of refuge, spared at the intercession of Lot. (Gen. xiii. 10; xiv. 2, 8; xix. 20—20.) Dr. Robinson and Lieut. Lynch are disposed, with Irby and Mangles, to assign the position of Zoar to the eastern side of the Dead sea, at the foot of the mountains, near its southern end, in the mouth of the Wady Kerek, where it issues upon the isthmus of the long peninsula.

ZOBAR=station. A Syrian kingdom, sometimes called "Aram Zobah," and also written "Zoba," whose kings made war with Saul; (1 Sam. xiv. 47) with David; (2 Sam. viii. 3; x. 6, 8; 1 Chron. xviii. 5, 9;) and with Solomon. (2 Chron. vii. 8.) It was on the north of Damascus, and seems to have included the city of Hamath, hence called "Hamath Zobah," and to have extended as far as the Euphrates. (2 Sam. viii. 3; xxii. 30; 1 Kings xi. 23; 2 Chron. viii. 3.) On the southeast margin of the extensive "valley of salt" are extensive ruins, called Zobah or Zobah, which may designate the site of the ancient capital of this kingdom. (2 Sam. 8—13.)

ZOBEHBAH=slow moving. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 8.)

ZOHAR=whiteness. 1. The father of Ephron the Hittite. (Gen. xxiii. 8.) 2.—See Zerah.

ZOHOLETH=serpent. A noted stone by En-rogel, near Jerusalem. (1 Kings i. 9.)

ZOHETH. A descendant of Judah. (1 Chron. iv. 20.)

ZOPHAN=prince. A descendant of Asaher. (1 Chron. vii. 35, 36.)

ZOPHAR.—See Zoph.

ZOPHAR=sparrow. One of Job's three friends; called the "Naamathite," probably from Naamah, a town or district in Idumea. (Job ii. 11; ix. 1; xx. 1; xxxii. 9.)

ZOPHIM=watchers, lookers out. 1. A place on the top of Pisgah, where Balak took Balaam to see and curse the Hebrews. (Num. xxxii. 14.) 2.—See Zuph.

ZORAH=hornet's town. A city reckoned as in the plain of Judah; also called "Zoreah," now Sur'a, situated on a high peak overlooking the plain of Bethlehem. It was celebrated as the birth-place of Samuel. (Josh. xv. 33; xix. 41; Judg. xiii. 25.)

ZOROBAEL=sown, i.e. begotten in Babylon. The son of Salathiel, the son of Neri, and one of the ancestors of Mary. (Luke iii. 27.) He is not to be confounded with Zerubbabel, or Zorobabel the prince, who led back the first band of Jewish captives from Babylon, and built the temple. (Ezra ii. 1; Matt. i. 12, 13.)

ZUAR=smallness. A descendant of Issachar. (Num. i. 8; ii. 5.)

ZUPH=comb, honey-comb. An ancestor of Samuel; (1 Sam. i. 1; 1 Chron. vi. 35;) also written "Zaphah." (1 Chron. vi. 26.) He appears to have given name to the "land of Zaph."—See Ramathaim-Zophim.

ZUR=form, shape. 1. A prince of the Midianites. (Num. xxxv. 16; xxxvi. 8; Josh. xiii. 21.) 2. A descendant of Benjamin. (1 Chron. viii. 30; ix. 36.)

ZURIEL=my rock is God. A chief of the families of Merari (Num. iii. 35.)

ZURISHADDAI=my rock is the Almighty. A descendant of Simeon. (Num. i. 6; ii. 12.)

ZUZIMS=strong. An ancient people or nation on the borders of Palestine, conquered by Chedorlaomer and his allies. (Gen. xiv. 5.)
CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE.

As the ancient Hebrews possessed no formal and recognized era, whence events might be dated, they necessarily used different methods of computation. The most ancient method of computation was by generations. (Gen. v. 1—32.) Indeed, the only information we have respecting the time which elapsed from the creation of Adam to the birth of Abraham, is derived from the Mosaic genealogical tables. Those tables register the year of the life of each antediluvian and postdiluvian patriarch, when that son was born in whom his line was continued, the years each lived after the birth of his heir, and the total years of his life. (Gen. v. 1—32; x. 21, 22; xi. 10—32; xii. 4; Acts. vii. 4.) Still the number of years, in the several generations, as given in the Hebrew text, is widely departed from in the Samaritan copy, the Septuagint version, and also in Josephus, as will be seen by the subjoined table.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Hebrew</th>
<th>Samar</th>
<th>Septu</th>
<th>Joseph</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Adam</td>
<td>130</td>
<td>130</td>
<td>230</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Seth</td>
<td>105</td>
<td>105</td>
<td>205</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Enoch</td>
<td>90</td>
<td>90</td>
<td>190</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cainan</td>
<td>70</td>
<td>70</td>
<td>170</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mahalalel</td>
<td>65</td>
<td>65</td>
<td>165</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jared</td>
<td>162</td>
<td>162</td>
<td>162</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Enoch</td>
<td>65</td>
<td>65</td>
<td>165</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Methuselah</td>
<td>187</td>
<td>187</td>
<td>187</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lamech</td>
<td>183</td>
<td>183</td>
<td>183</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Noah</td>
<td>502</td>
<td>502</td>
<td>502</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Abraha</td>
<td>100</td>
<td>100</td>
<td>100</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Arphaxad</td>
<td>55</td>
<td>135</td>
<td>135</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cain</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salah</td>
<td>30</td>
<td>130</td>
<td>130</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eber</td>
<td>34</td>
<td>134</td>
<td>134</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Peleg</td>
<td>30</td>
<td>130</td>
<td>130</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rehuel</td>
<td>32</td>
<td>132</td>
<td>132</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hophrib</td>
<td>30</td>
<td>130</td>
<td>132</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nahor</td>
<td>29</td>
<td>79</td>
<td>179</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Terah</td>
<td>130</td>
<td>70</td>
<td>180</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Thus, from the creation of Adam to the birth of Abraham, in the 180th year of Terah, the number of years according to the Hebrew text, is 2008; according to the Samaritan copy, 2249; according to the Septuagint, 3474; and to the Alexandrian copy, 3594. And, surely, in a disagreement of three

The subjoined summary exhibits the period which has elapsed from the creation of man to the birth of Christ, according to the principal ancient eras, which are evidently derived from the lengthened chronology of the Septuagint version:

- Oecumenic era... 5455
- Era of Constantine... 5505
- Era of Alexandria... 5552
- Era of Antioch... 5494

Several of the modern systems of chronology are also based upon the numbers in the Septuagint and in Josephus. Thus, the period from the creation of man to the birth of Christ, as given by:

- Russell, in...
- Jackson...
- Hale...
- Jackson...
- Hale...

The same period from the creation of man to the birth of Christ, according to the Hebrew text, is fixed by:

- Clinton, at...
- Brown...
- Playfair...
- Usher...
- Zunz...
- Jewish era...

The genuine Bible chronology is undoubtedly that which has been handed down in the original Hebrew text. The various discrepancies exhibited by the versions evidently resulted, not from accident, but from premeditated design. By looking at the first table it will be seen that in no instance of the addition or subtraction of a century, in the years of the antediluvian patriarchs, does the Hebrew text stand alone, but is supported either by the Samaritan against the Septuagint, or by the Septuagint against the Samaritan. Now, in this systematic disagreement, the Septuagint and the Samaritan differ throughout, so as to contradict each other in regard to the age of each of the first nine patriarchs; while the Hebrew, without following either, takes such a middle course as to have the concurrence of the Samaritan in the age of Adam, Seth, Enoch, Cainan, Mahalalel and Enoch; and of the Septuagint, or of Josephus, respecting Jared, Methuselah and Lamech.
witnesses, two must be credited against one; and most of all must be believed, who takes such an independent course, that he is supported now by one, and now by the other.

In the various ages composing the Hebrew numbers, we find no appearance of design; while all the discrepancies in the units, tens, and hundreds in the Septuagint version, so systematic, and so skilfully adjusted as until recently to have concealed the artifice, must have resulted, not from accident, but from the unworthy design of the translators in developing their numbers out of the Egyptian chronology. Nor has the Egyptian chronology been without its influence on the Samaritan copy. Even the numbers in Josephus have been corrupted to make them agree with the chronology of the Septuagint; as in other parts of his work, which has escaped the hands of false correctors, he differs but slightly from the Hebrew.

The Deluge occurred, according to the Hebrew computation, B.C. 2348, or 1656 years after the creation of man, when Noah was 600 years old. The number of years which the Septuagint, according to the Alexandrian copy—the Vatican manuscript is defective in the first forty-six chapters of Genesis—interposes between the creation of man and the Deluge is 2252, thus placing that event B.C. 3245, according to their computation. The 2252 years, from the creation of Adam to the deluge, reduced to lunar months, i.e. month-years, give in round numbers 28,000. That there was such an Egyptian chronography, on which the Septuagint chronology is based, which counted 28,000 years down to B.C. 3245, is evident from the Eusebian Manetho; which reckons 25,920 years from the first of the Egyptian gods to Memes, the first of the mortal kings. To the first eleven dynasties of mortal kings it assigned 1941 years, which, added to the former, make 27,861. Thus, then, the 28,000 years from the first of the gods would end, according to this chronography, with the 139th year of the twelfth dynasty, which coincided with B.C. 3245, the Septuagint date of the Flood, when, it seems, the Septuagint chronologists imagined the month-year of the Egyptian computation ceased, and men began to reckon by real years. This view is supported by the Eusebian Manetho, which assigns A.D. 3383 as the date of the commencement of the twelfth dynasty, which was the Egyptian year of the world 27,861; hence 139 added to A.D. 3245, bring us to A.D. 3383. So also Eusebius, in his chronological canon, states the birth of Abraham, A.D. 2016; and makes that event coincide with the first year of Manetho’s sixteenth dynasty.

To the fifteenth dynasty he assigns 250 years; to the fourteenth, 484; to the thirteenth, 458; and to the twelfth, 182. Thus the interval may be taken at about 1868 Egyptian real years; which brings us again to A.D. 3383, as the date of the commencement of the twelfth Egyptian dynasty. The 28,000 years, when understood of lunar months, which exactly fill up the Septuagint interval between Adam and the Deluge, remove any doubt as to the kind of calculations on which the Septuagint chronology is based. Its authors had before them this Egyptian computation, which counted 28,000 years down to B.C. 3245, the date of the Flood as given by them. They were determined to make the Egyptian chronology tally with the Bible, by doing violence to both; hence they compressed all those thousands of years into less than a twelfth part of the space they were entitled to, on the one hand, and swelled the number of years assigned to the Bible patriarchs on the other, to make both ends meet. All these years they chose to regard as months, which they accordingly reduced to years on the common scale of ninety-nine of the former to eight of the latter. Thus stands the calculation:—

99 : 8 : : 28,000 : 2,262 §§

Even the fraction over 2,262—the Septuagint interval between Adam and the Deluge—possesses a meaning. For of a lunar year, is 222 days, and the “seventeenth day of the second month,” on which the Flood is said to have commenced, (Gen. vii. 11,) is actually the 17th day of Zif or Yar, the 222d day of the Hebrew year.

The argument for adopting the lengthened chronology of the Septuagint, in the years of the postdiluvian patriarchs, instead of that of the Hebrew text, on the ground of the supposed impossibility of the world being peopled in so short a time as the era B.C. 2244, or about 134 years after the Flood, as to render the dispersal in the time of Peleg requisite.
CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE.

is of little weight; because, though those versions give additional years, they give no additional generations. From the time of Arphaxad to that of Nahor, about 295 years, the Hebrew numbers place upon an average each generation, i.e. the birth of a son, at intervals of little more than 81 years; whereas the Samaritan and Septuagint numbers extend their chronology for the same period, the former 87 7/8, and the latter 1,100 years, only by placing upon an average each generation, on the birth of a son, at intervals of little more than 124 and 137 years, inserting before each descent 100 or 50 years, and in one case an additional generation of 130 years; by which, in point of population, nothing can be gained, for it is manifest that as the casualties in 81 years must be less than in 124 or 137 years, where the lives are of the same length, so, according to the short Hebrew numbers, the population in the same number of generations must much more rapidly increase than according to the more extended period; and the population upon the Hebrew computation must, in the allotted 220 years, have been almost one-half as much again as in the most extended of these computations.

In addition to reckoning by generations, the Hebrews also reckoned from remarkable events, as from the birth of Noah; (Gen. vii. 11;) from the Exodus from Egypt; (Num. xxxiii. 38; 1 Kings vii. 1, 2;) from the reigns of their kings; (1 Kings vi. 1, 37, 38; xv. 1;) from the Babylonian Exile; (Ezek. xxxii. 21; xl. 1;) and also from the reigns of the Chaldean and Persian monarchs. (Dan. viii. 1; Est. i. 1; Neh. ii. 1.) In later times they used the era of the Seleucidae; (1 Macc. xiii. 51; xiv. 27;) or dated from the reigns of their own kings, and the Roman emperors. (Matt. ii. 1; Luke i. 5; iii. 1.)

There is every reason to believe that the chronology of the Hebrew text is entirely trustworthy; and it was upon this assumption that Archbishop Usher, whose views regulated the chronology of the English Bible, fixed the creation of man 4004 Years before Christ. Usher's system, in some points, is not free from errors; but his point of commencement is perhaps the nearest to the truth; and to depart widely from it would perplex us in our ordinary reading. In ancient chronology perfect accuracy cannot be expected; at the best we can only approximate to the truth. In the following chronological table, we have made use of the labours of Usher, Fynes Clinton, Zunz, Ideler, and Winer. The first column, a.m., indicates the years since the Creation of the World, or, more correctly, and in accordance with the Scriptures, since the Creation of Adam; the second column, a.c., denotes the years before Christ.

A.M. | B.C.
--- | ---
Creation of Adam and Eva | 4004
 Cain and Abel born | 3874
 Seth, son of Adam, born | 3874
 Enos, son of Seth, born | 3879
 Cainan, son of Enos, born | 3870
 Mahalaleel, born | 3899
 Jared, born | 3944
 Enoch, born | 3892
 Methuselah, born | 3937
 Lamech, born | 3130
 Adam, aged 930 years, died | 8074
 Enoch, aged 85 years, translated | 3017
 Seth, aged 912 years, died | 2962
 Noah, son of Lamech, born | 2948
 Noah, aged 950 years, died | 2854
 Cainan, aged 910 years, died | 2769
 Mahalaleel, aged 895 years, died | 2714
 Jared, aged 962 years, died | 2582
 Noah warned of the coming Flood | 2468
 Japheth, born | 2448
 Shem, born | 2446
 Lamech, aged 777 years, died | 2853
 Methuselah, aged 899 years, died | 2769
 Flood | 2848
 Noah cultivates the earth | 2847
 Arphaxad, born | 2846
 Salah, born | 2831
 Eber, born | 2281
 Peleg, born | 2247
 The Nations dispersed | 2224
 Ren, born | 2217
 Mizraim founds the kingdom of Egypt | 2192
 Asshur founds Babylon | 2191
 Asshur, expelled from Babylon, founds Nineveh | 2187
 Serug, born | 2183
 Nahor, born | 2155
 Terah, born | 2126
 Peleg, aged 289 years, died | 2008
 Nahor, aged 146 years, died | 2007
 Noah, aged 950 years, died | 1938
 Abraham, born | 1906
 Sarah, born | 1906
CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>A.M.</th>
<th>B.C.</th>
<th>B.C.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>2026</td>
<td>Reu, aged 289 years, died</td>
<td>1978</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2049</td>
<td>Serug, aged 230 years, died</td>
<td>1955</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2081</td>
<td>Terah, Abraham, and Lot, removed to Haran</td>
<td>1933</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2093</td>
<td>Terah, aged 205 years, died, and Abraham removed to Canaan</td>
<td>1921</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2094</td>
<td>Ishmael, born</td>
<td>1920</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2096</td>
<td>Arphaxad, aged 438, died</td>
<td>1908</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2108</td>
<td>Isaac, born</td>
<td>1806</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2126</td>
<td>Salah, aged 433 years, died</td>
<td>1878</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2145</td>
<td>Sarah, aged 127 years, died</td>
<td>1839</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2148</td>
<td>Marriage of Isaac</td>
<td>1836</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2158</td>
<td>Shem, aged 600 years died</td>
<td>1816</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2168</td>
<td>Essai and Jacob born</td>
<td>1806</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2183</td>
<td>Abraham, aged 175 years died</td>
<td>1821</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2187</td>
<td>Ether, aged 464 years, died</td>
<td>1817</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2258</td>
<td>Joseph, born</td>
<td>1745</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2288</td>
<td>Isaac, aged 180 years, died</td>
<td>1716</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2293</td>
<td>Joseph, vizier of Egypt</td>
<td>1715</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2295</td>
<td>Jacob goes to Egypt</td>
<td>1706</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2315</td>
<td>Jacob, aged 147 years, died</td>
<td>1689</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2369</td>
<td>Joseph, aged 110 years, died</td>
<td>1635</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2433</td>
<td>Moses, born 80 years before the Exodus</td>
<td>1571</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2478</td>
<td>Flight of Moses to Midian</td>
<td>1551</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2513</td>
<td>The Exodus of the Hebrews</td>
<td>1491</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2558</td>
<td>Moses, aged 120 years, died</td>
<td>1451</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2591</td>
<td>Joshua, afterwards the elders, govern the Hebrews until</td>
<td>1413</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

From the death of Moses, which is placed by Hales in B.C. 1500, and by Clinton in B.C. 1486, to the servitude of the Hebrews under Chushan, a chasm occurs in Scripture chronology, which we have filled up with the rule of Joshua and the Elders, which is estimated by Usher and Blair at 58 years, by Hales at 56, and by Clinton at 27 years. However, from the servitude under Chushan to the death of Saul, the years are clearly expressed in Scripture, unless, with Usher, we suppose that occasionally two of the Judges were contemporary. From the servitude under Chushan to the election of Saul, we also give, in the first column, on the right hand, the chronology of Clinton.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>A.M.</th>
<th>B.C.</th>
<th>B.C.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>2591</td>
<td>Servitude, 8 years, under Chushan</td>
<td>1558 1418</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2599</td>
<td>Othniel, judge 40 years</td>
<td>1530 1405</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2661</td>
<td>Servitude, 18 years, under Moab</td>
<td>1510 1343</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2678</td>
<td>Ehud, judge 80 years</td>
<td>1492 1325</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2699</td>
<td>Shamgar, judge, time unknown</td>
<td>1421 1305</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2719</td>
<td>Deborah and Barak, judge 40 years</td>
<td>1892 1285</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2751</td>
<td>Servitude, 7 years, under Midian</td>
<td>1352 1252</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2795</td>
<td>Gideon, judge 40 years</td>
<td>1345 1245</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2798</td>
<td>Abimelech, judge 8 years</td>
<td>1305 1235</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2771</td>
<td>Tola, judge 25 years</td>
<td>1302 1233</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2794</td>
<td>Jair, judge 22 years</td>
<td>1279 1219</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2798</td>
<td>Servitude, 18 years under Ammon</td>
<td>1257 1204</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2816</td>
<td>Jephthah, judge 6 years</td>
<td>1239 1184</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2820</td>
<td>The destruction of Troy</td>
<td>1235 1184</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2822</td>
<td>Ibzan, judge 7 years</td>
<td>1238 1182</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2829</td>
<td>Elon, judge 10 years</td>
<td>1226 1173</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2830</td>
<td>Abdon, judge 8 years</td>
<td>1216 1163</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2848</td>
<td>Servitude under the Philistines, 40 years, including the 20 years of Samson</td>
<td>1208 1156</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2887</td>
<td>Samson died</td>
<td>1158 1117</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2888</td>
<td>Eli died, Samuel judge</td>
<td>1158 1116</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2909</td>
<td>Saul, king of the Hebrews, 40 years</td>
<td>1096 1093</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

From the death of Samson to the election of Saul, another chasm occurs. It is thus estimated by Clinton. To the death of Eli 40 years. From the death of Eli to the election of Saul 21 years. It will be seen that Usher makes this last period only 21 years.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>A.M.</th>
<th>B.C.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>2949</td>
<td>David, king 40 years</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2989</td>
<td>Solomon, king 40 years</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2992</td>
<td>The foundation of the temple laid</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

3028 | Rehoboam, king 1 1/2 years; the Ten Tribes revolt | 976 |
| 3029 | Rehoboam, king of Judah; Jeroboam I, king of Israel | 973 |
| 3033 | Shishak, invaded Judah | 971 |
| 3042 | Hosea, flourished | 962 |
| 3015 | Abijah, king of Judah | 958 |
| 3044 | Asa, king of Judah | 953 |
| 3060 | Nadab, king of Israel, Taboriimmon, king of Syria | 954 |
| 3061 | Baasha, king of Israel | 953 |
| 3053 | Benhadad I, king of Syria | 951 |
| 3061 | Zerah, or Oseron, king of Egypt, invaded Judah | 943 |
| 3075 | Elah, king of Israel | 929 |
| 3076 | Zimri, king of Israel 7 days, Omri 12 years | 924 |
| 3087 | Ibbaal, king of Sidon | 919 |
| 3086 | Ahab king of Israel | 918 |
| 3098 | Benhadad II, king of Syria | 916 |
| 3090 | Elijah, the prophet | 913 |
| 3090 | Jehoshaphat, king of Judah | 914 |
| 3107 | Ahaziah, king of Israel | 897 |
| 3109 | Jehoram, king of Israel | 893 |
| 3114 | Elisha, the prophet | 890 |
| 3114 | Jehoram, king of Judah | 890 |
| 3118 | Hazael, king of Syria | 886 |
| 3120 | Ahaziah, king of Judah | 884 |
CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>A.M.</th>
<th>B.C.</th>
<th>A.M.</th>
<th>B.C.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3121</td>
<td>Athaliah, queen of Judah.</td>
<td>3147</td>
<td>Gedaliah, gov. of Jerusalem.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3141</td>
<td>Dido, from Tyre, founds</td>
<td>3119</td>
<td>Nebuchadnezzar besieges</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Carthage.</td>
<td></td>
<td>Tyre.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3156</td>
<td>Joash, king of Judah.</td>
<td>3144</td>
<td>Evimerodach releases Jehoia-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3144</td>
<td>Jehoahaz, king of Judah.</td>
<td></td>
<td>chin.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3150</td>
<td>Jehoahaz, king of Israel.</td>
<td>3149</td>
<td>Cyrus founds the Persian Em-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3146</td>
<td>Joash, king of Israel.</td>
<td></td>
<td>peria.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3155</td>
<td>Benhadad II., king of Syria.</td>
<td>3148</td>
<td>Cyrus takes Babylon.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3177</td>
<td>Amaziah, king of Judah.</td>
<td>3147</td>
<td>First Jewish Exiles return to</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3179</td>
<td>Jeroboam II., king of Israel.</td>
<td></td>
<td>Jerusalem.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3194</td>
<td>Jonah, the prophet.</td>
<td>3146</td>
<td>Rebuilding of the temple.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3196</td>
<td>Uzziah, king of Judah.</td>
<td>3143</td>
<td>Darius Hystaspes, king of Persia.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3214</td>
<td>Amos and Hosea, prophets.</td>
<td>3142</td>
<td>Haggai and Zechariah prophets.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3228</td>
<td>First year of the Olympiads.</td>
<td>3148</td>
<td>Second temple finished.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3232</td>
<td>Zachariah, king of Israel.</td>
<td>3319</td>
<td>Ahaz, king of Judah.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3233</td>
<td>Shalmaneser, king of Assyria.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3243</td>
<td>Pul invades Israel.</td>
<td>3244</td>
<td>Ataraxees, king of Persia.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3244</td>
<td>Pekahiah, king of Israel.</td>
<td>3244</td>
<td>Artaxerxes, king of Persia.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3245</td>
<td>Isaiah, the prophet.</td>
<td>3246</td>
<td>Second company of Exiles return under Ezra.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3246</td>
<td>Pekah, king of Israel.</td>
<td>3559</td>
<td>Nehemiah, the governor of Jeru-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3247</td>
<td>Jotham, king of Judah.</td>
<td></td>
<td>saleum.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3251</td>
<td>Rome founded.</td>
<td>3559</td>
<td>Malachi the prophet.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3257</td>
<td>Era of Naborasur.</td>
<td>3671</td>
<td>Temple built on Mount Ger-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3262</td>
<td>Rezin, king of Syria.</td>
<td></td>
<td>rizim.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3265</td>
<td>Ahaz, king of Judah.</td>
<td>3672</td>
<td>Alexander the Great visited</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3275</td>
<td>Tiglath Pileser invades Israel.</td>
<td></td>
<td>Jerusalem.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3275</td>
<td>Hushes, king of Israel.</td>
<td>3680</td>
<td>Ptolemy I. occupies Palestine.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3278</td>
<td>Micah, the prophet.</td>
<td>3692</td>
<td>Era of Seleucidae.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3279</td>
<td>Hezekiah, king of Judah.</td>
<td>3703</td>
<td>Simon the Just, high priest.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3284</td>
<td>Jo, king of Egypt.</td>
<td>3714</td>
<td>Translation of the Septuagint.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3283</td>
<td>Shalmaneser ends the king-</td>
<td>3740</td>
<td>Wars between Egypt and Syria afflict Palestine.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3290</td>
<td>Tirhakah, king of Egypt.</td>
<td>3882</td>
<td>Palestine subjected to Syria.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3291</td>
<td>Nahum and Joel, prophets.</td>
<td>3887</td>
<td>Antiochus abolished the wor-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3292</td>
<td>Sennacherib invades Judea.</td>
<td></td>
<td>ship of Jehovah.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3294</td>
<td>Merodach-baladan, king of Babylon.</td>
<td>3841</td>
<td>The Maccabees routed the Sy-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3294</td>
<td>Esarhaddon, king of Assyria.</td>
<td></td>
<td>rians, and purified the temple.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3308</td>
<td>Manasseh, king of Judah.</td>
<td>3841</td>
<td>Antiochus made peace with</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3362</td>
<td>Amon, king of Judah.</td>
<td></td>
<td>Judas, and died.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3364</td>
<td>Josiah, king of Judah.</td>
<td>3844</td>
<td>Jonathan, leader of the Jews.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3377</td>
<td>Zephaniah and Habakkuk, prophets.</td>
<td>3861</td>
<td>Simon, the leader of the Jews.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3392</td>
<td>Jeremiah, the prophet.</td>
<td>3864</td>
<td>Simon, prince of the Jews.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3394</td>
<td>Pharaoh Necho makes Jehoia-</td>
<td>3869</td>
<td>John Hyrcanus, high priest.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3395</td>
<td>Jehoiakim, king of Judah.</td>
<td>3874</td>
<td>John Hyrcanus asserts the Jewish independence.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3398</td>
<td>Nineveh destroyed.</td>
<td>3895</td>
<td>John Hyrcanus died.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3406</td>
<td>Jehoiachin, king of Judah.</td>
<td>3897</td>
<td>Aristobulus the cruel died.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3409</td>
<td>Ezekiel and Daniel, prophets.</td>
<td>3925</td>
<td>Alexander succeeds Alex-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3414</td>
<td>Pharaoh Hophra, king of Egypt.</td>
<td></td>
<td>ander.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3416</td>
<td>Nebuchadnezzar ends the kingdom of Judah.</td>
<td>3934</td>
<td>Aristobulus usurps the gov-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>3941</td>
<td>Hyrcanus II., prince. Judas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>dependent on the Romans.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>3942</td>
<td>Syria reduced to a Roman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>province.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>3950</td>
<td>Crassus pillaged the temple.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
PASSAGES OF SCRIPTURE ILLUSTRATED.

A. M.

3954 Syria invaded by the Parthians.......................... 50
3956 Antipater procurator of Judea.............................. 48 3964 Herod named king of the Jews                         40 by the Roman Senate........................................ 51
3967 Herod takes Jerusalem.................................... 87
3973 Herod confirmed in his kingdom by Augustus........ 31
3984 Herod commenced rebuilding the temple................ 20
3999 Tiberius invested with tributary power................ 6

4000 A. D. 1 Jesus Christ born near the close of the year... 5

4001 — 1 The 26th year of the reign of Cæsar Augustus......... 4
4002 — 2 Herod the Great died.................................. 9
4003 — 3 Archelaus, ethnarch of Judea......................... 2
4004 — 4 Jonazar, high priest of the Jews...................... 1
4005 — 5 The Vulgar Era, or Year of our Lord................. 1

Chronologers are not agreed in reference to the precise year of our Lord's birth. Ideler and Winer fix it in the year of Rome 757; Kepler in 748; others in 750; Usher in 756, while the Vulgar Era, i. e. the present Christian Era, assumes the year of Christ's birth as coincident with the year of Rome 754. It is now generally agreed that the Vulgar Era is at least four, probably six or eight years too late. The Vulgar Era, according to Usher, is the fourth year of Jesus Christ. But as Christ was born in the fifth year before the Vulgar Era, that year is sometimes called A. D. 1, though according to scholars, of only eight days.

Archelaus banished.............................................. 8
Judea and Samaria annexed to Syria.......................... 7
Tiberius, the colleague of Augustus.......................... 11
Augustus Caesar died......................................... 11
Pontius Pilate governor........................................ 25
Crucifixion of our Saviour.................................... 29
Conversion of Paul.............................................. 33
Pontius Pilate exile............................................ 35
Tiberius Nero Caesar died...................................... 37
Caligula the Emperor, slain.................................... 41
Famine in Judæa................................................. 45
The Jews expelled from Rome.................................. 52
Nero Caesar....................................................... 51
Epistle to Titus written....................................... 53
Paul leaves Ephesus........................................... 56
Paul sent prisoner to Rome.................................... 62
The Epistle to the Philippians................................. 63
Colossians, and Philemon...................................... 65
The Second Epistle to Timothy................................. 64
Paul put to death in Rome.................................... 64
Christians severely persecuted................................. 64
John wrote the book of Revelation............................. 66
Vespasian invades Judea....................................... 67
Peter put to death, probably at Babylon, about............. 68
Nero assassinated............................................... 68
Dreadful calamities in Jerusalem............................... 69
Jerusalem destroyed by Titus.................................. 70
Magnificent triumph of Vespasian............................. 71
The golden vessels of the Temple placed in the Temple of Peace at Rome........................................................................ 71
The Jews exiled by Hadrian from Jerusalem................... 135

PRINCIPAL PASSAGES OF SCRIPTURE ILLUSTRATED.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>GENESIS</th>
<th>GENESIS</th>
<th>GENESIS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Chap.</td>
<td>Verse</td>
<td>Page</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>l.</td>
<td>1.</td>
<td>187</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>l.</td>
<td>2.</td>
<td>229</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>l.</td>
<td>27.</td>
<td>26</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>l.</td>
<td>2.</td>
<td>429</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>l.</td>
<td>10—14.</td>
<td>225</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>l.</td>
<td>15.</td>
<td>417</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>l.</td>
<td>21.</td>
<td>682</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>l.</td>
<td>22.</td>
<td>250</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>l.</td>
<td>1.</td>
<td>670</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>l.</td>
<td>8.</td>
<td>717</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>l.</td>
<td>1.</td>
<td>18</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>l.</td>
<td>7.</td>
<td>32</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>l.</td>
<td>8.</td>
<td>258</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>l.</td>
<td>10.</td>
<td>26</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>l.</td>
<td>15.</td>
<td>26</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>l.</td>
<td>15.</td>
<td>229</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>l.</td>
<td>22.</td>
<td>169</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>734</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
PASSAGES OF SCRIPTURE ILLUSTRATED.

DEUTERONOMY
- Chap. Verse Page
  - lv. 1. 23
  - vi. 4. 301
  - vii. 2. 157
  - xx. 17. 157
  - xxi. 12. 153
  - xxi. 15. 706
  - xxii. 15. 623
  - xxv. 4. 675
  - xxv. 5. 450
  - xxvii. 2. 430
  - xxxi. 20. 156
  - xxxi. 8. 407
  - xxxii. 48. 28
  - xxxiii. 8. 9. 933
  - xxxiii. 17. 344

JOSHUA
- Chap. Verse Page
  - vi. 4. 887
  - vi. 5. 687
  - vi. 6. 687
  - vi. 8. 687
  - ix. 27. 997
  - x. 12. 659

JUDGES
- Chap. Verse Page
  - iii. 7. 101
  - iv. 18. 346
  - v. 23. 468
  - vi. 8. 58
  - vii. 21. 673
  - viii. 26. 679
  - xi. 31. 490
  - xii. 39. 380

RUTH
- Chap. Verse Page
  - ii. 14. 705

1 SAMUEL
- Chap. Verse Page
  - ii. 22. 490
  - xii. 11. 94
  - xiii. 12. 200
  - xiv. 17. 40

2 SAMUEL
- Chap. Verse Page
  - i. 17. 3873
  - i. 18. 348
  - iv. 12. 328
  - v. 13. 201
  - xiv. 21. 102
  - xiv. 36. 659
  - xxxiii. 8. 387

1 KINGS
- Chap. Verse Page
  - vi. 1. 407
  - x. 28. 344
  - x. 6. 548
  - x. 12. 309
  - xxiii. 8. 317

2 KINGS
- Chap. Verse Page
  - iii. 27. 463
  - v. 12. 63

PSALMS
- Chap. Verse Page
  - xiv. 3. 38
  - xxv. 10. 192
  - xxvii. 4. 323

PROVERBS
- Chap. Verse Page
  - x. 20. 337
  - xii. 36. 712
  - xii. 12. 712
  - xii. 21. 376
  - xii. 17. 363
  - xii. 23. 311

ECCLESIASTES
- Chap. Verse Page
  - ii. 1. 651
  - iii. 21. 651

SONG OF SOLOMON
- Chap. Verse Page
  - vi. 13. 647

ISAIAH
- Chap. Verse Page
  - iii. 18. 679
  - iii. 19. 679
  - iii. 26. 383
  - vii. 14. 687
  - vii. 15. 341
  - ix. 6. 264
  - xi. 1. 489
  - xii. 6. 684
  - xviii. 2. 476
  - xxiv. 21. 347
  - xxxiii. 21. 684
  - xxxiv. 10. 277
  - xxxvii. 7. 336
  - xxxviii. 20. 265
  - xxxix. 2. 273
  - lii. 13. 27
  - liii. 1. 96
  - liii. 2. 174

JEREMIAH
- Chap. Verse Page
  - xxii. 30. 378
  - xxxii. 6. 378
  - xxxv. 11. 263
  - xxxv. 6. 575
  - i. 23. 491

EZEKIEL
- Chap. Verse Page
  - i. 8. 170
  - ii. 1. 139
  - xxxvii. 19. 694
  - xxxvi. 12. 446

DANIEL
- Chap. Verse Page
  - ii. 1. 492
  - v. 34. 35. 378
  - v. 45. 677
  - vii. 12. 194
  - vii. 25. 669
  - vii. 2. 497
  - viii. 3. 440
  - viii. 19. 353
  - xii. 15. 327

HEBREWS
- Chap. Verse Page
  - vii. 5. 627
  - x. 6. 625
  - x. 14. 625

JOEL
- Chap. Verse Page
  - iii. 2. 387

AMOS
- Chap. Verse Page
  - iii. 12. 196
  - viii. 11. 301

OBADIAH
- Chap. Verse Page
  - i. 1. 226

ZECHARIAH
- Chap. Verse Page
  - vi. 5. 199

MALACHI
- Chap. Verse Page
  - i. 2. 744
  - iii. 3. 292
  - iii. 17. 41

MATTHEW
- Chap. Verse Page
  - i. 22. 292
  - i. 25. 697
  - ii. 1. 40
  - ii. 1. 40
  - ii. 1. 38
  - iii. 8. 441
  - iii. 17. 282
  - iii. 17. 573
  - iii. 22. 83
  - iii. 4. 639
  - v. 13. 89
  - v. 29. 909
  - v. 84. 607
  - vi. 9-13. 38
  - vii. 12. 194
  - vii. 25. 669
  - vii. 20. 281
  - vii. 21. 347
  - vii. 30. 372
  - vii. 19. 353
  - xii. 15. 327
  - xii. 15. 49
  - xii. 15. 49
  - xii. 32. 493
PASSAGES OF SCRIPTURE ILLUSTRATED.

MATTHEW.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Chap.</th>
<th>Verse</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>xlii.</td>
<td>56.657</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xlii.</td>
<td>32.218</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>x.</td>
<td>17.888</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xli.</td>
<td>17.358</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xli.</td>
<td>17.511</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xlvi.</td>
<td>16.120</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xvii.</td>
<td>35.682</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xix.</td>
<td>24.151</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xxvi.</td>
<td>17.338</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xlii.</td>
<td>21.684</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xix.</td>
<td>24.151</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xliii.</td>
<td>2.315</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xxv.</td>
<td>17.546</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xliii.</td>
<td>19.193</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xliii.</td>
<td>87.193</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xliii.</td>
<td>87.406</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xliii.</td>
<td>27.314</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xliii.</td>
<td>33.946</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xliii.</td>
<td>48.517</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xxiv.</td>
<td>26.444</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xxv.</td>
<td>31.428</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xxvi.</td>
<td>28.409</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xliii.</td>
<td>21.458</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xliii.</td>
<td>26.266</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

MARK.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Chap.</th>
<th>Verse</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>i.</td>
<td>1.2.24</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xlii.</td>
<td>32.408</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xiv.</td>
<td>5.66</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xiv.</td>
<td>21.228</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xiv.</td>
<td>22.246</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xiv.</td>
<td>24.59</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

LUKE.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Chap.</th>
<th>Verse</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>i.</td>
<td>32.201</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iii.</td>
<td>23.291</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vii.</td>
<td>34.567</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>viii.</td>
<td>31.83</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xii.</td>
<td>80.399</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xiii.</td>
<td>16.320</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xvi.</td>
<td>32.438</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xvi.</td>
<td>37.291</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xliii.</td>
<td>19.455</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xliii.</td>
<td>44.71</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xliii.</td>
<td>6.286</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xliii.</td>
<td>23.51</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xliii.</td>
<td>44.189</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

JOHN.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Chap.</th>
<th>Verse</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>i.</td>
<td>3.187</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>i.</td>
<td>14.376</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>i.</td>
<td>29.604</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>i.</td>
<td>46.449</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>viii.</td>
<td>5.79</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>viii.</td>
<td>32.644</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>x.</td>
<td>4.651</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>x.</td>
<td>12.239</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xii.</td>
<td>40.325</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xlii.</td>
<td>1.627</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xlij.</td>
<td>10.269</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xliii.</td>
<td>21.643</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xli.</td>
<td>36.668</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xvil.</td>
<td>17.687</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

GALATIANS.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Chap.</th>
<th>Verse</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>iii.</td>
<td>6.354</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iii.</td>
<td>9.415</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iii.</td>
<td>13.317</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iii.</td>
<td>17.63</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iv.</td>
<td>24.317</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iv.</td>
<td>29.312</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>v.</td>
<td>29.604</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>v.</td>
<td>5.219</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

PHILIPPIANS.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Chap.</th>
<th>Verse</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>i.</td>
<td>4.567</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ii.</td>
<td>2.75</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ii.</td>
<td>10.291</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iii.</td>
<td>10.281</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iv.</td>
<td>5.306</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iv.</td>
<td>9.381</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iv.</td>
<td>17.587</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

COLOSSIANS.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Chap.</th>
<th>Verse</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>i.</td>
<td>12.345</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>i.</td>
<td>16.187</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ii.</td>
<td>9.285</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ii.</td>
<td>16.321</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iii.</td>
<td>16.593</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iii.</td>
<td>21.394</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1 THESSALONIANS.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Chap.</th>
<th>Verse</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>i.</td>
<td>9.255</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ii.</td>
<td>9.562</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iii.</td>
<td>3.67</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

2 THESSALONIANS.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Chap.</th>
<th>Verse</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>iii.</td>
<td>16.25</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>v.</td>
<td>19.403</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>v.</td>
<td>29.651</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1 TIMOTHY.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Chap.</th>
<th>Verse</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>iii.</td>
<td>16.25</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>v.</td>
<td>19.213</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>v.</td>
<td>18.675</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

2 TIMOTHY.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Chap.</th>
<th>Verse</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>i.</td>
<td>10.534</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iii.</td>
<td>16.357</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iv.</td>
<td>17.459</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Titus.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Chap.</th>
<th>Verse</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>i.</td>
<td>5.680</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

HEBREWS.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Chap.</th>
<th>Verse</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>vi.</td>
<td>19.54</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vii.</td>
<td>2.38</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>viii.</td>
<td>14.46</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>v.</td>
<td>5.663</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iv.</td>
<td>6.145</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iv.</td>
<td>12.684</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iv.</td>
<td>26.577</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>v.</td>
<td>20.604</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>x.</td>
<td>5.219</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>x.</td>
<td>12.190</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xli.</td>
<td>4.41</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xli.</td>
<td>4.35</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xli.</td>
<td>16.327</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xlii.</td>
<td>31.658</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xliii.</td>
<td>22.386</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xlii.</td>
<td>24.463</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

JAMES.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Chap.</th>
<th>Verse</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>i.</td>
<td>14.297</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ii.</td>
<td>14.26.715</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ii.</td>
<td>17.674</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iii.</td>
<td>18.68</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iv.</td>
<td>9.333</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1 PETER.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Chap.</th>
<th>Verse</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>i.</td>
<td>2.221</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

2 PETER.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Chap.</th>
<th>Verse</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>iii.</td>
<td>21.346</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iii.</td>
<td>7.221</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iii.</td>
<td>10.271</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iii.</td>
<td>10.223</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iii.</td>
<td>18.331</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1 JOHN.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Chap.</th>
<th>Verse</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>i.</td>
<td>2.604</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ii.</td>
<td>18.267</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iii.</td>
<td>23.50</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>v.</td>
<td>7.229</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

REVELATION.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Chap.</th>
<th>Verse</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>iii.</td>
<td>10.301</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iii.</td>
<td>8.241</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iii.</td>
<td>17.587</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ii.</td>
<td>17.447</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ii.</td>
<td>17.657</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iv.</td>
<td>6.259</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iv.</td>
<td>6.179</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iv.</td>
<td>6.229</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iv.</td>
<td>5.273</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>v.</td>
<td>6.415</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vi.</td>
<td>13.392</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vii.</td>
<td>8.227</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vii.</td>
<td>17.701</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vii.</td>
<td>5.583</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>viii.</td>
<td>9.456</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>xiv.</td>
<td>4.430</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

736